The Fifth Adhyāya of the First Aṣṭaka

Sūkta 62 — "pra manmahe"

Printed on the page: the Om emblem; śrīḥ; śrī mahāgaṇādhipataye namaḥ; the same six verses of homage as in the earlier volumes; the series title Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, Bhāga 6 (the Kannada numeral reads "೬"); the heading prathamāṣṭake pañcamo 'dhyāyaḥ with its Kannada rendering "modalaneya aṣṭakadalli aidaneya adhyāyavu" ("the fifth adhyāya in the first aṣṭaka"); and the line "Aravatteraḍaneya sūktavu" ("the sixty-second sūkta").

> वागीशाद्याः सुमनसः सर्वार्थानामुपक्रमे । यं नत्वा कृतकृत्याः स्युस्तं नमामि गजाननम् ॥ यस्य निःश्वसितं वेदा यो वेदेभ्योऽखिलं जगत् । निर्ममे तमहं वन्दे विद्यातीर्थमहेश्वरम् ॥ वेदः शिवः शिवो वेदो वेदाध्यायी सदाशिवः । तस्मात्सर्वप्रयत्नेन वेदमेव सदा जपेत् ॥

1. printed on p. 1 as "Aravatteraḍaneya sūktavu", "the sixty-second sūkta"; the heading block with "Sūkta — 62" is on p. 2

Translation [2]: "May the gods headed by Vāgīśa (Brahmā), by bowing to whom, at the start of all undertakings, men have their aims accomplished — to that elephant-faced one I bow. I salute Vidyātīrtha-Maheśvara, whose breath is the Vedas and who created the whole world from the Vedas. The Veda is Śiva and Śiva is the Veda; the reciter of the Veda is Sadāśiva; therefore with every effort one should always recite the Veda itself."

Translation [5]: "Now the Fifth Adhyāya begins. In the eleventh anuvāka of the first maṇḍala, four sūktas have gone by. Pra manmahe is a sūkta of thirteen ṛks. The Anukramaṇī says here: 'pra saptona' — the number [of ṛks] is an unspecified twenty [less seven]: Anu. 11-4. Since it is thus said, 'twenty less seven' means that thirteen is stated. The ṛṣi is Nodhā, by the rule that [the ṛṣi is] the other [than one stated]; the metre is Triṣṭubh by the rule of unstated metre; the deity is Indra; the application is the general one; the particular application is to be learnt from the indications [of the text]."

3. printed in Kannada script; read from the 150-dpi image; it continues on p. 2

4. The first sentences are on p. 1 and the rest, from "…trayodaśety uktaṃ bhavati", on p. 2. The words "ṛṣiś cānyasmād iti" and "anādeśaparibhāṣayā" are confirmed from a 250-dpi crop of p. 2 ("ಋಷಿಶ್ಚಾನ್ಯಸ್ಮಾದಿತಿ", "ಅನಾದೇಶಪರಿ-ಭಾಷಯಾ").

Anuvāda (Kannada): "There are seven sūktas in the eleventh anuvāka of the first maṇḍala; of these four have been completed so far. Pra manmahe is now the fifth sūkta. It has thirteen ṛks. Since the Anukramaṇikā says 'pra saptoneti, aniruktā saṃkhyā viṃśatiḥ, Anu. 11-4' — that is, that of twenty ṛks seven are not [here] — it is said that this sūkta has thirteen ṛks. For this sūkta Nodhā Gautama is the ṛṣi; Triṣṭubh is the metre; Indra is the deity. The application is in general laiṅgika, that is, its application is according to the sense of the text."

6. Changes in print noted at the start of Volume 6: (a) the title page reads "Bhāga 6, the Fifth Adhyāya of the First Aṣṭaka"; (b) the heading block has the same form as in Volumes 4–5; (c) the running header of even pages reads "Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā" with, at the right, "Maṇḍala 1 · Anuvāka 11 · Sūkta 62"; the odd pages carry "Aṣṭaka 1 · Adhyāya 5 · Varga N" at the left and "Ṛgvedasaṃhitā" in the middle. The Kannada numerals of the varga numbers in the headers are small and read with doubt.

Translation : "Śavasānāya: śava is a word for strength; he who acts as if with strength — as strength kills enemies, so he is the slayer of enemies. Girvaṇase: [he who is] to be served with words in the form of praise. 'A god is girvaṇas: they win him with gīrbhiḥ' — so Yāska (Nir. 6-14). To Indra, such as he is. Śūṣam is a word for happiness: the cause of happiness. 'Āṅgūṣa is a stoma, a shout' — so Yāska (Nir. 5-11). The āṅgūṣa hymn, like Aṅgirases: aṅgirasvat, as the Aṅgirases do, pra manmahe: we, the praisers, understand it fully; and having understood, with suvṛktibhiḥ — hymns well suited, able to turn [the god] toward the praise — we praise, that is, make hymns for, the sage who is worthy of worship (ṛgmiya) — Indra; or, with the agent-suffix in the sense of the object: for him who is praised by the sage. Nare: the leader of all; or, for the sacrificer. Viśrutāya: widely renowned, for his fame. To such a one we offer the ārka — a hymn in the form of a mantra. 'An arka is a mantra, with which they worship' (Nir. 5-4). Arcāma: we worship, that is, we recite."

11. The Nirukta numbers are read from small Kannada numerals: 6-14, 5-11 and 5-4 (confirmed from 200–400-dpi crops). The word "yaṣṭavyatayā" ("as one to be worshipped") is read from a 400-dpi crop (ಯಷ್ಟವ್ಯತಯಾ); the same word is printed in the Special Topics on p. 6.

Grammar tail of the bhāṣya (p. 3, from "manmahe, manu avabodhane" to the foot of the page): characterized, not transcribed. Sāyaṇa derives manmahe (root man "to know", the affix u of the tanādi class, with the loss of u before an m-/v- ending by "lopaś cāsyānyatarasyām mvoḥ", Pā. 6-4-107); śavasānāya (from the denominative śavasyate "acts like strength": the affix śānac, the elision of śap by "bahulaṃ chandasi", the loss of a); śūṣam (root śūṣ prasave, with the affix ac of the pacādi class); āṅgūṣam (the prefix ā and gūṣa, with ghoṣa replaced by gūṣa, a pṛṣodarādi form), and the accent of the compound. The sūtras are cited by their Kannada-script numerals, which are small and are not transcribed here.

Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya, concluded (pp. 3–4): grammar, characterized, not transcribed. The page takes up girvaṇase (the compound gīr + vanas, formed by the Uṇādi affix asun in the sense of the object; the lengthening, the "gatikārakayor api" rule giving the first member's own accent), aṅgirasvat (the affix vati after aṅgiras in the sense of "like", by "tena tulyaṃ kriyā ced vatiḥ", with the vārttika read "nabho 'ṅgiro manuṣāṃ vatyupasaṃkhyānam", Pā. 1-4-18-3, printed so: vārttika 3), suvṛktibhiḥ (root vṛji varjane, the affix ktin in the sense of state; śobhanam āvarjanam yeṣām — "those whose turning is good"; the bahuvrīhi and the final-acute of the second member by ṇasu-bhyām, with the objection that a ktin word would have its own initial acute and the answer by the rule of the later member), stuvate (the case-ending accent), ṛgmiyāya (from ṛc with miyaṭ; "ṛcaḥ mayaṭ" (the line on p. 4 ends "…nityaṃ mayaṭam icchanti", Kā. 4-3-144 as printed here (the grammar on p. 8 prints 4-3-114); or from ṛc stutau + mak, "ṛcā stūyate", "one who deserves praise with ṛks"), arcāma (root arc pūjāyām, the bhū-class; śap, the unaccented tiṅ), arkam (the affix gha by "puṃsi saṃjñāyāṃ ghaḥ prāyeṇa", and the ku/kutva change of c to k), nare (the noun nṛ, the word of the guṇa-sense in the Veda), and viśrutāya (śru śravaṇe, the past-participle affix in the sense of the object; "gatir anantara", the prefix keeping its own accent). The sūtras are cited by small Kannada numerals, not transcribed.

Pratipadārtha [12]: śavasānāya — acting with strength (able to destroy enemies by strength); girvaṇase — for him (Indra) who is to be praised with words (in the form of hymns); śūṣam — the cause of happiness; āṅgūṣam — the hymn; aṅgirasvat — like the Aṅgirasa sages; pra manmahe — let us understand (let us make) well; suvṛktibhiḥ — with hymns able to turn [him] well toward us; stuvate — to the praiser (the praised one); ṛgmiyāya — worthy of worship (praiseworthy); nare — the leader of all; viśrutāya — [one who is] worshipped in the sacrifice … [13].

original p. 5

Pratipadārtha (concluded): … viśrutāya — [for him who is] renowned as one to be worshipped in the sacrifice (for Indra); ārkam — the hymn in the form of a mantra; arcāma — let us worship (let us recite aloud).

Bhāvārtha

: "Let us, with understanding, make hymns for Indra, who destroys enemies by his strength, who is to be praised with hymns, and who bestows happiness. Let us praise with mantras Indra, who is easily praised by those who praise him with mantras by which he is easily won over, who is the leader of all, and who is renowned as one worthy of worship in the sacrifice."

English Translation [14]:

12. Kannada, rendered
13. the entry continues on the next page
14. printed in English in the source

> "We meditate, like Angiras, an acceptable prayer to that powerful and praise-deserving Indra, who is to be adored by his worshippers with prayers of efficacy to bring him to the ceremoney [sic]; let us recite a prayer to the celebrated leader (Indra) of all."

Special Topics (viśeṣa-viṣayagaḷu) [15]

- manmahe — manu avabodhane ("to know"): "let us understand (make) well" is the meaning.
- śavasānāya — śavaḥ means strength (Ni. 3-9 [?], as printed: the first digit looks like ೩). Śavasāna means "one who acts as if with strength": one who conquers enemies by use of strength.
- śūṣam — among the twenty-seven names for happiness beginning with śambāta and śatarā, the word śūṣam is read; so śūṣam means happiness, or the causer of happiness (Ni. 3-13).
- āṅgūṣam — "āṅgūṣaḥ stomaḥ āghoṣaḥ" (आङ्गूषः स्तोमः आघोषः — āṅgūṣaḥ stomaḥ āghoṣaḥ, Ni. 5-11): āṅgūṣa means a hymn.
- girvaṇase — "girvaṇā devo bhavati gīrbhir enaṃ vanayanti" (गिर्वणा देवो भवति गीर्भिरेनं वनयन्ति — girvaṇā devo bhavati gīrbhir enaṃ vanayanti, Ni. 6-14): one who is obtained by praises, that is, one who deserves to be praised with hymns; the praised one. [16]
- aṅgirasvat — Aṅgirāḥ is a renowned ṛṣi, and the root-ancestor of many ṛṣis. His name is mentioned in many places in the Ṛgveda; for what we have written about this ṛṣi see Ṛ. Saṃ. Part 3, pp. 520–522 and Part 4, p. 552.

15. Kannada, rendered; the Nirukta numbers are read from small Kannada numerals and are marked [?] where uncertain

16. Translation of the Nirukta sentence, editorial: "A girvaṇas is a god: they win him with songs."

- suvṛktibhiḥ — vṛjī varjane ("to turn away, to bend"): "śobhanam āvarjito bhavaty ebhir iti suvṛktayaḥ stotrāṇi taiḥ" (शोभनमावर्जितो भवत्येभिरिति सुवृक्तयः स्तोत्राणि तैः — śobhanam āvarjito bhavaty ebhir iti suvṛktayaḥ stotrāṇi taiḥ) — "[hymns] by which [the god] is well turned [toward us] are suvṛktayaḥ, hymns; by these": with hymns made of excellent words.

original p. 6

- ṛgmiyāya — "ṛca stutau; ṛgmaṃ stutim arhatīti ṛgmiyaḥ" (ऋच स्तुतौ । ऋग्मं स्तुतिमर्हतीति ऋग्मियः — ṛca stutau | ṛgmaṃ stutim arhatīti ṛgmiyaḥ): one who is fit to be praised with ṛks or with mantras.
- arcāma — "let us worship": let us recite the hymns.
- arkam — "arcyate 'neneti arkaḥ" (अर्च्यतेऽनेनेत्यर्कः — arcyate 'neneti arkaḥ): that by which [the god] is worshipped or praised; so arkam means a mantra.
- nare — the dative singular of the word nṛ: [for him who is] the leader, the chief of men (for Indra).
- viśrutāya — śru śravaṇe; "yaṣṭavyatayā viśeṣeṇa prakhyātāya": for him who is renowned as the one worshipped with sacrifices and the like (for Indra).

Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (grammar, Kannada) — grammar page, noted briefly. The page treats: - manmahe — the root manu avabodhane (tanādi); the first-person plural middle ending mahiṅ, which takes e by "टित आत्मनेपदानां टेरे " (ṭita ātmanepadānāṃ ṭer e); the affix u by "तनादिकृञ्भ्य उः" (tanādikṛñbhya uḥ); the elision of u before mahe by "लोपश्चास्यान्यतरस्यां म्वोः " (lopaś cāsyānyatarasyāṃ mvoḥ, Pā. 6-4-107, printed as read), because the affix beginning with m follows without a conjunct; the verb, standing after another word (pra), is unaccented by "tiṅ atiṅaḥ" (तिङ्ङतिङः). - śavasānāya — śava ivācarati śavasyate: the affix kyac by upamānād ācāre (उपमानादाचारे — upamānād ācāre), then, with the continued "kartuḥ kyaṅ salopaś ca" (कर्तुः क्यङ् सलोपश्च — kartuḥ kyaṅ salopaś ca, Pā. 3-1-11, as read), the affix kyaṅ; after śavasya the affix śānac (śānac because the kyaṅ-ending is of the ātmanepada kind); śap elided by "bahulaṃ chandasi" (बहुलं छन्दसि); śānac is "of the ārdhadhātuka class" by "chandasy ubhayathā", whence "ato lopaḥ" (अतो लोपः) drops its a, and "yasya halaḥ" (यस्य हलः) the y, giving śavasāna; the dative singular; the accent is on the end of the stem by the cit rule, since kyaṅ is ṅit; and the objection that the lasārvadhātuka śānac must be unaccented by "tāsy-anudāttenṅid-adupadeśāl lasārvadhātukam anudāttam" is answered by the observation that śānac is not here in the place of laṭ as an operative sārvadhātuka — so the end-acute stays [17]. Grammar pages, noted briefly. Page 7 and the upper part of p. 8 (the running header of p. 8 is "Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā · Maṇḍala 1 · Anuvāka 11 · Sūkta 62") finish the derivations of the words of Rik 62.1: - śūṣam — root śūṣa prasave; the affix ac because the root belongs to the pacādi class, by "नन्दिग्रहपचादिभ्यो ल्युणिन्यचः" (nandigrahapacādibhyo lyuṇinyacaḥ, Pā. 3-1-134); no guṇa since there is no light penultimate; the accent on the end by the cit rule. - āṅgūṣam — āṅ + the root ghuṣir viśabdane; ac by the same rule; guṇa by "pugantalaghūpadhasya ca"; since the word belongs to the pṛṣodarādi class, gho of ghoṣa becomes gū ("pṛṣodarādīni yathopadiṣṭam"); the i-marker of āṅ's ṅ is excluded by "halantyam" (Pā. 1-3-3 as read); the compound with āṅ keeps the accent of the second member by "gatikārakopapadāt kṛt". - girvaṇase — root gṝ śabde; kvip by "saṃpadādibhyaḥ kvip" (a vārttika); ṛ becomes ir by "ṛta iddhātoḥ" (Pā. 7-1-100) and "uraṇ raparaḥ", giving gir; then vana saṃbhaktau, with asun after it, giving girvaṇas; the lengthening of the i of a word ending in r

17. the argument continues on the next page
18. The sūtras are named in the print without numbers except Pā. 6-4-107 and Pā. 3-1-11, which are printed; those two numbers are read from the Kannada numerals and carry some doubt.

(halicā, Pā. 8-2-77) does not occur here by the maxim (asiddha) of the saṃjñāpūrvaka rule; the first member keeps its own accent by "gatikārakayor api pūrvapadaprakṛtisvaratvaṃ ca" (an Uṇādi-vārttika, as read). - aṅgirasvat — aṅgirasaḥ iva, with the affix vati by "tena tulyaṃ kriyā ced vatiḥ" (Pā. 5-1-115); by the vārttika "nabho 'ṅgiro manuṣāṃ vatyupasaṃkhyānam" the bha-designation is stated, so the ru change of the final s does not take place; aṅgirasvat results; the accent is on the syllable after the va. - suvṛktibhiḥ — root vṛjī varjane, the affix ktin by bhāve; the negation of iṭ by "titutratatha-…" (Pā. 7-2-9); c of the root becomes k by coḥ kuḥ; no laghūpadha guṇa since the affix is kit; vṛkti. The compound śobhanā vṛktir yeṣām te suvṛktayaḥ is a bahuvrīhi with the ṇasubhyām accent on the last member (Pā. 6-2-172); the objection about ktin with the accent rules "jñitīty ādir nityam" and "ādyudāttaṃ dvyac chandasi" and the answer by the rule about the first member's prakṛti-accent; "māṅktin vyā-" (the rule where ktin in the place of the kāraka… is said to be last-acute, with the ruling "vyatyayo bahulam") — all noted as arguments, not reproduced. - stuvate — root ṣṭuñ stutau; the participial affix śatṛ (in the sense of the present); the u gets uvaṅ by "aci śnudhātubhruvāṃ…"; the śatṛ ending takes the dative singular, with the acute on the case-ending by "śatur anumo nadyajādī" (Pā. 6-1-173). - ṛgmiyāya — "ekāco nityaṃ mayaṭam icchanti" (Kā. 4-3-114, as printed; the bhāṣya on p. 4 prints 4-3-144): the affix mayaṭ after the monosyllabic ṛc in the sense of "of that sort"; ṛc + maya: the pada-designation from "svādiṣv asarvanāmasthāne" (Pā. 1-4-1? [?], as printed: the last digit looks like ३ (3); unclear); c → k by coḥ kuḥ; jaśtva by "jhalāṃ jaśo 'nte"; the substitute i for a of mayaṭ by vyatyaya; ṛgmiya; the dative; alternatively, from ṛca stutau with the affix mak by "uṇādayo bahulam", ṛgmaṃ stutim arhatīti ṛgmiyaḥ with ghac in the sense of "deserving", with the substitute iya by āyaneyī…; the accent on the end by cit. - arcāma — root arca pūjāyām (bhvādi); the imperative (loṭ) form in the sense of an optative, by "loṭo laṅvat" (the extension of laṅ to loṭ); the s of mas of loṭ is lost by "nityaṃ ṅitaḥ" (no number printed); śap; the augment ām for the ending; arcāma; śap being pit, "anudāttau supitau" makes the ending unaccented; and since the root has the āt- upadeśa, the lasārvadhātuka is unaccented by "tāsy-anudāttenṅid-...", so the end-accent of the root remains. [19]

original p. 9

Grammar, noted briefly (upper part of the page): arkam — the affix gha after arc in the sense of a name, by "पुंसि संज्ञायां घः प्रायेण" (puṃsi saṃjñāyāṃ ghaḥ prāyeṇa, Pā. 3-3-118); the a remains; by "चजोः कुः घिण्ण्यतोः " (cajoḥ kuḥ ghiṇṇyatoḥ, Pā. 7-3-52) the final c of the root becomes k since the gha affix follows, giving arka; the accusative singular. nare — nṛ + the dative ending e; the guṇa is Vedic, and with raparatva it becomes nare. viśrutāya — root śru śravaṇe, the affix kta in the sense of the object; no guṇa since the affix is kit; with the prefix vi the compound has the prefix's own accent, by "गतिरनन्तरः" (gatir anantaraḥ, Pā. 6-2-49). 21. The Pada-pāṭha is printed under the Saṃhitā on the same page. The second half is read from the lower half of the print, which is clear; the word-division "pada-jñāḥ" is as printed.

evārcantas taṃ pūjayanto gā avindan | alabhanta | vaḥ prathamārthe dvitīyā | padajñāḥ padāni jānantīti | ato 'nupasarge ka iti kaḥ | ato lopa iṭi cety ātkāralopaḥ | avindan | vidḷ lābhe | śe mucādīnām iti numāgamaḥ | | [23]

Translation : "O priests, vaḥ, you: for the great (mahe, mahate) śavasānāya, who acts as if with strength — that is, of exceeding strength; [the word] tad is to be supplied because yad is heard in the latter sentence. To such an Indra mahi, the great, vigorous namaḥ — a hymn — pra bharadhvam: perform it well. What is that hymn? He says: āṅgūṣyam sāma, the sāman [such as the rathantara] fit to be sung aloud; let that be brought about. The singing of 'abhi tvā śūra [nonumaḥ]' and the like is called sāman; and so it is said: 'in chants the name is sāman.' [Praise the one] by whom, yena, by which Indra, naḥ, our pūrve pitaraḥ, ancestors of old, the Aṅgirases, who knew the track (padajñāḥ), the way, of the cows carried off by the demon named Paṇi, worshipping him, gā avindan, found the cows. [Avindan] means they obtained. Vaḥ stands for the nominative-sense accusative. Padajñāḥ: 'those who know the tracks'; by 'ato 'nupasarge kaḥ' the affix ka; by 'ato lopa iṭi ca' the loss of ā. Avindan: root vid, 'to obtain'; the num augment by 'śe mucādīnām' (the rule concerning roots of the muc-class)."

Pratipadārtha : yena — by which Indra; naḥ — our; pūrve — earlier; pitaraḥ — the fathers; aṅgirasaḥ — those called Aṅgirases; padajñāḥ — (knowing the path of the cows carried off by the demon called Paṇi) knowers of the track; arcantaḥ — worshipping (that Indra); gāḥ — those cows; avindan — found again; (for such [an Indra]) mahe — the great; śavasānāya — who acts as if with strength (the strong) — for Indra; āṅgūṣyam sāma

23. The first sentence's "yacchabda-śruteḥ tacchabdādhyāhāraḥ" is read as printed; the second is "[the word] tad is to be supplied, because the word yad is heard in the latter sentence". The passage reads "abhi tvā śūrety ādiṣv ṛkṣu yad gānam" ("the singing on the ṛks beginning abhi tvā śūra"; read from a 300-dpi crop); the sense is that the singing of "abhi tvā śūra nonumaḥ" and the like is called sāma.

— a sāman fit to be proclaimed (rathantara and the like); mahi — vigorous; namaḥ — a hymn; vaḥ — you; pra bharadhvam — bring about well.

Bhāvārtha : "It was through this Indra that our earlier ancestors, the Aṅgirases, learned the way of the cows carried off by the demon named Paṇi, and got the cows back. Praise with sāmans such as the rathantara, which can be sung aloud and strongly, that great, mighty Indra."

original p. 11

> "Do you, priests, offer to the vast and most powerful Indra, a great hymn, fit to be chanted aloud; for through him our forefathers, the Angirasas, adoring him, and knowing the footmarks, recovered (the stolen) cattle."

Special Topics - mahe — mahate: [dative of] great. - mahi — mahat: the most excellent, the superior. - namaḥ — a hymn, or salutation. - āṅgūṣyam — "āghoṣayogyaṃ rathantarādi sāma": the rathantara and similar sāmans fit to be sung aloud. - pūrve pitaraḥ — our earlier fathers, elders; our ancestors who were earlier than we. - padajñāḥ — "padāni jānantīti padajñāḥ" — "those who know the tracks", knowers of the way. The demon called Paṇi stole the gods' cows and hid them in a cave, so that no one should know; Indra found them out, subdued the demon, and brought the cows back — this is the tradition. Here padajñāḥ means that the cave that hid the cows was known by its path. For the particular account of the demon called Paṇi, which we have written, see Ṛ. Saṃ. Part 3, p. 630. - aṅgirasaḥ — the sons of the sage Aṅgiras, or the descendants of the sage Aṅgirā.

Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (grammar, Kannada) — grammar page, noted briefly. vaḥ: by "vivakṣātaḥ kārakāṇi", the accusative in the sense of the first [case]; the substitution of vas for yuṣmad in the second case by "bahuvacanasya vasnasau" (Pā. 8-1-21); unaccented by "anudāttaṃ sarvam apādādau". āṅgūṣyam — the process as stated in the earlier mantra; ṇyat by "ṛhaloṛṇyat" (ऋहलोर्ण्यत् — ṛhalor ṇyat). padajñāḥ — "padāni jānanti iti padajñāḥ"; root jñā avabodhane; by "ato 'nupasarge kaḥ" (अतोऽनुपसर्गे कः — ato 'nupasarge kaḥ, Pā. 3-2-3, as read) the affix ka, because the word is a upapada without prefix; "ato lopa iṭi ca" drops the ā .

Grammar, noted briefly. padajñāḥ is concluded: since the affix ka is kit, the ā of the root is dropped; padajñāḥ is the nominative plural; the accent of the second member is kṛt-accent by "गतिकारकोपपदात्कृत्" (gatikārakopapadāt kṛt). arcantaḥ — root arca pūjāyām; the present participle śatṛ in the sense of the present; the augment num by "उगिदचां" (ugidacāṃ [sarvanāmasthāne 'dhātoḥ]); ru and visarga for the final of the affix: arcantaḥ. avindan — root vidḷ lābhe (tudādi); the third-person plural of the past tense (laṅ) in which jhi becomes jus — "झेर्जुस्" style rule printed as "झोऽन्तः" (jho 'ntaḥ, "jha becomes anta"); the i of jhi's ending is dropped as "itaś ca"; śa-affix tudādibhyaḥ śaḥ; the num augment from "शे मुचादीनाम्" (śe mucādīnām, Pā. 7-1-59) since vid belongs to the muc-class; the anusvāra then becomes the nasal of the following letter by "अनुस्वारस्य ययि परसवर्णः" (anusvārasya yayi parasavarṇaḥ), giving n; the t of the ending is dropped by "संयोगान्तस्य लोपः" (saṃyogāntasya lopaḥ); avindan; the augment aṭ since it stands in the place of laṅ; because the sentence's yena has the relative yad, the non-accent of the verb by "यद्वृत्तान्नित्यम्" (yadvṛttān nityam) is excluded, so avindan is accented on the first syllable.

Translation : "Here is the story. Saramā is the divine bitch. When the Paṇis had carried off the cows, Indra sent that Saramā to search for them — as in the world a hunter looses a dog to find a deer that has gone into the forest. And she spoke thus: 'O Indra, if you give milk and other food, belonging to you, for my child, then I shall go.' He said, 'So be it.' And so the Śāṭyāyanaka says: 'I shall make your offspring eaters of food, O Saramā, [if] you find our cows for us.' Then she went and learned the place of the cows, and, having learned it, told him. When the cows were so announced, [Indra] killed that demon and got those cows back. This is the sense taught in this [Ṛk]. Indrasya aṅgirasām ca iṣṭau: at the sending, by Indra and the sages the Aṅgirases, Saramā the divine bitch vidat, found, dhāsim, food, for her child (tanayāya). Dhāsi is a word for food, being read among the names of food. When the cows had been announced by her, Bṛhaspati — lord of the great gods, Indra — bhinat, split the mountain, the demon who devoured. Vidat gāḥ: found the cows, which had been stolen by someone. Then naraḥ, the leading gods, with the usriyābhiḥ, the cows — usriyā is a word for cow — saṃ vāvaśanta, cried out greatly in joy; or, they desired their milk and the like by means of the cows; the sense is that they assembled. Iṣṭau: from iṣa gatau, with the affix ktin in the sense of the action; ktin is acute by 'mantre vṛṣeṣa-...'. Vidat: root vidḷ lābhe; in the aorist, aṅ because the root is lṛt-marked; ... Saramā: 'Saramā, from running' (Nir. 11-24, so Yāska); the Uṇādi affix ama after sṛ. Dhāsim: root dheṭ pāne, 'what is drunk', dhāsiḥ; the Uṇādi affix si; or from the root dadhāti in the sense of nourishing, with si. Bṛhaspatiḥ ..." Crowded words, re-read from 300-dpi crops in the numeral pass: "tadgo-saṃbandhi" (ಶಿಶವೇ ತದ್ಗೋಸಂಬಂಧಿ, "belonging to those cows"); the passage after "bahulaṃ chandasi" reads "...ಛಂದಸ್ಯಮಾಙ್ಯೋಗೇಽಪೀತ್ಯಡಭಾವಃ । ಅಙ ಏವ ಸ್ವರಃ ಶಿಷ್ಯತೇ । ಪಾದಾದಿತ್ವಾನ್ನಿಘಾತಾಭಾವಃ"; "iṣa gatāv ity" — printed "iṣa gatāvilyasmād", read so; "ni. 11-24" — confirmed. "Dhāsir ire ti" is printed "dhāsir ireti tan-nāmasu pāṭhāt" — the point being that dhāsiḥ is read among the names of food.

Pratipadārtha : indrasya — of Indra; aṅgirasāṃ ca — and of the Aṅgirasa sages; preṣaṇe — in the sending (when sent to search); saramā — Saramā, the dog of the gods; tanayāya — for her child; dhāsim — food (milk); vidat — found (so that the cows might be known to be there); bṛhaspatiḥ — Indra; adrim — the demon who devours the cows (the asura); bhinat — he killed; gāḥ — the cows; vidat — (again) he found; naraḥ — the gods who are the leaders; usriyābhiḥ — with the cows; saṃ vāvaśanta — they cried out greatly in joy, or greatly obtained milk and the like.

Bhāvārtha : "As was told before, the Paṇis, the asuras, took the cows and went off. Sent by Indra and the sages Aṅgirases, Saramā, the dog of the gods, searched, and for her own child obtained milk from the cows (that is, food). She [also] learned where the cows were, and told Indra. Indra then killed the demon and brought the cows back. Then the gods, together with the cows, cried out strongly in joy, and obtained milk and the like as they wished."

English Translation

> "When the search was made at the command of Indra and the Angirasas, Sarama secured food (milk) for her young; then Brihaspati slew the devourers (or broke the mountain) and rescued the cows and the gods (when they got the cattle back) proclaimed their joy aloud."

Special Topics (viśeṣa-viṣayagaḷu)

"The commentator tells a story here: Saramā is a female dog belonging to the gods. When the demons called Paṇis had carried off the gods' cows and hidden them in a cave, Indra sent this divine bitch Saramā to search for the cows. Just as in worldly practice a hunter sends his own dog to look for deer, so Indra sent this divine bitch to search; and she answered him: 'O Indra, if you will give food — milk and the like — for my child, then I shall go and find the cows.' [27] Then Indra, as she wished, ... the bitch, going out and searching, saw the place where the Paṇis had hidden the cows, and informed Indra of it. Indra, having heard, killed the asura and the cows were released and brought back. This is the idea that is taught in this Ṛk.

"Saramā means 'the bitch of the gods', that is, Indra's bitch. She had two children, it is said, who are with Yama, the god of the dead, and by the name of their mother they are known as Sārameyau ('the two sons of Saramā')": [28]

Kannada text (source): ಇದರ ಅನುವಾದವನ್ನು ಕೆಳಗೆ ಕೊಟ್ಟಿರುತ್ತೇವೆ... — "We give its translation below. This is in the form of a conversation that took place between the Paṇis and Saramā. Formerly, the Paṇis, followers of Vala, stole Bṛhaspati's cows and hid them in a secret place. Then, at Bṛhaspati's request, Indra sent Saramā, the divine bitch, to search for the cows. Searching for the cows, Saramā travelled very far, crossed a great river called the Rasā that lay across the way, and came near the Paṇis. Then the Paṇis, learning the purpose for which Saramā had come, and wishing at once to make friends with her, held this conversation —"

The Paṇis:

— "Saramā! You seem to have come here from very far, with much hardship. What is your purpose in coming here? How did you come here? How did you cross the river called Rasā?"

Saramā:

— "Listen, Paṇis. Commissioned by Indra, I have come here as his messenger. Indra desires the riches that you have hidden. The river Rasā, in fear, helped me to cross; therefore I crossed the river and came."

The Paṇis:

— "Very well, Saramā. You say Indra has sent you as his messenger. What is that Indra like to look at? (The Paṇis speak among themselves:) If Saramā comes, let her come; then let us make friendship with her, and let her be the mistress of our cows."

Saramā:

— "It is not possible to conquer that Indra as you imagine. The Indra who sent me conquers enemies, but others cannot conquer him; even deep rivers cannot stop him. By him you will be slain and will have to lie on your death-bed."

The Paṇis:

— "Saramā! Is it not for these very cows that you have come from far through the sky, looking for them? But who will hand over those cows to you without a fight? Our weapons are very sharp."

Saramā:

32. Header: left "A. 1 A. 5 Va. 1" [numerals small, read tentatively], centre "Ṛgvedasaṃhitā".

— "What is the use of your words? Is there the strength of an army in that talk? Do your sin-filled bodies have the power of a bow and arrows? The path you follow is very difficult. Bṛhaspati (the owner of the cows) will show you no mercy and will give no value to your words."

The Paṇis:

— "Saramā! This cattle-wealth — that is, cows, horses, and goods — we have collected in the mountains and brought here. We, the Paṇis, guard them with great vigilance. Your coming alone to such an inaccessible place is in vain."

Saramā: — "Listen, Paṇis. The ṛṣis and the Aṅgirasas, gaining strength and power by drinking soma, will come here under the leadership of Ayāsya and take these cows by force and divide them among themselves. Then you will know that the words you are speaking are in vain." [33]

original p. 18

The Paṇis:

— "Saramā! You seem to have the nature of the gods. Therefore we regard you as our sister. Do not go back to Indra; stay right here. We shall give you, too, a share of these cows."

Saramā:

— "I do not want the friendship or the sisterhood you offer. Indra and the terrible Aṅgirasas know my nature. When I was coming here, searching for the cows, they came to know your dwelling-place by a secret path. Therefore, O Paṇis, run far away and save yourselves."

---

33. Editorial note: the prose is rendered from the Kannada as printed; the dialogue occupies pp. 16–17 and has not yet ended. The Kannada says "Ayāsya" as the leader of the Aṅgirasas, matching the Saṃhitā word "ayāsyaḥ" in the sixth verse above.

[34] "Make room; go to a safe place far away. The cows hidden in the cave will come out in due order. Bṛhaspati, Soma and the wise ṛṣis, finding this secret place, will break open the doors of the cave where the cows are and enter."

Commentary of the source. In this dialogue one ṛk is spoken by the Paṇis and another, in answer, by Saramā. The theft of cows by the Paṇis is alluded to in many places in the Ṛgveda.

In the Ṛgveda the word paṇi has the sense of a dhanika, a rich man who trades; but since he neither performs sacrifices nor gives dakṣiṇā gifts, the ṛṣis seem to have regarded him with contempt, as a man without respect for the gods and as a low person. In some places "Paṇi" appears to be one individual; but because the plural paṇayaḥ is especially frequent, the word must be understood as indicating a class of people. Some hold that these Paṇis were old inhabitants of this country, engaged in trade and the like, and that, as they lacked reverence, people called them a company of Asuras. Because they felt no attachment to any sacrifice or righteous rite, and thought only of gaining wealth by fair means or foul, the Āryas looked on them as Dasyus and as low persons: this opinion is expressed in the mantras and elsewhere. Many ṛks of the Ṛgveda concern the Paṇis; among them — paṇayaḥ — the word occurs in Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-124-10; 1-151-9; 4-51-3; 6-20-4; 10-108-7; 10-108-8; 10-108-2; 10-108-4; 10-108-6; 10-108-10; 10-108-11 (in this order, as printed; re-read from 420–550-dpi crops in the numeral pass). [35]

original p. 19

Word-index of "Paṇi" forms (continued). The source continues the list of occurrences, form by form, each followed by Ṛ. Saṃ. and a string of Kannada reference numerals: paṇiḥ 1-33-3;

34. Saramā, continuing:

1-180-7; 5-61-8; paṇinā 4-25-7; paṇi-iva (printed "paṇinā iva") 1-32-11; paṇibhiḥ 4-58-4; paṇibhyaḥ 9-22-7; paṇim 1-93-4; 6-44-22; 6-51-14; 6-61-1; 8-45-14; 8-75-7; 10-67-6; 10-156-3; paṇīn 1-184-2; 6-33-2; 6-39-2; 7-6-3; 7-19-9; 8-26-10; 8-64-2; 8-66-10; 10-60-6; paṇīnām 2-24-6; 6-45-31; 6-53-5; 6-53-7; 7-9-2; 9-3-2; paṇeḥ 1-83-4; 1-182-3; 3-58-2; 5-34-7; 6-13-3; 6-53-3; 6-53-6; 10-92-3; paṇau 8-97-2. [36]

Then the source closes the list: "These are the ṛks in which the word occurs. There is a tradition that these Paṇis were soldiers of the Asura named Vala. In many ṛks it is mentioned that they stole the cows and hid them in caves. For this subject, see what I have written before: Ṛgveda Saṃhitā, Part 2, page 228, 465–466." [37]

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (grammar page, noted briefly).

इष्टौ (iṣṭau; printed "ಇಷ್ಟೌ") — root iṣa gatau; the Kṛt affix ktvin/ktin (the source writes "ಕ್ತಿನ್") by "striyāṃ ktin"; the lengthening of the ending is discussed; iṣṭi, the seventh-case singular (saptamy-ekavacana); the initial acute being due, the ktin affix is made acute by "mantre vṛṣeṣapaca…" (Pā. Sū. 3-3-96, as printed).

विदत् (vidat; printed "ವಿದತ್") — root vidḷ lābhe; the luṅ third-person singular ending; the elision of the i of tip by "itaś ca"; ṛ-marked aṅ by "puṣādi-dyutādi-…"; the augment aṭ is not added by "bahulaṃ chandasy amāṅyoge 'pi"; so the form is vidat. The accent stays on the root vowel by the rule that the one remaining accent is the "sati-śiṣṭa" one; as it does not stand at the beginning of a pāda, "apādādau" prevents the nighāta. [38] [39]

44. Header: left "A. 1 A. 5 Va. 1" [small numerals, tentative], centre "Ṛgvedasaṃhitā".

Seven wise Aṅgirases, who completed the sacrificial session in nine or ten months, approached you with praise, in voices accented in the udātta way and the like and audible, or in the mandra and madhya pitches. At the mere sound of you, the powerful, the cloud, the mountain and the demon Vala become fearful.

English Translation (the source's own, reproduced as printed):

> O powerful Indra you are to be gratified with a laudatory and well-accented hymn by the seven priests when engaged for nine months or for ten ; and desirous of safe protection, you have terrified by your voice the divisible and fructifying cloud.

सुष्टुभा — stobhati stutikarmā | śobhanaḥ stobho yasya | "He who praises (stobhati, a verb of praising); the one whose praise (stobha) is good" — endowed with excellent hymns.

स्तुभा

— by a hymn (stotra).

सप्त विप्रैः

— by the seven of the Aṅgiras ṛṣi-line beginning with Medhātithi; Skandasvāmin explains these words with the verse:

> सप्तर्षयो भरद्वाजः कश्यपो गौतमोऽत्रिः । विश्वामित्रो जमदग्निर्वसिष्ठः सप्तमः स्मृतः ॥

(Gloss editorial and tentative, the verse being quoted without translation in the source.) The source adds: the famous Saptarṣis are thus Bharadvāja, Kaśyapa, Gautama, Atri, Viśvāmitra, Jamadagni, Vasiṣṭha; and "vipraiḥ" means "by the wise".

original p. 24

स्वरेण — svareṇodāttādiśravyasvaropetena, atha vā mandramadhyamādisvaropetena — "with a voice having the audible accents udātta etc., or with the mandra, madhya etc. pitches": that is, with the four kinds of accent of the Ṛgveda (udātta, anudātta, svarita, pracaya) or with the seven pitches beginning with mandra and madhya — the bhāṣyakāra's explanation. Skandasvāmin: स्वरति वेनेत्यर्चतिकर्मसु पाठात् स्वरशब्द इह स्तोत्रवचनः । अन्येन च स्तोत्रा जनेन स्तुत्यः । svarati venety arcatikarmasu pāṭhāt svaraśabda iha stotravacanaḥ | anyena ca stotrā janena stutyaḥ | "From the reading of svarati among the verbs of worship, the word svara here denotes hymn; and one who is praised by other men with hymns" — i.e. svarati means "worships, praises", and svaryaḥ means one praised by other people.

— a mountain, or a cloud (Ni. 2-21 [?], as printed: both 2s are the curled glyph).

स्वर्यः — स्वृ शब्दोपतापयोः । सुष्ठु प्राप्यः । यद्वा शब्दनीयः स्तुत्य इत्यर्थः । svṛ śabdopatāpayoḥ | suṣṭhu prāpyaḥ | yadvā śabdanīyaḥ stutya ity arthaḥ | "root svṛ in the senses of sound and heating; well attainable; or to be sounded, praiseworthy" — one to be attained, or one to be praised.

navagvā iti saṃjñā | daśabhir māsair daśagvā iti ca || > "Those who 'go' in nine months are navagvas; those who go in ten months are daśagvas. Among the Aṅgirases seated at a sacrificial session, those who rose up having obtained the fruit in nine months have the name navagva; likewise, in ten months, daśagva."

The Kannada explains: some of the Aṅgirasa ṛṣi-family, in the sacrificial sessions lasting a year, attained their success by the performance of the rite in nine months; the Aṅgirases called "Aṅgirastama" who got what they wished in nine months are navagvas, and the best of the Aṅgirasa family who gained their wish in ten months are called daśagvas; this is the usage. "Western scholars, in explaining the meaning of this word, write —"

> The term Navagva is applied to a man generally an Angiras, in the highest degree (Angirastama-ಅಂಗಿರಸ್ತಮ) who appears as a mystic race of olden times coupled with, and conceived probably as related to the Angirases they are often associated with the Dasagvas (ದಶಗ್ವ). (as printed; the quotation's author is not named on the page.)

"The use of these words occurs in many ṛks of the Ṛgveda. We give some examples."

> येना नवग्वे दध्यङ्ङपोर्णुते येन विप्रास आपिरे । yenā navagve dadhyaṅ apornute yena viprāsa āpire | (Ṛ. Saṃ. 9-10-84, as printed — "ಋ. ಸಂ. ೯-೧೦-೮೪".)

[45] The reference numerals are as read from an enlarged slice; the 9-10?-4 one is uncertain, the others agree with the print's digits.

> येना नवग्वे अङ्गिरे दशग्वे सप्तास्ये रेवती रेवदूष ॥ yenā navagve aṅgire daśagve saptāsye revatī revad ūṣa || (Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-51-4. Gloss mine and tentative: "by which, for the navagva, the Aṅgiras, the daśagva, the seven-mouthed, the wealthy [dawn] shone wealth-like.")

"These and many other ṛks of the Ṛgveda, and also mantras of the Atharvaveda Saṃhitā (19-1-56; 18-3-20) and others, use these words. In the second of the examples, it is worth noting that the Aṅgirasa ṛṣi-family member called by the famous name 'navagva' and 'daśagva' is held in honour even by the gods as the best (śreṣṭhatama)."

सरण्युभिः — saraṇaṃ śobhanāgatim icchadbhiḥ — "desiring a good going", that is, those having an excellent motion.

फलिगम् — pratiphalaṃ pratibimbam | tad asminn astīti phali svacchamudakam | tad gacchaty ādhāratveneti phaligaḥ | yadvā vrīhyādiphalam | tad asyāsminn astīti bhavatīti phali vṛṣṭijalam | tad gacchatīti phaligaḥ meghaḥ || (the same text as the bhāṣya on p. 22; Devanagari there). Kannada: since reflection or image is seen in it, it is called phali, "water"; the cloud that makes such clear water available. Or phala is fruit in the form of rice-grain and the like; the water that produces them is called phali; the cloud that rains such water is called phaliga.

45. Glosses, editorial and tentative — the source leaves them untranslated: "(1) 'the one by whom, in the case of the navagva, Dadhyañc [the opening was made]; by whom the wise ones reached [it]'; (2) 'the navagva and the daśagva, the most Aṅgirasa, together rejoices among the gods'; (3) 'where the friend, with friends the navagvas, the [seekers of cows] followed the cows with their strengths'; (4) 'The Aṅgirases, our fathers, the navagvas, the Atharvans, the Bhṛgus, the Soma-worthy'." These are rough readings; the verses are hard.

वलम् — vala means the demon named Vala, or the cloud.

रवेण दरयः — mahatā śabdenaiva vidāritavān asi | "By the great sound alone you have split [it]": by mere loud sound, i.e. by the sound made by the thunderbolt you split the mountain or the cloud so that the cloud rains — this is the sense.

The source's Kannada: "The main purport is: O Indra, our fathers the Aṅgirasa ṛṣis ..." (the sentence continues on p. 29).

The source's Kannada (continued from p. 28):

"...so that you may be praised by us, you listened to their praises, drove off the cloud that had veiled the sun's brilliance, and caused the sun's rays to shine; you made the surface of the earth level and wide; in the atmosphere you created the heaven-world and made it firm. These deeds you did, pleased with the praises made by our fathers, the Aṅgirasa ṛṣis. Therefore listen attentively to the praise of us, the sons of the Aṅgirasa ṛṣi — this is the purport."

Word notes (Kannada, with Sanskrit glosses):

- गृणानः (gṛṇānaḥ) — stūyamānaḥ san — "being praised"; in Kannada, "one who is being praised".
- दस्म (dasma) — darśanīya | athavā dasu upakṣaye | śatrūṇām upakṣayitar indra | — "beautiful; or [from] dasu, 'to waste away': O Indra, destroyer of enemies"; in Kannada, "beautiful, or the destroyer of enemies".
- गोभिः (gobhiḥ) — "by the rays"; sarve 'pi raśmayo gāva ucyante (Ni. 2-6) — "all rays are called gāvaḥ".
- अन्धः (andhaḥ) — tamas, "darkness" (Ni. 5-1).
- रजः (rajaḥ) — lokaḥ | lokā rajāṃsy ucyante (Ni. 4-19) — "world; 'the worlds are called rajāṃsi'".
- सानु (sānu) — samucchritaṃ pradeśam — "the raised region" (that you made level).

[Then the argument on whether 'caturaḥ śasi' (final-acute) could apply through sthānivadbhāva; it cannot, because the prohibition 'na padānta…' (Pā. 1-1-58) applies only to the lopa/ajādeśa cases in matters of accent, long vowel and elision, and elsewhere sthānivat holds — 'by this restriction' (a Mahābhāṣya reference, numerals read [1-1-58, ?]).]" [50]

To offer this Rik, tad u prayakṣatamam, in the sacrificial rite called Pravargya, the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra explains it in the sūtra "तदु प्रयक्षतममस्य कर्मात्मन्नन्नभो दुह्यते घृतं पयः" (tad u prayakṣatamam asya karmātmann annabho duhyate ghṛtaṃ payaḥ, "...ghee and milk are milked"), (Ā. 4-7).

Word notes (Kannada, with Sanskrit glosses):

- तत् उ (tat u) — tad eva — "that very"; "that deed".
- प्रयक्षतमम् (prayakṣatamam) — yakṣa pūjāyām | yakṣyate iti yakṣaḥ | atiśayena yakṣo yakṣatamaḥ | atiśayena pūjyam — "[root] yakṣ, to worship; he who is worshipped is yakṣa; one who is worshipped in the highest degree is yakṣatama": "greatly worshipped; most deserving of praise".
- दस्मस्य (dasmasya) — dasi daṃsanadarśanayoḥ | darśanīyasyendrasya | — "of the beautiful Indra".

- दंसः (daṃsaḥ) — "Among the twenty-six names of 'deed' beginning with apaḥ, apnaḥ the word daṃsaḥ is read; hence daṃsaḥ means 'deed', a deed of daring" (Ni. 3-1).
- उपह्वरे (upahvare) — hvṛ kauṭilye | kauṭilyalakṣaṇagativācinātra gatimātraṃ lakṣyate | upahartavye gantavye | — "going crookedly, or flowing".
- मध्वर्णसः (madhvarṇasaḥ) — madhurodakāḥ — "rivers full of sweet water".
- चतस्रः (catasraḥ) — "four [rivers]. The bhāṣyakāra here says four rivers, meaning four such as the Gaṅgā; but which — the Gaṅgā and the others, or other rivers — is not stated clearly anywhere. Skandasvāmin explains the word as meaning that he caused rivers to flow in all four directions."

Sū. 7-1-58, as read); 'daṃsyate kartavyatayā dṛśyate iti daṃsaḥ karma' (that which is seen as to be done: a deed); the affix asun in the object sense (sarvadhātubhyo 'sun); since asun is n-marked, the initial acute by "ñnityādir nityam". उपह्वरे: root hvṛ kauṭilye; of the senses implied by crookedness, only the sense of motion is taken here; "upahvaranti gacchanty asmin nadyaḥ" (where rivers go): upahvaraḥ, a region of the earth where rivers flow; gha by "puṃsi saṃjñāyāṃ ghaḥ prāyeṇa" (Pā. Sū. 8-1-66, as read), hence the word is initial-acute. चतस्रः: the word catur; before śas in the feminine, the substitute catasṛ is laid down with initial acute by "tricaturoḥ striyāṃ tisṛcatasṛ" (Pā. Sū. 7-2-99, as read); with catasṛ + as, where pūrvasavarṇadīrgha would arise, the r-substitution for ṛ by "aci ra ṛtaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 7-2-100, as read), giving catasraḥ. Since catur itself already has the initial acute, the substitute catasṛ too has it by sthānivadbhāva; yet when the initial acute of the substitute is laid down again, the yaṇ-substitution is treated as the old form by "acaḥ parasmin pūrvavidhau" (no number printed), and the final acute of "caturaḥ śasi" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-167, as read) does not arise. Here a doubt arises: because the work done is one of accent, the "na padānta-dvirvacana…" sūtra (Pā. Sū. 1-1-58) should forbid sthānivadbhāva, and then the earlier process would fail. The answer: by "svaradīrghayalopeṣu lopājādeśa eva na sthānivat, anyat tu sthānivad eva" (Pā. Sū. 1-1-58-1 as printed), the prohibition of sthānivadbhāva is only for an ajādeśa that is an elision; here a yaṇ has come, so there is no prohibition; therefore the initial-acute nipāta is not broken. The grammar for the Rik ends "॥ 6 ॥". Grammar pages, noted briefly; sūtra numbers only where legible; the last argument is compressed in the source and the sense of it tentative [?]. [54]

So the Chandogas (Sāmaveda people) have handed down: 'Him they worshipped as the Udgītha, Āyāsya; they consider him this very Āyāsya, because he goes out from the mouth' (Chāndogya Up. 1-2-12, as printed). Or: 'this (ayam) is in the mouth (āsya)', hence āyāsya; so the Vājasaneyins: 'They said: where was he who [spoke] to us thus? — this is in the mouth' (Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa 14-4-1-9). Grammatical tail (compressed; characterized). द्विता — the dh of dvidhā becomes t by Vedic licence. सनजा — root janī prādurbhāve; the affix ḍa even after jani by the all-qualifying word dṛśi ("anyeṣv api dṛśyate"); the shortening of the former member is Vedic [?]; the final acute as in words like sanā etc., retained by the bahuvrīhi accent; the case ending drops by "supāṃ sulug…" leaving ā. आयास्यः — root yasu prayatne; yāsaḥ = effort; yāsya = "born in it", the affix yat by "bhave chandasi" (Pā. [4-4-110, ?]); na yāsyaḥ = ayāsyaḥ; the initial acute of the latter member by "parādiś chandasi bahulam"; for the derivation as given in the śruti the form is obtained by the pṛṣodarādi class. मेने — the locative singular lost by "supāṃ sulug…", with the substitute śe; "śe" is pragṛhya (Pā. 1-1-13); or menā from man ("he thinks") with pacādyac; the Vārttika "naśimanyor aliṭy etvaṃ vaktavyam" (Pā. 6-4-120-5, as printed); the dual "īdūded dvivacanam pragṛhyam" (Pā. 1-1-11, as read) makes it pragṛhya. सुदंसाः — daṃsaḥ is a word for deed, ending with asun, initial-acute; in a bahuvrīhi the initial acute of a two-syllable latter member by "dvyac chandasi" gives the latter member's initial acute. Grammar tail, characterized; sūtra numbers only where read; several in this paragraph doubtful [?].

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). Indra cannot be won by efforts such as fighting; he is easily won by those who praise him with mantras in the form of hymns. Or: Indra is easily won by the hymn-mantras of Aṅgiras, the worshipper of the breath. This Indra, like the sun in the lovely and most excellent sky, nourished heaven and earth, eternal and one in place, [which he parted in two], bearing forms like women.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> He who is not to be attained by violence but easily propitiated by those who praise him with sacred hymns, parted the spheres of heaven and earth, like the Sun in the august and most excellent sky.

Or: āyāsya is the chief breath, prāṇa, for it goes out of the mouth; hence it is called āyāsya; and the Aṅgirasa ṛṣi, the worshipper of such a prāṇa, is by transference called āyāsya. On this point there is the Chāndogya passage (tam hāyāsya udgītham upāsāṃ cakre …, Chāṃ. Up. 1-2-12, as printed). Or: ayam āsye mukhe vartate ity āyāsyaḥ — "this (ayam) is in the mouth (āsya)" is āyāsya: so also the Vājasaneyaka passage (te hocuḥ kva nu so 'bhūd …, Śat. Brā. 14-4-1-9). Thus this prāṇa, because it is in the

Word notes (Kannada, with Sanskrit glosses):

- सनजा (sanajā) — janī prādurbhāve | sanā nityaṃ jo jananaṃ yayos te sanaje | — "those that exist always; i.e. always, eternally, in one and the same place; the earth and the atmosphere are ever together in one place — this is the purport."
- सनीळे (sanīḷe) — samānaṃ nīḷam eko nivāsasthānaṃ yayos te | — "having a common dwelling-place; joined together; being in one place."
- भगो न (bhago na) — "like the sun; among the twelve Ādityas Bhaga is one."
- सुदंसाः (sudaṃsāḥ) — "daṃsaḥ means 'deed' (Ni. 3-1); one of excellent deeds, i.e. who does excellent works."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Grammar page for Rik 62.7 (noted briefly). द्विता: in dvidhā the dh becomes t by Vedic licence; the affix dhā by "saṃkhyāyā vidhārthe dhā" (Pā. Sū. 5-3-42, as read); final-acute by the affix accent. सनजा: root janī prādurbhāve; under "anyeṣv api dṛśyate" the word dṛśi is included for the sake of excluding all restrictions [of upapada], so the affix ḍa comes after the bare root too in the sense of bhāva (as earlier); being ḍit, by force of that the bha-designation; the ṭi (of jani) is dropped, leaving ja; sanā = nityam, jo = jananam "those two whose birth is eternal": sanaje; the former member's shortening is Vedic; since this word is included in the Phiṭsūtra list (a Phiṭ-sūtra, "…nām antaḥ", Phi. Sū.

82), the final acute; this final acute stays in the bahuvrīhi; the dual ending au gives ā by "supāṃ sulug…". आयास्यः: root yasu prayatne; yāsaḥ = effort (affix ghañ); yāse bhavaḥ yāsyaḥ — the affix yat by "bhave chandasi" (Pā. Sū. 4-4-110, as read); loss of the a by "yasyeti ca"; na yāsyaḥ = ayāsyaḥ; the initial acute of the latter member by "parādiś chandasi bahulam" (Pā. Sū. 6-2-199, as read); if the derivation as stated by the śruti is to be followed, the word is one of the pṛṣodarādi class, which is an open class (ākṛtigaṇa), and the intended accent is so obtained. Grammar page, noted briefly; the sūtra numbers are as read and tentative.

Grammar page for Rik 62.7, concluded (noted briefly). मेने: menā is a woman's name; the locative singular is dropped by "supāṃ sulug…" and replaced by śe (śit, so replacing the whole), which is pragṛhya by "śe" (Pā. Sū. 1-1-13, as read). Or manyate iti menā: the root man belongs to the pacādi class, so the affix ac by "nandigrahapacādibhyo…"; the Vārttika "naśimanyor aliṭy etvaṃ vaktavyam" (Pā. Sū. 6-4-120 [Vārttika, as read]) gives e for the a of the root when ac follows: the word menā; in the feminine, ṭāp by "ajādyataṣ ṭāp"; in the dual, when au follows, the śī substitution by "auṅ āpaḥ"; guṇa; mene; since the dual now ends in e, the pragṛhya designation by "īdūded dvivacanaṃ pragṛhyam" (Pā. Sū. 1-1-11, as read). व्योमन्: locative singular, luk by "supāṃ sulug…". अधारयत्: ṇic-ending laṅ, third person singular; because it stands at the beginning of the pāda there is no nighāta; being augment-initial udātta, it is a word with initial acute. सुदंसाः: daṃsa is a word for 'deed'; root dasi daṃsanadarśanayoḥ; ending in the affix asun, it has the initial acute; "śobhanaṃ daṃso yasya sa sudaṃsāḥ"; by "ādyudāttaṃ dvyac chandasi" (Pā. Sū. 6-2-119) in a bahuvrīhi the latter member, having two syllables, takes the initial acute; since the ā after da is acute, sudaṃsāḥ is a word with the acute in the middle. *Grammar page, noted briefly. Moreover, āmāsu cit — among cows that are moist, unripe [i.e. raw-milked], within, in the middle, you hold (dadhiṣe) ripe, pakvam, milk; and likewise among the black cows (kṛṣṇāsu) and red cows (rohiṇīṣu, red-coloured), you hold, in contrast to that, bright (ruśat, shining), white-coloured milk." ॥ प्रतिपदार्थ ॥ — Pratipadārtha स्वपस्यमानः — acting like an auspicious deed (performing auspicious deeds); शवसा सूनुः — the son of strength (the very strong); सुदंसाः — (Indra) of holy deeds like sacrifice; सनेमि — ancient; सख्यम् — the friendship (of the sacrificers); दाधार — makes a sheltered one (nourishes); (Indra, you) आमासु चित् — even among unripe cows; अन्तः — within; पक्वम् — ripe; पयः — milk; दधिषे — you place; कृष्णासु — in black (cows); रोहिणीषु — in red (cows); रुशत् — shining (white); (payaḥ, milk); (dadhiṣe, you place).

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). Indra is of very great strength, of auspicious and holy deeds, and a friend of the sacrificers. He also makes ripe milk in cows that are not ripened. And whether the cows are black or red, he makes the milk in them white and pure.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> (Indra) the son of strength, full of good works, diligent in pious acts retains his ancient friendships for his people ; O Indra, you placed the ripened milk in immature cows whether black or red and white milk in the black cows [sic: as printed].

॥ विशेषविषयाः ॥ — Special Topics

- सनेमि (sanemi) — "Among the six names of 'ancient' beginning pratnam, pradivaḥ, the word sanemi is read (Ni. 3-20); hence 'ancient, old, from long ago'; sanemi means friendship that has come from a very long time ago, old friendship" (the English is in the source).

- स्वपस्यमानः — "apaḥ means 'deed' (Ni. 3-1); su + apaḥ is 'beautiful deed': Indra who has such deeds — this is the purport."
- सूनुः शवसा — balasya putraḥ — "son of strength, of power: one who is very strong."
- सुदंसाः — "daṃsaḥ means 'deed' (Ni. 3-1); sudaṃsāḥ is one who has performed many bold deeds."
- आमासु चित् दधिषे पक्वम् अन्तः पयः — अपरिपक्वासु गोषु चान्तर्मध्ये पक्वं पयो दधिषे — "In the second half of this Rik there are two sentences. Both sentences describe two glories of Indra. The first of these is the sentence describing the glory that, even before the cows grow well and bear calves, he causes milk to arise in them. The other sentence is payaḥ kṛṣṇāsu ruśat rohiṇīṣu: whether the cows are black or red, their milk alone is white; Indra alone has the power to do such a deed — this second glory of Indra is described."

सख्यम्: sakhyur bhāvaḥ sakhyam; the affix ya in the sense of bhāva by "sakhyur yaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 5-1-126, as read); because of the yādi affix there is the bha designation, so the loss of i by "yasyeti ca"; the affix's initial acute. स्वपस्यमानः: "he acts like svapas": the affix kyac after svapas; svapasyate; after kyac, śānac in the sense of laṭ;

the muk augment after a stem ending in a by "āne muk"; because the laṭ-sārvadhātuka after a word accented [low] by the upadeśa is unaccented, the kyac accent remains by sati-śiṣṭa. दाधार: root dhṛṅ dhāraṇe; liṭ, third person singular; "parasmaipadānāṃ ṇalatususthalathusaṇalvamāḥ" gives ṇal; because of liṭ the root is doubled; in the reduplicative syllable ṛ → a by "ur at"; of what remains, the first consonant; the jaś substitution; since ṇal conditions it, vṛddhi of the root's ṛ by "aco ñṇiti"; with "uraṇ raparaḥ" it becomes r-final: dadhāra; as the root is of the tujādi class, the reduplicative syllable lengthens by "tujādīnāṃ dīrgho 'bhyāsasya" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-7, as read); the nighāta accent by "tiṅ atiṅaḥ". Grammar page, noted briefly; the sūtra numbers as read.

Grammar page for Rik 62.9, concluded (noted briefly). पक्वम्: root ḍupacaṣ pāke; the affix kta in the passive; when pac + ta, the t of the participle becomes v by "paco vaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 8-2-52, as read); since this is asiddha (not yet in effect), the c becomes k by "co kuḥ" (Pā. Sū. 8-2-30, as read): the form pakva; final-acute by the affix accent. रोहिणीषु: root ruha bījajanmani prādurbhāve; "ruher ruś ca lo vā" (Uṇ. Sū. 3-374 [?], as read; the bhāṣya on p. 44 prints 3-94): the affix itan; guṇa of the root because the affix conditions the lowering of the vowel; rohita has the initial acute and denotes a colour; therefore in the feminine, by "varṇād anudāttāt topadhāt to naḥ" (Pā. Sū. 4-1-39, as read), ṅīp; in conjunction with it the t becomes n; the unaccented ṅīp, being p-marked, leaves the stem accent. When what is stated earlier applies to the word rohita as a colour-word, a t-penultimate stem, we get rohiṇī; since an n follows r, the retroflex ṇ comes by "aṭkupvāṅnumvyavāye 'pi"; locative plural rohiṇīṣu; the word has the initial acute. Grammar page, noted briefly; the sūtra numbers as read; ornamental rule follows. [60]

Pratipadārtha (concluded). … व्रता — (Indra's) deeds; अमृताः — (those that remain) without sloth (though done again and again); सहोभिः — with their own strength; रक्षन्ते — protecting, they have come; पत्नीः — protecting; स्वसारः — the self-moving (fingers); अह्रयाणम् — (Indra) devoid of shame, or of unhindered gait; जनयो न — like the wives of the gods; दुवस्यन्ति — serve.

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). The fingers, which are in one place and do not change place, have from beginningless time performed innumerable deeds relating to Indra by their own strength. The protecting fingers, able to move of themselves, like women of the gods, without shame, serve Indra by folding the palms and the like.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> From a remote time the contiguous, unshifting and unwearied fingers practise with all their energies many thousand acts of devotion towards Indra ; and like the wives of the gods the protecting sisters (fingers) worship him who is without shame.

॥ विशेषविषयाः ॥ — Special Topics

The meaning of this Rik is somewhat difficult. The ṛṣi's intention is not described clearly.

- सनीळाः (sanīḷāḥ) — "nīḷa means house or dwelling-place (Ni. 3-13); sanīḷāḥ means 'having a common dwelling-place', i.e. being in one place."

- अवनीः (avanīḥ) — agruvaḥ aṅgyaḥ … — "among the twenty-two names of the fingers beginning with agruvaḥ, aṅgyaḥ the word avanayaḥ is read; hence avanīḥ means 'fingers' (Ni. 3-9)."
- अवाताः (avātāḥ) — vā gatigandhanayoḥ | vātaṃ gamanaṃ tadrahitāḥ | — "without movement, i.e. not moving, having left their fixed places."
- व्रता (vratā) — indrasambandhīni karmāṇi | — "vrata means 'deed' (Ni. 3-1); the word vratā is accusative plural."
- अमृताः (amṛtāḥ) — punaḥpunaḥkaraṇe 'py ālasyarahitāḥ | — "without sloth in doing a work again and again."

Special Topics (continued; Kannada, with one English word as printed).

- सहोभिः (sahobhiḥ) — ātmīyair balaiḥ | — "sahaḥ means strength (Ni. 3-9)."
- जनयो न (janayo na) — "janayaḥ means women: 'janīnāṃ jāyānām' is a Nirukta statement (Ni. 10-21); like women, like wives."
- दुवस्यन्ति (duvasyanti) — duvasyati paricaraṇakarmā (Ni. 3-13) paricaranti — "they serve, they attend."
- स्वसारः (svasāraḥ) — svayam eva sarantyo 'ṅgulayaḥ | — "since they move of themselves without being impelled, svasāraḥ means 'fingers'; svasāraḥ also means 'sisters' (the English word sisters is in the source)."
- अह्रयाणम् (ahrayāṇam) — hrī lajjāyām | lajjārahitam | — "devoid of shame, one without shame. Yāska has said: ahrayāṇo 'hrītayānaḥ (Ni. 5-15)."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Grammar page for Rik 62.10 (noted briefly). अवनीः: Yāska says "the avanayaḥ are fingers; they protect (avanti) work" (Nirukta [3-9], as read), i.e. avani is 'fingers' — they protect, help in, the doing of work; hence the name is one of meaning; avani + jas: the same-class lengthening for jas by "supāṃ sulug…"; the ru/visarga for the s: avanīḥ. अवाताः: root vā gatigandhanayoḥ; the affix tan in the sense of bhāva by "asihasi…" (so printed); "vāta is not for them", movement, those who have none, avātāḥ; in the bahuvrīhi, the final acute of the latter member by "nañsubhyām" (Pā. Sū. 6-2-172, as read). व्रता: vrata + jas; the śi substitute by "jaśśasoḥ śiḥ" (Pā. Sū. 7-1-20); śi is sarvanāmasthāna by "śi sarvanāmasthānam" (Pā. Sū. 1-1-42); hence the num augment by "napuṃsakasya jhalacaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 7-1-72); the lengthening by "sarvanāmasthāne cāsambuddhau" (Pā. Sū. 6-4-8); the loss of śi by "śeś chandasi bahulam" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-70); the loss of n; the form vratā. रक्षन्ते: root rakṣa pālane; laṭ, third person plural; the nighāta accent of a verb. दुवस्यन्ति: dyuvasyatiḥ [as printed] has the sense of waiting upon (service); the kaṇḍvādi class being an open class (ākṛtigaṇa), this root belongs to it; in another commentary it is stated "duvas, to kindle"; yak in the same sense by "kaṇḍvādibhyo yak" (Pā. Sū. 3-1-27, as read); because yak is included among the sanādi affixes, the stem duvasya receives the root-designation by "sanādyantā dhātavaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 3-1-32); laṭ, third person … (the paragraph breaks off at the foot of the page and continues on p. 50).

