Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya-sahitā Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, Part 15. In the Second Aṣṭaka, the Seventh Adhyāya. The twenty-fourth sūkta in the Second Maṇḍala.

Pīṭhike (Introduction)

This part begins with the sūkta called सेमामविड्ढि (semāmaviḍḍi) [?], which praises the deities Bṛhaspati and Brahmaṇaspati. Who are these deities? What is their nature? It is necessary to examine this matter closely. Gṛtsamada is the sage of this sūkta, addressed to Bṛhaspati, and of the sūkta before it. In both these sūktas Bṛhaspati is praised in some Ṛks and Brahmaṇaspati in others. To both these deities, many common

Besides describing their great deeds with qualifying words, the deeds done by Bṛhaspati are described in the Ṛks addressed to Brahmaṇaspati, and the deeds of Brahmaṇaspati in the Ṛks addressed to Bṛhaspati, by mutual exchange. Therefore, although the names are different, the sage Gṛtsamada seems to have held the idea that these two deities are one and the same deity. As time went on this idea changed, and it seems to have given room to the idea that Bṛhaspati is one and Brahmaṇaspati another. Room for such changes is seen also in the case of other deities. For instance, in "mahān indraḥ" the word महान् (mahān) is an epithet of Indra, yet it is laid down that Indra is one deity and Mahān Indra another deity. In the same way this idea also fits the deities Agni, Agniḥ Śuciḥ, Agniḥ Pāvakaḥ, etc. This matter will be discussed in the last part of this Introduction.

The sage Yāska has said as follows about Brahmaṇaspati in his Nirukta:

> ब्रह्मणस्पतिः । ब्रह्मणस्पतिर्ब्रह्मणः पाता ना पालयिता ना ॥
> brahmaṇaspatiḥ | brahmaṇaspatirbrahmaṇaḥ pātā nā pālayitā nā ||

(Reference as printed: ऋ. 10-14.)

Here the word ब्रह्म (brahma) (brahma) means food, wealth and hymn of praise (Ni. 3-9). Therefore ब्रह्मणः पाता (brahmaṇaḥ pātā) means "the protector of food", that is, the lord or master of food (nourishment). To show how Brahmaṇaspati is lord of food, Yāska gives as an example:

> अश्मास्यमवतं ब्रह्मणस्पतिर्मधुधारमभि यमोजसातृणत् । तमेव विश्वे पपिरे स्वर्दृशो बहु साकं सिसिचुरुत्समुद्रिणं ॥

> aśmāsyamavataṃ brahmaṇaspatirmadhudhāramabhi yamojasātṛṇat |
> tameva viśve papire svardṛśo bahu sākaṃ sisicurutsamudriṇaṃ ‖

giving this Ṛk as the example, and for it gives the explanation:

> अशनवंतमास्यंतनवंतमनातितं ब्रह्मणस्पतिर्मधुधारमभियमोजसा बले– नाभ्यतृणत्तमेव सर्वे पिबंति रश्मयः सूर्यदृशो बह्वेनं सह सिंचंत्युत्समुद्रिणमुदकवंतं ॥
> aśanavaṃtamāsyaṃtanavaṃtamanātitaṃ > brahmaṇaspatirmadhudhāramabhiyamojasā bale- nābhyatṛṇattameva > sarve pibaṃti raśmayaḥ sūryadṛśo bahvenaṃ saha > siṃcaṃtyutsamudriṇamudakavaṃtaṃ ‖

(Reference as printed: సి. 10-13.)

The main purport is this: with the help of the sun's rays the clouds drink the water of the sea and cause that water to fall specially on the earth as rain; from the rain come the herbs and trees, and from the herbs and trees food and other nourishment is obtained; therefore Brahmaṇaspati is the lord of food. In the same way, when the word ब्रह्म (brahma) is taken to mean hymn of praise or wealth, one must say that Brahmaṇaspati is the lord of the mantras or of wealth.

p. 3

Running head: Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, A. 2, A. 7, Va. 1 (as printed), p. 3.

The commentator (Sāyaṇa) has stated this very meaning when commenting on the Ṛk quoted above.

Mantras addressed to Brahmaṇaspati are numerous in the Ṛgveda. In those mantras it is said that Brahmaṇaspati gives wealth and food. Many people doubt whether this Brahmaṇaspati is a separate deity or a changed form of Agni. Since other deities such as Agni also give wealth and food, some argue that Brahmaṇaspati is a special form of Agni. Yāska is silent on this point, that is, he has said nothing clearly. Even in the Ṛks addressed to Brahmaṇaspati there is no authority whatever for saying that this deity is a changed form of Agni. Therefore it may be said freely that Brahmaṇaspati is a separate deity, like Indrāgnī.

In his Nirukta, explaining the derivation of the word Bṛhaspati, Yāska says:

> बृहस्पतिः बृहतः पाता वा पालयिता वा ।
> bṛhaspatiḥ bṛhataḥ pātā vā pālayitā vā |

(Reference as printed: ನಿ. 10-11.)

On this the commentator Durgācārya says: "Why Bṛhaspati? 'Bṛhataḥ pātā or pālayitā': the protector, guardian of this great world or of water; पालयिता (pālayitā) also means protector only — the roots differ, the meaning is one." That is, he is the preserver of the great world or of water, the one who protects. He says that although for expressing the sense of the word पति (pati) (pati) there are words formed from different roots, पाता (pātā) and पालयिता (pālayitā), the meaning is only one.

In many places, explaining बृहतः पाता (bṛhataḥ pātā), Sāyaṇa gives for the word बृहतः (bṛhataḥ) the meaning बृहतः यज्ञाख्यकर्मणः (bṛhataḥ yajñākhyakarmaṇaḥ) or वृष्टाख्यकर्मणः (vṛṣṭākhyakarmaṇaḥ), that is, "of the rite in the form of sacrifice" or "of the rite in the form of granting rain". Since Bṛhaspati, as priest of the gods, performs the sacrificial rite, and since he brings about the rain that men need, both these epithets are natural. Yāska gives as an example the Ṛk describing Bṛhaspati's priesthood and his granting of rain:

> यद्देवापिः शंतनवे पुरोहितो होत्राय वृतः कृपयन्नदीधेत् । देवश्रुतं वृष्टिवनिं रराणो
> बृहस्पतिर्वाचमस्मा अयच्छत् ॥
>
> yaddevāpiḥ śaṃtanave purohito hotrāya vṛtaḥ kṛpayannadīdhet |
> devaśrutaṃ vṛṣṭivaniṃ rarāṇo bṛhaspatirvācamasmā ayacchat ||

(Reference as printed: ಮ. ಸಂ. 10-98-7.)

Running head: 4 Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya-sahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 3, Sū. 24 (this header is merged into the text of p. 3 in the supplied text; no separate page marker was supplied for p. 4).

In the explanation of this Ṛk it is said: "Bṛhaspati was the Brahman; he gave speech to him", that is, Bṛhaspati became the priest called Brahman in the sacrifice performed by the king named Śantanu, taught him a mantra in the form of words, and when the sacrificer praised with that mantra, rain came. Besides this, in the Yajurveda and other texts:

> बृहस्पतिर्देवानां पुरोहित आसीच्छंडामर्कावसुराणां ।
> bṛhaspatirdevānāṃ purohita āsīcchaṃḍāmarkāvasurāṇāṃ |

(Reference as printed: ತೈ. ಸಂ. 6-4-10-1.)

It is said that Bṛhaspati was the priest of the gods, and that Śaṇḍa and Marka were priests of the asuras.

> ब्रह्म वै देवानां बृहस्पतिर्ब्रह्मणैवैनमभिचरति ।
> brahma vai devānāṃ bṛhaspatirbrahmaṇaivainamabhicarati |

(Reference as printed: ತೈ. ಸಂ. 2-2-9-1.)

> तस्मै विशः स्वयमेवा नमंते यस्मिन् ब्रह्मा राजनि पूर्व एति ।
> tasmai viśaḥ svayamevā namaṃte yasmin brahmā rājani pūrva eti |

(Reference as printed: ಋ. ಸಂ. 4-50-8.)

> अवस्यवे यो वरिवः कृणोति ब्रह्मणे राजा तमवंति देवाः ॥
> avasyave yo varivaḥ kṛṇoti brahmaṇe rājā tamavaṃti devāḥ ‖

(Reference as printed: ಋ ಸಂ. 4-50-9.)

> सोमं राजानमवसेग्निं गीर्भिर्हनामहे । आदित्यान्विष्णुं सूर्यं ब्रह्माणं च बृहस्पतिं ॥
> somaṃ rājānamavasegniṃ gīrbhirhanāmahe | ādityānviṣṇuṃ sūryaṃ brahmāṇaṃ ca bṛhaspatiṃ ‖

In these and similar Ṛks Bṛhaspati is described as an officiating priest (ṛtvij).

In the Ṛgveda Bṛhaspati has a prominent place. Besides being praised in eleven hymns, he is also praised in two hymns (Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-49; 7-97) together with Indra as a dual deity. The word Bṛhaspati occurs about 120 times in the Ṛgveda. In many places Bṛhaspati and Brahmaṇaspati are praised interchangeably in one and the same mantra. Even so, Bṛhaspati and Brahmaṇaspati are different deities.

Some Western scholars, and some among modern scholars too, have expressed the opinion that both are one deity, because in Ṛ. Saṃ. hymn 2-23 Bṛhaspati and Brahmaṇaspati are praised interchangeably. But the ancient Veda commentators such as Yāska, Śaunaka and Sāyaṇa have said clearly that Bṛhaspati is one and Brahmaṇaspati another. Of the 19 Ṛks of the above-mentioned hymn Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-23, only 6 Ṛks, namely 1, 5, 9, 11, 17, 19, praise Bṛhaspati; the remaining 13 Ṛks are addressed to Brahmaṇaspati. Yāska too has given different derivations for the word Bṛhaspati and the word Brahmaṇaspati. Therefore Bṛhaspati is one and Brahmaṇaspati another.

p. 5

Running head: Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, A. 2, A. 7, Va. 1 (as printed), p. 5.

Bṛhaspati has a distinction wholly different from the other deities. While the other deities are all special forms of nature or of a power of nature, Bṛhaspati seems to belong to the field of man's moral and religious life. The Ṛgveda has many examples that this deity, protector of praise, hymn or prayer, exerts his influence on the decision, resolve or power of the minds of the gods. In the 98th hymn of the 10th Maṇḍala of the Ṛgveda there is an account of a history concerning the royal sons of the Kuru line, Devāpi and Śantanu. The writers of the Nirukta describe thus how very important Bṛhaspati's part in it is:

> अत्रेतिहासमाचक्षते। देवापिश्चाष्ट्र्षेणः शंतनुश्च कौरवा भ्रातरा बभूवतुः। स शंतनुः कनीयानभिषेचयांचक्रे । देवापिस्तपः प्रतिपेदे । ततः शंतनो राज्ये द्वादश वर्षाणि देवो न ववर्ष । तमूचुब्राह्मणा अधर्मस्त्वया चरितो ज्येष्ठं भ्रातरमंतरित्याभिषेचितं तस्मात्ते देवो न वर्षतीति । स शंतनुर्देवापिं शिशिक्ष राज्येन । तमुवाच देवापिः पुरोहितस्तेऽसानि याजयानि च त्वेति ॥

> atretihāsamācakṣate| devāpiścārṣṭṣaṣeṇaḥ śaṃtanuśca kauravā bhrātarā babhūvatuḥ| sa śaṃtanuḥ kanīyānabhiṣecayāṃcakre | devāpistapaḥ pratipede | tataḥ śaṃtano rājye dvādaśa varṣāṇi devo na vavarṣa | tamūcubrāhmaṇā adharmastvayā carito jyeṣṭhaṃ bhrātaramaṃtarityābhiṣecitaṃ tasmātte devo na varṣatīti | sa śaṃtanurdevāpiṃ śiśikṣa rājyena | tamuvāca devāpiḥ purohitaste 'sāni yājayāni ca tveti ‖

Explanation: In former times, in the Kuru line, the king named Ṛṣṭiṣeṇa had two sons, Devāpi and Śantanu. Of them Devāpi was the elder and Śantanu the younger. After their father Ṛṣṭiṣeṇa died, his elder son Devāpi wished to become king. But his younger brother Śantanu gave him no opportunity, desired to be the ruler of the kingdom himself, drove out his elder brother Devāpi, and began to rule himself. The elder brother Devāpi, distressed, went to the forest and passed his time practising austerity. While matters stood so, no rain fell in his country for 12 years and a great famine came. Then King Śantanu, reflecting what should be done about it, asked the advice of the Brāhmaṇas. The Brāhmaṇas said to the king: according to the Dharmaśāstra the king's eldest son is the one entitled to the kingdom; therefore the rule should have been exercised by your elder brother Devāpi. But you gave him no opportunity, drove him out and seized the kingdom. Because you are thus practising adharma, the rain-god does not rain in your kingdom. King Śantanu repented of the wrong he had done, called his elder brother Devāpi, who was practising austerity in the forest, and handed the kingdom over to him. But Devāpi said that he did not want the kingdom, that he would practise austerity in the forest and take refuge in the path of renunciation, and that Śantanu should perform a sacrifice to remove the drought that had arisen in the kingdom, in which he (Devāpi) would take up the priesthood and help bring about rain. The king agreed, and Devāpi took the part of the ṛtvij called Hotṛ in his sacrifice.

Bṛhaspati became the ṛtvij called Brahmā. In that sacrifice, performed for the sake of causing rain, Devāpi the Hotṛ addressed Bṛhaspati, who was Brahmā: "O Bṛhaspati, you have great influence over the minds of the gods; therefore teach me the mantras that win them over." Being so asked, Bṛhaspati agreed, and taught the Hotṛ Devāpi mantras containing the prayers of the deities needed for causing rain. When he made offerings to the deities with those mantras, rain fell abundantly, it is said. Therefore this hymn is also named the "rain-desiring hymn" (vṛṣṭikāma-sūkta). This matter, with some variations, is also told in Purāṇic works such as the Viṣṇu Purāṇa 4-20-7, the Mahābhārata Ādiparva, and the Bhāgavata Purāṇa 9-22-14 to 17.

In the 108th hymn of the 10th Maṇḍala of the Ṛg-saṃhitā there is another legend. The Asuras called Paṇis had carried off the cows of the gods (the water-bearing clouds) and hidden them in an impregnable fortress. Indra sent Saramā, the divine bitch, to search for them. Saramā came to the Paṇis, engaged them in dispute, and asked them to give back the stolen cows. The Paṇis said: "What is the power of Indra? We are great heroes and our weapons are very sharp; so the gods cannot conquer us, nor can the gods learn the place where the cows are kept. Therefore, if Saramā leaves the side of the gods and joins our company, we will give her whatever wealth she wants." Though they urged her in many ways, Saramā did not agree; she returned from there and told the gods all this. Then Bṛhaspati by his own power found out the place where the cows were hidden. Afterwards the gods subdued them and brought the cows back. Such is the legend.