Grammar page for Rik 62.10, concluded (noted briefly). दुवस्यन्ति : in the third person plural the ending jhi, by "jho 'ntaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 7-1-3, as read), gets ant; before the verb-class affix, śap by "kartari śap" (Pā. Sū. 3-1-68); pararūpa by "ato guṇe" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-97); here, since the yak-accent remains by sati-śiṣṭa, and the single-substitute has arisen in it, the a in sya becomes acute; because it stands at the beginning of the pāda, the prohibition

"apādādau" (as read) forbids it, so no nighāta accent arises. अह्रयाणम्: root hrī lajjāyām; "juhotyādi vyatyayo bahulam" — by this śānac arises though there is no cause; by "bahulaṃ chandasi" the śluḥ [or śap] substitute does not arise; with śānac following, guṇa of the root; for the e of the guṇa, ay; because the muk augment does not come, being Vedic, the earlier operations take place; after r, n becomes ṇ; the form hrayāṇa; as a nañ-compound, the first member keeps its accent by "tatpuruṣe tulyārthatṛtīyā...". Or: for the root as stated above, śap being obtained by "bahulaṃ chandasi", it undergoes luk; by "chandasy ubhayathā" (Pā. Sū. 3-4-117, as read) śānac has the ārdhadhātuka designation, so by "sārvadhātukam apit" it does not become ñit; consequently guṇa and āy-substitution come; the muk augment does not come because the stem ends in a vowel [as read]; compound and accent as before. Yāska explains it in this way: ahrayāṇo 'hrītayānaḥ (Nirukta [5-15], as read). ॥ १० ॥ Grammar page, noted briefly; sūtra numbers as read. Rik 62.10 ends here (ornamental rule).

सनायुवः: sanā is an indeclinable; it conveys the sense of 'eternalness'; by lakṣaṇā (indirect sense) it is understood as 'having eternity'. "He wishes for himself sanā, the ancient rite": in this sense the affix kyac comes by "supa ātmanaḥ kyac"; sanāya receives the root-designation by "sanādyantā dhātavaḥ"; thereafter the affix u by "kyāc chandasi" (Pā. Sū. 3-2-170, as read); the loss of the a of kyac by "ato lopaḥ"; the word sanāyu; with jas, by "jasi ca" guṇa and the av-substitution come, and the s gets ru/visarga: sanāyavaḥ; the u for the a of the av-substitution comes by Vedic licence, giving sanāyuvaḥ; the accent of the affix u. वसूयवः: the process as before; "they wish for themselves wealth (vasu)": vasūyanti; "kyaci ca" (Pā. Sū. 7-4-33, as read) lengthens the former vowel; the affix u; guṇa, av-substitution, accent as before. मतयः: root mana jñāne; "manyante iti matayaḥ stotāraḥ"; ktic by "kticktau ca saṃjñāyām" (Pā. Sū. 3-3-174, as read); though "na kticī dīrghaś ca" (Pā. Sū. 6-4-39, as read) would prohibit [the lengthening/loss], by the variable usage the loss of the n of the root man comes by "anudāttopadeśavanati…"; since ktic is c-marked, final acute by "citaḥ"; with jas following, guṇa and ay-substitution come: matayaḥ. दद्रुः: root drā kutsāyāṃ gatau; liṭ, third person plural jhi; the us substitute by "parasmaipadānām ṇalatusus…"; the root is doubled because of liṭ; in the reduplicative syllable only the first consonant remains; dadrā + us: the loss of ā by "āto lopa iṭi ca" (Pā. Sū. 6-4-64, as read); the affix s … (continues on p. 54).

original p. 54

Grammar page for Rik 62.11, concluded (noted briefly). दद्रुः : ru/visarga for the s: dadruḥ; the nighāta accent, since it follows a non-verbal word. उशतीः: root vaśa kāntau ('desire' is the meaning of kānti); śatṛ in the sense of laṭ by "laṭaḥ śatṛśānacāv…" (Pā. Sū. 3-2-124, as read); because the root is of the adi class, the luk of śap by "adiprabhṛtibhyaḥ śapaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 2-4-72, as read); by "sārvadhātukam apit" [the affix is treated as ṅit]; since śatṛ is [so marked], samprasāraṇa by "grahijyāvayi…" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-16, as read), and the former form by "samprasāraṇāc ca": uśat; in the feminine, since śatṛ ends in u-marked [ugit], ṅīp by "ugitaś ca"; with uśatī + śas, the same-class lengthening by "vā chandasi" gives uśatīḥ; because the num augment of "śater anumo nadyajādī" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-173, as read) does not come here, the nadī ending (the ī) receives the acute. स्पृशन्ति: root spṛśa saṃsparśane, tudādi; laṭ, third person plural; the form as already stated; since at the beginning of the pāda, no nighāta; the accent of the verb-class affix. शवसावन्: "śavaḥ is strength, which he has": the affix matup; the ā after the s is Vedic; since it follows a word ending in ā [in the penultimate, "mādupadhāyāś ca matorvo 'yavādibhyaḥ", Pā. Sū. 8-2-9, as read] the m of matup becomes v; in the vocative the form śavasāvan. Or: from śavas, in the sense of matup, the affix āvanip; the form as before; by "āmantritasya ca" the nighāta accent. ॥ ११ ॥ *Grammar page, noted briefly; sūtra numbers as read. ॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). O mighty Indra, the first of all, who harness the horses to the chariot, good leader! Desiring you, Nodhas, the son of Gotama, has composed this new hymn in the form of a sūkta. Praised by it, may [Indra], possessing wealth earned by his own wisdom or by deeds, come quickly to us in the morning.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> O mighty Indra, Nodhas, the son of Gotama has composed for us this new hymn addressed to you who exist for ever ; you harness your horses to your chariot, and you are the sure guide of all. May he (Indra) who has acquired wealth by pious acts come hither quickly in the morning.

॥ विशेषविषयाः ॥ — Special Topics

"In the first maṇḍala, in the eleventh anuvāka, that is, for sūktas 58–64 [numerals read "५८–६४"], the ṛṣi is Nodhas, the son of Gotama. This Nodhas is the ṛṣi of these sūktas (74 ṛks), of the [..]th sūkta of the eighth maṇḍala (6 ṛks) [the sūkta number is cut off in the print: ?], and of the 93rd sūkta of the ninth maṇḍala (5 ṛks) — in all 85 ṛks [as read; 74 + 6 + 5 = 85]. This ṛṣi has generally concluded each sūkta with a refrain-like sentence in the last pāda of the last ṛk of each sūkta, प्रातर्मक्षू धियावसुर्जगम्यात् (prātar makṣū dhiyāvasur jagamyāt). Prātar makṣū dhiyāvasur jagamyāt means: 'may Indra, who is praised by sacrifices and the like, or by hymns, come quickly in the morning (to the sacrificial ground)'." [63]

Word notes (Kannada, with Sanskrit glosses):

- सनायते (sanāyate) — nitya ivācarati — "he who always is, free from destruction."
- हरियोजनाय (hariyojanāya) — "he who has yoked the two bay horses (of Indra) to the chariot."
- सुनीथाय (sunīthāya) — ṇīñ prāpaṇe — "for Indra who is a good guide to people."
- शवसान (śavasāna) — balavann indra — "śavaḥ means strength (no Nirukta reference printed); śavasāna — Indra who has strength."
- धियावसुः (dhiyāvasuḥ) — asmābhir anena stotreṇa stutaḥ san buddhyā karmaṇā vā prāptavasur indraḥ — "Indra who is praised by us, or worshipped by sacrifices and the like, who has gained wealth."
- जगम्यात् (jagamyāt) — āgacchatu — "may he come."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Grammar page for Rik 62.13 (noted briefly).

सनायते: sanā is an indeclinable of the same sense as nitya; from it, in the sense of behaving-like, the affix kyaṅ (printed "kyaj"; the nasal read doubtfully, ?) by "kartuḥ kyaṅ salopaś ca" (Pā. Sū. 3-1-11, as read); by "sanādyantā dhātavaḥ" the stem sanāya receives the root-designation; since the affix is ṅit, the ātmanepada ending; the form sanāyate; at the beginning of the pāda, no nighāta; by the affix accent, final-acute. अतक्षत्: root takṣū tanūkaraṇe; laṅ, third person singular; the i of the ending dropped by "itaś ca"; the śap vikaraṇa; the aṭ augment for the stem; the form atakṣat; at the beginning of the pāda, no nighāta; śap being p-marked is unaccented; the augment, being acute, gives the initial acute. हरियोजनाय: "he who yokes the two bay horses": hariyojanaḥ; root yujir yoge; the affix lyuṭ; "yuvor anākau" (Pā. Sū. 7-1-1) puts ana for it; since l-marked, by "liti" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-193, as read) the syllable before the affix is acute; being a compound (with the gati), the accent of the first member of a kṛdanta by "gatikārakopapadāt kṛt". सुनीथाय: root ṇīñ prāpaṇe; to it the affix thak [Uṇādi, as read]; since k-marked, by "kṅiti ca" the guṇa of the root, which the ik-rule would give, is prevented; su + nīthaḥ = sunīthaḥ, in the dative; by "thāthaghañktājabitrāṇām" (Pā. Sū. 6-2-144, as read) the final acute, since the gati/upapada is prior. ॥ १३ ॥ शवसान: in the vocative, by "āmantritasya ca" the nighāta accent. Grammar page, noted briefly; sūtra numbers as read.

Closing line of the sūkta (Kannada, printed centred): "अरवत्तेरडनेय सूक्तवु समाप्तवु" — "aravatteraḍaneya sūktavu samāptavu" — "The sixty-second sūkta is concluded." [64] [65]

इन्द्र — O Indra; त्वम् — you; महान् — greater in qualities; यो ह — you who; अमे — when fear (from the asuras) arose; जज्ञानः — having become manifest; शुष्मैः — by your enemy-destroying powers; द्यावापृथिवी — heaven and earth; धाः — you made them supported (you made them free of fear); यद्ध ते — because of your; भीत्या — fear; विश्वा — all the pervading multitudes of beings; गिरयश्चित् — the mountains also; अभ्वा — other great things; दृळ्हासः — though firm; किरणा न — like the rays (of the sun); एजन् — trembled.

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). When fear arising from the asuras came upon heaven and earth, you, the great one, appeared at that very moment and removed the fear from both of them. Through fear of you, the beings that pervade everywhere, the firm mountains and other great things, trembled as the rays of the sun make things tremble.

इन्द्र — O Indra; यत् — whenever; विव्रता — those that do various deeds; हरी — (your) two horses; आ वेः — you yoke to the chariot (then); (हे) अविहर्यतक्रतो — O you who do works as one wishes (Indra); अमित्रान् — enemies; येन — with which thunderbolt; इष्णासि

— you go against; पुरुहूत — O Indra, called by many; पूर्वीः — many; पुरः — the cities of the enemies; इष्णासि — you go against; ते — your; बाह्वोः — in the arms; जरिता — the praiser; वज्रम् — the thunderbolt weapon; आ धात् — places.

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). O Indra, you are of free will and are called by many. Whenever you yoke the horses to the chariot, the singers sing praises; as they sing, the thunderbolt comes into your hand without effort and settles there. Therefore, fitted out, you advance against the enemies and destroy their many cities.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Indra, when you harness your variously-moving horses, your praiser places your thunderbolt in your hands ; performer of undesired (of eremies [sic: for "enemies"]) acts, you assail your enemies, and glorified by many destroy their numerous cities.

stays. विव्रता: vrata is the name of a deed; "vividhaṃ vrataṃ yayoḥ tau vivratau"; in the Saṃhitā, by "supāṃ sulug…" the au gives the former-vowel lengthening; in the bahuvrīhi, the accent of the first member is kept by "bahuvrīhau prakṛtyā pūrvapadam" [6].

- ऋभुक्षाः (ṛbhukṣāḥ) — ṛbhūṇām adhipatiḥ, teṣu kṛtanivāsaḥ, athavā mahannāmaitat, mahān pravṛddho 'si — "'the Ṛbhus' are those of much intelligence; 'the best among them' is the sense. Or: one who bestows the power of intellect on those who have little intelligence; one who dwells in an honoured place; or one who is excelling all. This word is read among the twenty-five names of 'great' beginning with abhvaḥ (Ni. 3-13)."
- धृष्णुः (dhṛṣṇuḥ) — dharṣayitā, tiraskartā — "one who stands in opposition to enemies and drives them out; one who makes them flee."
- नर्यः (naryaḥ) — nṛbhyo hitaḥ — "one who does good to men."
- षाट् (ṣāṭ) — śatrūṇām abhibhavitā — "one who makes enemies flee."
- शुष्णम् (śuṣṇam) — śoṣayitāram etatsaṃjñam asuram — "an asura, a rākṣasa, called Śuṣṇa from his nature of harming all. It is well known in the Itihāsa that Indra, as helper to one named Kutsa, destroyed in battle the asura named Śuṣṇa, who was making trouble for the world."
- वृजने (vṛjane) — varjanayukte saṅgrāme hi vīrāḥ puruṣā varjyante hiṃsyante — "brave men give up the hankering of their body and lose their lives; hence the word vṛjana means 'battle'. Here the word vṛjana has the sense of a verb that involves harm; therefore Sāyaṇa has used this word in the sense 'battle'."

- आणौ (āṇau) — saṅgrāme — "in battle. Sāyaṇa has said that the words pṛkṣe and vṛjane too denote battle. Yāska has recorded the words pṛkṣe, āṇau (Ni. 3-9, as printed) among the forty-six words for battle. Skandasvāmin cites this very Rik, tvaṃ śuṣṇaṃ vṛjane pṛkṣa āṇau, as the example, and says the word āṇau means 'battle'."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Grammar page for Rik 63.3 (noted briefly).

ऋभुक्षाः: ṛbhu is a word for the intelligent (those of understanding); "uru vistīrṇaṃ bhāti" (shines widely, i.e. much), or "ṛtena yajñena bhāti bhavati vā ṛbhuḥ" (shines by sacrifice, or exists); when the word uru or ṛta is the first member, for the root bhā dīptau or bhū sattāyām, by "mṛgayvādayaś ca" (Uṇ. Sū. 1-[38], as read) the affix ku, and the ṛbhā substitute for the first member is thereby laid down by nipātana; ṛbhu. "Kṣayati has the sense of lordship": "he rules over them" is ṛbhukṣāḥ; or, from root kṣi nivāsagatyoḥ (the root kṣi is [here] in the sense of lordship): "teṣu nivasati", one dwelling among them: ṛbhukṣāḥ; the affix ini, enjoined by the Uṇādi rule ("patestha", Uṇ. Sū. 4-452, as printed; the bhāṣya on p. 71 prints 4-12), applies also to this root by the "bahula" licence of the Uṇādi; and the loss of ṭi is accomplished by it; the word ṛbhukṣin; when su follows, the ā by "pathimathy-ṛbhukṣām āt" (Pā. Sū. 7-1-85, as read); by "ito 't sarvanāmasthāne" (Pā. Sū. 7-1-86, as read) the i becomes a; the ru/visarga for the s; the form ṛbhukṣāḥ; by the affix accent, final-acute. धृष्णुः: root ñidhṛṣā prāgalbhye; the affix knu by "trasigṛdhidhṛṣikṣipeḥ knuḥ" (Pā. Sū. 3-2-140, as read); being k-marked, the laghūpadha-guṇa does not come; the ṇ for n after ṣ; dhṛṣṇu; final-acute by the affix accent. नर्यः: "narāya hitaḥ" = naryaḥ; the affix yat by "tasmai hitam" (Pā. Sū. 5-1-5, as read); the loss of a by "yasyeti ca"; the initial acute by "yato 'nāvaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-213, as read). (continues on p. 73).

Grammar page for Rik 63.3, concluded (noted briefly). षाट्: root saha abhibhave; by "chandasi sahaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 3-2-63, as read) the affix ṇvi comes even after the bare root saha; being ṇit, the vṛddhi of the penultimate by "ata upadhāyāḥ"; sāh; the ṣ is Vedic; the su ending; ḍha by "hoḍhaḥ" (as read), the jaś by "jhalāṃ jaśo 'nte", the cartva by "vāvasāne": ṣāṭ. द्युमते: dyauḥ = brightness; "asmin asti": dyumān; the affix matup by "tad asyāsty asminn iti matup"; when it becomes a pada by "svādiṣv asarvanāmasthāne", u for div by "diva ut" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-131, as read): dyumat; with su following, because it is ugit, the num augment by "ugidacāṃ sarvanāmasthāne 'dhātoḥ"; the lengthening by "ato 'tvasantasya cādhātoḥ"; the loss of su by "halṅyābbhyo dīrghāt sutisyapṛktaṃ hal"; the loss of t by "saṃyogāntasya lopaḥ": dyumān; the acute of matup by "hrasvanuḍbhyāṃ matup" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-176, as read). अहन्: root hana hiṃsāgatyoḥ; laṅ, third person singular, tip; the loss of i by "itaś ca"; the luk of śap by "adiprabhṛtibhyaḥ śapaḥ"; the loss of ti [the t], an unjoined consonant, by "halṅyābbhyo…"; the aṭ augment for the stem; the form ahan; the nighāta accent, since it follows a non-verbal word. ॥ ३ ॥ *Grammar page, noted briefly; sūtra numbers as read. ॥ प्रतिपदार्थ ॥ — Pratipadārtha (हे) वृषकर्मन् — O one who does the work that makes rain; वज्रिन् — O wielder of the thunderbolt (Indra); वृत्रम् — (Kutsa's enemy) the asura Vṛtra; यत् — when; उभ्नाः — you crushed; (मत्तू) and; शूर — O hero; वृषमणः — one with a mind that bestows wished-for things; Indra; वृथाषाट् — you who overcome enemies without effort; यद्ध — when; योनौ — in the battle where heroes meet; दस्यून् — Kutsa's other enemies; पराचैः — by [their] retreat; वि अकृतः — you cut down (destroyed); (तदा) — then; इन्द्र — O Indra; त्वं ह — you; सखा — as helper of Kutsa; त्यत् — that (the well-known fame in the form of victory); चोदीः — you impelled (brought about).

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). O Indra, you are the maker of rain, the wielder of the thunderbolt, the giver of what is wished for, the one who overcomes enemies without effort. You defeated the asura Vṛtra and his helpers, the other enemies of Kutsa, and brought fame to Kutsa.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Sender of rain and weilder [sic] of thunderbolt, you verily animated him to acquire such renown as that which you acquired when you slew Vritra ; munificient [sic] hero, you easily conquer your foes, you put to flight the Dasyus in battle.

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Grammar page for Rik 63.4 (begins; noted briefly). चोदीः: root cuda preraṇe; luṅ, second person singular, sip; the loss of i by "itaś ca"; where cli would come, the sic substitute by "cleḥ sic"; the iṭ augment by "ārdhadhātukasyeḍ valādeḥ"; by "asti sicor apṛkte" (Pā. Sū. 7-3-96, as read) the īṭ augment for the unjoined sic; by "neṭi" (Pā. Sū. 7-2-4, as read) vṛddhi does not come where sic follows an iṭ [augment], so the root's penultimate takes no vṛddhi; by "iṭa īṭi" (Pā. Sū. 8-2-28, as read) the loss of sic; by "puganta-laghūpadhasya ca" the guṇa of the light-penultimate; by "bahulaṃ chandasy amāṅyoge 'pi" the aṭ does not come; the nighāta accent because it follows a non-verbal word. उभ्नाः: root ṇabha tubha hiṃsāyām; kryādi; in the laṅ, second person singular, the loss of i of sip; the vikaraṇa śnā by "kryādibhyaḥ śnā"; since it is a non-p-marked sārvadhātuka, it is ñit-like, so the laghūpadha-guṇa does not come; the loss of the root's t [nasal] is Vedic; by "bahulaṃ chandasy amāṅyoge 'pi" no aṭ; because yat precedes, by "yad vṛttān nityam" no nighāta; the vikaraṇa accent arises; the affix's s gets ru/visarga: ubhnāḥ. पराचैः: Bhaṭṭabhāskara Miśra has explained: as nīcaiḥ and uccaiḥ are indeclinables, so also parācaiḥ; in the Nirukta, "parācaiḥ parāñcanaiḥ" (Ni. 11-25). दस्यून्: by "dīrghād aṭi samānapāde" (Pā. Sū. 8-3-9, as read) ru for n; "atrānunāsikaḥ pūrvasya tu vā" (Pā. Sū. 8-3-2, as read), by this sūtra the vowel u before the ru receives nasalization. [8]

Sū. 7-1-59, as read) does not come; since the vikaraṇa is not p-marked, by "sārvadhātukam apit" it is ñit-like; therefore the laghūpadha-guṇa of the root does not come; the aṭ augment for the stem; the form akṛtaḥ; though there is an intervening word [vi], because yat is connected, the nighāta does not come; since the augment is acute, akṛtaḥ is a word with the initial acute. वृथाषाट्: the process was shown above; as a compound, the accent of the first member of a kṛdanta by "gatikārakopapadāt kṛt". ॥ ४ ॥ *Grammar page, noted briefly; sūtra numbers as read. ॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). O Indra, it is your nature not to harm any man of firm mind; or, if some men are not pleasing to you, [it is your nature] not to harm even their enemies, though those men be firm in mind. Still, when fear from enemies comes upon us, your praisers, O wielder of the thunderbolt, make it possible for our horses to run freely in all directions; and destroy our enemies who may be there, as hard mountains are split by the thunderbolt.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Indra, you who are unwilling to harm any resolute mortal, set open all the quarters of the horizon to the horses of us who praise you when we are exposed to the aversion of our enemies ; and weilder [sic] of the thunderbolt, demolish our foes as with a club.

इन्द्र — O Indra; ते — to you; गोतमेभिः — by the ṛṣis, sons of Gotama; अकारि — (praise) has been made; ब्रह्माणि — the mantras; नमसा — together with an offering in the form of oblation (food); हरिभ्याम् — [to you who are] with two horses (yoked); ओक्ता — offered in accordance with rule; [19]; नः — to us; सुपेशसम् — of many forms; वाजम् — food; आ भर — bring (give); धियावसुः — one who has gained wealth by intelligence (by deeds) (Indra); प्रातः — in the morning; मक्षु — quickly; जगम्यात् — may he come.

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). O Indra, the ṛṣis, the sons of Gotama, have offered oblations with mantras, according to the śāstra, to you, who are yoked with horses. You who are praised, and endowed with wealth gained by your intelligence or by deeds, come quickly in the morning and give us food of many kinds.

The Maruts are the deities. The last ṛk is in Triṣṭubh metre; the remaining fourteen ṛks are in Jagatī. In the Anukramaṇikā it is said 'vṛṣṇe pañconā mārutaṃ triṣṭubantam'. On the twenty-fourth day of the sacrifice, at the time of the recitation of the Āgnimāruta śastra mantras, the application of this sūkta, as the nividdhānīya mantras addressed to the Maruts, is explained in the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra by the sūtra 'pṛkṣasya vṛṣṇo vṛṣṇe śardhāya yajñena vardhate ity āgnimārutam' (Ā. 7-4). In the Abhiplava rite too, on the fifth day, in the Āgnimāruta śastra mantras, this sūkta serves as the Marut-nivid mantras; this is indicated by the sūtra 'pṛkṣasya vṛṣṇo vṛṣṇe śardhāya nū cit sahojā ity āgnimārutam' of the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra (Ā. 7-7, as printed)."

Bhāvārtha (concluded).

"…they appeared from the atmosphere, endowed with drops of rain-water."

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> They were born handsome and vigorous from the sky, the sons of Rudra, the conquerors of their foes, pure from sin, and purifying all, radiant as suns, powerful as evil spirits, diffusers of raindrops, and of fearful forms.

॥ विशेषविषयाः ॥ — Special Topics

- ऋष्वासः (ṛṣvāsaḥ) — darśanīyāḥ — "possessed of beauty; handsome."
- उक्षणः (ukṣaṇaḥ) — sektāraḥ, yuvānaḥ, varṣitāraḥ — "those who cause the rain to fall; endowed with youth; the Marut deities."
- रुद्रस्य मर्याः (rudrasya maryāḥ) — "The word marya means 'man'; here, because the Maruts cannot be mortal, it ends in the sense 'sons'. That the Maruts are sons of Rudra is stated: 'ā te pitar marutāṃ sumnam etu' (Ṛg. Saṃ. 2-33-1). Marya means man; since the Marut deities have no mortal nature, it should be understood that they are called 'sons'. The Ṛk-Saṃhitā sentence 'ā te pitar marutām' expresses the idea that the Marut deities are sons of Rudra. Skandasvāmin: "ते दिवस्सकाशात् जज्ञिरे द्यौरेषां माता" (te divas sakāśāj jajñire dyaur eṣāṃ mātā) ['they were born from the presence of the sky; heaven is their mother'; sakāśāt as printed] — these Marut deities were born from the atmosphere; the atmosphere itself is their mother. And it is clear in the Purāṇas and Itihāsas that Aditi, the wife of the sage Kaśyapa, gave birth to the Maruts. The Marut deities show their origin thus, so that everyone may know their surpassing greatness. And by the mantras 'rudrasya ye mīḷhuṣaḥ santi putrāḥ' (Ṛk. Saṃ. 6-66-3, as read) and 'yāmañ rudrasya sūnavaḥ' (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-85-1, as read) he states that the Marut deities are Rudra's sons."
- असुराः (asurāḥ) — śatrūṇāṃ nirasitāraḥ — "those who destroy the enemies of the sacrificers."

- अरेपसः (arepasaḥ) — pāparahitāḥ | repa iti pāpanāma — "the Marut deities have no connection with sin; repa means 'sin'."
- पावकासः (pāvakāsaḥ) — sarveṣāṃ śodhakāḥ — "as fire purifies other things, so these Marut deities bring purity to all."
- सत्वानो न (satvāno na) — "satvānaḥ is the name given to the hosts of beings; atho ye asya satvānaḥ (Tai. Saṃ. 4-5-1-3) — it is seen so there. The word na is a word of comparison. By the word satvānaḥ the sense 'the hosts of beings of Parameśvara' arises. The idea is that these Marut deities are, like the hosts of beings of Parameśvara, endowed with great valour."
- द्रप्सिनः (drapsinaḥ) — vṛṣṭyudakabindubhir yuktāḥ — "endowed with the fine drops that pour down rain-water. 'Marutaḥ sṛṣṭāṃ vṛṣṭiṃ nayanti' (Tai. Saṃ. 2-4-10-2) — they cause the rain [that has been let loose] to reach everywhere: this is the meaning of the word drapsinaḥ. Skandasvāmin says: 'vṛṣṭyudakalakṣaṇena rasena rasavantaḥ; athavā satvāno neti śabdāt yathendraprabhṛtayo dātāro drapsinaḥ tathā drapsinaḥ' — 'those who have sap in the form of rain-water; or, from the words satvāno na: as Indra and others who are givers are drapsinaḥ, so these'; he explains that the Marut deities are endowed with the little drops of rain-water, like Indra and the other deities."
- घोरवर्पसः (ghoravarpasaḥ) — varpa iti rūpanāma | ghorarūpāḥ śatrūṇāṃ bhayaṅkararūpāḥ — "as the hosts of beings are of fearful form, so also these Marut deities appear to the enemies of the sacrificers, bearing a form that causes fear. The word varpas is read among the sixteen names of 'form' (Ni. 3-13)."

Pratipadārtha (concluded). … of unhindered movement; पर्वता इव — like mountains, of firm limbs (the Marut deities); ववक्षुः — they desire to grant (the wishes of the praisers); (अपि च) — and; विश्वा — all; पार्थिवा — those on the earth; दिव्यानि — in the atmosphere (in heaven); भुवनानि — such (things, objects); दृळ्हा चित् — though firm; मज्मना — by strength; प्र च्यावयन्ति — they shake (cause to move).

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). The Marut deities are youthful, sons of Rudra, free from old age, of unhindered motion, firm-limbed like the mountains, or immovable; they slay those who do not worship the deities. They are intent on fulfilling the wishes of the praisers. Whether on the earth or in heaven, however firm the things that exist may be, they make them move.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Youthful Rudras, and undecaying, destructive of those who do not worship (the gods), of unobstructed progress, and immovable as mountains, they are desirous of granting (the wishes of the worshipper) and by their strength agitate all substances, whether of heaven or of earth.

Special Topics (concluded; Kannada). "...the objects that arise on the earth and in the heavens, firm as they are, they destroy [shake] with their strength: this is the sense. The word मज्मना (majmanā) is read, in the sense of 'strength', among the twenty-eight names of strength beginning ojaḥ, pājaḥ (Ni. 3-9, as printed). Skandasvāmin, giving the reason for the Vedic usage of a singular in place of a plural for the word [vavakṣuḥ] in this Ṛk, has accepted the reading vivakṣavaḥ; since the word vivakṣathaḥ [as read] occurs among the names of 'great', he explains that this word vivakṣavaḥ means 'great ones'." kāraka as first member, the accent of the latter member of a kṛdanta by "gatikārakopapadāt kṛt". ववक्षुः: root vaha prāpaṇe; in the sense of wishing, the affix san by "dhātoḥ karmaṇaḥ samānakartṛkād icchāyāṃ vā" (Pā. Sū. 3-1-7, as read); by "ekāca upadeśe 'nudāttāt" (Pā. Sū. 7-2-10, as read) the prohibition of iṭ before san; by "sanyaṅoḥ" the doubling of the root; in the reduplicative syllable only the first consonant remains; the substitution of i by "sanyataḥ" does not come here, being Vedic; the h of the root, since a jhal follows, becomes ḍh by "hoḍhaḥ"; the s of san, following, becomes k by "ṣaḍhoḥ kaḥ si" (Pā. Sū. 8-2-41, as read); and since a k precedes, ṣ by "ādeśapratyayayoḥ" (Pā. Sū. 8-3-59, as read); by "sanādyantā dhātavaḥ" the stem vavakṣa receives the root-designation; the us substituted for jhi of the liṭ by "parasmaipadānāṃ ṇalatusus..."; by "kāspratyayād āmam antre liṭi" [as read; Pā. Sū. 3-1-35] the prohibition amantre — so ām does not come; by "ato lopaḥ" the loss of the a of san; by "liṭi dhātor anabhyāsasya" there is no second doubling; the form vavakṣuḥ; by the affix's initial acute, [the word] has the final acute; the prohibition "apādādau" forbids the nighāta, so, standing at the beginning of the pāda, no nighāta arises. विश्वा: viśva + jas; the śi by "jaśśasoḥ śiḥ"; its loss by "śeś chandasi bahulam".

The sequence of explanation Skandasvāmin gives here: the word vana denotes trees; as beasts devour grass and elephants break and eat the trees, so you, Marut deities, destroy by your own power the enemies of the sacrificers: this is one sense; or, as lions and tigers go about devouring elephants, you destroy — by making rain through the clouds filled with water: this is another sense."
- यदारुणीषु तविषीरयुग्ध्वम् — aruṇavarṇāsu vaḍavāsu balāni saṃyojitavantaḥ — "using red-coloured mares as vehicles, you have conferred your strength on them. Here Yāska's Nirukta statement is 'pṛṣatyo marutām' (Ni. 2-28, as printed). Skandasvāmin explains: 'taviṣīr ayugdhvam — balena yuktān aśvān yuddhāya marutaḥ svarathe yuktavantaḥ' — the Marut deities yoked to their chariot, for battle, horses endowed with strength."

- रघुस्यदः (raghusyadaḥ) — śīghragamanāḥ — "raghu is 'swift', syandante 'they go': the Marut deities who move with great speed, and carefully."

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). O Marut deities, who are divided into groups of seven, who accept the oblations given by men, who are heroes, strong, and exceedingly angry in matters of the hostile: fill heaven and earth with loud sound. And your splendour in the chariots is seen, as the lightning in the midst of a cloud, or a spotless, beautiful form, is seen by all as delightful: just so does it appear.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Maruts, who are distinguished in troops, who are benevolent to men, who are heroes, and whose strength is deadly in your anger, you make heaven and earth resound (at your coming) ; your (glory) sits in the seat-furnished chariots, conspicuous as (a beautiful) form, or as the lovely lightning.

original p. 132

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). The Marut deities — all-knowing, wealthy, strong, great-souled, possessing unbounded bodily strength, having Indra as their weapon-in-hand, or having the juice of Soma as their drink, good leaders — hold in both arms weapons for the casting-away of their enemies.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> The Maruts, who are all-knowing, co-dwellers with wealth, combined with strength, loud-sounding, repellers of foes, of infinite prowess, whose weapon (of offence) is Indra, and who are leaders (of men), hold in their hands, the shaft.

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). The Marut deities, who increase the rain-water, who perform sacrifices, who go of themselves to the place of sacrifice, who destroy their enemies on their own, who can dislodge even firm mountains, who are unassailable by others, who have shining weapons, riding on their chariots with golden wheels, scatter the clouds, as a chariot in motion throws upward the grass, stones and the like that lie on the way.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Augmenters of rain, they drive with golden wheels the clouds asunder, as elephants (in a herd break down the trees in their way) : they are honoured with sacrifices, visitants of the hall of offering, spontaneous assailers of (their foes) subverters of what are stable, immovable themselves, and wearers of shining weapons.

While the sacrifice is going on, the evening pressing time is called the third pressing; this is the time of the ritual of pressing Soma. When this time has come, the Hotṛ praises the Marut deities, with the priests connected with him, with appropriate mantras. Then they take the Soma plant, pound it, and draw out the juice for the sake of offering it in the fire. Therefore the connection with that Soma juice arises for the Marut deities; thus 'the Marut deities are those who have Soma' is the sense." [42]

45. The Kannada gloss is compressed and partly doubtful [?].

Grammar page for Rik 64.13, concluded (noted briefly). मरुतः: the nighāta accent by "āmantritasya ca". आवत: root ava rakṣaṇe; laṅ [read as luṅ/laṅ in the Vedic sense], second person plural; the substitute ta for the ending tha by "tasthasthamipāṃ tāṃtaṃtāmaḥ"; the vikaraṇa śap by "kartari śap"; the aṭ augment for the stem; the form āvata; since yam precedes, by "yad vṛttān nityam" the prohibition of nighāta arises; since the augment is acute, the word has the initial acute. अर्वद्भिः: in the instrumental plural, by "arvaṇas trasāv anañaḥ" the t-ending substitute comes when a pada [ending] follows; since kasun is the affix, the initial acute. धना: dhana + śas; where the śi substitute would come, the num augment and the lengthening arise; by "śeś chandasi bahulam" the loss of śi. नृभिः: though by "sānvekācas tṛtīyādiḥ" the case-ending would be acute, the prohibition of acuteness of the ending arises by "nṛ cānyatarasyām" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-184). आपृच्छ्यम्: root pracchaḥ jñīpsāyāṃ vāci [the print's root-gloss, as read]; by the sūtra "chandasi niṣṭarkya-devahūya-praṇīyonnīyocchiṣya-marya-stārya-dhvaryakhanya-khānya-devayajya-āpṛcchya-pratiṣīvya-brahmavādya-bhāvya-sthēya-upacāyya-pṛḍanya" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-16); since the affix is p-marked it is unaccented by "ānudāttau suppitau", so by the root's final acute the ṛ is acute; compounded with the prefix ā (a gati), the accent of the latter member of a kṛdanta, the first member's accent, by "gatikārakopapadāt kṛt". क्षेति: root kṣi nivāsagatyoḥ; laṭ, third person singular, standing at the beginning of a pada [as read]; by "bahulaṃ chandasi" the luk of the vikaraṇa; guṇa of the root's i by "sārvadhātukārdhadhātukayoḥ"; the nighāta accent, since it follows a non-verbal word. पुष्यति: root puṣa puṣṭau; laṭ, third person singular, tip; the vikaraṇa śyan by "divādibhyaḥ śyan"; since the affix is non-p-marked it is ñit-like by "sārvadhātukam apit", so the laghūpadha-guṇa does not come; by "śyan" being n- marked, the initial acute; since a verb stands before [i.e. "tiṅ atiṅaḥ"], the prohibition of nighāta arises by "ati-ṅaḥ". ॥ १३ ॥ Grammar page, noted briefly; sūtra numbers as read; several readings on this page are compressed and tentative [?]. Rik 64.13 ends here (ornamental rule).

'Śataṃ himā ity āha | śataṃ tvā hemantāni dhīyeti vā vaitad āha' (Tai. Saṃ. 1-5-8-5; the text calls it the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa) — so says the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa. In this [mantra] the prayer is made that we who praise the Marut deities may, living a hundred years, see to the bringing up of the sons and grandsons whom they bestow. The sense, from the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa sentence, is that one prospers for a hundred winter seasons; since the winter season comes only once in the year, the meaning 'hundred years' is justified."

In this mantra the other words, dustaram, dyumantam, are mostly adjectives of the word putra."

In them, at the time of recitation, two Riks of the two-footed [metre] are put together and recited as one four-footed Rik; where the number is odd, the leftover one is recited just so. The sense too is mostly one for the two two-footed [verses]; but in the ritual use they are to be recited separately, one by one. For it is set out in the sūtra: 'paśvā na tāyum — the dvaipada' (Āśvalāyana [Śrauta-sūtra] 8-12). Of these, 'paśvā' is the first sūkta, of ten Riks. The Anukramaṇī says here: 'paśvā na tāyum iti daśa parāśaraḥ śāktyo dvaipadaṃ tat'. The ṛṣi is Parāśara, son of Śakti; and his sonship is recalled: 'Śakti is the son of Vasiṣṭha, and Parāśara is the son of Śakti'. The metre is Dvipadā Virāj; 'the Dvipadā Virāj has twenty [syllables]' (Anu. 12-8) is its definition. The deity is Agni, by the rule that a statement 'the one next to [the Agneya] is Aindra' [applies]: all the sūktas from 'paśvā na tāyum' up to 'itthā hi' belong to Agni: that is its sense. Since it is said 'dvaipadaṃ tat', the six sūktas beginning with this one are dvaipada by the paribhāṣā 'tuhyādi…'. On the tenth day, in the Vaiśvadeva śastra, this dvaipada sūkta is to be recited before the Vaiśvadeva sūkta.

Anuvāda (Kannada). "With the sūkta 'Paśvā na tāyum' the twelfth anuvāka of the first maṇḍala begins. In this anuvāka there are nine sūktas [Sūktas 65–73, numerals read "೬೫–೭೩"]. Of them, the six beginning with 'paśvā na tāyum' are made of Ṛks in the metre called dvipadā virāṭ. Dvipadā means a Ṛk having two pādas. When they are recited in study, two two-pāda Ṛks are joined and reckoned and recited as one Ṛk of four pādas. In explaining the Ṛks, some say that the half-Ṛk formed by joining each two pādas is a Ṛk of the metre dvipadā virāṭ; others join four pādas, treat the resulting two half-Ṛks as one Ṛk, and give the count of Ṛks accordingly. In ordinary explanation of Ṛks this second method is followed. In ritual use (prayoga) and application (viniyoga) the half-Ṛk formed by two pādas is counted as one Ṛk. In the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra there is the sūtra 'paśvā na tāyum iti dvaipadam' (Ā. 8-[12], as read). As said before, in the first of the six sūktas of this kind, 'paśvā na', there are ten Ṛks (half-Ṛks of two pādas each). In the Anukramaṇikā it is said 'paśvā daśa parāśaraḥ śāktyo dvaipadaṃ tat'. The ṛṣi of this sūkta is Parāśara, the son of Śakti: Vasiṣṭha's son is called Śakti, and Śakti's son is Parāśara. The Ṛks of this sūkta are in the metre dvipadā virāṭ. The Anukramaṇikā says 'viṃśatikā dvipadā virājaḥ' — that is, in a Ṛk of dvipadā virāṭ metre there are twenty syllables (Anu. [12-4], as read). Agni is the deity of this sūkta; and, as said before, Agni is the deity of the six sūktas with this kind of metre; therefore the six sūktas are all of the metre dvipadā virāṭ. In the Vaiśvadeva śastra mantras on the tenth day of the sacrifice, this sūkta is to be recited before the Vaiśvadeva sūktas: so it is said in the sūtra."

अग्ने — O Agni; धीराः — the wise; सजोषाः — of one accord, loving, the gods; पश्वा — [with the] stolen cattle; तायुं न — like a thief; गुहा — in a cave (water-formed, or in the aśvattha-cave); चतन्तम् — moving [you who were]; पद्यैः — by the footprints on the way; अनु ग्मन् — they followed; यजत्राः — worthy of worship in sacrifices; विश्वे — all the gods; नमो युजानम् — [you who] accept the oblation for yourself; नमो वहन्तम् — [you who] carry it for the other gods; त्वा — you; उपसीदन् — drew near.

original p. 158

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). O Agni, you take [the oblations] in sacrifices for yourself and carry [them] to the other gods, receiving the oblations. When you, such as you are, were hidden in the waters, the wise and loving gods, who are fit to be offered the oblation in the sacrifice, all of them, by the marks of your feet, followed you and found you, as one finds a thief who has carried off cattle by following the signs of the cattle's hooves.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> The intelligent Divinities, all equally pleased followed you Agni, by your footmarks, when hiding in the hollow (of the waters), like a thief (who has stolen) an animal ; you receiving oblations and carrying them to the Gods : all the Gods, worthy of adoration, sit down near you.

- पश्चा तायुं न — apahṛtena paśunā saha vartamānam | tāyur iti stenanāma | yathā stenaḥ parakīyaṃ paśvādidhanam apahṛtya duṣpraveśe girigahvare vartate tadvat — "the word tāyu is read among the fourteen names of 'thief' beginning tṛpuḥ, takvā (Ni. [3-24?, ?]): it means 'thief'. The word na is read in the sense of comparison among the words iva, na, cit, nu (Ni. [1-4]). As a thief takes another's wealth and lives in a mountain cave or some other place where none can enter, so Agni is hidden in the water where no one knows him. In the two Ṛks 'paśvā na tāyum' there is an Itihāsa told about Agni. Agni, who was connected with Varuṇa [reading of the relation doubtful, ?], desired and enjoyed Yama's wife called Yamī; because he enjoyed another's wife, old age came upon him. Then, from that old age, he no longer had the power to take the oblations that were given to the gods at those sacrifices, and fear came to him from the thunderbolt weapon and from the vaṣaṭ cry. He took on the vow of fasting, not accepting food, and, entering the waters and the herbs, remained hidden. The waters made him grow with their immortal sap. The gods, putting Yama and Varuṇa at their head, came to Agni and graced him with a life free of old age. In sacrifices, by means of the homas called Prayāja and Anuyāja, giving him shares of the oblation, as before they set him to the work of carrying the oblations to the gods" [3].

"...they appointed him. This Itihāsa is told at length in the Ṛk (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-51-1); here it is explained briefly from this Ṛk.

- गुहा चतन्तम् — ābrūpāyāṃ guhāyāṃ gacchantaṃ vartamānam | catatir gatikarmā | tathā ca taittirīyair apsu agneḥ praveśaḥ samāmnāyate — 'sa nilāyata so 'paḥ prāviśat' (Tai. Saṃ. 2-6-6-1) iti | yadvā aśvatthaguhāyāṃ vartamānam | śrūyate ca — 'agnir devebhyo nilāyata | aśvo rūpaṃ kṛtvā so 'śvatthe saṃvatsaram atiṣṭhat' (Tai. Brā. 1-1-3-9) iti — "one who goes about, or lives, in a hidden cave in the form of water; the root cat is used here in the sense of motion. The Taittirīya Saṃhitā (2-6-6-1) tells of Agni's entering the water. Or, [guhā means] the aśvattha tree: Agni, entering the aśvattha tree, lived hidden there for a year — Sāyaṇa says that this matter is told in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa sentence."
- Skandasvāmin: गुहा — gūḍhaṃ pracchannam; catantaṃ naśyantam; namo vahantaṃ yujānam annakāraṇena abbhakṣaṇena apsu praśayitaṃ; namo vahantam — amṛtarasaṃ pibantam — "he adds these words in another way: 'hidden, concealed; catantam — perishing [disappearing]; namo vahantam, yujānam — on account of food, by living on water, lying in the waters; namo vahantam — drinking the immortal sap.' In this sequence Agni, without showing his form to anyone, was disappearing in hiding; in the Ṛk 'tebhiṣ ṭvā cātayāmasi' (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-155-1) the root cat is used in the sense of 'destroy'. The word namaḥ is read among the twenty-eight names of food beginning andhaḥ, vājaḥ (Ni. 3-9); namaḥ means food; the waters, which are the cause of food, are meant by the word namaḥ. Agni entered the hidden place in the form of water, which causes food, and there drank the water, immortal like nectar."

- नमो वहन्तम् — devebhyaḥ prattaṃ havir vahantam — "one who carries to the gods the food, in the form of oblation, offered by the sacrificers."
- सजोषाः — samānaṃ juṣante iti sajoṣasaḥ | samānaprītayaḥ — "those who have the same love with regard to the praisers."

Sū. 6-1-174, as read) the case-ending after the yaṇ that has come in the place of an acute, being preceded by a consonant, takes the acute. गुहा: root guhū saṃvaraṇe; since this root is read in the bhidādi group, the affix aṅ by "ṣidbhidādibhyo 'ṅ" (Pā. Sū. 3-3-104, as read); since ṅit-like, no laghūpadha-guṇa; in the feminine, ṭāp by "ajādyataṣ ṭāp"; the word guhā; with the locative singular after it, the case-ending is dropped by "supāṃ sulug…"; though by the affix accent a final acute would arise, since it is read in the vṛṣādi group, by "vṛṣādīnāṃ ca" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-203, as read) the initial acute. चतन्तम्: root cati yācane, ubhayapadī; in the sense of laṭ, the affix śatṛ; the vikaraṇa śap; the word catat; used here in the sense of motion; by the root accent the initial acute; in the accusative singular the num augment by "ugidacāṃ…". युजानम्: root yujir yoge, of the rudhādi class; in the sense of laṭ, the affix śānac; by "bahulaṃ chandasi" the luk of the śnam vikaraṇa; in the accusative singular the form yujānam; since the affix is c-marked, by "citaḥ" the final acute; with am following, the single substitute, which by "ekādeśa udāttenodāttaḥ" is acute. वहन्तम्: root vaha prāpaṇe; as before, the affix śatṛ; the laṭ-sārvadhātuka and the vikaraṇa śap being unaccented, by the root accent the initial acute. सजोषाः: root juṣī prītisevanayoḥ; "those who enjoy together" are sajoṣasaḥ; to the root the affix asun; because the affix conditions it, guṇa of the root's penultimate; by "samānasya chandasy amūrdhaspaktheṣu" (Pā. Sū. 6-3-84, as read) sa for samāna; the word sajoṣas; in the compound, by "gatikārakopapadāt kṛt" the accent of the latter member of a kṛdanta, the first member's accent; where the nominative plural would come, since su follows [by "supāṃ sulug…" su for jas, as read], by "atvasantasya cādhātoḥ" the lengthening of the penultimate, by "halṅyābbhyo…" the loss of su, and the ru for the final s because it is at the end of a pada; by "kharavasānayor visarjanīyaḥ" the visarga. Grammar page for Rik 65.1, concluded (noted briefly). पद्यैः: by "ūḍidaṃpadādyappumraidyubhyaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-171, as read) the case-ending receives the acute. गमन्: root gamḷ gatau; in the luṅ, third person plural, jhi is replaced by ant; the loss of i by "itaś ca"; the cli-vikaraṇa has luk by "mantre ghasahvaraṇaśavṛdahādvṛcakrugamijanibhyo ler luk" (Pā. Sū. 2-4-80, as read), because the affix that follows is j-marked; by "gamahanajana…" (Pā. Sū. 6-4-98, as read) the loss of the root's penultimate; by "bahulaṃ chandasy amāṅyoge 'pi" no aṭ comes; the nighāta accent of a verb; the form gman. यजत्राः: root yaja devapūjāsaṅgatikaraṇadāneṣu; by "aminakṣiyajivadhi…" (Pā. The gods anu guḥ — went after — vratā, the doings, i.e. the movements, staying, lying down and so on, ṛtasya, of Agni who had gone, fled; they went to search. After that pariṣṭiḥ, the search all around, bhuvat, took place. Bhūma, the earth, with the gods searching for this very Agni, dyaur na, became like heaven: all the gods, Indra and the rest, had come to the earth to seek Agni. Āpaḥ, the waters, the deity-waters, īm, this [Agni] who had entered the water, vardhanti — increase, make grow, so that the gods should not see him (i.e. they hid him). Of what kind? Panvā, by praise, suśiśvim, well increased; ṛtasya yonā —* yoni* is a word for 'water' — in the water, which is the cause of the ṛta (sacrifice, or food), garbhe, in the womb-place, in the middle, sujātam, well manifested. Thus a fish told the gods of Agni who was among the waters; thereafter the gods knew him: this is the idea. ॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). The gods set out everywhere, searching for the Agni who had fled. The earth, with the gods, became like heaven. Agni, grown by praises and the like, stayed in the midst of the water that is the cause of food and so on, well concealed from the gods.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> The Gods followed the traces of the fugitive, the search was made everywhere, and earth became like the celestial region ; the waters swelled (to conceal him), who was much enlarged by laudation, and was manifested as it were in the womb in the waters, the source of sacrificial food.

"sarvanāmasthāne cāsambuddhau" the lengthening of the penultimate; by "śeś chandasi bahulam" the loss of śi; the loss of n. गुः: root iṇ gatau; in the luṅ, third person plural, where jhi would follow, by "iṇo gā luṅi" (Pā. Sū. 2-4-45, as read) gā in the place of the root; the sic arising for cli by "cleḥ sic" is lost by "gātisthāghupābhūbhyaḥ sicaḥ parasmaipadeṣu"; by "āta" [āta, Pā. Sū. 3-4-110, as read] jus for the jhi of an affix whose sic has been lost and which ends in ā; by "usy apadāntāt" the following-form; by "bahulaṃ chandasy amāṅyoge 'pi" no aṭ; the form guḥ; the nighāta accent of a verb. परिष्टिः: root iṣu icchāyām; in the feminine, the affix ktin by "striyāṃ ktin"; by "titutratatheṣu…" (Pā. Sū. 7-2-9, as read) the iṭ augment is prohibited for the affix; the affix ti becomes ṭi [ṣṭi] by the ṣ of the root; with pari + iṣṭi, the following-form as a single substitute by the statement "śakandhvādiṣu pararūpaṃ vācyam" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-94, Vārttika [4], as read); by "tāśau ca niti" (Pā. Sū. 6-2-50, as read) the accent of the first member, a gati, since the affix is n-marked and the latter member [is kṛdanta]. भूमा: bhūmi + su; by "supāṃ sulug…" the ḍā for the case-ending; since ḍit, the loss of ṭi of the stem: bhūmā; here the shortening of it is Vedic. वर्धन्ति: root vṛdhu vṛddhau; where the action of an instigator is intended, by "hetumati ca" the ṇic; because it conditions it, guṇa of the light penultimate: vardhi; after the ṇic-ending stem, laṭ, third person plural, jhi, ant for it by "jho 'ntaḥ"; the vikaraṇa śap by "kartari śap"; by "chandasy ubhayathā" the ārdhadhātuka designation for śap; by "ṇer aniṭi" (Pā. Sū. 6-4-51, as read) the loss of ṇi [when an ārdhadhātuka without iṭ follows]; pararūpa by "ato guṇe"; the form vardhanti; śap being p-marked, unaccented; since the stem is ādyudāttaḥ by the upadeśa, the laṭ-sārvadhātuka (anti) is unaccented by "tāsyanudāttenṅidadupadeśāl lasārvadhātukam anudāttam" [8].

Sū. 3-2-171, as read), "utsargaś chandasi" [as read] — in the Veda the rule is not constant — the affix ki comes after this root too; because k-marked, by "vacisvapiyajādīnāṃ kiti" samprasāraṇa; this root belongs to the yajādi [vaci-svapi-yaji] group; since the affix is said to be like liṭ, the doubling of the root; śuśu + i, by "bahulaṃ chandasi" (Pā. Sū. 7-4-78, as read) the i in the reduplicative syllable; setting aside uvaṅ, the u of the root takes the yaṇ substitute by Vedic licence: śiśvi; su + śiśvi = suśiśvim. Since a sense of praise is seen with su by "suḥ pūjāyām" (Pā. Sū. 1-4-94, as read), the karmapravacanīya designation arises for su (in the sense of 'excellent'); by "svatī pūjāyām" [Pā. Ma. 2-2-18-4; the grammar page prints "ಸ್ವತೀ"] the prādi compound; by "tatpuruṣe tulyārthatṛtīyā…" (Pā. The word na is used in the sense of iva, which marks a comparison. Yāska has read this word among the twelve words of comparison beginning idam iva, idaṃ yathā (Ni. [1-4]). As in the world the attainment of one's desire, when it increases, gives delight, so Agni gives joy to all. Or the word raṇvā, derived from the root ramu, is used in the sense 'delightful'; or, because it is said to mean 'to be approached', as one gets growth (puṣṭi) in the form of the increase of wished-for fruits by offering oblations in a sacrifice, so Agni is obtained by the sacrificers who make the sacrifice. Derived from the root raṇa śabde, the word raṇvā means 'fit to be praised'; so, as growth in the form of the attainment of a desired thing is fit to be praised, Agni too is worthy of praise."

Sāyaṇa takes it in the causal sense, 'one who gives food'. As a hill provides, for all to eat, the fruits [of the trees] that grow on it, so Agni too provides to all the things to eat — or, in the sense that the sacrificers who pour oblations into Agni enjoy the pleasure (fruit) of heaven. Or: as a mountain in times of famine protects all beings by giving its fruits and roots, so Agni protects those who perform [the sacrifice] from sin; in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā there is the prayer in a mantra that Agni may free us from sins of various kinds" [11].

Special Topics (continued; Kannada). "...[As a mountain] is able to give to all those who wish to eat, so Agni too: the quality of feeding others is thus found in Agni. Or, the sacrificers who perform the sacrifice offer oblations in Agni and enjoy heaven (the fruit and the pleasure). Therefore the quality of 'feeder' that belongs to the mountain is found in the upameya Agni with reference to the sacrificers alone: this special meaning is understood. As the two meanings of the root bhuj have been stated — eating, and protecting — the Sāyaṇa bhāṣya shows both senses as they apply to the mountain and to Agni. In times of drought the mountain gives the fruits and roots that grow on it, so that they are food for beings, and protects them. In the same way Agni frees from the consequences of their sinful deeds the beings who are in distress, and protects them. In the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (1-[8]-5-[1], as read) there is a prayer in a mantra that Agni may protect us from the sins of various kinds. From this the meaning 'protector' is established for Agni. Skandasvāmin: the word agni is masculine in the upameya; the words raṇvā and the like denote qualities in Agni, but by a change of gender are used

"...[the word sindhu in the sense of 'river'] is used here only in its etymological sense: the waters always run with speed towards low ground; in the same way Agni too goes with speed towards what he is to burn. It is impossible to check him. The same meaning is given for these Ṛks in Skandasvāmin's commentary too."

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). (Because water arises from Agni, or because the fugitive Agni lay hidden in the water,) Agni, who is like a brother to the sisters, the waters, consumes forests as a king destroys enemies. Driven by the wind (when the wind blows with force) he burns even the herbs and the trees in the forests.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> He is the friend of the waters, like a brother to his sisters, he consumes the forest as a king slays his enemies, when excited by the wind, he traverses the woods and shears the hairs (trees) of the earth.

Or: devebhyaḥ palāyito 'psu vartamānaḥ san tāsām apāṃ bandhur babhūva — Agni, who fled from the gods and lived among the waters, became a kinsman of the waters: this is another meaning. A relationship of the nourisher and the nourished, or of producer and produced, has been stated between Agni and the waters. See Ṛk Saṃhitā, Part 3, pp. 60–61 [as read, ?]."

Yāska has given the etymology of the word ibhya — 'those who incur fear (bhayaṃ yanti)' — and explained it as 'enemies'. Sāyaṇa gives two meanings: the word ibhya means 'the rich'; as a king takes away their wealth and so subdues the wealthy, so Agni destroys the wealth of the forests and burns them. Skandasvāmin gives just this meaning. But he explains that in the first pāda of this Ṛk Vaidyuta-Agni [the lightning fire] is described, and in the second pāda Davāgni [the forest fire] is described." [14]

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). Agni, in the time covered by darkness, gives knowledge of things to the subjects by his own light. At the time of dawn, awakened in the Agnihotra and the like, he rouses people. Having fled from the gods and hidden in the water, he was contracted of body; afterwards, as an animal that was lying down spreads its limbs when it wakes up, Agni, when he rose from the water, took on his form and lives in the water like a swan.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> He breaths [sic] amidst the waters like a sitting swan ; awakened at the dawn, he restores by his operations conciousness [sic] to men ; he is a creator, like Soma ; born from the waters, (where he lurked) like an animal with coiled-up limbs, he became enlarged, and his light (spread) afar.

In the same way Agni too is, in the form of an object of enjoyment, the eater of all. Although the word sūnu indicates a son in general, by taking a special sense in it the meaning aurasa 'son of the body' is given. Though the Dharmaśāstra writers admit ten kinds of sons, as the aurasa son [one born of the body] does what is good for his father, so Agni gives good by bringing pleasing things. दुरोकशोचिः — of a splendour hard to endure (Agni); क्रतुर्न — like the doer of a sacrifice; नित्यः — alert (in destroying the demons and the like); योनौ — in the house; जायेव — like the wife of the house; विश्वस्मै — to all the sacrificers; अरम् — as an ornament; विक्षु — among the people; रथो न — like a chariot; रुक्मी — one who shines like gold; समत्सु — in battles; त्वेषः — flaming; चित्रः — Agni of wonderful brightness; यत् — when; अभ्राट् — he shines; श्वेतो न — like the bright-coloured sun, so he is.

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). Agni is of a splendour that others cannot bear; as the sacrificer is alert to the rites, so Agni is alert in the destruction of the demons who obstruct the sacrifice. In the house of each Agnihotrin he is an ornament, like the housewife. Among the people he shines like a golden chariot. At the time of battle, Agni of wonderful brilliance is of a bright splendour like the sun.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Agni, of unattainable effulgence, is like a vigilant sacrificer ; he is (an ornament to all in the sacrificial chamber), like a woman in a dwelling ; when he shines with wonderful lustre, he is like the white (sun), or like a golden chariot amongst men resplendent in battle.

Bhāvārtha (concluded; Kannada).

"...all multitudes of beings: they are Agni himself. He sports with the maidenhood of maidens; he is the husband of wives. May such Agni, like an army sent by the sacrificer, or like an arrow shot by a warrior, bring terror to the enemies."

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> He terrifies (his adversaries) like an army sent (against an enemy), or like the bright-pointed shaft of an archer. Agni ; as Yama, is all that is born ; as Yama, all that will be born : he is the lover of maidens, the husband of wives.

Skandasvāmin says that the word ama denotes fear: 'amaśabdo 'tra bhayavacanaḥ — dyāvā jajñānaḥ pṛthivī ame dhāḥ' (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-[63]-1; compare Rik 63.1 above), and gives one more meaning, that Agni, like an army that causes fear to enemies, whether to the demons or to the world, is a causer of fear."
- अस्तुर्न दिद्युत् त्वेषप्रतीका — didyud iti vajranāma — "didyut means the thunderbolt weapon; this word is read among the twenty-eight names of 'thunderbolt' (Ni. [2-20]). From dyotate 'it shines greatly' the weapon is called didyut. By taking a sense by etymology, the sense is given of 'arrow' — an arrow with a shining front; the arrow shot by the sacrificer terrifies others; in the same way Agni terrifies the demons and the rest. Yāska has quoted here the passage: 'seneva sṛṣṭā bhayaṃ vā balaṃ vā dadhāty astur iva didyut tveṣapratīkā' (Ni. 10-30)."

Or: since Indra and Agni arose at one time, Agni too is Yama. Yāska has quoted in this sense the passage 'yamo ha jāta indreṇa saha saṅgataḥ | yamāv iheha mātarā' etc. (Ni. 10-31) — a Vedic text that arises. By his being joined with Indra, both Indra and Agni are denoted by the word yama, which means 'pair', and, since they have the quality of fulfilling all desires, both are makers of the world: this is the sense of the Nirukta passage. Both the multitude of beings that have arisen and the multitude that will arise are denoted by the word yama, i.e. Agni himself. For all beings that come to birth, birth takes place through the offering of oblations in Agni. As [all] depends on Agni, both the born and those yet to be born are Agni, denoted by the word yama."

- पतिर्जनीनाम् — jāyānāṃ kṛtavivāhānāṃ patiḥ bhartā — "at the time of marriage Agni bestows on the man who becomes the girl's husband the girl, along with wealth, sons and the like, to be had in that life; therefore Agni is a husband to the girls too. Soma first gets the girl who, living apart from man, has no desire for intercourse with a man; from him a little desire for enjoyment arises in the girl and youth comes. Soma gives such a woman to the Gandharva called Viśvāvasu. At marriage that Gandharva gives her to Agni. Agni bestows [her] on the man who becomes her husband: this is the teaching of the śāstra. The Ṛgveda mantra 'somo dadad gandharvāya gandharvo dadad agnaye | rayiṃ ca putrāṃś cādād agnir mahyam atho imām' (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-85-[41]) states this idea plainly."

Special Topics (continued and concluded; Kannada). "...By this, for women who have undergone marriage (the sacrament called vivāha at the time of marriage), the three gods Soma, Gandharva and Agni become husbands by arranging in their bodies the qualities suited to the comfort that will arise, and by favouring them so that they enjoy wealth, sons and the like. A mantra says that the man is the fourth: 'turīyas te manuṣyajāḥ'. Yāska has said this very idea: 'There is also a Veda-text, "the third, Agni, is your husband"' (Ni. 10-31).

- यद्वा — janīnāṃ pālayitā yato 'yam anuṣṭhitair yāgyaiḥ phalaṃ prayacchati — "because the word pati is used in the sense of protecting, Agni grants the fruit appropriate to the sacrifices performed by each, and so protects the beings who have life: another meaning is also stated."

- Skandasvāmin on पतिर्जनीनाम्: janayantyapatyāni iti janayaḥ bhāryāḥ tāsāṃ patiḥ — "since women who are to be kept and who bear children are the janayaḥ, Agni is first their husband; afterwards the man becomes the husband. 'somaḥ prathamo vivide gandharvo vivida uttaraḥ | tṛtīyo agniṣ ṭe patis turīyas te manuṣyajāḥ' (Ṛ. Ve. 10-85-40). This mantra says that after the three — Soma, Gandharva and Agni — the man becomes the husband: therefore this saying has been quoted as authority. Since he is well known as jārayitā, pālayitā, the root kan is used in the sense of 'desire': 'those who desire', i.e. he explains that, as Agni is the cause of the [state of] ripening of their [the girls'] fruit [in the sense of maturity], he is jāra; and, because he protects, he is the husband." ॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). O Agni, we, with the oblations connected with animals that move and with rice and the like, which are immovable, and with Soma, come to you as cows come to their house. As a stream flows toward a low place, flames rush toward the things to be burnt. And the light of Agni so blazing is seen widely in the sky.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Let us approach that blazing Agni with animal and vegetable offerings as cows hasten to their pens. He has tossed about his flames, like running streams of water ; the rays commingle (with the radiance) visible in the sky.

- अस्तं न गावः — astam iti gṛhanāma | yathā gāvo gṛhaṃ vyāpnuvanti tadvat vayaṃ pradīptam agniṃ vyāpnuyāma — "the word asta is read among the twenty-two names of 'house' (Ni. [3-4]). May we go close to the brightly shining Agni, as cows reach their house."
- चराथा — carati iti carathaḥ paśuḥ | tatra bhavair hṛdayādibhir āhutir api carathā ity ucyate | upacārāt kāryo kāraṇaśabdaḥ — "to the word caratha, which is 'that which moves', the meaning is 'animal'. Since the animal is used in the sacrifice, the offerings of the heart and the other [parts] of that animal are also called by the word caratha. The word caratha, the cause, is also used here by transference for the effect, the oblation."
- वसत्या — vasati nivasatīti sthāvaro vrīhyādir vasatiḥ | pūrvavat tatsādhyāhutir lakṣyate — "because it stays fixed in one place, the word vasati has the meaning grains such as rice. As in the explanation of the word caratha, here too the oblation is denoted by the word vasati: with the offerings of the heart and the like of the animal, and with the offerings of the sacrificial cake and the like, we should approach Agni to serve him, as cows come, driven by the need of food, to a house. Yāska has quoted the passage 'taṃ vaś carāthā carantyā paśvāhutyā vasatyā ca nivasantyauṣadhāhutyāstaṃ yathā gāva āpnuvanti tathāpnuyāma' (Ni. 10-31) as authority."
- नीचीः — nitarām uñcatīḥ itas tato nitarām udgacchantīr jvālāḥ — "the flames of Agni go in all directions, and run toward the things to be burnt, as a stream of water runs to low places."

- Skandasvāmin on नवन्त गावः: "the word gāvaḥ — [he explains] as stutayaḥ (praises) or stotāraḥ (those who praise), and quotes as authority 'gobhir yad īm anye asmat' (Ṛk. Saṃhitā 8-2-6) and 'gobhiḥ krāṇā abhidyavaḥ' (Ṛk. Saṃhitā 1-134-2); and the Ṛks 'ye ulgrā arkam ānṛcuḥ' (Ṛk. Saṃhitā 1-19-4) and 'arcann atra marutaḥ' (its reference, if printed, is on p. 202; not viewed) are given as examples by Śākapāṇi: since the Marut deities are also praisers, gāvaḥ means the Marut deities [15]..."

Or Agni, praised by mantras that state the truth, makes the heavenly world stand as if in one place. That heaven is upheld by mantras is stated by the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa sentence 'devā vā ādityasya suvargasya lokasya parāco 'tipātād abibhayuḥ | taṃ chandobhir adṛṃhan spṛtyai' (Tai. Brā. [1-2-4-2], as read, ?). On this sentence 'paśvaḥ priyā pāhi' Sāyaṇa gives the meaning: 'protect the places that have good grass and water, which are dear to animals; do not burn them'. Skandasvāmin takes the word aja to mean Prajāpati: as Brahmā upholds the three worlds, Agni holds the three worlds (earth, atmosphere, heaven) so that they continue by the practice of dharma in the form of sacrifice; and, [taking paśvaḥ as] 'to me who resemble an animal', 'protect, in this world and in the next, the places beneficial [to me]..." (continues on p. 214).

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). Agni, knowing that he who is hidden is the support of truth, of sacrifice — to those who have performed sacrifices and praise him by composing hymns for him, he gives wealth and the like.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> He who knows Agni hidden in the cave ; he who approaches him who is the maintainer of sacrifice, those who, after performing a sacrifice, praise him, to them he, forsooth, promises affluence.

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). Agni, shining among Indra and the other gods, who takes into himself the greatnesses of all the gods or of the whole world of the moving and the unmoving, and carries the oblations to the gods, goes to heaven, mixing the oblations with other substances, and illumines the whole world by his light.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> The bearer (of the oblations, Agni), mixing them (with other ingredients), ascends to heaven, and clothes all things, moveable and immoveable, and the nights themselves (with light), radiant amongst the Gods, and in himself alone comprehending the virtues of all these (substances).

श्रीणन्: root śrīñ pāke, ubhayapadī, of the kryādi class; in the sense of laṭ, the affix śatṛ; the vikaraṇa śnā by "kryādibhyaḥ śnā"; since the affix is non-p-marked, ñit-like by "sārvadhātukam apit"; by "śnābhyastayor ātaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 6-4-112, as read) the loss of the ā of the śnā affix; by "aṭkupvāṅnumvyavāye 'pi" ṇ for n; the word śrīṇat; by the affix accent, the ā [of the ending] is acute; with su following, the num augment; the loss of su; the loss of the final t: śrīṇan. स्थात्: by "chandasi luṅlaṅliṭaḥ" the luṅ in the present sense; by "itaś ca" the loss of the i of tip; the sic which arose for cli is lost by "gātisthāghupābhūbhyaḥ..."; by "bahulaṃ chandasy amāṅyoge 'pi" no aṭ. ऊर्णोत्: root ūrṇuñ ācchādane; in the laṅ, the affix tip; as before, the loss of its i; here the luk of śap by "adiprabhṛtibhyaḥ śapaḥ"; by "ūrṇor vṛddhir luki hali" [as read, Pā. Sū. 7-3-89, "uto vṛddhir luki hali"] vṛddhi would have to come, but by "ūrṇoter vibhāṣā" (Pā. Sū. 7-3-90, as read) it is optional for hal-initial p-marked sārvadhātuka, so here vṛddhi does not come; then by "guṇo 'pṛkte" (Pā. Sū. 7-3-91, as read) the guṇa comes, the cause [pṛkta-less hal] being as stated; by "bahulaṃ chandasy amāṅyoge 'pi" no aṭ; the form ūrṇot; since it follows a non-verbal word, the nighāta accent. भुवत्: explained in the [Rik 67.1] mantra [p. 207]; since yat precedes, no nighāta; the root accent makes the u acute. महित्वा: as before, the śi is lost by "śeś chandasi bahulam". ॥ १–२ ॥ Grammar page, noted briefly; sūtra numbers as read.

The word āyus, which denotes the means of keeping beings alive, is read among the twenty-eight names of food (Ni. [2-7]). He gives wealth to those who perform sacrifices, to those who offer caru and puroḍāśa in rites such as the Darśapūrṇamāsa, and to the sacrificers who wish to perform such rites: this is the meaning of the words apāṃsi and śikṣāt."

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). O Agni, you are the invoker of the gods for the sacrificers, and the lord of their riches. From you they obtain vital seed that gives offspring; and, with their able sons (by your favour), they live long.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> You have abided with the descendants of Manu as the invoker (of the gods) ; you are indeed the lord of their possessions ; They have desired (of you) procreative vigour in their bodies, and associated with their own excellant [sic] offspring, they contemplate (all things) undisturbed.

॥ विशेषविषयाः ॥ — Special Topics

- मनोरपत्ये — "among the fifteen names of 'son' beginning tuk, tokam, tanayaḥ (Ni. [2-2]) the word apatya is read; so here Manu's apatya, the offspring of Manu, means the people who sprang from Manu, i.e. men. The śruti says 'mānavyo hi prajāḥ' (Tai. Saṃ. 5-1-5-6). The people of this kind are in the form of sacrificers; when they perform a sacrifice, Agni, in his own form, calls the gods to accept the oblations of each. This same meaning is given in 'prajāyāṃ hotā devānām āhvātā san agniḥ niṣattaḥ niṣaṇṇaḥ'."

- शुक्रः (śukraḥ) — śubhravarṇaḥ — "the word śukra here means 'bright', or 'one who has a colour without any other colour'; the word śukla denotes the white colour; by the maxim 'ralayor abhedaḥ' (r and l are not distinct) śukla is used as śukra. Though this word is read among the hundred and one names of water (Ni. [1-12]), here it is used in the sense 'distinguished by a bright colour'."
- उषो न जारः — uṣasaḥ jarayitā sūrya iva — "Agni, at the time of dawn, by his light rises for the oblations offered by the sacrificers, and, like the sun that brings old age (fading) to the dawn goddess, is full of light. The light of the dawn becomes less at that time; at that same time the sun, by the brilliance of his rays, lessens the dawn's brilliance, and so has the quality of jarayitṛtva (causing to age). By the comparison jāra iva, both Agni and the sun are said to bring old age to the dawn; but ['punaḥ punaḥ… jarayantyāyuḥ' — the quotation is cut off in the print, ?]…" [6]

Special Topics (continued and concluded; Kannada). "…[the quotation, cut off at the foot of p. 242, is given in the print as 'punaḥ punaḥ … jarayanty āyuḥ', a Ṛk (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-92-10, as printed)]: as that Ṛk says, the dawn also reduces the lives of beings through each one's experience; so Agni and the sun both reduce them: thus the sense uṣas iva [and] agniḥ, ādityaḥ jāraḥ

6. the passage continues on p. 243.

('Agni and the sun are the ones who bring old age') appears here. By this another figure of speech is said, in poetic fashion, in this Vedic commentary.

- शुशुक्वान् — sūrya iva śocayitā sarvasya prakāśayitā bhavati — "from the root śuca dīptau the word means abundant light, and 'one endowed with that light'; like the sun, Agni makes all things luminous with his own light. The use of the root śuc is the cause of this meaning."
- दिवो न ज्योतिः पप्रा — dyotamānasya sūryasya jyotir iva dyāvāpṛthivyoḥ svatejasā pūrayitā — "as the sun fills the earth, atmosphere and heaven, which are joined together, with his rays, Agni too pervades and fills them with his own light."
- देवानां पुत्रः न भुवः पिता — devāḥ ṛtvijaḥ teṣāṃ punnāmno narakāt trāyekaḥ san pitā bhuvaḥ pālayitā bhavasi | yadvā — devānām indrādīnām eva putra iva dūto bhūtvā pitā havirbhiḥ pālayitā bhavasi — "div has among its many senses 'to shine' and 'to praise'; so devāḥ are those who shine or who praise: the priests, who praise Agni. The word putra [means] 'one who saves from the hell called put'. Agni makes the sacrificers possessors of sons, and gives shares of oblation to the gods who praise him: so he does the work of a son for both. By the word pitā, from the root pā 'to protect, guard', he is the protector; by giving crops and food through rain on the earth he does the work of a father. Or, because he serves the gods as a son, carrying oblations as a messenger, and protects, he is both messenger and father to the gods."

शुशुक्वान्: root śuca dīptau; in the place of liṭ, the affix kvasu by "kvasuś ca"; the root is doubled because of it; the reduplicative syllable keeps the first consonant; by "vyatyayo bahulam" ku for the c; the word śuśukvas; with su, because ugit, the num augment by "ugidacāṃ sarvanāmasthāne 'dhātoḥ"; lengthening of the penultimate; the loss of su; the loss of s; the ru… by "dīrghād aṭi samānapāde" [as read, ?]; nasalization by "ato roḥ…"; the affix accent. पप्रा: root prā pālanapūraṇayoḥ; by "ādṛgamahanajanaḥ kikinau liṭ ca" (Pā. Sū. 3-2-171) the affix ki; the root is doubled since [the affix is] liṭ-like; by "urat" a for the ṛ… [print: for the reduplicative syllable]; the yaṇ for the final ā; the word papri; with su, by "supāṃ sulug…" ḍā; since ḍit, the loss of ṭi; by "anudāttasya ca yatrodāttalopaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-161) the ā is acute. समीची: root añcu gatipūjanayoḥ; after sam as the first member, the affix kvin by "ṛtvigdadhṛk…" (Pā. Sū. 3-2-59); by "anidītāṃ hala upadhāyāḥ kniti" the loss of the penultimate nasal; by "samaḥ sami" (Pā. Sū. 6-3-93) sami for sam; by "añceś chandasy asaṅkhyānam" [as read] ṅīp is stated when feminine is meant; by "aco 'ñcaḥ" the loss of the root's a; by "cau" the lengthening of the prior member: samīcī; because ṅīp is p-marked it is unaccented, but by "anudāttasya ca yatrodāttalopaḥ" it takes the acute; with samīcī + au, by "vā chandasi" the same-class lengthening as single substitute; if the word is divided as sam + īcī, the īt enjoined by "uda īt" [as read] applies Vedicly to the latter member of sam too. दिवः: by "ūḍidaṃpadādi…" the case-ending is acute. बभूथ: root bhū sattāyām; liṭ, second person singular; because "babhūthātatambha…" (Pā. Sū. 7-2-64) gives it by nipātana, the iṭ of thal does not come by "ārdhadhātukasyeḍ valādeḥ". ॥ १–२ ॥

"Agni is wise: that is the meaning. And Brahmā, denoted by the word vidhātṛ, is the cause of all: he grants to those who perform sacrifices and to all others their desired ends and creates all anew: this is the idea. - गवां ऊधर्न पितूनां स्वाद्मा — gosaṃbandhipayasa āśrayabhūtaṃ sthānam iva annānāṃ svādayitā rasayitā — "the word na is a word of comparison, used in the sense of iva. As the udder of cows gives tasty milk and makes food savoury, so Agni, cooking food well, makes it tasty and savoury. The word pitu is read among the twenty-eight names of food (Ni. [2-7]); the word pitu, whether from the root opyāyī or from pā, is used in the sense of food, as in 'pitum nu stoṣam' (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-187-1) and 'pramandine pitumad arcatā vacaḥ' (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-101-1)." - जने न शेवः — janapade lokasukhakaraḥ puruṣa iva — "the word śeva is read among the names of 'comfort' beginning śiṃbātā, śatarā (Ni. [3-13]). Agni gives comfort to all, beginning with the sacrificers, as a man does good to the world. Skandasvāmin: janena śevaḥ janayitṛtvāt janaḥ pitā | piteva sukhakaro 'gniḥ — 'the word jana means father, as the cause of birth: Agni gives comfort as a father does. ॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). Agni, born of the fire-drill, makes the sacrificial house a place of comfort; like a spirited horse in battle, he overcomes enemies and makes them defeated. When, with the priests, I call the deities who dwell together, Agni himself takes the divinity of each, accepts the oblations as each, and appears before them.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> He diffuses happiness in a dwelling, like a son (newly) born ;
> he overcomes enemies in battle, like an animated charger ;
> when I, along with other men, invoke gods living in one > place, you, Agni, assume all (their) celestial natures.

The word śruṣṭi (Ni. 6-13, as read) means happiness, 'quick'; it is also read in the sense of grain-heaps. Since Agni, to the sacrificers who perform the sacrifice, grants carefully the happiness in the form of the experience of the fruit of the sacrifice, the demons and the like who obstruct the rites performed by the sacrificers are themselves restrained by him: this is understood plainly from the effect. The sacrificers' enjoyment of the fruit of the sacrifice arises from the sacrifice performed without obstruction. Thus the removal of the obstructors of the sacrifice — the demons and the like — takes place through Agni; the purport is that the sacrifice and the protection of the sacrificers are through Agni alone."

original p. 257

॥ भावार्थ ॥ — Bhāvārtha (Kannada). May Agni, of special radiance like the sun that lessens the glow of dawn, who carries the oblations of the sacrificers, who is directly visible to all (not invisible like the other deities), grant the sacrificer the fruit he wishes. The rays of Agni themselves carry the oblations, go out of the doors of the sacrificial house, light the sky, and go to the heavenly world, taking the oblations to the other gods.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> May Agni, who is possessed of manifold light, like the extinguisher of the dawn, the granter of habitation, and of cognizable form, know (the desires of) this, (his worshipper) ; (his rays), spontaneously bearing the oblation, open the doors (of the sacrificial chamber), and all spread through the visible heaven.

- उस्रः — nivāsayitā — "one who makes the sacrificers dwell happily. The word usra is read among the nine names of go (Ni. [1-5]) and among the fifteen names of 'ray' (Ni. [1-15]).

Skandasvāmin explains by this that Agni is like a bull of the best kind [or 'a ray like a bull?'] [print compressed, doubtful, ?]."

- चिकेतत् अस्मै — "Here asmai is in the sense of imam, an accusative [the print: 'second case']; and ciketat, a verb in the singular, is used in the sense of a plural; so Agni, knowing his own nature well, they praise, and offer oblations; whoever praises Agni and offers oblations, by keeping the form of Agni in mind, gains wealth, knowing the many ways [of obtaining it]. Sāyaṇa takes: asmai yajamānāya ciketat jānātu abhimataphalaṃ dadātv iti; or idaṃ sūktarūpaṃ stotraṃ jānātu — 'may Agni grant favour so that he may fulfil the sacrificer's desires, or may know this praise in the form of this sūkta'. The rays of this Agni, bearing the oblations of themselves, pervade the sacrificial houses; afterwards they pervade the gods in the atmosphere: this is how he explains navati [as] 'motion'.
- Skandasvāmin on नवन्त गावः [sic: navanta]: "all men who praise see the light of Agni when it shines in the middle of the sacrificial altar; and in heaven also, to see his light, they praise Agni." The two commentaries, taking one word in different ways and connecting it with different other words, differ in their meaning: this is pointed out."

विभावा: root bhā dīptau; by "ato manin-kvanip-vanipaś ca" the affix vanip; the word vibhāvan; since vanip is p-marked, unaccented. उसः: root vasa nivāse; by "sthāyitambhāvī…" (Uṇ. Sū. 2-[120], as read) the affix rak; since this root is read in the yajādi list, when the following affix is k-marked by "vacisvapiyajādīnāṃ kiti" samprasāraṇa; by "samprasāraṇāc ca" the former form; by the affix accent the final acute. चिकेतत्: root kita jñāne, of the juhotyādi class; leṭ, third person singular, tip; by "itaś ca lopaḥ" the loss of i; the vikaraṇa śluḥ; by "ślau" the doubling of the root; the reduplicative syllable keeps the first consonant; by "kuhoś cuḥ" c; by "leṭoḍāṭau" the aṭ; by "pugantalaghūpadhasya ca" guṇa of the light penultimate; though here the root has the abhyasta designation, so that by "nābhyastasyāci piti sārvadhātuke" (Pā. Sū. 7-3-87, as read) the guṇa would be prohibited, by the statement "bahulaṃ chandasīti vaktavyam" (Kā. 7-3-87-1, as read, ?) the prohibition does not apply here; by "abhyastānām ādiḥ" the initial acute. त्मना: the word ātman; the instrumental singular following, by "mantreṣv āṅy ādyāder ātmanaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 6-4-141) the loss of the initial ā. ऋण्वन्: roots ivi, rivi, ravi, dhavi in the sense of motion; the num augment by "idito num dhātoḥ"; in the present sense the Vedic laṅ; the third person plural, by "jho 'ntaḥ" the substitute; by "vyatyayo bahulam" samprasāraṇa for the r; by "samprasāraṇāc ca" the former form; by the statement "ṛvarṇān nasya ṇatvaṃ vācyam" the ṇ for the n of num: ṛṇvan. Or: root ṛṇi gatau [ṛṇu], of the tanādi class; by "tanādikṛñbhya uḥ" the vikaraṇa u; the form as before; since it follows an acute-ending word, the nighāta accent. नवन्त: root nava gatau; here too the Vedic laṅ; by "bahulaṃ chandasy amāṅyoge 'pi" no aṭ; since it follows an acute-ending word and stands at the beginning of the pāda, no nighāta; the root accent gives the initial acute. ॥ ९–१० ॥

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

- अपां गर्भः — garbhavad antarvartī apāṃnapāt saṃjñaḥ — "Agni is named Apāṃnapāt because he lives in the middle of the waters. This deity, Apāṃnapāt, is one of the middle-region deities. The word apāṃnapāt is read in the Nirukta (Ni. 10-18, as printed). In this word, the word napāt is explained as 'offspring' (apatya); here it is used in the sense of 'grandson'. Explaining Agni as the grandson of the waters, the Ṛk 'apāṃ napāt…yo 'bhir indro vṛṣabhir…' (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-30-4, as printed) is quoted as an example [print compressed, ?]. Sāyaṇa explains that the sacrificers who offer oblations to Agni, who is famous under various names in the waters, the forests, the immovable things such as wood, and the moving beings, offer oblations even in places hard to enter — in the middle of mountains. Skandasvāmin says Agni has his dwelling in the mountains in this way, and also in the middle of the sacrificial hall where the sacrifice is performed."

Sāyaṇa explains it by taking the na of the Nirukta as an upamārtha [word of comparison]. Skandasvāmin: on viśām — 'yaṣṭṝṇām, stotṝṇām', 'of those who perform sacrifices, or of those who praise'; and viśvaḥ [he takes] as 'one who does all Meaning: Agni is kṣapāvān: kṣapā is a name of night; he is "possessed of night", for "the night belongs to Agni" (Tai. Brā. 2-1-2-7), the night being connected with Agni, since the oblation "Agni is light, light is Agni, svāhā" is offered into him (Tai. Brā. 2-1-2-10). Or he is one who is joined with the destruction (kṣapaṇa) of the demons and the like. Such an Agni gives (dāśat) the riches to the sacrificer who praises him in due manner with well-spoken hymns (sūktaiḥ) — that is, adequately. "O cikitvaḥ" — knowing one (Yāska, Ni. [?]); O all-knowing Agni, knowing the births of the gods, Indra and the rest, and of mortals, men, protect well these beings that live upon the earth; because you know all gods, men and the rest, you are so addressed.

Grammatical tail of the bhāṣya [12]: rayīṇām (genitive of the object of giving, in the sense of the dative); dāśat (root dāś, leṭ, with the aḍ-augment); aram (formed by the sūtra on vālamūle…, as read); sūktaiḥ (kta after su by the comparison, Pā. [6-1-139?], so that the accent is on the final of the first member); cikitvaḥ (matuvasoḥ… ruḥ, the change to ru for the final of the vocative); bhūma (the dvitīyā plural ending replaced by ḍā by supāṃ sulug…); shortening in the Padakāla.

yaḥ — which sacrificer; asmai — (to Agni) to him; sūktaiḥ — with well-composed mantras (spoken according to the scriptures); aram — sufficiently (performs the praise); (tasmai — to such a sacrificer); kṣapāvān — one connected with the night (and who destroys the demons and the like); saḥ agniḥ — that Agni —

original p. 269

Pratipadārtha (concluded): saḥ agniḥ — that Agni; rayīṇām — wealth; dāśat hi — will surely give; cikitvaḥ — knowing (omniscient) O Agni; devānām — of the gods, Indra and the others; janma — births; martān ca — and mortals (men); vidvān — knowing (you); etā — these; bhūma — the beings that are on the earth; ni pāhi — protect well.

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

Agni, who is related to the night, and is the destroyer of the demons for the sacrificer, is gracious with wealth and the like to those who praise him with hymns. O all-knowing Agni, who know the births and so on of the gods, Indra and the others, and of men, protect all the beings that live on this earth.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Agni, the lord of night, grants riches to (the worshipper) who adores him with sacred hymns. Agni, who are omniscient, and know the origin of Gods and men, protect all these (beings dwelling) upon earth.

॥ विशेषविषयाः ॥ — Special Topics

- अग्निः क्षपावान् — kṣapā iti rātrināma — "Kṣapā is a name of night. 'The night belongs to Agni' (Tai. Brā. 2-1-2-7, as printed); 'Agni is light, light is Agni, svāhā' (Tai. Brā. 2-1-2-10). Or: being joined with the destruction of the demons — Agni is closely connected with the night; for the word kṣapā is read among the twenty-two [as read, ?] names of night (Ni. [1-?]); when the word kṣapā has the acute on its final it means the night; when on the first syllable it denotes 'destroying'. Examples of both senses are 'nṛṇāṃ nṛtomaḥ kṣapāvān' (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-[?]) and 'tvam asi kṣapāvān' (Ṛk. Saṃ. 8-[?]), which are the two kinds of sense. The Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa too says that night is related to Agni, and those who sacrifice offer the oblation to Agni with the mantra 'Agni is light'. Since Agni destroys the demons greatly, and since the root kṣap has the sense of destruction, Agni is kṣapāvān." [14]

- Skandasvāmin: "kṣapā iti rātrināma" — kṣapā is a name of night. Though Agni is connected with both day and night, his connection with night is special; since Agni gives much light, he is necessarily so. Because of this connection with light, Agni is designated kṣapāvān. Or: (the word) is one that destroys weakness by increasing the power of praises." [15]

Special Topics of Rik 70.3 (continued from p. 269): "…by the explanation 'kṣapayanti nirvīryatāṃ' [they make weak — as read, ?], the word kṣapā has the sense of 'praise'. By praising the gods their weakness is destroyed and their strength increased. In this way, for the praises that are the cause, Agni is explained as kṣapāvān."

- चिकित्वः — cetanāvān sarvajñaḥ "cikitvāṃś cetanāvān" (Ni. [1-11?]) iti yāskaḥ — "The knowing one, all-knowing: because he knows everything, Agni is called all-knowing. Yāska explains the word cikitvān, formed from the root kit 'to know', as 'one possessing consciousness, a knowing one'."

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

May Agni, grown by the many dawns of white and dark colours and by the nights, grown by the standing things such as trees (the material of the sacrifice) and the moving men and the rest (the creatures), grown by water; propitiated by the priests in the sacrificial hall, calling the other gods to the sacrifice, make all the deeds done by the sacrificer bear true fruits. English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Agni, whom many variously-tinted (mornings) and nights increase, whom, invested with truth, all movable and immovable things augment, has been propitiated, and is kindly seated at the holy rite, as the invoker (of the Gods), and rendering all (pious) acts (productive) of reward.

Meaning (so far): O Agni, you establish praise (praśasti) upon the cattle, horses and the like that are in the desirable (vana) — worthy-to-be-shared — [herds]: that is, may our cattle and the rest be praiseworthy. All people bring to us the offering (bali, a present) of well-gone-to wealth (svaḥ). O Agni, men worship (vi saparyan) you variously in many places of sacrifice, and having worshipped, they take wealth (vedaḥ) from you in many ways — that is, they praise. The illustration: as sons take wealth from a worn-out, aged father (jivreḥ pituḥ), so do they.

25. Reading note: "paśaṃsāṃ" is as printed, apparently for praśaṃsāṃ; the Kāśikā numeral is doubtful [?]; the page ends mid-word, the sentence continuing on p. 276, where the rest of the bhāṣya's grammatical tail will be given.

[6-3-109?] iti | nitvād ādyudāttatvaṃ | veda iti dhananāma | vidyate labhyate iti vedaḥ | vidḷ lābhe | karmaṇy asun | [26]

Meaning of the tail: bharante — root hṛñ "to carry", the simple root to be understood with the prefix's sense (vi), Vedic laṅ, bha for ha by hṛgrahor bhaś chandasi; purutrā — the affix trā in the sense of the locative; jivreḥ — root jyā "to lose strength with age", affix kvin (Uṇ.), i for ṛ, no lengthening since Uṇādi words are underived stems, with transposition of r and v; "an added letter, and a transposed letter" (as read); accent on the first syllable because the affix is nit; vedaḥ is a name for wealth: "that which is found" — root vid "to obtain", affix asun on the object.

॥ प्रतिपदार्थः ॥ — Pratipadārtha

(agne — O Agni, you); vaneṣu — in the worthy ones (belonging to us); goṣu — in cattle and the other beasts; praśastim — praise; dhiṣe — you establish; viśve — all; naḥ — to us; svaḥ — desirable; baliṃ — in the form of offering (wealth); bharanta — let them bring; (agne — O Agni); tvā — you; naraḥ — men; purutrā — in many sacrificial halls; vi saparyan — they worship well; (and) jivreḥ — aged; pituḥ na — as from a father (the children obtain wealth); vedaḥ — wealth; vi bharanta — they obtain specially.

26. Reading note: this is the bhāṣya's own grammatical tail; it is characterized rather than treated in detail. The Kāśikā/Uṇādi numerals and the reading "jyaśvasvyāṃ" are doubtful [?]. The text of "jyā... jāgṛbhyaḥ kvin" is as printed; the Uṇ. numeral is read doubtfully.

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

O Agni! May (through your grace) the best cattle and the like, and the wealth brought as tribute by all the people, come to us. Men worship you specially in many sacrificial halls with oblations and the like, and obtain wealth from you in abundance, as sons obtain wealth from an aged father.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Agni, confer excellence upon our valued cattle, and may all men bring us acceptable tribute; offering in many places sacrifices to you, men receive riches from you, as (sons) from an aged father.

In the exposition of the Nirukta, the word veda — formed from the root vid "to obtain" — is explained: 'by this are obtained dharma and the like'; the example given is 'hotāraṃ viśvavedasam' (Ṛk. 29. begins here; the first sentence is a note on the metre

30. Reading note: the opening sentence — on how a Ṛk left over in the dvipadā count is to be read — is read as printed, but is compressed and doubtful in several syllables ("ayuksaṃkhyāsu", "yāntyā-") [?]; "ata" in "ate evaṃvidho" is printed so, evidently for ata. The page ends in the grammatical tail at "gṛdhnuḥ | gṛdhu...", continued on p. 280.

Meaning: This Agni is a gṛdhnu — a taker, like an accomplisher (sādhu) who quickly takes the fruit of what he has accomplished: Agni likewise accepts everything. Agni is like a heroic thrower (asta): as an archer who casts arrows drives the enemies, so Agni, burning, drives every living being. He is awe-inspiring like an assailant (yātā), who is fearsome to all; so Agni, by mere sight, produces fear in all. Therefore may such an Agni, bright (tveṣaḥ) in the battles (samatsu), be our helper.

Bhāṣya (grammatical tail, concluded): …abhikāṅkṣāyām | trasigṛdhidhṛṣikṣipeḥ knuḥ | śūraḥ | śu gatau | antarbhāvitaṇyarthād asmāt ṛṣicimīnāṃ dīrghaś ca | u. [2-28?], numeral doubtful [?]).

॥ प्रतिपदार्थः ॥ — Pratipadārtha

sādhur na — like one who accomplishes (without leaving the undertaken works); gṛdhnuḥ — the one who takes everything; asteva — like a warrior who casts (the arrow); śūraḥ — the heroic; yāteva — like a destroyer (a violent man); bhīmaḥ — the terrible; (that Agni); samatsu — in battles; tveṣaḥ — shining (may he be our helper).

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

May Agni — able to accomplish the undertaken works; who, as a warrior drives away the enemies with his arrows, drives away everything by his power to burn; who, as a violent man is of terrible form, causes fear (to the enemies) at the mere sight — be shining in the battles and be our helper.

अनुवादः — Anuvāda [4]: This sūkta, beginning "upa pra jinvan", is the seventh sūkta in the twelfth anuvāka. It has ten Ṛks. The Anukramaṇikā says "upa pra daśa". The ṛṣi of this sūkta is Parāśara, son of Śakti; the metre is Triṣṭup; the deity is Agni. At the time of reciting the Prātaranuvāka mantras, this sūkta and the next two sūktas are used for the Ṛks of Agni in the Triṣṭup metre — as is stated in the sūtra of the Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra, in the section beginning "athaitasyāḥ": "upa pra jinvan [and the] three [Ṛks] and the two sūktas kā te upetiḥ" (Ā. 4-13). And for the Aśvina-śastra mantras, belonging to the Prātaranuvāka, these three sūktas are used, as indicated by the sūtra of the Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra "etayor āgneyaṃ gāyatram upasaṃtanuyāt prātaranuvākanyāyena" (Ā. 6-5).

Meaning: Uśatīḥ — the desiring ones; sanīḷāḥ — nīḷa is a dwelling; "of a common dwelling", because they stay on one hand; svasāraḥ is a name of the fingers. Such fingers pra jinvan — please, as wives (janayaḥ, jāyāḥ) always please an uncommon, desiring husband (patiṃ na): they approach him and, by the act of offering the oblation and so on, gratify him; and having gratified him they serve (ajuṣran) that wonderful (citra), honourable Agni with the joining of the palms. The illustration: as the rays (gāvaḥ) serve the dawn — dark (śyāvī) from its connection with the night, then ucchantī, dispelling the darkness by connection with the sun's rays, therefore bright-red (aruṣī) or possessed of a shining form, the deity Uṣas — so the fingers. As the rays are always bound up with the dawn, so in all sacrifices the fingers are always bound up with the tending of Agni; such is the purport.

Grammatical tail of the bhāṣya [8]: jinvan (root jivi in the sense of pleasing; num because of the it; aḍ-augment in the leṭ); uśatīḥ (lengthening to the earlier similar vowel by vā chandasi; acute on the feminine ending ī by śatur anumo nadyajādī); svasāraḥ (root asu kṣepaṇe, affix ṛn by Uṇ. [2-97?]; no ṅīp by na ṣaṭsvasrādibhyaḥ, Pā. [4-1-10]; first syllable acute since the affix is nit); aruṣīm (aruṣam is a name of form, root ṛ "to go", affix uṣac by Uṇ. [4-73?]; the ī in the possessive sense by chandasīvanipau; accent by vyatyaya); ajuṣran (root juṣī "to please/serve", Tudādi class; Parasmaipada in the laṅ by vyatyaya; ruṭ-augment by bahulaṃ chandasi).

॥ प्रतिपदार्थः ॥ — Pratipadārtha

uśatīḥ — the loving; sanīḷāḥ — (being on one hand) of one dwelling-place; svasāraḥ — the fingers; uśantam — the one who is full of trust (Agni); janayaḥ — wives; nityam — the uncommon; patim na — like a husband; upa pra jinvan — they approach and worship (with the oblations and so on); citram — the worshipful (Agni); śyāvīm — (at first) of dark colour; ucchantīm — (afterwards, by connection with the sun's rays) leaving the darkness; aruṣīm — (therefore) shining (bright); uṣasam — the dawn; gāvaḥ na — like the rays; ajuṣran — they served (with the joined palms and so on).

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha [9]

9. Kannada; begun at the foot of p. 284

The fingers, with love (devotion), first worship Agni — the trusted, the worshipful — with oblations and the rest; and as the rays always serve the dawn which is at first of a dark colour, (then by connection with the sun's rays) of a dim light, …

original p. 285

Bhāvārtha (concluded):

…and at last obtaining a bright colour, so do the fingers serve Agni with the joining of the palms and the like.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed): [10]

> The contiguous fingers, loving the affectionate Agni, as wives love their own husbands, please him (with offered oblations), and honour him, who is entitled to honour (with gesticulations) as the rays of light (are assiduous in the service) of the dawn, which is (at first) dark, then glimmering, and (finally) radiant.

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

- The source says that this Ṛk describes the ever-necessary and most excellent connection of the fingers, with devotion and faith, with the worship that is done to Agni. It compares this connection to the attentions a wife full of excessive love pays to her husband, and to the service which the rays pay to the dawn, which is shining by its own radiance and still increases in beauty by the rays. यथा रश्मयः उषसा नित्यसंबद्धाः इति तात्पर्यार्थः — "In the way the dawn and the rays are always connected, so the fingers and Agni are always connected, as the offerings and attentions in the sacrifices are being given always to Agni": thus Sāyaṇa explains the purport.
- सनीळाः — "The word nīḷa means 'house', as it is read among the twenty-two names of the house, gayaḥ, kṣayaḥ, durāḥ and so on (Ni. 3-13); and the word nīḷa itself is used in many places as a word for sections of a house. Here sanīḷāḥ — those having a common dwelling — is used as an adjective for the fingers: the meaning is that all of them lie together in one common hand. So also in Ṛks like Ṛk. Saṃ. [9-72-2?] the words sanīḷābhiḥ, sanīḷāḥ are used as adjectives for the fingers. Ordinarily the Maruts, who always live together, are likewise given the epithet, in the places [1-165-1; 7-56-1?] where the Maruts are described."

- स्वसारः — "As agruvaḥ, aṇvyaḥ and so on, it is read among the twenty-two names of the fingers (Ni. 3-9); hence it means 'fingers' (svayam eva sarantī aṅgulayaḥ — 'they go of themselves'). Because they move of their own accord for the work of Agni, they are svasāraḥ ('sisters' [i.e., 'self-going']). Sanīḷāḥ and svasāraḥ are epithets that commonly occur together for the fingers." [11]

- जनयः — janayaḥ iti devānāṃ patnyaḥ ucyante — devānāṃ vai patnīr janayaḥ — ""The wives of the gods are called janayaḥ': 'the wives of the gods are janayaḥ' — thus the śruti (iti śruteḥ). When explaining Ṛk 1-62-10, Sāyaṇa indicates that the word janayaḥ is well known as 'the wives of the gods', but the example he gives is not given with a firm basis to show which scriptural sentence it is. There is no rule that janayaḥ must be the wives of the gods only. In the Ṛk Saṃhitā, in utpādayitryaḥ patnyaḥ santānaṃ… ('the wives, who are able to bear children'), it is used generally for the wives of both gods and men. For example:

> अभ्रातरो न योषणो व्यंतः पतिरिपो न जनयो दुरेवाः । abhrātaro na yoṣaṇo vyantaḥ patiripo na janayo durevāḥ | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 4-5-5)

> अनश्रवोऽनमीवाः सुरत्ना आ रोहंतु जनयो योनिमग्रे । anaśravo 'namīvāḥ suratnā ā rohantu janayo yonim agre | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-18-7)

In places like these, the word janayaḥ is used as a synonym of human women; here also saha janayaḥ — jāyāḥ means generally 'wives'." [12]

- जिन्वन् — jinvatiḥ prītikarmā (Ni. 6-22) — "It is used in the sense of 'to please'. As a wife pleases her husband and, attending him with love, serves him, so the fingers, with devotion, attend Agni and serve him. But this is not merely common pleasing; it includes the sense of nourishing. For this the Nirukta-writer gives a very apt example of a pleasing that causes joy and nourishment (Ni. 6-22), the Ṛk Saṃhitā's > भूमिं पर्जन्या जिन्वंति दिवं जिन्वंत्यग्नयः । > bhūmiṃ parjanyā jinvanti divaṃ jinvanty agnayaḥ | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-164-51)

  'The rains please [i.e., refresh] the earth; the fires please the heaven' — by which he shows that the use of the word jinvanti is proper where, as the rain brings joy and nourishment to the earth and the fires cause pleasure to the heaven, there is such pleasure. Here too the fingers have a pleasure of joy and nourishment for Agni. The example of the love of husband and wife is also very fitting." [13]

Meaning: Our fathers, the Aṅgirases — sages of this name — having praised Agni with ukthas (śastras), (made vīḷu cid dṛḷhā —) vīḷu is a name of strength — the strong, firm-limbed devourer, the asura by name Paṇi, rujan — break, by the mere sound of praise. The meaning: Agni, praised by them, killed that asura. Moreover, they made for us the path to the great heaven, because the enveloping asura was slain by Agni; and having made the path they found the day, easily attainable, well to be gone to, free from the asura. And they found the ketu — the one who makes known, the Sun — and the cows (usrāḥ) that had been carried off by Paṇi: such is the connection of the clauses.

Grammatical tail of the bhāṣya : vīḷu (loss of the case-ending by supāṃ sulug…); dṛḷhā (dṛḍha by the nipāta of Pā. [7-2-20] in the sense "stout, strong", with the ending ḍā by supāṃ sulug…); rujan (root ruj "to break", Tudādi; aḍ absent by bahulaṃ chandasy amāṅyoge 'pi); vividuḥ (root vid "to know", or vidḷ "to obtain"; the form is liṭ with us).

naḥ — our; pitaraḥ aṅgirasaḥ — the sages called Aṅgirasas, who belong to the company of ancestors; ukthaiḥ — by śastras (they praise Agni with praises); vīḷu — the strong; adrim — the devourer (the asura named Paṇi); dṛḷhā cit — though firm-limbed; raveṇa — by the sound (of the praise); rujan — destroyed; bṛhataḥ — of the great (the magnificent); divaḥ — of heaven; gātum — the path; asme — for us; cakruḥ — made; svaḥ — pleasantly attainable; ahaḥ — the day; vividuḥ — they knew; ketum — the one who causes the day to be known (the Āditya); usrāḥ — the cows (carried off by Paṇi); [19]

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

The sages called Aṅgirasas, who belong to the company of our ancestors, praised Agni with ukthas, and caused him to kill the asura called Paṇi — the strong and firm-limbed — and made easy for us the path to heaven, and obtained for us the day that is easy to reach (the Āditya, because the asura named Paṇi who hid the sky was destroyed) and the cows (carried off by him).

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

- "In this Ṛk the might of Agni, who killed the asura called Paṇi, is described. Though this great deed is generally known as belonging to the greatness of Indra, here too it is described that Agni accomplished this great deed and obtained a pleasant way of life for the Āryas. For example:

  > न्यक्रतून्ग्रथिनो मृध्रवाचः पणींरश्रद्धाँ अवृधाँ अयज्ञान् । प्रप्र तान्दस्यूँरग्निर्विवाय पूर्वश्चकारापराँ अयज्यून् ॥ nyakratūn grathino mṛdhravācaḥ paṇīṃr aśraddhāṃ avṛdhāṃ ayajñān | prapra tān dasyūṃr agnir vivāya pūrvaś cakārāparāṃ ayajyūn || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 7-6-3)

  In this Ṛk the valour that destroyed the Paṇis is described, and then the benefit that the destruction brought to the sacrificing sages. The praise in this Ṛk is of the same context." [20]

20. The Sanskrit of this citation was re-read from the better scan (first word "nyakratūn", candrabindus as printed); the source leaves it untranslated; the gloss, tentative: "the Paṇis, scornful of speech, faithless, without increase and without sacrifice — Agni drove those dasyus far away, and made those who do not sacrifice the later ones".

- वीळु — "ojaḥ, pājaḥ, śavaḥ …" — "since vīḷu is read among the twenty-two names of strength (Ni. 3-9), the word vīḷu has the name 'strength'."
- दृळ्हा — dṛḍhaḥ sthūlabalayoḥ — "firm, and in the general sense 'thick' and 'strong'. Vīḷu dṛḷhā cit means: though exceedingly strong, even so, with the help of Agni our fathers destroyed the demons."
- अद्रिम् — adrir ādṛṇāty anena, api vā atteḥ syāt (Ni. 4-4) — "the Nirukta-writer explains that the word adri may come from the root ad 'to eat'. On the basis of this etymology the bhāṣyakāra also explains adriṃ as attāraṃ paṇināmānam asuram, 'the devourer, the asura named Paṇi, the eater of everything'. In the same sense, in the Ṛk adri is explained as the thunderbolt, devourer of enemies; but the word adri is mostly used in the sense of 'mountain' or 'cloud' — such a meaning is less suitable here. Skandasvāmin too, explaining the word adri in this Ṛk as 'mountain', writes adriṃ durgaparvataṃ cāsurāṇāṃ svabhūtam: though the mountain, the dwelling-place of the asuras, was very firm and strong, Agni split it with help" (Skandasvāmin's note re-read from the better scan; the glosses are editorial and tentative).

- केतुम् — ahnāṃ ketayitāraṃ jñāpayitāram ādityam — "The one who makes known the days: the Sun, who makes known the day by his own light. Though the words 'sun' and 'moon' are synonyms, this epithet serves to make known their natures; hence it is used. For example:

  > नवो नवो भवति जायमानोऽह्नां केतुरुषसामेत्यग्रम् । navo navo bhavati jāyamāno 'hnāṃ ketur uṣasām ety agram (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-85-19)

  In this Ṛk the Nirukta-writer explains that the ketu of the days is the moon (Ni. 11-5). So in the Ṛk Saṃhitā the word ketu, in the various senses 'banner', 'wisdom', 'deed' and the like, has been used also as a synonym of the sun and the moon." [21]

- उस्राः — gāvaḥ — "cows. For the explanation of this word see the Special Topics of Ṛk 1-92-4."

The chief purport of the Ṛk: by Agni's grace the sun, the remover of darkness, rose and became a benefit to the world, with the destruction of the exceedingly powerful enemies.

Meaning: The great sages, the Aṅgirases, established (dadhan) in the sacrificial place the Agni that had come there — they maintained him in the forms of the Gārhapatya and the other fires; and having established him they wrought (dhanayan) for this Agni the rite (dhīti) of Agnihotra and the like, as if making wealth: as men acquire wealth, so they carried out the rites belonging to Agni. And immediately after the Aṅgirases' performance, the masters (aryaḥ) of wealth, the sustainers of the fires (didhiṣvaḥ), do the maintaining of the fires — that is, having set up the fires. The vibhṛtrāḥ — those who move about in the rites of Agnihotra with the consecrated fires, atṛṣyantīḥ — free from thirst for other objects, hence apasaḥ, "engaged in rites": such people, the sacrificers, with prayas — the food in the form of the oblation — cause the gods, Indra and the others, and the men who are born, to prosper; they go (yanti) towards Agni, face to face (acchā): they reach, they serve him.

After the Aṅgirases, in the sacrificial hall, had established Agni and performed the rites of Agnihotra and the rest, the sacrificers — the lords of wealth — establish Agni, and, without attachment in other matters, fix their minds on him, nourish the gods and men with the food in the form of the oblation, and perform the rites of Agnihotra and the rest which belong to him.

This epithet is used again and again for Indra and for the other gods. The epithet is used not merely to show lordship but, in many places, to suggest honour and favour to the master. Here, however, dhanasya svāminyaḥ is taken, with reference to the sacrificers, as 'masters of wealth'. (In a few places, as Ṛk. Special Topics of Rik 71.3 (concluded from p. 295):

two Ṛks are quoted to show that Agni is the cause of the growth of all beings:

> अग्निना रयिमश्नवत्पोषमेव दिवेदिवे । यशसं वीरवत्तमम् ॥ agninā rayim aśnavat poṣam eva dive-dive | yaśasaṃ vīravattamam || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-1-3, as read)

> अग्ने यं यज्ञमध्वरं विश्वतः परिभूरसि । स इद्देवेषु गच्छति ॥ agne yaṃ yajñam adhvaraṃ viśvataḥ paribhūr asi | sa id deveṣu gacchati || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-1-4, as read)

[29] "...and in hundreds of such contexts Agni is the cause of the growth of all beings, men and the rest; it is through sacrifice that the gods are satisfied, through sacrifice that men's wealth comes, and Agni is the soul of that sacrifice; therefore he is the cause of the continuance and prospering of all; hence the sacrificers tend Agni — such is the meaning."

29. Both are standard Ṛgveda verses; the source quotes them untranslated. My glosses, tentative: "through Agni one may obtain wealth, growth day by day, glorious, with the most heroes"; "O Agni, the sacrifice, the unharmed rite, that you encompass on every side — that alone goes to the gods".

Meaning (so far): Mātariśvan — the chief breath (mukhyaprāṇa), abiding in the form of the vyāna function — yad īm mathīt when he churned this Agni: for Agni is produced by churning, which is achieved by vyāna. The Chāndogya (Upaniṣad) begins: "Now that which is the junction of prāṇa and apāna is vyāna", and goes on: "therefore the other deeds that need strength — the churning of fire, running a race, bending a stiff bow — he does without breathing in or out." And another mantra says, "Mātariśvan fetched him from heaven; the falcon churned another from the rock" (Ṛk. Saṃ. [1-93-6?]). How is Mātariśvan vibhṛtaḥ? Variously borne — divided in living beings as the five functions prāṇa,

35. Reading note: re-read from the better scan: the numerals are as printed (Chāndogya "1-3-3 to 5", with the Kannada "riṃda"; Ṛgveda labelled "Ṛgve."); "vyānavāyusādhyatvam atha", "āmnātaṃ", "manthanenotpanno 'yam agniḥ", "vāṇam" as printed; "ariṣṭhaḥ" doubtful [?]; the Chāndogya quotation is compressed and a few of its syllables ("saraṇam", "āyamanam", "aprāṇann anapānan") are doubtful. apāna and the rest. The same is related in the Prāṇa-dialogue: "Prāṇa, unharmed, spoke to them: 'Do not fall into delusion; I alone, dividing myself in five, support this body by holding it up.'" (Agni, by the churning, becoming śyeta — of bright colour — in house after house — in every house of sacrifice — when he became jenya, "to be conquered" or rather "victorious", appeared. Or he became the conqueror, the overcomer, of the demons. So the Taittirīya says: "The gods and the asuras were arrayed in battle. The gods, afraid, entered Agni; therefore they say 'Agni is all the deities'. Making Agni their shelter, they overcame the asuras" (Tai. Saṃ. [6-2-3-6?]); and the Aitareya adherents also recite: "The gods, awakening, led Agni in front at the morning pressing; by Agni alone they struck down the asuras and rakṣas at the morning pressing" (Ai. Brā. [6-4?]). Then, after he appeared in the house of sacrifice, the sacrificer, acting like the sage Bhṛgu (bhṛgavāṇaḥ), vivāya — carried out — the office of messenger (dūtya) of this Agni, by the rule of the scripture. The illustration: "sacā san" — a king who has become a friend … [36].

38. Reading note: this is the bhāṣya's grammatical tail; it is characterized below, not treated line by line. Re-read from the better scan: "hmyantakṣaṇa" is as printed; "kṛtyalyuṭo", "kartary aco yad", "laṭo", "lasārvadhātuka", "antarbhāvitaṇyarthāt" and the Mahābhāṣya numeral 3-1-11-3 as printed. The first line completes the sentence of p. 298: "...as a king sends his own man for the office of messenger to a mightier king, so [the sacrificer to Agni]."

vibhṛtaḥ — standing in five ways, as prāṇa, apāna and the rest; mātariśvā — the wind; īm — this Agni; yat — when; mathīt — he who churned (then); śyetaḥ — of bright colour; gṛhe-gṛhe — in every sacrificial hall; jenyaḥ bhūt — he became manifest (the destroyer of the demons); āt — after manifestation; īm — to this Agni; bhṛgavāṇaḥ — the sacrificer who behaves like the sage Bhṛgu; sacā san — becoming a friend (the king); sahīyase — (to him who) defeated (him); rājñe na — like a king; dūtyam — the office of messenger; ā vivāya — he caused to be undertaken (made).

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

When the wind that fills every opening makes Agni blaze, Agni appears, bright of colour, in all the sacrificial halls. As the sacrificer — like the sage Bhṛgu — sends a messenger to a defeated king who has become friendly towards his conqueror, so Agni performs the office of messenger.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> When the diffusive vital air excites Agni, he becomes bright and manifest in every mansion, and the institutor of the rite, imitating Bhrigu, prevails on him to perform the function of messenger, as a prince who has become a friend sends an ambassador to his more powerful (conqueror).

- मातरिश्वा मथीत् — "For the explanation of the word mātariśvā see the Special Topics of Ṛk 1-93-6. Kīdṛśo mātariśvā — vibhṛtaḥ: prāṇiṣu prāṇāpānādipañcavṛttirūpeṇa vihṛto vibhajya sthitaḥ — 'what kind of Mātariśvan? vibhṛta' — divided in living beings in the five forms of function, prāṇa, apāna and the rest. In beings the pervading breath is divided into five — prāṇa, apāna, vyāna, udāna and samāna: this is the sense of the word vibhṛtaḥ. Among these, in this context mātariśvā means the chief breath (mukhyaprāṇa) abiding in the form of vyāna — thus the bhāṣyakāra explains: the wind in this form is able to churn Agni and has accomplished the work. To support this, the Chāndogya passage is quoted: atha yaḥ prāṇāpānayoḥ saṃdhiḥ sa vyānaḥ | ato yāny anyāni vīryavanti karmāṇi yathāgner manthanam ājeḥ saraṇaṃ dṛḍhasya dhanuṣa āyamanam aprāṇann anapānaṃs tāni karoti — in praise of the wind in the form of vyāna: "All the deeds of valour such as churning of fire, which cannot be done by the power of prāṇa and apāna, can be done only by the wind in the form of vyāna" — this is the purport of the śruti sentence (Chā. Up. [1-3-5?])."

- A story prior to the churning of Agni: "There is a story current about the churning of Agni: as it says, sarvam idam andhaṃ tama āsīt | atha mātariśvākāśe sūkṣmam agnim apaśyat | tam amathnāt | mathitvā cānayad iti — 'all this was dark; then Mātariśvan saw in the sky the subtle Agni; he churned him' [gloss editorial and tentative]. Then Mātariśvan, recognizing the fire in subtle form, churned it; afterwards he is said to have called it to the sacrifice as favourable: this well-known story is told in many places in the Ṛk Saṃhitā in subtle form. For example:

> आन्यं [as printed] दिवो मातरिश्वा जभारामथ्नादन्यं परि श्येनो अद्रेः ।
> ānyaṃ [as printed] divo mātariśvā jabhārāmathnād anyaṃ pari śyeno adreḥ (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-93-6)

> आ दूतो अग्निमभरद्विवस्वतो वैश्वानरं मातरिश्वा परावतः । ā dūto agnim abharad vivasvato vaiśvānaraṃ mātariśvā parāvataḥ (Ṛk. Saṃ. 6-8-4)

In these sūktas too, as here, praise of Agni is told together with the older story. Thus, after Mātariśvan fetched him, Agni shone in the house of sacrifice — such is the meaning." [39]

- श्येतः — śubhravarṇo bhūtvā — "becoming bright of colour: shining brightly."
- जेन्यः — prādurbhūtaḥ bhūt | yadvā rakṣaṇaṃ tamasāṃ vā jetā abhavat — "became manifest; or became the conqueror of the demons or of the darkness. Mātariśvan, having brought Agni to the sacrificial house, became manifest over him; or the two meanings may be given — victorious over the darkness and over the enemies as well, he shone." [40]

- जेन्यः (concluded) — "...But the word jenyaḥ is used in the Ṛk Saṃhitā mostly in the sense of 'one of victorious nature'; in various Ṛks, [1-128-7; 1-130-6; 1-140-2; 2-5-1; 10-4-3] and so on, the meaning 'of victorious nature' (jayaśīlaḥ) is appropriate. Here too that sense is natural."
- सचा सन् — sakhā bhavan — "becoming a friend. Dūtasya karma ā vivāya — he caused the work of messenger to be done: 'he made him carry out the duties of a messenger.' Agni is described in many places as the most dear friend, both of the sacrificer and of the gods. For example:

39. Glosses editorial and tentative: "Mātariśvan carried one [fire] from heaven; the falcon churned another from the rock"; "the messenger Mātariśvan brought Agni Vaiśvānara from the far-off to Vivasvat".
40. Continued on p. 301.

> त्वं जामिर्जनानामग्ने मित्रो असि प्रियः । सखा सखिभ्य ईड्यः ॥ tvaṃ jāmir janānām agne mitro asi priyaḥ | sakhā sakhibhya īḍyaḥ || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-75-4)

> त्वं पुत्रो भवसि यस्तेऽविधत्त्वं सखा सुशेवः पास्याधृषः । tvaṃ putro bhavasi yas te 'vidhat tvaṃ sakhā suśevaḥ pāsy ādhṛṣaḥ | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 2-1-9)

> त्वं त्राता तरणे चेत्यो भूः पिता माता सदमिन्मानुषाणाम् । tvaṃ trātā taraṇe cetyo bhūḥ pitā mātā sadam in mānuṣāṇām | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 6-1-5)

In Ṛks such as these, as the friendship and helpfulness of Agni are told, so here too it is praised that he, being such a friend, performed the duty of a messenger. The dialogue that goes on between Agni, who is petitioned to carry out the office of messenger, and the other gods, in the fifty-first sūkta of the tenth maṇḍala [as read, ?], explains this context well. Moreover:

> अग्निं दूतं वृणीमहे होतारं विश्ववेदसम् । agniṃ dūtaṃ vṛṇīmahe hotāraṃ viśvavedasam (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-12-1)

> जुष्टो हि दूतो असि हव्यवाहनोऽग्ने रथीरध्वराणाम् । juṣṭo hi dūto asi havyavāhano 'gne rathīr adhvarāṇām (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-44-2)

— that Agni, as a messenger, is the equal of both gods and men who perform sacrifices, is natural; but for him to be a messenger to such, the sacrificer's qualification must be of great excellence — to show this ..." [41] [42]

Special Topics of Rik 71.4 (concluded from p. 301): "...by the epithet bhṛgavāṇaḥ ('like the sage Bhṛgu', most excellent in the performance of rites), it is suggested that only the sacrificer who is devoted to such an excellent performance of rites obtains such friendship of Agni. In such a situation, as when one king has the help of another king the power of both shines forth and wins victory, so the friendship of Agni brings benefit to the sacrificers and to all the gods and men alike — such is the purport. Or: as a sacrificer devoted to the rites of sacrifice rises to an excellent position, so a king, by the greatness of his own position, obtains a second [king] who is friendly with him yet greater in valour than himself, and sends to him his messenger; so Agni sends his messenger [i.e., himself acts as messenger] to the gods."

Meaning: When the sacrificer (kaḥ, "makes") this essence of the earth, the oblation, for the great (mahe) father (pitre) — the protector, the shining company of gods (dive) — then Agni, the pṛśanya (skilled in touch — in discerning the demons and the like who trouble) — knowing you, O Agni, who carry the oblations — ava tsarat — goes down/moves stealthily [?]. The shooter (astā, one who casts) Agni, with his bold (dhṛṣatā) bow, sends a gleaming (didyum) arrow at this fleeing demon. And the shining god Agni, having come in the dawn-time, places (dhāt) his own radiance in his own daughter, the Dawn (svāyāṃ duhitari) — as when she arises. At the dawn the sun's rays appear; with them he makes his own light one. So the Taittirīya (Brāhmaṇa): "Agni climbs up after the rising sun; therefore only the smoke of Agni is seen by day" (Tai. Brā. 2-1-2-10); hence it is said that he places radiance in the Dawn.

Grammatical tail of the bhāṣya : kaḥ (root kṛ, luṅ; loss of cli by mantre ghasa-hvara…, Pā. [2-4-80]); tsarat (root tsar "to go stealthily", leṭ with the aḍ-augment; loss of the i of the ending by iteś ca lopaḥ); pṛśanyaḥ (root spṛś "to touch"; the kyu-affix by Uṇ. 2-81 by the bahula rule; sparśaḥ "touch"; sādhuḥ tatra — yat in the sense "skilled in it"; Vedic loss of s; svarita by tit svaritam); didyum (didyut is a name for the thunderbolt; Vedic loss of the final); dhāt (Vedic luṅ in the sense of the present).

48. Reading note: re-read from the better scan: "rākṣasādiś cikitvān", "tvadbhayāt palāyate" (the first reading's "tsaratir dhātuḥ chadmagatau…" was a misreading), "duhitṛvat samanantarabhāvinyām", "vāvādityam", Tai. Brā. 2-1-2-10 and Uṇ. 2-81 as printed; the sūtra-name before Uṇ. 2-81 reads "kṛpṛvṛjīti" (its ೃ signs match the ೄ of the same word on p. 308); the bhāṣya's grammatical tail, from "kaḥ", is characterized, not treated line by line.

didyum — blazing (the arrow); sṛjat — he sends; devaḥ — the shining Agni; svāyām — of his own; duhitari — in the dawn, who is like a daughter; tviṣim — brilliance; dhāt — he places.

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

When the sacrificer offers the oblation to Agni, the great one, the protector, the demons who wait to seize it retreat. But Agni, who has the bow, shoots an arrow at them from behind; and then he gives light to the dawn, who comes near like a daughter.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> When (the worshipper) offers an oblation to his great and illustrious protector, the grasping (Rakshas), recognizing you Agni, retires, but Agni, the archer, sends after him a blazing arrow from his dreadful bow, and the God bestows light upon his own daughter, (the dawn).

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

- "Agni is not only a benefactor of the sacrificers, gods and men, in carrying out the office of messenger for them: he is able to remove all the obstacles that come in the way. He frustrates the harm of the demons, destroys the darkness, and after his manifestation gives his radiance to the dawn that rises, his daughter, and makes her shine."
- ईम् — "The form and special character of this word have been explained fully before."
- कः — "From the root kṛ; kaḥ means 'he makes'."

49. Kannada; begun at the foot of p. 304, "mahe — to the great one; pitre — the protector; dive — to the shining (company of gods); īṃ rasam — this essence (of the earth, the oblation); yat — when (the sacrificer); kaḥ — makes; pṛśanyaḥ — the touch-skilled (demons); cikitvān — (you, knowing that the deity carries the oblation)…"

- रसम् — "Since it is read among the twenty-two names of food, andhaḥ, vājaḥ, payaḥ and so on (Ni. 3-9), rasam here means food in the form of the oblation — that is, the oblation which is the essence of the earth."
- पृशन्यः — spṛśa saṃsparśane — "the root spṛś, which gives the sense 'touch, grasp', yields the form pṛśanyaḥ. Sparśanakuśalo rākṣasādiḥ: that is, demons and the like, who are skilled in seizing — able to plunder..." [50]

- पृशन्यः (concluded) — "...who are able to plunder: that is the sense. In the same way the forms pṛśanyeyuḥ (1-84-11), pṛśanī (10-73-2) and pṛśane (9-97-54) occur. The word pṛśanyaḥ itself, when used again in Ṛk 10-61-8, with the same meaning, becomes an epithet of Rudra:

  > सरत्पदा न दक्षिणा पराव्रङ्न ता नु मे पृशन्यो जगृभ्रे । sarat padā na dakṣiṇā parāvṛṅ na tā nu me pṛśanyo jagṛbhre (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-61-8)"

- अव त्सरत् — "Slipping away, he ran off. Vartate, āyate, loṭate (and so on) — the root is read among the twenty-two names of 'going/action' (Ni. [3-9?]), and means 'to move'. But this root is used in a special sense: wherever the forms tsaruḥ, tsarī, tsarat occur, they have the sense chadmagati — 'moving crookedly' (or 'moving deceitfully') — that is, 'move crookedly, or move by trickery'. For example:

  > वहत्कुत्समार्जुनेयं शतक्रतुः त्सरद्गन्धर्वमस्तृतम् । vahat kutsam ārjuneyaṃ śatakratuḥ tsarad gandharvam astṛtam (Ṛk. Saṃ. 8-1-11)

50. continued on p. 306

In this Ṛk the word tsarat means chadmagatyā gacchat — 'going by trickery'. So here too: though the demon is able to seize and plunder others, in fear of Agni he slips away and goes by trickery; Agni's power and skill have been said to be the cause of this." [51]

- अस्ता — iṣukṣepaṇakuśalo 'gniḥ — "Agni, skilled in the casting of arrows."
- दिद्युं सृजत् — "Didyut, nemiḥ, hetiḥ and so on are read among the names of the thunderbolt, the twenty-[odd] names (Ni. 3-11); so didyu generally means Indra's thunderbolt-weapon. But in some places it also means a shining arrow. The Nirukta-writer's explanation is: the word didyut is formed either from the root do 'to cut, to afflict', or from the root dyai/dyā 'to attack, to fall upon', or from dyut 'to shine, to bring forth radiance' (Ni. 10-7). In this connection the Nirukta-writer quotes the Ṛk Saṃhitā:

> यस्ते दिद्युदवसृष्टा दिवस्परि क्ष्मया चरति परि सा वृणक्तु नः । yas te didyud avasṛṣṭā divas pari kṣmayā carati pari sā vṛṇaktu naḥ (Ṛk. Saṃ. 7-46-3)" (continued on p. 307) (Gloss mine and tentative: "may that thunderbolt of yours, which, hurled from heaven, moves over the earth, pass us by".)

- दिद्युम् (concluded) — "...Here the word didyut has the sense hetiḥ, 'arrow': it is an epithet of the arrow of Rudra. Similarly, in many Ṛks — [1-66-4; 1-166-6; 5-86-3; 7-25-1?] and so on — this word is used in the sense of arrow. But in Ṛk 6-66-10, where it comes as an epithet of the Maruts, didyut is explained as dyotamānāḥ — 'the shining Maruts'. In the Ṛk of the present sūkta, didyut means the shining arrow of Agni."

51. Gloss editorial and tentative: "Śatakratu carried Kutsa Ārjuneya … the Gandharva stealthily going …"; the Ṛk citation and numeral checked against the better scan.

- स्वायां दुहितरि त्विषिं धात् — "Duhitṛvat samanantarabhāvinyām uṣasi svakīyāṃ dīptiṃ sthāpayati — Sāyaṇa explains: after Agni has appeared, he spreads his rays on the dawn, who is like his own daughter, being younger than himself, and makes her radiant. But the relation of father and daughter between Agni and Uṣas is not found stated everywhere; and it has been said many times that they show the relation of lover and beloved (priyaḥ-priyā). Therefore Skandasvāmin's explanation appears more consistent than this one. According to his commentary, Agni is shooting the arrow at the demons; tad eva ca — "svāyāṃ devaḥ indraḥ": duhitari vṛṣṭyā sasyarūpeṇa janyamānatvād duhitā kṣitir atrābhipretā — 'Indra's daughter is the earth, since she is made to bear the crops in the form of the rain'; tasyāṃ tviṣiṃ sasyasaṃpattilakṣaṇāṃ dīptiṃ ā dhāt dadhāti — 'in her he places brilliance in the form of the abundance of crops'. Immediately thereupon, the god Indra spreads on the earth the radiance in the form of abundance of crops. Since she is born in the form of crops from the rain, and since Indra is the cause of the rain, the earth is explained as Indra's daughter. The explanation of this part is somewhat intricate." [52]

- द्विबर्हाः — dvayoḥ sthānayoḥ parivṛḍho madhyame ca sthāne uttame ca (Ni. 6-17) — "grown (in power) in two places, the middle and the highest: the meaning is one who is firm and large, having grown in the worlds such as earth and the atmosphere. This epithet shows the places and natures of the deities Indra, Rudra, Agni and Uṣas in the sūktas addressed to them. For example:

  > महाँ इन्द्रो नृवदा चर्षणिप्रा उत द्विबर्हा अमिनः सहोभिः । mahāṃ indro nṛvad ā carṣaṇiprā uta dvibarhā aminaḥ sahobhiḥ (Ṛk. Saṃ. 6-19-1)

  In these Ṛks the nature of the Dawn and of Indra is told. Likewise this epithet is used in [4-5-3; 7-8-6; 7-24-2; 9-4-7?; 9-40-6; 10-116-4] and other places. In Ṛk 9-100-2, dvibarhasaṃ rayim ('wealth that increases in two worlds') is an epithet of wealth. Because it is applied here to Agni, the meaning is 'one who is grown in the earth and the atmosphere'." [60]

- जुनासि — "This is a rarely occurring usage. The root ju is given the sense of 'going', so sañcarisu 'to move' is the sense; hence junāsi means broadly 'you go'. Here the construction may be made in different ways. First, [by Sāyaṇa]: sarathaṃ yaṃ junāsi rāyo yāsat — rathena sahitaṃ yuyutsuṃ yaṃ puruṣaṃ yuddhe prerayasi sa puruṣaḥ dhanena saṃgacchate — 'whom you urge to battle, a man who is eager to fight and goes with his chariot, that man unites with wealth', that is, he gains wealth. Rāyā dhanena saha yaṃ stotāraṃ yaṣṭāraṃ prati junāsi | gacchasi | tasminn eva rathe svaṃ ārohasi dhanāny api tatraivāropya gaccher ity arthaḥ — Skandasvāmin explains the construction: 'whom, with wealth, you go to — the worshipper — you mount that very chariot, and, taking the wealth, go (to him)'; that is, in the same chariot in which you sit and go to the sacrificer, you carry wealth to him. But Sāyaṇa's first construction seems more suitable for this context, because: the man whom Agni urges to battle and helps in the battle …" (continued on p. 312; the Sanskrit sentences were re-read from the better scan).