In many such acts of daring Bṛhaspati's part is very important. In particular, for helping men with the rain they need, Bṛhaspati's help is essential. It is this kind of prayer that is seen especially in the hymns addressed to Bṛhaspati.

Let us examine closely what Bṛhaspati's qualities and achievements are, as described in the Ṛgveda. Bṛhaspati was born of Heaven and Earth, and is nourished by their greatness (Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-93-8). But in one place (2-23-17) it is said that Tvaṣṭṛ produced him. He is named the father of the gods (2-26-3); and it is also said (10-72-8) that the gods were produced from him, as sparks of fire fly from the blow of a smith's hammer.

He is called Brahmā (the ṛtvij named Brahmā) (10-141-3). He has a connection with the ṛtvijs (7-10-4; 10-14-3). He is also named Aṅgirasa (4-40-1; 4-73-1; 10-47-6).

Running head: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Varga 1 (as printed, the Aṣṭaka numeral being "ৎ"), Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, p. 7.

He composes and utters words of praise; he is their lord and impeller (2-23-1, 2; 1-40-5; 10-98-7); by the mantra alone he accomplishes all his aims (2-24-3); he mounts the shining chariot called sacrifice and sets out to conquer the enemies of the gods and of the worshippers (2-23-3). He is the nourisher and protector of the faithful, their guide; he rescues them from calamities (2-23-4). He grants them wealth and the like (2-23-9). He is called the father of all the gods; he is endowed with all divine qualities (3-62-4; 4-50-6). He is of all forms; all things that everyone desires are in him (7-10-4, 7-97-4); he bears a golden spear (7-97-7); together with Indra he is also leader of the armies (10-103-8). He is the increaser of life (10-100-5); plants have sprung from him (10-97-15 and 19); his vehicle is said to be tawny horses (Ni. 2-28).

When Trita, thrown into a well by demons and calling the gods to his help, cried out in distress, Bṛhaspati heard it and released him from that perilous state (1-105-17); and together with Indra Bṛhaspati made the water that had been wrapped in darkness flow again (2-23-18 ; 1-56-5): so it is said.

Bṛhaspati by his own power broke open the stone door of the well full of honey. The gods drank that honey and poured down rain abundantly (2-24-3, 4). When Bṛhaspati split the fortresses of Vala with fire-spitting rays, the herds of cows became visible; he drove the cows out as one breaks an egg; seeing the honey (water) enclosed in rock, he split it with his lion-roar and brought it out (10-68-4 to 9). Bṛhaspati brought the cows out from the rocks; he seized the cows of Vala and made them his own (10-68-5).

Bṛhaspati is endowed with divinity (2-23-2); he is the own of all the gods (3-62-4; 4-50-6); and among the gods he has the most divinity; in the form of a god he gathers into himself all the gods and all things (2-24-11; 8-61-18). Being capable, he keeps the two ends of the earth far apart (4-50-1). The rising of the sun and moon one after the other is also his inimitable deed (10-68-10). In the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (of the Yajurveda) a connection of Bṛhaspati with certain stars is stated: Bṛhaspati is the deity of the Puṣya star (Tai. Saṃ. 4-4-10-1). In the Purāṇas and similar works Bṛhaspati is described as Vācaspati and as the presiding deity of the planet Bṛhaspati (Jupiter).

Some scholars have held that the deities Bṛhaspati and Brahmaṇaspati are transformed forms of Agni. A scholar named M. Langlois, in his work the translation of the Ṛgveda,

p. 8

Running head: Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya-sahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 3, Sū. 24, p. 8.

Part I, pp. 249, 254, 578, has supported with many examples that these two deities are transformed forms of Agni. A scholar named Wilson, too, in the introduction to the first part of his translation of the Ṛgveda, has expressed the same opinion; and the scholar Max Muller also (says):

Brihaspati and Brahmanaspati are both varieties of Agni, the priest and the purohit of the Gods and men, and as such he is invoked together with the Maruts &c.

That is: Bṛhaspati and Brahmaṇaspati are both transformed forms of Agni, standing in the position of ṛtvij and purohita to gods and men; from this point of view they are invoked together with the Marut deities in many places. We give one or two examples stating this identity of Agni with Bṛhaspati and Brahmaṇaspati.

"O Agni, you are Indra, the best of the good; you are Viṣṇu, worshipful, of vast body; O Brahmaṇaspati, you are the wealthy ṛtvij called Brahmā": thus Agni is described as the form of various deities.

> taṃ śubhramagnimavase havāmahe vaiśvānaraṃ mātariśvānamukthyaṃ | bṛhaspatiṃ manuṣo devatātaye vipraṃ śrotāramatithiṃ raghuṣyadaṃ ‖

"We invite for our protection the bright Agni, friend of the human race; Mātariśvan, worthy to be spoken of in mantras; the wise one, who praises the gods, who is like a guest, who is swift: Bṛhaspati too we invite to come to the sacrificial rites connected with men," and so on.

Sāyaṇācārya, while commenting on Ṛk 5-43-12, says of the word Bṛhaspati:

॥ सायणभाष्यम् ॥

> अथवा इयमाग्नेया। बृहतः परिवृढस्य कर्मणः स्वामाति बृहस्पतिरग्निरुच्यते। तथा नीलवर्णधूमपृष्ठत्वसदनसादनहिरण्यवर्णत्वादिलिंगैरप्यग्निरेव बृहस्पतिः ॥

> athavā iyamāgneyā| bṛhataḥ parivṛḍhasya karmaṇaḥ svāmāti bṛhaspatiragnirucyate| tathā nīlavarṇadhūmapṛṣṭhatvasadanasādanahiraṇyavarṇatvādiliṃgairapyagnireva bṛhaspatiḥ ‖

That is: "Or this mantra may be said to be addressed to Agni. Because he is lord of the great, vast sacrificial work in hand, Agni is named Bṛhaspati. Likewise, black smoke is his back; the sacrificial altar is his seat; and by marks such as golden colour Bṛhaspati should be called Agni himself."

p. 9

Running head: Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Varga 1, p. 9.

Now let us examine the examples in which Agni is spoken of as distinct from Bṛhaspati and Brahmaṇaspati.

> सोषामविंदत्स स्वः १ सो अग्निं सो अर्केण वि बबाधे तमांसि । बृहस्पतिर्गो वपुषो वलस्य निर्मज्ञानं न पर्वणो जभार ॥
> soṣāmaviṃdatsa svaḥ 1 so agniṃ so arkèṇa vi babādhe tamāṃsi |
> bṛhaspatirgo vapuṣo valasya nirmajñānaṃ na parvaṇo jabhāra ‖

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-68-... [the reference is printed twice, the first time broken off: "(ಋ. ಸಂ. ೧೦-೬೮", then "(ಋ, ಸಂ. ೧೦-೬೮-೯)"]; the second is 10-68-9.)

In this ṛk it is said that Bṛhaspati obtained Uṣas, Svar (heaven) and Agni, and by a single mantra drove away the darkness; thus Bṛhaspati and Agni are stated to be different.

> इंद्रं नो अग्ने वसुभिः सजोषा रुद्रं रुद्रेभिरा वहा बृहंतं । आदित्येभिरदितिं विश्वजन्यां बृहस्पतिमृक्वभिर्विश्ववारं ॥
> iṃdraṃ no agne vasubhiḥ sajoṣā rudraṃ rudrebhirā vahā bṛhaṃtaṃ |
> ādityebhiraditiṃ viśvajanyāṃ bṛhaspatimṛkvabhirviśvavāraṃ ‖

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-10-4, as printed "ಮ. ಸಂ. ೭-೧೦-೪".)

In this ṛk Agni is entreated to bring Indra together with the Vasus, Rudra together with the Rudras (Marut deities), Aditi, mother of all people, together with the Ādityas, and Bṛhaspati together with the Aṅgiras seers who praise him. Besides these, there are many ṛks in the Ṛgveda that indicate that Bṛhaspati or Brahmaṇaspati is one and Agni another: 3-20-5, 4-40-1, 5-51-12, 7-41-1, 7-44-1, 9-5-11, 10-35-11, 10-65-1, 10-130-4, 10-141-3, and others. Therefore the doctrine that

Agni is one, Bṛhaspati another and Brahmaṇaspati another is supported in the Ṛgveda. (The text prints "ಋಗ್ವದದಲ್ಲಿ" for "Ṛgveda" in the last sentence, as supplied.)

Sūkta 24 (Maṇḍala 2)

The twenty-fourth sūkta.

Sāyaṇa's introduction to the sūkta

Gist: semām is the second sūkta of Anuvāka 3 of Maṇḍala 2, of sixteen ṛks, seen by Gṛtsamada; the deity is Brahmaṇaspati (Ṛk 12 also Indra); Ṛks 12 and 16 are triṣṭubh, the other fourteen jagatī.

Anuvāda (Kannada). The Anuvāda of the sixth adhyāya of the second aṣṭaka has been given. Now the seventh adhyāya will be explained, with the subjects and discussions. In the third anuvāka of this second maṇḍala, seen by the seer Gṛtsamada, there are ten sūktas in all. Of these the first sūkta was explained earlier, that is, at the end of the sixth adhyāya. Now the second sūkta, semām, will be explained. There are sixteen ṛks in this sūkta. In the Anukramaṇikā it is said: "semāṃ ṣoḍaśāntyā triṣṭub dvādaśī ca saindrī ceti." The seer of this sūkta is Gṛtsamada himself, the seer of the maṇḍala; the twelfth and sixteenth ṛks are in the triṣṭubh metre; the remaining fourteen ṛks are in the jagatī metre. As stated in the Anukramaṇikā, Brahmaṇaspati is the deity of these three sūktas, that is, of this sūkta and the next two; the twelfth ṛk of this sūkta has Indra as deity, and because the word ca is used in the Anukramaṇikā, this ṛk has both Indra and Brahmaṇaspati as deities. The general application (viniyoga) of this sūkta has been stated earlier. The special application can be understood from the sense of each mantra.

Gist: O Brahmaṇaspati, lord of all the world, accept our new, great praise; as the praiser, your friend, praises you, so fulfil our desire.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

(O Brahmaṇaspati) यः (yaḥ)—you who; ईशिषे (īśiṣe)—are lord of the whole world; सः (saḥ)—such as you; इमां (imāṃ)—this, recited by us; प्रभृतिं (prabhṛtiṃ)—and excellently composed, praise; अविद्धि (aviddhi)—accept; नवया (navayā)—new; महा (mahā)—and great; अया गिरा (ayā girā)—with this word in the form of praise; विधेम (vidhema)—we will serve you; उत (uta)—and; नः (naḥ)—among us; मिढ्वान् (miḍhvān) (as printed in the Pratipadārtha; the Pada has ಮಾಧ್ವಾನ್)—the praiser, showerer of praise; तव सखा (tava sakhā)—being your friend; यथा (yathā)—in what manner; स्तवते (stavate)—he praises you (accordingly); बृहस्पते (bṛhaspate)—O lord of mantras; सः (saḥ)—you; नः (naḥ)—our; मतिं (matiṃ)—desired object; सीषधः (sīṣadhaḥ)—fulfil.

O Bṛhaspati, you who are lord of the whole world, accept the praise recited by us and excellently composed. With this new and great word of praise we serve you. O lord (printed "ಒಡನೆಯೇ", sic) of mantras, as the praiser among us praises you, accordingly fulfil our desired object.

Printed English translation

Inasmuch, Brihaspati, as you rule (over all), accept this our propitiation : we worship you with this new and solemn hymn : since this, your friend, our benefactor, celebrates you, fulfil our desires.

सः इमां (saḥ imāṃ)—Here the two words सः इमां (saḥ imāṃ) have joined, and instead of स इमां (sa imāṃ) the form is सेमां (semāṃ); that is, the visarga after the sa has been dropped. Likewise, in this same mantra the words सः उत (saḥ uta) have joined to become सोत (sota). Such examples are many in the Ṛgveda.

सेद्यभवो यमवध यूयमिंद्रश्च मर्त्यं । (sedyabhavo yamavadha yūyamiṃdraśca martyaṃ |) (Pu. Saṃ. 4-37-6; reference as supplied; no gloss is given in the source)

In these verses (printed "ಮಕ್ಕಳಲ್ಲಿ", "in these children", sic as supplied) the words सः इत् (saḥ it) have joined to become सेत् (set).

सैनानीकेन गुविदत्रो अस्मे यष्टा देवा आयुजिष्ठः स्वस्ति । (sainānīkena guvidatro asme yaṣṭā devā āyujiṣṭhaḥ svasti |) (Ma. Saṃ. 2-9-6; reference as supplied; no gloss is given in the source)

In this ṛk the words सः एना (saḥ enā) have joined to become सैना (sainā). Since such usages do not accord with grammar, it is customary to call them Vedic (chāndasa) usages.

प्रभृतिं (prabhṛtiṃ)—प्रकर्षण बृतां स्तुतिं (prakarṣaṇa bṛtāṃ stutiṃ): the praise that we bear (hold), that is, make, in a very excellent manner. The word is formed from the root भृञ् भरणे (bhṛñ bharaṇe) preceded by the prefix प्र (pra). In the Ṛgveda this root is commonly used in the sense of praising in a special manner. Therefore the commentator explains the word prabhṛti as praise made in a special manner.

ईशिषे (īśiṣe)—सर्वस्य जगत ईश्वरो भवसि (sarvasya jagata īśvaro bhavasi): "you are the lord of the whole world", is the commentator's explanation. That is, all the gods, human beings, animals and the plant kingdom are under his control; therefore it is natural to say that you are the master of all. This idea is stated in such ṛks as Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-24-11; 4-50-1; 10-68-10; 10-97-15

Running head: [8. 2. 8. 7. 1.] Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, p. 13 (as supplied).

and so on. Since the word bṛhaspati means lord of the mantras, Bṛhaspati accomplishes all his works through mantras alone: splitting the clouds, sending rain, driving away darkness, destroying enemies, and so on, he does by mantras only. Therefore the Ṛgveda has the very sentence बृहस्पतिर्हंत्यमित्रमर्केः (bṛhaspatirhaṃtyamitramarkèḥ) (Bṛhaspati destroys the enemy by the power of mantra alone).

अया (ayā)—अनया (anayā). The n of the word अनया (anayā) has been dropped, giving आया (āyā) [sic as supplied]. This is a Vedic usage.

अया नवया महा गिरा विधेम (ayā navayā mahā girā vidhema)—अनया नूतनया महत्या वेदरूपया स्तुतिलक्षणया वाचा परिचरेम (anayā nūtanayā mahatyā vedarūpayā stutilakṣaṇayā vācā paricarema): "we serve with this new, great word in the form of the Veda, having the nature of praise". The sense is: O Bṛhaspati, the praise we are now making is newly composed by us, that is, not seen (revealed) by earlier ṛṣis; and it is such as extols your qualities, which are महत्तूरितवाद (mahattūritavāda) [?] (the supplied word is unclear). With such praise-sentences in the form of the Veda we praise you.