In this Ṛk it is praised that he who has Agni's help in battle wins, unbroken, and obtains abundant, lasting wealth of food. Moreover, since junāḥ can be rendered here too as 'you urge' (prerayasi), in the explanation of the present Ṛk also, as in Sāyaṇa's explanation, junāsi is properly prerayasi: the man whom Agni urges to battle obtains wealth."

Meaning: All foods (pṛkṣaḥ — the rice-cakes, caru, puroḍāśa and the like) approach (abhi sacante) this Agni, endowed with the qualities of ... as the flowing rivers go to the ocean. Which rivers? The seven (sapta); for in the Ṛk imaṃ me gaṅge… seven rivers are chiefly heard. Yahvīḥ is a name for "great": the great ones. The kinsmen (jāmayaḥ — "those who eat together from one vessel") — through them our food (vayaḥ) is not found/known (na vi cikite): there is not enough food for us to give them. Therefore, O Agni, among the gods — the lords of wealth, "those who sport" (dīvyanti) — find for us the highly considerable wealth (pramati), knowing (cikitvān), and cause us to obtain it; or: make known to the gods the excellent praise (pramati, a hymn).

The oblations — puroḍāśa and the rest — all reach Agni, as the seven great rivers join the ocean. Our kinsmen do not accept our food. Therefore, O all-knowing Agni, make known to the gods our desire and our praises.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> All (sacrificial) viands concentrate in Agni, as the seven great rivers flow into the ocean: our food is not partaken of by our kinsmen, therefore do you, who know (all things), make our desires known to the Gods.

- "In this Ṛk, the caru, puroḍāśa and other offerings are compared to the great rivers, and Agni to the ocean. As the seven great rivers go and join the ocean-king, their single lord and master, so the caru, puroḍāśa and the rest, all of them together, join Agni, the one lord. The meaning is that all their strength is divided to the gods through Agni; and Agni is begged to give the sacrificer what he needs for the fulfilment of the rites, and to nourish him and his relatives with an abundance of food that enables a full life." [66]

Special Topics of Rik 71.7 (continued; the first sentence completes p. 315's paragraph)

- [67] "...the sacrificer, he is begged to give the food which should nourish him and his kinsmen with a full life."
- पृक्षः — "Since it is read among the twenty-two names of food (Ni. 3-9), the word pṛkṣa means food. Here it is meant as food such as caru and puroḍāśa."
- यह्वीः — yahva iti mahato nāmadheyam (Ni. 8-8) — "'great, worshipful': the word yahvīḥ is used in this sense. For example:

  Quoting this sūkta, the Nirukta-writer explains yahva as above. Here too yahvīḥ is an epithet of the seven rivers; hence it means 'great' or 'worshipful'.

66. continued on p. 316
67. Completion:

Such yahvīḥ sapta sravataḥ are the seven great rivers; as in the Ṛk Saṃhitā:

> इमं मे गङ्गे यमुने सरस्वति शुतुद्रि स्तोमं सचता परुष्ण्या । असिक्न्या मरुद्वृधे वितस्तयार्जीकीये शृणुह्या सुषोमया ॥ imaṃ me gaṅge yamune sarasvati śutudri stomaṃ sacatā paruṣṇyā | asiknyā marudvṛdhe vitastayārjīkīye śṛṇuhy ā suṣomayā || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-75-5)

— as set out in this Ṛk, the seven great rivers are named Gaṅgā, Yamunā, Sarasvatī, Śutudrī, Paruṣṇī, Marudvṛdhā and Ārjīkīyā [as printed]. As these rivers join the ocean-king, all oblations join Agni. Agni, being the lord of all oblations, as described in the Ṛk

since he is the master of all oblations, all oblations go to Agni. The comparison here is exceedingly apt and pure." [68]

- जामिभिः — jamanty ekasmin pātre saha bhuñjate iti jāmayo jñātayaḥ — "Because all eat together seated from one vessel, relatives and kinsmen are called jāmayaḥ. Jāmibhiḥ means 'with our kinsmen'..." [69]

- जामिभिः (continued from p. 316) — "The word jāmi was first a synonym of 'uterine brother/sister' (sahodari, 'sister'); its meaning was then enlarged a little, and it has been used in the general sense of 'kinsman' (bandhu). The Nirukta-writer, quoting the Ṛk Saṃhitā

  > न जामये तान्वो रिक्थमारैक्चकार गर्भं सनितुर्निधानम् । na jāmaye tānvo rikthām āraik cakāra garbhaṃ sanitur nidhānam (Ṛk. Saṃ. 3-31-2)

  explains jāmaye as bhaginyai ('to the sister'), showing how the meaning 'sister' is arrived at for the word jāmi: 'jāmir anyo 'syāṃ janayati jāmipatyam | jamater vā syād gatikarmaṇo nirgamanaprāyā bhavati' — 'another [man] begets on her a son; the "sister" [jāmi] is so called because another begets in her; or from the root jam "to go", because she is one who mostly goes out [of the house]' (Ni. 3-6). Others derive it from the root jā "to beget" (the sense of continuing the line), or from the root jam, 'to go' (since she goes out to the house of her husband); thus the Nirukta-writer explains it as 'sister'. This explanation fits the context well. And again, in the Ṛk

  > भगस्य स्वसा वरुणस्य जामिरुषः सूनृते प्रथमा जरस्व । bhagasya svasā varuṇasya jāmir uṣaḥ sūnṛte prathamā jarasva (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-123-5)

  the word jāmi also means 'sister'. Gradually this word came to the broad sense of bandhu, 'kinsmen', and in many Ṛks — [1-65-4; 1-65-3; 1-100-1] and so on — it has the general sense bandhu.

And, moreover, in the context of the Soma sacrifice, the service of the fingers is essential; so, in describing the work of those fingers, the word jāmi is used as a synonym. For example:

> एष वृषा कनिक्रददशभिर्जामिभिर्यतः । eṣa vṛṣā kanikradad daśabhir jāmibhir yataḥ (Ṛk. Saṃ. 9-28-4)

> अंशुर्यवेन पिपिशे यतो नृभिः सं जामिभिर्नसते रक्षते शिरः । aṃśur yavena pipiśe yato nṛbhiḥ saṃ jāmibhir nasate rakṣate śiraḥ (Ṛk. Saṃ. 9-68-4)

In these Ṛks jāmibhiḥ means 'fingers' which, like kinsmen, join with one another and perform the rites of sacrifice; here too it indicates the relationship." [70]

original p. 318

Special Topics of Rik 71.7 (concluded): "In the Ṛk before us, 1-71-7, jāmibhiḥ means 'with kinsmen': Agni is prayed, 'Give food, that we may eat together with our kinsmen.' Since Agni is jātavedas, since he is the messenger of the gods, and since he is a friend to all the gods, he is prayed to bring about for the sacrificers all the wealth that men must obtain from the gods."

Meaning: May the fire (tejas) of Agni, in the form of the digestive fire (jāṭhara), pervade (ānaṭ) on every side the sacrificer, protector (nṛpati) of men — the priests — for the sake of food (iṣe); of what kind? pure (śuci), shining (dyauḥ); by that fire the cooked food becomes the essence, the seed (reto vīryam), which, poured into the place of conception (abhīke), may Agni — endowed with the qualities to be told — beget (janayat) as a son: robust (śardham), faultless, young — free from age — of good works (svādhyam) or of good understanding; and may he urge (sūdayat) him on to the rites of sacrifice. Or: retaḥ is a name for water; the water poured down (niṣiktam) by the cloud for food — for the growth of crops — which the fire of Agni pervades: for when the rain-water meets the earthly fire the crops arise. what kind is that fire? Protector of men, pure, shining; with that fire may the shining Agni beget, in time near [abhīke], a son endowed with strength and the rest, and urge him to sacrifice.

(agneḥ — of Agni); śuci — pure; dyauḥ — shining; yat tejaḥ — which fire; nṛpatim — the sacrificer, protector of the priests; ānaṭ — in the form of the digestive fire; iṣe — for the sake of food; ā — in all parts; vyāpnot — it pervades; retaḥ — (the essence-form potency of the food cooked by that fire); abhīke — in the place of conception; niṣiktam — poured; agniḥ — Agni; (as a son) janayat — let him beget; śardham — the strong; anavadyam — free of fault; yuvānam — young (free from age); svādhyam — endowed with good works (knowledge), (the begotten son); sūdayat ca — and let him stir (to sacrifice and so on).

Pratipadārtha (the second, alternative construction; printed in square brackets): [niṣiktam — poured by the cloud; retaḥ — the rain-water; iṣe — for food; (agneḥ); śuci — pure; dīptam — kindling; yat tejaḥ — which fire; ā ānaṭ — pervades round about;

(saḥ — he who is endowed with such fire); dyauḥ — the shining; agniḥ — Agni; abhīke — at a near time; śardham — the strong; anavadyam — the faultless; yuvānam — the youthful; svādhyam — endowed with good works (a son); janayat — let him cause to be born; sūdayat ca — and let him be urged to the rites of sacrifice and so on.]

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

May the fire of Agni, who is in the form of the digestive fire — pure, bright and shining — transform itself into seed in the sacrificer. Therefore may Agni be born as a son, strong, faultless, free from age and wise; and may he make that son one who is urged on to good works.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> May that (digestive) faculty (of Agni) which regards food, be imparted to the devout and illustrious protector of priests, as the source of virile vigour; and may Agni be born as (his) robust, irreproachable, youthful, and intelligent son, and instigate him to acts of worship.

- "Tiṣṭhatīva hi bhūtānāṃ jaṭhare jaṭhare jvalan" (Bṛhaddevatā 1-65) — "As this description says: Agni, who is in the form of the digestive fire in the bellies of all beings, impelling the sacrificer to all good rites, may show him the fruits suited to those good rites. Also, may he make a son be born, who has excellent virility in his body, who is powerful and bound to works. This is one meaning; or, another meaning comes: Agni's fire, spreading over the earth and everywhere in the form of the rain-water that is the retas, makes crops grow, and thus is begged to cause a son to be born, endowed with the wealth that is the means of sacrifice and so on." [78]
- नृपतिम् — nṛṇām ṛtvijāṃ pālakaṃ yajamānam — "the sacrificer who is the protector of the priests, the leaders of the sacrifice —" (the page ends here; continued on p. 322).

Saṃ. 10-133-1). Of the first two meanings, if taken with Agni who pervades the belly, it means 'in the bellies of all beings'; if the second, 'near the heaven'."

- शर्धम् — "ojaḥ, pājaḥ, śavaḥ and so on — since it is read among the twenty-two names of strength, it is an epithet meaning 'strong': 'strong, powerful'."
- स्वाध्यम् — śobhanakarmāṇaṃ śobhanaprajñaṃ vā — "one of excellent works or one of excellent understanding: a son who is ever beneficent and devoted to works, and, secondly, one who also is beneficent in giving us, through rain, the wealth of crops, and intent on works, with a mind to that."
- सूदयत् — "The word sūda is used in many senses. Here the sense is 'urge, to urge to rites such as sacrifice'. Or sūdayatir atra saṃskārārthaḥ | saṃskarotu ca — 'here sūdayat is in the sense of making well-formed (saṃskṛta)', that is, 'may he make ripe'" — thus Skandasvāmin explains.

Meaning: The sun (sūraḥ), who goes alone (ekaḥ, "without a companion"), swiftly (sadyaḥ) traverses the divine path; that he has no companion is declared: "That sun walks alone" (Tai. Brā. 3-9-5-4); his swift going is remembered: "Homage to you who, traversing two thousand, two hundred and two yojanas in half a wink [as read]". An illustration of swift going: "like the mind" — as the mind goes quickly; and that sun is lord (īśe) of wealth (vasvaḥ) altogether at once (satrā), for whoever goes swiftly reaches the riches lying in many places. In the same way the two shining (rājānā) kings, Mitra and Varuṇa — beautiful-armed (supāṇī) — in our cows are protecting (rakṣamāṇā) the milk, dear to all, immortal-like and sweet.

83. Reading note: the first words are clear; the last clause reads "he agne tattadrūpeṇa tvam evaivaṃ vartasa iti bhāvaḥ" ("O Agni, it is you who exist thus in those several forms"); "mitrāvaruṇā" is printed as the Pada has it. The bhāṣya's grammatical tail, from "vasvaḥ", is characterized below, not transcribed line by line.

Grammatical tail of the bhāṣya : vasvaḥ (change of gender; before the jas-type endings, by vā chandasi, with no guṇa [gher jyarti] a yaṇ-substitution occurs); īśe (root īśa aiśvarye; loss of the ta by lopas ta ātmanepadeṣu); mitrāvaruṇā (in a devatā dvandva, ānaṅ for the first member, Pā. [6-3-25]; both members keep their natural accent by devatādvandve ca, Pā. [6-2-141]).

original p. 325

Grammatical tail (completed from p. 324): the print of the tail ends with the statement that ānaṅ and the double accent are to be taken as the sūtra devatādvandve ca says; the matter is characterized above.

॥ प्रतिपदार्थः ॥ — Pratipadārtha

yaḥ sūraḥ — which sun; ekaḥ — alone (without a helper); adhvanaḥ — the paths of the sky; mano na — like the mind; sadyaḥ eti — he swiftly passes (that sun); vasvaḥ satrā — together with the wealth; īśe — becomes the master; (tathā — likewise); rājānā — the shining; supāṇī — of beautiful arms; mitrāvaruṇā — Mitra and Varuṇa; goṣu — (our) in the cows; priyam — dear to all; amṛtam — the nectar-like taste (milk); rakṣamāṇā — are the protectors.

As the sun, alone, swiftly traverses the sky's paths like the mind and becomes the master of wealth, so may the shining Mitra and Varuṇa, of auspicious arms, bestow on our cows the dear, nectar-like, pleasing milk (that they may give milk).

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> The sun, who traverses alone the path of heaven with the speed of thought, is at once lord of all treasures: the two kings, Mitra and Varuna, with bounteous hands, are the guardians of the precious ambrosia of our cattle.

- "This Ṛk says that the sun's work of moving about in the world, and Mitra and Varuṇa's work of guarding the world, are by Agni's power alone:

> अग्ने नक्षत्रमजरमा सूर्यं रोहयो दिवि । agne nakṣatram ajaram ā sūryaṃ rohayo divi (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-156-4)

> वि यो रजांस्यमिमीत सुक्रतुर्वैश्वानरो वि दिवो रोचना कविः । परि यो विश्वा भुवनानि पप्रथेऽदब्धो गोपा अमृतस्य रक्षिता ॥ vi yo rajāṃsy amimīta sukratur vaiśvānaro vi divo rocanā kaviḥ | pari yo viśvā bhuvanāni paprathe 'dabdho gopā amṛtasya rakṣitā || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 6-7-7)

  In Ṛks like these it is said that Agni alone is the cause of the movement of the sun and the other planets, and of the lighting of the world. Likewise:

> त्वया ह्यग्ने वरुणो धृतव्रतो मित्रः शाशद्रे अर्यमा सुदानवः । tvayā hy agne varuṇo dhṛtavrato mitraḥ śāśadre aryamā sudānavaḥ (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-141-9)

  In Ṛks like these, it is said that the work of Mitra and Varuṇa of bearing and guarding the world goes on by Agni's greatness. That same praise here also shows Agni's power." [84]

84. The Ṛgveda citations are read from a small print; numerals as printed; the Sanskrit is doubtful [?]; the source leaves them untranslated; glosses, tentative: "O Agni, you raised the unageing star, the sun, in the sky"; "he who measured out the realms, the wise Vaiśvānara, the lights of heaven; who spread over all the worlds, undeceived, the guardian, protector of the immortal"; "by you, O Agni, Varuṇa of firm vows, Mitra, Aryaman, the good givers, have commanded [?]".

the epithet taraṇiḥ (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-50; no Ṛk number printed), 'the swift'. Describing the speed of the sun's motion, Sāyaṇa quotes a śruti sentence, but does not give the source of that sentence. In this description 'traversing two thousand [and] two hundred and two yojanas in half a wink — homage to you' [as read] the sun is praised."

- सुपाणी — śobhanabāhū — "of beautiful arms — excellent, or whose arms are fit to be loved: the epithet is also borne by the Aśvins (Ṛk. 1-109-4) and by Mitra and Varuṇa."
- राजाना मित्रावरुणा — "In the Ṛk Saṃhitā the praise of Mitra and Varuṇa is manifold: that they are sovereigns of all the worlds, that the sun is their eye, and that they examine, with the divine eye, not only the affairs of the physical universe, but also moral conduct — their greatness is thus praised. "...In many such contexts their lordship and their protectorship are told; and Agni's constant companionship with them in the rites of sacrifice is also praised, as in:

90. The Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya of Rik 71.10 begins on p. 329. Reading note: the Pada prints "viduḥ" where the Saṃhitā has "viduṣ" before "kaviḥ" (both as printed).

pvādīnāṃ hrasva iti hrasvatvaṃ | abhiśasteḥ | abhiśasyate hiṃsyate 'nayety abhiśastiḥ | karaṇe ktin | tādau ceti gateḥ prakṛtisvaratvaṃ | adhīhi | ik smaraṇe | loṭy āditvāc chapo luk | her apittvena jittvād guṇābhāvaḥ || [91]

Meaning: O Agni, do not destroy (mā pra marṣiṣṭhāḥ) our friendships (sakhyā) that come down from our forefather (pitryāṇi), beginning with Vasiṣṭha. Because you are a seer (kavi) — one who sees beyond — knowing all (viduḥ), think of me. As the sky is covered by the sun's rays with their forms (nabho na rūpam), so old age (jarimā) covers me [and] destroys me, the best praiser in hymns. Before (purā) that decay, the cause of injury, [reaches me], awake me (adhīhi); so act that it does not reach me; that is, give me immortality.

॥ प्रतिपदार्थः ॥ — Pratipadārtha

agne — O Agni; pitryāṇi — belonging to the forefathers (come down from Vasiṣṭha); sakhyā — the friendships; kaviḥ san — being the seer, abhi viduḥ — knowing everything (you); mā pra marṣiṣṭhāḥ — do not destroy; jarimā — old age; rūpam — the light; nabho na — as the sky; mināti — is injured (is destroyed); abhiśasteḥ — the cause of injury; tasyāḥ — than that old age; purā — before; adhīhi — awaken (me).

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

O Agni, the one who knows the past, present and future! Do not destroy our friendship with our forefathers that has come down from the time of Vasiṣṭha and the others. As the sun's rays cover the whole sky, so old age covers me. Before this injurious old age (that is, before it arrives) awaken me (give me immortality).

original p. 330

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

91. Reading note: the grammatical tail is small type; re-read from the print in this pass.

> Dissolve not, Agni, our ancestral friendship, for you are cognizant of the past as well as of the present; in like manner as light (speeds over) the sky, so decay impairs (my body); think of me before that source of destruction (prevails).

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

- "Because Agni's friendship has continued as an unbroken line of descent, and because the sages of this seer's family were such excellent recipients of Agni's friendship, and because Agni can know the entire earlier history with his divine sight — the prayer is that Agni may even now protect with the same favour, and, before old age comes and he becomes subject to various injuries, may give immortality."
- पित्र्याणि — pitaraṃ vasiṣṭham upakramyāgatāni — "friendships that came down starting from the sage Vasiṣṭha. If one considers the relationship between the sage Vasiṣṭha, of whom this Ṛk speaks, and Agni, and the relationship between Agni and Mitra-Varuṇa as suggested in the previous Ṛk, it is evident that the relationship of Agni to Vasiṣṭha is very close. For Vasiṣṭha is the son of Mitra and Varuṇa, as:

  > उतासि मैत्रावरुणो वसिष्ठोर्वश्या ब्रह्मन्मनसोऽधि जातः । utāsi maitrāvaruṇo vasiṣṭhorvaśyā brahman manaso 'dhi jātaḥ (Ṛk. Saṃ. 7-33-11) is known from the Ṛk Saṃhitā's own words. That Vasiṣṭha was a devotee of Agni and praised Agni is also well known from the Ṛk Saṃhitā itself. As the Bṛhaddevatā says:

  > ऋषिस्तु मैत्रावरुणिः सूक्तैः षोळशभिः परैः । तुष्टावाग्निमिति त्वग्निं आप्र्यस्तस्य जुषस्व नः ॥ ṛṣis tu maitrāvaruṇiḥ sūktaiḥ ṣoḷaśabhiḥ paraiḥ | tuṣṭāvāgnim iti tvagniṃ āpryas tasya juṣasva naḥ || (Bṛ. De. 5-160; as printed)

— from this it is known that Vasiṣṭha, the son of Mitra-Varuṇa, praised Agni and composed sixteen sūktas. And the Bṛhaddevatā-writers quote the Bhāllaveya śruti statement that the greatness of the sage Vasiṣṭha is so very great that he and those born in his line should be honoured by being placed in the most excellent positions at sacrifices and the like." [92]

> तस्माद्येऽद्यापि वासिष्ठाः सदस्याः स्युस्तु कर्हिचित् । अर्हयेद्दक्षिणाभिस्तान् भाल्लवेयी श्रुतिस्त्रियं ॥ tasmād ye 'dyāpi vāsiṣṭhāḥ sadasyāḥ syus tu karhicit | arhayed dakṣiṇābhis tān bhāllaveyī śrutis triyaṃ || (Bṛ. De. 1-159; as printed)

"Therefore the friendship of Agni is most celebrated; therefore too the greatness of this line has increased; and now too, as there has been no interruption, with the old pride carried forward, all of us should be shown the way to well-being — this is the prayer made in this Ṛk." [94]

- अभिशस्तेः — abhiśasyate hiṃsyate anayā ity abhiśastiḥ — "by this, one is injured; therefore it is harmful. Describing old age, he prays that before such a destroyer, old age, covers me, immortality may be given."

94. Gloss editorial and tentative: "therefore, even today, Vasiṣṭha's descendants are members of the sacrificial assembly; the Bhāllaveya śruti says they should be honoured with gifts".

- अधीहि — māṃ budhyasva — "awaken me; that is, 'giving me knowledge of rites, let me, by performing the sacrifice and so on, obtain immortality': such is the intention."

अनुवादः — Anuvāda [4]: This sūkta, beginning "ni kāvyā", is the eighth sūkta in the twelfth anuvāka. It has ten Ṛks. Parāśara is the ṛṣi of this sūkta, Agni the deity, Triṣṭup the metre. The Anukramaṇikā says "ni kāvyā". The sūkta has its application for the Prātaranuvāka mantras and for the Aśvina-śastra mantras.

8. Reading note: the print has "stotṛbhyo dhaneṣu datteṣv apy agner dhanaṃ na kṣīyata ity āha" ("even when wealth is given to the praisers, Agni's wealth does not diminish"); the reference is printed "ath. 5-28-11" (Atharva-veda). The bhāṣya's grammatical tail begins at "kaḥ".

Meaning: The eternal (śaśvataḥ) Creator's (vedhasaḥ, Brahmā's) songs (kāvyā) — the hymns in the form of mantras — this Agni takes (ni kaḥ) unfailingly, turning them toward himself. Doing what? Holding (dadhānaḥ) in the hand many riches (purūṇi), good for men (naryā), or "valuable among men". Beholding Agni endowed with such qualities, all people praise him. And, he is the lord of riches (rayipatiḥ) — the master of the best of the riches — doing (cakrāṇaḥ) all (viśvā) the immortals (amṛtāni) at once (satrā): amṛta is "gold", from the śruti [Ath. 5-28-11]. That is, he would give all the gold to the praisers at once.

Grammatical tail of the bhāṣya [9]: kaḥ (root kṛ; Vedic luṅ; cli lost by mantre ghasa-hvara…; loss of t by halṅyābbhyo…); naryā (from nara, the yat affix in the sense "good for", of the gavādi list; or yat in the sense "good in that"); cakrāṇaḥ (root kṛ, liṭ, śānac; the vikaraṇa dropped (śluḥ) by bahulaṃ chandasi; the objection that "so the initial acute of *abhyasta*s would arise" is met: let the liṭ take kānac; since that affix is ārdhadhātuka, with no acute on the reduplicated stem, only the cit-accent [the affix's] remains).

Pratipadārtha of Rik 72.1 (concluded from p. 334; Kannada): …ni kaḥ — makes his own, turning toward himself; agniḥ — this Agni; viśvā — all; amṛtāni — gold; satrā — at one time; cakrāṇaḥ — doing (giving); rayīṇām — of wealth, of the best wealth; rayipatiḥ — becomes the lord of wealth.

Agni, holding in his own hand wealth dear to the praisers, himself accepts the hymns that the praisers have made with the eternal Brahmā in view. Giving all the gold swiftly to the praisers, he becomes the lord of wealth (since the wealth does not decrease).

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Agni, holding in his hands many good things for men > appropriates the prayers addressed to the eternal creator.
> Agni is the lord of riches, quickly bestowing (on those who > plaise [sic] him) all golden (gifts).

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

- "In interpreting this Ṛk there is considerable difference between Sāyaṇa's explanation and Skandasvāmin's. Sāyaṇa's explanation is: śaśvataḥ — of the eternal; vedhasaḥ — of Brahmā, the creator; kāvyā — the hymns in the form of mantras; ni kaḥ — unfailingly, he makes his own; that is, Agni turns toward himself and makes his own all the hymns that the sacrificer has offered to Brahmā the creator — such is the purport.
- Skandasvāmin's explanation: agniḥ — Agni; śaśvataḥ — of the many; vedhasaḥ — of the wise sacrificer; kāvyā — of the wise, i.e. of the intelligent (Agni) his own work, the carrying of oblations and the like; ni kaḥ — unfailingly he performs. Thus: the wise, i.e. intelligent, Agni accomplishes unfailingly his own duties such as the carrying of the sacrificer's oblations.
- Of these two explanations Skandasvāmin's appears the more consistent. For although the meaning 'producer' for the word vedhas occurs in many places, in the Ṛk Saṃhitā it is taken to mean 'producer of the fruits of the sacrifice'; no use of this epithet in reference to Brahmā the creator is seen. The word vedhas is read among the names of the intelligent (medhāvin), viprāḥ, vigraḥ, gṛtsaḥ and so on (Ni. [3-19?]); therefore vedhasaḥ means 'of the intelligent sacrificer'..." [11]

- "...And the word śaśvat is read among the many names of 'many' — uru, puru, tuvi and so on (Ni. 3-13); śaśvataḥ means 'of many sacrificers' or 'of the sacrificer's many'; and to the word kāvyāni, since Agni is a kavi — wise, of a seeing intelligence — and the carrying of oblations is his duty, it is natural to explain kāvyāni as 'the works of the kavi, duties such as the carrying of oblations'. Mainly: the wise Agni performs unfailingly the works that the sacrificer entrusts to him. This explanation seems natural to the context."
- सत्रा — "Bat, śat, satrā and so on are the six names of 'truth' (Ni. 3-13); satrā means 'truly', or sometimes 'at all times'."
- अमृतानि — "nityāni, 'imperishable', or because of the śruti sentence amṛtaṃ hiraṇyam (Ath. Saṃ. 5-28-11), 'gold' — it may mean 'golden things'. By the first meaning: amṛtāni — 'the eternal things', the havirniyanādi, i.e. viśvā, all of them: he accomplishes all his own works, such as the carrying of the oblations."
- रयीणाम् — havirlakṣaṇānāṃ sarveṣāṃ yajamānadhanānām — "of all the sacrificer's wealth in the form of oblations; rayipatiḥ — the master; or the master of all kinds of wealth."
- नर्या — naryaḥ, nṛbhyo hitaḥ, narāpatyam iti vā (Ni. 11-36) — "'good for men' or 'offspring': so the Nirukta-writer explains. Here too naryā purūṇi means exceedingly many and beneficial to the sacrificers, who are men; and gets ṇatva by aṭkupvāṅnumvyavāye 'pi; thus cakrāṇaḥ would be accomplished; but since abhyastānām ādiḥ would give an initial acute, liṭaḥ kānajvā gives the kānac-substitution for liṭ; since it is śit-less, by ārdhadhātukaṃ śeṣaḥ it receives the designation ārdhadhātuka, and the reduplicate-based initial acute does not occur; then cit, by cito 'ntodāttaḥ (Pā. All the gods and the Maruts, who are not deluded, looked for Agni — dear to us like a son and present everywhere — and did not find him (without the oblation brought by Agni). Tired, all gathered together, searching for him on foot, and bearing in mind his deeds, they finally stood, seeing (him), in the pleasing, excellent place.

> around, discovered him not; oppressed with fatigue, > the last beautiful (hiding) place of Agni.

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

- "In this Ṛk the greatness of performing the rites is described. To give an example that, however much one may hide from the greatness of the rites, the favour of Agni cannot be escaped, it is described how the gods and the experienced Maruts, after searching a long time, each carrying their own rites in mind with faith, afterwards found Agni's lovely place; thus the greatness of Agni is described."
- अस्मे — asmākam — "'of us': (Ni. 6-7) after the opening atha dvātriṃśataṃ padāni ('now the thirty-two words'), the word asme is stated among the words whose meaning is explained. It has the same form in all cases; hence it is of many meanings. In asme te bandhuḥ it ends in the first case; in asme yotaṃ nāsatyā sajoṣāḥ it shows the sense of the second case. In this way the Nirukta gives examples for the seven cases. Skandasvāmin: 'asme iti tādarthye caturthī | asmākaṃ haviḥ-niryānārtham': the word asme is the fourth case of purpose, with the sense 'for the sake of bringing our oblations'."

- वत्सं न — "the word na (Ni. 1-4) is meant as a negation; likewise na iti pratiṣedhārthīyaḥ upamārthe ca ity ubhayam api draṣṭavyam — 'the word na is to be seen as both negation and comparison' (Ni. 1-4). Vatsam iva — 'like a son': Skandasvāmin, and Sāyaṇa too, explains na vinde in the sense of negation: na labhante — 'they did not find'. Vatsavat atyantaṃ priyam — Agni is greatly beloved like a child; or, vatsa = 'son', since he is born from the araṇi afterwards through us, he is a son to us, who perform the sacrifice.

> मम्मैव सन्वह हव्यान्यग्ने । पुत्रः पित्रे लोककृज्जातवेदः ॥ mamaiva san vaha havyāny agne | putraḥ pitre lokakṛj jātavedaḥ || (Tai. Brā. 3-7-7-10)

'O Agni, creator of the world, O Jātavedas, being mine, carry my oblations, as a son [carries] to a father': this is the meaning of that mantra. As a son who does what his father says is dear to him, the name 'son' is a figurative designation — this is what is called aupacārika [figurative use]." [21]

21. Gloss editorial and tentative.

- परि षंतम् — "Sāyaṇa's sense: 'one who is hidden among the trees, such as the aśvattha, the bamboo, etc., after he went out from among the gods.' Skandasvāmin's sense: 'one who is hidden, from fear of having to carry oblations, as children (hide) so as not to be seen anywhere.'" [22]

- अमूराः — amūḍhacetasaḥ — "possessing a mind that does not fall into delusion. The word amūra is stated in the thirty-two words (Ni. 6-8). In the Ṛk mūrā amūrā na vayaṃ cikitvaḥ (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-4-4) both amūra and mūra occur as examples; and in the Nirukta they explain amūrāḥ as amūḍhāḥ, 'not bewildered', and mūrāḥ as mūḍhāḥ, 'bewildered', vayaṃ smaḥ."
- श्रमयुवः — śrameṇa yūyante iti śramayuvaḥ — "'joined with weariness': since Agni is hidden, there is none to carry the portions of the oblations of each to the gods; so, since the gods have no oblations, the gods, suffering from the fatigue so arising, were united and engaged without rest in the work of seeking Agni — such is the meaning. In the word śramayuvaḥ the root yu has the possessive sense. Skandasvāmin, in his commentary, explains śramayuvaḥ as 'possessed of weariness' like the senses of aśvayuḥ, gavyuḥ, rathayuḥ in the Ṛk (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-51-14: aśvayur gavyū rathayuḥ)."
- पदव्यः — pādena vyayanti gacchantīti padavyaḥ — "Sāyaṇa's sense: those going on foot, not mounted on a vehicle but walking on their own feet. For the word pada meaning 'the cause-soul, the resort of all the worlds':

as in this Ṛk, where it is used in the sense of the root paś ['to see'], so here too it is used in the sense of knowledge; the sense thus given by Skandasvāmin is 'those who know the cause-soul'." [23]

- धियंधाः — svasya karmaṇo dhārayitāraḥ — "holders of their own work: the explanation is 'those who do not leave off the work of determining the places for Agni's lying down, sitting and so on'."
- चारु — cārūṇi — "auspicious, excellent: the bhāṣyakāra explains cāru as an adjective of parame pade, 'the place where Agni lay hidden was an excellent place'. Skandasvāmin, explaining the intention, says that cāru is an adverb of the action: 'so that the gods may clearly know the regions where Agni lay hidden, they searched in those places'. And in parame pade the word parama gives padajñaḥ [as read]: 'knowers of the pada'. And for the word pada —" [24]

Meaning: The śucayaḥ — the purifiers, or the shining Maruts — O Agni, when for three years (tisraḥ śaradaḥ) they worshipped you, pure (śucim) and shining, with ghee, aiming at you alone, you who had gone out from the gods — then you appeared. And after that the Maruts, favoured by you, also took names (nāmāni cit dadhire) that were fit for sacrifice (yajñiyāni) — names that could be used in the sacrifice; and these names are recited in the Taittirīya: "Such, and another such, and of that kind, and corresponding, and measured, and well measured, the sabharāḥ" (Tai. Saṃ. 4-6-5-5) and the rest; with these, in the piling of the fire, the seven-potsherd offering belonging to the Maruts is offered. And having borne the names, they, well born (sujātāḥ), leaving their former form and having reached a fair immortality, asūdayanta — led to heaven — their own bodies (tanvaḥ).

Grammatical tail of the bhāṣya : tisraḥ (the feminine of tri and catur is tisṛ, catasṛ; when lengthening of the earlier similar vowel would arise, r is substituted by ci ra ṛtaḥ; the stem tri is phiṣ-accented, final acute, Phiṭ. 1-1; the substitute tisṛ, by the sthānivat rule, also has the final acute; the accusative plural ending acute agne — O Agni; śucayaḥ — the purifying (shining Maruts); śucim — the pure (shining Agni); tvām it — you alone; tisraḥ śaradaḥ — for three years; ghṛtena — with ghee; yat — when; saparyān — they worshipped; yajñiyāni — fit to be used in the sacrifice; nāmāni cit — even names; dadhire — they bore; sujātāḥ — having obtained propitious immortality; tanvaḥ — their bodies; asūdayanta — they brought to heaven.

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

O Agni! The Maruts, (themselves) pure, after doing worship (offerings and so on) with ghee for three years, directed to you, obtained names fit for sacrifice; and having obtained immortality, attained heaven.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Inasmuch, Agni, as the pure (Maruts) worshipped you (equally) pure, with clarified butter for three years, therefore they aquired [sic] names worthy (to be repeated) at sacrifices, and being regenerated, obtained celestial bodies.

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

- शुचयः — "Sāyaṇa says they are 'those who purify, or the shining Maruts'; Skandasvāmin explains śuddhātmānaḥ — 'those with a perfectly purified body and mind', sacrificers."

- शुचिम् — "pure, or Agni who is shining: the meaning is that the Maruts worshipped Agni with ghee, offering oblations. The word śuci (Ni. 6-1) is explained, in the Nirukta's derivation of the word āśukukṣaṇi [as printed], thus: śuciḥ śocater jvalatikarmaṇaḥ — 'from the root śuc "to burn", of the sense of blazing' — 'he is luminous': the word śuci, from the root śuci dīptau, shows the meaning 'bright'. Hence Agni, who is meant by the word śuci, and Agni, who is meant by the word āśuśukṣaṇi, are different: ayam api itaraḥ —" [31]

- शुचिम् (continued) — "...śucir ity asmād eva iti vaiyākaraṇāḥ manyante ('the grammarians consider it from this very [root]'): the Nirukta statement of this kind expresses this same meaning. And:

> त्वमग्ने द्युभिस्त्वमाशुशुक्षणिस्त्वमद्भ्यस्त्वमश्मनस्परि । त्वं

  In the Ṛk, the Nirukta explains that although in both words āśuśukṣaṇiḥ and śuciḥ Agni is meant, they have a distinct difference between them." [32]

- शरदः — śīryante 'syām oṣadhaya iti śarat saṃvatsaraḥ — "'the season in which the plants, ripened (fruited), fall to the ground': therefore it means 'year'. The Maruts worshipped

Agni with ghee-oblations for three years. Yāska, explaining the plural śaradaḥ of the word śarad: śaradaḥ śṛtā asyām oṣadhayo bhavanti | śīrṇā āpa iti vā (Ni. 4-26) — 'in this season the plants are ripe; or the waters are śīrṇa (diminished)'. In this season the plants wither and the waters dry; therefore it is called śarad. Showing the meaning 'year', in the sense that in this season an abundance of health from numerous diseases is hoped for, he quotes the Ṛk:

> पुनः पत्नीमग्निरदादायुषा सह वर्चसा । दीर्घायुरस्या यः पतिर्जीवाति शरदः शतम् ॥
> punaḥ patnīm agnir adād āyuṣā saha varcasā | dīrghāyur asyā yaḥ patir jīvāti śaradaḥ śatam || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-85-39)" (Gloss mine and tentative: "again Agni gave the wife, with life and splendour; her husband, long-lived, shall live a hundred autumns".)

- यज्ञियानि नामानि चित् दधिरे

— "The Maruts, having pleased Agni and become worthy of his favour, obtained names suited to praise in the sacrifice. These names too are well known in the mantras

> ईदृङ् चान्यादृङ् चैतादृङ् च प्रतिदृङ् च मितश्च संमितश्च सभराः । īdṛṅ cānyādṛṅ caitādṛṅ ca pratidṛṅ ca mitaś ca saṃmitaś ca sabharāḥ (Tai. Saṃ. 4-6-5-5)

By these mantras, in the piling of the fire (agnicayana), the oblation is offered to the Maruts in seven potsherds. These Maruts, becoming known by such names, give up their former form and, having obtained the excellent divinity, they brought their bodies to heaven…" [33]

Special Topics of Rik 72.3 (concluded)

- यज्ञियानि नामानि चित् दधिरे (concluded) — "...having given up their former forms, they obtained the best divinity, and brought their own bodies to heaven. By this it is said in this mantra, sujātāḥ tanvaḥ asūdayanta. Skandasvāmin — 'those who, for three years, satisfy Agni by offering ghee-oblations, or who, delighted with the oblation, are unable, through poverty and other faults, to [satisfy him] — both these, with devotion to Agni, and by an excellent sanctified rite (saṃskāra) which is the cause of the pleasure [of Agni], become the more sanctified; they obtain wisdom and liberation (mukti), and lordship (aiśvarya): these things are obtained by Agni's favour' — thus he explains the meaning."
- सपर्यान् — pūjāṃ cakruḥ — "they did worship: so Sāyaṇa; and paricaranti — 'they served' — so Skandasvāmin. The form saparyān is derived from the word saparyati, whose sense is 'to serve'. The word saparyati is read among the ten words meaning 'to serve' (Ni. 3-13)."

Meaning (main sense): The vevidānāḥ — the venerable gods (yajñiyāsaḥ), who made known exceedingly (vevidānāḥ) to the great heaven-and-earth (bṛhatī rodasī) — saying to one another, "Where is Agni?" — moving between heaven and earth; or:

37. Reading note: "tad agnir nārkāmayata" is doubtful — the print appears to have "tad agnir nyarkāmayata" [?]; the compressed grammatical tail ("yajaṃjāl", "luñlṛldittvāt") is doubtful [?]; the Taittirīya and Nirukta numerals as printed. The page ends mid-tail; continued on p. 350.

"having found Agni in the middle of the great heaven and earth" — such yajñiyāsaḥ rudriyāḥ gods — Rudra is Agni. When the gods were at war with the asuras, the wealth set aside by the gods was carried away by Agni; the gods came and took that wealth from Agni by force; then Agni wept (arodīt), and for that reason he is called Rudra. So the Taittirīya has: "Agni did not like that; he departed from it; the gods, having won, followed him, wishing to restrain him; they seized his wealth by force; he wept; that he wept is the Rudra-hood of Rudra" (Tai. Saṃ. 1-5-1-1). The hymns of that Rudra — Agni — they have borne (pra jabhrire, "made"). Nemadhitā: the word nema means "half"; so Yāska: "tro nema means 'half'" (Ni. 3-20); "he who is held by (receives) half of all the gods" — Indra: all the gods are one half, Indra himself the second half; so the Taittirīya: "because Indra [receives] half of all, Indra is the greatest sharer among the deities" (Tai. Saṃ. 5-4-8-3). With that Indra the mortal — the troop of Maruts — knowing (cikitvān) Agni who stood in the supreme, highest place, found him (vidat).

bṛhatī — vast; rodasī — the earth and sky; ā vevidānāḥ — making known (that Agni is there); yajñiyāsaḥ — those worthy of sacrifice (the gods); rudriyā — the mantras addressed to Agni named Rudra; pra jabhrire — they uttered; nemadhitā — together with Indra, worthy of half of the oblation-portions; martaḥ — the troop of Maruts; parame — the excellent (the final); pade — in the place (the aśvattha and the like); tasthivāṃsam — who was staying; agnim — Agni; cikitvān — knowing; vidat — they found (Agni).

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

The gods, worthy of sacrifice, searching between the vast earth and sky for Agni, praised Agni named Rudra. The gods (the Maruts), together with Indra, who is worthy of half the oblation-portions of the gods, found Agni who was in the excellent place — the aśvattha and the like.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Those who are to be worshipped, (the Gods), inquiring between the expansive heaven and earth (for Agni), recited (hymns) dedicated to Rudra; the troop of mortal (Maruts), with (Indra), the sharer of half the oblation, knowing where Agni was hiding, found him in his excellent retreat.

- रोदसी — "Since the word rodasī is read among the twenty-four names of heaven-and-earth, svadhe, purandhī and so on (Ni. [3-22?]), rodasī means 'the earth and the sky'."
- रुद्रियाः — rudrasyārhāṇi stotrāṇi — "hymns fit to praise Agni. The word rudra is a name of Agni. When the war between the gods and the asuras was going on, Agni took the wealth

- रुद्रियाः (continued) — "...took back their wealth from Agni by their own power. Then Agni wept. The word rudra is derived from the root rud aśruvimocane ('to weep'); since Agni wept, he is called Rudra, i.e. Agni. The statement of the Taittirīya beginning tad agnir nākāmayata ...so 'rodīd yad arodīt tad rudrasya rudratvam (Tai. Saṃ. 1-5-1-1) shows this sense. 'When Agni was hidden, the gods, who lacked the portions of the oblations of sacrifice, searching here and there, having clearly known that heaven and earth were great, found Agni, and, having seen him, praised him with fitting hymns' — thus Sāyaṇa explains."
- नेमधिता — "The word nema means 'half': Yāska, explaining the word nema (tro nema ity ardhasya, Ni. 3-20), says: 'Indra is well known as nemadhita since he is held by the half-portion of all the gods. All the gods are one half; Indra alone is the other half'. The statement yat sarveṣām ardham indraḥ (Tai. Saṃ. [2-5-4-3?]) shows that Indra, with half the portion of all the gods, is the one with the greatest share of oblation among the gods. This statement is the authority for Indra's being the half-sharer among the gods."
- मर्तः — "The word marta is stated among the twenty-five names of mankind (Ni. [3-2?]). Here Sāyaṇa takes marudgaṇaḥ — the troop of gods. Skandasvāmin, since rudra is stated among the thirteen names of hymns (Ni. 3-19), takes rudriyaḥ as 'hymn'. As the word marta means 'man', he qualifies the word with cikitvān: cikitvān martaḥ

— the wise man, nemadhitā (in battle), the one who is engaged in worldly life, with the excellent state of the highest (the supreme Soul-form of the position); or he worships with sacrifices, and praises, Agni in the sacrificial altar."

- आ वेविदानाः — "knowing all that is to be known: even those who are devoted to sacrifice praise Agni (perform sacrifices) and worship him with oblation-portions — so he explains."
- यज्ञियासः — yajñārhāḥ devāḥ — "the gods worthy to be worshipped by sacrifice — so Sāyaṇa; yajñasaṃpādino manuṣyāḥ — 'men who perform sacrifice' — so Skandasvāmin explains."

(agne — O Agni); saṃjānānāḥ — (knowing the place where you were) the knowing (gods); upa sīdan — they came near (to you); namasyam — worthy of homage (you); patnīvantaḥ — together with their wives; abhijñu — having the knees set before; namasyan — they bowed (worshipped); sakhyuḥ — of you, friend; nimiṣi — at the sight; rakṣamāṇāḥ — (by you) protected; sakhā — the friends (gods); svāḥ tanvaḥ — their own bodies; ririkvāṃsaḥ — those who dried up the body by fasting and the like; kṛṇvata — (sacrifices) they performed.

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

O Agni! The gods, who knew the place where you were, came near together with their wives and, with knees on the ground, bowed to you. Thinking themselves protected by the mere sight of you, their friend, and bound by consecration, fasting and the like, they undertook the sacrifices related to you.

original p. 355

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> The Gods, discovering you, sat down, and with their wives paid reverential adoration to you upon their knees. Secure on beholding their friend, of being protected, your friends, the Gods, abandoned the rest of their bodies in sacrifice.

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

- "The use of this Ṛk beginning saṃjānānā in the Gharma-praise is explained in the Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra, section athottaram, by the sūtra saṃjānānā upa sīdann abhijñvā daśabhir vivasvataḥ (Ā. 4-7)."
- संजानानाः — "Sāyaṇa explains it as 'the gods who know the matter of Agni well', Skandasvāmin as 'men'. Sāyaṇa, who takes all the words beginning with the first as epithets of the gods, quoting the śruti devā vai yajñam atanvata (Ai.

Brā. 2-11) as authority, explains that the gods, together with their wives, with discipline, emaciating their bodies by fasting and other rules, worshipped with sacrifices Agni, who is worthy of homage and turned toward them; and were protected by Agni.

- Skandasvāmin, taking all these epithets with reference to men, has the same sense, yet explains the words tanvaḥ kṛṇvata svāḥ differently. Kṛṇvata is formed from the root ḍukṛñ karaṇe; here it is used in the sense 'to refine (saṃskāra)' with the prefix sam [saṃ-kṛ, "to sanctify"]. By this he says: the sacrificers, who with their wives worship Agni with sacrifices, are protected by Agni, who is worthy of homage and who is favourable, and are sanctified by knowledge, lordship (aiśvarya) and the like."
- अभिज्ञु — abhigate jānunī yasmin upasadane abhijñu — "'that sitting in which the knees go forward'; bhūmau jānunī nipātya upasīdanti — 'they sit, with their knees put down on the ground'. The word abhijñu, when worshipping Agni, is used as an adverb: they sit with the knees on the ground and worship Agni. Even in rites performed with faith, kneeling is seen to be customary."

Meaning: Triḥ sapta — twenty-one secret (guhyāni) things, to be fully comprehended only by the Veda, which are the "steps" (padā). By the derivation "padyate gamyate svarga ebhiḥ" ["by which heaven is reached"], the word pada here means the sacrifices; and these number twenty-one: seven pāka-sacrifices — the aupāsana homa, vaiśvadeva and the rest; seven havis-sacrifices — the agnyādheya, darśapūrṇamāsa and the rest; seven soma-sacrifices — agniṣṭoma, atyagniṣṭoma and the rest. These twenty-one "steps" (padāni) with the mark of sacrifice are placed (nihitā), O Agni, in you alone (tve it): for in all of them you are the chief; without Agni the rites cannot be done at all. The yajñiyāsaḥ — those worthy of sacrifice, that is, endowed with the causes of qualification — wish, ability and learning: "The one who is qualified for a rite is the one who desires it, is able, learned, and not excluded by the scripture." Such sacrificers found these steps; and having found them, with these steps marked as sacrifices, they protect (worship) you, the immortal (amṛtam), "one whose nature is not to die [with the mortals]". Do you, equally pleased (sajoṣāḥ) with the sacrificers, protect the cattle — cows, horses and the like — and the stationary (sthātṝn, rice and the like), and the moving (caratham), i.e. whatever kind of living being apart from cattle there may be: for when these are protected, your sacrifices can be performed, not otherwise — therefore you are so addressed.

51. Reading note: the bhāṣya's enumeration — three sevens of sacrifices (twenty-one), of the pāka, havis and soma classes — is read clearly; "padā padāni" and "svarga ebhiḥ" (the derivation of pada as "that by which one goes to heaven") as printed; "tvadīyo yāgāḥ" as printed.

Grammatical tail of the bhāṣya : yat (the case-ending lost by supāṃ sulug…); guhyāni ("born in a cave", yat in the sense bhave chandasi; initial acute by yato 'nāvaḥ); tve (the locative ending replaced by śe by supāṃ sulug…); avidan (root vidḷ lābhe; aṅ in the luṅ since the root is ḷdit); paśūn, sthātṝn (the n before ca: by the sūtra [Pā. 8-3-8], which gives both options, ru does not come for the n).

yajñiyāsaḥ — those competent to perform sacrifice (the qualified); triḥ sapta — twenty-one in number (the agnyādheya and the rest); guhyāni — mystic (what may be known only through the Veda); yat — which; padā — the "steps", sacrifices (those); tve it — in you alone; nihitā — placed (those to be practised); avidan — they knew; tebhiḥ — by those sacrifices; amṛtam — the immortal (you); rakṣante — they protect (worship); sajoṣāḥ — (you) of equal affection; paśūn — cattle and the like; sthātṝn ca — and the stationary rice and the like; caratham ca — and the moving other beings; pāhi — protect.

The qualified who are competent to sacrifice, knowing the mystic twenty-one sacrifices beginning with the agnyādheya as things to be practised in you alone, worship you, the immortal, with those sacrifices. In the same way, you, with equal affection, protect their cattle, rice and other grains, and the other beings (since these are the means of the sacrifices).

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> (Devout men), competent to offer sacrifices, have known the thrice seven mystic rites comprised in you, and with them, worshipped you. do you, therefore, with like affection, protect their cattle, and all that (belongs to them), moveable or stationary.

— so the scripture too, discriminating among the qualified for sacrifice, has said. Following this order, the sacrificers know Agni's twenty-one kinds of sacrifice-form places — that is, the twenty-one sacrificial rites; and in this order they become fit for Agni's favour."

- सजोषाः स्थात्र्… चरथं च पाहि — "The sacrificers who perform the sacrifice have toward Agni a corresponding affection; Agni, who has a [corresponding] affection toward the sacrificers, is spoken of by the word sajoṣāḥ. - The order [of explanation] given in Skandasvāmin's commentary: त्रिः सप्त यद् गुह्यानि पदानि — "Here he tells a story (itihāsa): The gods had hidden the twenty-one metres in Agni, in secret. The Aṅgirasa sages, worshipping Agni, learned them by Agni's favour. This story is suggested here by this mantra. The seven metres are gāyatrī, uṣṇik, anuṣṭubh, bṛhatī, paṅkti, triṣṭubh and jagatī. Of these, four metres are excellent. Each of these metres is of three kinds — brāhma, daiva and ārṣa — or of three other kinds, pūrṇa ('full'), nyūna ('deficient') and adhika ('excessive'), which makes twenty-one varieties. 'Full' means filled with syllables in accordance with the measure of the metre in question; those with fewer syllables are 'deficient'; those with more syllables than the measure of the metre are 'excessive'. When the metre gāyatrī and the others are lacking by one syllable or two, the name is nicṛt gāyatrī (lacking one) and virāṭ gāyatrī (lacking two); likewise, when a syllable is in excess, bhurik gāyatrī; when two syllables are in excess, svarāṭ gāyatrī. Although the gāyatrī metre has these other names of lesser or greater syllables — nicṛt, virāṭ, bhurik, svarāṭ — the well-known name gāyatra [gāyatrī] itself does not go —" [52]

This is what is said in this mantra as triḥ sapta padāni. यज्ञियासः — the Aṅgirasa sages, who are qualified to offer sacrifice, by the power of their knowledge, understood Agni's qualities through the qualities of these metres, in which the gods had hidden themselves in Agni. Having thoroughly known Agni's greatness, they protected him, who is a deity — that is, if they had not praised Agni with the mantras of the various metres, Agni's qualities would be forgotten and they would be lost; therefore, to make Agni's qualities well known, the actions of the Aṅgirasa sages are figuratively called Agni's protection. Meaning: O Agni, vayunāni — a name for knowledge; here it is in the sense "things to be known". Knowing all that is to be known, you, for the living (jīvase, "to live") of the beings (kṣitīnām) — the people who are sacrificers — arrange (vi dhāḥ) the food, the śurudhaḥ — "that which stops grief" [the grief of hunger] — continuously (ānuṣak). Having so made the sacrificers rich in food, you became (abhavaḥ) the oblation-bearer (havirvāṭ), the messenger of the gods, carrying the oblation which they have given to the gods. How are you? Knowing among (antarvidvān) heaven and earth — what? — the paths (adhvanaḥ) — which? — those on which the gods go (devayānān) — and unwearied (atandraḥ), not slothful even in the carrying of the oblations.

Grammatical tail of the bhāṣya : vayunāni (root aja gatikṣepaṇayoḥ; the affix una after the object by ajiyamiśīj̈bhyaś ca, Uṇ. 3-61; vī-substitution for aj by ajer vy aghañapoḥ, Pā. 2-4-56); kṣitīnām (kṣiyanti "those who dwell" — men; ktic in the agent sense in a name (kticktau ca saṃjñāyām); after kti, which is end-acute and ends in a short vowel, the nām ending acute by nāmany atarasyām); śurudhaḥ ("they stop grief", śuc + rudh; kvip; loss of the last of the first member; pṛṣodarādi).

agne — O Agni; vayunāni — all that is to be known; vidvān — (you) knowing; kṣitīnām — (the sacrificers') offspring; jīvase — to hold life; śurudhaḥ — (the foods) that dispel the pain of hunger; ānuṣak — continuously; vi dhāḥ — do; devayānān — the paths on which the gods travel; adhvanaḥ — the roads; antarvidvān — knowing between earth and sky; atandraḥ — (in carrying the oblations) not idle; havirvāṭ — bearing the oblations (given by the offspring); dūtaḥ — a messenger; abhavaḥ — be (become).

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

O all-knowing Agni! For the removal of the hunger of the offspring of the sacrificers, give food continuously. Then, knowing the path along which the gods travel between earth and sky, always awake in carrying the oblations to the gods, become a messenger who carries to the gods the oblations given by those people.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Agni, you are cognizant of all things to be known, ever provide for the subsistence of men, grief-alleviating (food); so shall you be the diligent bearer of oblations, and messenger of the Gods, knowing the paths between (earth and heaven), by which they travel.

by it, makes the rain; the smṛti on this point was cited earlier. Hence it is said that Agni, through the rain, makes the rivers. Likewise, the Aṅgirases, ṛtajñāḥ — knowing ṛta, the sacrifice — did not know (ajānan) the doors (duraḥ) — the paths of going — to the wealth (rāyaḥ) in the form of cows, carried off by the asura named Vala; they came to know through you. Pleased with the sacrifice (yāga) that was accomplished through you, Indra sent the divine dog Saramā to search for the cows; Saramā, having found the place of the cows, told Indra; and Indra caused the Aṅgirases to obtain the cows. So all this you alone did. From the Aṅgirases' side, gavyam — coming from the cow — dṛḷham — thick, abundant — such food (ūrvam) in the form of milk — Saramā, the divine dog, found: vidat — got. The particle kim (nu kam) is a verse-filler; the mānuṣī viṭ — the people belonging to Manu — bhojate — now enjoy that same cow-produce (gavyam), by which; and that too is made, through the succession, by Agni alone.

Grammatical tail of the bhāṣya : svādhyaḥ (from dhī with the prefixes su and āṅ; the yaṇ-substitution before jas by eranekācaḥ…); yahvīḥ (the lengthening of the earlier similar vowel by vā chandasi); gavyam (yat in the abstract sense, by "yat is to be said wherever gor + aj-initial affixes would be expected"); ūrvam (root urvī hiṃsārthaḥ: "that which kills hunger"; pacādy ac); bhojate (root bhuja pālanābhyavahārayoḥ; śap by vyatyaya in place of the expected śnam).

O Agni! It is through you that the seven great rivers, Gaṅgā and the rest, come from heaven and flow in the world of earth. It is through you that the Aṅgirases, who knew sacrifice, learned the way of the cows (carried off by Vala). It is through you that the divine dog Saramā obtained the cow-milk. And it is through you that even now the people obtain cow-milk and are nourished.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> The seven pure rivers that flow from heaven (are directed, Agni, by you; the priests), skilled in sacrifices, knew the doors of the (cave where) the treasure, (their cattle), were concealed; for you Sarama discovered the abundant milk of the cows with which man, the progeny of Manu still is nourished.

- यह्वीः — avanayaḥ, yahvyaḥ — "since this word, in the thirty-seven names of rivers (Ni. 2-24 [as printed]), is read as a river name, it means 'rivers'. And since mahat, bṛdhnaḥ and so on are read among the twenty-five names of the great (Ni. 3-13), it also means 'great ones'. In explaining this Ṛk Sāyaṇa has made two sentences, and has explained them as if they had no mutual connection; with this he shows the exceeding power of Agni. By the first half of the Ṛk it is shown that Agni makes the seven great rivers, Gaṅgā and the rest, flow in the world of heaven as well as on the earth. The offerings that those who sacrifice present in Agni…" [61]

(continued) — "…reach the sun; from the sun rain arises; from that, food; from that, the people (offspring) are born. This matter is clarified by the smṛti text:

[Gloss editorial and tentative: "the offering well cast into the fire reaches the sun; from the sun rain is born; from rain, food; from that, creatures".] In this way, for the growth of the world, for the rain, and for the flow of the rivers, Agni is the chief cause."

- ऋतज्ञाः — रायः — दुरः — अजानन् — "The word ṛtajña, as in the Ṛk is used for the pitṛs (Ni. 11-19); and ṛta is read among the hundred and one names of water (Ni. 2-24 [as printed]):

> न यातव इन्द्र जूजुवुर्नो न वन्दना शविष्ठ वेद्याभिः । स शर्धदर्यो विषुणस्य जन्तोर्मा शिश्नदेवा अपि गुर्ऋतं नः ॥ na yātava indra jūjuvur no na vandanā śaviṣṭha vedyābhiḥ | sa śardhad aryo viṣuṇasya jantor mā śiśnadevā api gur ṛtaṃ naḥ (Ṛk. Saṃ. 5-3-3-5, as printed in Aṣṭaka–Adhyāya–Varga–Ṛk form)

In this Ṛk, to the word ṛta the meaning 'satyaṃ vā yajñaṃ vā' — 'truth, or sacrifice' (Ni. 4-19) — is given. By the word ṛtajña is meant 'those who know truth' or 'those who know sacrifice'."

- रायः — "The word rāyaḥ gives the meaning of 'wealth'.

By this Ṛk it is shown (Ni. 3-3) that the word rai denotes wealth. And:

> ईशिरेण ते मनसा सुतस्य भक्षीमहि पित्र्यस्येव रायः । सोम राजन् प्र ण आयूंषि तारीरहानीव सूर्यो वासराणि ॥ īśireṇa te manasā sutasya bhakṣīmahi pitryasyeva rāyaḥ | soma rājan pra ṇa āyūṃṣi tārīr ahānīva sūryo vāsarāṇi (Ṛk. Saṃ. 6-4-12-2, as printed in Aṣṭaka form)

In this Ṛk too the Nirukta cites rāyaḥ as meaning wealth (Ni. 4-7). The Aṅgirasa sages, knowing truth and sacrifice, when the wealth in the form of cows was carried off by the asura called Vala —" [62] [63]

- रायः (continued from p. 369) — "...the Aṅgirasa sages, to get the cows back from that asura, devised means by Agni's favour; they performed sacrifices with Indra in view. Then Indra sent the divine dog named Saramā to find the dwelling-place where the asura Vala was. Saramā found the place where the cows of the Aṅgirasa sages were, and told it. Indra overcame Vala and gave back to them all the wealth of the Aṅgirasa sages. Pleased by this, the sages gave Saramā milk, curds and other things in large quantities and satisfied her."
- दृळ्हम् — "It is used in the sense of dṛḍha ('firm'). Such a usage is seen only in the Veda.

  > ऊर्व इव पप्रथे कामो अस्मे तमा पृण वसुपते वसूनाम् । ūrva iva paprathe kāmo asme tam ā pṛṇa vasupate vasūnām (Ṛk. Saṃ. 3-30-19)

63. Glosses editorial and tentative: "may the lower, the higher, the middle fathers arise, the Soma-drinkers; those who have gone to life, kind and knowing ṛta — may those fathers help us in our invocations"; "may we be lords of the wealth, ever-lasting, of the stranger"; "may we partake of the pressed [Soma] with a ready mind as of ancestral wealth; O King Soma, prolong our lives as the sun the days". The second of these Ṛks (printed 5-3-3-5) is not glossed; the source leaves these citations untranslated.

In the sentence of this Ṛk the word ūrva is a name of Agni (Ni. 6-7). Sāyaṇa has explained the meaning of the word ūrvam as 'food in the form of milk and other things arising from the cow': ūrvati kṣudhaṃ hinasti iti ūrvam annam — 'that which destroys hunger'. Skandasvāmin has > यन्तारो ये मघवानो जनानामूर्वान्दयन्त गोनाम् । yantāro ye maghavāno janānām ūrvān dayanta gonām (Ṛk. Saṃ. 7-16-7)

> ते एतमूर्वं वि भजन्त गोनामथैतद्वचः पणयो वमन्नित् । te etam ūrvaṃ vi bhajanta gonām athaitad vacaḥ paṇayo vamann it (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-108-8)

In these Ṛks, since the word ūrva is used in the sense 'group', he connects it with gavyam — gavyam ūrvam means 'the group of cows'; and he also accepts that there are two sentences in this Ṛk, explaining it as pertaining to the Aṅgirasa sages and to the divine cows. The Aṅgirasa sages, of auspicious mind (svādhyaḥ), divaḥ ā sapta yahvīḥ — knew by Agni's favour the seven worlds beginning with heaven, the means of obtaining wealth, and the sacrifices. While living they performed sacrifices and obtained wealth; being men of knowledge, they enjoyed happiness and, after death, reached the seven worlds beginning with heaven. And men in the human world enjoy the happiness that arises from cows either by the favour of the divine cows, or because the divine cows, being kāmadhenus, are the cause of the cows of this world — so he explains." Pratipadārtha of Rik 72.9 (concluded from p. 373; Kannada): …svapatyāni — the auspicious (rites) …that do not let [them] fall (the caturdaśarātra and the rest, and the like) — rites; ā tasthuḥ — they performed; taiḥ — by such; mahadbhiḥ — (through the performance of sacrifice) great, to be venerated; putraiḥ — with sons (endowed); mātā — the mother; aditiḥ — the poor-not [i.e. "undiminished"; Aditi]; pṛthivī — the Earth; dhāyase — for the support of the world; mahnā — by her own greatness; vi tasthe — stands specially; veḥ — you (Agni) ate (the puroḍāśa and the rest given by the Ādityas; by that, knowing all).

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

The Ādityas, desiring immortality, performed, in order not to fall from their [positions], the auspicious sacrifices, offered you the puroḍāśa and the rest, and thereby obtained greatness. Such a mother — the Earth, not diminished, joined with great sons — stands for the support of the world.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed): [69]

> you have been fed, (Agni, with oblations), ever since the Aditya's, devising a road to immortality, instituted all (the sacred rites) that secured them from falling, and mother earth, Aditi, strove with her magnitude to uphold (the world), along with her mighty sons.

69. The initial "you" is printed in lower case, and the Sanskrit "mighty sons" are the mahadbhiḥ putraiḥ; the order of clauses in the source's English is as printed [sic].

Because of the rain, dharma arises; and by the practice of dharma, the gods do good to men. All this is the result of Agni's accepting the oblations that the Aṅgirasa sages offer and obtaining satisfaction — so he explains."

(The sacrificers) arrange in Agni the ornaments such as strewing and sprinkling, and offer the two ājyabhāga oblations, which are the two eyes of the sacrifice. Then the gods, knowing that it is the time of the offering, come. The flames that rise from Agni, like rivers, go in the various directions as bright flames. Seeing them, the gods rejoice greatly.

- अक्षी — "In the sacrifice, when oblations are offered, the ājyabhāgas are first offered. These are called by the word cakṣuṣī ('the two eyes') — a usage of the sacrificers. The śruti cakṣuṣī vā ete yajñasya yad ājyabhāgau (Tai. Saṃ. 2-6-2-1) clarifies the meaning 'eyes'. That is exactly what Sāyaṇa has explained here as the meaning of the word akṣī. On this matter the Taittirīya śruti:

Thus explained: as for the ājyabhāga, in the sacrifice, [oblations] made to the chief deities — first, after the preparation of the fire and the rest, one oblation, with ājya (melted butter), to Agni, and one to Soma. These two oblations are called ājyabhāga, and they are said to be the two eyes of the sacrifice. The sacrificer, sitting facing east, offers one oblation to Agni, saying agnaye svāhā, in the northern half of the fire before him; then in the southern half of Agni, one to Soma, somāya svāhā. In the middle of these two places of oblation in the fire, the offering with the appropriate mantras to the principal deities designated in the sacrifice is prescribed by the scripture. By offering to Agni, the attainment of the world of the gods, and by offering to Soma, the attainment of the world of the fathers, come to the sacrificer, it is said. Since these deities, Agni and Soma, are called the best of the gods and the kings of the gods, the offering must be made to these deities for the attainment of the worlds of gods and fathers. After offering to them, the others are to be offered to in the middle region of Agni — such is the intention."

79. My gloss, tentative: "the two ājyabhāgas are the eyes of the sacrifice; when he offers the ājyabhāgas he sets the eyes of the sacrifice in place; he offers in the front half, therefore the eyes are in the front half; he offers evenly, therefore the eyes are level; by Agni the sacrificer looks to the world of the gods, by Soma to the world of the fathers; he offers to Agni in the northern half, to Soma in the southern; thus, as it were, for the sight of these two worlds; Agni and Soma are the two kings of the gods; the deities are worshipped between them for the support of the deities; therefore men are supported by a king".

After Agni's ājyabhāga oblation is made, the pure flames produced from Agni light up all the directions, like swiftly flowing rivers; the gods who have come for the sacrifice know with delight that these flames of Agni have arisen for the oblation that is going on for their joy."
- Skandasvāmin — "ahorātre vibhāgārthaṃ yad daiva sūryācandramasau devau uda pīpadan tad daiva tvām agniṃ dīptimantam akārṣuḥ [as printed]. The word akṣī in the dual denotes the two things distinguished by the number 'two', and being a word for 'eyes', it means the sun and the moon, which make light. When the gods, to show the distinction between days and nights in the world, made the sun and the moon into eyes giving light, [at that time] they likewise made the flames in Agni shine with a radiance more excellent than before. O Agni, the oblations offered in you by the sacrificers go downward, like rivers flowing toward their own places, in the form of rain for the benefit of the world; and, knowing that such a lustre belongs to Agni, the wise know you — to bring out that sense, he connects the words: 'O Agni, in you indeed … from that time the wise also began to know you'."

Meaning: Agni who is like wealth got from the father (pitṛvittaḥ rayiḥ na) is the giver of food (vayodhāḥ): as ancestral wealth, used with confidence, yields good food, so Agni, dealt with in confidence in all sacrifices, gives food. Supraṇītiḥ — easily led: as the instruction (śāsuḥ) of a learned man (cikituṣaḥ) who knows the law-books is taken in all matters to be performed to settle this or that doubt, so Agni is led forward in all sacrifices. And he who lies in the comfortable place such as the gārhapatya hearth (syonaśīḥ), like a guest (atithiḥ na) seated comfortably and honoured with water for the arghya and the feet, being gratified (prīṇānaḥ) with oblations — that Agni brings increase (vi tārīt) to the house (sadma) of the sacrificer who serves (vidhataḥ). The illustration: like the hotṛ (hoteva) — as the priest who performs the offering, the adhvaryu, by doing this or that rite, makes the sacrificer's house prosper with fruits.

Grammatical tail of the bhāṣya [8]: pitṛvittaḥ (root vidḷ lābhe; niṣṭhā in the passive; iṭ-prohibition; vitta by nipāta); vayodhāḥ (root dudhāñ; vic after ā-final); supraṇītiḥ (ktin in the passive; accent by tāḍau ca niti; the gati keeps its natural accent); cikituṣaḥ (kvasu for liṭ; samprasāraṇa before the genitive ending; ṣatva); śāsuḥ (root śāsu anuśiṣṭau; the u affix of the śvasvasi… sūtra [Uṇ.] to be seen here by the bahula statement; initial acute since nit).

Reading note: the print is small; the passage "vibhāṣā gamahanavidaviśām … ity uktaṃ | kā. 7-2-68" was re-read from the print (the earlier "labdhārtha eva" was a misreading); the numerals Kā. 7-2-68 and Pā. 8-2-58 are printed. The page ends mid-tail at "syona…", continued on p. 384. The main sense ends at "…tadvat"; the tail, from "pitṛvittaḥ", is characterized below.

pitṛvittaḥ — obtained from the father; rayiḥ na — like wealth; yaḥ — which Agni; vayodhāḥ — giving food; cikituṣaḥ — the learned (knower of the law-books); śāsuḥ na — like the instruction; supraṇītiḥ — one who is to be followed easily; yaśca — he who; atithiḥ na — like a guest (honoured); syonaśīḥ — he who lies in comfort (in the gārhapatya hearth); prīṇānaḥ — Agni, who is honoured with oblations and the like; vidhataḥ — of the sacrificer who serves; sadma — the house; hoteva — like a hotṛ; vi tārīt — makes prosper.

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

Like wealth obtained from the father; like the instruction of one learned in the law-books, giving food to all; like a guest lying (at the gārhapatya hearth), Agni, honoured with oblations and the like, makes the sacrificer's house prosper, as a hotṛ does (as he seeks the sacrificer's prosperity through the hymns).

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

9. characterized: "syona is a name for "comfort"; "he who lies in the place such as the gārhapatya that gives comfort" is syonaśīḥ, kvip; prīṇānaḥ — root prīñ "to gratify", śānac in the passive with śnā by vyatyaya; vidhataḥ — root vidha "to arrange": "vidhati is a verb of service" say the Nairuktas; śa as it is Tudādi; the ending acute by śatur anumo…".

> Agni, like patrimonial wealth, is the giver of food; he is a director like the instructions of one learned in scripture; he rests in the sacrificial chamber like a welcome guest, and like an officiating priest, he brings prosperity on the house of the worshipper.

As the wealth acquired by a father, growing in the dealings of the world, gives satisfaction to the son as food, so Agni, in the sacrifice —" [11]

- रयिर्न पितृवित्तः वयोधाः

  (concluded) — "...as a father's acquired wealth gives the son food, so Agni makes the sacrificers' food pleasant — Agni, who accepts the oblation-portions offered in the sacrifices that the sacrificers perform, produces food that gives joy."

- चिकितुषो न सुप्रणीतिः — praṇītiḥ kāryeṣu upadeśaḥ | supraṇītiḥ — sukhena kāryeṣu upadeśaḥ (Skandasvāmin's commentary); sukhena praṇetavyaḥ (Sāyaṇa's) — "Skandasvāmin explains supraṇīti as 'performing or carrying out works without exertion'. Agni is fit to be propitiated at ease, in accord with the permission of those who know the order of carrying out the rites."

- स्योनशीरतिथिर्न प्रीणानः — syonam iti sukhanāma | syone sukhakare gārhapatyādisthāne śete iti syonaśīḥ — "Syona is a name of 'comfort'; since śaṃbātā, śatarā and the like are read among the twenty names of comfort (Ni. 3-13 [as printed]), the word syona means comfort. Sāyaṇa explains this epithet of Agni as 'one seated comfortably in a place of the sacrificial altar designated as the comfort-giving gārhapatya'. Skandasvāmin: since the śī in syonaśīḥ is a form of the root śīṅ, 'the root śīṅ here denotes place', designating a location: in the Ṛk

> तासामहिः पत्सुतःशीर्बभूव tāsām ahiḥ patsutaḥśīr babhūva (Ṛk. Veda 1-32-8; gloss mine and tentative: "of them Ahi lay at their feet") with the causative sense included, it means 'one who causes comfort by placing' — the one who makes comfort. As a guest, seated on a comfortable seat and honoured with arghya, water for the feet and the like, is gratified and becomes pleasant, so Agni, seated comfortably in the altar such as the gārhapatya, receives worship and oblation-portions from the sacrificers and, being satisfied, grants the pleasures desired." [12]

- होतेव सद्म विधतो वि तारीत् — homakartā adhvaryuḥ — "'the adhvaryu, the priest who performs the offering': this is the sense of hotṛ here. As the adhvaryu offers the oblation-portions in Agni at the proper times for the sacrifice and causes the household of the sacrificer to increase, so Agni, gratified, increases the sacrificer's house."

Meaning: Agni, who like the shining (devaḥ) Savitṛ, the Sun, who impels everyone, is satyamanmā — of true knowledge, seeing things as they are — protects (ni pāti) from all the battles (viśvā vṛjanāni, by a change of case-ending) by his own work (kratvā): vṛjana is "that in which beings are shunned or injured" — a battle. And praised by many (purupraśastaḥ) — praised by many sacrificers — Agni is amatir na: amati is a name of "form" — like form, true (satyaḥ), free from obstruction: "that which is formed is rūpa, the own form" — as the own form of the earth and the rest remains always of one form, even though its particulars come and go, so Agni himself alone pervades all the high and low rites. He is śevaḥ — the giver of comfort. The illustration: ātmeva

17. Reading note: the print is clear but small; "vibhaktivyatyayaḥ", "rūpyate", "āgamāpāyiṣu" confirmed; numerals Tai. Saṃ. 1-5-2-1, Pā. 6-2-147, Uṇ. 3-97 as printed. The bhāṣya's tail begins at "satyamanmā" and is characterized below.

— as the Self (ātman), whose nature is unsurpassed bliss, being the object of the highest love, gladdens all; other beings live on a particle of this same bliss, and "he gives bliss" (Br. Up. / Tai. Up.), so Agni too gladdens as the cause of heaven and other fruits. Such an Agni didhiṣāyyaḥ bhūt — is to be sustained (held) by all sacrificers; for in abandoning him there is the fault of killing a hero: so the Taittirīya says, "He who sends away Agni is the slayer of the heroes of the gods" (Tai. Saṃ. 1-5-2-1).

Grammatical tail of the bhāṣya : satyamanmā (manma "thought", root mana jñāne, manin by anyebhyo 'pi dṛśyante; bahuvrīhi accent); vṛjanāni (root vṛjī varjane; kyap); puruprāśastaḥ (the first member's accent expected by tṛtīyā karmaṇi is set aside by pravṛddhādīnāṃ ca, giving the final acute of the second member; "it is an ākṛtigaṇa"); amatiḥ (root ama gatyādiṣu; ati by Uṇ.); didhiṣāyyaḥ (root dhā; ending in sāyya, derived by nipāta, Uṇ. 3-97).

Agni — like the shining Sun, a seer of things as they are, protecting by his own works (the doers of sacrifice) in all battles, praised by many — free from obstruction like form, comfort-giving like the Self, is established in every house (at all times).

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> He who is like the divine Sun, who knows the truth (of things) preserves by his actions (his votaries) in all encounters; like nature, he is unchangeable, and like soul, is the source of happiness: he is ever to be cherished.

Here vṛjinam is a name of strength, but here, because it is to be avoided, vṛjinaṃ pāpam ucyate — "vṛjina is called 'sin'": 'all sins'. The word vṛjana shows elsewhere the sense 'strength'. Here the sense 'fit to be abandoned' is meant; since this is intended, it means 'sin; from all sins' — the sense (Skandasvāmin's commentary): Agni, from battles in which calamities arise — which are to be avoided — protects the sacrificers, doing acts by which they are protected and guarded; Skandasvāmin says 'he protects from all injuries'." In the same way, in the state of never suffering any deficiency — so Sāyaṇa explains. Skandasvāmin says Agni is called amati because he is possessed of knowledge about the Self; or, since the root ama has the senses of motion and the like, amati means 'one who has the nature of the moving Āditya', and true like him." Meaning: Agni, who like the shining sun is viśvadhāyāḥ — the supporter of the whole world: as the sun upholds the whole world by giving rain and the rest, so Agni upholds the whole world by being the means of sacrifice — that Agni dwells (upakṣeti) on the earth, dear to all, in the sacrificial house and elsewhere. The illustration: hitamitro na rājā — as a king whose friends are well-disposed lives in comfort; as a king, friend of all, so Agni is friend of all: no one hates Agni. The men who sit before (puraḥsadaḥ) Agni stay like heroic sons (śarmasado na vīrāḥ) living in the father's house; as a father looks on his sons, Agni looks on his own servants. This Agni is exceedingly pure and fit for rites. The illustration: anavadyā — blameless, like a woman (nārī) cherished (patijuṣṭā iva) and accepted by her husband: as she, pure by wifely devotion, is fit for all rites, so Agni.

Grammatical tail : viśvadhāyāḥ (asun after dhā; yuk; initial acute…); upakṣeti (root kṣi nivāsagatyoḥ; loss of the vikaraṇa by bahulaṃ chandasi); anavadyā (accent of the second member by nañsubhyām); patijuṣṭā iva (accent of the first member by tṛtīyā karmaṇi); nārī (nṛnarayor vṛddhiś ca, Pā. 4-1-73; read in the śārṅgaravādi class; so the ī-final has the initial acute).

Agni, the supporter of all the world like the Sun, established like a king with friendly friends in the sacrificial halls of this earth, protects all those near him as a father protects the sons who live in his shelter; and, blameless, like a woman accepted by her husband, he is pure and fit for rites.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> He, who, like the divine (Sun,) is the supporter of the universe, abides on earth like a prince, (sorrounded [sic] by) faithful friends; in his presence, men sit down like sons in the dwelling of a parent, and (in purity he resembles) an irreproachable and beloved wife.

rājā pṛthivīm upakṣeti, which carries the figure of simile, is also said as a comparison: a king has friends who do what is agreeable to him; Agni does good to the world. The king lives in comfort, the object of the love of all the people; Agni too, like this king, being an object of the love of all the people, lives comfortably on the sacrificial altar; hence hitamitratva ('having friendly friends'), and the quality of being dear to all people, in him and in the king, are alike. These two sentences stand to each other in the manner of illustration; as are the two sentences below, each carrying the figure of simile."

- पुरःसदः शर्मसदो न वीराः — "Puraḥ — in front; sadaḥ — those who sit. Those who sit in front of Agni sit with pleasure and joy; the sense of 'seated with pleasure' is in the word śarmasadaḥ. Sāyaṇa and Skandasvāmin have each given different meanings for the sentence vīrā iva śarmasadaḥ. Agni protects those who are in front of him as a father protects his children. Therefore, as the children in the father's house are śarmasadaḥ, 'seated happily', the affection that Agni has for those who serve him is shown; this affection is like that of a father for his own children — so the purport (Sā. Bhā.).

  Purassadaḥ — senāyāḥ agrato vyavasthātāraḥ — 'those who are stationed at the front of the army'. Śarma — battle, sacrifice, happiness; tadarthaṃ sīdantīti śarmasadaḥ; yathā ca śarmasado purassado na vīrāḥ śatrūn abhibhavitāraḥ tadvad abhibhavatīty arthaḥ — 'as the heroes who stay in front, ready to enjoy the happiness that results from the sacrifice of battle, overcome their enemies, so Agni, enjoying the happiness that results from sacrifice, produces the same for those who sacrifice, and overcomes the enemies; and he causes them to be overcome' — thus Skandasvāmin explains."

- अनवद्या पतिजुष्टेव नारी — "Patijuṣṭā patisevitā — 'she who is accompanied by a husband; wifely devotion and purity': in the same way, Agni is pure, so Sāyaṇa's explanation. Anavadyā — rūpavatī; bhartṛsevitā nārī śobhate nityaprītiyuktā vā tadvat śobhate nityaprītiyukto vā — 'a woman possessed of beauty, who, serving her husband and so being the object of his love, shines with lustre; so Agni too shines, endowed with beauty, endowed with the quality of constant affection' — so Skandasvāmin explains."

Meaning: O Agni, you, endowed with the qualities spoken of, the leaders of the sacrifice (naraḥ) — the sacrificers — in the firm (dhruvāsu) lands — immovable lands, in villages free from calamity — in their own (dame) sacrificial house, constantly (nityam) kindled (iddham) — ever lit with fuel — approach (ā sacanta) face to face. And in this Agni they have placed (adhi ni dadhuḥ) much (bhūri) food (dyumnam) in the form of oblation — of many kinds, as caru, puroḍāśa and the rest. Such a Agni — you, viśvāyuḥ (eater of all food, in the way said) — become the supporter (dharuṇaḥ) of wealth: that is, hold wealth to give to us.

Grammatical tail : sacante (root ṣaca samavāye; Vedic laṅ in the present sense; no aḍ by bahulaṃ chandasy amāṅyoge 'pi); bhava (the final vowel lengthened in saṃhitā); dharuṇaḥ (root dhṛ; the ana-affix with ṇi-loss).

agne — O Agni; tam tvā — you (endowed with the qualities spoken of); naraḥ — the men (leaders of the sacrifice); dhruvāsu kṣitiṣu — in the immovable (free from calamity) places; dame — in their own sacrificial house; nityam — daily; iddham — kindled with fuel and the like; ā sacante — they approach and serve; asmin — in Agni; dyumnam — the food in the form of oblation; bhūri — abundantly; adhi ni dadhuḥ — they placed; viśvāyuḥ — (such you) who has all as food (for us); rayīṇām — of wealth; dharuṇaḥ — become the supporter.

original p. 398

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

O Agni! The sacrificers keep you, described above, constantly kindled with fuel and the like in their own sacrificial halls, in places free from calamity, and offer oblations as they please. Such you, who eat all (for us), bestow wealth upon us.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Such as you are, Agni, men preserve you constantly kindled in their dwellings, in secure places, and offer upon you abundant (sacrificial) food; you in whom is all existence, are the bearer of riches (for advantage).

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

- ध्रुवासु क्षितिषु — nirupadraveṣu grāmeṣv ity arthaḥ — "since the word kṣiti is read among the twenty-one names of earth — gauḥ, gmā and so on (Ni. 2-5 [as printed]) — it means 'earth'. Since the word dhruva of the sense 'firm' is used as an adjective to kṣiti, Sāyaṇa explains it as 'immovable earth'. The use of the word dhruva as an adjective for the always-firm earth, being an instance of the figure arthāntara-pratyāyaka ('conveying another meaning'), shows by implication the meaning 'places where beings live', that is, a village free from any anxiety.

33. Reading note: the print is clear; "dhārer ṇiluk ca" (with the affix una, as printed) and "dvyaco 'tastiṅaḥ" re-read from the print; Pāṇini numerals not given.

Skandasvāmin: kṣitiṣu dhruvāsu | kṣitir iti pṛthivīnāma | iha ca athāpi tad dhitena kṛṣṇavan nigamā bhavanti (Ni. 2-5) ity evaṃ tadavayaveṣu prayuktam | pṛthivyavayaveṣu vedyādyākhyeṣu dhruveṣu — 'Yāska says: "even if only a part of a name is used in the Ṛks, the names are complete [for the whole]"; therefore, though kṣiti denotes the whole earth, here, with the plural, the parts of the earth are meant — he explains: the altars and the like, firm places where Agni is established for oblation'."

- दमे — "gayaḥ, kṣayaḥ and so on — since the word dama is read among the twenty-two names of house (Ni. 3-13 [as printed]), it means 'sacrificial house' — the house where Agni is always kindled with fuel and with oblations."

- द्युम्नम् — carupuroḍāśādihavirlakṣaṇam annam — "food in the form of oblations such as caru and puroḍāśa, which are offered as oblation-portions in Agni. Yāska says: dyumnaṃ dyotater yaśo vā annaṃ vā (no Nirukta number printed), explaining the word dyumna [as] 'splendour' of one who is eating food, or 'fame'; it is of the nature to give splendour to him who eats food, and, when enemies have been destroyed, to give splendour also to fame; so it is said as a word for food and for fame. He gives the example:

  > जहि वधर्वनुषो मर्त्यस्यास्मे द्युम्नमधि रत्नं च धेहि । jahi vadhar vanuṣo martyasyāsme dyumnam adhi ratnaṃ ca dhehi (Ṛk. Saṃ. 2-25-3; Ni. 2-6)"

- धरुणः — dhārayitā — "'one who holds', says Sāyaṇa. The word dharuṇa is read among the hundred names of water (Ni. 2-24 [as printed]). Skandasvāmin: dharuṇa from dhṛ dhāraṇe; anyatra; iha tu sāmarthyāt dānavacanaḥ — 'elsewhere it denotes holding; here, by the context, it denotes giving': though the word, formed from the root dhṛ "to hold", conveys elsewhere the sense of holding, here, because it makes plain the power of the object under discussion, it conveys the sense of giving: Agni is the giver (dātā) of wealth, rayīṇāṃ dharuṇaḥ."
- भव विश्वायुः — sarvānnaḥ — "Sāyaṇa: 'Agni eats everything as food'. The word āyus in the world and in the Veda gives the sense 'the time during which one lives'; in the śruti also pra ṇa āyūṃṣi tāriṣat (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-186-1; Ni. 10-37) it signifies life. Here, since it is read among the twenty-eight names of food (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]), it means 'food'. Skandasvāmin: sarvānnasaṃbaddhaḥ haviroktā — 'the one who eats all kinds of food in the form of oblations'; and sarveṣām annānāṃ dātā — 'the giver of all food'." [36]

Meaning: O Agni, may the sacrificers (maghavānaḥ) who are possessed of wealth in the form of oblations obtain (vy aśyuḥ) food (pṛkṣaḥ); favoured by you, may they obtain all foods. And the wise (sūrayaḥ) who praise you, and those who give oblations to you — may all these obtain (vy aśyuḥ) the whole (viśvam) of life (āyuḥ). original p. 402

Grammatical tail of the bhāṣya (concluded; characterized): āryaḥ — the word ari [arya in the sense "belonging to the enemy"]; aryaḥ: the a of ari has the Vedic yaṇ before the genitive singular by jasādiṣu chandasi vā vacanam; no guṇa by gher ṅiti;

40. Accents as printed; in "विश्वमायुः" the underline stands between वि and श्वं [accent ?].

41. Reading note: the print is clear; the tail from "aśyuḥ" is compressed; "sanema", "vyatyayena śaḥ" and "aca iritī" re-read from the print; the page ends in the tail's last words, which run on to p. 402.

the word ari, ending in the affix i (by aca iḥ, as printed "aca iritī") has final acute; the ending acute by udāttayaṇo hal-pūrvāt; bhāgam — final acute by karṣātvato ghañaḥ, Pā. [6-1-159].

॥ प्रतिपदार्थः ॥ — Pratipadārtha

agne — O Agni; maghavānaḥ — (the sacrificers) endowed with wealth in the form of oblations; pṛkṣaḥ — foods; vi aśyuḥ — may they obtain; sūrayaḥ — (you) the wise who praise (you); dadataḥ — (to you) those who offer oblations; viśvam āyuḥ — fully the whole life-time; vi aśyuḥ — may they obtain; samitheṣu — in battles; aryaḥ — belonging to the enemy; vājam — the food; sanema — may we obtain (afterwards); deveṣu — among your gods beginning with Indra; śravase — for renown; bhāgam — the portion of the oblations; dadhānāḥ — placing (offering) may we be.

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

O Agni! May your worshippers, the rich, obtain much food; may (those who praise you and) those who offer you oblations live long; may we obtain in battles the abundant wealth of the enemies; (and from that wealth) may we offer to you, and to the gods beginning with Indra, their portions.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> May your opulent worshippers, Agni, obtain, (abundant) food; may the learned (who praise you) and offer you (oblations), acquire long life; may we gain in battles booty from our foes, presenting their portion to the Gods for (the acquisition of) renown.

- पृक्षः, वाजः — "Both these words, since they are read among the twenty-two names of food, andhaḥ, vājaḥ (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]), mean 'food'."

- आर्यः — rāṣṭrī, aryaḥ [as printed] — "since rāṣṭrī, aryaḥ and so on are read among the four words denoting 'lord' (Ni. 3-11) — but here this word is explained as a form arising from the word ari, 'enemy', and is explained as 'belonging to the enemy'." [42]

- समिथेषु — "raṇaḥ, vivāk and so on — since this is read among the forty-six names of battle (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]), it means 'in battles'."
- Skandasvāmin — "The word deveṣu, though ending in the seventh case and used in the sense of the locative, conveys the sense of the dative (saṃpradāna), as in the usage samam brāhmaṇe dānam (printed "ಸಮಮಬ್ರಾಹ್ಮಣೇ ದಾನಂ") ('a gift to the Brāhmaṇa'); so it means 'for the gods'."
- श्रवसे — "śrava means food; in the sense of food. Since śravaḥ is read among the twenty-eight names of wealth — maghaṃ, rekṇaḥ and so on (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]) — Yāska, saying 'śrava ity annanāma śrūyate' ('śrava is heard as a name of food', Ni. 10-3), and quoting the Ṛk asasrāṇāsaḥ [as printed] (Ṛk. Saṃ. 6-37-3), explains the word śrava there as a word for food. Sāyaṇa explains śravase as 'for renown, for fame'. Yāska says that the word śravaḥ denotes yaśas, 'renown', kīrti, 'fame', and gives three illustrations of this:

> अमन्दान्स्तोमान्प्र भरे मनीषा सिन्धावधि क्षियतो भाव्यस्य । यो मे सहस्रममिमीत सवानतूर्तो राजा श्रव इच्छमानः ॥ amandān stomān pra bhare manīṣā sindhāv adhi kṣiyato bhāvyasya | yo me sahasram amimīta savān atūrto rājā śrava icchamānaḥ (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-126-1)

Here śrava icchamānaḥ — 'desiring fame' (Ni. 9-11).

> प्र वो महे मन्दमानायान्धसोऽर्चा विश्वानराय विश्वाभुवे । इन्द्रस्य यस्य सुमखं सहो महि श्रवो नृम्णं च रोदसी सपर्यतः ॥ pra vo mahe mandamānāyāndhaso 'rcā viśvānarāya viśvābhuve | indrasya yasya sumakhaṃ saho mahi śravo nṛmṇaṃ ca rodasī saparyataḥ (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-50-1)

Here too mahi śravaḥ means 'great, praiseworthy fame' (Ni. 11-10) — fame that is conducive to being heard abundantly.

Here too, 'śravaś cācchā paśumac ca yūtham' — 'śravaś cāpi paśumac ca yūthaṃ praśaṃsāṃ ca yūthaṃ ca dhanaṃ ca yūthaṃ ceti vā' — meaning 'fame' (Ni. 4-24)." [43] [44]

Meaning: To ṛta — to Agni, who has come to the place of sacrifice — indeed the cows (dhenavaḥ), milkers of the oblations for the agnihotra and the rest, pīpayanta — gave to drink (the cow-produce, milk and the rest). How are the cows? Vāvaśānāḥ — desiring Agni again and again; smadūdhnīḥ — smat is of the same sense as "constant": possessed of constant udders: always givers of milk; dyubhaktāḥ — joined with the radiance of the day: shining. And the rivers (sindhavaḥ) — streaming ones — begging (bhikṣamāṇāḥ) the good (su) favour (matim), the benevolent mind, of this Agni, have flowed (sasruḥ) towards the mountain (adrim), near the mountain, from afar (parāvataḥ) — for the preparation of the oblations to be offered to Agni they flow.

ṛtasya hi — to Agni, who has come to the sacrificial hall; vāvaśānāḥ — wishing again and again for Agni; smadūdhnīḥ — having constant udders (always giving milk); dyubhaktāḥ — endowed with radiance; dhenavaḥ — the cows (which are the Reading note: the print is clear but small; the tail from "ṛtasya" on is much compressed; "yaṅantāc chānac", "ṇyantāl laṅi ṅleś ca jādeśādi", "caṅy anyatarasyām" and the whole of the last two sentences are doubtful, and the Pāṇini numerals re-read from the print. cause of the oblations); pīpayanta — they gave to drink the cow-produce, milk and the rest; sindhavaḥ — the rivers flowing; sumatim — (of Agni) the benevolent mind; bhikṣamāṇāḥ — as ones asking; adrim samayā — in the vicinity of the mountain; parāvataḥ — from a distant place; vi sasruḥ — they have flowed and come.

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

The cows, ever giving milk, radiant, who love Agni, have come to the sacrificial hall and give milk and the like for Agni's use. The rivers, desiring Agni's good will, have flowed from far, near the mountain.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> The cows, loving (Agni, who has come to the hall of sacrifice), sharing his splendour, have brought with full udders (their milk) to be drunk. The rivers, soliciting his good will, have flowed from a distance in the vicinity of the mountains.

  Skandasvāmin: ṛtam ṛter gatikarmaṇaḥ (Ni. 2-25 [as printed]) — 'from the root ṛ "to go" is the form of the word ṛta'; so ṛtasya — sarvatra gatasya — 'of him who has gone to all places', i.e. 'of him able to go about in all places'."

- स्मदूध्नीः (continued) — "...since they cook (prepare) the amṛta, the cows with an excellent udder — that is the sense. Sāyaṇa says that the word smat has the sense of the word nitya ('constant'), so cows constantly having udders [full] who always give milk."
- द्युभक्ताः — divā prakāśena saṃśliṣṭāḥ tejasvinya ity arthaḥ — "Sāyaṇa explains this word as: those who, because of the radiance of day, shine — the cows are lustrous. Skandasvāmin: divaṃ yo bhajante tā dyubhaktāḥ | svargaṇivāsinya ity arthaḥ — 'those who go to heaven are called dyubhaktāḥ; the sense is "dwellers in heaven"; therefore he says "dwellers in heaven". The sense is that the cows, who always give milk, endowed with good udders and lustre, dwellers in heaven, who prepare the amṛta, please Agni with their milk' — thus Skandasvāmin interprets in another way."
- परावतः — parāgatāt | dūraṃ hi parāgataṃ bhavati — "from afar."
- सिन्धवः — "Rivers flow with waters like amṛta, and in many ways run, seeking Agni."
- समया अद्रिम् — samayā śabdaḥ sāmīpye | adrir meru nāmā parvato merokḥ samīpeneti arthaḥ — "'samayā' is a word for nearness; adri by Meru, the mountain named Meru: 'near the Meru'. Agni's own manifestations — the cows — come, the cows with good udders, to Agni (the dhenus) from near Meru, in many ways, and serve him, so that Agni is pleased with the milk which is like amṛta — thus Skandasvāmin. Another sense of this Ṛk is also given: the word dhenu, formed from the root dhīñ prīṇane ('to please'), means the oblations that please Agni; these are greatly desired by Agni; the oblations have, as udder-place, the word ūdhas in the excellent sense; these oblations are mixed with the best amṛta-juices; they are drunk as if by going to heaven, which is farther than the earth, to drink the amṛta-juice. Dhenava iti dhinoter prīṇanārthasya rūpam | ṛtasya agneḥ prīṇayitryaḥ āhutayaḥ ātyartham kāmayamānāḥ amṛtarasayuktāḥ dyugāminyaḥ pṛthivītaḥ dūrāt agnim āpyāyayanti — 'oblations, which please Agni, longing for him exceedingly, endowed with the juice of amṛta, going to heaven, from far over the earth, refresh Agni'. Therefore these oblations make Agni comfortable."

Words treated: ṛtasya (in the sūtra that prescribes the saṃpradāna designation there is the statement kriyāgrahaṇaṃ kartavyam, so the saṃpradāna designation arises for the object, and the sixth case stands in the sense of the fourth). vāvaśānāḥ (root vaśa kāntau; since intensity is meant, yaṅ by dhātor ekāco halādeḥ kriyāsamabhihāre yaṅ, Pā. ॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha of Rik 73.7

The gods, worthy of worship in the sacrifice, longing for your good will, offered food in the form of oblations in you, the shining one. (For the sake of carrying out the sacrifices in due order) they made the days and nights, the light and those that have darkness.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> (The Gods), who are entitled to worship, soliciting your good will, have instructed [sic] to you, resplendent Agni, the (sacrificial) food and, (for the due observance of sacred rites), they have made the night and morning of different colours, or black and purple.

Or: divi as a seventh-case form: 'to you, established in heaven, they gave food'. Since naktā is read among the twenty-three names of night (Ni. 2-18 [as printed]), it means 'night'. When the sacrificers offer oblations, Agni, kindled brightly, becomes in the night a bright flame, and the dark colour at the flame's tip, and the self-arisen red colour at the root, though distinct, become visible so that all can see; so Agni is made radiant. Or: naktā ca cakrur uṣasā virūpe — the second case is meant by the dropped ā: 'they made the night and the dawn of different forms' — with the sense that the sacrificers make naktoṣasau ('night and

Since the sacrificial rite is the cause of the world's upkeep, and the rite is the root of dharma, all activity of the world is carried on at appropriate times, so that the divisions of days and nights are produced by the sacrifices the sacrificers perform. In naktā, uṣasā, virūpe the slight endings are not of the seventh case but of the second case. When offering oblation-portions, the sacrificers make the night dark-coloured and the dawn-time ruddy-coloured —" [60]

"...they have so made them. In the night, when the sacrifice is done, the tip of Agni's flames, well kindled, is seen as black; hence they say the night is black-coloured. The dawn-time is first ruddy, afterwards, step by step, it obtains the bright radiance. Because the dawn and the night are mixed with the radiance of Agni when the sacrificers offer oblations in Agni, they are called virūpe. Since sacrifice is the root of dharma, the divisions of day and night, by which all world-activity goes on in its proper times, are produced by the sacrifices that the sacrificers perform. Agni alone is the cause of all of these — such is the purport."

Meaning: The mortals whom (yān martān) you impel (susūdaḥ) in the rites of agnihotra and the rest for wealth (rāye) — such as they, may we too (vayaṃ ca) become wealthy (maghavānaḥ). You, who have filled (āpaprivān) heaven and earth and the sky (antarikṣam) with your own radiance or with rain-water, serve (sisakṣi) the whole world (viśvaṃ bhuvanam): that is, favouring, you protect all. ॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

For the attainment of lordship (aiśvarya), we mortals, urged by you (to perform sacrifices and so on), may become wealthy (by your favour); you, with your radiance (and with rain-water) covering the earth, the sky and the heavens, protect the whole world like a shade (that shelters).

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> May we mortals, whom you have directed (to the performance of sacrifices) for the sake of riches, become opulent; filling heaven and earth and the firmament (with your radiance), you protect the whole world like a (sheltering) shade.

76. Reading note: the Saṃhitā prints "अग्न" — agna, with the e of agne shortened before the following vowel by Vedic sandhi (agna ucathāni); the Pada prints agne.

dhurvī hiṃsārthaḥ | kvip ceti kvip | rālope lopa iti vakāralopaḥ | na pūjanād iti samāsāntapratiṣedhaḥ | devair bhaktaṃ devabhaktaṃ | tṛtīyā karmaṇeti pūrvapadaprakṛtisvaratvaṃ || [77]

Meaning: O vedhaḥ — a name of the wise — O wise Agni, may these hymns (ucathāni) now offered by us be pleasing (juṣṭāni) to your mind (manase) — the working of the mind — and to your heart (hṛde), the inner organ that has that working: may they be dear. And may we be able (śakema) to command (yamam) the wealth (rāyaḥ) of yours, of the good bearer (sudhuraḥ) — or "sudhūḥ": "he who well destroys (dhūrvati) poverty"; may we be able. Doing what? Placing (adhi dadhānāḥ) upon Agni the food (śravaḥ) in the form of oblations, to be shared (devabhaktam) by the gods: that is, offering oblations in Agni.

Grammatical tail : ucathāni (root vaca paribhāṣaṇe; the affix atha by ruvidibhyāṃ kit, Uṇ. 3-116, kit also here by the bahula statement; samprasāraṇa); juṣṭāni (initial acute in the mantra by Pā. 6-1-209, 210); hṛde (hṛd for hṛdaya, by pāddan…); sudhuraḥ (root dhurvī hiṃsāyām; kvip; loss of v; no samāsānta by na pūjanāt); devabhaktam (first member keeps its accent by tṛtīyā karmaṇi).

vedhaḥ agne — O wise Agni; etā ucathāni — these hymns (now offered by us); te — to you; manase — to the working of the mind; hṛde ca — and to the inner organ; juṣṭāni santu — be dear; te — your; sudhuraḥ — of the good bearer (the remover of poverty); rāyaḥ — of wealth; yamam — to command; devabhaktam — enjoyable by the gods; śravaḥ — food in the form of oblations; adhi dadhānāḥ — placing (in Agni); śakema — may we be able.

O wise Agni! May the hymns that we now offer be taken up by your mind and heart. Offering in you the oblations, the portion of the gods, may we be fit to enjoy the wealth given by you, the remover of poverty, the good bearer.

- वेधः — "Since vedhāḥ is read among the twenty names of the wise, vipraḥ, vigraḥ and so on (Ni. 3-19), it means 'wise'. Yāska also explains medhāvī: medhāvī kasmāt | medhayā tadvān bhavati | medhā matau dhīyate (no Nirukta number printed): 'the power of man is established in his understanding'; medhā is understanding, and one who has it is medhāvī. The word vedhas being a synonym of medhāvī, it means 'wise'. The prayer is made here: 'O Agni, may the hymns that we speak with you in view bring joy to your mind and to your inner organ.'"

- सुधुरः — suṣṭhu nirvāhakasya | yadvā śobhanaṃ dhūrvati dāridryaṃ hinastīti sudhūḥ — "this word is an epithet of rāyaḥ, which denotes wealth: wealth always carries out works properly; or it destroys poverty completely: so Sāyaṇa explains by the word sudhūḥ.

Meaning: In the thirteenth anuvāka there are eleven sūktas. The first, "upa prayanta", has nine Ṛks; the Anukramaṇī says: "upa prayanto nava gotamo rāhūgaṇo gāyatram …". Its ṛṣi is Gotama, son of a sage named Rahūgaṇa; the metre of this and the following is Gāyatrī; the deity is Agni. At the Prātaranuvāka these two sūktas, beginning with this one, are used in the Agni-rite in the Gāyatrī metre; the sūtra: "āpo revatīḥ kṣayathā hi vasvaḥ and upa prayanta — these two sūktas" (Ā. 4-13); likewise at the Aśvina-śastra, by the extension "as with the Prātaranuvāka" (Ā. 6-5). On the first day of the pṛṣṭhya ṣaḍaha this sūkta is the ājya-śastra (Ā. 7-10).

अनुवादः — Anuvāda [4]: From the seventy-fourth sūkta the thirteenth anuvāka begins. In this anuvāka there are eleven sūktas (74–84). Of these, the first sūkta, beginning "upa prayanta", has nine Ṛks. The Anukramaṇikā says "upa prayanto nava gotamo rāhūgaṇo gāyatram tṛtī…" — a sage named Rahūgaṇa; his son Gotama is the ṛṣi of this sūkta. This sūkta and the following one are in the Gāyatrī metre; the deity is Agni. At the time of reciting the Prātaranuvāka mantras, this sūkta and the following sūktas are applied for the Gāyatrī-metre Ṛks connected with the Agni-rite…" [5].

Anuvāda (concluded from p. 426; Kannada): …the Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra says in the sūtra "āpo revatīḥ kṣayathā hi vasvaḥ, upa prayanta — the two sūktas" (Ā. 4-13). The Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra also says that these two sūktas are applied for the recitation of the Aśvina-śastra mantras (Ā. 6-5). That this sūkta is to be applied, on the first day of the six-day pṛṣṭhya-ṣaḍaha sacrifice, for the recitation of the ājya-śastra mantras is explained by the sūtra "upa prayanta iti tu prathame 'hany ājyam" (Ā. 7-10).

3. Reading note: the print reads "tatropaprayanta iti" and "gāyatraṃ tv iti" (re-read from the print); Āśvalāyana numerals 4-13, 6-5, 7-10 as printed.

Meaning: Adhvara — the sacrifice such as the agniṣṭoma, free from harm and obstruction: we who go (prayantaḥ) to it (upa) with vigour, or, having reached it, perform it properly without interruption — such as we may speak (vocema) to Agni (agnaye), the god endowed with good qualities, a mantra (mantram) — a hymn, the means of reflection; it is wished that we may be speakers. To what Agni? To one who hears (śṛṇvate) us even from afar (āre): the word ca is to be taken after āre; for he, who is everywhere in his great love for us, hears even our hymn.

adhvaram — the sacrifice free from harm and the like; upaprayantaḥ — (we) who go near and perform (the sacrifice); āre ca — even from afar; asme — our (praises); śṛṇvate — to him who hears; agnaye — to Agni; mantram — this mantra in the form of a hymn; vocema — let us utter.

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

(We) who go swiftly to the sacrificial hall will utter this hymn to Agni, who hears our praises even from afar.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

- अध्वरम् — na vidyate dhvaro yasya — "'that in which there is no injury (dhvara)': a rite that propitiates the deities, or sacrifice. Because in a sacrifice there are many kinds and sub-kinds — Agni, Soma and the like — adhvaram in a Ṛk may mean any sacrifice that is being performed. The Ṛk here describes what the sage Gotama said to the priests: 'we shall go to the sacrificial hall'."

9. Numerals as printed.

- उपप्रयन्तः — "Upa means near, pra means with vigour, with eagerness; yantaḥ — those who go: those who go, with purpose, to the vicinity of the place where the sacrifice is going on — such is the chief sense."
- मन्त्रम् — mananasādhanam etat stotrarūpam — "this hymn, which is the means of reflection: this hymn in the form of a stotra, which we, with our minds, praising Agni, utter in the open with spoken words. The sage calls this a mantra. The sage says to the hotṛ and other priests: 'let us utter this mantra in the form of praise of Agni.'"
- अग्नये — "for Agni, addressing Agni."
- आरे — "since the word āre is read among the five names of 'far', āke, parāke and so on (Ni. 3-20), āre means 'far'."
- च — "this word is to be joined after the word āre, and read āre ca. Then the words āre ca mean 'both far away and near'. To us men, sound is heard only when it is near; those who are far have no power to hear the voice of those who speak. Because Agni is present in earth, atmosphere and heaven, he has the power to hear our hymns, being far or near."

Meaning: That ancient (pūrvyaḥ) Agni who protected (arakṣat) wealth (gayam) for the sacrificer (dāśuṣe) who has given oblations, when the people (kṛṣṭiṣu) — enemies, killers (snīhitīṣu) — assembled (saṃjagmānāsu): to him let us speak the hymn, in connection with the preceding Ṛk.

- "Since the word yat is used in this Ṛk and since the sense is connected with Agni, the meaning explained in this Ṛk is to be taken as an epithet of Agni, and, supplying from the preceding Ṛk the words mantraṃ vocemāgnaye, the commentator says that it should be construed as: 'let us praise such an Agni with mantras.'"
- स्नीहितीषु संजग्मानासु कृष्टिषु — snih snehane | snehayatīti vadhakarmasu paṭhitaḥ — "snīhitīṣu is formed from the root snih snehane. Since, among the thirty-three verbs of killing, dabhnoti, śnathati and so on, the word snehayati is read (Ni. 3-10 [as printed]), the word here denotes 'killers':

enemies. The sense is that such enemies came to fight with us. Kṛṣṭi is a word for men. Vadhāpekṣiṇaḥ ('those who seek killing') — that is, the enemies who come for battle."

- गयम् — "Since the word gaya is read among the fifteen names of offspring, tuk, tokam and so on, the word gaya is also meant to mean offspring or progeny (Ni. 3-2); since magham, rekṇaḥ and so on are read among the twenty-eight names of wealth (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]), gaya is also 'wealth'; and since gayaḥ, kṛdaraḥ and so on are read among the twenty-two names of house (Ni. 3-13 [as printed]), gaya also means 'house': there are three kinds of meaning. Here the commentator gives only one meaning, 'wealth'. Because, in the face of the enemies who fight, the protection of life, wealth and house of people is necessary, any of the three meanings, 'sons, wealth, house', may be taken as stated in the Nirukta."
- दाशुषे — havīṃṣi dattavate yajamānāya — "when there is a time of battle, the sense is that Agni necessarily protects the wealth and so on of the sacrificer who propitiates him with oblations and other offerings."

Meaning of the liturgical remark: In the Agni-churning, this Ṛk "uta bruvantu" is to be recited as an anuvacana after the invitation "recite to the one born" (the sūtra in the section prātarvaiśvadevyām, Ā. 2-16); likewise, in the Sākamedha rites, in the offering of puroḍāśa to the sportive Maruts, it is the first ājyabhāga anuvākyā (Ā. 2-18).

Meaning: Agni has been born (ud ajani) from the two kindling-sticks. After that, may all the priests, born (jantavaḥ) men, speak (bruvantu): may they praise that Agni. What kind of Agni? The slayer of Vṛtra (vṛtrahā) — slayer of the enemies who are the obstructors — in every battle (raṇe raṇe) the winner of wealth (dhanaṃjayaḥ) — the conqueror of the enemies' wealth.

Grammatical tail : dhanaṃjayaḥ (khac by saṃjñāyāṃ bhṛtṛvṛji…, Pā. [3-2-46]; mum-augment by arur dviṣadajantasya, Pā. [6-3-67]; final acute by cit); raṇe raṇe (raṇa = "battle", where kettledrums resound; ap by vaśiraṇyor upasaṃkhyānam; doubling by nityavīpsayoḥ; the second member's accent by āmreḍitasya …).

॥ प्रतिपदार्थः ॥ — Pratipadārtha

vṛtrahā — slayer of enemies; raṇe raṇe — in all battles; dhanaṃjayaḥ — the winner of enemy wealth; agniḥ — Agni; ut ajani — (from the kindling-sticks) was born; uta — afterwards; jantavaḥ — the born priests; bruvantu — (Agni) let them praise.

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

19. Reading note: re-read from the print: "jātāyānubrūhīty ukta … ity eṣānuvacanīyā", "iṣṭāv eṣaiva"; "śiṣvenottarām" as printed; Āśvalāyana numerals 2-16 and 2-18 as printed.

May all the born (the priests and others) praise Agni — born from the kindling-sticks, the winner of enemy wealth in battle, the slayer of enemies.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Let men praise Agni as soon as grenerated [sic], the slayer of Vritra, and the winner of booty in many a battle.

And in the iṣṭi called Sākamedha, for the offering of puroḍāśa to the Maruts, this Ṛk must be recited as the first ājyabhāga puro'nuvākyā mantra: so the Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra, marudbhyaḥ krīḍibhya uttarota bruvantu jantavaḥ (Ā. 2-18), has directed."

- ब्रुवन्तु जन्तवः — "The commentator explains the word jantu here as jātāḥ — 'those who are born, risen': the priests who take part in the sacrifice. Bruvantu jantavaḥ means 'let them utter mantras in the form of praise of Agni; let them make a hymn of Agni'."
- उत् अजनि — araṇyoḥ sakāśād utpannaḥ — "born, in the sacrifice, from the two araṇi with the mantra spoken at the front; the sense is that the priests rubbed out Agni from the araṇis and he was born."
- वृत्रहा — vṛtrāṇām āvarakāṇāṃ śatrūṇāṃ hantā — "the destroyer of the enemies who come out of desire for battle and obstruct. Here the commentator explains vṛtra as 'enemies who come to obstruct, in order to fight'. In some places the qualities of Indra, such as the slaying of Vṛtra, are ascribed to Agni in praising him; one might therefore say 'who killed Vṛtra'; but the meaning here is what the commentator has given."
- धनंजयः — śatrudhanānāṃ jetā — "the winner of the wealth of enemies: since, when fighting, he defeats the enemies and gives their wealth to those who praise him, Agni is praised with the word dhanaṃjaya. The word dhanaṃjaya is also used of other deities:

  > स पवस्व धनंजय प्रयन्ता राधसो महः । sa pavasva dhanaṃjaya prayantā rādhaso mahaḥ (Ṛk. Saṃ. 9-46-5)

Meaning: O Agni, in the house (kṣaye) of the sacrificer — the place of sacrifice to the gods — you are (asi) the messenger (dūtaḥ) of the gods; and you take (veṣi) the oblations (havyāni) — caru, puroḍāśa and the rest — to the gods for their eating (vītaye); and you make (kṛṇoṣi) his sacrifice (adhvaram) dasmat — beautiful to all to see: [to him] — in connection with the next Ṛk.

29. Reading note: re-read from the print: "tam it suhavyam ity uttarayā saṃbandhaḥ" — the link to the next Ṛk, which begins tam it suhavyam; "dasmat" in the tail as printed.

Grammatical tail : veṣi (root vī gatyādiṣu, with the causative sense included; laṭ; loss of śap; no nighāta at the head of a pāda); dasmāt (root dasi daṃsanadarśanayoḥ; mak-affix); kṛṇoṣi (root kṛvi; u-affix by dhinvikṛṇvyor a ca).

॥ प्रतिपदार्थः ॥ — Pratipadārtha

agne — O Agni; yasya — whose (sacrificer's); kṣaye — in the sacrificial house; dūtaḥ asi — you are the messenger (of the gods); havyāni — the caru, puroḍāśa and the rest, offered to the gods; vītaye — for the eating of the gods; veṣi — you carry (taking them to give); adhvaram — the sacrifice; dasmat — pleasing to the sight of all; kṛṇoṣi — you make.

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha of Rik 74.4

The sacrificer in whose sacrificial house you are the messenger of the gods, whose oblations you convey and join to the gods, and whose sacrifice you make pleasing to the sight of all — such a one is called an excellent performer of sacrifice.

Meaning: O son of strength (sahasaḥ yaho), O Aṅgiras, Agni endowed with the qualities such as aṅgana: that sacrificer spoken of before — all men say (āhuḥ) that very sacrificer to be suhavya (possessing excellent oblations), sudeva (having an excellent deity) and subarhiṣa (barhis is a name for sacrifice: performing an excellent sacrifice).

॥ प्रतिपदार्थः ॥ — Pratipadārtha

sahasaḥ yaho — O son of strength; aṅgiraḥ — O Aṅgiras (Agni); tam it — that very sacrificer (spoken of before); suhavyam — one with auspicious oblations; sudevam — one with an excellent deity; subarhiṣam — one whose sacrifice is auspicious; janāḥ — people; āhuḥ — they say.

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

O Agni Aṅgiras, son of strength! All people say that the sacrificer (spoken of before) is of fortunate oblations, of the honourable deity, and of the proper sacrifice — as fortunate in all three.

- अङ्गिरः (concluded) — "…in many such Ṛks Agni is addressed with the word aṅgiraḥ. Why was this name given to Agni? What relation is there between Agni and the sage Aṅgiras? — these and other matters are explained at length in the Ṛk Saṃhitā volume 2, pp. 640–641 [as read]."
- सुहव्यं, सुदेवं — "These words are adjectives of the word tam, which denotes the sacrificer. The meaning of the words is: 'one who keeps ready the excellent oblations to offer to the gods, and who has resolved to worship the good deity'."
- सहसो यहो — "sahaḥ is read among the twenty-eight names of strength, ojaḥ, pājaḥ and so on (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]); so sahaḥ means 'strength'. Since yahuḥ is read among the fifteen names of offspring, tuk, tokam and so on, yahu means 'son' (Ni. 3-2). Sahaso yaho means 'son of strength' — Agni is addressed as 'son of strength', i.e. the son born (from the araṇi) by the application of strength, by rubbing with strength. In some places Indra is praised with these words. Besides the words sahaso yahuḥ, the usage of words with the same sense, sahasaḥ sūnuḥ and sahasaspūtra, also occurs in many Ṛks. For instance, a few Ṛks:

> agniṃ hotāraṃ manye dāsvantaṃ vasuṃ sūnuṃ sahaso jātavedasaṃ vipraṃ na jātavedasam (Ṛk. Saṃ. [1-127-1])

> दृळ्हग्नः सर्पिरासुतिः प्रत्नो होता वरेण्यः । सहसस्पुत्रो अद्भुतः ॥ dṛḷhagnaḥ sarpirāsutiḥ pratno hotā vareṇyaḥ | sahasas putro adbhutaḥ (Ṛk. Saṃ. 2-7-6)

> अग्निं सूनुं सनश्रुतं सहसो जातवेदसम् । agniṃ sūnuṃ sanaśrutaṃ sahaso jātavedasam (Ṛk. Saṃ. 3-11-4)

> अग्ने द्युम्नेन जागृवे सहसः सूनवाहुत । agne dyumnena jāgṛve sahasaḥ sūnav āhuta (Ṛk. Saṃ. 3-24-3)

> strength, offered to"; "accept our sacrifice, Agni, O son of strength, the oblation of the three seats". Numerals of the flagged citations re-read from the print (2-7-6, 3-11-4, 3-24-3, 5-4-8).)

- जना आहुः सुबर्हिषम् — "Here the commentator explains barhiḥ as 'sacrifice'. The sentence janā āhuḥ subarhiṣam means 'people call the sacrificer the best performer of sacrifice': the purport is that this is well known."

Meaning: "Juṣasva" is the second sūkta, of five Ṛks; the Anukramaṇī says "juṣasva pañca"; the ṛṣi and the rest are as before. The application of the sūkta at the Prātaranuvāka and the Aśvina-śastra is stated together with the preceding sūkta. In the animal sacrifice the first Ṛk is applied for the stokānuvacana; so the sūtra: "being sent to the stokas he recites, juṣasva saprathastamam" (Ā. 3-4).

अनुवादः — Anuvāda [3]: This sūkta, beginning "juṣasva", is the second sūkta in the thirteenth anuvāka. It has five Ṛks. The Anukramaṇikā says "juṣasva pañca". The ṛṣi, deity and metre of this sūkta are as in the preceding sūkta. It was stated earlier that this sūkta and the preceding one are applied for the recitation of the Prātaranuvāka and Aśvina-śastra mantras. Besides this, in the animal sacrifice (paśuyāga), the first Ṛk of this sūkta is to be used for reciting the stokānuvacana mantras, as directed by the sūtra of the Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra, "preṣitaḥ stokebhyo 'nvāha juṣasva saprathastamam" (Ā. 3-4).

Meaning: O Agni, accept (juṣasva) our word (vacaḥ) — the hymn — the most widely spread (saprathastamam, "exceedingly extensive") and the most gratifying to the gods (devapsarastamam). Doing what? Offering (juhvānaḥ) the oblations (havyā) in the form of hymns into the mouth (āsani) — by that mouth. "Let these oblations in the form of hymns not be in vain": receive them all with your own mouth.

agne — O Agni; saprathastamam — most widely spread; devapsarastamam — most dear to the gods; vacaḥ — the words (in the form of our praise); āsani — in your mouth; havyā — the oblations; juhvānaḥ — receiving (pouring in); juṣasva — accept (receive).

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

Accepting through (your) mouth the oblations and the like that we offer, give ear to the words of praise that we make, which are exceedingly dear to the gods.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Attended to our most earnest address, propitiatory of the Gods, accepting our oblations in your mouth.

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

- "The chief purport: in the preceding Ṛk it was said that there is no one who is a kinsman to Agni; there the word bandhu must be taken in the sense 'one of like qualities'. Among kinsmen there must naturally be like qualities. But since there is no one with qualities like those of Agni, the sage says that, by way of question in another manner, there is no man fit for kinship with him. In this Ṛk he says that Agni is a kinsman to the people. If one asks whether this is not contradictory — it is not so. Among kinsmen there must be another quality: kinsmen love each other, and become partners in each other's hardships and pleasures — this is the mark of kinship. Agni also, desiring the welfare of people, fulfils the desired ends of those who praise him —"[20]

Meaning: O Agni, for our sake worship (yaja) the two gods named Mitra and Varuṇa, with oblation; likewise worship the gods (devān), Indra and the rest; and worship the ṛta — the true sacrifice, bearing fruit as intended. For that purpose, yakṣi — resort to (be joined with) your own great, ample (bṛhat) house (damam) of sacrifice; for, when you are within, the sacrificial house is honoured.

Grammatical tail : yaja (the lengthening in the saṃhitā by dvyaco 'tastiṅaḥ); devān (ru for the n by dīrghād aṭi samānapāde; the preceding ā is nasalized); yakṣi (loss of śap by bahulaṃ chandasi).

॥ प्रतिपदार्थः ॥ — Pratipadārtha

agne — O Agni; naḥ — for us; mitrāvaruṇā — Mitra and Varuṇa; yaja — worship (with oblation); devān — Indra and the other gods; yaja — worship; ṛtam — the sacrifice that gives true fruit; (yaja — worship); bṛhat — great; svam damam — your own (sacrificial) house; yakṣi — be joined (worship).

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

O Agni! For us, worship Mitra and Varuṇa; worship all the gods beginning with Indra; make the sacrifice flourish; and honour your own house, the sacrificial hall (that is, enter the sacrificial hall).

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Worship for us, Mitra and Varuna; worship for us, all the Gods; (celebrate) a great sacrifice; be present in your own dwelling.

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

- ऋतम् — "The commentator says it is 'a sacrifice that gives true fruit'. Yāska: ṛtaṃ satyaṃ vā yajñaṃ vā — that is, he gives the derivation that the word ṛta has the sense 'truth' or 'sacrifice' (Ni. 4-19). For a fuller explanation of this word see the Ṛk Saṃhitā volume 1, p. 647."

- ऋतम् (continued) — "Here, since it is said yaja — 'sacrifice, or worship' — in addressing Agni, the sense is: 'make the oblations and other substances offered, with the gods in view, reach them.' For this reason too, in the words yaja devān, since we offer in you, Agni, the substances that are to be offered to the gods, the duty of making them reach the gods falls to you, Agni; hence the words devān yaja — 'worship the gods' — are used."

- बृहत्, अग्ने यक्षि स्वं दमम् — "Dama means house (Ni. 3-13 [as printed]). When, with Agni in view, 'your own house' is said, it means the sacrificial hall in which Agni has been established. The word bṛhat means great or extensive. 'To worship the sacrificial hall' means: since you (Agni) are in the sacrificial hall, it becomes worthy of worship — so the commentator says."

Words treated: yaja (root yaja devapūjāsaṃgatikaraṇadāneṣu; loṭ, second person singular, sip → hi; śap vikaraṇa; loss of hi by ato heḥ, Pā. [6-4-105]; no nighāta at the head of a pāda; since śap is pit, anudātta, the root accent remains; the lengthening in the saṃhitā by dvyaco 'tastiṅaḥ, Pā. [6-3-135]). mitrāvaruṇā (the second-case dual; the ending replaced by ā by supāṃ sulug…). devān (before a following ṛ [ṛtam, as read: "aṭ"], ru for the n by dīrghād aṭi samānapāde, Pā. [8-3-9]; the preceding ā is always nasalized by ato 'ṭi nityam; y-substitution for the ru by bhobhago…, Pā. [8-3-17]; loss of y by lopaḥ śākalyasya, Pā. [8-3-19]). yakṣi (root yaja…, Bhvādi; loṭ, second person singular [as read: laṭ], sip; loss of the expected śap by bahulaṃ chandasi; ṣatva of j by vraścabhrasja…, Pā. yakṣi (concluded): …it is treated as not existing, so that it stands first in the pāda; since it stands at the head of a pāda, no nighāta; sip being pit, it is anudātta by anudāttau supitau, Pā. [3-1-4]; so the root's final acute remains.

Sūkta 76 — "kā ta upetiḥ"

Title of the sūkta [1]: ಎಪ್ಪತ್ತಾರನೆಯ ಸೂಕ್ತವು — "The seventy-sixth sūktas" [sic: "sūktavu" — "the seventy-sixth sūkta"].

Sāyaṇa's introduction [2]

Meaning: "Kā te" is the third sūkta, of five Ṛks; the Anukramaṇī says "kā te". The ṛṣi is Gotama Rāhūgaṇa; the metre Triṣṭup; the deity Agni. At the Prātaranuvāka these two sūktas, beginning with this one, are in the Triṣṭup metre in the Agni-rite; the sūtra: "upa pra jinvan — three [Ṛks], and the sūktas kā ta upetiḥ" (Ā. 4-13); likewise at the Aśvina-śastra, by the extension of the Prātaranuvāka.

अनुवादः — Anuvāda [4]: This sūkta, beginning "kā te", is the third sūkta in the thirteenth anuvāka. It has five Ṛks. The Anukramaṇikā says "kā te". The sage of this sūkta is Gotama, son of Rahūgaṇa; the deity is Agni; the metre is Triṣṭup. For the recitation of the Prātaranuvāka mantras, this sūkta is applied for the Triṣṭup-metre Ṛks connected with the Agni-rite, and likewise for the Aśvina-śastra mantras, as explained by the Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra "upa pra jinvann iti trīṇi kā ta upetir iti sūkte" (Ā. 4-13).

Meaning: O Agni, what kind of approach (upetiḥ) would be there, to ward off (varāya) — to settle your mind in us? There is none: that is, we are not able to make an approach worthy of you. What (kā) hymn (manīṣā), exceedingly comfort-giving (śantamā) to you, could there be? There is not even a praise worthy of you. Or what sacrificer, by sacrifices (yajñaiḥ) belonging to you, has attained (paryāpa) your dakṣa — growth or strength? None; that one should, by performing the sacrifices worthy of you, obtain the fruit by them — even this is hard to accomplish. Let the approach and the rest be: the very mind, which is the means to all that, is hard for us to obtain. So he says, "kena": with what mind (kena manasā), with what understanding, shall we give (dāśema) you the oblations? A mind befitting an approach to you does not arise in us.

Grammatical tail [8]: upetiḥ (the gati keeps its natural accent by tādau ca); varāya (root vṛṅ varaṇe, in a causative sense; the affix ap by grahavṛdṛniścigamaś ca, Pā. 3-3-58; accent of the root since the affix is pit); bhuvat (leṭ with aḍ; loss of śap; prohibition of guṇa); dakṣam (root dakṣa vṛddhau; ghañ).

॥ प्रतिपदार्थः ॥ — Pratipadārtha

7. Reading note: "kopetir" (ka upetiḥ) as printed; the opening and the tail on varāya re-read from the print ("varāya", "antarbhāvitaṇyarthād grahavṛdṛniścigamaś ca", Pā. 3-3-58).
8. characterized agne — O Agni; te manasaḥ — of your mind; varāya — for the warding off (to be favourable in us); upetiḥ — an effort to approach (you); kā bhuvat — what could it be? manīṣā — (our) praise; śantamā — (to you) exceedingly agreeable; kā — what kind (must it be)? ko vā — which sacrificer; yajñaiḥ — by sacrifices (belonging to you); dakṣam — strength; pari āpa — has obtained? te — to you; kena manasā — with what mind; dāśema — shall we offer (oblations and so on)?

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

O Agni! What effort should we make to win over your mind? What kind of praise of ours should be agreeable to you? Who has obtained strength and the like by performing sacrifices pleasing to you? With what state of mind shall we offer you oblations?

original p. 470

English Translation (the source's own, as printed): [9]

> What approximation of the mind, Agni, to you, can be accomplished for our good; what can a hundred encomiums (effect.); who, by sacrifices, has obtained your might? with what intent may we offer you (oblations)?

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

- मनसो वराय का उपेतिः — nivāraṇāya avasthāpanāya kīdṛśam upagamanaṃ bhavet — "'What kind of approach would there be, to ward off (nivāraṇa) or to establish?' From this question the exceeding greatness of Agni is known: that we sacrificers — by performing sacrifices and other rites — cannot find a way to win your mind so that it stays in us and does not go to others, and that we are not able to act accordingly. For the word varāya Sāyaṇa gives the sense: manasaḥ viṣayāntarebhyo nivāraṇaṃ tvayy eva avasthāpanam — 'the turning of the mind from other objects and establishing it in you alone': that is, the means of winning your mind so that it does not wander elsewhere but is established in you. Skandasvāmin: varāya | vara-śabdaḥ śreṣṭhavacanaḥ — 'the word vara means best'; so he explains kā tava upetiḥ as 'O Agni, what is the best means of approaching you?'"

- को वा यज्ञैः दक्षं ते परि आप — ko vā yajamānaḥ tava saṃbandhibhir yogaiḥ vṛddhiṃ balaṃ vā paryāpnot — "'What sacrificer has obtained growth or strength by the sacrifices belonging to you?' The worship of Agni by praise or by performing sacrifice: these two kinds of acts will surely win you; yet for performing these acts our minds must be steady in you. Without a steady mind, neither action nor praise gives the right fruit; hence the worship, the upāsanā, is not fit to please the deity. Therefore, in kena manasā havīṃṣi dāśema, the sense is 'grant us a mind with which we may offer you oblations in order to win your love' — this is known from the question 'with what mind shall we offer you oblations?' Sāyaṇa explains the word dakṣa as strength, growth. Skandasvāmin, in the passage ko vā yajñaiḥ dakṣaṃ te paryāpa, says that the word dakṣa here is the word for ātma [self, the strength of oneself], and:

> उत स्वेन क्रतुना सं वदेत श्रेयांसं दक्षं मनसा जगृभ्यात् । uta svena kratunā saṃ vadeta śreyāṃsaṃ dakṣaṃ manasā jagṛbhyāt (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-31-2)" (continued on p. 471; gloss mine and tentative: "and one would speak together with their own will — one would grasp the better strength by the mind".)

original p. 471

Special Topics of Rik 76.1 (concluded)

- दक्षम् (continued from p. 470) — "…quoting this Ṛk [Skandasvāmin shows] that the word dakṣa also gives the sense mano vacano vā — 'mind' or 'speech': in this connection —

  > इन्द्र श्रेष्ठानि द्रविणानि धेहि चित्तिं दक्षस्य सुभगत्वमस्मे । indra śreṣṭhāni draviṇāni dhehi cittiṃ dakṣasya subhagatvam asme (Ṛk. Saṃ. [2-21-6]) in this Ṛk, he explains, the word dakṣa is a word for mind. By this he explains tavātmānaṃ mano vā paryāpa sarvato vyāpnotīti — 'what is the means of pervading, by every way, your self or your mind? Knowing it, may we, offering you oblations, perform the rites that win your love.' The word dakṣa is read among the twenty-eight names of strength, ojaḥ, pājaḥ and so on (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]). This word occurs both with final a and with final s. Skandasvāmin, saying dakṣatiḥ utsāhārthaḥ — and dakṣa iti sakārāntaṃ balanāma — 'the word dakṣas, ending in s, is a name of strength' — gives, in support of this matter, the Ṛks:

  > मित्रं हुवे पूतदक्षं वरुणं च रिशादसम् । mitraṃ huve pūtadakṣaṃ varuṇaṃ ca riśādasam (Ṛk. Saṃ. [1-2-7])

  > मित्रं वयं हवामहे वरुणं सोमपीतये । जज्ञाना पूतदक्षसा ॥ mitraṃ vayaṃ havāmahe varuṇaṃ somapītaye | jajñānā pūtadakṣasā (Ṛk. Saṃ. [1-23-4])" (Glosses mine and tentative: "O Indra, set in us the best treasures, the thought and the good fortune of dakṣa*"; "I call Mitra of pure strength, and Varuṇa the devourer of foes"; "we call Mitra and Varuṇa for the soma-drinking, born of pure strength".)*

Meaning: O Agni, come (ehi); sit down (ni ṣīda) here (iha) in this sacrifice as the hotṛ — the invoker of the gods; be a good leader (puraetā) to us, going before us, since you are unassailable (adabdhaḥ), not to be injured by demons and the like. May heaven and earth (rodasī), which pervade all (viśvaminve), protect (avatām) you. Having come, seated, and protected by heaven and earth, worship (yaja) for the great (mahe) good-will (saumanasāya) the gods — Indra and the rest — with oblations.