मीढ्वान् (mīḍhvān)—सेक्ता स्तुतेर्वषिता (sektā stutervaṣitā). Although the word mīḍhvān is used of Indra and other gods in the sense कामानां वर्षिता (kāmānāṃ varṣitā), "one who showers desired objects", here it is used as an epithet of the sacrificer who praises. "One who showers praise" means the sacrificer who praises Bṛhaspati in a special manner.

man who gives nothing to his friend, that is, who does not help in time of trouble, is no friend at all. Here, because Bṛhaspati gives desired objects to the sacrificer who praises him, he is praised with the word sakhā (friend):

That is, Bṛhaspati is the giver of wealth, nourishment and riches to him who praises him, and the remover of disease and affliction. Such a Bṛhaspati comes quickly to give desired objects to the sacrificer who praises him.

एवा पित्रे विश्वदेवाय वृष्टे यज्ञैर्विधेम नमसा हविर्भिः । (evā pitre viśvadevāya vṛṣṭe yajñairvidhema namasā havirbhiḥ |) बृहस्पते सुप्रजा वीरवंतो वयं स्याम पशयो रयाणां ॥ (bṛhaspate suprajā vīravaṃto vayaṃ syāma paśayo rayāṇāṃ ‖) (Pu. Saṃ. 4-50-7)

That is: Bṛhaspati, who is like a father because he protects us, who is to be praised by all, and who grants desired objects, we serve with sacrificial rites, with offerings of oblations and with praise-sentences. O Bṛhaspati, grant that we may obtain heroic sons, grandsons and so on, and become lords of wealth and other goods. Since in many ṛks of this kind it is said that sacrificers obtain wealth and the rest by praising Bṛhaspati, he is described and praised here as a friend who does favours.

Gist: the Ṛk's last part says that he came near the mountain holding the wealth in the form of cattle, which Vala had placed at the cave-mouth, and entered it, obtaining that wealth.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

yaḥ brahmaṇaspatiḥ—that same Brahmaṇaspati who; ojasā—by strength; nantāni—the asuras who deserved punishment; ni anamat—punished and made humble; uta—and; manyunā—in wrath; śambarāṇi—the clouds; vi adardaḥ—(for the sake of rain) split; acyutā—the waters that were without motion (in the cloud); prācyāvayat—made to flow; vasumantaṃ—holding wealth in the form of cattle; parvataṃ—the mountain; ā ca—and approached (facing it); vi aviśat—entered fully.

The renowned Brahmaṇaspati punished by his strength the asuras who deserved punishment and made them humble. And in wrath he split the clouds and so helped the falling of rain. He made the waters, which stood motionless in the cloud, flow. He approached the mountain that holds wealth in the form of cattle and entered it.

Printed English

(You are) that Brahmanaspati who, by his might, has humbled those who deserved humiliation; who in his wrath rent the clouds asunder ; who sent down the undescending (waters) and made way into the mountain (cave), opulent (in cattle).

yaḥ brahmaṇaspatiḥ nantvāni ojasā ni anamat (as supplied)—ब्रह्मणस्पतिः नमनीयानि राक्षसादीनि बलेन नितरामनमयत् (brahmaṇaspatiḥ namanīyāni rākṣasādīni balena nitarāmanamayat) (Brahmaṇaspati made the demons and others, who were to be bent, bow down utterly by strength). That Brahmaṇaspati made the wicked or the asuras, who had to be restrained (because they were puffed up and intoxicated), walk bowed down by his own power; that is, he suppressed their ego and pride and made them subject to the rules of Bṛhaspati [sic as supplied: bṛhaspati]. Here the word nantvāni is formed from the root ṇamu prahvatve [sic as supplied] and is used in the sense "to be bent down", that is, "(people) to be punished". Since those who come under punishment are wicked doers of evil deeds, the commentator has given the word nantvāni the meaning "demons, asuras".

Running head: Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya-sahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 3, Sū. 24, p. 16.

manyunā—For the word manyu Yāska gives the derivation मन्युर्मन्यतेर्दिप्तिकर्मणः क्रोधकर्मणो वधकर्मणो वा मन्यंत्यस्मादिषवः (manyurmanyaterdiptikarmaṇaḥ krodhakarmaṇo vadhakarmaṇo vā manyaṃtyasmādiṣavaḥ) (Ni. 10-29): that is, he says that the word manyu, formed from the root manyati, has the sense of illumining, of anger, or of slaying. He also says that manyu may be the name of a deity of that name, and in support of this cites the Ṛk—śambarāṇi—The word śambara is read among the names of the cloud (Ni. 2-21). For the word śambara, formed from the root śamu upaśame, the commentary says: शमयति नाशयति आसुरानिति शंबो वज्रः । शंबोऽस्य प्रहर्तृत्वेनास्ति । रो मत्त्वर्थीयः । प्रहरति हि वज्रः इंद्रप्रेरितो मेघान् (śamayati nāśayati āsurāniti śaṃbo vajraḥ | śaṃbo 'sya prahartṛtvenāsti | ro mattvarthīyaḥ | praharati hi vajraḥ iṃdraprerito meghān) (śamba is the thunderbolt, because it pacifies, that is destroys, the asuras; it is his as striker; the suffix ra is in the sense of possession; for the thunderbolt, impelled by Indra, strikes the clouds). Because it destroys asuras and others, Indra's thunderbolt is called śamba; since that thunderbolt, impelled by Indra, splits the clouds for rain, the cloud is called śambara. Or: यद्वा संपूर्वात् वृणोतेः इत्यपि संबरः सन् वर्णव्यतयेन शंबरः । संवियते मेघेनाकाशं इति शंबरः (yadvā saṃpūrvāt vṛṇoteḥ ityapi saṃbaraḥ san varṇavyatayena śaṃbaraḥ | saṃviyate meghenākāśaṃ iti śaṃbaraḥ) (or, from vṛṇoti with the prefix saṃ, it is sambara, and by interchange of letter śambara; the sky is covered by the cloud, hence śambara). That is, the word sambara may be formed from the root vṛṇoti, "to cover", with the prefix saṃ; by a change of letter sambaraḥ becomes śambaraḥ; since the sky is covered by the cloud, the cloud is called śambara. Or śambara may also mean water; the word śambara is also read among the 101 [as supplied] names of water (Ni. 2-24). Since such water is in this cloud, the cloud is called śambara.

वसुमंतं पर्वतं आ च वि अविशत् (vasumaṃtaṃ parvataṃ ā ca vi aviśat)—गोरूपधनवंतं पर्वतं वलनाम्मासुरेण द्वारे सिधानार्थं निहितं शिलोच्चयं अभिमुख्येन विशेषेण प्रविशति । तदानीं तद्गोरूपं धनं प्राप्नोदित्यर्थः (gorūpadhanavaṃtaṃ parvataṃ valanāmmāsureṇa dvāre sidhānārthaṃ nihitaṃ śiloccayaṃ abhimukhyena viśeṣeṇa praviśati | tadānīṃ taddorūpaṃ dhanaṃ prāpnodityarthaḥ) (as supplied; the readings vala-nāmmāsureṇa and sidhānārtham differ from the bhāṣya's own printing on p. 15). The asura named Vala stole the cows of the gods, hid them in a cave of the mountain, and, so that they should not escape, closed the mouth of that cave with a great rock. Brahmaṇaspati, by his power of mantra, found the mountain where the cows were hidden, removed the rock at the cave-mouth, went to the cows and freed them from bondage: this is the main idea. Moreover, since the word parvata also means cloud (Ni. 2-21), the words vasumantaṃ parvataṃ may also be given the meaning "the cloud holding wealth in the form of water". In that case the sentence may be understood: Brahmaṇaspati entered, by his power of mantra, the cloud full of waters and impelled it to pour down rain.

Gist: the Ṛk's deed is ascribed to Brahmaṇaspati: he loosened the firm mountains and made the rooted trees pliant, drove out the cows seized by Vala, split Vala by the mantra, hid the darkness and made the sun shine. Yāska is cited (Ni. 5-16) for vīḷayati and vradati.

देवानां (devānāṃ)—among the gods, Indra and others; देवतमाय (devatamāya)—of Brahmaṇaspati, the most excellent god; कर्तृं (kartṛṃ) (as supplied; the Saṃhitā has कर्त्वं (kartvaṃ))—the extraordinary deed, which is famed as told below (namely); दृळ्हा (dṛḷhā) (the bhāṣya and Special Topics print दृळ्ता (dṛḷtā))—the firm mountains and the like; अश्रथन् (aśrathan)—he made loose; नीळिका (nīḷikā) (as supplied; the Saṃhitā and bhāṣya have वीळिता (vīḷitā))—the firmly rooted trees and the like; अव्रदंत (avradaṃta)—he made them soft; गाः (gāḥ)—the cows (taken away by Vala); उदाजत् (udājat)—he brought them out of the cave and made them go towards the gods; ब्रह्मणा (brahmaṇā)—by the power of his own mantra; वलं (valaṃ)—the asura named Vala; अभिनत् (abhinat)—he frightened and drove away (or destroyed); तमः (tamaḥ)—the darkness; अगूहत् (agūhat)—he scattered and made vanish; स्वः (svaḥ)—the sun; व्यचक्षयत् (vyacakṣayat)—he made shine.

Among the gods, Indra and others, the extraordinary deed of Brahmaṇaspati, the most excellent god, is famed as told below. Namely: he loosened the firm mountains and the like. He made the firmly rooted trees and the like soft. He made the cows seized by Vala go towards the gods. By his mantra he frightened and drove away the asura Vala, and destroyed him. He scattered the darkness and made it vanish. He made the sun shine.

That was exploit, (performed) for the most divine of the gods, by which the firm (shut gates) were thrown open, the strong (barriers) were relaxed, (by him) who set the cows at liberty : who by the (force of the) sacred prayer, destroyed Vala : who dispersed the darkness and displayed the light.

In this Ṛk the praise of the deeds done by Brahmaṇaspati is described. It also says that Brahmaṇaspati did all these feats by the power of his mantra alone.

देवानां देवतमाय-इंद्रादीनां मध्ये अतिशयेन दानादिगुणयुक्ताय! (devānāṃ devatamāya-iṃdrādīnāṃ madhyè atiśayena dānādiguṇayuktāya!) Among all the gods Brahmaṇaspati is the most excellent. That is, among Indra and the other gods this Brahmaṇaspati is the one endowed in the highest degree with qualities such as generosity; the meaning is that he grants the desired objects to those who praise him more abundantly than Indra and the other gods. Or, if the word devatama is taken to mean "most excellent of the gods", the words देवानां देवतमाय (devānāṃ devatamāya) suggest the sense "one who is like the most excellent even among the gods", "god of gods"; just as one who is the foremost among kings is called "king of kings", so Brahmaṇaspati is described here by the words देवानां देवतमाय (devānāṃ devatamāya). Here the dative देवतमाय (devatamāya) is used in the sense of the genitive; such is the commentator's explanation.

कर्त्वं—कर्तव्यं कर्म । (kartvaṃ—kartavyaṃ karma |) The deed that is done; that is, the feat that Brahmaṇaspati accomplished by the power of his mantra.

दृळ्हा अश्रथन्, वीळिता अव्रदंते (dṛḷhā aśrathan, vīḷitā avradaṃtè) (as supplied)—Some of Brahmaṇaspati's feats are described in this Ṛk. Among them are making the firm mountains and the like loose, and making soft the trees and the like that are well rooted and have grown firm. Here the verb अव्रदंते (avradaṃtè) (as supplied) is formed from the root vrand [as supplied: व्रंद् (vraṃd)] and is used in the sense "to be soft". For the word व्रंदी (vraṃdī) formed from this root, Yāska gives the explanation व्रंदी व्रंदतेर्मृदुभावकर्मणः (vraṃdī vraṃdatermṛdubhāvakarmaṇaḥ) (Ni. 5-16) [sic as supplied: the hyphen of the line-break is printed व्रंदते- (vraṃdate-)]. In this connection the Ṛk—

having been cited (by Yāska), he explains it thus: निवृणक्षि यच्छसनस्य मूर्धनि शब्दकारिणः शुष्ण स्यादित्यस्य च शोषयितू रोरूयमाणो वनानीति वा वधेनेति वा । अव्रदंत वीळिता इत्यपि निगमो भवति । वीळयतिश्च व्रीळयतिश्च संस्तंभकर्माणौ पूर्वेण संप्रयुज्येते । (nivṛṇakṣi yacchasanasya mūrdhani śabdakāriṇaḥ śuṣṇa syādityasya ca śoṣayitū rorūyamāṇo vanānīti vā vadheneti vā | avradaṃta vīḷitā ityapi nigamo bhavati | vīḷayatiśca vrīḷayatiśca saṃstaṃbhakarmāṇau pūrveṇa saṃprayujyete |) Having given this explanation, he also uses the present Ṛk, अव्रदंत वीळिता (avradaṃta vīḷitā), as an example. Of the wind that moves in the atmosphere and the sun, who is denoted by the word vrandin because he makes fruits and the like soft, Indra is greater than both, because he pours down water. Yāska himself says that applying the epithet vrandin to the sun, because he makes fruits and the like tender, is not so clear; and citing this very Ṛk he gives, for वीळिता (vīḷitā) here, the sense that he softened or loosened the trees with firm roots, अव्रदंत (avradaṃta). And: वीळयतिश्च व्रीळयतिश्च संस्तंभकर्माणौ (vīḷayatiśca vrīḷayatiśca saṃstaṃbhakarmāṇau) means that वीळिता (vīḷitā), formed from the root वीळयति (vīḷayati) or व्रीळयति (vrīḷayati), of the sense "to make stand firm like a pillar", is used together with the word अव्रंदत (avraṃdata) (as supplied; elsewhere अव्रदंत (avradaṃta)); so the meaning, making what is firm soft, is clearly explained.

गाः उत् आजत्, ब्रह्मणा वलं अभिनत् (gāḥ ut ājat, brahmaṇā valaṃ abhinat)—Brahmaṇaspati, by the power of his mantra, split the asura Vala, and drove out from the mountain cave the cows of the gods that he had hidden in bondage. This is the main idea.

तमः अगूहत्, स्वः वि आचक्षयत् (tamaḥ agūhat, svaḥ vi ācakṣayat)—He drove away the darkness that Vala had spread, and made the sun visible to all and shining. The asura Vala produced darkness and covered the sun so that he should not be seen by all. Bṛhaspati destroyed that darkness and made the sun shine; such is the idea.

Gist: Brahmaṇaspati, the lord of the mantra, split with his strength the hard, water-streaming cloud that hangs downward; the sun's rays drink its water in the hot season and in the rains pour it down again in abundance.

ब्रह्मणस्पतिः (brahmaṇaspatiḥ)—Brahmaṇaspati. अश्मास्यं (aśmāsyaṃ)—hard like a stone; मधुधारं (madhudhāraṃ)—full of water; अवतं (avataṃ)—hanging down, spread out and swaying; that यं (yaṃ)—which cloud; ओजसा (ojasā)—by his own strength; अभि अतृणत् (abhi atṛṇat)—he split open and divided! तमेव (tameva)—that very cloud (the water enclosed in the cloud); विश्वे (viśve)—all; स्पर्दृशः (spardṛśaḥ) (as supplied)—the rays of the sun; पपिरे (papire)—drink (in the hot season). (Again in the rainy season) उत्सं (utsaṃ)—in the form of a stream; उद्रिणं (udriṇaṃ)—full of water, that is the rain; साकं (sākaṃ)—gathering together; बहु (bahu)—abundantly; सिसिचुः (sisicuḥ)—they pour down.

The cloud that is hard like a stone, full of water and hanging down, which Brahmaṇaspati split and divided by his strength: all the water enclosed in that cloud the sun's rays drink up in the summer. Again, in the rainy season, all of them gathering together pour down abundantly the rain, which is in the form of a stream and full of water.

Running head: [22] Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya-sahitā [Maṃ. 2. A. 3. Sū. 24.] (as supplied; the Maṇḍala figure is printed 2 in the supplied text).

Printed English

That stone-like, solid, down-hanging, water-laden (cloud), which Bramhmanspathi has with his strength divided, the universal solar rays have drunk up: but they have again shed together the showering and water-spreading (rain).

अश्मास्यं (aśmāsyaṃ)—the text gives अश्ववद्दृढतरास्यं (aśvavaddṛḍhatarāsyaṃ) (as supplied; the bhāṣya has अश्नवद्दृढतरास्यं (aśnavaddṛḍhatarāsyaṃ)); Sāyaṇa's explanation is "very firm like a stone". Yāska, explaining this word, takes the present Ṛk itself as his example and explains: अशनवंतमास्यंदनवंतमवातितं (aśanavaṃtamāsyaṃdanavaṃtamavātitaṃ) (Nir. 10-13, printed "೨ ೦೦-೦೭"). That is: व्यापनवंतमासेचनवंतमिति तस्यार्थः (vyāpanavaṃtamāsecanavaṃtamiti tasyārthaḥ), that is, a cloud that is pervaded with water and pours down rain. And for this Ṛk he gives the explanation:

अशनवंतमास्यंदनवंतमवतितं ब्रह्मणस्पतिर्मधुधारमभियमोजसा बलेनाभ्यतृणत् तमेव सर्वे पिबंति रश्मयः सूर्यदृशो बह्वेनं सह सिंचंत्युत्समुद्रिणमुदकदंतं

The main idea is: this Brahmaṇaspati struck, with his power, the cloud that is full of water and hard as a stone, and made that cloud pour its sweet water downward on the earth. The rays of the sun drink up (suck up) that very water, that is, the water lying on the earth, and again pour it on the earth in the form of rain. When the sun's sharp rays fall upon the sea, rivers, lakes and other reservoirs on the earth, a part of the water in them is heated by the heat of the rays, spreads in the atmosphere as vapour and appears in the form of cloud. That this cloud again rains the water it holds upon the earth is known to all. Modern science also supports this. Therefore the origin of cloud and the causes of rain stated here accord with experience and with science.

Gist: the eternal wisdom-deeds of Brahmaṇaspati open, month by month and year by year, the doors of the coming waters (rain) for the sacrificers; heaven and earth, unexerted, exchange water and offering-food.

(O priests and sacrificers) ब्रह्मणस्पतिः (brahmaṇaspatiḥ)—Brahmaṇaspati; या (yā)—which; वयुना (vayunā)—knowledge-endowed acts; चकार (cakāra)—did (as the fruit of the mantra recitation); सना (sanā)—ancient; ता का चित् (tā kā cit)—those acts, of many forms and renowned; भुवना (bhuvanā)—of the waters; भवित्वा (bhavitvā) (as supplied; the Pada and Saṃhitā have भवीत्वा (bhavītvā))—of the future; दुरः (duraḥ)—the doors; मार्धिः (mārdhiḥ) (as supplied; the Pada has मार्त्भिः (mārtbhiḥ))—during the span of months; शरद्भिः (śaradbhiḥ)—during the span of years; वः (vaḥ)—for your use; वरंत (varaṃta)—they open (they make a way for the flow of the waters). (Thereafter) अयतंता (ayataṃtā)—heaven and earth, which act of their own impulse without effort; अन्यदन्यदित् (anyadanyadit)—the foods given to each other (the water given by the heaven-world to the earth, and the food in the form of oblation given by the earth to the heaven-world); चरतः (carataḥ)—they make use of.

O priests and sacrificers, those acts, endowed with knowledge, that Brahmaṇaspati accomplished as the fruit of reciting the mantra, ancient, of many kinds and renowned, open the doors of the future of the waters, during the span of months and of years, for your use [the Bhāvārtha continues on p. 24, in the next window].

(Bhāvārtha of Ṛk 5, continued from p. 23) ... and make a way for the flow of the waters. Thereafter heaven and earth, which act of their own impulse without any restraint, mutually enjoy the foods given to each other; that is, the earth enjoys the water given by the heaven-world, and the heaven-world enjoys the food, in the form of oblation, given by the earth.

Printed English

For you, (worshippers), the constant and manifold (bounties of Brahmanaspati), through months and through years, set open the gates of the future rains, and he has appointed those results of prayer, which the two regions mutually and without effort provide.

The meaning of this Ṛk is somewhat difficult. Many have explained it in many ways. For the word भुवना (bhuvanā) in this Ṛk some take it to mean the people of the world, while Sāyaṇa takes it to mean water. Likewise he has supplied the word "heaven and earth" (द्यावापृथिविगळु (dyāvāpṛthivigaḷu)) by ellipsis and explained it so that the sense fits.

ब्रह्मणः पतिः या वयुना चकार सना ता का चित् भुवना भवित्वा दुरः माद्भिः शरद्भिः वः वरंत (brahmaṇaḥ patiḥ yā vayunā cakāra sanā tā kā cit bhuvanā bhavitvā duraḥ mādbhiḥ śaraddhiḥ vaḥ varaṃta)—When Brahmaṇaspati made knowledge the subject of the mantra, that is, made it public in the form of the meaning of the mantra, the knowledge-endowed mantras of Brahmaṇaspati (the sacrificial acts and the like), in the months and in the years, for your (the people's) benefit, caused the doors of the rain-water to be opened and the rain to fall. By reciting meaningful mantras in sacrifices and the like, rain falls, as the fruit of it, throughout the year, in all the months, that is, during the greater part of the year. The main idea is that the water stored in the clouds is released by the recitation of meaningful mantras in sacrifices and the like, and falls on the earth in the form of rain. Here the word वयुन (vayuna) is read among the names of wisdom (Nir. 3-13), the word भुवन (bhuvana) among the names of water (Nir. 2-24); the word शरत् (śarat) is used in the sense of year (Nir. 4-26).

अयतंता अन्यदन्यत् इत् चरतः (ayataṃtā anyadanyat it caratah)—By the greatness of Brahmaṇaspati, heaven and earth, without any effort of their own, cooperate with each other and work. How? The doors of the water that is to rain in future (the clouds) are broken open in the respective months or years and made to pour rain; that is, this Brahmaṇaspati, by his power of mantra, makes the clouds pour rain at the proper time, and makes heaven and earth dependent on one another. In due season rain [the sentence continues on p. 25]

(continued from p. 24) ... falls, plants and the like grow well on the earth, and with their help the people are enabled to perform sacrifices and the like. The gods in the heaven-world accept the oblations and the like given by men, are satisfied, and bring about rain. This in turn favours the sacrifices and the like. Therefore the heaven-world's pouring of rain, and the earth's producing plants and the like and helping the sacrificial acts, is called the mutual dependence of heaven and earth. Since this work goes on without effort on the part of heaven and earth, the main idea is that the power of mantra, or the greatness, of Brahmaṇaspati is the cause of such works.

Gist: when the Paṇi asuras had stolen the cows, the Aṅgirases, guided by Sarama the divine bitch sent by Brahmaṇaspati, found the Paṇis' place, saw their illusions, burned them with fire from their hands, and returned.

अभिनक्षंतः (abhinakṣaṃtaḥ)—searching on every side (for the cows); ये (ye)—which Aṅgirases; परमं (paramaṃ)—excellent; तं निधिं (taṃ nidhiṃ)—that treasure, in the form of cows; पणीनां (paṇīnāṃ)—of the Paṇis; गुहा हितं (guhā hitaṃ)—placed in the cave; अभि आनशुः (abhi ānaśuḥ)—discovered; विद्वांसः (vidvāṃsaḥ)—the wise; ते (te)—those Aṅgirases; अनृता (anṛtā)—that illusion of the Asuras; पतिचक्ष्य (paticakṣya) (as supplied; the Saṃhitā and Pada have प्रतिचक्ष्य (praticakṣya))—having seen (the cave in the form of illusion); अविशं (aviśaṃ)—to enter; यत उ (yata u)—from whichever place; आयन् (āyan)—they had come; तत् (tat)—that very place; पुनः (punaḥ)—again; उदीयुः (udīyuḥ)—went and reached exceedingly.

Those Aṅgirases who, searching on every side for the cows, discovered that excellent treasure, in the form of cows, placed in the cave of the Paṇis—those same wise Aṅgirases, having seen that illusion of the Asuras, the cave in the form of illusion, went again exceedingly and reached the very place from which they had come in order to enter it. (The supplied text has उष्कृष्टवादुदू (uṣkṛṣṭavādudū) for "excellent"; the Pratipadārtha has उत्कृष्टवादुदू (utkṛṣṭavādudū); kept as supplied.)

Printed English

Those sages, who, searching on every side, discoverd [sic] the precious treasure (of cattle) hidden in the cave of the Panis, having seen through the false (illusions of the Asura), and again coming (thither), forced an entrance.

In this Ṛk and in the next Ṛk the subject of Brahmaṇaspati or Bṛhaspati is not taken up. But the praise of the Aṅgirā sages, the descendants of Bṛhaspati, and a description of the daring deeds they did on the occasion of bringing the cows stolen by the Paṇis, are stated. To explain the meaning of this Ṛk the bhāṣyakāra has briefly set out here the story told in other places. Formerly the asuras called Paṇis stole the herd of cows of the gods (or of the Aṅgirā sages?) and kept it hidden in a secret place, that is, in a mountain cave. To search for these cows Indra sent the divine bitch called Saramā (the divine bitch of the world of the gods ... [the passage continues in the next window].

p. 27

Running head: [Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Varga 2] Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, p. 27 (as supplied).

(continued from p. 26) ... bitch) to find them. That bitch travelled a very long way, crossed the deep and brimming river called Rasā, came to the place where the Paṇis were, conversed with them, discovered the place where the cows had been hidden, and informed the gods. This matter is described at length in Ṛg-veda Saṃhitā, Maṇḍala 10, Sūkta 108. Afterwards the Aṅgirā sages, created by Brahmaṇaspati, went to the mountain cave where the Paṇis had hidden the cows, removed the many kinds of magical snares the Asuras had made, and came near the place where the cows were. They also set fire to the dwellings of the Asuras, burned them to ashes, and brought the cows back. The bhāṣyakāra has set out this matter as an introduction (pīṭhikā) to what is said in this Ṛk.

अभिनक्षंतः ये पणीनां गुहा हितं परमं तं निधिं अभि आनशुः (abhinakṣaṃtaḥ ye paṇīnāṃ guhā hitaṃ paramaṃ taṃ nidhiṃ abhi ānaśuḥ)—अभितो गच्छंतो येंगिरसः पणिभिर्गुहायां स्थापितमुत्कृष्टं गोसमूहरूपं धनं अभिलक्ष्य प्राप्तवंतः (abhito gacchaṃto yeṃgirasaḥ paṇibhirguhāyāṃ sthāpitamutkṛṣṭaṃ gosamūharūpaṃ dhanaṃ abhilakṣya prāptavaṃtaḥ) — The Aṅgirā sages, while going about searching for the cows stolen by the Paṇis, learned that that treasure in the form of cows lay hidden by the Paṇis in a cave, a secret place, and came there. In this sentence the words अभिनक्षंतः ये (abhinakṣaṃtaḥ ye) mean only "those who go searching", but since in many contexts it is said that those who search for the cows in this way are the Aṅgirā sages, it must be inferred that here too the Aṅgirā sages are meant. Although the word पणीनां (paṇīnāṃ) is in the genitive case, the bhāṣyakāra explains that it must be taken in the sense of the instrumental case, that is, in the sense "by the Paṇis, the Asuras". The word निधिं (nidhiṃ) means the wealth in the form of a herd of cows. For, since it is said plainly पणीनां

(पणिभिः) गुहा हितं (paṇīnāṃ (paṇibhiḥ) guhā hitaṃ) ("the treasure hidden by the Paṇis in the cave"), and since the Paṇis had hidden only cows, the word निधि (nidhi) here means wealth in the form of cows, that is, the cows themselves.

Besides this meaning, another, different meaning can be given to this Ṛk. It also appears to suggest that the Aṅgirā sages, who know everything, by the power of their sacrificial rites made rain fall, when the clouds (अभिनक्षंतः (abhinakṣaṃtaḥ)) moving in the atmosphere were holding back, without pouring it down on the earth as rain, the water stored in them as treasure.

The Aṅgirases, endowed with truth and all-knowing, having seen the illusions of the Asuras, which were untrue, and wishing to return from that place, came and stood on the great road. They placed the fire, churned with their arms and blazing, on the rocks of the mountain, the dwelling of the Paṇis. The burning fire had not been there before.

Printed English

Those sages, eminent for truth, having seen through the false (illusions of the Asura), again pursued the main road thither, and with their hands cast against the rock the destructive fire, which, till then, was not there.

ऋतावानः कवयः अनृता प्रतिचक्ष्य अतः पुनः महस्पथः आ तस्थुः (ṛtāvānaḥ kavayaḥ anṛtā praticakṣya ataḥ punaḥ mahaspathaḥ ā tasthuḥ)—Those Āṅgirā sages, truthful and far-seeing, that is, all-knowing, having seen the magical snares of the Asuras, found no way to enter inside the cave where the cows were hidden, and came and stood on the great road by which they had come. But they did not wish to go away without doing the task for which they had come. Therefore,

Running head: [A. 2 A. 7 V. 2.] Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, p. 31 (as supplied). The window begins inside Ṛk 8, at the Pratipadārtha.