Grammatical tail : ni ṣīda (ṣatva by sader aprateḥ); saumanasāya (from sumanas, "the state of being of good mind"; aṇ by tasyedam in the general sense of relation, which here ends in the specific relation of state; or aṇ in the abstract sense by hāyanāntayuvādibhyo 'ṇ, Pā. 5-1-130, sumanas being read in the yuvādi class).

॥ प्रतिपदार्थः ॥ — Pratipadārtha

agne — O Agni; ehi — come; iha — in this sacrifice; hotā — (as one who invokes the gods); ni sīda — sit down; adabdhaḥ — (you who are) not to be injured by demons and the like; naḥ — our; puraetā

14. Reading note: "nādyādiguṇayuktān" is read as printed (apparently "possessing qualities such as being eaters of food, annāda"); Pā. 5-1-130 as printed.

— going before; su bhava — be well; viśvaminve — pervading all; rodasī — heaven and earth; tvā — (such) you; avatām — may protect; mahe — great; saumanasāya — for the delight of the mind; devān — the gods (Indra and the rest); yaja — worship (with oblations and the like).

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha of Rik 76.2

O Agni! Come here; sit here as the invoker (of the gods); you who cannot be injured by demons and the like, go before us; may heaven and earth, which pervade all, protect you; and, such as you are, worship the gods with oblations and the like so that they are gratified.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> Come, Agni, hither; invoker (of the Gods), sit down; be our preceder [sic: printed "preceder'"]; for you are irresistable [sic]; may the all-expansive heaven and earth defend you, that you may worship the Gods to their great satisfaction.

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

- विश्वमिन्वे रोदसी त्वा अवताम् — sarvaṃ vyāpnuvatyau dyāvāpṛthivyau tvāṃ rakṣatām — "'may heaven and earth, which pervade all, protect you': the prayer of those who perform the sacrifice, concerning Agni, that heaven and earth, pervading all, may protect you, who are free from every kind of injury from demons and the like. The word viśva, as one of the twelve names that give the sense 'many' — uru, tuvi and so on (Ni. 3-13 [as printed]) — is used here in the sense 'all'.

  That the greatness of heaven and earth, which protect Agni, is such, Yāska has shown in the Nirukta by quoting the Ṛk:

> कतरा पूर्वा कतरापरायोः कथा जाते कवयः को वि वेद । विश्वं त्मना बिभृतो यद्ध नाम वि वर्तेते अहनी चक्रियेव ॥ katarā pūrvā katarāparāyoḥ kathā jāte kavayaḥ ko vi veda | viśvaṃ tmanā bibhṛto yad dha nāma vi vartete ahanī cakriyeva (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-185-1)

and saying dyāvāpṛthivyor mahimānam ācaṣṭe ('he describes the greatness of heaven and earth'). The first and last positions that these heaven-and-earth have cannot be clearly known: whether they arose together, or in what manner they arose, no one knows. According to the authority of the scriptures, however, te aṇḍakapāle rajataṃ ca suvarṇaṃ cābhavatām, tad yat rajataṃ seyaṃ pṛthivī yat suvarṇaṃ sā dyaur iti: 'there were two halves of an egg; one of them became silver, the other gold; the silver half became the earth, the gold half the sky'; from this it is understood that these heaven and earth arose together. And these heaven and earth support all, all beings. The day and the night too, like the wheels of a chariot, are connected with them: such is the sense of this mantra. By this the greatness of heaven and earth is told." [15]

Being called, sit (satsi) here in this rite with the other gods; and seated, O worshipful (yajatra) Agni, desire (veṣi) the office of hotṛ (hotram), the rite performed by the hotṛ, and the office of potṛ (potram), the rite done by the potṛ. ॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha of Rik 76.4

O Agni, the carrier of oblations to the gods through the flames! We call you to our sacrifice. Being called, come with the other gods and sit (comfortably). Being seated, do the works of the hotṛ and the potṛ. You, the support of wealth and the cause of its origin, make us (in our rites) vigilant.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> I invoke (you); you are the conveyer [sic] (of oblations) with your flames, with a hymn productive of progeny (to the worshipper); sit down here with the Gods, and deserving of worship, discharge the office of Hotri, or of Potri, and awaken us; you are the depositary and generator of riches.

- प्रजावता वचसा (continued) — "...of one who has the qualities of gracing with offspring and the like the sacrificers who perform the sacrifice: Sāyaṇa takes these words as an adjective of the word agni, 'Agni is praised with a hymn of such kind'. And by the word āsā he explains, 'by the flames in the position of the mouth', meaning that, since Agni carries to the gods the oblation-portions which the sacrificers offer to the other gods, he is vahni. Skandasvāmin: vahniḥ is you, the carrier of the oblation-portions which the sacrificers offer for the gods and who are strong; prajāvatā āsā vacasā — 'with the word that has the greatest qualities, which grants fruit in the form of offspring; which has become one's own utterance; with words that invoke the other gods' — he explains that Agni invokes Indra and the rest by words that call the gods."
- होत्रम् — hotrā kriyamāṇaṃ karma — "in the sacrifice, the one who calls the gods who have come to receive the oblation-portions, speaking the hymns of each, is called hotṛ. The work done by him is called hotra; that is, the invoking of the gods, the hotṛ's duty."
- पोत्रम् — potrā kṛtaṃ karma — "like the hotṛ, the potṛ also has his duty to perform; the work done by him is called potra. In Skandasvāmin's commentary: 'O Agni, perform the works of the hotṛ and potṛ; since you are one who performs the sacrifice, and since you are denoted by the word yajatra, you are worthy of sacrifice; therefore, knowing the intention of our praises, give us wealth abundantly by various means' — thus he explains."

- जनितः — āhutidvārā sarvasya janayituḥ — "the root janī prādurbhāve has the meaning 'arising'; since it is used here in the causative sense, the meaning is that Agni, accepting the oblation-portions in the sacrifices, makes those of various kinds that have arisen to arise."

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

O Agni, knower of the three times! As, in the sacrifice of the wise Manu, together with wise priests, you gratified the gods with caru, puroḍāśa and the rest, so now, in our sacrifice, gratify the gods with the delight-giving ladle.

Meaning: How (kathā) shall we give (dāśema) oblations to this Agni? — we are unable to perform a sacrifice worthy of Agni. Or: what kind of hymn (gīḥ) — dear to all the gods (devajuṣṭā) — can be uttered (ucyate) for this shining (bhāmine) Agni? We are unable even to make such a hymn. Agni, who is immortal (amṛtaḥ), possessed of truth or of sacrifice (ṛtāvā), the invoker (hotā) of the gods, or the accomplisher of the offering, the best sacrificer (yajiṣṭhaḥ) — such Agni, being among us mortals (martyeṣu), makes (kṛṇoti) the gods endowed with the oblations: for such an Agni, "how shall we give?" — thus the connection with the preceding words.

To that Agni — immortal, truthful, the hotṛ of the gods and the performer of sacrifices — who, being among us mortals, brings the oblations and the like to the gods: what are the oblations that we should offer? Or, what praise would be fit to be used, in a manner pleasing to the gods, for that shining one?

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> What (oblations) may we offer to Agni? What praise is addressed to the luminous (Agni) that is agreeable to the Gods? that Agni who is immortal and observant of truth, who is the invoker of the Gods, the performer of sacrifices, and who (present) amongst men, conveys oblations to the deities.

Meaning: The Agni who in the sacrifices (adhvareṣu) is śaṃtamaḥ — exceedingly comfort-giving — ṛtāvā, truthful, a seer of things as they are, is the hotṛ, invoker of the gods. O priests and sacrificers, make that very Agni turn to you (ā kṛṇudhvam) with praises (namobhiḥ). When (yat) this Agni goes (veḥ) for a mortal (martāya) — the sacrificer — to the gods, then that Agni both knows (bodhāti) all the gods connected with the sacrifice and, knowing them, with mind (manasā) worships (yajāti) them with oblations. Therefore connect it so: "make that very Agni turn to you."

13. Reading note: "yaṣṭavyān" re-read from the print; the Saṃhitā reads "yad ver"; the bhāṣya explains "veḥ" as the third-person veti, the second-person form standing for the third by the substitution rule.

Grammatical tail : veḥ (root vī gatyādiṣu; Vedic laṅ in the present sense; the second-person singular ending for the third by tiṅāṃ tiṅo bhavanti); bodhāti (root budha avagamane; leṭ with aḍ; no nighāta since ca is connected); manasā (transposition of m and n).

॥ प्रतिपदार्थः ॥ — Pratipadārtha

yaḥ — which Agni; adhvareṣu — in sacrifices; śaṃtamaḥ — exceedingly comfort-giving; ṛtāvā — a seer of things as they are; hotā — the invoker of the gods; tam u — that very Agni; namobhiḥ — with hymns; ā kṛṇudhvam — turn to yourselves; yat — when; agniḥ — Agni; martāya — for a man (the sacrificer); devān — to invite the gods; veḥ — goes; saḥ — that Agni; bodhāti — knows (the gods to be worshipped); manasā — with praises; yajāti ca — and worships (with oblations and the like).

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

Agni, on behalf of the sacrificer, goes out to the gods, knowing (whom is to be worshipped by whom), and gratifies them with (suitable) praises. Therefore turn to yourselves, with hymns of praise, Agni — comfort-giving in sacrifices, a seer of things as they are, and the caller of the gods.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed): [14]

> bring hither, with prises [sic], him who is most constant in sacrifices, observant of truth, and the invoker (of the Gods), for Agni, when he repairs to the Gods on the part of man, knows those (who are to be worshipped), and worships them with reverence.

Meaning: That Agni is the kratu — doer of rites; he is the marya — the destroyer, the withdrawer of all; he is the sādhu — the accomplisher, the producer; and he is the rathī — the one who brings (raṃhayitā) the wonderful (adbhutasya), unattained wealth, as a friend (mitro na) brings wealth. Such Agni the peoples (viśaḥ), desiring (devayantīḥ) the gods for themselves, first (prathamam) address (upa bruvate) in the sacrifices (medheṣu): coming with hymns they say, "he is chief." ॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

Agni is the performer of sacrifices; he is the destroyer and the creator of all things; and, like a friend, he gives unattained wealth. Such a beautiful Agni is worshipped first by the people who, in the sacrifices, desire the gods.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

> For he is the performer of rites, he is the destroyer and reviver (of all things), and, like a friend, he is the donor of unattained wealth; all men reverencing the Gods, and approaching the well-looking Agni, repeat his name first in holy rites.

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

Meaning: Among the leaders (nṛṇām) of the sacrifice, he who is the best leader (nṛtamaḥ), the devourer (riśādāḥ) of the injurers — the enemies — or the one who casts out those who injure: such Agni, may he (vetu) desire (accept) our praises (giraḥ) and our rite (dhītim), joined with the food in the form of oblation (avasā). And those sacrificers who, rich (maghavānaḥ) with extensive wealth (tanā), mighty (śaviṣṭhāḥ) and having prepared the oblation-food (vājaprasūtāḥ), wish (iṣayanta) to have the hymn (manma) in praise of Agni made by the priests — may Agni desire their praise too.

Grammatical tail : nṛṇām (no lengthening, both being possible); tanā (root tanu vistāre; ac in the pacādi class; the instrumental ending replaced by ā by supāṃ sulug…; initial acute as in the vṛṣādi class); śaviṣṭhāḥ (śava is a name of strength; vini in the possessive sense; iṣṭhan in the superlative; loss of vin); iṣayanta (root iṣu icchāyām, causative; laṅ; no guṇa).

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

May Agni, the best of those who conduct sacrifice and the destroyer of enemies, accept our praise and the offering of oblations; the sacrificers who are rich, mighty and have prepared oblations praise Agni — may Agni accept that too.

Meaning: Agni, ṛtāvā — possessed of truth or of sacrifice — jātavedāḥ — one who has (obtained) wealth or knowledge — was thus praised (astoṣṭa) by the wise (viprebhiḥ) Gotamas (gotamebhiḥ), the sages of Gotama's line. And having been praised, Agni gave these Gotamas the shining (dyumnam) Soma to drink (pīpayat) — or: he made them drink it; likewise Agni accepted (made them drink?) the oblation-food (vājam). Having thus accepted the Soma and the oblation of caru, puroḍāśa and the rest, that Agni, knowing well (cikitvān) the service (joṣam) done by us, attains (yāti) nourishment (puṣṭim): receives growth; or, may he make our riches grow.

Grammatical tail : gotamebhiḥ (the aṇ by ṛṣyandhakavṛṣṇikurubhyaś ca, Pā. 4-1-114, elided in the plural by atribhṛgukutsavasiṣṭhagotamāṅgirobhyaś ca, Pā. 2-4-65); astoṣṭa (root stu, passive luṅ, the absence of ciṇ being Vedic, ciṇabhāvaś chāndasaḥ); pīpayat (root pā pāne, causative, luṅ; caṅ for cli); joṣam (root juṣī; ghañ; initial acute).

34. Reading note: the opening "…jātaprajño vāyam agnir…" checked against the print; the tail's compressed middle re-read ("ciṇabhāvaś chāndasaḥ"); Pā. 4-1-114 and 2-4-65 as printed.

ṛtāvā — truthful (possessed of sacrifice); jātavedāḥ — wise (rich); agniḥ — Agni; viprebhiḥ — by the wise; gotamebhiḥ — by the sages of Gotama's line; astoṣṭa — was praised; saḥ — that Agni; dyumnam — the shining Soma; eṣu — to these (Gotamas); pīpayat — made them drink; saḥ — (likewise) that Agni; vājam — the oblation-food (accepted); saḥ — (that Agni who has thus accepted the Soma and the oblations); joṣam — the service (done by us); ā cikitvān — knowing well; puṣṭiṃ yāti — obtains growth (may he make our wealth grow).

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

Agni, truthful and all-knowing, praised by the wise Gotamas, accepted the Soma and the oblations (offered by them). May such an Agni, accepting the service done by us, make our wealth and the like grow.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed; the sentence runs on to p. 505):

original p. 505

English Translation of Rik 77.5 (concluded):

> has he given the bright Soma-juice to drink, along with the sacrificial food, and, gratified by our devotion, he obtains nutriment (for himself.)

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

- एषु — "among these — that is, among the sages of the line of Gotama, or to the sages. Since in this Ṛk it is said gotamebhiḥ astoṣṭa — 'was praised by those of Gotama's line' — this pronoun eṣu indicates those very sages of Gotama's line."

- द्युम्नम् — "since dyumna is read among the twenty-eight names of wealth, magham, rekṇaḥ and so on (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]), dyumna means wealth. And when explaining this word Yāska has quoted:

— saying dyumnaṃ dyotater yaśo vā annaṃ vā ('dyumna is from dyut, "to shine": fame, or food'), he gives the two meanings, bright fame and food. In the present Ṛk, since the word pīpayat is a verb with the sense of drinking, the commentator explains dyumnam as dyotamānaṃ somaṃ pīpayat — 'he drank (made drink) the shining Soma-juice'. The sense 'Agni accepted the food that is endowed with the quality of oblation' could also be given for this word." [35]

- ऋतावा

— "the meaning of this word was given in the preceding Ṛk."

- विप्रेभिः — "since vipraḥ, vigraḥ and so on are read among the twenty-four names of the wise (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]), viprebhiḥ means wise or intelligent."

- जातवेदाः — jātadhano jātaprajño vā — "since vedas has the two senses 'wealth' (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]) and 'wisdom', jātavedāḥ means one who has obtained wealth, or one who has obtained wisdom."

Sūkta 78 — "abhi tvā gotamāḥ"

Title of the sūkta [1]: ಎಪ್ಪತ್ತೆಂಟನೆಯ ಸೂಕ್ತವು — "The seventy-eighth sūkta".

Sāyaṇa's introduction [2]

> अभि त्वेति पंचर्चं पंचमं सूक्तं गोतमस्यार्षमाग्नेयं गायत्रं । तथा चानुक्रांतं । अभि त्वा गायत्रं पंचेति ॥ विनियोगो लैंगिकः ॥

abhi tveti pañcarcaṃ pañcamaṃ sūktaṃ gotamasyārṣam āgneyaṃ gāyatraṃ | tathā cānukrāntaṃ | abhi tvā gāyatraṃ pañceti || viniyogo laiṅgikaḥ ||

Meaning: "Abhi tvā" is the fifth sūkta, of five Ṛks, the vision of Gotama, addressed to Agni, in Gāyatrī metre; the Anukramaṇī says "abhi tvā, gāyatra, five". Its application is laiṅgika (by the indication of the text).

अनुवादः — Anuvāda [3]: This sūkta, beginning "abhi tvā gotamā", is the fifth sūkta in the thirteenth anuvāka. It has five Ṛks. Gotama is the ṛṣi, Agni the deity, Gāyatrī the metre. The Anukramaṇikā says "abhi tvā gāyatraṃ pañca". The application is laiṅgika.

Meaning: O jātavedaḥ — knower of what is born — O vicarṣaṇe — in particular seer of all — Agni: Gotama (gotamāḥ), the seer of this sūkta — the plural is for honour though the sage is one — praised (astaut, supplied) you with the word (girā) in the form of hymns, facing you; as he did, we too praise you, repeatedly (nonumaḥ), facing you, with dyumnaiḥ — with mantras that make known your own qualities.

Grammatical tail [7]: nonumaḥ (root ṇu stutau; yaṅluk; laṭ; ṇatva after the prefix).

॥ प्रतिपदार्थः ॥ — Pratipadārtha of Rik 78.1

jātavedaḥ — knower of all that is born; vicarṣaṇe — O Agni, who sees all in particular; tvā — you; gotamāḥ — the sages of Gotama's line (seers of this sūkta); girā — with words in the form of praise; abhi — facing (you they praised, and we too); dyumnaiḥ — with (mantras) that make known (your) qualities; abhi pra ṇonumaḥ — we praise facing (you), again and again.

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha

O all-knowing, all-seeing Agni! The descendants of Gotama praise you with words in the form of praise; as they did, we too, facing you, praise you again and again with mantras that make known your qualities.

English Translation (the source's own, as printed):

---

6. Reading note (250 dpi crop): the print reads "yaṅlugantāl laṭ" (second letter of "yaṅ" ञ्-like, taken as the standard yaṅ); the sūtra is printed shortened as "upasargād asamāse 'pīti ṇatvam", without "ṇopadeśasya".

7. characterized

> Knower and beholder of all that exists, Gotama celebrates you Agni, with praise; we praise you repeatedly with commendatory (hymns).

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics

- गोतमाः — "the sages of Gotama's line. Though there is a plural word gotamāḥ in this Ṛk, Sāyaṇa has explained that the plural is used for honour, and that therefore this word should be given only the singular sense 'the sage Gotama'. Since Gotama himself is the ṛṣi of this sūkta, this explanation of the commentator is consistent. In modern language too, writers and authors, when mentioning their own names in their works, habitually use the plural words 'we' and 'our'; so here too it must be held that the usage is of this kind. Or, for the word gotamāḥ the sense 'the sage Gotama and his sons, grandsons and other descendants' may also be given."
- विचर्षणे — viśeṣeṇa sarvasya draṣṭaḥ — "one who sees all in particular."
- द्युम्नैः — "the explanation of this word was given in the preceding Ṛk. Though the word dyumna has the sense 'radiance', the commentator supplies the word mantraiḥ and explains it as 'with praises that make known your qualities'."

original p. 510

Continuation of the Pratipadārtha-end/bhāṣya-adjacent notes of Rik 78.1:

- नोनुमः — punaḥ punaḥ stumaḥ — "we praise again and again" — i.e. repeatedly (anekāvṛtti, the frequentative sense). So the Kannada explains: "mattē mattē stōtra māḍuvēvu".

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 78.1) [8]

- गिरा — instrumental singular of the feminine gir (ending in r); the udātta accent on the case-ending comes by Pāṇini's rule "sāvekācaś tṛtīyādiḥ" (सावेकाचस्तृतीयादिर्विभक्तिः) — Pā. Sū. 6-1-[168?] [?].
- जातवेदः — vocative singular. Being at the beginning of the pāda, the aṣṭamika (eighth-rule) nighāta accent does not come; "āmantritasya ca" (आमन्त्रितस्य च, Pā. Sū. 6-1-[198?]) gives the udātta on the first syllable. By the sūtra "āmantritaṃ pūrvam avidyamānavat" (आमन्त्रितं पूर्वमविद्यमानवत्) the preceding word is treated as non-existent for this, so the following vocative vicarṣaṇe too gets no nighāta accent; the earlier sūtra makes the initial syllable udātta.
- प्र णोनुमः — the root ṇu stutau (णु स्तुतौ, adādi class). By the sense "very much" or "again and again" the intensive yaṅ is added — "dhātor ekāco halādeḥ kriyāsamabhihāre yaṅ" (धातोरेकाचो हलादेः क्रियासमभिहारे यङ्) — Pā. Sū. 3-1-[22?] [?]; the yaṅ is elided by "yaṅo'ci ca" (यङोऽचि च) — Pā. Sū. 2-4-[74?] [?]; "sanyaṅoḥ" (सन्यङोः, Pā. Sū. 6-1-9) gives reduplication; "guṇo yaṅluk-oḥ" (गुणो यङ्लुकोः, Pā. Sū. 7-4-[82?]) gives guṇa to the reduplicative syllable; "sanādyantā dhātavaḥ" (सनाद्यन्ता धातवः) gives the status of a root; then the present laṭ, first-person plural mas; the form nonumaḥ. The accent is nighāta because of the atiṅanta ("with a tiṅ-ending") (?); when the preposition pra precedes, "upasargād asamāse'pi ṇopadeśasya" (उपसर्गादसमासेऽपि णोपदेशस्य, Pā. Sū. 8-4-[14?]) makes the initial n of this ṇopadeśa root into ṇ after the preposition, the r of pra being the cause and being in the preceding word; thus pra ṇonumaḥ. ||1||

"To you, that (Agni) whom Gotama, desirous of riches, worships with praise, we offer adoration with commendatory (hymns)." — as printed.

- गिरा — "with the word", that is, with a word of the form of a hymn of praise.
- रायस्कामः — "Among the twenty-eight names of wealth beginning with maghaṃ, reṇku (मघं रेक्णः), the word rāyaḥ occurs; hence rāyaḥ means wealth (Ni. 3-[9?] [?]). Rāyaskāma means 'one who desires wealth'. The sage of this sūkta, Gotama, has praised Agni for the attainment of wealth."
- दुवस्यति — paricarati — "serves". "Among the ten names of the act of service beginning iraj-yati, vidhema (इरज्यति, विधेम), the word duvasyati occurs; hence duvasyati means 'serves'; that is, 'does śuśrūṣā' (Ni. 3-[13?] [?]). Gloss, editorial and tentative:* "… (serve) Jātavedas, the household Agni, who gives oblations, of good rites."

"In such Ṛks the word duvasyati has the sense of service" (paricaraṇa).

- द्युम्नैरभि प्र णोनुमः — "This pāda occurs in all five Ṛks of this sūkta, repeated again and again like a refrain (pallavi)."

- रायस्कामः — "he who desires riches (rāyaḥ = wealths)": the root kam kāntau (कमु कान्तौ); with a word meaning the object placed before it, the affix aṇ by "karmaṇy aṇ" (कर्मण्यण्, Pā. Sū. 3-2-1); vṛddhi of the penultimate (upadhā) by "ata upadhāyāḥ" (अत उपधायाः, Pā. Sū. 7-2-116 [?]). The elision (luk) of the second-case ending, which the sūtra "supo dhātuprātipadikayoḥ" (सुपो धातुप्रातिपदिकयोः) would otherwise bring, is prevented by "tatpuruṣe kṛti bahulam" (तत्पुरुषे कृति बहुलम्, Pā. Sū. 6-3-14 [?]) — the word bahulam being taken here as well, so aluk arises. "ūḍidaṃ padādi…" (ऊडिदं पदाद्यप्पुम्रैद्युभ्यः, Pā. Sū. 6-1-171 [?]) gives the udātta to the case-ending of rāyaḥ, so that the final syllable is udātta. Because dāsībhārādi compounds are included, the first member's own accent (pūrvapadaprakṛtisvara) comes in the compound. In rāyaḥ + kāmaḥ, by "ataḥ kṛkamikaṃsakumbha…" (अतः कृकमिकंसकुम्भ…, Pā. Sū. 8-3-46 [?]), since the root kam follows, the visarga becomes s.
- दुवस्यति — the root duvas upatāpe paricaraṇe ca, of the kaṇḍvādi group; by "kaṇḍvādibhyo yak" (कण्ड्वादिभ्यो यक् Pā. Sū. 3-1-27 [?]) the affix yak in its own sense; "sanādyantā dhātavaḥ" gives the root-status to the stem ending in -ya; then laṭ in the present sense, tip for the third person singular, śap; "ato guṇe" (अतो गुणे, Pā. Sū. 6-1-97) gives the single (following) form; thus duvasyati. The accent is nighāta because it is atiṅanta in the pāda… [12].
- द्युम्नैः — by "ūḍidaṃ padādi…" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-[171?]) the case-ending takes the udātta.
- नोनुमः — "explained in the preceding Mantra (78.1)." ||2||

"O Agni, we call you — you who specially favour (us) with food — like the Aṅgirases (to our sacrifice). (Such as you are) we praise again and again with mantras that make known (your) qualities."

English Translation

"We invoke you, such as you are, the giver of abundant food, in like manner as did Angiras, we praise you repeatedly which [sic] commendatory (hymns)." — as printed, the printed text reads "… repeatedly which commendatory (hymns)", so "which" for "with" is a misprint [sic].

"In such Ṛks the matter of the sage Aṅgiras having invoked Agni and served him is described. Because that arrangement (vidhāna) has been regarded as of the highest authority, many ṛṣis have given just this example (simile)."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 78.3)

- वाजसातमम् — the root ṣaṇu dāne (षणु दाने); with vāja as the upapada, the affix viṭ by "janasanakhanakramagamo viṭ" (जनसनखनक्रमगमो विट् Pā. Sū. 3-2-67 [?]); viṭ being followed, the nasal-ending root takes ā (ātva) by "vidvanoranunāsikasyāt" (विड्वनोरनुनासिकस्यात् Pā. Sū. 6-4-41 [?]) and the savarṇa-dīrgha; hence vājasā. Then the superlative: "atiśāyane tamabiṣṭhanau" (अतिशायने तमबिष्ठनौ, Pā. Sū. 5-3-55 [?]) gives tamap; since tamap has the mark p, it is anudātta; by "gatikārakopapadāt kṛt" (गतिकारकोपपदात् कृत्, Pā. Sū. 6-2-139 [?]) the accent of the last member of the kṛt-ending compound is kept. Accusative singular.

- अङ्गिरस्वत् — aṅgirasa iva: "tena tulyaṃ kriyā ced vatiḥ" (तेन तुल्यं क्रिया चेद्वतिः, Pā. Sū. 5-1-115 [?]) gives the affix vati. When vati follows, the pada-designation would arise, so that rutva would be obtained; but by the statement "nabho'ṅgiro-manuṣāṃ vaty upasaṅkhyānam" (नभोऽङ्गिरोमनुषां वत्युपसंख्यानम्, Pā. Sū. 1-4-18, vārttika 3) the bha-designation arises, and therefore, there being no pada-designation, rutva and the like do not arise.

Top of page — the grammar of Rik 78.3 continues from p. 515 (grammar page, noted briefly):

- हवामहे — the root hvev spardhāyāṃ śabde ca (ह्वेञ् स्पर्धायां शब्दे च); laṭ, first-person plural, with the ending mahiṅ; "ṭita ātmanepadānām eṭ" (टित आत्मनेपदानामेत्) gives e; śap. By "bahulaṃ chandasi" (बहुलं छन्दसि, Pā. Sū. 6-1-34 [?]) the saṃprasāraṇa of the root arises even though no cause is present; "saṃprasāraṇāc ca" (सम्प्रसारणाच्च) gives the single prior form (pūrvarūpa); the guṇa because of śap (hu → ho), then avādeśa (av); "ato dīrgho yañi" (अतो दीर्घो यञि, Pā. Sū. 7-3-101) — by mahiṅ the stem hava has its final lengthened (havā-mahe). It comes in a pāda that has an atiṅ (non-finite-verb) word — hence nighāta accent. ||3||

- दस्यून् — "Though one might state for this word the general sense 'Rākṣasas', it is fitting to give Yāska's explanation:

dasyur dasyateḥ kṣayārthād upadasyanty asmin rasā upadāsayati karmāṇi | (Ni. 7-23, as read from a coarse 600 dpi crop: "೭-೨೩") — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Dasyu is from the root das in the sense of destruction: in him the juices (rasāḥ) waste away; or he causes the rites to fail (upadāsayati)."

The Kannada continues: "(Meaning:) one who dries up the rasa-substances, waters, and destroys them, one who causes lack of rain (anāvṛṣṭi). For this very reason the meaning of dasyu is 'one who causes obstacle (vighna) to sacrificial and other rites'. The Western scholars say that dasyu means the black people, the early inhabitants who had settled in this land, who practised theft and caused troubles to the sacrifices of the Āryas, and so (they suppose) were called Rākṣasas. To protect themselves from such dasyu people, the ṛṣis praise Agni and Indra in many Ṛks —"

> महान्तं चिदर्बुदं नि क्रमीः पदा सनादेव दस्युहत्याय जज्ञिषे ।

mahāntaṃ cid arbudaṃ ni kramīḥ padā sanād eva dasyuhatyāya jajñiṣe | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-51-6) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "You trampled down even the great Arbuda with your foot; from of old you were born for the slaying of the Dasyus."

> उपप्रयेन्द्र [?] दस्युहत्याय वज्री यद्ध सूनुः श्रवसे नाम दधे ।

> महे यत्त्वा पुरूरवो रणायावर्धयन्दस्युहत्याय देवाः ।

mahe yat tvā purūravo raṇāyāvardhayan dasyuhatyāya devāḥ | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-95-7 [?]) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "When the gods made you grow, O Purūravas, for great combat, for the slaying of the Dasyus."

> तमु त्वा पाथ्यो वृषा समीधे दस्युहन्तमम् ।

tam u tvā pāthyo vṛṣā samīdhe dasyuhantamam | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 6-16-15) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Pāthya the bull kindled you, the best slayer of the Dasyus."

> तमागन्म त्रसदस्युं मान्धातुर्दस्युहन्तममग्निं यज्ञेषु पूर्व्यं नभन्तामन्यके समे ।

tam āganma trasadasyuṃ māndhātur dasyuhantamam agniṃ yajñeṣu pūrvyaṃ nabhantām anyake same | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 8-39-8) — the printed "ತ್ರಸದಸ್ಯುಂ ಮಂಧಾತುಃ" is read as above; doubtful [?]. Gloss, editorial and tentative: "We have come to him, Agni, the old (god) of the sacrifices, the best slayer of the Dasyus, [of] Trasadasyu (and of) Māndhātṛ; let all the others be destroyed."

"Many such examples may be given."

- वृत्रहन्तमम् — "What has been said about the slaying of Dasyus applies equally to the slaying of Vṛtra. Though this word is used especially in senses relating to Indra, in some contexts the qualities of Indra are attributed to Agni and this word is used also as an epithet of Agni. For example —

> अग्निं देवासोऽग्रियमिन्धते वृत्रहन्तमम् ।

agniṃ devāso 'griyam indhate vṛtrahantamam | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 6-16-48) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "The gods kindle Agni, the first, the best slayer of Vṛtras."

> आगन्म वृत्रहन्तमं ज्येष्ठमग्निमानवम् ।

āganma vṛtrahantamaṃ jyeṣṭham agnim ānavam | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 8-74-4) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "We have come to Agni, of the race of Manu, the eldest, the best slayer of Vṛtras."

In these examples the word vṛtrahantama is of Agni. When used of Indra, this word means 'he killed the demon Vṛtra'; when used of Agni, it is proper to give the general sense of the word vṛtra, 'enemy', and to say 'destroyer of enemies'. In the present context the bhāṣyakāra has given pāpmānaḥ (sins) as the sense of vṛtra, i.e. 'evil, sin' (duritam); the sense of pāpa has been given."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 78.4) [16]

- वृत्रहन्तमम् — vṛtraṃ hatavān = vṛtrahā: the root han hiṃsāgatyoḥ (हन हिंसागत्योः); with vṛtra as upapada, the affix kvip in the past/"bhūta" sense by "brahmabhrūṇavṛtreṣu kvip" (ब्रह्मभ्रूणवृत्रेषु क्विप्, Pā. Sū. 3-2-[87]) giving vṛtrahan; for the superlative, "atiśāyane tamabiṣṭhanau" (Pā. Sū. 5-3-[55]) gives tamap; since the "svādiṣu sarvanāmasthāne" (स्वादिष्वसर्वनामस्थाने, Pā. Sū. 1-4-17) gives the pada-designation, "nalopaḥ prātipadikāntasya" (नलोपः प्रातिपदिकान्तस्य, Pā. Sū. 8-2-7) drops the n of han; "nādghasya" (Pā. Sū. 8-2-[17]) — the affixes taras and tamap are called gha (the gha-designation taras-tamapau ghaḥ)… [17].

- दस्यून् — "since the a-sound in avadhūnuṣe is aṭ following, the n becomes ru by 'dīrghād aṭi samānapāde' (दीर्घादटि समानपादे, Pā. Sū. 8-3-9); here the preceding ū becomes nasal by 'atrānunāsikaḥ pūrvasya tu vā' (अत्रानुनासिकः पूर्वस्य तु वा, Pā. Sū. 8-3-2)."
- अवधूनुषे — ava is the preposition; the root dhūñ kampane (धूञ् कम्पने); laṭ, second person singular; se by "thāsaḥ se" (थासः से, Pā. Sū. 3-4-80); the śnu affix by "svādibhyaḥ śnuḥ" (स्वादिभ्यः श्नुः, Pā. Sū. 3-1-73); the accent is nighāta because it is atiṅanta in the pāda. ||4||

Here the Anukramaṇī states: 'Hiraṇyakeśa — twelve; the first two triads are Triṣṭubh and Uṣṇih respectively; the first is to Agni, or the middle one [the lightning-Agni] (…)' — [the sūkta is] Gāyatra in the previous (sūkta); in this one, Triṣṭubh [?]… This much is the difference: the first triad is Traiṣṭubha (in Triṣṭubh); the second is Auṣṇiha (in Uṣṇih). Anuvāda (Kannada), continued from p. 521: "...In this (sūkta) there are some special features. The first three Ṛks are in the triṣṭup metre; from three to six (i.e. Ṛks 4–6) the Ṛks are in the uṣṇik metre; the remaining Ṛks are in the gāyatrī metre. For the first three Ṛks the deity is Agni in the form of lightning in the middle region (antarikṣa), or Agni alone; for the remaining nine Ṛks also the deity is only Agni. As regards the application (viniyoga): at the time of the Prātaranuvāka mantras, for the Ṛks of the triṣṭup metre connected with the Āgneya rite (kratu), and for the Āśvina-śastra mantras, these first three Ṛks of the sūkta are used, as is explained by the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra in the sūtra 'hiraṇyakeśa iti tisro 'paśyam asya mahata iti sūkte' (Āśv. 4-13 [?]). And in the Kārīreṣṭi the first two Ṛks hiraṇyakeśa are to be used as yājyā and anuvākyā Ṛks, as is directed by the sūtra of the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra 'hiraṇyakeśo rajaso visāra iti dve, tvaṃ tyā cid acyutā dhāmante viśvaṃ bhuvanam adhi śritam iti vā' (Āśv. 3-13 [?])."

The uṣas, the goddesses of dawn, are navedāḥ — 'they do not know' (na vidanti); that is: it is Agni alone who knows the drawing out of water from a cloud, the Uṣases do not know. An illustration of the ignorance: yaśasvatīḥ = those who have food (annayuktāḥ), apasyuvaḥ = (those who are) desirous of their own work (karma) [?], satyāḥ = of unfailing undertaking, na = like — like such people (prajāḥ, 'subjects'). ॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha of Rik 79.1 [6]

"Agni, with flames of golden brilliance, delighting the clouds and destroying them (making them waterless), swift of motion like the wind, with fair radiance, makes the water fall down from the clouds. The Uṣas deities do not know this release of water by Agni, just as truthful subjects, provided with food and so on, intent only on their own works, know nothing else."

English Translation [7]

"The Golden haired Agni is the agitator of the clouds when the rain is poured forth, and moving with the swiftness of the wind, shines with a bright radiance. The mornings know not (of the showers), like honest (people) who, provided with food, are intent upon their own labours" — as printed (the sentence ends without a full stop in the print).

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics (Rik 79.1) [8]

"The meaning of this Ṛk is somewhat intricate: Agni in the form of lightning (vidyudrūpa), shining in the antarikṣa, makes the water that is in the clouds fall on the earth in the form of rain. The flames of this Agni resemble golden tresses. And Agni (in the lightning form) is of very swift motion like the wind (that is, the lightning, shining, is seen for a moment-half in the sky and immediately becomes invisible). And the knowledge of making the rain fall from the clouds belongs only to Agni of the form of lightning. The Uṣas deities have no such power; that is, the Uṣas deities have nothing to do with the rain. In the world, people endowed with food and other wealth, absorbed in their own works and duties, take no notice of other matters; in the same way, the Uṣas deities know not the arrangement of sending the rain from the clouds. That is the chief sense."

- हिरण्यकेशः — "When Agni is blazing in the sky, its flames, together with a slight redness, shine most brilliantly; therefore Agni has these flames as golden-like hair..." [9]

original p. 525

Special Topics of Rik 79.1, continued from p. 524 (the sentence on हिरण्यकेशः resumes mid-way):

"...the comparison is conventional (rūḍhi). Just as gold shines brightly, so the flames of Agni shine. Since these, rising upward from Agni, appear like the hair on the head, the comparison of the flames to hair is fitting. The use of this word hiraṇyakeśa occurs in the Ṛgveda only in this Ṛk, and nowhere else. With reference to the pair of bay horses of Indra, in the Ṛk —

> इह त्या सधमाद्या हरी हिरण्यकेश्या ।

iha tyā sadhamādyā harī hiraṇyakeśyā | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 8-32-29) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Here (are) those two bay horses, sharing the revelry, golden-maned."

— the word hiraṇyakeśyā is used. The comparison of Agni's flame to hiraṇyajihvaḥ ('golden-tongued') is stated in the Ṛk Saṃ. 6-71-3."

- रजसः — "Yāska gives an etymological explanation (nirvacana) of this word —

> रजः । रजो रजतेर्ज्योतीरज उच्यते । उदकं रज उच्यते । लोका रजांस्युच्यन्ते । असृगहनी रजसी उच्येते ।

9. the passage runs on to the next page; it is split where the print splits it

rajaḥ | rajo rajater jyotī-raja ucyate | udakaṃ raja ucyate | lokā rajāṃsy ucyante | asṛg-ahanī rajasī ucyete | (Ni. 4-19) — I give the line as the print has it (the words after rajaḥ are as read; the Kannada gloss follows). Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Rajas: from the root raj 'to shine'; light is called rajas; water is called rajas; the worlds are called rajāṃsi; blood and day are called the two rajasī."

That is: (1) Rajaḥ — the word, derived from the verb rajati, 'it shines', means light, brightness; since it makes other things visible by its own light, rajas is a name for light. As example they have given the mantra yā te agne rajaḥśayā tanūḥ (…) [the mantra is quoted only in part in the print].

1. Udakaṃ raja ucyate — rajaḥ means water. For examples of this sense —

nava ca yan navatiṃ ca sravantīḥ śyeno na bhīto ataro [?] rajāṃsi | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-32-14) — the verb before rajāṃsi is read ataro with doubt [?] (the print shows the first vowel unclearly). Gloss, editorial and tentative: "When you crossed, like a frightened falcon, the ninety-nine flowing (waters)…" (sense uncertain).

> भुवो यज्ञस्य रजसश्च नेता यत्रा नियुद्भिः सचसे शिवाभिः ।

bhuvo yajñasya rajasaś ca netā yatrā niyudbhiḥ sacase śivābhiḥ | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-8-6) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "You became the leader of the sacrifice and of the waters (/space), where you attend with your auspicious teams."

The word rajas in these Ṛks gives the sense 'water'.

> पूर्वे अर्धे रजसो अप्त्यस्य गवां जनित्र्यकृत प्र केतुम् ।

pūrve ardhe rajaso aptyasya gavāṃ janitry akṛta pra ketum | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-134-5) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "In the earlier half of the watery (region), the mother of the cows made a banner (sign) appear."

> इन्द्रश्च या चक्रथुः सोम तानि धुरा न युक्ता रजसो वहन्ति ।

indraś ca yā cakrathuḥ soma tāni dhurā na yuktā rajaso vahanti | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-164-19) — the reference numerals are doubtful [?]. Gloss, editorial and tentative: "And what you two, Indra and Soma, have done, (those deeds) bear (it) on like yoked ones to the pole of the (watery) region."

"(3) The word rajas in these Ṛks gives the sense 'world' (loka).

1. Asṛg-ahanī rajasī ucyete — asṛk is blood (rudhira); and ahaḥ (day): both, asṛg-ahanī, are also called the two rajasī. The word rajasī gives the senses 'blood' and 'day'.

> अहश्च कृष्णमहरर्जुनं च वि वर्तेते रजसी वेद्याभिः ।

ahaś ca kṛṣṇam ahar arjunaṃ ca vi vartete rajasī vedyābhiḥ | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 6-9-1) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "The black day and the bright day revolve apart, the two (spaces), by their courses."

In this Ṛk the word rajas gives the sense 'day'. In the present context the sense of rajas is light, brightness."

- ध्रजीमान् — dhraja gatau — "one who moves with speed. As the wind blows swiftly, so is Agni of swift motion."
- शुचिभ्राजाः — śobhanadīptiḥ — "one who shines exceedingly; that the lightning-Agni (the flash) shines intensely is well known in the world."

- उषसो नवेदाः — "Since it is said that the Uṣas deities do not know the capacity of making rain fall from the clouds, it is not as if the Uṣas deity were being blamed. The bhāṣyakāra explains that the ṛṣi describes it in this way in order to bring out the praise of Agni."
- यशस्वतीः अपस्युवः — "Among the hundred and one names of water beginning with aṇaḥ [?] the word yaśaḥ occurs (Ni. [1-12] [?]); so yaśaḥ means water; among the twenty-eight names of food beginning with vājaḥ the word yaśaḥ occurs (Ni. [2-7] [?]); so yaśaḥ means food; among the twenty-eight names of wealth beginning with maghaṃ reṇkaḥ the word yaśaḥ occurs; so yaśaḥ means wealth (Ni. 3-[9] [?]); and in common usage the word also means fame (kīrti). Of these the bhāṣyakāra has accepted the sense 'food'. Because yaśasvatīḥ is an epithet qualifying apasyuvaḥ [the words for] waters or rain-water, and because rain is the cause of the growth of plants and so of food and of the production of nourishment, the sense 'food' for yaśaḥ is the fitting one here. Yaśasvatīḥ means 'endowed with food, or with the means of producing nourishment'."
- सत्याः — avitathārambhāḥ — "The bhāṣyakāra has explained this word as 'truthful people (subjects)'."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 79.1) [10]

- विसारे — root sṛ gatau; the affix ghañ (ending with a mark ñ, so vṛddhi of the penultimate vowel — "acoñṇiti" (अचो ञ्णिति, Pā. Sū. 7-2-115)); the accent is final-udātta by "karṣātvato ghañaḥ" (कर्षात्वतो घञोऽन्त उदात्तः, Pā. Sū. 6-1-159 [?]); vi is a gati, so the compound is formed with "gatikārakopapadāt kṛt" (Pā. Sū. 6-2-139), and the accent of the kṛt-final member (kṛduttarapadaprakṛtisvara) comes.

10. grammar page, noted briefly

- ध्रजीमान् — root dhraj gatau; the affix in in the sense of the action by "in sarvadhātubhyaḥ" (इन् सर्वधातुभ्यः, Uṇ. Sū. 4-[117]? [?]), giving dhraji; in the sense of "this exists" the affix matup by "tad asyāsty asminn iti" (Pā. 5-2-94); lengthening of the preceding by "anyeṣām api dṛśyate" (अन्येषामपि दृश्यते, Pā. Sū. 6-3-[137]); since the first-case ending (su) follows, uk being a mark (ugit) there is the augment num by "ugidacāṃ sarvanāmasthāne 'dhātoḥ" (उगिदचां सर्वनामस्थानेऽधातोः); lengthening of the penultimate by "atvasantasya cādhātoḥ" (Pā. Sū. 6-4-14 [?]); elision of su by "hal-ṅyābbhyo dīrghāt sutisy apṛktaṃ hal" (हल्ङ्याब्भ्यो दीर्घात्...); loss of the t by loss of the conjunct final; this is asiddha, so nalopa does not arise. Matup has the mark p, so it is anudātta; in has the mark n, so by "ñnityādir nityam" the stem is ādyudātta.
- नवेदाः — root vid jñāne (विद ज्ञाने), preceded by nañ; the affix ac by "nandigrahapacādibhyo lyuṇinyacaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 3-1-134), this being in the pacādi group; because of the affix, guṇa of the root by "pugantalaghūpadhasya ca" (Pā. Sū. 7-3-86); nalopo nañaḥ (Pā. Sū. 6-3-73) would drop the n of na, but "nabhrāṇ-napāt..." (Pā. Sū. 6-3-75) gives prakṛtibhāva to it; by "tatpuruṣe tulyārtha..." (Pā. Sū. 6-2-2) the accent of the first member is retained.
- अपस्युवः — after the word apas, in the sense 'desires for oneself', the affix kyac by "supa ātmanaḥ kyac" (सुप आत्मनः क्यच्, Pā. Sū. 3-1-8); the root-designation (dhātusaṃjñā) of the kyac-ending stem apasya by "sanādyantā dhātavaḥ"; after it the affix u by "kyāc chandasi" (क्याच्छन्दसि, Pā. Sū. 3-2-170); with u following, the a of kyac is dropped by "ato lopaḥ" (अतो लोपः); apasyu results; with jas following, guṇa would arise by "jasi ca"; the uvaṅ replacement by "tenādīnāṃ chandasi bahulam upasaṃkhyānam" (Pā. 6-4-77, vārttika 1 [?]); the s becomes ru and visarga: apasyuvaḥ. The accent comes from the affix u. ||1||

The grammatical tail (characterized, not transcribed in detail): ... and the nasalisation optionally prescribed at a pause is to be seen here by vyatyaya even within the Saṃhitā (the sentence runs on from p. 528). Nonāva — the root nu (nau) in the intensive (yaṅluk) in the liṭ outside a mantra... the āṃ affix is not added, being forbidden by a sūtra (Pā. 3-1-35 [?]). Smayamānābhiḥ — root smiṅ īṣaddhasane; śap being p-marked is anudātta; the root-accent remains by the lasārvadhātuka accent rule for śānac. Stanayanti — root stana śabde, of the curādi group, ending in a. Patanti, stanayanti: no nighāta, as each stands at the beginning of a pāda or a sentence.

"Your rays, accompanied by the moving wind and of exceedingly brilliant shining, make the clouds suffer. Because of that the black clouds thunder; thereafter the white drops, like the radiance of the teeth of smiling women, fall; the rain falls from the sky; the clouds roar."

English Translation

"Your falling (rays), accompanied by the moving (Maruts), strike against (the cloud); the black shedder of rain has roared; when this is done (the shower) comes hith [sic] delightful and smiling (drops), the rain descends, the clouds thunder." — as printed; "hith" is a misprint for "hither" [sic].

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics (Rik 79.2)

मुख्याभिप्रायवु (the chief intent) — "In this Ṛk the ṛṣi describes the rain falling with a great roar from lightning, thunderbolt and thunder. The lightning, shining in the sky like gold, lights up the whole antarīkṣa with its own radiance, and in the midst of the black clouds, full of water, the bolt (śiḍilu) becomes manifest with a great sound (mahāśabda). In that very moment a thunderous noise, which makes the ears split (karṇaśakora-)" [13]

"...is heard — this very thing the ṛṣi describes as follows: Agni of the form of lightning, with the help of the Maruts (the winds), shakes the water-laden black clouds and strikes them; the clouds, pained by those blows, make a roar (ārbhaṭa) of bolt and thunder, that is, they weep (cry); and he sends down rain-water, the cause of food and other nourishment, upon the earth; and the sudden-seen radiance of the lightning in the antarīkṣa is like the smile of young women. With the roar of bolt and lightning, the water-drops of the rain fall on the earth along with the sound of thunder."

- सुपर्णाः अमिनन्त — śobhanapatanā raśmayaḥ — "(Agni's) rays of beautiful fall: that is, the rays of the lightning that spread downwards. The glow of the lightning falls on the black clouds and injures (strikes) them — this is the meaning."
- एवैः — evair gantṛbhir marudbhiḥ — "since the word eva has the sense of 'going, moving', the bhāṣyakāra explains it as 'the ever-moving Maruts (the winds that blow impetuously)'. It is natural that the wind should blow impetuously when it rains heavily."
- कृष्णो वृषभः — kṛṣṇavarṇo varṣitā meghaḥ — "clouds black, that pour rain; clouds full of water are black before the rain. In the meeting when heavy rain comes, the black clouds gather in the antarīkṣa and make it dark; therefore the ṛṣi uses the word kṛṣṇa 'black'. Yāska, about the word vṛṣabha, quoting the Ṛk —

Special Topics of Rik 79.2, continued from p. 530 (mid-sentence):

"…(retaḥ) also has the sense of 'water' (Ni. 2-24); so vṛṣaṇa is the name of one who showers water especially (in the form of rain or shower); one who causes such a downpour of water is called vṛṣabha. To show this they have given the Ṛk —

> न्यक्रन्दयन्नुपयन्त एनममेहयन्वृषभं मध्य आजेः ।

nyakrandayann upayanta enam amehayan vṛṣabhaṃ madhya ājeḥ | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-102-5) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "They made him bellow as they came up to him; they made the bull shed water in the midst of the race."

- शिवाभिः — sukhakāriṇībhiḥ — "making happiness; delighting the mind."
- स्मयमानाभिर्न — smiṅ īṣaddhasane (root); hasanavatībhiḥ kāntābhir iva — "like beloved women who smile: like fair women, young women, who shine with a gentle smile or a bud-like laugh, showing joy, revealing their very white and delightful row of teeth; the rain-waters, shining with a brilliant white foam, are so compared. This is the comparison (upamārtha)."
- मिहः — miha secane (root); āpaḥ — "water that wets."
- स्तनयन्ति — stana śabde; itas tataḥ śabdaṃ kurvanti — "(the clouds) make sound here and there, or at every step; that is, the roar of thunder is heard — this is the sense."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 79.2) [15]

- अमिनन्त — the root mīñ hiṃsāyām (मीञ् हिंसायाम्), kryādi group; laṅ, third person plural jhi; "vyatyayo bahulam" (व्यत्ययो बहुलम्) gives the replacement anta; "kryādibhyaḥ śnā" (क्र्यादिभ्यः श्ना) gives the śnā affix; "pvādīnāṃ hrasvaḥ" (प्वादीनां ह्रस्वः, Pā. Sū. 7-3-80) shortens the root before śnā; "śnābhyastayor ātaḥ" (श्नाभ्यस्तयोरातः, Pā. Sū. 6-4-112) drops the ā of śnā before a jit/ñit affix beginning with a vowel; the augment aṭ for the stem — aminanta. Since īṣā-akṣa belongs to the dig- group of words [?], this ā (evaiḥ) is a pragṛhya and in place of vṛddhi the natural form (prakṛtibhāva) arises — though the pragṛhya name is present, apragṛhyasya is prohibited; so for the final the nasalisation has no cause. But by "vyatyayo bahulam" in the Saṃhitā alone, "ano

'pragṛhyasyānunāsikaḥ" (अनोऽप्रगृह्यस्यानुनासिकः, Pā. Sū. 8-4-57 [?]) the optional nasalisation arises at the pause (avasāna). Nighāta accent, since it is atiṅanta in the pāda.

- नोनाव — the root ṇu stutau (णु स्तुतौ); by "goṇaḥ" (?) / "ṇo naḥ" (णो नः) the ṇ becomes n; in the intensive sense, by "dhātor ekāco halādeḥ kriyāsamabhihāre yaṅ" (Pā. Sū. 3-1-22) the affix yaṅ… [16]

- नोनाव (continued) — luk of the yaṅ by "yaño 'ci ca" (यञोऽचि च, Pā. Sū. 2-4-74); reduplication of the root by "sanyaṅoḥ" (सन्यङोः, Pā. Sū. 6-1-9); guṇa of the reduplicative by "guṇo yaṅluko" (गुणो यङ्लुकोः, Pā. Sū. 7-4-82); the form nonu; since "sanādyantā dhātavaḥ" gives it the root-status, then liṭ, third person singular, tip; "parasmaipadānāṃ ṇalatusus…" (परस्मैपदानां णलतुसुस्…) gives ṇal; although it is a pratyayānta word, by "kāspratyayād āmanantre liṭi" (कास्प्रत्ययादाममन्त्रे लिटि, Pā. Sū. 3-1-35) the āṃ affix is prohibited ('outside a mantra'), so there is no āṃ in the liṭ; since ṇal has ñ, vṛddhi of the final vowel by "aco ñṇiti" (अचो ञ्णिति); āv replacement; thus nonāva; nighāta accent, since atiṅanta in the pāda.
- स्मयमानाभिः — root smiṅ īṣaddhasane; the affix śānac in the sense of laṭ; śap by "kartari śap" (कर्तरि शप्, Pā. Sū. 3-1-68); guṇa of the ik of the root because of śap by "sārvadhātukārdhadhātukayoḥ" (सार्वधातुकार्धधातुकयोः, Pā. Sū. 7-3-84); ay replacement (ayādeśa); "āne muk" (आने मुक् Pā. Sū. 7-2-82) gives the augment muk after the a-ending stem; since k is a mark the augment goes to the end; so smayamāna; śap has the mark p and so is anudātta by

"anudāttau suppitau" (अनुदात्तौ सुप्पितौ); because the root is adupadeśa (a root ending in a by teaching), the lasārvadhātuka affix is anudātta by "tāsy anudāttenn…" (ताश्यनुदात्तेन्…, Pā. Sū. 6-1-186); then the root's own accent remains, so ādyudātta. Third-case plural form.

- आगात् — the root iṇ gatau (इण् गतौ), adādi group; luṅ, third person singular, tip; i lost by "iteś ca" (इतश्च); "iṇo gā luṅi" (इणो गा लुङि, Pā. Sū. 2-4-45) substitutes gā; cli → sic by "cleḥ sic" (च्लेः सिच्); luk of sic by "gātisthāghupābhyaḥ…" (गातिस्थाघुपाभूभ्यः सिचः परस्मैपदेषु, Pā. Sū. 2-4-77); the stem takes aṭ; nighāta accent since atiṅanta in the pāda.
- पतन्ति — the root patḷ gatau (पतॢ गतौ); laṭ, third person plural; since it is atiṅanta in the pāda, and also placed at the beginning of the pāda, the nighāta accent does not come; śap is lasārvadhātuka anudātta, so the root's accent remains.
- स्तनयन्ति — the root stana śabde (स्तन शब्दे), curādi group, ending in a; in its own sense the affix ṇic by "satyāpapāśarūpavīṇātūlaślokasenālomatvacavarmavarṇacūrṇacurādibh ṇic" (सत्यापपाश…चुरादिभ्यो णिच्, Pā. Sū. 3-1-25); "ato lopaḥ" (अतो लोपः, Pā. Sū. 6-4-48) drops the final a of the root before ṇic; by "acaḥ parasmin pūrvavidhau" (अचः परस्मिन्पूर्वविधौ) the sthānivadbhāva arises, so there is no upadhā-vṛddhi because of ṇic; laṭ, third person plural; being at the beginning of a sentence there is no nighāta; by the ṇic accent the syllable ra after n is udātta. ||2||

Grammar page, noted briefly; every sūtra numeral is tentative [?] and some are given from memory of the standard sūtra only where the name was legible; the page ends with a decorative rule.

"When Agni is satisfying the whole world, with bathing, drinking and the like, with rain-water that is of the essence like milk, then Aryaman, Mitra, Varuṇa and the Maruts, always of moving nature, pierce the place of origin of the rain (they make the rain fall)."

English Translation

"When this, (the lightning, Agni), nourishes the world with the milk of the rain, and conducts it by the most direct ways, to (the enjoyment of) water, then Mitra, Aryaman, Varuna, and the circumambient (troops of Maruts) pierce through the (investing) membrane into the womb of the cloud." — as printed.

- पियानः — opyāyī vṛddhau — "one who makes grow, who gives satisfaction."
- नयन् ऋतस्य पथिभी रजिष्ठैः — "(leading) by various ways such as bathing, drinking and the like, which are to be naturally had from water — the sense is: doing good to the world."
- उपरस्य — "Among the thirty names of cloud beginning with adriḥ, grāvā (अद्रिः ग्रावा) the word upara occurs; hence uparasya means 'of a cloud'."
- त्वचम् — "(they) pierce the skin or the covering of the cloud and make the water within it flow."
- अर्यमा, मित्रः, वरुणः, परिज्मा — "The deities Aryaman, Mitra, Varuṇa and the Maruts open the covering of the water in the cloud and make the water fall upon the earth. No reason is given here for the way in which these deities, Aryaman and the others, bring the water out from the cloud."

- परिज्मा — parito gantā — "the wind that moves everywhere."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 79.3) [19]

- पियानः — the root opyāyī vṛddhau (ओप्यायी वृद्धौ); in the laṭ sense the replacement śānac; "bahulaṃ chandasi" gives the luk of śap that would arise; "vyatyayo bahulam" gives the root the form pī; pī + āna, the i-vowel of the root being changed into iy by "aci śnudhātubhruvāṃ…" (अचि श्नुधातुभ्रुवां य्वोरियङुवङौ, Pā. Sū. 6-4-77): piyāna. The root being anudātta and the lasārvadhātuka following, it becomes anudātta by "tāsyanudāttenṇid…" (ताश्यनुदात्तेन्ङिद्…, Pā. Sū. 6-1-186); the root's own accent remains.
- नयन् — the root ṇīñ prāpaṇe (णीञ् प्रापणे); śatṛ in the laṭ sense; śap; guṇa of the ik because of it; ay replacement; the augment num since su follows, because uk is a mark; su is elided by "hal-ṅyābbhyo…" and the t by "saṃyogāntalopa"; as it is an adupadeśa root, the lasārvadhātuka is anudātta as before; the root's accent remains.
- रजिष्ठैः — atiśayena ṛjavaḥ = rajiṣṭhāḥ: after the word ṛju in the superlative sense the affix iṣṭhan by "atiśāyane tamabiṣṭhanau" (Pā. Sū. 5-3-55); this following, by "vibhāṣarjor chandasi" (Pā. Sū. 6-4-162 [?]) the ṛ of ṛju becomes ra; "ṭeḥ" (टेः, Pā. Sense: "Of the Prātaranuvāka, in the Āgneya rite, in the Uṣṇih metre, and in the Āśvina-śastra, the first three Ṛks beginning agne vājasya (are used). It is also given in the sūtra: 'agne vājasya — the three; puru tvā; tvām agne' (Āśv. 4-13 [?]). — O son of strength (sahaso yaho = balasya putra), O Agni, you are the lord (īśāna = īśvara) of food (vāja = anna) that has many cows (gomataḥ = endowed with many cattle). Therefore, O Jātavedas — you who have (all) wealth that is born, or who know all that is born — give (dhehi = sthāpaya) to us (asme = asmāsu) abundant (mahi = prabhūtam) śravas, food." The grammatical tail: sahaso yaho — by "parāṅgavad bhāvāt" and "āmantritasya ca" [?] the whole group of the sixth-case and the vocative is treated (as one) and receives nighāta [?]; asme — by "supāṃ suluk..." the seventh-case ending is replaced by śe.

- सहसो यहो — "O son of strength (bala)"
- अग्ने — "O Agni (you)"
- गोमतः — "(of him) who is provided with (many) cows"

- वाजस्य — "of food"
- ईशानः — "lord"
- जातवेदः — "O knower of all that is born (all), O Agni"
- महि — "abundant"
- श्रवः — "food"
- धेहि — "place (give) among us."

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha of Rik 79.4

"O Agni, famed as 'son of strength' because you are born by the application of strength; you are lord of cows and of food and other nourishments. You are the knower of all. Give us much food."

English Translation

"Agni, son of strength, lord of food and of cattle, give us abundant sustenance; you know all that exist." — as printed.

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics (Rik 79.4)

"At the time of the Prātaranuvāka mantras, for the Ṛks of the Uṣṇih metre connected with the Āgneya rite, and for the Āśvina-śastra mantras, the three Ṛks beginning agne vājasya (79.4–6) have application, as is explained by the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra in the sūtra 'agne vājasyeti tisraḥ puru tvā tvām agne' (Āśv. 4-13 [?])."

- सहसो यहो — "The word sahas has the sense 'strength' (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]); yahu means 'son' (Ni. 3-2); so sahaso yaho = 'son of strength', that is, one born by the application of strength (the churning of the sticks), since Agni arises at the end of that effort. It is customary to address Agni by the vocatives sahaso yaho, sahasas putra, sahasaḥ sūno."

- वाजस्य गोमतः — bahubhir gobhir yuktasya annasya — "Vāja means food (Ni. [2-7] [?]). 'Food provided with cows' means both the cows and the food; the sense is that of the lord (svāmin) of food."
- अस्मे धेहि — asmāsu sthāpaya — "'establish among us' means 'give to us'. The word asme is used in the Ṛgveda in the sense of all case-endings of asmad. On this matter Yāska has explained (Ni. [6-2?] [?]) in this way —

> (१) अस्मे ते बन्धुः । वयमित्यर्थः ।

asme te bandhuḥ | vayam ity arthaḥ | — "asme te bandhuḥ: (asme =) 'we'."

> अस्मे इत्येतत्पदं सर्वविभक्त्यन्तम् । तस्मादनेकार्थम् । एकमेव ह्येतच्छब्दरूपं सप्तस्वपि विभक्त्यर्थेषु वर्तते । प्रकरणादिनिशात् [?] तस्य नियमो भवति । तद्यथा — प्रथमास्थावत् — अस्मे ते बन्धुः । वयमित्यर्थः ॥

asme ity etat padaṃ sarvavibhaktyantam | tasmād anekārtham | ekam eva hy etac chabdarūpaṃ saptasv api vibhaktyartheṣu vartate | prakaraṇādiniśāt [?] tasya niyamo bhavati | tad yathā — prathamāsthāvat — asme te bandhuḥ | vayam ity arthaḥ | |

Gloss, editorial and tentative: "This word asme ends in all case-endings; hence it has many senses. For this one word-form is used in the senses of all seven cases; its restriction (to one case) comes from the context (prakaraṇa) and the like. For example — in the sense of the first case: asme te bandhuḥ, i.e. 'we'." The Kannada explains: "that is, the word asme is used in the sense of the seven cases according to the context; in the sentence asme te bandhuḥ the word asme has the sense vayam, 'we' — an example of the first case."

> (२) अस्मे यातं नासत्या सजोषाः । अस्मानित्यर्थः ॥ द्वितीयास्थावत् ।

asme yātaṃ nāsatyā sajoṣāḥ | asmān ity arthaḥ || dvitīyāsthāvat | — "(2) in the sense of the second case: asmān, 'us'. As an example of this sense —

> आ श्येनस्य जवसा नूतनेनास्मे यातं नासत्या सजोषाः । हवे हि वामश्विना रातहव्यः
> शश्वत्तमाया उषसो व्युष्टौ ॥

ā śyenasya javasā nūtanenāsme yātaṃ nāsatyā sajoṣāḥ | have hi vām aśvinā rātahavyaḥ śaśvattamāyā uṣaso vyuṣṭau || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-118-11) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "With the new speed of the falcon, come to us, O Nāsatyas, of one accord; for I, who have offered the oblation, call you, Aśvins, at the dawning of the ever-recurring dawn."

— they have given this Ṛk. The word asme in this Ṛk means asmān, 'us'."

> (३) अस्मे समानेभिर्वृषभ पौंस्येभिः । अस्माभिरित्यर्थः ॥ तृतीयास्थावत् ।

asme samānebhir vṛṣabha pauṃsyebhiḥ | asmābhir ity arthaḥ || tṛtīyāsthāvat | — "(3) in the sense of the third case: here asme means asmābhiḥ, 'by us'. In this matter —" [20]

> भूरि चकर्थ युज्येभिरस्मे समानेभिर्वृषभ पौंस्येभिः । भूरीणि हि कृणवामा शविष्ठेन्द्र क्रत्वा
> मरुतो यद्वशाम ॥

bhūri cakartha yujyebhir asme samānebhir vṛṣabha pauṃsyebhiḥ | bhūrīṇi hi kṛṇavāmā śaviṣṭhendra kratvā maruto yad vaśāma || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-165-7) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Much you have done with your fitting, equal deeds of manliness, O bull, with us; many (deeds) we shall do, O mightiest Indra, by (our) skill, if we, the Maruts, so wish." [21]

---

20. the sentence breaks off at the foot of p. 538 and the Ṛk follows on p. 539

21. The words are read as printed; the sense is uncertain.

— "they have given this Ṛk as an example; here asme means asmābhiḥ, 'by us'.