ऋतज्येन (ऋतज्येन (ṛtajyena))—with the one whose bowstring is truth; क्षिप्रेण (क्षिप्रेण (kṣipreṇa))—that shoots arrows swiftly; धन्वना (धन्वना (dhanvanā))—with the bow; ब्रह्मणस्पतिः (ब्रह्मणस्पतिः (brahmaṇaspatiḥ))—Brahmaṇaspati; यत्र (यत्र (yatra))—at whatever target; वष्टि (वष्टि (vaṣṭi))—takes aim and desires; तत् (तत् (tat))—that; प्र अश्नोति (प्र अश्नोति (pra aśnoti))—he attains fully; याभिः (याभिः (yābhiḥ))—with which arrows; अस्यति (अस्यति (asyati))—Bṛhaspati [sic: so in the Kannada] overthrows the Rākṣasas and the like, such (arrows); नृचक्षसः (नृचक्षसः (nṛcakṣasaḥ))—of the all-knowing Brahmaṇaspati; दृशये (दृशये (dṛśaye))—produced for the sake of knowledge; कर्णयोनयः (कर्णयोनयः (karṇayonayaḥ))—perceptible by the organ of hearing, and of the nature of mantras; तस्य (तस्य (tasya))—of that bow; इषवः (इषवः (iṣavaḥ))—the arrows; साध्वीः (साध्वीः (sādhvīḥ))—accomplish their work.

With the bow whose string is truth and which shoots arrows swiftly, Brahmaṇaspati fully attains whatever target he takes aim at and desires. The arrows of that bow, with which Bṛhaspati [so in the Kannada] overthrows the Rākṣasas and the like, which are produced for the knowledge of the all-knowing Brahmaṇaspati, and which are perceived by the organ of hearing and are of the nature of mantras, accomplish their work.

Printed English

Whatever Brahmanaspathi aims at with the truthrst-rung [sic] quick-darting bow, that (mark) he surely attains: holy are its arrows with which he shoots, (intended) for the eyes of men, and having their abode in the ear.

protects the mantras; that is, with mantras he can accomplish any undertaking. The bowstring (ज्या (jyā)) of his bow is of the nature of truth; that is, truth itself is the string (cord) of his bow. Fitting such a string called truth to his bow, with arrows shot in quick succession (that is, with mantras), whatever matter Brahmaṇaspati aims at he accomplishes without fail. He does not miss the mark he has set; that is, he does not leave unaccomplished an undertaking he has resolved to carry out. Here the arrows are mantras, or the oblation offered to the gods. As the English translator Wilson says, "The arrows are oblations and mantras": the arrows are the oblation offered by him and the mantras uttered.

There is nothing that cannot be accomplished by these. Therefore they carry the qualifying expression साद्वी8 (sādvī8) [?] (so in the supplied text; evidently साध्वीः (sādhvīḥ)), साधिकाः (sādhikāḥ), that is, "accomplishing the intended work".

नृचक्षसः कर्णयोनयः—नृन्पश्यतः, सर्वज्ञस्य बृहस्पतेः, श्रोत्रेंद्रियेण ग्राह्याः मंत्रभूता आकर्णकृष्टा वा बाणाः । ब्रह्मणस्पतिः मंत्रैरेव सर्वं साधयतीति भावः (nṛcakṣasaḥ karṇayonayaḥ—nṛnpaśyataḥ, sarvajñasya bṛhaspateḥ, śrotreṃdriyeṇa grāhyāḥ maṃtrabhūtā ākarṇakṛṣṭā vā bāṇāḥ | brahmaṇaspatiḥ maṃtraireva sarvaṃ sādhayatīti bhāvaḥ). Sāyaṇa understands नृचक्षसः (nṛcakṣasaḥ) as "seeing men", that is, "all-knowing", and कर्णयोनयः (karṇayonayaḥ) as "perceptible by the organ of hearing, of the nature of mantras, or arrows drawn back to the ear". Here he has applied नृचक्षसः (nṛcakṣasaḥ) to Brahmaṇaspati and stated his omniscience. But if we take the view of the English scholars cited above, the arrows are of two forms, oblation and mantra. Of these the oblations are नृचक्षसः (nṛcakṣasaḥ), visible to men, and the mantras are कर्णयोनयः (karṇayonayaḥ), to be heard by the ears of men [the Kannada reads किविगैकेळसतक्कवु (kivigaikeḷasatakkavu), apparently a misreading of "to be heard by the ear"]. Thus the mantras employed by Brahmaṇaspati and the oblations given are capable of doing the intended work. This Sāyaṇācārya has explained by the sentence ब्रह्मणस्पतिः मंत्रेणैव सर्वं साधयति

Gist: Brahmaṇaspati, set in front by the gods as priest, joins and separates things by mantras, is well praised and comes to aid his praisers in battle; he brings food and wealth, and the sun shines effortlessly.

पुरोहितः (पुरोहितः (purohitaḥ))—established at the head (of the gods); सः ब्रह्मणस्पतिः (सः ब्रह्मणस्पतिः (saḥ brahmaṇaspatiḥ))—that Brahmaṇaspati; संनयः (संनयः (saṃnayaḥ))—he who brings together, by the power of his mantras, things that are separate; विनयः (विनयः (vinayaḥ))—he who separates what is joined together; सः (सः (saḥ))—he; सुष्टुतः (स सुष्टुतः (sa suṣṭutaḥ))—is excellently praised; युधि (युधि (yudhi))—in battle; सः (सः (saḥ))—he is the helper of the praisers; यत् (यत् (yat))—when; चाक्ष्मी (चाक्ष्मी (cākṣmī)) (as supplied; the Saṃhitā has चाक्ष्मो (cākṣmo) and the Pada चाक्ष्मः (cākṣmaḥ))—the all-knowing Brahmaṇaspati; वाजं (वाजं (vājaṃ))—food; मती (मती (matī))—excellent; धना (धना (dhanā))—wealth; भरते (भरते (bharate))—he bears (for the praisers); आदित् (आदित् (ādit))—immediately thereupon; तप्यतुः (तप्यतुः (tapyatuḥ))—the burning; सूर्यः (सूर्यः (sūryaḥ))—the sun; वृथा (वृथा (vṛthā))—effortlessly; तपति (तपति (tapati))—shines.

That same Brahmaṇaspati, established as priest of the gods, is the one who by the power of his mantras brings together things that are separate and separates what is joined. He is also excellently praised. In battle he is the helper. When Brahmaṇaspati bears food and excellent wealth for his praisers, immediately thereupon the burning sun shines effortlessly.

Printed English

He Brahmanaspathi, is the aggregator and subjugator (of objects); the family priest (of the gods); and the renowed [sic] in battle; the beholder (of all), who bestows food and desired treasures, whence the radiant sun shines without exertion.

पुरोहितः ब्रह्मणस्पतिः संनयः (purohitaḥ brahmaṇaspatiḥ saṃnayaḥ)—"he brings together, by mantras, those who have been separated." Yāska explains the word purohita as "they place him in front" (Ni. 2-12). Sāyaṇa says "set in front by the gods": the gods keep Brahmaṇaspati before them. He describes this Brahmaṇaspati as one who, by the power of his mantras, brings together in one place those who are separated from one another. Further, विनयः (vinayaḥ) (the text has संगशानां (saṃgaśānāṃ) [?], evidently for the bhāṣya's संगतानां (saṃgatānāṃ)): "he too is the one who separates those who are joined" — he explains that, by reciting mantras, he can make those who are together, through affection or other causes, live apart.

सुष्टुतः युधि सः (suṣṭutaḥ yudhi saḥ) (the text has स्तोत्यणामनुग्रहाय प्रादुर्भवति (stotyaṇāmanugrahāya prādurbhavati)): being praised, he appears in person, to show his favour, when battle comes upon them.

For the word चाक्षृः (cākṣṛḥ) (so in the supplied text; the Saṃhitā and Pada have चाक्ष्मो (cākṣmo) / चाक्ष्मः (cākṣmaḥ)) the explanation is सर्वस्य द्रष्टा सर्वसहो ना (sarvasya draṣṭā sarvasaho nā): Brahmaṇaspati sees everything directly and endures all kinds of sorrows and calamities. Then वाजं मती धना भरते (vājaṃ matī dhanā bharate) is explained: for those who praise him he makes food and excellent wealth increase, bringing rain-waters, and so he nourishes them.

From this: since the sacrifice is accomplished by the foods and wealth given by Brahmaṇaspati, the burning sun is left merely enjoying the oblations himself (केवलं हवींषि भुंजान एव वर्तते (kevalaṃ havīṃṣi bhuṃjāna eva vartate)). That is, because Brahmaṇaspati carries out the sacrifices of the sacrificers with foods and wealth, the sun, who illumines and protects everything, merely receives his shares of the oblations and stays idle; this states the extent of Brahmaṇaspati's nourishing of those who depend on him.

The riches of the rain-giving Bṛhaspati are pervasive everywhere, mighty and very excellent. Such riches, by which men and gods together enjoy pleasures, and which are worthy of worship, are given by Bṛhaspati, the beloved one, the possessor of food.

Printed English

Expansive, vast, and excellent riches, are the attainable (bounties) of Brihaspathi, the sender of the rain : these {are the gifts of the adorable giver of food, whereby both (descriptions of worshippers) entering here enjoy (abundance).

(Special Topics continued.) — thus explaining the greatness of Bṛhaspati or Brahmaṇaspati. Sāyaṇa explains the word सुविदत्र (suvidatra) as "that which is to be obtained in abundance" and gives its meaning as wealth.

Yāska gives the meaning सुविदत्रः कल्याणविद्यः (suvidatraḥ kalyāṇavidyaḥ) (Ni. 6-14), and explains सुविदत्रं धनं भवति (suvidatraṃ dhanaṃ bhavati) (Ni. 7-9), and quotes usages for both senses.

The wealth to be obtained from this Bṛhaspati — विभु, प्रभु, प्रथमं राध्या (vibhu, prabhu, prathamaṃ rādhyā) — is pervasive, mighty (abundant), chief, and something that must certainly be attained: thus the greatness of wealth is stated. And वाजिनः येन उभये जनाः भुंजते (vājinaḥ yena ubhaye janāḥ bhuṃjate): it is described that both kinds of people — the praising priests and the sacrificers, or men and gods — obtain the wealth bestowed by Bṛhaspati, the possessor of food, and live happily enjoying pleasures.

Brahmaṇaspati, who is all-pervading and delightful, wishes to bear with his strength both the worshipper in a low, wretched state and the worshipper in an excellent state. भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Indra and Brahmaṇaspati, lords of wealth, all praise is truly yours. All beings that rest on water do not [?] your rite. As horses harnessed to a पथ (patha)-[?] (the supplied text has पथक्के (pathakkè) "to the path", probably for रथक्के (rathakkè) "to the chariot") go eagerly towards grass, so come to our oblation.

(Doubt: the supplied text has मारुवुदिल्ल (māruvudilla) "will not sell" where the Pratipadārtha has "do not harm (transgress)"; probably मीरुवुदिल्ल (mīruvudilla) "do not transgress".)

Printed English

All truth, lords of wealth, (Indra and Brahmanaspathi), is inherent in you both : the waters injure not your rites: come to our presence (to receive) our oblations, like a pair of steeds (to receive) their provender.

In this sūkta both Indra and Brahmaṇaspati are praised. मघवाना—तद्वंत् इंद्राब्रह्मणस्पती (maghavānā—tadvaṃt iṃdrābrahmaṇaspatī). The word मघ (magha) is stated by Yāska among the names of wealth (Ni. 3-9). By this word Indra and Brahmaṇaspati are addressed as possessors of wealth. युवयोरित् विश्वं सत्यं—युवयोरेव सर्वं स्तोत्रं यथार्थं । स्तुत्या यद्यद्गुणजातं प्रतिपाद्यते तत्सर्वं युवयोः विद्यमानमेव न त्वारोपितं (yuvayorit viśvaṃ satyaṃ—yuvayoreva sarvaṃ stotraṃ yathārthaṃ | stutyā yadyadguṇajātaṃ pratipādyate tatsarvaṃ yuvayoḥ vidyamānameva na tvāropitaṃ). Here the word विइल्लिश्व (viilliśva) [?] (as supplied, evidently विश्व (viśva) with a stray word run in) is given the meaning "all kinds (of every sort) of praises".

(Special Topics of Ṛk 12 continued.) All the qualities stated in the Ṛks of Indra and Brahmaṇaspati are really present in them; they are not merely attributed, as poets say in their poems. In this way the abundant excellence of their qualities is described.

नः हविः युजीव वाजिना अच्छ- (naḥ haviḥ yujīva vājinā accha-) ... "Just as swift horses yoked to a chariot go quickly towards their fodder, so may you come quickly." Just as the swift horses yoked to a chariot come with speed for their food, so may Indra and Brahmaṇaspati come quickly to receive the oblations and the like in our sacrifice; thus the prayer of the sacrificer is stated.

Gist: The swift horses of Brahmaṇaspati hear our praise (or his command); the wise priest brings wealth with praise; may Brahmaṇaspati, destroyer of strong demons, accept our debt-like oblation, being rich in food at the sacrifice.

उत (uta)—and; आशिष्ठाः (āśiṣṭhāḥ)—swift-going; वह्नयः (vahnayaḥ)—horses; अनु शृण्वंति (anu śṛṇvaṃti)—may they listen to our praises; सभेयः (sabheyaḥ)—excellent in the assembly; विप्रः (vipraḥ)—and wise, the Adhvaryu; मती (matī)—with a hymn worthy of thought; धना (dhanā)—the wealth in the form of oblations; भरते (bharate)—offers; वीळुद्वेषाः (vīḷuddeṣāḥ)—Brahmaṇaspati, who hates the mighty demons; वशा (vaśā)—produced from the cow; ऋणं (ṛṇaṃ)—and offered by the sacrificers, the avadāna (offering); अनु आददिः (anu ādadiḥ)—may he accept (for the reason that); स ह ब्रह्मणस्पतिः (sa ha brahmaṇaspatiḥ)—that Brahmaṇaspati indeed; समिथे (samithe)—in this sacrifice; वाजी (vājī)—is possessed of food.

May the swift horses of Brahmaṇaspati listen to our praises. The Adhvaryu, excellent in the assembly and wise, offers with a hymn worthy of thought the wealth in the form of oblations. May Brahmaṇaspati, who hates the mighty demons, accept the avadāna (the oblation), which is produced from the cow and offered by the sacrificers. For that Brahmaṇaspati is indeed possessed of food at this sacrifice.

p. 42

Running head: [42 Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya-sahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 3, Sū. 24] (as supplied).

Printed English

The very swift horses (of Brahmanaspathi) listen to (our invocation); the priest of the assembly offers with praise the (sacrificial) wealth: may Brahmanaspathi, the hater of the oppressor, accept (the payment of) the debt, agreeably to his pleasure : may he be the accepter of the (sacificial) [sic] food presented at this coremony [sic].