> (४) अस्मे प्रयन्धि मघवन्नृजीषिन् । अस्मभ्यमित्यर्थः ॥ चतुर्थ्यास्थावत् ।

asme prayandhi maghavann ṛjīṣin | asmabhyam ity arthaḥ || caturthyāsthāvat | — "(4) in the sense of the fourth case: here asme means asmabhyam, 'to us'. For example —

> अस्मे प्र यन्धि मघवन्नृजीषिन्निन्द्र रायो विश्ववारस्य भूरेः । अस्मे शतं शरदो जीवसे धा अस्मे वीराञ्छश्वत इन्द्र शिप्रिन् ॥

asme pra yandhi maghavann ṛjīṣinn indra rāyo viśvavārasya bhūreḥ | asme śataṃ śarado jīvase dhā asme vīrāñ chaśvata indra śiprin || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 3-36-10 [as printed]) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Bestow on us, O Maghavan, O Indra, drinker of the soma-dregs [?], much wealth that all would choose; give us a hundred autumns to live; (give) us heroes, O Indra of the fine helmet, for ever."

In the words asme of this Ṛk the sense is the fourth case, asmabhyam, 'to us'.

> (५) अस्मे आराच्चिद्द्वेषः सनुतर्युयोतु । अस्मदित्यर्थः ॥ पञ्चम्यास्थावत् ।

asme ārāc cid dveṣaḥ sanutar yuyotu | asmad ity arthaḥ || pañcamyāsthāvat | — "(5) in the sense of the fifth case: here asme means asmat, 'from us' (from our side). For example —

> तस्य वयं सुमतौ यज्ञियस्यापि भद्रे सौमनसे स्याम । स सुत्रामा स्ववाँ इन्द्रो अस्मे आराच्चिद्द्वेषः सनुतर्युयोतु ॥

tasya vayaṃ sumatau yajñiyasyāpi bhadre saumanase syāma | sa sutrāmā svavāṃ indro asme ārāc cid dveṣaḥ sanutar yuyotu || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 6-47-13) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "May we be in the favour of him, the worthy of sacrifice, in his fortunate good-will; may he, Indra, the good protector, the rich in his own, keep far from us, away, hatred."

In the word asme of this Ṛk the sense is the fifth case, 'from our side', asmat.

> (६) ऊर्व इव पप्रथे कामो अस्मे । अस्माकमित्यर्थः ॥ षष्ठ्यास्थावत् ।

ūrva iva paprathe kāmo asme | asmākam ity arthaḥ || ṣaṣṭhyāsthāvat | — "(6) in the sense of the sixth case: here asme means asmākam, 'our' (to us). To explain this —

> आ नो भर भगमिन्द्र द्युमन्तं नि ते देष्णस्य धीमहि प्ररेके । ऊर्व इव पप्रथे कामो अस्मे तमा पृण वसुपते वसूनाम् ॥

ā no bhara bhagam indra dyumantaṃ ni te deṣṇasya dhīmahi prareke | ūrva iva paprathe kāmo asme tam ā pṛṇa vasupate vasūnām || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 3-31-19) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Bring us, O Indra, a shining portion; may we hold (it) in our mind as the surplus of your gift; (our) desire has spread (wide) like the sea; fulfil it, O lord of goods, of the goods."

In the word asme of this Ṛk the sixth case, asmākam 'our', 'to us'.

> (७) अस्मे धत्त वसवो वसूनि । अस्मास्वित्यर्थः ॥ सप्तम्यास्थावत् ।

asme dhatta vasavo vasūni | asmāsv ity arthaḥ || saptamyāsthāvat | — "(7) in the sense of the seventh case: here asme means 'in us'. For example —

> अग्ने वाजस्य गोमत ईशानः सहसो यहो । अस्मे धेहि जातवेदो महि श्रवः ॥

agne vājasya gomata īśānaḥ sahaso yaho | asme dhehi jātavedo mahi śravaḥ || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-79-4) — this very Ṛk.

In the word asme of this Ṛk the seventh case, asmāsu, 'in us'."

original p. 540

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 79.4)

- गोमतः — gāvaḥ asya santi = gomān; of him: the affix matup by "tad asyāsty asminn iti matup" (Pā. Sū. 5-2-94); because of the mark p it is anudātta. Sixth-case singular.

- सहसो यहो — as a vocative it has the designation āmantrita; since sahasaḥ precedes yaho, by "subāmantrite parāṅgavat svare" (सुबामन्त्रिते पराङ्गवत्स्वरे, Pā. Sū. 2-1-2) the parāṅgavat treatment (as part of what follows) arises; then, for the group together with the sixth-case ending, by "āmantritasya ca" (आमन्त्रितस्य च, Pā. Sū. 8-1-19) the nighāta accent comes.
- अस्मे — the stem asmad; the seventh-case plural sup following, by "supāṃ suluk…" (सुपां सुलुक्.., Pā. Sū. 7-1-39) the case-ending is replaced by śe; since it has ś it is a replacement of the whole (sarvādeśa); by "śeśe lopaḥ" (?) / "śeṣe lopaḥ" the ad of asmad, of the form ending in ma, is dropped; thus asme.
- धेहि — the root ḍudhāñ dhāraṇapoṣaṇayoḥ (डुधाञ् धारणपोषणयोः); loṭ, second person singular; hi is substituted for sip; "juhotyādibhyaḥ śluḥ" (जुहोत्यादिभ्यः श्लुः, Pā. Sū. 2-4-75) gives ślu; reduplication of the root by "ślau" (श्लौ, Pā. Sū. 6-1-10); then "ghvasor ed dhāv abhyāsalopaś ca" (घ्वसोरेद्धावभ्यासलोपश्च, Pā. Sū. 6-4-119) — the loss of the reduplicative and e for the root; nighāta accent since atiṅanta in the pāda.
- श्रवः — the root śru śravaṇe (श्रु श्रवणे); by "sarvadhātubhya asun" (सर्वधातुभ्य असुन्, Uṇ. Sū. 4-[188?] [?]) the affix asun; the guṇa of the ik of the root because of the n-mark; av replacement; by "ñnityādir nityam" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-197) the initial udātta. ||4||

"The omniscient one, the maker of dwellings, of blazing nature — that Agni — is to be praised with praises. O Agni, whose mouth is bright with many flames, shine for us so that food endowed with (excellent) wealth may be ours."

English Translation

"He, the blazing Agni, who is wise, and the granter of dwellings, is to be praised by our hymns: Oh; you whose mouth (glows) with many (flames) shine (propitiously so) that food-providing wealth may be ours." — as printed.

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics (Rik 79.5)

- पुरुणीक — anīkaṃ mukham — "puru-bhir bahvībhir anīkasthānīyābhir jvālābhir yuktaḥ: anīka means 'face'; puru means 'many'. Agni, who has many flames in the place of mouth (as faces). As people eat with the mouth, Agni eats up (burns) everything with his flame. So, as the mouth is for people, the flame is for Agni. Because he has many such flames, the ṛṣi, by the figure of comparison (upamārtha), addresses Agni as 'O Agni of many faces'."
- इधानः, कविः, वसुः — "These words are in general used when Agni is praised."
- रेवत् — dhanayuktam annam — "'food provided with wealth' means 'both wealth and food': the prayer is that he should give."
- दीदिहि — "Among the eleven words (…) which indicate the actions of shining, beginning with bhrājate, bhrāśate, the word dīdayati occurs (Ni. [1-17?] [?]); dīdayati means 'shining'; so dīdihi means 'shine'."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 79.5) [23]

- इधानः — the root ñi-indhī dīptau (ञिइन्धी दीप्तौ); in the habitual sense (tacchīlārtha) the affix cānaś by "tācchīlyavayovacanaśaktiṣu cānaś" (ताच्छील्यवयोवचनशक्तिषु चानश्, Pā. Sū. 3-2-129); the mark ś makes it a sārvadhātuka; śap by "kartari śap" (Pā. Sū. 3-1-68); luk for it by "bahulaṃ chandasi" (Pā. Sū. 2-4-73); "sārvadhātukam apit" (सार्वधातुकमपित्, Pā. Sū. 1-2-4) … [24]

- इधानः (continued) — "…since the affix takes the mark ñ [?] (the print reads j), by 'aniditāṃ hala upadhāyāḥ kniti' (अनिदितां हल उपधायाः क्ङिति, Pā. Sū. 6-4-24) the penultimate nasal is dropped; the affix, being c-marked, is final-udātta by 'cituḥ' (चितः, Pā. Sū. 6-1-163)."
- ईळेन्यः — the root īḍa stutau (ईड स्तुतौ); the affix enya of the Uṇādi group; the form īḷenyaḥ; by the accent of the affix the middle is udātta (madhyodātta) [?].
- गिरा — the stem gir; third-case singular; by "sāvekācas tṛtīyādiḥ" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-168) the case-ending takes the udātta accent.
- रेवत् — rayi is a word meaning wealth; in the sense 'this has rayi', the affix matup by "tad asyāsty asminn iti" (Pā. 5-2-94); by the statement "rayer matau bahulam" the saṃprasāraṇa of rayi: since two letters are found here that might undergo saṃprasāraṇa, the preceding one is blocked by "na saṃprasāraṇe saṃprasāraṇam" (न सम्प्रसारणे सम्प्रसारणम्, Pā. Sū. 6-1-37); by "igyaṇaḥ saṃprasāraṇam" (इग्यणः सम्प्रसारणम्) the y becomes i; then by "saṃprasāraṇāc ca" (Pā. 6-1-108) the single prior form; the i coming before the a-sound, by "ād guṇaḥ" (आद्गुणः) the guṇa; by "chandasīraḥ" (छन्दसीरः, Pā. Sū. 8-2-15) the m of matup becomes v; the form revat. Matup, being p-marked, would be anudātta, but by the statement "re-śabdāc ca matupa udāttatvaṃ vaktavyam" (Kā. 6-1-[166], vārttika 1 [?]) it takes the udātta.

23. grammar page, noted briefly; begins at the foot of p. 542
24. the entry runs on to p. 543

- दीदिहि — the root dīdī dīptidevanayoḥ (दीदी दीप्तिदेवनयोः); this is purely a Vedic root (chāndasa); it is listed as dīdīṅ (दीदीङ्) in the adādi group; loṭ, second person singular; hi in place of sip; because it has been declared apit, the guṇa of the ik of the root, which would be due to that (apit), does not arise; the accent is nighāta, since atiṅanta in the pāda. ||5||

Sense: "O king (rājan), O Agni, of the nature of shining, destroy (kṣapaḥ = kṣapaya) the Rākṣasas and the like; drive them off by your own men; and also by yourself (tmanā, i.e. ātmanā) drive them off — not by others only. When? — it is said: vastoḥ — on all days; uta — and also uṣasaḥ — in nights marked by the dawn-time (accusative of continuous duration, atyantasaṃyoga): on all days and in all nights. O tigmajambha, O Agni of sharp mouth, having destroyed the rakṣas in the manner stated, burn up, prati daha — burn each one — [nothing remaining? — the closing words are read with doubt]." The grammatical tail: kṣapaḥ — the root kṣapa [kṣāntyām?], a Vedic laṅ in the sense of loṭ; śap, as an ārdhadhātuka-like, the elision of ṇi by "ṇer aniṭi"; the udātta accent of śap by the accent rule udāttanivṛtti; tmanā — ātmanā with loss of ā in the mantras; rakṣasaḥ — the root rakṣa pālane: 'that which is to be guarded against' = rakṣaḥ; of the bhīmādi group (Pā. 3-4-74 [?]); the affix si in the sense of the ablative (apādāna) — or from the root svar in its causative, by the affix asi, with the ṇi dropped and a transposition of letters; since this word rakṣaḥ ends in the affix asi, the accent of the affix alone remains.

- राजन् — "O shining (Agni)"
- अग्ने — "O Agni"
- वस्तोः — "on days (on all)"
- उत — "and"
- उषसः — "(also) in nights endowed with dawn-time"
- क्षपः — "(from your side, through your men) destroy the Rākṣasas"
- उत — "and"
- त्मना — "yourself (also), (harass the Rākṣasas)"
- तिग्मजम्भ — "O Agni of sharp mouth"

- रक्षसः — "destroy the Rākṣasas"
- प्रति दह — "burn up each one."

॥ भावार्थः ॥ — Bhāvārtha of Rik 79.6

"O shining Agni, whether by day or by night, destroy the Rākṣasas, yourself or through your own men; O Agni of sharp mouth, you thoroughly burn up and destroy the Rākṣasas."

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics (Rik 79.6)

- राजन् — prakāśamānanāda — "shining. Agni is of the nature of always shining."
- क्षपः — kṣapaḥ kṣāntyām [?] — "kṣapaya, bādhasva: injure, destroy."
- त्मना — ātmanā — "by yourself — you also together (with them). Here, for the sake of the metre, the a of the word ātmanā is dropped, and only tmanā occurs. This word has been used in the same way in —

> अव त्मना भरते केतवेदा अव त्मना भरते फेनमुदन् ।

ava tmanā bharate ketavedā ava tmanā bharate phenam udan | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-104-3) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "By himself the finder of signs brings down; by himself he brings down the foam in the water." (Sense uncertain.)

> जगृभ्मा दूरआदिशं श्लोकमद्रेरध त्मना ।

jagṛbhmā dūrā-ādiśaṃ ślokam adrer adha tmanā | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-139-10) — the words as read; the reading dūra-ādiśam is doubtful [?]. Gloss, editorial and tentative: "We have taken hold, by ourselves, of the far-reaching call (praise) of the stone [?]."

> त्वं वातैररुणैर्यासि शंगयस्त्वं पूषा विधतः पासि नु त्मना ।

tvaṃ vātair aruṇair yāsi śaṃgayas tvaṃ pūṣā vidhataḥ pāsi nu tmanā | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 2-1-6 [?]) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "You go with the ruddy winds, bringer of good to the household; you, as Pūṣan, protect the worshipper of your own accord."

> जातो आपृणो भुवनानि रोदसी अग्ने ता विश्वा परिभूरसि त्मना ।

jāto āpṛṇo bhuvanāni rodasī agne tā viśvā paribhūr asi tmanā | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 3-3-10) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Being born you filled the worlds, the two firmaments; O Agni, all these you encompass by yourself."

> परि त्मना मितद्रुरेति होताग्निर्मन्द्रो मधुवचा ऋतावा ।

pari tmanā mitadrur eti hotāgnir mandro madhuvacā ṛtāvā | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 4-6-5) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "The Hotṛ Agni, of measured speed, goes round by himself, the joyous, sweet-speeched, the keeper of the ṛta."

In many Ṛks such as these the word tmanā is used in the sense of ātmanā."

- वस्तोः उषसः — vastoḥ sarvāṇy ahāni uṣaḥkālopalakṣitā rātrīś ca — "Vastoḥ means days; and uṣasaḥ means nights characterised by the time of dawn: both by day and by night, that is. The word vastoḥ occurs among the twelve names of days (Ni. [1-9?] [?]). Though here the word uṣasaḥ indicates the time of dawn, the dawn-time that precedes sunrise belongs to the night-time; therefore the bhāṣyakāra says 'nights characterised by the dawn-time'. Or, since the word uṣasaḥ occurs in this Ṛk together with vastoḥ, a name of day, the general sense 'at day- and night-times' may be given."

- तिग्मजम्भ — "Tigma means sharp (tīkṣṇa); tigmajambha means 'one with a sharp mouth' — one whose nature is to burn. In general this word is used as an epithet of Agni. In the Ṛgveda, in the Ṛks —

> प्र तां अग्निर्भसत्तिग्मजम्भस्तपिष्ठेन शोचिषा यः सुराधाः ।

pra tāṃ agnir babhasat tigmajambhas tapiṣṭhena śociṣā yaḥ surādhāḥ | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 4-5-4) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Let Agni, the sharp-jawed, devour them with his hottest flame — he who gives good gifts."

> अस्य त्वा वीर ईवतोऽग्नेरीशीत मर्त्यः । तिग्मजम्भस्य मीळ्हुषः ॥

asya tvā vīra īvato 'gner īśīta martyaḥ | tigmajambhasya mīḷhuṣaḥ || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 4-15-5) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Of this you, O hero, the swift Agni, the sharp-jawed, the bountiful, a mortal may become master." (Sense uncertain.)

> तिग्मजम्भाय तरुणाय राजते प्रयो गायस्यग्नये ।

tigmajambhāya taruṇāya rājate prayo gāyasy agnaye | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 8-19-22) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "To the sharp-jawed, youthful, shining Agni you sing (the offering of) food."

> यज्ञानां रथ्ये वयं तिग्मजम्भाय वीळवे ।

yajñānāṃ rathye vayaṃ tigmajambhāya vīḷave | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 8-44-27) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "(We invoke) the charioteer of the sacrifices, the sharp-jawed, the strong."

— in these Ṛks alone it occurs, and nowhere else. In all these places this word is used of Agni."

Sū. 3-1-26); second person singular sip; the loss of the i by "iteś ca"; śap by "kartari śap"; because "chandasy ubhayathā" gives śap the ārdhadhātuka designation, the ṇi is elided by "ṇer aniṭi" (णेरनिटि, Pā. Sū. 6-4-51); the s becomes ru, visarga; by "bahulaṃ chandasy āmāṅyoge 'pi" (Pā. Sū. 6-4-75) the augment aṭ does not come; śap being p-marked is anudātta; because the ṇic with the anudātta as cause was elided, the udātta accent for śap comes by "anudāttasya ca yatrodāttalopaḥ" (अनुदात्तस्य च यत्रोदात्तलोपः, Pā. Sū. 6-1-[161]); at the head of a pāda, so no nighāta.

- त्मना — the third-case singular of the stem ātman, as ātmanā; by "mantreṣv āṅyāder ātmanaḥ" (मन्त्रेष्वाङ्याद्रेरात्मनः, Pā. Sū. 6-4-141) the ā is dropped in the Saṃhitā.
- रक्षसः — the root rakṣa pālane (रक्ष पालने); "rakṣitavyam asmād iti rakṣaḥ" ((from) these [Rākṣasas] people are to be guarded); of the bhīmādi group, by "bhīmādayo 'pādāne" (भीमादयोऽपादाने, Pā. Sū. 3-4-74) the affix asi in the apādāna sense [27]

Or, when ṇic is made after the root kṣar (or svar), after the ṇic-ending stem the asi affix, as before; ṇi is dropped by "ṇer aniṭi"; as it is a Vedic form there is a transposition of letters (varṇaviparyaya). Through the accent of the affix the word rakṣas is final-udātta."

"At the time of the Prātaranuvāka mantras, when the Ṛks of the Gāyatrī metre connected with the Āgneya rite are recited, these six Ṛks beginning avā no agne have application, as is explained by the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra in the sūtra 'avā no agna iti ṣaḷ agnim īḷe 'gniṃ dūtam' (Āśv. 4-[13] [?]). It is directed there itself that these Ṛks are to be recited also in connection with the Prātaranuvāka mantras for the Āśvina-śastra mantras."

- सत्रासाहम् — "The word satrā occurs among the six names of truth (satya) beginning bar, śrat (बट् श्रत्); so Yāska says that satrā means 'truly' (Ni. [3-13?] [?]). But the bhāṣyakāra, in this Ṛk, has explained the word satrā as 'yugapat, at once, in a single moment'. Besides, since the word asaham is divided in the Pada, he has supplied the word dāridrya 'poverty' and says 'one who destroys poverty at once'. By Yāska's explanation, too, if satrā is explained as 'truly', the sense 'one who truly destroys poverty' fits. This word, in the Ṛgveda, in —

In the Ṛks 2-21-2 and 2-21-3 too the sense 'overcome the enemies' is given for saha. In the Ṛk now before us as well the sense saha ('overcoming') may be given." [32]

- सत्रासाहम् — the root ṣaha marṣaṇe (षह मर्षणे); "dhātvādeḥ ṣaḥ saḥ" (धात्वादेः षः सः) turns ṣ into s; "chandasi sahaḥ" (छन्दसि सहः, Pā. Sū. 3-2-63) gives the affix ṇvi; being ñ-marked, "ata upadhāyāḥ" (Pā. Sū. 7-2-116) gives vṛddhi to the penultimate of the root; "anyeṣām api dṛśyate" (Pā. Sū.

- वरेण्यम् — the root vṛñ varaṇe (वृञ् वरणे); "vṛñ eṇyaḥ" (Uṇ. Sū. 3-[96?] [?]) gives the affix eṇya; the guṇa of the ik of the root because of it by "sārvadhātukārdhadhātukayoḥ" (Pā. Sū. 7-3-84); the form vareṇya; second-case singular.
- पृत्सु — the stem pṛtanā; with the seventh-case plural su following, by the vārttika "māṃsa-pṛtanā-sānūnāṃ māṃs-pṛt-snavaḥ śasādau vā vācyāḥ" (मांसपृतनास्नानूनां मांस्पृत्स्नवः शसादौ वा वाच्याः) the substitute pṛt; by "sāvekācas tṛtīyādiḥ" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-168) — since the stem is of one syllable — the case-ending following takes the udātta accent.
- दुस्तरम् — duḥkhena kartuṃ śakyaṃ dustaram: the root tṝ plavanataraṇayoḥ (तॄ प्लवनतरणयोः); the upapada duḥ; since the sense 'with difficulty' is present, by "īṣad-duḥ-suṣu kṛcchrākṛcchrārtheṣu khal" (ईषद्दुःसुषु कृच्छ्राकृच्छ्रार्थेषु खल्, Pā. Sū. 3-3-126) the affix khal; the guṇa of the ik of the root because of the n-mark; "liti" (लिति, Pā. Sū. 6-1-193) gives the udātta on the syllable before the affix. ||8||

- सुचेतुना — citī saṃjñāne — "śobhanena jñānena yuktam (rayim): wealth endowed with good knowledge — that is, the prayer is that both the best knowledge and wealth should be given together."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 79.9) [35]

Sū. 7-3-86); with su (a gati-like prefix) in the compound, by "gatikārakopapadāt kṛt" the accent of the final member of the kṛt-compound arises. Third-case singular.
- विश्वायुपोषसम् — viśvam āyur yasmin śarīrādau tat = viśvāyu; a bahuvrīhi compound; by "bahuvrīhau viśvaṃ saṃjñāyām" (बहुव्रीहौ विश्वं संज्ञायाम्) the udātta falls on the last syllable of the first member, displacing its natural accent;

Sū. 3-4-9); since it ends in ṇ-less ase, by "kṛn mejantaḥ" (कृन्मेजन्तः, Pā. Sū. 1-1-39) it receives the designation avyaya (indeclinable). ||9||

Sū. 3-1-26); the vṛddhi of the penultimate by "ata upadhāyāḥ"; after the ṇic-ending stem, laṭ, third person singular, tip; śap

by "kartari śap"; since "chandasy ubhayathā" gives it ārdhadhātuka status, the ṇi is elided by "ṇer aniṭi" (Pā. Sū. 6-4-51); the form dāsati. Yaḥ being related to it earlier, the nighāta accent is prohibited by "yad vṛttān nityam" (यद्वृत्तान्नित्यम्, Pā. Sū. 8-1-66), so śap, being lasārvadhātuka anudātta, leaves the root accent; "tiṅ ca udāttavati" (तिङ्ङुदात्तवति, Pā. Sū. 8-1-71) — because a tiṅanta with an udātta follows, the gati (abhi) takes nighāta.

- अन्ति — the word antika; by the statement "kādilopo bahulam iti vaktavyam" the k is dropped in the Veda.
- वृधे — the root vṛdhu vṛddhau (वृधु वृद्धौ); it belongs to the sampadādi group, so by "sampadādibhyaḥ kvip" (सम्पदादिभ्यः क्विप्, Pā. Sū. 3-3-108 [?]) the affix kvip in the sense of the action, giving vṛdh; the fourth-case singular, vṛdhe; being of one syllable, by "sāvekācas tṛtīyādiḥ" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-168) the case-ending takes the udātta. ||11||

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics (Rik 79.12)

- सहस्राक्षः — "If one gives the literal sense of this word, it means 'one who has a thousand eyes'. Here, since this word is an epithet of Agni, the word akṣa must be taken as 'flame', which stands in the place of the eye. The word sahasra means 'countless'. Hence, as the bhāṣyakāra says, sahasrākṣaḥ asaṃkhyātajvālaḥ means Agni, endowed with countless flames. The word sahasrākṣa in the Ṛgveda occurs in the Ṛk — sahasraśīrṣā puruṣaḥ sahasrākṣaḥ sahasrapāt | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-[90]-1 [?]) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "The Puruṣa has a thousand heads, a thousand eyes, a thousand feet."

> सहस्रशीर्षा पुरुषः सहस्राक्षः सहस्रपात् ।

and there it is only (...); there the sense is 'having a thousand, or countless, eyes'. And —

> इन्द्रवायू मनोजुवा विप्रा हवन्त ऊतये । सहस्राक्षा धियस्पती ॥

indravāyū manojuvā viprā havanta ūtaye | sahasrākṣā dhiyas patī || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-[23]-3 [?]) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Indra and Vāyu, swift as thought, the wise call for help — the thousand-eyed lords of the rites."

— for the word sahasrākṣā in this Ṛk the bhāṣyakāra has explained 'endowed with a thousand eyes: Indra and Vāyu, having a thousand eyes'. The use of this word is nowhere else in the Ṛgveda." - विचर्षणिः — "Among the eight names of the action of seeing, beginning cikyat, cākanat (चिकेत्, चाकनत् [?]), the word vicarṣaṇiḥ occurs; hence vicarṣaṇiḥ means 'one who looks'. Viśeṣeṇa sarvasya draṣṭā agniḥ: 'Agni who looks especially at everything'." - सेधति — ṣidhu gatyām, pratiṣedhati, yajñān nirgamayati — "though this word, formed from the root ṣidhu, has the sense of movement, as the bhāṣyakāra says here — 'atra kevalo 'pi sopasargārtho draṣṭavyaḥ' (here even the simple root is to be understood as having a preposition) — one must give the sense 'drive off' which would be of the word pratiṣedhati with the preposition prati. The sense is that Agni makes the Rākṣasas and others flee from the place of the sacrifice." - होता — devānām āhvātā — "Agni, who in the sacrifice invokes the gods." - गृणीते — gṝ śabde — "he praises and invokes the gods with praises and the like."

- उक्थ्यैः — "Ukthya means a mantra of the form of a śastra; ukthyaiḥ means 'one who is praised with such śastra mantras'."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 79.12)

- सहस्राक्षः — sahasram asaṃkhyātāni akṣīṇi yasya saḥ; a bahuvrīhi; the compound-final affix ṣac by "bahuvrīhau sakthyakṣṇoḥ svāṅgāt ṣac" (बहुव्रीहौ सक्थ्यक्ष्णोः स्वाङ्गात्षच्, Pā. Sū.

5-4-113); the i is dropped by "yasyeti ca" (यस्येति च, Pā. Sū. 6-4-148); by the statement "ṣiti śiṣṭasvarabalīyastvam" [reading uncertain, [?]] the accent of the affix remains.

- रक्षांसि — explained in the sixth Ṛk of this sūkta (79.6).
- सेधति — the root ṣidhu gatyām (षिधु गत्याम्); though it stands alone, it conveys the sense of the root with a preposition; by the statement "dhātūnām anekārthatvam" (the multiplicity of senses of roots) the sense 'prohibit' arises; laṭ, third person singular; nighāta accent, since atiṅanta in the pāda.
- गृणीते — the root gṝ śabde (गॄ शब्दे), kryādi; the shortening of the root by "pvādīnāṃ hrasvaḥ" (प्वादीनां ह्रस्वः, Pā. Sū. 7-3-80); laṭ, third person singular, the affix ta; e by "ṭita ātmanepadānāṃ ṭer e" (Pā. Sū. 3-4-79); śnā by "kryādibhyaḥ śnā" (क्र्यादिभ्यः श्ना, Pā. Sū. 3-1-81); by "sārvadhātukam apit" (Pā. Sū. 1-2-4) the affix is treated as ṅit, so "ī hal-yaghoḥ" (ईहल्यघोः, Pā. Sū. 6-4-113) puts ī for the ā of the stem-marker; since the replacement of the stem-marker is by the preceding sūtra treated as ṅit, the guṇa of the ik of the root (which would be caused by it) does not arise; n following ṛ, the n becomes ṇ by "ṛvarṇān nasya ṇatvam" [?]; nighāta accent, since atiṅanta in the pāda. ||12||

Sense: "Itthā hi — the seventh sūkta, of sixteen Ṛks; the ṛṣi is Gotama; deity Indra; metre Paṅkti. It is stated in the Anukramaṇī: 'itthā — sixteen, to Indra, in Paṅkti, (the word) hi'; by the use of the word hi [the reading of this clause is doubtful [?]], this and the next two sūktas are in the Paṅkti metre. On the fifth day of the Pṛṣṭhya-ṣaḍaha, this sūkta is used in the Marutvatīya (śastra); as stated in the sūtra: 'avitāsītthā hīndra piba tubhyam — the Marutvatīya' (Āśv. 7-12). On the twenty-fourth day (caturviṃśa) the first triad is an optional anurūpa of the Acchāvāka; in the section 'for the hotrakas' it is stated: 'itthā hi soma inmada ubhe yad indra rodasī' (Āśv. 7-4 [as printed]). In the Mahāvrata, one Ṛk, itthā hi, in the right wing of the Niṣkevalya; likewise it is stated in the fifth Āraṇyaka: 'itthā hi soma inmada — the paṅkti' (Aitareya Āraṇyaka 5-2-[?])."

Anuvāda (Kannada): "Itthā hi somē — this sūkta is the seventh sūkta in the thirteenth anuvāka; there are sixteen Ṛks in it. The ṛṣi of this sūkta is Gotama; the deity is Indra; the metre is paṅkti. In the Anukramaṇikā it is said 'itthā ṣoḷaśaindraṃ pāṅktaṃ hi'; by the use of the word hi it is indicated that this sūkta and the next two sūktas are in the paṅkti metre. This sūkta has application in the Marutvatīya mantras of the fifth day of the Pṛṣṭhya-ṣaḍaha sacrifice, as explained by the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra in the sūtra 'avitāsītthā hīndra piba tubhyam iti marutvatīyam' (Āśv. 7-12). On the twenty-fourth day the priest called Acchāvāka may use the three Ṛks beginning itthā optionally, as explained in the section hotrakāṇām by the sūtra 'itthā hi soma inmada ubhe yad indra rodasī' (Āśv. 7-4 [as printed]). In the Mahāvrata, one Ṛk, itthā hi, has application in the Niṣkevalya-śastra mantras; in the fifth Āraṇyaka of the Aitareya Āraṇyaka it is indicated by the statement 'itthā hi soma inmada iti paṅktiḥ' (Ai. Ā. 5-2-2)."

- ओजसा, पृथिव्याः अहिं निश्शशाः — "balena pṛthivyāḥ sakāśād āgatya hantāraṃ vṛtraṃ niḥśaśāḥ niḥśeṣeṇa aśāḥ; mā bādhasveti śāsanaṃ kṛtvā pṛthivyāḥ sakāśāt nirgamayaḥ: 'with strength, coming from the earth you drove off completely (niḥśaśāḥ) the slayer Vṛtra; having commanded "do not harass thus" you made him go out from the earth'. The word ojas is stated among the twenty-eight names of strength (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]). The sense is: Indra drove Vṛtra, who was destroying everything, out of the earth-world, ordering him 'Do not oppress thus'. The word ahi means 'slayer (the enemy who kills)'. Skandasvāmin has stated several senses for the word ahi in the Nirukta — water, cloud, the deity of the middle region — and therefore it means 'cloud'. Because the word pṛthivī is stated among the sixteen names of the antarikṣa (Ni. 2-23 [as printed]), here it is used in the sense of antarikṣa; hence 'O Indra, you are very strong' — they explain it as: 'drive the cloud out, so that rain falls from the antarikṣa on the earth'."

- ब्रह्मा — brāhmaṇaḥ stotā — "in the sacrifice, the brāhmaṇa who praises, with their respective hymns, the gods who come to take their share of the oblation; or the sense is 'the priest called Brahmā'."
- वर्धनम् — vṛddhikaraṃ stotram — "this word, formed from the root vṛdhu vṛddhau, means 'praise that causes increase', because it increases strength. The belief is that the strength of the gods grows through the praises made by men."
- स्वराज्यम् — rājño bhāvaḥ karma vā rājyam; svasya rājyaṃ svarājyam — "being a way of acting fit to protect worthy subjects and to win their affection, or the position of one who performs such deeds, is called rājya (kingship). - वर्धनम् — the root vṛdhu vṛddhau; 'he who makes grow' = vardhana; the affix lyuṭ in the agent sense; anā for yu by "yuvor anākau" (युवोरनाकौ, Pā. Sū. 7-1-1); because of the affix the guṇa of the light penultimate vowel by "pugantalaghūpadhasya ca" (Pā. Sū. 7-3-86) [7]

- वर्धनम् (continued) — "...the guṇa of the penultimate light vowel of the root; as before the affix, being l-marked, takes the udātta on the syllable preceding it."
- शविष्ठ — śavaḥ balam asya asti iti śavasvī: by "asmāyāmedhā-srajo vini" (अस्मायामेधास्रजो विनिः, Pā. Sū. 5-2-121) the affix vin in the matup sense, since śavas does not end in a-vowels; in the superlative sense, by "atiśāyane tamabiṣṭhanau" (Pā. Sū. 5-3-55) the affix iṣṭhan; with it following, "vinmator lup" (विन्मतोर्लुक् Pā. Sū. 5-3-65) elides the vin; "ṭeḥ" (टेः, Pā. Sū. 6-4-155) drops the ṭi; the vocative śaviṣṭha; being at the beginning of the pāda there is no aṣṭamika nighāta; "āmantritasya ca" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-198) makes it ādyudātta.
- शशाः — the root śāsu anuśiṣṭau; laṅ, second person singular, sip; the i dropped by "iteś ca"; since ślu would be due to "adiprabhṛtibhyaḥ śapaḥ" (अदिप्रभृतिभ्यः शपः, Pā. Sū. 2-4-72) — śap luk being obtained — by "bahulaṃ chandasi" (Pā. Sū. 2-4-76) ślu is substituted; by "ślau" (श्लौ, Pā. Sū. 6-1-10) reduplication of the root; the reduplicative's ha-initial [sic: śa, "halādiḥ śeṣaḥ"] remains; by "hal-ṅyābbhyaḥ..." the loss of sip; by "bahulaṃ chandasy amāṅyoge 'pi" (Pā. Sū. 6-4-75) the augment aṭ does not come; nighāta since atiṅanta in the pāda.

- स्वराज्यम् — rājño bhāvaḥ karma vā rājyam: by "patyantapurohitādibhyo yak" (पत्यन्तपुरोहितादिभ्यो यक् Pā. Sū. 5-1-128) the affix yak; there rājāse [?] is read (Pā. Sū. 5-1-[128 gaṇa]). The meaning is that for rājan the a-sound enters in the compound; by "nas taddhite" (नस्तद्धिते, Pā. Sū. 6-4-144) the bha-designation being present, the ṭi ending in n (an) is dropped; 'his own kingship' = svarājya; by "akarmadhāraye rājyam" (अकर्मधारये राज्यम्, Pā. Sū. 6-2-130 [?]) the initial udātta of the final member. ||1||

Like a king, Soma was in heaven; he was not on earth. The ṛṣis and the gods considered how to bring Soma to the earth. Then they requested the metres: 'You bring Soma and come.' The metres, consenting to their request, took the form of birds and flew upward. Of them all the Jagatī metre flew up first, but she grew weary in the middle of the way, and brought only the sacrificial gift (dakṣiṇā, the gift given in the sacrifice) and tapas. "...frightening the guardians of Soma, she seized Soma with her feet and her beak and brought him to the earth. This is described in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa by the word śyenabhṛtaḥ. ॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 80.2) [13]

- अमदत् — the root madī harṣe (मदी हर्षे); since the sense is the action of the instigator, the affix ṇic by "hetumati ca" (Pā. Sū. 3-1-26); by "ata upadhāyāḥ" the vṛddhi of the penultimate, because of it; since it is read among the ghaṭādi roots as "madī harṣaglapanayoḥ" it has the designation mit in the sense of joy; by "mitāṃ hrasvaḥ" (मितां ह्रस्वः, Pā. Sū. 6-4-92) the penultimate is shortened again; after the ṇic-ending stem, laṅ, third person singular, tip; the i dropped by "iteś ca"; śap; by "chandasy ubhayathā" śap has the ārdhadhātuka designation, so the ṇi is elided by "ṇer aniṭi" (Pā. Sū. 6-4-51); the augment aṭ for the stem; nighāta accent, since atiṅanta in the pāda.
- अद्भ्यः — āp here is the name of the antarikṣa (the sky); it is plural and feminine; in the ablative with bhyas — a bhakārādi (beginning with bh) affix following — the p becomes t by "apo bhi" (अपो भि, Pā. Sū. 7-4-48); the s of the ending becomes ru, then visarga; by "ūḍidaṃ padādi…" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-171) the case-ending takes the udātta.
- जघन्थ — the root han hiṃsāgatyoḥ (हन हिंसागत्योः); liṭ, second person singular, thal for sip by "parasmaipadānāṃ ṇalatusus…" (Pā. Sū. 3-4-82); since the liṭ is ṇit, reduplication of the root; the hal-initial remains in the reduplicative; ha → ja (by cuṭva); "abhyāsāc ca" (अभ्यासाच्च, Pā. Sū. 7-3-55) turns the h of the root following the reduplicative into k-class (gh); "kṛsṛbhṛ…" (कृसृभृवृस्तुद्रुस्रुश्रुवो लिटि, Pā. Sū. 7-2-13) bars the augment iṭ in the liṭ — this sūtra being restricted to the roots it names, the augment would arise here for thal, but "upadeśe 'tvataḥ" (उपदेशेऽत्वतः, Pā. Sū. 7-2-62 [?]) bars it again since the root has a-vowel and is a root of that kind; the n turns to anusvāra, then parasavarṇa — jaghantha. Because of connection with yat (yena) there is no nighāta, by "yadvṛttān nityam" (Pā. Sū. 8-1-66); since the affix is ṇit, by "liti" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-193) the syllable before the affix takes the udātta.

Grammar of Rik 80.2, continued from p. 570:

- अर्चन् — the root arca pūjāyām (अर्च पूजायाम्); śatṛ in the sense of laṭ; śap; "ato guṇe" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-97) gives the following form; since the first-case ending su follows, the augment num by "ugidacāṃ sarvanāmasthāne 'dhātoḥ"; "hal-ṅyābbhyo…" elides the su; by saṃyogāntalopa the t is dropped; śap and the lasārvadhātuka being anudātta, the root's accent remains. ||2||

- इन्द्र नृम्णं हि ते शवः — he indra tvadīyaṃ balaṃ nṝṇāṃ puruṣāṇāṃ nāmakam abhibhāvakam — "O Indra, your strength is that which subdues men: it humbles the men (the enemies). The word śavaḥ is read among the twenty-eight names of strength and so denotes 'strength' (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]). The word nṛmṇa is also read among the twenty-eight names of strength (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]) and also among the twenty-eight names of wealth beginning maghaṃ reṇkaḥ (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]). Yāska has explained the sense in the bhāṣya: 'nṝn namayati' — 'that which bends men' — that is, 'making them bow down'. Skandasvāmin says: 'nṝn śatrubhūtān prati namati namayati prahvīkaroti' — 'it bows, makes bow, makes humble, men who are enemies'. 'The strength of Indra defeats (humbles) the enemies' — that is the sense."
- अर्चन् — pūjayan, svasya svāmitvaṃ prakaṭayan — "the verb-form arcati is read among the forty-four (?) words denoting the action of worship (arcati-karma) (Ni. 3-19 [as printed]); also because the form arcan arises from the root arca pūjāyām, the sense is 'worshipping'. Here the worship that Indra has to carry out with reference to his svarājya, 'his own sovereignty' (the manner of his protecting), should be such that it is favourable and pleasing to all; the meaning is that he should so act that his lordship is evident to all."
- वृत्रं हनः अपः जयाः — asuraṃ meghaṃ vā jahi; vṛtraṃ hatvā tenāvṛtam udakaṃ labhasva — "The word vṛtra is read among the thirty names of cloud beginning adriḥ, grāvā (Ni. 2-21 [as printed]). It is formed from the root vṛñ varaṇe:

'vṛṇoti ācchādayati kṛṣṇaṃ nabhaḥ' — 'it covers; it covers the black sky' — signifying that it covers the whole antarikṣa; or, from the root vṛdhu vṛddhau, 'vardhate hi varṣāsu' — 'it grows in the rainy season' — because it grows in the rains, the word vṛtra gives the sense of 'cloud'. And from the root asu kṣepaṇe, the word asura is formed: 'asyate kṣipyate sthāne indreṇa varṣārthaṃ' — 'it is hurled from its place by Indra for the sake of rain' — so the word asura is connected with the word vṛtra in the sense of 'cloud'. Similarly the word asura has the senses 'having water', 'having life' (prāṇavān) and so on. The word āpaḥ is read among the hundred and one names of water in the Nirukta along with amṛta (Ni. 2-24 [as printed]). The prayer to Indra is: 'Chastise the clouds that obstruct the waters that are exceedingly useful for the protection of the world, and make flow the amṛta — the water that is like nectar.'" [15] apit, it is treated as ñit, so the guṇa that would result from it does not arise for the root; nighāta accent since atiṅanta in the pāda.

- धृष्णुहि — the root ñidhṛṣā prāgalbhye (ञिधृषा प्रागल्भ्ये), svādi; loṭ, second person singular, hi in place; "svādibhyaḥ śnuḥ" (स्वादिभ्यः श्नुः, Pā. Sū. 3-1-73) gives śnu; by "sārvadhātukam apit" it is ñit, so the guṇa of the light penultimate does not come; by "raṣābhyāṃ no ṇaḥ samānapade" (रषाभ्यां नो णः समानपदे, Pā. Sū. 8-4-1) the n of the affix becomes ṇ; by "tiṅ atiṅaḥ" [and] the paryudāsa of atiṅ, since a tiṅanta ihi precedes it, there is no nighāta; being apit, the accent is final-udātta by the affix.
- यंसते — the root yama uparame (यम उपरमे); in the leṭ of the passive, third person singular, the affix ta; e by "ṭita ātmanepadānāṃ ṭer e"; sip by "sib bahulaṃ leṭi" (Pā. Sū. 3-1-34); aṭ for the leṭ by "leṭo 'ḍāṭau" (लेटोऽडाटौ, Pā. Sū. 3-4-94); the anusvāra for the root by "naś cāpadāntasya jhali"; nighāta accent since atiṅanta in the pāda.
- हनः — the root han hiṃsāgatyoḥ, adādi; since it has the sense of loṭ, by "chandasi luṅlaṅliṭaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 3-4-6) the laṅ, second person singular, with sip; the i dropped; by "bahulaṃ chandasi" the luk of śap does not come; by "bahulaṃ chandasy amāṅyoge 'pi" the augment aṭ does not occur; the s of the affix becomes ru, visarga; since its preceding word belongs to another sentence, there is no nighāta at the head of the pāda; śap being p-marked is anudātta by "anudāttau suppitau"; the root's accent remains. - जयाः — the root ji jaye (जि जये); leṭ, second person singular, the affix sip; the i dropped by "iteś ca" / "ito lopaḥ parasmaipadeṣu" (इतश्च लोपः परस्मैपदेषु, Pā. Sū. 3-4-97); the augment aṭ by "leṭo 'ḍāṭau"; śap; the guṇa of the ik of the root because of it; ay replacement; the s of the affix becomes ru, visarga; as before the root's accent remains.
- अपः — by "ūḍidaṃ padādi…" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-171) the case-ending (śas) takes the udātta. ||3||

"O Indra, you have driven Vṛtra away from both the earth-world and the sky. Now, manifesting your lordship, make fall down the rain-water, accompanied by the wind, which makes living beings fortunate (make it rain)."

English Translation

"You have struck Vritra from off the earth and from heaven; (now) let loose the wind-bound, life-sustaining rain, manifesting your own sovereignty." — as printed.

- मरुत्वतीः — marudbhiḥ saṃyuktāḥ — "'joined with the Maruts' means: the waters needed by the earth, from rain impelled by the wind. It is natural for the wind to blow violently when it rains heavily. Skandasvāmin explains: 'dātṛtvena maruto yāsāṃ santi' — 'the waters which have the Maruts in the sense of givers': the Marut deities are ready to give the waters; or 'tvatsakhāyo maruto ye dātuṃ samarthāḥ' [the quotation is read with doubt [?]] — 'your friends the Marut deities are able to give the waters'."

- जीवधन्याः — jīvāḥ prāṇino dhanyās tṛptā yābhis tāḥ — "because living beings, by drinking the water or by using it in necessary works, obtain satisfaction or contentment, this name has come to water. Skandasvāmin says that since the word dhanya is formed from the word dhana ('wealth'), the water is wealth for the living; or, since the word dhanya is derived from the root ṭhinu prīṇane [sic: as printed; dhinu prīṇane], 'the delighters of all living beings', that is, 'those that satisfy all living creatures'."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 80.4) [18]

- जघन्थ — the root han hiṃsāgatyoḥ; "explained in the second Ṛk of this sūkta" (80.2).
- दिवः — the stem div; fifth-case singular; by "ūḍidaṃ padādi…" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-171) the case-ending takes the udātta.
- सृज — the root sṛja visarge (सृज विसर्गे), tudādi; loṭ, second person singular; hi for sip; the affix śa by "tudādibhyaḥ śaḥ" (तुदादिभ्यः शः, Pā. Sū. 3-1-77); the luk of hi by "ato heḥ" (अतो हेः, Pā. Sū. 6-4-105); since it is at the head of the pāda there is no nighāta; by the accent of the affix it is final-udātta.
- जीवधन्याः — jīvāḥ dhanyāḥ yābhis tāḥ = jīvadhanyāḥ; a bahuvrīhi; by "bahuvrīhau prakṛtyā pūrvapadam" (Pā. Sū. 6-2-1) the accent of the first member remains.
- मरुत्वतीः — maruta āsu santi iti marutvatyaḥ: by "tad asyāsty asminn iti" (Pā. Sū. 5-2-94) the affix matup; by "jhayaḥ" (झयः, Pā. Sū. 8-2-10) the m of matup becomes v; since it is ugit, for the feminine "ugitaś ca" (उगितश्च, Pā. Sū. 4-1-6) gives ṅīp; second-case plural. ||4||

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics (Rik 80.5)

- हीळितः — kruddhaḥ — "'angry', 'one who has anger'. The form hīḷitaḥ is derived from the root heḍṛ anādare krodhe ca ('to disrespect, to be angry'). This root is read among the ten words (reḷati, heḷate ...) denoting the action of anger (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]) —

> अस्या ऊ षु ण उप सातये भुवोऽहेळमानो ररिवा अजाश्व श्रवस्यताम् [?] ।

asyā ū ṣu ṇa upa sātaye bhuvo 'heḷamāno rarivā ajāśva śravasyatām [?] | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-138-4) — the words as read; the verse is garbled at this resolution and I give it with doubt [?]. Gloss, editorial and tentative: "...for our gain become one who is not angered..."

> अहेळमानो वरुणेह बोध्युरुशंस मा न आयुः प्र मोषीः ।

aheḷamāno varuṇeha bodhy uruśaṃsa mā na āyuḥ pra moṣīḥ | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-[24]-11) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Be here, O Varuṇa, not angry; O far-praised, do not rob us of our life."

— in these Ṛks the word is used in the sense of disrespect and anger." - दोधतः — bhṛśaṃ kampamānasya — "(of him who is) trembling violently. Sāyaṇa has explained that this word is formed from the root dhūñ, meaning 'shaking' (kampana). Skandasvāmin, who takes it to be 'krudhyatikarmāyam' (this word of the action of anger), says that because it is formed from the root dodhate, read among the ten words that denote the action of anger, such as krudhyati, the sense is 'angry'. Accordingly Sāyaṇa explains the word as an epithet of vṛtrasya: 'trembling violently'; Skandasvāmin: 'full of anger'."

- सर्माय — saraṇāya, bhūmiṃ pratigamanāya — "the sense of this word, formed from the root sṛ gatau ('movement'), is 'going': the movement of the waters to their place — to run towards the earth, as is their nature."
- सानुम् — samucchritaṃ hanupradeśam — "Sāyaṇa explains it as the raised region of the jaw, the chin, of the demon called Vṛtra. In general the word sānu is conventionally used in the sense of the ridge (slope) of a mountain. Skandasvāmin explains it as 'samucchritam', a raised region. It is to be understood that the slaying of the demon Vṛtra, in the order in which Sāyaṇa wrote his bhāṣya, is also of the nature of a legend (aitihāsika)."
- वृत्रस्य — "(of him) who bears the name Vṛtra, the demon. In the Nirukta —

> तत्को वृत्रः । मेघ इति नैरुक्ताः । त्वाष्ट्रोऽसुर इत्यैतिहासिकाः ।

tat ko vṛtraḥ | megha iti nairuktāḥ | tvāṣṭro 'sura ity aitihāsikāḥ | (no Nirukta number printed) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Who then is Vṛtra? The etymologists say 'a cloud'; the historians say 'the demon, son of Tvaṣṭṛ'."

— having asked what the meaning of the word vṛtra is, those who give the derivation of the word (vyutpatti) say 'cloud'; those who know the legends say 'the demon, born of Tvaṣṭṛ'. And —

> वृत्रो वृणोतेर्वा वर्ततेर्वा वर्धतेर्वा वृत्रः ।

vṛtro vṛṇoter vā vartater vā vardhater vā vṛtraḥ | (no Nirukta number printed) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Vṛtra is from vṛ, to cover; or from vṛt, to turn, exist; or from vṛdh, to grow."

— the word vṛtra, from the roots vṛñ varaṇe, vṛtu vartane, vṛdhu vṛddhau, conveys the senses 'covering', 'being established', or 'growing'. As the śruti-sentence says, 'yad avṛṇot tad vṛtrasya vṛtratvam' ('because it covered, therefore is Vṛtra's Vṛtra-ness'), he covers the antarikṣa and the water; or, as a sense of growth: since Indra struck the cloud and made the water come properly to the earth, the waters arise in the form of rain. And in the legendary view Vṛtra grew very great in measure; sa iṣumātram iṣumātram avardhata ('he grew an arrow-length, an arrow-length') — as every moment he grew to the size of an arrow, so is the sense of growth stated."

- हीळितः — the roots heḍṛ, hoḍṛ in the sense of disrespect; the root heḷate is read among the words for the action of anger (Nirukta 2-12-2); the affix kta following it takes the augment iṭ by "ārdhadhātukasyeḍ valādeḥ" (Pā. Sū. 7-2-35); by "vyatyayo bahulam" the e becomes ī by letter-alteration; the word is final-udātta by the accent of the affix.
- जिघ्नते — the root han hiṃsāgatyoḥ; laṭ, third person singular; by "vyatyayo bahulam" (Pā. Sū. 3-1-85) the ātmanepada affix arises (and likewise the plural); for the affix ya [jha] "ātmanepadeṣv anataḥ" (आत्मनेपदेष्वनतः, Pā. Sū. 7-1-5) gives at; e by "ṭita ātmanepadānāṃ ṭer e"; by "bahulaṃ chandasi" śap is replaced by ślu; by "ślau" reduplication of the root; the hal-initial remains in the reduplicative; cutva, jastva; by "abhyāsāc ca" (Pā. Sū. 7-3-55) the h of the root following the reduplicative becomes k-class (gh); since the affix is ñit by "sārvadhātukam apit", "gamahanajana…" (गमहनजनखनघसां लोपः क्ङित्यनङि, Pā. Sū. 6-4-98) drops the penultimate; "bhṛñām it" (भृञामित्, Pā. Sū. 7-4-76) continuing, by "bahulaṃ chandasi" the reduplicative of the root takes i; the form jighnate; nighāta accent since atiṅanta in the pāda.
- सर्माय — the root sṛ gatau; in the sense of action the affix man by "artistusu-hu-sṛ…" (अर्तिस्तुसुहुसृधृक्षिक्षुभायावापदीक्षिनीभ्यो मन्, Uṇ. Sū. 1-137); the guṇa of the ik of the root because of the affix; the form sarma; since the affix is n-marked, by "ñnityādir nityam" it takes initial udātta; fourth-case singular.

- चोदयन् — the root cuda preraṇe (चुद प्रेरणे), curādi; the affix ṇic in its own sense by "satyāpapāśa…" (Pā. Sū. 3-1-25); because of it the guṇa of the light penultimate; by "sanādyantā dhātavaḥ" it has the root-status; śatṛ in the laṭ sense; śap; guṇa because of it, ay replacement; first-case singular; the ṇic accent remains. ||5||

Sense: "Indra strikes down (ni jighnate) with the hundred-edged (śataparvaṇā, śata-saṃkhyāka-dhārābhiḥ yuktena) thunderbolt on the sānu (adhi repeats the sense of the seventh case): he smites most severely at the raised place of Vṛtra, the cheek and so on. And that Indra, rejoicing (mandānaḥ = mandamānaḥ), being praised, wishes for (icchati) his friends — the praisers (sakhibhyaḥ = of the same fame) — a gātu, a way, a means, to andhas, food. The rest as before." The grammatical tail: mandānaḥ — the root madi stutau; in the passive śānac with yak; since "chandasy ubhayathā" gives śānac the ārdhadhātuka status, the a and ya are elided; since śānac following an anudātta-it root is lasārvadhātuka-anudātta, the udātta falls on the yak; (…) the discussion of the accent (the compressed argument is read with doubt [?]) concludes that the cit-accent alone remains.

- अधि — "For this word Yāska has said 'adhīty uparibhāvaiśvaryaṃ vā', that is, 'the word adhi signifies being above, or sovereignty' (Ni. 1-4). The bhāṣyakāra says here that it indicates the sense of the seventh case."
- शतपर्वणा — śatasaṃkhyākadhārābhir yuktena — "the word parvan is used in the sense of 'edge'; the thunderbolt has a hundred, or many, edges."
- मन्दानः — madī stutau — "for this word, derived from the root madi, which has the sense of praise, Sāyaṇa gives stūyamānaḥ, 'one who is being praised', and Skandasvāmin gives modamānaḥ tṛpyan, 'one who is pleased, satisfied'."
- सखिभ्यः — samānakhyānebhyaḥ stotṛbhyaḥ — "taking the sense 'friends', Skandasvāmin, for the sake of the benefit of those who are friends, and the bhāṣyakāra, 'for the praisers who make known the proper deeds and so on', explain it."
- अन्धसः गातुमिच्छति — "The word andhaḥ is read among the twenty-eight names of food beginning andhaḥ, vājaḥ (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]); so andhaḥ means food. The bhāṣya says that Indra desires for those who praise him a way by which food may be obtained: that is, he shows them a means of getting food."

"Skandasvāmin, accepting for the word vṛtra the sense 'cloud', explains: Indra, satisfied by drinking Soma, strikes the cloud that is in the raised region with the thunderbolt of a hundred edges, desiring that the waters, in the form of rain, should fall to the earth as friends (sakhi) — this is the sense he gives."

- शतपर्वणा — a bahuvrīhi; by "bahuvrīhau prakṛtyā pūrvapadam" (Pā. Sū. 6-2-1) the accent of the first member remains; third-case singular.
- मन्दानः — the root madi stutau; by "idito num dhātoḥ" (इदितो नुम् धातोः, Pā. Sū. 7-1-58) the augment num; after it, in the passive, in the sense of laṭ, śānac; this following, by "sārvadhātuke yak" (सार्वधातुकेयक् Pā. Sū. 3-1-67) yak in its own sense; since by "chandasy ubhayathā" śānac has also the ārdhadhātuka designation, "ato lopaḥ" drops the a; by "yasya halaḥ" (यस्य हलः, Pā. Sū. 6-4-49) the ya is dropped; the form mandāna. Since śānac follows an anudātta-it root (it is lasārvadhātuka), by "tāsyanudāttenṅid…" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-186) it is anudātta, so the yak gets udātta; since the yak followed by the anudātta is elided, by "anudāttasya ca yatrodāttalopaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-161) the udātta would come on śānac; since, however, as said above śānac has the ārdhadhātuka designation, the lasārvadhātuka-anudātta accent is blocked, and so the final-udātta that comes by "citaḥ" (चितः, Pā. Sū. 6-1-163) alone remains.
- इच्छति — the root iṣu icchāyām (इषु इच्छायाम्); laṭ, third person singular, tip; śa by "tudādibhyaḥ śaḥ"; by "iṣugamiyamāṃ chaḥ" (इषुगमियमां छः, Pā. Sū. 7-3-77) the root takes the final ccha; nighāta accent since atiṅanta in the pāda. ||6||

"O Indra, who have the cloud as your vehicle and wield the thunderbolt, your power is unobstructed; for you, displaying your own lordship, killed Vṛtra, the deceitful one, in the form of a deer, by guile alone."

English Translation

"Cloud-borne, Indra, wielder of the thunder-bolt, verily your prowess is undisputed, since you with (superior) craft, have slain that deceptive deer (Vritra) manifesting your own sovereignty." — as printed.

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics (Rik 80.7)

- अद्रिवः — adrir iti meghanāma — "the word adri is read among the thirty names of cloud beginning adriḥ, grāvā (Ni. 2-21 [as printed]); it means 'cloud'. Because Indra has the cloud as his vehicle he is well known as 'cloud-borne'. Skandasvāmin: adrayaḥ — somābhiṣavagrāvāṇaḥ: 'stones for pressing Soma, the stones that crush the Soma juice'."
- अनुत्तम् — "The word anuttam is a nipātita word. Nipāta means that, because the separate analysis into stem and affix is not clearly seen, the words are simply read as such. It is also said to be an indeclinable. They explain that for the word anuttam the meaning is 'power not subject to being repelled', that is, the power Indra possesses. In this sense the word is an epithet of the word vīryam."
- मायिनं मृगं मायया वधीः — "Sāyaṇa explains that Indra destroys by guile itself Vṛtra, who is in the form of a deer (mṛga), a cheat who creates trouble (hiṃsā) for the world.

> Skandasvāmin explains: the cloud named mṛga, which is to be sought for the sake of sending down the asura or the rain, since no one else was able to strike it, you strike it by guile and thus set a limit to the (threat to the) protection of your sovereignty (svarājyarakṣaṇa), the empire.

The asuras are well known as māyāvins. Māyāvin means 'one who practises tantra (stratagem), or battles by deceit and the like', that is, cheats. It is described in many places in the Ṛgveda that Indra destroyed such enemies by stratagem, means, deceit and the like —" [28]

- अनुत्तम् — the root nuda preraṇe (णुद प्रेरणे); the affix kta in the passive; natva of the niṣṭhā that "radābhyāṃ niṣṭhāto naḥ pūrvasya ca daḥ" (रदाभ्यां निष्ठातो नः..., Pā. Grammar of Rik 80.7, continued from p. 587:

- मायिनम् — since the word māyā is read in the vrīhyādi group, by "vrīhyādibhyaś ca" (व्रीह्यादिभ्यश्च, Pā. Sū. 5-2-116) the affix ini in the sense of matup; by the initial udātta of the affix the i is udātta; second-case singular.
- अवधीः — the root han hiṃsāgatyoḥ; luṅ, second person singular, sip; the i dropped by "iteś ca"; by "luṅi ca" (लुङि च, Pā. Sū. 2-4-43) vadha is the substitute for the base; this ends in a; sic for cli; by "asti-sico 'pṛkte" (अस्तिसिचोऽपृक्ते, Pā. "Your thunderbolts were scattered widely over ninety-and nine rivers; great is your prowess; strength is deposited in your arms, manifesting your own sovereignty." — as printed (the print says "ninety-and nine", where the Ṛk and the bhāṣya have ninety — recorded as printed).

- वज्रासः — "didyut, nemiḥ …: among the eighteen names of the thunderbolt beginning didyut, nemiḥ, the word vajra occurs (Ni. 3-10 [as printed]). 'Varjayati prāṇaiḥ śatrūn' — 'it makes the enemies depart from their lives' — that is, it takes the life of the enemies; or 'vināśayati śatrūn', it destroys the enemies; hence Indra's weapon is called vajra. Because the plural is used here — vajrāsaḥ — the sense is that these are weapons that Indra uses for the destruction of the enemies. But 'nāvyāḥ navatiṃ anu vi asthiran': since it is described that the ninety rivers, which were large (to be crossed by boats), too were held back by the demon Vṛtra, and that the thunderbolt, seeing that, became many (…), the point of the sūkta is to say that when destroying the demon Vṛtra one thunderbolt became like many weapons. From this it is understood that the greatness of the thunderbolt exceeds that of other weapons."
- ते बाह्वोर्बलं हितम् — "the sense is that in your arms is placed a strength greater than the strength of the arms of all (others). The roots o hāk gatau and o hāk tyāge have the senses of going and abandoning; from them with the affix kta the words hita in the senses 'gone', 'abandoned' arise; but here, from the root ḍudhāñ, by the sūtra "dadhāter hiḥ" (दधातेर्हिः, Pā. Sū. 7-4-42) the affix kta is replaced and the form hita arises: 'is placed, is held'."

- नवतिम् — navatisaṃkhyākā vṛtreṇa niruddhā nadīḥ — "the bhāṣyakāra has explained the word navatim as 'ninety rivers held back by Vṛtra'. Here the doubt arises whether navatim means just the rivers of the definite number ninety, or whether like words denoting number such as śatam, sahasram it has a manifold sense. In places where a manifold sense is indicated, the use of the words śate, sahasra is ordinary. Hence there are grounds enough for saying that the word navatim indicates only a definite number, and that in this the use of the word has especially to do with rivers. For example —

nava ca yan navatiṃ ca sravantīḥ śyeno na bhīto ataro rajāṃsi | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-32-14) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Nine and ninety flowing (rivers) you crossed, like a frightened falcon, the (watery) spaces."

> ह्रास्य पारं नवतिं नाव्यानामपि कर्तमवर्तयोऽयज्यून् ।

hrāsya [?] pāraṃ navatiṃ nāvyānām api kartam avartayo 'yajyūn | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-121-13) — the first word is garbled in the print [?]; the sense is uncertain; I give the words as read.

> नव यदस्य नवतिं च भोगान्त्साकं वज्रेण मघवा विवृश्चत् ।

nava yad asya navatiṃ ca bhogān sākaṃ vajreṇa maghavā vivṛścat | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 5-29-6) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "When Maghavan cut off nine and ninety of its coils together with the thunderbolt."

— in these Ṛks the word navati is used in connection with rivers. Except for the second example, in the other Ṛks the number is stated as nava navatim, ninety-nine; and in contexts where Indra destroyed the cities of Śambara and other asuras the words nava navatim — 'ninety-nine' — are also used; so there is room for the doubt that these words may indicate 'many'."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 80.8)

- वज्रासः — after the word vajra, when jas is considered, by "ājjaser asuk" (आज्जसेरसुक् Pā. Sū. 7-1-50) the augment asuk for jas [Vedic]; being k-marked it becomes the final element.
- अस्थिरन् — the root ṣṭhā gatinivṛttau (ष्ठा गतिनिवृत्तौ); luṅ, third person plural, the affix jhi; because of the preposition vi in connection, by "samavapravibhyaḥ sthaḥ" (समवप्रविभ्यः स्थः, Pā. Sū. 1-3-22) the ātmanepada; when cli is replaced in the luṅ, by "mantre ghasa-hvara-ṇaśa-vṛda-..." (Pā. Sū. 2-4-80) the luk of cli; by "sthāghvor ic ca" (Pā. Sū. 1-2-17) the i for the ā of the root; the jhi gets the substitute ran by vyatyaya (ātmanepada jha → ran) [by "ṅit-ṛṣa..."]; aṭ for the stem; nighāta accent since atiṅanta in the pāda.
- नाव्याः — nāvā tāryāḥ = nāvyāḥ: in the sense of tārya ('to be crossed'), after the word nau the affix yat by "nauvayodharma..." (Pā. Sū. 4-4-91); by "vānto yi pratyaye" (वान्तो यि प्रत्यये, Pā. Sū. 6-1-79) the āv substitute (nāv-ya); the form nāvya; in the feminine, by "ajādyataṣṭāp" (अजाद्यतष्टाप्, Pā. Sū. 4-1-4) the affix ṭāp; by "yato 'nāvaḥ" (यतोऽनावः, Pā. Sū. 6-1-213) — in which anāvaḥ has been excluded — the svarita accent comes by "tit svaritam" (तित्स्वरितम्, Pā. Sū. 6-1-185).

- बाह्वोः — the stem bāhu; sixth-case dual; here a yaṇ has taken the place of the udātta, and since a consonant precedes it, the case-ending following takes the udātta by "udāttayaṇo hal-pūrvāt" (उदात्तयणो हल्पूर्वात्, Pā. Sū. 6-1-174). ||8||

"Displaying Indra's lordship, a thousand people worshipped him; twenty people (the priests and so on) praised him; a hundred ṛṣis praised him again and again; and the oblation was made ready for offering to this very Indra."

English Translation

"A thousand mortals worshipped him together; twenty have hymned (his praise); a hundred (sages) repeatedly glorify him; so, Indra, is the oblation lifted up, manifesting your own sovereignty." — as printed.

- सहस्रं साकमर्चते, परि ष्टोभत विंशतिः, शतैनमन्वनोनवुः — sahasrasaṃkhyākāḥ manuṣyāḥ — "'people of the number a thousand' means that a thousand people together, at one and the same time, worshipped this Indra. Sāyaṇa has explained that twenty people — the sixteen priests, the sacrificer, his wife, the sadasya and the śamitṛ — who belong to the sacrifice, and a hundred ṛṣis, all together, praised Indra. Skandasvāmin explains it thus — arcata = stotā: 'praise!'; pariṣṭobhata = 'worship!' — and so, 'O sons, O grandsons, O priests, may you praise Indra so as to be a thousand in number, and so as to be twenty in number; worship him!' By this, the words sahasra, śata, viṃśati ('a thousand', 'a hundred', 'twenty') do not have the rule that they denote only that number: the sense also appears that even a single person may worship and praise Indra as though he were so many" [33]

— in this Ṛk, for the word sahasram the sense 'those who praise the well-known Indra, the vasurociṣaḥ, a thousand in number: the ṛṣis' is given. By the word viṃśati, 'twenty', the twenty Aṅgirases may be understood. In the itihāsa the Aṅgirases are well known as ten persons; but if one counts Bṛhaspati and the other brothers, the Aṅgirasa-ṛṣis come to twenty. These also, together with the thousand vasurociṣas, praise Indra. "O Indra, wielder of the thunderbolt, when, displaying your own lordship, accompanied by the Marut deities, you slew Vṛtra by your own power, these two great ones, earth and sky, trembled with fear on seeing your anger."

English Translation

"This heaven and earth trembled, thunderer, at your wrath, when, attended by the Maruts, you slew Vritra by your prowess, manifesting your own sovereignty." — as printed.

- ओजसा — "ojaḥ, pājaḥ: this word is stated among the twenty-eight names of strength beginning ojaḥ, pājaḥ (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]); hence it means 'strength'."
- मही — "svadhe purandhrī …: since it is stated among the twenty-four names of heaven and earth (dyāvāpṛthivī) beginning with svadhe purandhrī (Ni. 3-22 [as printed]), here it means the earth and the antarikṣa."

- भियसा — "from the root ñibhī bhaye, with the affix kasi, which is Uṇādi: it means 'fear'."
- मन्यवे — "the word manyu is stated among the eleven names of anger beginning heḷaḥ, haraḥ (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]). Here, because it is a word denoting the cause that brings about fear, the fifth case (ablative) sense is conveyed though the word stands in the fourth case: 'from anger'. It is explained that at the time of slaying Vṛtra even heaven and earth trembled from Indra's anger."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 80.11)

- वेपेते — the root ṭuvepṛ kampane (टुवेपृ कम्पने); laṭ, third person dual, the affix ātām; by "ṭita ātmanepadānāṃ ṭer e" the ṭi (ām) becomes e; the ā becomes iy by "āto ṅitaḥ" (आतो ङितः, Pā. Sū. 7-2-81); the y is dropped by "lopo vyor vali" (लोपो व्योर्वलि, Pā. Sū. 6-1-66); śap by "kartari śap"; guṇa because the i follows; since it is at the head of the pāda there is no nighāta; the root's accent remains.
- भियसा — the root ñibhī bhaye, of the juhotyādi group; the Uṇādi affix kasi; as it is k-marked there is no guṇa of the root; by "aci śnudhātubhruvāṃ…" the iy replacement; the form bhiyas; by the accent of the affix the vowel after y (a) is udātta; third-case singular.
- अवधीः — explained in the seventh Ṛk of this sūkta (80.7).
- वज्रिन् — vajraḥ asyāsti iti vajrī: in the sense of matup, by "ata ini-ṭhanau" (अत इनिठनौ, Pā. Sū. 5-2-115) the affix ini; in the vocative, by "na ṅi-sambuddhyoḥ" (नङिसम्बुद्ध्योः, Pā. Sū. 8-2-8) the elision of the n is prohibited; by "āmantritasya ca" the nighāta accent. ||11||

"Neither the quaking of the demon Vṛtra nor his dreadful roar made Indra afraid; displaying his own lordship, the thunderbolt, made of iron and with many edges, hurled by Indra, came upon Vṛtra."

English Translation

"Vritra deterred not Indra by his trembling or his clamour; the many-edged iron thunder-bolt fell upon him: (Indra manifesting his own sovereignty." — as printed (the bracket is left unclosed in the print).

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics (Rik 80.12)

- तन्यता — "from the root stana śabde this word gives the sense 'sound or noise'. Since here it qualifies the word vṛtra, the bhāṣyakāra explains it as ghoreṇa garjanaśabdena: 'the roaring sound that creates fear', 'dreadful thundering sound'."
- सहस्रभृष्टिः — "though the word sahasra conveys the sense 'a thousand in number', here it indicates 'many, much'; the sense is 'a thunderbolt with many edges'."
- Skandasvāmin — "he explains the phrase arcan anu svarājyam too as an epithet of the thunderbolt: because the sovereignty which Indra has come to have is seen with great restraint through the greatness of the thunderbolt, the 'display of sovereignty' (svarājyārcana) is attributed figuratively (aupacārika) to the thunderbolt; or, to Indra who rules his sovereignty with dignity, the thunderbolt is all his own — so he explains."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 80.12)

- वेपसा — the root ṭuvepṛ kampane; the affix asun by "sarvadhātubhya asun" (Uṇ. Sū. 4-188); the word vepas; by "ñnityādir nityam" the initial udātta; third-case singular.
- तन्यता — the root stana śabde; since "bahulam" is read in the Uṇādi, the affix yatuc prescribed for the root tan by "ṛtanyañjivanyaja…" (Uṇ. Sū. 3-442) occurs by the word bahulam here also; hence also the loss of s; the form tanyatu; since the third case follows this u-ending word, by "supāṃ suluk…" it receives the ḍā substitute; because of the mark ḍ, the ṭi part is dropped; since the affix with udātta u is lost because it is followed by the anudātta case-ending, by "anudāttasya ca yatrodāttalopaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-161) the case-ending takes the udātta.
- बीभयत् — the root ñibhī bhaye; since the sense is the action of the instigator, the affix ṇic by "hetumati ca"; though here, because the fear is shown by no cause of quaking and thundering but from Vṛtra (the instigator), by "bibheter hetubhaye" (बिभेतेर्हेतुभये, Pā. Sū. 6-1-56) the root does not take ā because of ṇic; after the ṇic-ending stem, luṅ, third person singular, tip; the i dropped by "iteś ca"; by "ṇiśri-druzubhyaḥ kartari caṅ" (णिश्रिद्रुस्रुभ्यः कर्तरि चङ्, Pā. Sū. 3-1-48) caṅ for cli; by "caṅi" (चङि, Pā. Sū. 6-1-11) reduplication of the root because of it; the reduplicative is shortened; cutva, jastva; the guṇa of the ī of the root because of the ṇic; ay replacement; the ṇi dropped by "ṇer aniṭi" because of caṅ; by "sanvallaghuni…" (सन्वल्लघुनि चङ्परेऽनग्लोपे, Pā. Sū. 7-4-93) sanvadbhāva; "dīrgho laghoḥ" (दीर्घो लघोः, Pā. Sū. 7-4-94) lengthens the reduplicative; by "bahulaṃ chandasy amāṅyoge 'pi" the augment aṭ does not come; nighāta accent since atiṅanta in the pāda.

- आयसः — ayasaḥ vikāraḥ = āyasaḥ: by "tasya vikāraḥ" (Pā. Sū. 4-3-134) the affix aṇ; "taddhiteṣv acām ādeḥ" (तद्धितेष्वचामादेः, Pā. Sū. 7-2-117) the vṛddhi of the first vowel; by the accent of the affix it is final-udātta.
- आयत — the root āya paya gatau (आय पय गतौ), bhvādi, ātmanepadin; laṅ, third person singular, the affix ta; śap by "kartari śap"; "āḍ ajādīnām" (आडजादीनाम्, Pā. Sū. 6-4-72) gives the augment āṭ; nighāta accent for the tiṅanta. ||12||

"O Indra, striking with your thunderbolt Vṛtra and the weapon (hurled at you for slaying you), and displaying your own lordship, your strength, which was set on slaying the slaying Vṛtra, spread through the whole sky (shining in the sky)."

English Translation

"When you (Indra) encountered [sic: "encounterred" in the print] with your bolt Vritra, and the thunderbolt (which he hurled), then, Indra, your strength determined to slay Ahi was displayed in the heavens, manifesting your own sovereignty." — as printed ("encounterred" is a misprint [sic]).

॥ विशेषविषयगळु ॥ — Special Topics (Rik 80.13)

- बद्बधे — badha bandhane — "the root badha conveys the sense of binding; used in the passive sense, badbadhe means 'was bound'. Divi badbadhe — 'in heaven was bound' means: anusyūtaṃ baddhaṃ vyāptam, 'pervaded, spread'. The sense is: it shone, pervading the whole sky."

- अहिम् — "the word ahi, as it is stated among the hundred and one names of water (Ni. 2-24 [as printed]), is stated also among the thirty names of cloud (Ni. 2-21 [as printed]). Sāyaṇa explains it as āgatya hantāram, 'one who strikes, having come in front'. Skandasvāmin explains that the word ahi has the senses 'cloud' and 'Vṛtra'."
- वृत्रं तव चाशनिं वज्रेण — "though aśani here means 'the thunderbolt-weapon', here the general sense 'weapon' must be given. The sense is that Indra struck both Vṛtra and his weapon well, with his thunderbolt."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 80.13) [41]

- अयोधयः — the root yudha prahāre (युध प्रहारे); after the ṇic-ending stem, laṅ, second person singular, sip; the i dropped by "iteś ca"; śap; because of it the guṇa of the ik of the ṇic, ay replacement; the guṇa of the light penultimate of the root because of ṇic; the augment aṭ for the stem; the form ayodhayaḥ. Since the yat-connection is present, by "yadvṛttān nityam" (Pā. Sū. 8-1-66) the nighāta is prohibited; since the augment aṭ is udātta, the word is ādyudātta.

Grammar of Rik 80.13, continued from p. 605:

- जिघांसतः — the root han hiṃsāgatyoḥ; since the sense of wishing is present, by "dhātoḥ karmaṇaḥ samānakartṛkād icchāyāṃ vā" (धातोः कर्मणः समानकर्तृकादिच्छायां वा, Pā. Sū. 3-1-7) the affix san; by "sanyaṅoḥ" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-9) reduplication of the one-syllabled root; the hal-initial remains in the reduplicative; cutva; by "sani" the reduplicative takes i (Pā. Sū. 7-4-79); by "ajjhanagamāṃ sani" (अज्झनगमां सनि, Pā. Sū.

41. grammar page, noted briefly; runs to p. 606

6-4-16) the penultimate of the root is lengthened; by "abhyāsāc ca" (Pā. Sū. 7-3-55) the h of the root after the reduplicative becomes kutva (gh); by "naś cāpadāntasya jhali" the n gets anusvāra; by "sanādyantā dhātavaḥ" (Pā. Sū. 3-1-32) the san-ending jighāṃsa gets the root-designation; after it, in the sense of laṭ, the affix śatṛ; śap; by "ato guṇe" the following form; sixth-case singular; by "abhyastānām ādiḥ" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-189) the initial udātta.

- दिवि — the stem div; seventh-case singular; by "ūḍidaṃ padādi…" the case-ending takes the udātta.
- बद्धधे — the root badha bandhane; in the passive liṭ, third person singular; by "liṭas tajhayor eśirec" (लिटस्तझयोरेशिरेच्, Pā. Sense: "O adrivaḥ, O vajrin, O Indra: at your abhistana, your lion-roar, sthāḥ — whatever is stationary — and jagat — whatever is moving: both tremble (rejate = kampate). Tvaṣṭṛ too, the maker of the thunderbolt, trembles exceedingly (vevijyate) with fear (bhiyā) at your wrath. The rest as before." The grammatical tail: sthāḥ — from the root sthā with kvip; vevijyate — the root ovijī bhayacalanayoḥ, with yaṅ in the intensive sense; reduplication by "sanyaṅoḥ"; the lasārvadhātuka accent being anudātta since the root is a-ending by teaching, the root's own (yaṅ) accent remains; the nighāta does not come to indra standing at the beginning of the pāda, since (by "āmantritaṃ pūrvam avidyamānavat" — which treats the preceding as non-existent) the exclusion "apādādau" applies.

- अद्रिवः — adrivikārarūtvāt [as read; adrivikāratvāt?] — "adri is the stone; since the thunderbolt is a product of the stone (adri), the thunderbolt-weapon too has acquired the name adri. The one who has the adri, adrivān, the wielder of the thunderbolt-weapon — this is the sense: Indra."
- स्थाः — "from the root ṣṭhā gatinivṛttau the form sthāḥ arises: things that are stationary, that do not move."
- रेजते — kampate — "(it) trembles from fear. The Nirukta-writer says: 'bhyasate, rejate iti bhayavepanayoḥ dhātū' — 'bhyasate' and 'rejate' are the two roots for fear and trembling — and the author of the Nirukta says that both these roots are used in both senses of fear and trembling" [the quotation is read with doubt [?]].

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 80.14) [43]

- अद्रिवः — explained in the seventh Ṛk of this sūkta (80.7).
- स्थाः — the root ṣṭhā gatinivṛttau; by "dhātvādeḥ ṣaḥ saḥ" the initial ṣ becomes s; by "kvip ca" (क्विप् च, Pā. Sū. 3-2-76) the affix kvip; by "kṛttaddhitasamāsāś ca" (कृत्तद्धितसमासाश्च, Pā. Sū. 1-2-46) it has the designation prātipadika; first-case singular; by the accent of the root it is udātta.
- रेजते — the root reji kampane (रेञ् [?] कम्पने); laṭ, third person singular; nighāta accent for the tiṅanta.
- वेविज्यते — the root ovijī bhayacalanayoḥ; in the sense of intensity, by "dhātor ekāco…" the affix yaṅ [sic: the print says "yaj" for the yaṅ]; by "sanyaṅoḥ" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-9) the reduplication of the root; the hal-initial remains in the reduplicative; by "guṇo yaṅluk-oḥ" (Pā. Sū. 7-4-82) the guṇa of the reduplicative; by "sanādyantā dhātavaḥ" the yaṅ- ending vevijya has the root-designation; after it, in the sense of the present, laṭ, third person singular, the affix ta; by "ṭita ātmanepadānāṃ…" e [44]

Grammar of Rik 80.14, continued from p. 608:

- वेविज्यते (continued) — "…by 'ṭita ātmanepadānāṃ ṭer e' the ṭi part becomes e; the form vevijyate. Since the root is adupadeśa, the lasārvadhātuka (te) becomes anudātta by 'tāsyanudāttenṅid…' (Pā. Sū. 6-1-186), and the accent of the yaj [yaṅ] alone remains. Before this, the word indra is at the head of the pāda; since it has the āmantrita-designation, by 'āmantritaṃ pūrvam avidyamānavat' (Pā. Sū. 8-1-72) it has avidyamānavattva ('as if non-existent'); thus, since vevijyate comes at the head of the pāda, by the exclusion 'apādādau' no nighāta accent arises."
- भिया — the root ñibhī bhaye; the affix kvip; the third-case ṭā following, by "aci śnudhātubhruvāṃ…" the iy replacement; by "sāvekācas tṛtīyādiḥ" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-168), because the stem is of one syllable, the case-ending takes the udātta. ||14||

"Here this is what is said: whatever we may know of Indra is so very little that it should be said 'we do not know Indra at all'. Who indeed could know Indra? His deeds of prowess are unsurpassed; no one knows (deeds) greater than those. And since all the gods established (sthāpayām āsuḥ) valour, wisdom and strength in him, he performs great deeds of prowess; and because of their greatness, we of little understanding do not know him — so the connection runs." The Kannada explains: "that is, what we know about Indra is extremely little. Who, by himself, knows Indra well? No one. His deeds of daring are of the highest; no one has seen deeds that surpass them. Since in that Indra all the gods have established valour, wisdom, strength and similar powers and abilities, his deeds, full of valour, are exceedingly great, and so men of small understanding like us are not able to understand them — that is the chief sense."

- न यात् अधीमसि — "the word yāt, formed from the root yā, is used in the sense of killing (vadha) —

> आहेयातारं कमपश्य इन्द्र हृदि यत्ते जघ्नुषो भीरगच्छत् ।

— in the word yātāram in this Ṛk, as the example: 'Indra confronts all enemies; there is no one who can confront Indra, fight him and make him bow.' So Skandasvāmin explains the sense. Sarvatra vyāpya vartamānam indram: 'we, small people, cannot know Indra, who dwells pervading all places, in all quarters' — so Sāyaṇa explains." - परः वीर्या — "'Indra, by his own strength, dwells in a very distant place, which men cannot reach' is the sense. — in this Ṛk the word paraḥ is used in the sense stated above."

- नृम्णम् — "this word is stated among the twenty-eight names of strength (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]) and is also read among the twenty-eight names of wealth (Ni. 3-9 [as printed]). The meaning is that the gods have established wealth and strength in Indra in such a way as to be exceeding. Skandasvāmin explains that, in order that Indra may protect his own sovereignty with exceeding dignity, the gods have provided him with wealth, intellect, strength, and the force of an army known as the Marut deities."

- अधीमसि — adhi is a preposition; the root iṇ gatau; laṭ, first person plural, the affix masi [Vedic]; by "adiprabhṛtibhyaḥ śapaḥ" the luk of śap; by "ido mase" [sic: "iden mases" as printed] (Pā. - उक्था — "praises that make known the greatness of the respective deities in sacrifices."
- ब्रह्माणि — "the word means oblations such as havis, offered into the fire with a deity as the object."
- पूर्वथा — "this word shows the relation of the illustration and what is illustrated (dṛṣṭānta-dārṣṭāntika). In the sense that, in the time when the sages Vasiṣṭha and others of former times performed sacrifices, the oblations and praises went to Indra" [48]

"...went (all) to Indra, so, as the sages Manu, Dadhyañc and Atharvan performed, the praises and the like belong to Indra — this is the gist." - अर्चन् अनु स्वराज्यम् — "He explains: Indra, following the position of being king that he himself is, honours it, and by doing deeds such as the slaying of Vṛtra, displays his own supremacy." - दध्यङ् — "Dadhyañc — in the Nirukta: 'pratyakto dhyānam iti vā' — (that is: 'he who is turned toward (pratyak)

48. the sentence breaks off at the foot of p. 614 and continues on p. 615

[dhyāna]', or 'meditation') [as read; the Nirukta words are given with doubt [?]]: he who has, in the beginning of meditation, his own worthiness (arhatā); in him all the functionaries of meditation are found. Dadhyañc, Atharvā, Manuḥ: those who are addressed by these words, if one says that the three are one, that is the Āditya (sun); if one says that these three are separate, then it must be known that they are the three sages of the heavenly region (dyusthāna) — so the Nirukta explains."

"Dadhyañc or Dadhīci is a ṛṣi famous in the Purāṇas and elsewhere. The bhāṣyakāra gives here an upākhyāna: when the ṛṣi called Dadhyañc, son of Atharvan, was alive, the asuras, terrified at the mere sight of him, fled. After he died and went to heaven, the asuras spread fearlessly over the whole earth. Then Indra, who was not able to fight these asuras, searched for that ṛṣi, and came to know that the ṛṣi had gone to heaven. Then Indra asked those who were near whether any part of his limbs remained; then they said: 'The ṛṣi Dadhīci, at one time taught the Aśvin deities the madhuvidyā, with the head of a horse; only that horse's head remains; and where it is, we do not know.' Indra told them to search for it; they found it lying in the lake called Śaryaṇāvat near Kurukṣetra, and brought it. Indra conquered the asuras with the bones of that head. The text says that he destroyed the māyā-webs of the asuras nava navatim — 'nine times ninety', that is, eight hundred and ten. In explaining the number 'nine times ninety' the bhāṣyakāra says: the asuras had three kinds of māyā-types for conquering the deities of the three worlds; each of these existed in the three modes — present, past, future — making nine kinds in all. Those nine *māyā*s, joined with the three powers utsāha (energy), mantra (counsel) and prabhu (authority) [utsāhādi-śakti-traya], amount to 9 × 3 = 27; and joined with the three qualities beginning with sattva [sāttvikādi-guṇa-traya], 27 × 3 = 81 (the numerals as read: "೯×೩=೨೭", "೨೭×೩=೮೧").

Since these eighty-one *māyā*s are practised in the ten directions, the total is 81 × 10 = 810 — or nine times ninety, 9 × 90 = 810 (as read). Thus, he explains, Indra rendered fruitless the māyā-webs of the asuras in the form of Vṛtra."

"Skandasvāmin tells another itihāsa: in the old days there were asuras called Kālakañja. They were very powerful, and were killing the deities and giving them great trouble. Then the deities went to Brahmā and prayed that they should be informed of a means to destroy these asuras. Brahmā said: 'O gods, there is a ṛṣi called Dadhyañc. Go to him; he will tell you a fitting means for the destruction of the asuras.' As Brahmā said, the gods went to the ṛṣi Dadhīci and told him that Brahmā had sent them. The ṛṣi, understanding by his yogic vision the work for which they had come, gave up his life by yogasamādhi. Then Indra destroyed the asuras with the bones. Skandasvāmin says that this matter itself is described in this Ṛk.

It is also believed that the head of the ṛṣi Dadhīci was the head of a horse, and that it had been given to him by the Aśvin deities. After Dadhīci's death Indra found his head, the head of the horse, which was lying on the edge of a mountain in a lake called Śaryaṇāvatī; this is described in Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-84-13 [?].

On the question of how the horse's head came to the ṛṣi Dadhīci, Skandasvāmin tells another story: Indra taught Dadhīci, the son of Atharvan, the nature of the supreme Brahman, called Madhu, and said that if he told it to anyone his head would fall off. After some time the Aśvin deities came to the ṛṣi Dadhīci and, when asked of the Brahman-nature that Indra had taught him, Dadhīci told them that Indra had said his head would fall off if he spoke of this matter. From fear he said he would not tell. The Aśvins said: 'Do not worry about that; if your head falls off, we will give you ours;' Dadhīci agreed. So when Dadhīci's head fell off, the Aśvins cut off the head of a horse, fitted it on and joined it to the body of the ṛṣi Dadhīci; therefore it is described that the ṛṣi Dadhīci's head became the head of a horse. This matter is described in Ṛk. Saṃ. 1-116-12 [?] by the ṛṣi called Kakṣīvān.

The name of this ṛṣi occurs in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā at 1-80-16; 1-84-13; 1-84-14; 1-116-12; 1-117-22; 1-139-4 [?] and so on, and in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (3-1-4-4; 3-2-?-?), Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā (19-4?), Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (14-1-1-18; 6-4-2-3; 14-1-1-10; 14-1-1-?) and the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (2-5-22?) and other places." - अथर्वा — "Atharvā — a well-known ṛṣi, the primal ancestor of a group of ṛṣis. In the places where this word is used in the plural, the sense is 'the descendants of this ṛṣi'. In some places —

daśa rathān praṣṭimataḥ śataṃ gā ātharvaṇebhyaḥ | aśvathaḥ pāyave dadāt || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 6-47-24) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "Ten chariots with their (team) and a hundred cows (he gave) to the Ātharvaṇas; Aśvatha gave to Pāyu."

— in this and other Ṛks there is the praise of a gift (dānastuti): King Aśvatha gave chariots, cows and so on to those of the Atharvan line.

abhi te madhunā payo 'tharvāṇo aśiśrayuḥ | devaṃ devāya devayu || (Ṛk. Saṃ. 9-11-2) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "The Atharvans have mixed milk with your honey (Soma), the divine for the god, desiring the gods."

— in this Ṛk it is mentioned that these of the Atharvan line offered Soma juice mixed with milk to Soma. The name of this ṛṣi is also found in —

> त्वामग्ने पुष्करादध्यथर्वा निरमन्थत ।

tvām agne puṣkarād adhy atharvā niramanthata | (Ṛk. Saṃ. 6-16-13) — Gloss, editorial and tentative: "You, O Agni, Atharvan churned out from the lotus (the sky/waters)."

[the third citation printed at the foot of this group is garbled at this resolution and it is not reproduced] (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-120-9).

— in these Ṛks the word occurs. In the tenth maṇḍala of the Ṛgveda (Ṛk. Saṃ. 10-[120] [?]) there is a sūkta addressed to Indra, seen by the ṛṣi Bṛhaddiva, of the lineage of this ṛṣi Atharvan." - मनुः — "In the Ṛgveda the name of Manu occurs in many places, but nowhere is there much detail. Manu is known to be the primal man (mūlapuruṣa) of the human race and also the guide in the order of procedure of sacrifices and the like. When he was distributing his property among his sons, his youngest son, Nābhānediṣṭha, who was studying in the gurukula as a brahmacārin, received no share; having finished his studies he came and asked his father for his inheritance (dāyabhāga). Special Topics of Rik 80.16, continued:

"Manu told him: 'Go to the place where the Aṅgirasa ṛṣis are performing a sacrifice and teach them some mantras; they will give you wealth as you wish.' This story is related in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa and in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā. Because the sacrifice performed by this Manu is famous, the matter of Manu's sacrifice is also mentioned there in the Ṛgveda. The matter of this Manu is stated, besides the Ṛgveda, in the Atharvaveda (14-2-41 [?]), the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (1-5-1-3 [?]; 2-5-1-3; 3-1-9-4; …), the Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā (…), the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (1-1-4-14 [?]), the Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa (3-12-1 [?]) and other places." [51]

"Because Manu is the son of Vivasvān (Ṛk. Saṃ. 8-52-1 [?]), the Sun-god, he is called Vaivasvata (Ath. 8-10-24 [?]; Śat. Br. 13-4-3-3 [?]); because he is of the lineage of the woman (Savarṇā) he is Sāvarṇi; and because he is of the lineage of Saṃvaraṇa he is Sāṃvaraṇi (Ṛk. Saṃ. 8-51-1 [?]) — he has many names."

॥ व्याकरणप्रक्रिया ॥ — Vyākaraṇa-prakriyā (Rik 80.16) [52]

- अत्नत — the root tanu vistāre (तनु विस्तारे); laṅ, third person plural, jha; by "bahulaṃ chandasi" the luk of the stem-marker (vikaraṇa); by "ātmanepadeṣv anataḥ" (Pā. Sū. 7-1-5) at for the affix jha; by "tanipatyoś chandasi" (तनिपत्योश्छन्दसि, Pā. Sū. 6-4-99) the loss of the penultimate of the root in the Veda; the augment aṭ for the stem; atnata. Since yām in the preceding connection is related, by "yadvṛttān nityam" (Pā. Sū. 8-1-66) the nighāta is prohibited; as the augment aṭ is udātta, it is ādyudātta.

- पूर्वथा — pūrvam iva pūrvathā: after the word pūrva, by "pratnapūrvaviśvemāt thāl chandasi" (प्रत्नपूर्वविश्वेमात्थाल् छन्दसि, Pā. Sū. 5-3-111) the affix thāl in the sense 'like'; since it is l-marked, by "liti" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-193) the syllable before the affix is udātta.
- उक्था — in the neuter, the substitute śi (ukthā) arises; by "śeś chandasi bahulam" (Pā. Sū. 6-1-70) the śi is dropped.
- समग्मत — the root gamḷ gatau (गम्ऌ गतौ); because sam precedes, by "samo gamyṛcchi-prachi-..." (समो गम्यृच्छिप्रच्छिस्वरत्यर्तिश्रुविदिभ्यः, Pā. Sū. 1-3-29) the ātmanepada; luṅ, third person plural; by "ātmanepadeṣv anataḥ" the at for the affix jha; when cli arises [53]

Collected Notes

Every translator's note and editorial remark of this volume, gathered by Sūkta and Rik.

Sūkta 62

1. printed on p. 1 as "Aravatteraḍaneya sūktavu", "the sixty-second sūkta"; the heading block with "Sūkta — 62" is on p. 2

2. the same verses as in the earlier volumes, editorial and tentative

3. printed in Kannada script; read from the 150-dpi image; it continues on p. 2

4. The first sentences are on p. 1 and the rest, from "…trayodaśety uktaṃ bhavati", on p. 2. The words "ṛṣiś cānyasmād iti" and "anādeśaparibhāṣayā" are confirmed from a 250-dpi crop of p. 2 ("ಋಷಿಶ್ಚಾನ್ಯಸ್ಮಾದಿತಿ", "ಅನಾದೇಶಪರಿ-ಭಾಷಯಾ").

5. editorial and tentative

6. Changes in print noted at the start of Volume 6: (a) the title page reads "Bhāga 6, the Fifth Adhyāya of the First Aṣṭaka"; (b) the heading block has the same form as in Volumes 4–5; (c) the running header of even pages reads "Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā" with, at the right, "Maṇḍala 1 · Anuvāka 11 · Sūkta 62"; the odd pages carry "Aṣṭaka 1 · Adhyāya 5 · Varga N" at the left and "Ṛgvedasaṃhitā" in the middle. The Kannada numerals of the varga numbers in the headers are small and read with doubt.

7. accents as printed

8. The Pada-pāṭha is printed on the next page and is given there.

9. accents not reproduced

10. printed in Kannada script; transcribed letter by letter from the 150-dpi image; the grammatical tail is characterized below, not transcribed

11. The Nirukta numbers are read from small Kannada numerals: 6-14, 5-11 and 5-4 (confirmed from 200–400-dpi crops). The word "yaṣṭavyatayā" ("as one to be worshipped") is read from a 400-dpi crop (ಯಷ್ಟವ್ಯತಯಾ); the same word is printed in the Special Topics on p. 6.

12. Kannada, rendered

13. the entry continues on the next page

14. printed in English in the source

15. Kannada, rendered; the Nirukta numbers are read from small Kannada numerals and are marked [?] where uncertain

16. Translation of the Nirukta sentence, editorial: "A girvaṇas is a god: they win him with songs."

17. the argument continues on the next page

18. The sūtras are named in the print without numbers except Pā. 6-4-107 and Pā. 3-1-11, which are printed; those two numbers are read from the Kannada numerals and carry some doubt.

19. All the sūtras on these pages are cited by small Kannada numerals; only those that could be read are given, with [?]; none has been supplied from memory.

20. End of Rik 62.1 grammar.

21. The Pada-pāṭha is printed under the Saṃhitā on the same page. The second half is read from the lower half of the print, which is clear; the word-division "pada-jñāḥ" is as printed.

22. printed in Kannada script; transcribed letter by letter from the 150-dpi image; the crowded words were re-read from 300-dpi crops in the numeral pass

23. The first sentence's "yacchabda-śruteḥ tacchabdādhyāhāraḥ" is read as printed; the second is "[the word] tad is to be supplied, because the word yad is heard in the latter sentence". The passage reads "abhi tvā śūrety ādiṣv ṛkṣu yad gānam" ("the singing on the ṛks beginning abhi tvā śūra"; read from a 300-dpi crop); the sense is that the singing of "abhi tvā śūra nonumaḥ" and the like is called sāma.

24. Kannada script, letter by letter; the grammatical tail is on the next page

25. Crowded words, re-read from 300-dpi crops in the numeral pass: "tadgo-saṃbandhi" (ಶಿಶವೇ ತದ್ಗೋಸಂಬಂಧಿ, "belonging to those cows"); the passage after "bahulaṃ chandasi" reads "…ಛಂದಸ್ಯಮಾಙ್ಯೋಗೇಽಪೀತ್ಯಡಭಾವಃ । ಅಙ ಏವ ಸ್ವರಃ ಶಿಷ್ಯತೇ । ಪಾದಾದಿತ್ವಾನ್ನಿಘಾತಾಭಾವಃ"; "iṣa gatāv ity" — printed "iṣa gatāvilyasmād", read so; "ni. 11-24" — confirmed. "Dhāsir ire ti" is printed "dhāsir ireti tannāmasu pāṭhāt" — the point being that dhāsiḥ is read among the names of food.

26. continues on p. 14

27. The people of the Śāṭyāyana branch say: "annādinīṃ te sarame prajāṃ karomi yo no gā anvavinda" — अन्नादिनीं ते सरमे प्रजां करोमि यो नो गा अन्वविन्द — annādinīṃ te sarame prajāṃ karomi yo no gā anvavinda — "O Saramā, I shall provide food for your offspring [if] you find our cows": that is, he will supply food for her child, and she must go and bring [news of] the cows.

28. Printed form of the Ṛk. "Run past the two Sārameya dogs, four-eyed, brindled, along the good path. [Which] your two dogs, O Yama, the guardians, four-eyed, path-guards, watchers of men …" Translation editorial, tentative. The Kannada text states that these Ṛks show the Sārameyas are four-eyed.

29. The four lines are as printed on p. 15 in Kannada script; the print gives no verse numbers on p. 15; the reference "Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-108-1 to 11" follows the whole hymn on p. 16. Gloss, editorial and tentative — "'Seeking what, Saramā, have you come here? The way is far, [it] leads away. What was your errand? How did you cross the waters of the Rasā?' 'Sent as Indra's messenger I go, seeking your great treasures, O Paṇis. Out of fear [of the water] it stepped aside from the crossing: thus did I cross the waters of the Rasā.'"

30. Header: "Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā", right "Maṃ. 1 A. 11 Sū. 62" [numerals read, small].

31. Reference printed below the last line: "ಋ. ಸಂ. ೧೦–೧೦೮–೧ ರಿಂದ ೧೧" — Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-108-1 to 11, i.e. "from 1 to 11" [numerals confirmed from a 250-dpi crop]. The print's verse text is given above as read; it differs from the standard Ṛgveda text in a few letters, which have not been "corrected".

32. Header: left "A. 1 A. 5 Va. 1" [numerals small, read tentatively], centre "Ṛgvedasaṃhitā".

33. Editorial note: the prose is rendered from the Kannada as printed; the dialogue occupies pp. 16–17 and has not yet ended. The Kannada says "Ayāsya" as the leader of the Aṅgirasas, matching the Saṃhitā word "ayāsyaḥ" in the sixth verse above.

34. Saramā, continuing:

35. Header: left "A. 1 A. 5 Va. 1" [small numerals], centre "Ṛgvedasaṃhitā".

36. Numerals re-read in the numeral pass from 330–420-dpi crops, as printed; where the small 2 and 7 are hard to tell apart the reading follows the glyph (curled = 2, flat-footed = 7) and the lines are on the doubts page [?].

37. As printed: "ಭಾಗ ೨, ಪೇಜು ೨೨೮, ೪೬೫-೪೬೬"; read from a 480-dpi crop.

39. Header: "Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā", right "Maṃ. 1 A. 11 Sū. 62".

40. Header: left "A. 1 A. 5 Va. 1" [numerals small, tentative], centre "Ṛgvedasaṃhitā".

46. Grammar page, noted briefly; the page continues on p. 26.

47. continued on p. 28

48. begins; continues on p. 32

49. Readings: "उपराः उप्ताः" as printed, doubtful in sense [?]; "प्रधानभूता" is printed in the feminine singular beside the plural nadīḥ, as read. The bhāṣya prints "यदेत्कर्म" for "yad etat karma", taken so.

50. Grammar tail, characterized; the final argument is compressed and the sense of it is tentative [?]. In "upahvaranti gacchanty asminn adya", the last word is printed so and read as "nadyaḥ" from the Kannada gloss on p. 33.

13. ...the word मीळ्हम् is read (Ni. 3-9). "Mīḷhaṃ, mīḷhuṃ" — this word denoting wealth occurs both with a final u and with a final a. In the Nirukta it is read with a final u. In the commentary on the Nirukta made by Bhaṭṭabhāskara Miśra, accepting the reading *"मीळ्हुष्टम शिवतम"* (mīḷhuṣṭama śivatama*) he explains it; in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā text, in "रुद्रस्य ये मीळ्हुषः सन्ति पुत्राः"* (rudrasya ye mīḷhuṣaḥ santi putrāḥ*) and "ताँ आ रुद्रस्य मीळ्हुषः"* (tāṁ ā rudrasya mīḷhuṣaḥ*), it ends in* u. So some hold that this word ends in u. Others fix it as a word ending in s*, [reading] "मीळ्हः" "मीळ्हांसम्"* (mīḷhvaḥ, mīḷhvāṃsam*). Since there are such different opinions, it is to be understood that both the* a-ending and the u-ending readings are accepted.

9. continues on p. 191

10. The print's first line reads "सृष्टामं" for "सृष्टा अमं"; the Pada splits it as sṛṣṭā | amam, which is followed.

11. begins; continues on p. 194

12. Kannada; begins). Because Agni and Indra were born at one time, or because he gives the singers what they desire: born, and all the multitudes of beings that are to be born… (the sentence concludes on p. 195

13. The Skandasvāmin passage is compressed in the print; the reference is printed "Ṛ. Ve. 10-85-40".

14. begins; continues on p. 200

15. continues on p. 202

16. The Skandasvāmin and Śākapāṇi references on pp. 201–202 are compressed in the print; the Ṛgveda references on p. 201 are read from the print.

17. continues on p. 203

18. Sūkta 66 is complete: five four-pāda Ṛks = ten half-Ṛks; printed pp. 179–203.

Sūkta 67

1. heading block as printed

2. Kannada

3. The source's English has "shorn" misprinted "sborn" [as read] and "excellent" as "exeellent"; given with [sic].

4. Rik 67.1 — no grammar page is printed after the Special Topics on p. 206; the page ends here with the Special Topics. If a grammar paragraph follows on the next page, it is added under p. 207.

5. Clarification: contrary to the expectation noted at the end of p. 206, the grammar page of Rik 67.1 is printed here, at the head of p. 207.

6. begins; continues on p. 209

7. The print's last Pada word reads "guhaṃ" [गुहं]; "guhām" is given in the transliteration of the Pada only as the print's Devanagari-equivalent; the Saṃhitā "गुहं" is given as printed (checked against the print).

8. read at 150 dpi; several small readings doubtful [?]

9. Compressed; read doubtfully [?].

10. The print's Pada reads the last word of the first line as "अन्तरिति" [antar iti, with the iti of a Pada-ending]; given as printed.

11. read at 150 dpi; some readings doubtful [?]

12. Sūkta 67 is complete: five four-pāda Ṛks = ten half-Ṛks; printed pp. 203–221.

Sūkta 68

1. heading block as printed

2. Transliteration of the first line: the printed Devanagari is "स्थातुश्चरथमक्तून्"; it is read as sthātuś caratham aktūn.

9. Kannada; begins, continues on p. 233

10. Agni —

11. Compressed; this paragraph runs onto p. 235, where the Ṛgveda references were read from the print.

12. The print's Saṃhitā "और्णोद्दुरः" and Pada "और्णोत् । दुरः" are given as printed.

13. read at 150 dpi; some readings doubtful [?]

14. Compressed; the Ṛk reference re-read from the print; the Nirukta references in Skandasvāmin's note are read doubtfully [?].

15. Sūkta 68 is complete: five four-pāda Ṛks = ten half-Ṛks; printed pp. 222–239.

Sūkta 69

1. heading block as printed

2. The print's first word after śukraḥ is "शुशुक्वान्" in the Pada and bhāṣya; the Saṃhitā spells it "शुशुक्वाँ"; the Saṃhitā is read as śuśukvāṃ, correcting the first transcription.

3. Kannada; begins, continues on p. 242

4. continues on p. 242

5. Kannada

6. the passage continues on p. 243.

7. begins; continues on p. 246

8. Grammar tail short and compressed; read at 150 dpi and doubtful [?].

9. The print's second line begins "विशो यदह्वे"; given as printed. "अग्निर्देवत्वा" in the Saṃhitā against the Pada's "अग्निः । देवत्वा" is as printed.

10. continues on p. 252.

11. Kannada; begins, continues on p. 254

12. continues on p. 254

13. Sūkta 69 is complete: five four-pāda Ṛks = ten half-Ṛks; printed pp. 240–259.

Sūkta 70

1. heading block as printed

2. The sūkta has eleven half-Ṛks, printed as six Ṛks: the last of the six is a single half-Ṛk.

3. Kannada

4. continues on p. 264

5. concluded

6. Compressed; the Ṛgveda and Nirukta references are read doubtfully [?].

7. grammar page of Rik 70.2, noted briefly; not transcribed

8. printed Ṛk "5 || 6 ||"

9. accents as printed; marks at glyph junctions read as best possible — [accent ?], see doubts page

10. Reading note: the printed "5 || 6 ||" are the two half-Ṛk numbers, joined in one four-pāda Ṛk, as with the earlier Riks of this sūkta. Accents set as read (see label).

12. characterized, not transcribed

13. Kannada; begun here

14. Compressed; the Ṛgveda and Nirukta numerals [?], and the details of the accent remark are read doubtfully [?].

15. The page breaks off here; continued on p. 270.

16. grammar page of Rik 70.3, noted briefly; not transcribed

17. printed Ṛk "7 || 8 ||", as read [?]

18. Reading note: the Pada, printed below, divides the first word as vardhān | yam; the Saṃhitā is therefore "vardhān yaṃ". The Kannada numerals of the Ṛk number are hard to read — "7 || 8" is a best reading [?]. In the Saṃhitā the printed "रथमृत-" is carried over the line-end to "प्रवीतम्". Accents set as read (see label).

19. Reading note: the print is clear but small; "ramaṇaṃ" for the ratham gloss, "kṛdgrahaṇe" and the "asmākkarmaṇi" of the grammar tail are doubtful [?]. The bhāṣya's own grammatical tail begins at "vardhān", and is characterized below, not transcribed further.

20. The page ends with the Bhāvārtha; the source's English and Special Topics of Rik 70.4 follow on p. 273.

21. grammar page of Rik 70.4, noted briefly; begun at the foot of p. 273

22. printed Ṛk "9 || 10 ||", as read

23. Reading note: the Kannada numerals of the Ṛk number are small; "9 || 10" is read from the print, [?]. Accents set as read (see label).

24. begun; runs on to p. 276

25. Reading note: "paśaṃsāṃ" is as printed, apparently for praśaṃsāṃ; the Kāśikā numeral is doubtful [?]; the page ends mid-word, the sentence continuing on p. 276, where the rest of the bhāṣya's grammatical tail will be given.

26. Reading note: this is the bhāṣya's own grammatical tail; it is characterized rather than treated in detail. The Kāśikā/Uṇādi numerals and the reading "jyaśvasvyāṃ" are doubtful [?]. The text of "jyā… jāgṛbhyaḥ kvin" is as printed; the Uṇ. numeral is read doubtfully.

27. grammar page of Rik 70.5, noted briefly; begun at the foot of p. 277

28. the last Ṛk of the sūkta; printed "11 ||", the Kannada numeral read as "೧೧"

29. begins here; the first sentence is a note on the metre

30. Reading note: the opening sentence — on how a Ṛk left over in the dvipadā count is to be read — is read as printed, but is compressed and doubtful in several syllables ("ayuksaṃkhyāsu", "yāntyā-") [?]; "ata" in "ate evaṃvidho" is printed so, evidently for ata. The page ends in the grammatical tail at "gṛdhnuḥ | gṛdhu…", continued on p. 280.

31. The closing bracket "(be to us a) friend)," is printed so [sic].

32. The source's count of "eleven" refers to the eleven half-Ṛks, printed as six Ṛks.

33. grammar page of Rik 70.6, noted briefly; not transcribed

34. printed large, Kannada

35. eppattaneya sūktavu samāptavu — "The seventieth sūkta is concluded."

36. Sūkta 70: eleven half-Ṛks printed as six Ṛks, Agni; Parāśara Śākti; Dvipadā-Virāṭ. The varga numerals of its pages are as read, [?], and have not been reconciled.

Sūkta 71

1. title printed large in Kannada: "ಎಪ್ಪತ್ತೊಂದನೆಯ ಸೂಕ್ತವು"

2. Sanskrit, printed in Kannada script; compressed, with several doubtful syllables [?]

3. Reading note: re-read from the better scan in the numeral pass: "atrānukramyate", "paribhāṣayā", "anādeśaparibhāṣayā triṣṭup" are as printed; "ṛṣiś cānyasmād iti" (first syllables of the second line) and "paramāgneyam aindrād iti" remain doubtful [?]; the sense is given by the Kannada anuvāda below. Āśvalāyana numerals 4-13 and 6-5 as printed.

4. Kannada

5. Accents as printed.

6. The Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya of Rik 71.1 begins on p. 284.

7. Reading note: the print is clear; "tate" is as printed; "na" before uṣodevatām, "jāyā", "śubhrarūpayuktām", "ṛn" and Pā. 4-1-10 were checked against the better scan; the two Uṇādi numerals remain doubtful [?]. The bhāṣya's grammatical tail begins at "jinvan" and is characterized, not transcribed further, below.

8. characterized, not transcribed

9. Kannada; begun at the foot of p. 284

10. The better scan shows a comma before "which"; the earlier "[sic]" full stop is withdrawn.

11. Continued on p. 286.

12. Glosses editorial and tentative: "women unbrothered, like wives who hate their husbands, bad-natured" for the first; "wifeless/tearless, free from sickness, with good jewels, may the wives go up to the womb first" for the second.

13. Gloss editorial and tentative.

14. grammar page of Rik 71.1, noted briefly; not transcribed

15. printed Ṛk "2 ||"

16. Accents as printed; in the second line no anudātta mark is visible under "ke" of ketum [accent ?].

17. Reading note: the Pada prints "ahar iti" and "asme iti", as printed (checked against the better scan).

18. Reading note: "adrim attāram" — the gloss of adri as "devourer" — "suṣṭhv-araṇīyam" (print "ಸುಷ್ಠ್ವರ-ಣೀಯಮ") and "paṇināpahṛtā" were checked against the better scan and are as printed. The grammatical tail, from "vīḷu", is characterized below.

20. The Sanskrit of this citation was re-read from the better scan (first word "nyakratūn", candrabindus as printed); the source leaves it untranslated; the gloss, tentative: "the Paṇis, scornful of speech, faithless, without increase and without sacrifice — Agni drove those dasyus far away, and made those who do not sacrifice the later ones".

21. Gloss editorial and tentative: "ever new, he is born; the sign of the days, he goes at the head of the dawns".

22. grammar page of Rik 71.2, noted briefly; not transcribed

23. printed Ṛk "3 ||"

24. Accents as printed. The print marks a protracted (pluta) vowel in "didhiṣvo3"; the pluta numeral carries both an anudātta and a svarita mark [accent ?]; "yaṃ" of yanty is marked anudātta and "tya" svarita.

25. Reading note: re-read from the better scan: "karmānvatiṣṭhann", "aryo 'ryā … svāminyo didhiṣvas tena dhanena didhiṣvo" (a clause the first reading had dropped), "satya", "acchābhimukhyena" and "janma jātān" are as printed.

26. The grammatical tail is very compressed; characterized only; sūtra numerals doubtful [?].

27. continued on p. 295

28. The two Ṛgveda citations and their numerals were checked against the better scan (printed on p. 295); the source leaves them untranslated; glosses, tentative: "with good praises, we would serve Sarasvatī who smites the distant [foes], for protection, with rites/thoughts"; "for the ṛta there are many (that are) śurudhaḥ [?]; the thought [or rite] of ṛta destroys the crookednesses".

29. Both are standard Ṛgveda verses; the source quotes them untranslated. My glosses, tentative: "through Agni one may obtain wealth, growth day by day, glorious, with the most heroes"; "O Agni, the sacrifice, the unharmed rite, that you encompass on every side — that alone goes to the gods".

30. grammar page of Rik 71.3, noted briefly; not transcribed

31. printed Ṛk "4 ||"

32. Accents as printed. After "dūtyaṃ" the print has the numeral १ carrying both an anudātta and a svarita mark; in "bhṛgavāṇo" a svarita stroke stands above "ga" and no other mark is visible in "bhṛgavāṇo vivāya" [accent ?].

33. Reading note: the Saṃhitā prints "सचा सन्ना दूत्यं" — sacā sann ā dūtyam — as the Pada below divides it.

34. a long, compressed passage; read from the print, doubtful places marked [?]; the page ends mid-sentence

35. Reading note: re-read from the better scan: the numerals are as printed (Chāndogya "1-3-3 to 5", with the Kannada "riṃda"; Ṛgveda labelled "Ṛgve."); "vyānavāyusādhyatvam atha", "āmnātaṃ", "manthanenotpanno 'yam agniḥ", "vāṇam" as printed; "ariṣṭhaḥ" doubtful [?]; the Chāndogya quotation is compressed and a few of its syllables ("saraṇam", "āyamanam", "aprāṇann anapānan") are doubtful. The sentence on "sacā san" runs on to p. 299.

36. continued on p. 299

37. Sanskrit in Kannada script; compressed; read from the print, doubtful places [?]

38. Reading note: this is the bhāṣya's grammatical tail; it is characterized below, not treated line by line. Re-read from the better scan: "hmyantakṣaṇa" is as printed; "kṛtyalyuṭo", "kartary aco yad", "laṭo", "lasārvadhātuka", "antarbhāvitaṇyarthāt" and the Mahābhāṣya numeral 3-1-11-3 as printed. The first line completes the sentence of p. 298: "…as a king sends his own man for the office of messenger to a mightier king, so [the sacrificer to Agni]."

39. Glosses editorial and tentative: "Mātariśvan carried one [fire] from heaven; the falcon churned another from the rock"; "the messenger Mātariśvan brought Agni Vaiśvānara from the far-off to Vivasvat".

41. page breaks off; continued on p. 302.

42. Ṛgveda numerals checked against the better scan; glosses editorial and tentative: "for a son the father is āpi, friend with the friend, the choicest one worships" [?]; "you are the kinsman of men, O Agni, the dear friend; the friend is to be praised by friends"; "you are the son to him who has served you, you are the kind, unassailable friend"; "you the saviour, to be known in the crossing, are ever father and mother of men"; "we choose Agni as messenger, the priest, who knows all"; "the gods, Varuṇa, Mitra, Aryaman kindle you, the ancient messenger"; "you are the welcome messenger, carrier of oblation, O Agni, charioteer of the rites".

43. grammar page of Rik 71.4, noted briefly; not transcribed

44. printed Ṛk "5 ||"

45. Accents as printed. In "tviṣiṃ" a svarita stroke stands over "tvi" right after the anudātta under "ri" [accent ?].

46. Reading note: the print joins "करव त्सरत्" as shown; the Pada below divides it kaḥ | ava | tsarat.

47. begun; runs on to p. 305; doubtful places [?]

48. Reading note: re-read from the better scan: "rākṣasādiś cikitvān", "tvadbhayāt palāyate" (the first reading's "tsaratir dhātuḥ chadmagatau…" was a misreading), "duhitṛvat samanantarabhāvinyām", "vāvādityam", Tai. Brā. 2-1-2-10 and Uṇ. 2-81 as printed; the sūtra-name before Uṇ. 2-81 reads "kṛpṛvṛjīti" (its ೃ signs match the ೃ of the same word on p. 308); the bhāṣya's grammatical tail, from "kaḥ", is characterized, not treated line by line.

49. Kannada; begun at the foot of p. 304, "mahe — to the great one; pitre — the protector; dive — to the shining (company of gods); īṃ rasam — this essence (of the earth, the oblation); yat — when (the sacrificer); kaḥ — makes; pṛśanyaḥ — the touch-skilled (demons); cikitvān — (you, knowing that the deity carries the oblation)…"

50. continued on p. 306

51. Gloss editorial and tentative: "Śatakratu carried Kutsa Ārjuneya … the Gandharva stealthily going …"; the Ṛk citation and numeral checked against the better scan.

52. Skandasvāmin's note re-read from the better scan; "tad eva ca" as printed. The last sentence, Kannada "ī aṃśada vivaraṇeyu koñca toḍakina bhāgavāgirutte", was earlier misread as "a little continuous".

53. grammar page of Rik 71.5, noted briefly; not transcribed

54. printed Ṛk "6 ||"

55. Sanskrit in Kannada script; begun; runs on to p. 310

56. Reading note: the print is clear; "eka ākāro maryodāyām" — the single ā of the Saṃhitā is a preposition marking limit — is read as printed; the Sanskrit of "anudivasam" etc. is clear. The bhāṣya's tail begins at "tubhyam" and runs on to p. 310.

57. The tail is compressed; sūtra numerals [?].

58. Kannada; begun at the foot of p. 310

59. The page ends here; the rest of the Special Topics and the grammar page of Rik 71.6 follow on p. 311.

60. Ṛgveda numerals as read, doubtful [?]; glosses editorial and tentative: "this dawn becomes manifold in two ways, displaying her body in the east"; "great Indra, a champion of men, fulfilling the peoples, doubly mighty, unrestrained by his powers".

61. grammar page of Rik 71.6, noted briefly; not transcribed

62. printed Ṛk "7 ||"

63. Sanskrit in Kannada script; begun; runs on to p. 315

64. Reading note: the print has "pṛkṣaś caru-puroḍāśādīni" and "agnim aṅganādiguṇayuktam" as here.

65. Characterized only; compressed and doubtful in several places [?].

66. continued on p. 316

67. Completion:

68. Ṛgveda numerals as printed; glosses editorial and tentative: "you are the worshipful priest of the gods, being sent he sacrifices to them as the best sacrificer"; "O Gaṅgā, Yamunā, Sarasvatī, Śutudrī, join this my praise with Paruṣṇī; with Asiknī, Marudvṛdhā, Vitastā, Ārjīkīyā — hear it with Suṣomā"; "Agni is master of the great rite, Agni of all the oblation that is made".

69. continued on p. 317

70. The Ṛgveda citations are given as printed (numerals re-read from the print); the source leaves them untranslated; glosses, tentative: "he did not give the inheritance of the body to the sister …"; "sister of Bhaga, kinswoman of Varuṇa, O Dawn, true of speech, praise first"; "this bull roars, held by the ten kinswomen [fingers]"; "the Soma-stalk is adorned with barley [?], held by men; with the fingers it is joined, it protects the head" [?].

71. grammar page of Rik 71.7, noted briefly; not transcribed

72. printed Ṛk "8 ||"

73. Accents as printed; the print joins "ānaṭ chuci" by sandhi.

74. The Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya of Rik 71.8 begins on p. 320.

75. Sanskrit in Kannada script; main sense transcribed, the grammatical tail characterized; doubtful places [?]

76. Reading note: the print has "abhīke 'bhyakte 'bhigate 'bhiprāpte garbhasthāne"; "dyaur dīptam" is printed so — "dyauḥ" in the sense "shining". The bhāṣya's grammatical tail, which follows, is characterized only.

77. Compressed; no sūtra numbers are printed in this tail.

78. The Bṛhaddevatā line and numeral as printed.

79. grammar page of Rik 71.8, noted briefly; not transcribed

80. printed Ṛk "9 ||"

81. Accents as printed. The svarita stroke in "yo 'dhvanaḥ" stands between "dhva" and "naḥ"; set on "dhva" [accent ?].

82. begun; runs on to p. 325

83. Reading note: the first words are clear; the last clause reads "he agne tattadrūpeṇa tvam evaivaṃ vartasa iti bhāvaḥ" ("O Agni, it is you who exist thus in those several forms"); "mitrāvaruṇā" is printed as the Pada has it. The bhāṣya's grammatical tail, from "vasvaḥ", is characterized below, not transcribed line by line.

84. The Ṛgveda citations are read from a small print; numerals as printed; the Sanskrit is doubtful [?]; the source leaves them untranslated; glosses, tentative: "O Agni, you raised the unageing star, the sun, in the sky"; "he who measured out the realms, the wise Vaiśvānara, the lights of heaven; who spread over all the worlds, undeceived, the guardian, protector of the immortal"; "by you, O Agni, Varuṇa of firm vows, Mitra, Aryaman, the good givers, have commanded [?]".

85. continued on p. 327

86. Ṛgveda numerals as printed; glosses editorial and tentative: "come hither, kings, great guardians of ṛta, lords of the rivers, warriors"; "O Agni, you are glorious, bring Mitra and Varuṇa, the truthful sovereigns of pure resolve".

87. grammar page of Rik 71.9, noted briefly; not transcribed

88. the last Ṛk of the sūkta; printed "10 ||"

89. Accents as printed. No mark is visible on "viduṣ kaviḥ san" (the subscript of "ṣka" may hide an anudātta) [accent ?]; those words are left unaccented in the IAST.

90. The Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya of Rik 71.10 begins on p. 329. Reading note: the Pada prints "viduḥ" where the Saṃhitā has "viduṣ" before "kaviḥ" (both as printed).

91. Reading note: the grammatical tail is small type; re-read from the print in this pass.

92. Glosses editorial and tentative: "you are indeed Maitrāvaruṇa, Vasiṣṭha, born from the mind, O priest, of Urvaśī"; the Bṛhaddevatā verse is read from small print.

93. Bṛhaddevatā, continued

94. Gloss editorial and tentative: "therefore, even today, Vasiṣṭha's descendants are members of the sacrificial assembly; the Bhāllaveya śruti says they should be honoured with gifts".

98. eppattondaneya sūkta samāptavu — "The seventy-first sūkta is concluded."

Sūkta 72

1. printed large, Kannada

2. Sanskrit, printed in Kannada script

3. Meaning: "Ni kāvyā" is the eighth sūkta, of ten Ṛks, in Triṣṭup metre, addressed to Agni, the vision of Parāśara; and it is so listed in the Anukramaṇī ("ni kāvyā"). Its application [in ritual] at the Prātaranuvāka and the Aśvina-śastra has been told [before].

4. Kannada

5. Accents as printed.

6. Reading note: the Saṃhitā prints "शश्वतस्कर्हस्ते" as śaśvataḥ kaḥ haste, i.e. the Pada's śaśvataḥ | kaḥ | haste; the visarga-sandhi is as the Pada shows. Accents not reproduced.

7. Sanskrit in Kannada script; compressed; doubtful places [?]

8. Reading note: the print has "stotṛbhyo dhaneṣu datteṣv apy agner dhanaṃ na kṣīyata ity āha" ("even when wealth is given to the praisers, Agni's wealth does not diminish"); the reference is printed "ath. 5-28-11" (Atharva-veda). The bhāṣya's grammatical tail begins at "kaḥ".

9. characterized, not transcribed

13. continued on p. 337

14. printed Ṛk "2 ||"

16. Reading note: the last word of the Saṃhitā line is printed "चार्वग्नेः" — cāru agneḥ joined by sandhi, as the Pada shows.

17. Sanskrit in Kannada script; compressed; runs on to p. 339; doubtful places [?]

18. Reading note: "āmūrā amūḍhā" is read as printed; "dhiyām agneḥ" is so printed; the page ends mid-sentence, continued on p. 339.

19. Sanskrit; doubtful places [?]

20. Reading note: this is the bhāṣya's grammatical tail; the print has "tenāditvād uvaṅ"; the Pāṇini and Uṇādi numerals as printed.

21. Gloss editorial and tentative.

22. continued on p. 341

23. Gloss editorial and tentative: "by homage they go to the place of the god, desiring fame, finding unharmed fame".

24. continued on p. 342

25. Gloss editorial and tentative: "by which our former fathers, knowing the track, seeking heaven, drove out the cows from the mountain".

26. grammar page of Rik 72.2, noted briefly; not transcribed

27. printed Ṛk "3 ||"

28. Accents as printed. In yajñiyāny asūdayanta the print has anudātta under "ya" and "yā" and a svarita stroke over "sū" [accent ?] (left unaccented in the IAST); tanvaḥ is printed with the numeral ९ carrying an anudātta and a svarita mark before the visarga.

29. Accents are marked in the print; not reproduced.

30. Reading note: the print is clear but small; the print has "tadanantaraṃ" and "yajñartvigbhyāṃ ghakhañāv ity arhārthe"; the Uṇādi number reads 1-129 [?]. The bhāṣya's grammatical tail begins at "tisraḥ".

31. continued on p. 346

32. Gloss editorial and tentative: "you, O Agni, [are born] from the days, you the swift-blazing, from the waters, from the stone; from the woods, from the plants; you, lord of men, are born pure".

33. continued on p. 347

34. grammar page of Rik 72.3, noted briefly; not transcribed

35. printed Ṛk "4 ||"

36. Sanskrit in Kannada script; compressed; runs on to p. 350; doubtful places [?]

37. Reading note: "tad agnir nārkāmayata" is doubtful — the print appears to have "tad agnir nyarkāmayata" [?]; the compressed grammatical tail ("yajaṃjāl", "luñlṛldittvāt") is doubtful [?]; the Taittirīya and Nirukta numerals as printed. The page ends mid-tail; continued on p. 350.

38. characterized; doubtful places [?]

39. Meaning: "…by that rule the dhi-form [of dhā] is given by nipāta; by tṛtīyā karmaṇi the first member keeps its own accent; the instrumental ending becomes ā by supāṃ sulug…. Tasthivāṃsam — kvasu for liṭ of sthā; the augment iṭ by vasv-ekājād-ghasām [Pā. 7-2-67]."

55. continued on p. 362

56. printed Ṛk "7 ||"; the second line on p. 363

57. Reading note: "kṣudrūpasya śokasya" — "of grief in the form of hunger". The bhāṣya's grammatical tail begins at "vayunāni" and is characterized below, not treated line by line.

58. grammar page of Rik 72.7, noted briefly; not transcribed

59. printed Ṛk "8 ||"

60. Reading note: the print is clear but small. The tail begins at "svādhyaḥ" and is characterized below.

62. continued on p. 370

63. Glosses editorial and tentative: "may the lower, the higher, the middle fathers arise, the Soma-drinkers; those who have gone to life, kind and knowing ṛta — may those fathers help us in our invocations"; "may we be lords of the wealth, ever-lasting, of the stranger"; "may we partake of the pressed [Soma] with a ready mind as of ancestral wealth; O King Soma, prolong our lives as the sun the days". The second of these Ṛks (printed 5-3-3-5) is not glossed; the source leaves these citations untranslated.

64. Skandasvāmin's Ṛk citations: glosses not attempted.

65. grammar page of Rik 72.8, noted briefly; not transcribed

66. printed Ṛk "9 ||"

67. Reading note: the print is clear but small; "aditir adīnā pṛthivī" — Aditi, the undiminished Earth. The bhāṣya's tail is characterized below, not treated line by line.

68. Kannada; begun at the foot of p. 373

69. The initial "you" is printed in lower case, and the Sanskrit "mighty sons" are the mahadbhiḥ putraiḥ; the order of clauses in the source's English is as printed [sic].

70. Gloss editorial and tentative: "the Ādityas desired, 'may we go to the world of heaven'; they saw this thirty-six-night [rite]; they brought it; with it they sacrificed".

71. continued on p. 375

72. Gloss editorial and tentative: "Aditi is heaven, Aditi the atmosphere, Aditi the mother, she the father, she the son; Aditi all the gods, the five peoples; Aditi what is born, Aditi what is to be born".

73. grammar page of Rik 72.9, noted briefly; not transcribed

74. the last Ṛk of the sūkta; printed "10 ||"

75. Accents as printed; in "यद्द्रक्षी" the anudātta stroke stands between ದ and ಕ್ಷೀ and is taken with ದ, as the Pada's a̱kṣī́ suggests [accent ?].

76. Sanskrit in Kannada script; main sense transcribed; flagged readings checked against the print in the numeral pass

77. Reading note: "yadyadākṣī" is read as printed, for yad yad ākṣī; the page ends mid-sentence in the grammatical tail, continued on p. 378.

78. continued on p. 379

79. My gloss, tentative: "the two ājyabhāgas are the eyes of the sacrifice; when he offers the ājyabhāgas he sets the eyes of the sacrifice in place; he offers in the front half, therefore the eyes are in the front half; he offers evenly, therefore the eyes are level; by Agni the sacrificer looks to the world of the gods, by Soma to the world of the fathers; he offers to Agni in the northern half, to Soma in the southern; thus, as it were, for the sight of these two worlds; Agni and Soma are the two kings of the gods; the deities are worshipped between them for the support of the deities; therefore men are supported by a king".

80. grammar page of Rik 72.10, noted briefly; not transcribed

81. eppatteraḍaneya sūkta samāptavu — "The seventy-second sūkta is concluded."

82. Sūkta 72: ten Ṛks, Agni; Parāśara Śākti; Triṣṭup. Running heads, checked against the print: Varga 17 on pp. 333–355, Varga 18 on pp. 357–381.

Sūkta 73

1. printed large, Kannada

2. Sanskrit, printed in Kannada script

3. Meaning: "Rayir na" is the ninth sūkta, of ten Ṛks, in Triṣṭup metre, addressed to Agni, the vision of Parāśara; it is listed in the Anukramaṇī as "rayir na"; its application at the Prātaranuvāka and the Aśvina-śastra has been stated.

4. Kannada

5. Accents as printed.

6. Sanskrit in Kannada script; flagged places re-read from the print

7. Reading note: the print is small; the passage "vibhāṣā gamahanavidaviśām … ity uktaṃ | kā. 7-2-68" was re-read from the print (the earlier "labdhārtha eva" was a misreading); the numerals Kā. 7-2-68 and Pā. 8-2-58 are printed. The page ends mid-tail at "syona…", continued on p. 384. The main sense ends at "…tadvat"; the tail, from "pitṛvittaḥ", is characterized below.

8. characterized, not transcribed

9. characterized: "syona is a name for "comfort"; "he who lies in the place such as the gārhapatya that gives comfort" is syonaśīḥ, kvip; prīṇānaḥ — root prīñ "to gratify", śānac in the passive with śnā by vyatyaya; vidhataḥ — root vidha "to arrange": "vidhati is a verb of service" say the Nairuktas; śa as it is Tudādi; the ending acute by śatur anumo…".