विप्रः मती धना भरते—मेधावी अध्वर्युः होता वा मननीयेन स्तोत्रेण (vipraḥ matī dhanā bharate—medhāvī adhvaryuḥ hotā vā mananīyena stotreṇa) हनिर्लक्षणानि धनानि पोषयति । (hanirlakṣaṇāni dhanāni poṣayati |) The word विप्र

(vipra) is stated by Yāska (Ni. 3-19) among the names of the wise. Sāyaṇa gives two kinds of sense: that the wise Adhvaryu, or the priest called Hotṛ, recites excellent praises and gathers this abundant wealth for the sacrifice of Brahmaṇaspati; or that by praiseworthy hymns he wins the favour of Brahmaṇaspati (by his grace) and increases the wealth so acquired.

वीळुद्वेषाः वशा ऋणमाददिः— (vīḷudveṣāḥ vaśā ṛṇamādadiḥ—) Here the word वीळु (vīḷu) is read by Yāska among the names of strength (Ni. 3-9). By it the meaning is given that Brahmaṇaspati दृढान् राक्षसार्दी द्वेष्टि (dṛḍhān rākṣasārdī dveṣṭi) (as supplied), that is, subdues the demons and the like, who have abundant power. Thus Brahmaṇaspati, possessed of such greatness, अस्माभिः यज्ञ्वभिः प्रदेयं अवदानात्मकं (हविः) (asmābhiḥ yajjvabhiḥ pradeyaṃ avadānātmakaṃ (haviḥ)) अनुक्रमेण आदाता भवतु (anukrameṇa ādātā bhavatu): the oblations that the officiating priests who perform the homa offer for him in the sacrifices (the materials given as a debt) are prayed to be accepted, as if a debt due were accepted without fail.

Here it may be said that the oblation-portion offered for Brahmaṇaspati is of the nature of a debt, and, since it must necessarily be offered, it is like a debt. Having explained the meaning thus, Sāyaṇa quotes: अवदानस्य ऋणत्वं च—जायमानो वै ब्राह्मणस्त्रिभिर्यणवा (avadānasya ṛṇatvaṃ ca—jāyamāno vai brāhmaṇastribhiryaṇavā) (the passage continues on the next page; the window ends here).

जायते ब्रह्मचर्यण ऋषिभ्यो यज्ञेन देवेभ्यः प्रजया पितृभ्य एष वा अनृणो यः पुत्री यज्वा ब्रह्मचारिवासी (jāyate brahmacaryaṇa ṛṣibhyo yajñena devebhyaḥ prajayā pitṛbhya eṣa vā anṛṇo yaḥ putrī yajvā brahmacārivāsī) (Tai. Saṃ. 6-3-10-5). A twice-born man is born already bound by three kinds of debts: the debt to the sages, to the gods and to the fathers. The debt to the sages is discharged by studying the Veda in brahmacarya, the debt to the gods by performing sacrifice, and the debt to the fathers by begetting a son. Since this is said, Sāyaṇa explains that the oblation-portion (हविरवदान (haviravadāna)) is here spoken of by the word ऋण (ṛṇa) (debt), and he cites the Taittirīya Saṃhitā passage.

And a second meaning is also given: यद्वा वशस्य कामस्य अभिलाषस्य अनुगुणवादाता भवतु (yadvā vaśasya kāmasya abhilāṣasya anuguṇavādātā bhavatu), that is, may Brahmaṇaspati accept the oblations offered by the priests according to the wish of each priest, in order to fulfil that priest's desire. In this sense the word वश (vaśa) is given the meaning "wish" (desire).

The word समिथे (samithe) is read by Yāska among the names of battle (Ni. 3-9). Sāyaṇa explains the word thus: संयंति संगच्छंते अस्मिन्नाहुतिभिः देवाः इति समिथो यज्ञः (saṃyaṃti saṃgacchaṃte asminnāhutibhiḥ devāḥ iti samitho yajñaḥ), that is, the rite in which the gods assemble, each with his own oblation-portion, is the sacrifice. तस्मात् हविष आदाता भवतु (tasmāt haviṣa ādātā bhavatu): therefore the prayer is explained to be that Brahmaṇaspati (together with all the gods) may be the receiver of the oblations in the sacrifices where all the gods gather together.

Gist: Brahmaṇaspati's mantra (or wrath), meant to do a great deed, proved true by his will; he drove out the cows and divided them among the gods, and they flowed apart like rivers.

mahi—great. karma—the work. kariṣyataḥ—of him who will accomplish. brahmaṇaspateḥ—of Brahmaṇaspati. manyuḥ—the mantra, an instrument of meditation (or his wrath). yathāvaśam—according to his wish. satyaḥ—true in effect (not in vain). anubhavat [?]—became. yaḥ—the Brahmaṇaspati who. gāḥ—the cows (carried off by the Paṇis). udājat—released and brought out from the cave. saḥ—that same Brahmaṇaspati. dive—to the gods of the world of the gods. vi abhajat ca—divided and distributed (then that herd of cows). mahīva rītiḥ—like the currents of rivers such as the Gaṅgā, splitting into branches and flowing apart. śavasā—by their own strength. pṛthak—(to the houses of the gods) separately. āsarat—went.

The mantra, an instrument of meditation, of Brahmaṇaspati who accomplishes great works, became fruitful in truth according to his wish. The same Brahmaṇaspati who released from the cave the cows carried off by the Paṇis divided them among the gods in the world of the gods. Then that herd of cows, like the currents of rivers such as the Gaṅgā breaking into branches and flowing apart, went by their own strength separately to the houses of the gods.

Printed English translation

The purpose of Brahmaspathi, engaging in a great work, has been successful, according to his wish ; for he it was who recovered (the stolen) cattle for (the dwellers in) heaven ; and distributed them ; so that of their own power they took different directions, like (the branches of) a mighty river.

p. 45

ब्रह्मणस्पतेः मन्युः सत्यः (brahmaṇaspateḥ manyuḥ satyaḥ): here the word मन्यु (manyu) is explained in two ways, as मननसाधनो मंत्रः क्रोधो वा (mananasādhano maṃtraḥ krodho vā), a mantra or (क्रोध (krodha)) anger; since Brahmaṇaspati is one who performs great works, the mantra of this god, or his anger as well, is true. And सः यथा कामयते तथा करोति (saḥ yathā kāmayate tathā karoti): this god acts as he wishes, that is, he performs his actions (duties) with complete independence; so it is explained.

herd of cows, in separate droves, reached the houses of the respective gods; thus the comparison with the Gaṅgā's current is stated.

The word शवः (śavaḥ) is read by Yāska among the names of strength (Ni. 3-9).

p. 47

Running head: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Varga 3, Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, p. 47.

In this ṛk the word ब्रह्मणस्पते (brahmaṇaspate) is explained as मंत्राधिपते (maṃtrādhipate): Brahmaṇaspati is the lord (master) of all mantras; thus the address is explained.

The sacrificers: रायः विश्वहा रथ्यः स्याम (rāyaḥ viśvahā rathyaḥ syāma) — the wish is prayed for that they be lords, at all times, of riches that are certainly worth protecting and that come with food. For the word रथ्यः (rathyaḥ) the meaning is given as रथाः एषां संति (rathāḥ eṣāṃ saṃti), "those who possess chariots", lords.

नः वीरेषु वीर्रा उपपृच्छि (naḥ vīreṣu vīrrā upapṛcchi) (as supplied; the Ṛk reads vīrān upa pṛṅgi) — the word वीरेषु (vīreṣu) is explained as "those born of virility", i.e. sons; the prayer is that Brahmaṇaspati grant us, the sacrificers, grandsons as well.

ईशानः (īśānaḥ) — it is explained that Bṛhaspati is the lord of everything, and since this god desires ब्रह्मणा मे हवं वेषि (brahmaṇā me havaṃ veṣi), the invocation in the form of praise made by the sacrificer who comes with food in the form of the oblation, the wish is also expressed that he fulfil the sacrificers' desire.

Yāska has read the word ब्रह्म (brahma) among the names of wealth (Ni. 3-9) and also among the names of food. Here it is used in the sense of food.

Gist: O Brahmaṇaspati, controller of the world, hear this hymn and send us a son; send us all the good that the gods protect; blessed with fine sons may we recite exalted praise at the sacrifice (vidatha = sacrifice).

brahmaṇaspate—O Brahmaṇaspati. yantā—controller of the whole world. tvaṃ—you. asya sūktasya—(recited by us) this hymn. bodhi—understand. yat—by which greatness. bhadraṃ—all good. devāḥ—the gods. avanti—protect. viśvaṃ—the whole. tat—that good. jinva—cause to come to us; (therefore) tanayaṃ ca—a son also (jinva—cause to be born to us). suvīrāḥ—we, accompanied by sons and others endowed with virility. bṛhat—exalted praise. vidathe—in this sacrifice. vadema—we shall recite.

O Brahmaṇaspati, you, controller of the whole world, understand (hear) this hymn [पतितवाद (patitavāda) (patitavāda), "fallen", as supplied; presumably paṭhita, "recited" — [?]] by us. By the same greatness by which the gods protect all good, cause all good to come to us also. Therefore bring about the gain of a son. We, accompanied by sons and others endowed with virility, shall recite exalted praise at this sacrifice.

Printed English translation

Brahmanaspathi, you are the regulator of this (world), understand (the purport of) our hymn, and grant us posterity; for all is prosperous that the gods protect : (and therefore) may we, blessed with excellent descendants, glorify you at this sacrifice.

Addressing Brahmaṇaspati, it is explained that this god is सर्वस्य जगतो नियंता (sarvasya jagato niyaṃtā), the controller of the whole world, and that अस्य सूक्तस्य बोधि (asya sūktasya bodhi) means he should listen to this hymn that we recite (the text prints पडिसुव (paḍisuva), "that we cause", for the expected पठिसुव (paṭhisuva) — as supplied).

तनयं च जिन्व—पुत्रं च प्रेरय । जिविः प्रीणनार्थोऽत्र प्रेरणे वर्तते । (tanayaṃ ca jinva—putraṃ ca preraya | jiviḥ prīṇanārthoStra preraṇe vartate |) The root जिवि (jivi) is used in the sense "to gladden", but here it is used in the sense "to impel"

Running head: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Varga 4, Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, p. 49.

(Special Topics continued.) — thus Sāyaṇa explains; and the prayer is that Brahmaṇaspati hear this hymn of ours and impel our sons also to recite this hymn; and सर्वे देवाः सर्वं अवंति तत् भद्रं च जिन्व (sarvè devāḥ sarvaṃ avaṃti tat bhadraṃ ca jinva): that all the gods impel the good that protects the whole world to come to us.

सुवीराः—शोभनैः वीरैः पुत्रपौत्रादिभिरुपेताः (suvīrāḥ—śobhanaiḥ vīraiḥ putrapautrādibhirupetāḥ) — the word सुवीर (suvīra) is explained as children and grandchildren endowed with all kinds of good qualities; it is described that, accompanied by them, we recite exalted praises at sacrifices.

विदथे—यष्टव्यतया अस्मिन् देवान् जानाति इति विदथो यज्ञः । (vidathe—yaṣṭavyatayā asmin devān jānāti iti vidatho yajñaḥ |) The meaning of the word vidatha is explained: the rite in which oblations are offered with the gods in view is called a sacrifice.

Sūkta 25 (Maṇḍala 2)

The twenty-fifth sūkta.

Sāyaṇa's introduction to the sūkta

> इंधान इति पंचर्चं तृतीयं सूक्तं गार्त्समदं जागतं ब्राह्मणस्पत्यं । तथा चानुक्रांतं । इंधानः पंच जागतं त्विति । लैंगिको विनियोगः ॥

Gist: indhānaḥ is the third sūkta of Anuvāka 3, of five ṛks, by Gṛtsamada, in jagatī metre, with Brahmaṇaspati as deity; the application is by indication (liṅga).

Anuvāda (Kannada). The sūkta indhāno agniṃ is the third sūkta of the third anuvāka. It has five ṛks. The seer of this sūkta is Gṛtsamada; the deity is Brahmaṇaspati; the metre is jagatī. In the Anukramaṇikā it is said: इंधानः पंच जागतं तु (iṃdhānaḥ paṃca jāgataṃ tu). The application (viniyoga) is laiṅgika.

Gist: the sacrificer who kindles the fire for Brahmaṇaspati destroys hostile enemies, prospers through hymn and oblation, and lives long enough to see his grandson; the grammatical remarks (roots vanu, śuṣ/śū, sṛ) are noted but not explained.

(For the sacrifice addressed to Brahmaṇaspati) agnim—the fire; indhānaḥ—the sacrificer who makes it blaze; vanuṣyataḥ—the enemies who cause obstruction to the sacrifice; vanavat—he strikes and drives far away; it—and; kṛtabrahmā—composing hymns; rātahavyaḥ—offering oblations; śūśuvat—he gains increase; yaṃyam —whichever sacrificer; brahmaṇaspatiḥ—Brahmaṇaspati; yujam—as a friend; kṛṇute—makes (him his own); saḥ—that sacrificer; jātena—(beyond) the son; jātam—the grandson born; ati pra sarsṛte—passes beyond and lives long (he lives long enough to see grandsons and others also).

The sacrificer who makes the fire blaze for the sacrifice addressed to Brahmaṇaspati strikes down and drives far away the enemies who obstruct the sacrifice; and, composing hymns and offering oblations, he gains increase. The sacrificer whom Brahmaṇaspati makes his friend lives long, so that he sees all his sons and grandsons and rejoices.

Printed English translation

Kindling the fire, may (the worshipper) overcome the malevolent (disturbers of the rite); may he, repeating prayers, and laden with oblations, prosper; he whom Brahmanaspathi makes his associate, lives to behold the son of his son.

अग्निं इंधानः (agniṃ iṃdhānaḥ)—ब्रहणस्पतेर्यागार्थमग्निं प्रज्वलर्य यजमानः (brahaṇaspateryāgārthamagniṃ prajvalarya yajamānaḥ). Here the word indhānaḥ is given the sense "the sacrificer who kindles the fire"; the meaning is explained thus: in the sacrifice performed for Brahmaṇaspati, the sacrificer drives far away, by the greatness of the fire, all the enemies who harm him. Yāska reads वनुष्यतिर्हिंसा कर्मा (vanuṣyatirhiṃsā karmā) (Ni. 5-2) ["vanuṣyati means the act of harming"], and cites it, explaining वनुयाम (vanuyāma), वनुष्यतः (vanuṣyataḥ).

कृतब्रह्मा (kṛtabrahmā)—The word brahma is read by Yāska (Ni. 3-9) in the senses of food and wealth; Sāyaṇa here explains brahma as "hymn" with कृतं ब्रह्म स्तोत्रं येन (kṛtaṃ brahma stotraṃ yena).

Gist: that sacrificer, with his own sons, destroys the enemies' sons, increases wealth with cattle, knows everything by himself; his son and grandson prosper (or Brahmaṇaspati makes them prosper).

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

yaṃyam—whichever sacrificer; brahmaṇaspatiḥ—Brahmaṇaspati; yujam—as a friend; kṛṇute—makes (that sacrificer); vīrebhiḥ—together with his heroic sons; vanuṣyataḥ—the harming; vīrān—enemy sons; vanavat—he will strike down; (and) gobhiḥ—with cattle; rayim—wealth; paprathat—he extends and increases; tmanā—by his own power; bodhati—he knows everything; tasya—of that sacrificer; tokam ca—the son; tanayam ca—and the grandson; vardhate—gain increase.

The sacrificer whom Brahmaṇaspati makes his friend, together with his heroic sons, strikes down the harming sons of his enemies; and he expands and increases his wealth together with cattle. By his own power he knows everything. The son and grandson of such a sacrificer attain increase.

Printed English translation

(Surrounded) by his descendants, may he surpass the malevolent descendants (of his adversaries), for hc [sic] is famed for great wealth of cattle, and understands (all things) of himself: his sons and grandsons prosper whom Brahmanaspathi makes his associate.

वीरेभिः वीरान् वनवत् (vīrebhiḥ vīrān vanavat)—Yāska explains वीरो वीरयत्यमित्रान् वेतेर्वा स्याद्गतिकर्मणो वीरयतेर्वा (*vīro vīrayatyamitrān vetervā syādgatikarmaṇo vīrayaterv*ā) (Ni. 1-7, printed "२." [sic]). From this the word vīra means one who destroys others by his own power (a hero). Here Sāyaṇa explains वीरेभिः (vīrebhiḥ) as आत्मीयैः पुत्रैः (ātmīyaiḥ putraiḥ), the sons (children) of the sacrificer, and वीरान् (vīrān) as the sons of enemies. The sense is: by the favour of Brahmaṇaspati may the sacrificer subdue the enemy heroes by the heroes on his own side.

गोभिः पप्रथत् (gobhiḥ paprathat)—गोभिस्सहितं धनं विस्तारयति (gobhissahitaṃ dhanaṃ vistārayati). For the word गौः (gauḥ) Yāska gives the meanings earth, animal, hide, phlegm, bowstring, the sun, the suṣumnā channel, rays (Ni. 2-5,6,7.8). Here the meaning "wealth in cows, consisting of cattle, horses, goats and other animals" (paśu) is given, and it is described that the sacrificer expands wealth of this kind by the favour of Brahmaṇaspati (the printed "ಬ್ರಹ್ಮಸ್ಪಣತಿ" is a slip of the supplied text).

त्मना बोधति (tmanā bodhati)—आत्मनैव सर्वं जानाति अनन्याधीनज्ञानो भवति (ātmanaiva sarvaṃ jānāti ananyādhīnajñāno bhavati). त्मना (tmanā) is explained as "by his own nature"; the sense that the sacrificer does so by the favour of Brahmaṇaspati is thereby made explicit.

तोकं तनयं वर्धते (tokaṃ tanayaṃ vardhate)—तोकं तनयस्तत्पुत्रः च प्रवृद्धो भवति (tokaṃ tanayastatputraḥ ca pravṛddho bhavati); or तोकं तनयं पुत्रं पौत्रं च वर्धयति ब्रह्मणस्पतिः (tokaṃ tanayaṃ putraṃ pautraṃ ca vardhayati brahmaṇaspatiḥ). Both senses are stated: Brahmaṇaspati makes the sacrificer's sons and grandsons increase, or by Brahmaṇaspati's favour they themselves increase.

As a flowing river cuts and splits its bank, and as a strong bull throws down impotent old oxen, the sacrificer who is engaged in the service of Brahmaṇaspati wishes to surround with his strength and destroy the enemies who harm him. The sacrificer whom Brahmaṇaspati makes his friend gains an increase that no one can stop, as fire spreads its flame and advances unobstructed.

Printed English translation

As a river (washes away) its banks, so the devout worshipper, of Brahmanaspathi), [sic] overpowers his enemies by his strength, as a bull (overcomes) an ox : like the spreading flame of fire, it is impossible to stop him, whom Brahmanaspathi makes his associate.

शिमीर्वा ऋघायतः ओजसा अभि वष्टि (śimīrvā ṛghāyataḥ ojasā abhi vaṣṭi)—The word शिमी (śimī) is read by Yāska among the names of action (Ni. 3-2), and it is also said शिमीति कर्मनाम, शमयतेर्वा शक्नोतेर्वा (śimīti karmanāma, śamayatervā śaknotervā) (Ni. 5-12). Sāyaṇa explains this passage as ब्रह्मणस्पतेः परिचरणात्मना कर्मणा युक्तो यजमानः हिंसतः शत्रुन् बलेन हंतुमभितः कामयते (brahmaṇaspateḥ paricaraṇātmanā karmaṇā yukto yajamānaḥ hiṃsataḥ śatrun balena haṃtumabhitaḥ kāmayate): the sacrificer who serves and worships Brahmaṇaspati desires to destroy with his strength those who harm him. Three similes are stated here. First, सिंधुः क्षोदः न (siṃdhuḥ kṣodaḥ na)—स्यंदनशीला नदी क्षुद्यमानं कूलं यथा भिनत्ति (syaṃdanaśīlā nadī kṣudyamānaṃ kūlaṃ yathā bhinatti): as a flowing river breaks and splits its bank. Second, वृषेव वध्रीन् (vṛṣeva vadhrīn)—वध्रयो निष्पिष्टमुष्का निर्वीर्या बलीवर्दाः र्तान् यथा सेचनसमर्थः सवीयः वृषभो अभिभवति (vadhrayo niṣpiṣṭamuṣkā nirvīryā balīvardāḥ rtān yathā secanasamarthaḥ savīyaḥ vṛṣabho abhibhavati) [the supplied text prints र्तान् (rtān) and सवीयः (savīyaḥ) thus]: as bulls of abundant strength gore and throw down feeble old oxen whose seed is crushed. Third, अग्नेरिव प्रसितिः (agneriva prasitiḥ)—यथा अग्निर्ज्वालाप्रतिहतप्रसरा वारयितुं निवर्तयितुं वा नैव शक्यते (yathā agnirjvālāpratihataprasarā vārayituṃ nivartayituṃ vā naiva śakyate): as the flame of a forest fire can neither be checked nor turned back; thus it is described. By this it is described that the power of the sacrificer who has won Brahmaṇaspati's favour is most wonderful in overcoming his enemies.

The sacrificer whom Brahmaṇaspati makes his friend: for him the rains born of the heavenly world pour down without hindrance. Together with his attendants he obtains wealth in the form of cattle before other sacrificers. Possessing a strength that others cannot defeat, he destroys his enemies by his valour.

Printed English translation

For him, the unobstructed rains of heaven descend : first among the devout, he acquires (wealth) in cattle: of irresistible vigour, he destroys his enemies by his strength, whom Brahmanaspati makes his associate.

For the sacrificers who please Brahmaṇaspati with oblations and the like, दिव्याः असश्चतः अर्षंति (divyāḥ asaścataḥ arṣaṃti): the waters produced from the excellent rain stored in the atmosphere will [?] (the word as supplied is मोरकुवुवु (mòrakuvuvu)) as they wish. And सत्वभिः प्रथमः:—परिचारकैः सहितः अन्येभ्यः यजमानेभ्यः पूर्वभावी गोषु गच्चति (satvabhiḥ prathamaḥ:—paricārakaiḥ sahitaḥ anyebhyaḥ yajamānebhyaḥ pūrvabhāvī goṣu gaccati) [sic, गच्चति (gaccati) as supplied]: the sacrificer, accompanied by attendants, obtains wealth such as cattle. Further, अनिभृष्टतविषिः ओजसा बलेन हंति परैरबादिता तविषी यस्य तादृशः बलेन शत्रुहंति (anibhṛṣṭataviṣiḥ ojasā balena haṃti parairabāditā taviṣī yasya tādṛśaḥ balena śatruhaṃti): it is explained that the sacrificer who has earned Brahmaṇaspati's favour, possessing abundant strength that others cannot assail ("ಮತು" as supplied) and that suffices to subdue enemies, becomes able to subdue his enemies by it.

The word दिव्य (divya) is interpreted by Yāska as "born in heaven" दिविज (divija) (Ni. 7-18). The word तविषी (taviṣī) is stated among the names of strength (Ni. 3-9).

The word ओजः (ojaḥ) is stated both among the names of strength (Ni. 3-9) and among the names of water (Ni. 2-24), and is explained ओज ओजतेर्वा उज्जतेर्वा (oja ojatervā ujjatervā) (Ni. 6-8).

Gist: for that sacrificer all the flowing rivers stream; many unbroken comforts (or houses) are held for him; rich in wealth and in the gods' favour he prospers.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

yaṃyam—whichever sacrificer; brahmaṇaspatiḥ—Brahmaṇaspati; yujam—as a friend; kṛṇute—makes; tasmā it—for him alone; viśve sindhavaḥ—all the rivers; dhunayanta—flow; acchidrā—without break, everlasting; purūṇi—and abundant; śarma—comforts (or houses); dadhire—are held (for him); saḥ—that sacrificer; subhagaḥ—possessing excellent wealth; devānām—given by the gods; summe—while living in happiness; vidhate—enjoys increase.

The sacrificer whom Brahmaṇaspati makes his friend: for his sake all the rivers flow. Comforts (houses) that are unbroken, everlasting and abundant are held for him alone. That sacrificer, possessing excellent wealth and living in the happiness given by the gods, enjoys increase. (The supplied text has "ಅವನಿಗೋ, / ಸ್ಕರವೇ" at the line break, for अवनिगोस्करवे (avanigoskarave) "for his sake".)

Printed English translation

Verily, for him all rivers flow : him do uninterrupted and numerous pleasures await : blessed with the felicity of the Gods he ever prospers, whom Brahmanaspati makes his associate.

विश्वे सिंधवः तस्मा इत् धुनयंत (viśve siṃdhavaḥ tasmā it dhunayaṃta)—सर्वाः स्यंदनशीला नद्यः एतदभीष्टफलसिद्ध्यर्थं प्रवहंति (sarvāḥ syaṃdanaśīlā nadyaḥ etadabhīṣṭaphalasiddhyarthaṃ pravahaṃti): it is stated, as an extraordinary glory of Brahmaṇaspati, that all the rivers full of currents flow for the sacrificers who have pleased him, only so as to grant the desired objects.

अच्छिद्राणि पुरूणि शर्म दधिरे (acchidrāṇi purūṇi śarma dadhire)—अच्छिद्राणि (acchidrāṇi) means "without a break" (continuous, strung together without interruption). The word शर्म (śarma) is stated to mean both "house" and "comfort" (Ni. 3-13, as supplied, "ಸ."). It is described that the sacrificers obtain abundant comfort not mixed with sorrow and the like in the middle period, and छिद्ररहितानि बहूनि सदनानि (chidrarahitāni bahūni sadanāni), many firm houses.

Further, the sacrificer who has earned Brahmaṇaspati's favour—सुभगः देवानां सुम्मे विधते (subhagaḥ devānāṃ summe vidhate)—शोभनधनः देवैः प्रत्ते सुखे वर्तमानः वर्धते (śobhanadhanaḥ devaiḥ prattè sukhe vartamānaḥ vardhate) [sic, प्रत्ते (prattè) as supplied]: having excellent wealth and living in the excellent happiness granted by the gods, he grows; so it is described. The word सुम्म (summa) is read among the names of happiness (Ni. 3-13, as supplied, "ఽ.").

Sūkta 26 (Maṇḍala 2)

The twenty-sixth sūkta.

Sāyaṇa's introduction to the sūkta

> ऋजुरिति चतुर्यचं चतुर्थं सूक्तं गृत्समदस्यार्षं जागतं ब्राह्मणस्पत्यं । तथा चानुक्रांतं । ऋजुश्चतुष्कमिति । गतो विनियोगः ॥

Gist: ṛjuḥ is the fourth sūkta of Anuvāka 3, of four ṛks, by Gṛtsamada, in jagatī metre, with Brahmaṇaspati as deity; the application was stated before.

Anuvāda (Kannada). The sūkta ṛjur is the fourth sūkta of the third anuvāka. It has four ṛks. The seer of this sūkta is Gṛtsamada; the deity is Brahmaṇaspati; the metre is jagatī. In the Anukramaṇikā it is said: ऋजुश्चतुष्कमिति (ṛjuścatuṣkamiti). The application (viniyoga) has been stated before, that is, it is as in the preceding sūkta.

Sūkta—26

Gist: the upright praiser of Brahmaṇaspati may slay hostile enemies; wishing for the god he overcomes the godless man; he overcomes foes hard to overcome in battles; the sacrificer enjoys the enjoyment of the non-sacrificer.

ṛjur it—the very one of upright mind; śaṃsaḥ—the praiser (of Brahmaṇaspati); vanuṣyataḥ—the harming enemies; vanavat—may he destroy; devayan nit—wishing the favour of the god Brahmaṇaspati; adevayantam—the man without devotion to the gods; abhyasat—may he overcome; suprāvīr it—satisfying (Brahmaṇaspati) with worship; pṛtsu—in battles (the supplied text breaks off here, at संग्राम (saṃgrāma))

(Pratipadārtha of Ṛk 1 continued from p. 6o.) gaḷalli—in the (battles); dustaram—(printed दुस्तरं (dustaraṃ)) enemies who cannot be defeated by others; vanavat—may he destroy; yajyet—(as printed; the Saṃhitā has yajvā it) worshipping (Brahmaṇaspati) with oblation; ayajyoḥ—of the man without sacrifice; bhojanam—the wealth that is a means of enjoyment; vi bhajāti—may he obtain fully.

May the one who praises Brahmaṇaspati with an upright mind destroy the harming enemies. Wishing the favour of Brahmaṇaspati, the divine one, may he overcome men who have no devotion to the gods. Satisfying Brahmaṇaspati with worship, may he destroy in battles the enemy who cannot be overcome by others. Worshipping Brahmaṇaspati with oblation, may he obtain fully the wealth, the means of enjoyment, of the man without sacrifice.

Printed English translation

May the sincere praiser (of Brahmanaspati) verily overcome (his) enemies; may the worshipper of the gods overcome him assuredly who does not reverence them: may the propitiator (of Brahmanaspati) overcome him who is difficult to be overcome in battles: may he who offers sacrifice appropriate the food of him who does not sacrifice

In this ṛk the word it is read in the words ṛjur it, devayan nit, suprāvīr it and yajvet [sic, as printed यज्वेत् (yajvet)]. For this word it, Yāska has cited, as "cid it is of many senses" (चिदित्येषोऽनेककर्मा (cidityeṣo 'nekakarmā), Ni. 1-4), the use of (cit) in many kinds of meanings. Here it is explained that the word is used in the sense of emphasis (avadhāraṇa) in all four places.

For the first word, ṛjur it, the explanation is आर्जुवयुक्त एव । यद्वा यंजति प्रसाधनकर्मा । स्तोत्राणां प्रसाधक एव (ārjuvayukta eva | yadvā yaṃjati prasādhanakarmā | stotrāṇāṃ prasādhaka eva) [the supplied text has ಯಂಜತಿ where Sāyaṇa's text of p. 6o has the root muñj; not changed]: the sacrificer who worships Brahmaṇaspati is one who is endowed with a straight path, or one who wins (him) over with praises; so the meaning is described.

देवयन्नित्-दानादिगुणयुक्तं ब्रह्मणस्पतिं आत्मन इच्छन्नेन (devayannit-dānādiguṇayuktaṃ brahmaṇaspatiṃ ātmana icchannena) [as supplied; apparently icchanneva]: the sacrificer is one who desires as his lord Brahmaṇaspati, who possesses the qualities of granting desired ends to those who worship him with praises and so on; so the meaning is explained.

p. 62

Running head: Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya-sahitā, Maṇḍala 2, Adhyāya 3, Sūkta 26, p. 62.

सुप्रावीत्—सुष्ठु प्रकर्षेण ब्रह्मणस्पतेस्तर्पयित्यैव (suprāvīt—suṣṭu prakarṣeṇa brahmaṇaspatestarpayityaiva) [as supplied]: the sacrificer's quality is described as one who satisfies Brahmaṇaspati exceedingly.

यजेत्—ब्रह्मणस्पतिं हविषा इष्टवानेव (yajet—brahmaṇaspatiṃ haviṣā iṣṭavāneva): the sacrificer is one who delights Brahmaṇaspati in sacrifices with oblations. The qualities of the sacrificer having been described with these four words, it is further explained that the sacrificer rejects अदेवयंतं (adevayaṃtaṃ), those who do not worship Brahmaṇaspati, and the harming enemies, who lack these qualities; and that अयज्ञनः भोगसाधनं विशेषेण भजते (ayajjanaḥ bhogasādhanaṃ viśeṣeṇa bhajate) [as supplied], he obtains the means of comfort of one who does not perform sacrifice.

O sacrificer, who in a special way urge on the praise, offer worship to Brahmaṇaspati. Set out facing the battle to defeat the enemies who advance swiftly, wishing only harm to you in their minds. In the battle that destroys Vṛtra and the others, make a mind that is firmly established and brings welfare. In the manner by which you become possessed of excellent wealth, prepare for Brahmaṇaspati the cooked offerings, purodāśa and the like. We also, facing it, solicit the protection of Brahmaṇaspati. (The supplied text has "ಪ್ರಾರ್ಥಿಸುತ್ತೇನೆ", "I solicit", in the singular; and "ಮನ್ನುಗ್ಗಿ" for ಮುನ್ನುಗ್ಗಿ.)

Printed English translation

Offer worship, O man, (to Brahmanaspati): proceed resolutely against those who are meditating (hostility): keep your mind firm in contending against foes: offer oblations whereby you may be prosperous: we also solicit the protection of Brahmanaspathi.

The manner in which the seer, the seer of the mantra, instructs his own men, those dear to him, is stated in this mantra.

vīra yajasva—here the word vīra is explained as स्तुतीनां प्रेरक सखे (stutīnāṃ preraka sakhe), "friend who urges on the praises" (the supplied Kannada has "ಪರಿಸುವ", apparently for prerisuva, "urging"); and the injunction is expressed that Brahmaṇaspati must be worshipped with praise.

मनायतः विहि—मन इव शीघ्रं प्रवर्तमानान्, हिंसका. अभिमन्यमानान् शत्रु प्रति युद्धार्थं गच्छ (manāyataḥ vihi—mana iva śīghraṃ pravartamānān, hiṃsakā. abhimanyamānān śatru prati yuddhārthaṃ gaccha) [as supplied]: with a swiftness abundant like the speed of the mind, rush forward... (the supplied text breaks off here, at ಮುನ್ನುಗ್ಗಿ).

(Special Topics of Ṛk 2 continued from p. 63.) ...forward, coming and doing violence, or against enemies who are full of arrogance: so it is said.

vṛtratūrye bhadraṃ manaḥ kṛṇuṣṭa—Sāyaṇa explains the word vṛtra in this sentence as used in the sense of enemies who envelop and do harm. Yāska has explained the various meanings of the word vṛtra (Ni. 2-16), and the word vṛtratūrya he has read among the names of battle (Ni. 3-9). Here it is stated, as the view of the seer of the mantra, that a mind endowed with courage should be employed against the enemies who practise violence, and that "by the favour of Brahmaṇaspati victory will be yours alone" (ब्रह्मणस्पतेरनुग्रहात्तवैव जयो भविष्यति (brahmaṇaspateranugrahāttavaiva jayo bhaviṣyati)).

Gist: the sacrificer who serves Brahmaṇaspati, father of the gods, with oblations obtains food and wealth through all people, his kin, sons and attendants.

यः (yaḥ)—the sacrificer who; श्रद्धामनाः (śraddhāmanāḥ)—having a mind full of faith; देवानां (devānāṃ)—of the gods; पितरं (pitaraṃ)—the protector; ब्रह्मणस्पतिं (brahmaṇaspatiṃ)—Brahmaṇaspati; हविषा (haviṣā)—with cooked offerings, caru, purodāśa and the like; आ विवासति (ā vivāsati)—serves and worships; स इत् (sa it)—that sacrificer alone; (as his own kin) जन्मना जनेन (janmanā janena)—with all the people who have come into being; वाजं (vājaṃ)—food; भरते (bharate)—obtains; सः (saḥ)—he alone; विशा (viśā)—with his subjects (obtains food); सः (saḥ)—he alone; पुत्रैः (putraiḥ)—with his sons (obtains food); नृभिः (nṛbhiḥ)—with men who are his attendants; धना (dhanā)—(obtains) riches.

The sacrificer who, with a mind full of faith, attends and worships Brahmaṇaspati, the protector of the gods, with caru, purodāśa and the like, that sacrificer alone obtains food together with all those who have come into being as his kin, together with his subjects and with his sons. That sacrificer alone obtains riches together with the men who are his attendants. (The supplied text has "ಚರುಪುರೋಡಾರಾದಿಗಳಿಂದ" for ಚರುಪುರೋಡಾಶಾದಿಗಳಿಂದ, and "ನರದೊಡನೆ", apparently for ನರರೊಡನೆ; left as supplied.)

Printed English translation

He who with a believing mind worships Brahmanaspati, the father of the gods, with oblations. he verily receives food, together with his sons, his kindred. his descendants. his people, and (obtains) riches together with (all) men.

ब्रह्मणस्पतिमिष्टवतो यजमानस्य जनाः सर्वतो अन्नधनयोः साधकाः भवंति (brahmaṇaspatimiṣṭavato yajamānasya janāḥ sarvato annadhanayoḥ sādhakāḥ bhavaṃti): all people, in many ways, give food and wealth and help the sacrificer who performs a sacrifice directed to the god Brahmaṇaspati. This meaning is explained in this Ṛk by four sentences

श्रद्धामनाः हविषा आ विवासति स इत् वाजं भरते (śraddhāmanāḥ haviṣā ā vivāsati sa it vājaṃ bharate): here the word विवासति (vivāsati) Yāska (Ni. 3-13-11-23, as printed) has read among the words meaning service. It is stated that the sacrificer who, full of devotion, has satisfied Brahmaṇaspati with oblations obtains food and nourishes all others.

In the same way, आत्मीयेन बंधुजनेन, आत्मीयैरपत्यैः नेतृभिरन्यैः परिचारकैः वाजं भरते संपादयति वा (ātmīyena baṃdhujanena, ātmīyairapatyaiḥ netṛbhiranyaiḥ paricārakaiḥ vājaṃ bharate saṃpādayati vā): it is explained that for a sacrificer of this kind his kinsfolk, his sons, and the servants who attend him also obtain food and wealth and are nourished by him. Gist: Brahmaṇaspati leads the worshipper by a straight path to his reward, protects him from sin, the harmful foe and poverty, and as a great and wonderful one does him many favours.

यः (yaḥ)—the sacrificer who; अस्मै (asmai)—with this Brahmaṇaspati as the object; धृतवद्भिः (dhṛtavadbhiḥ)—endowed with ghee; हव्यैः (havyaiḥ)—with oblations; अविधत् (avidhat)—worships; तं (taṃ)—that sacrificer; ब्रह्मणस्पतिः (brahmaṇaspatiḥ)—Brahmaṇaspati; प्राचा (prācā)—by a most straight path; प्र नयति (pra nayati)—leads towards the fruit; (and) ईं (īṃ)—this sacrificer; अंहसः (aṃhasaḥ)—from sin; उरुष्यति (uruṣyati)—protects; रिषः (riṣaḥ)—from the harmful enemy; रक्षति (rakṣati)—protects; अंहोश्चित् (aṃhościt)—from the sin in the form of poverty also (protects); अस्मै (asmai)—to this same sacrificer; अद्भुतः (adbhutaḥ)—the great-souled Brahmaṇaspati; उरुचक्रिः (urucakriḥ)—becomes also abundantly a benefactor.

The sacrificer who worships Brahmaṇaspati with oblations endowed with ghee, that sacrificer Brahmaṇaspati leads along a most straight path towards the fruit. And he protects this sacrificer from sin, from the harmful enemy and from poverty. To this same sacrificer the great-souled Brahmaṇaspati becomes abundantly a benefactor.

Printed English translation

Brahmanaspathi leads by a straight path (to his reward), the worshipper who propitiates him with oblations of butter : he guards him against sin; he protects him from foes and from distresss [sic] ; and wonderful (in might), confers upon him many (favours)- leads the sacrificer along the right path and makes him a sharer of excellent fruit. Here the word प्राचा (prācā) is explained as प्राचीनेन (prācīnena): it is made clear that the meaning is a straight path followed by the forefathers.

ईं अंहसः उरुष्यति—एनं पापात् रक्षति (īṃ aṃhasaḥ uruṣyati—enaṃ pāpāt rakṣati): for the particle ईं (īṃ) the meaning "this sacrificer" is given here. Yāska has explained पादपूरणास्ते अनर्थकाः कमीमिद्विति (pādapūraṇāste anarthakāḥ kamīmidviti) (Ni. 1-9): the particles कं, ईं, इत्, उ (kaṃ, īṃ, it, u) are employed only to fill out a sentence and convey no meaning of their own. Having commented उरुष्यती रक्षाकर्मा इति यास्कः (uruṣyatī rakṣākarmā iti yāskaḥ), it is described that Brahmaṇaspati protects the sacrificer from sins.

For the word अंहोश्चित् (aṃhościt), two meanings are given: अवृत्तेर्दारिद्र्यात् यद्वा अगत्य हंतुरपि (avṛtterdāridryāt yadvā agatya haṃturapi), that is, from poverty (want of livelihood), or from one who comes near and kills; it is stated that Brahmaṇaspati protects from these.

अस्मै अद्भुतः—आचार्यभूतः महान् (asmai adbhutaḥ—ācāryabhūtaḥ mahān): the word अद्भुत (adbhuta) is stated among the names of "great" (Ni. 3-13). It is described that Brahmaṇaspati, being a teacher and a revered one to the sacrificer, performs abundant service for him.

Sūkta 27 (Maṇḍala 2)

The twenty-seventh sūkta.

Sāyaṇa's introduction to the sūkta

> इमा गिर इति सप्तदशर्चं पंचमं सूक्तं गृत्समदपुत्रस्य कूर्मस्यार्षं गृत्समदस्यैव वा त्रैष्टुभमादित्यदेवताकं । तथा चानुक्रांतं । इमा गिरस्त्रूना कूर्मो गार्त्समदो हि वादित्यमिति ॥ सूक्तविनियोगो लैंगिकः । आदित्यदेवताके पशौ पुरोडाशस्येमा गिर इत्येषानुवाक्या । अग्नीषोमाविति खंडे सूत्रितं । इमा गिर आदित्येभ्यो धृतसूस्त आदित्यास उरवो गभीराः । आ–३–८ । इति ॥

Gist: imā giraḥ is the fifth sūkta of Anuvāka 3, of seventeen ṛks, by Kūrma son of Gṛtsamada (or Gṛtsamada himself), in triṣṭubh metre, with the Ādityas as deity; its application is by indication (laiṅgika), the first ṛk being the anuvākyā for the oblation cake in an animal sacrifice to the Ādityas.

Anuvāda (Kannada). The sūkta imā giraḥ is the fifth sūkta of the third anuvāka. It has seventeen ṛks. The seer of this sūkta is Kūrma, son of Gṛtsamada, or it is said that Gṛtsamada himself is the seer. The Ādityas are the deity; the metre is triṣṭubh. In the Anukramaṇikā it is said: इमा गिरस्त्रूना कूर्मो गार्त्समदो हि वादित्यमिति (imā girastrūnā kūrmo gārtsamado hi vādityamiti) [as supplied]. The application of the sūkta is laiṅgika (by indication). In an animal sacrifice related to the Ādityas, the first ṛk of this sūkta, imā giraḥ, is to be recited as the anuvākyā mantra while the oblation cake is offered; this is set out by the sūtra imā gira ādityebhyo ghṛtasūsta ādityāsa uravo gabhīrāḥ in the section Agnīṣomau of the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra (Ā. 3-8).

Gist: To the Ādityas, sons of Aditi, I offer these ghee-flowing praises with the ladle of speech; may Mitra, Aryaman, Bhaga, Varuṇa, Dakṣa and Aṃśa each hear them.

आदित्येभ्यः (ādityebhyaḥ)—to the sons of Aditi; राजभ्यः (rājabhyaḥ)—to the shining ones, the deities Mitra and the rest, addressing them; धृतस्नूः (dhṛtasnūḥ)—that cause ghee to flow; इमा गिरः (imā giraḥ)—these words in the form of praise; सनात् (sanāt)—always; जुह्वा (juhvā)—by means of the ladle (juhū) that is the organ of speech; जुहोमि (juhomi)—I offer [the supplied text has "ಆರ್ಷಜುಹ್ವೇನೆ"]; नः (naḥ)—these praise-words of ours; मित्रः (mitraḥ)—Mitra; अर्यमा (aryamā)—Aryaman; भगः (bhagaḥ)—Bhaga; तुविजातः (tuvijātaḥ)—(for the good of the world) born in many places; वरुणः (varuṇaḥ)—Varuṇa; दक्षः (dakṣaḥ)—Dakṣa; अंशः (aṃśaḥ)—Aṃśa; शृणोतु (śṛṇotu)—let hear.

To the sons of Aditi, the shining Mitra and the other deities, I offer always these praise-words, which cause ghee to flow, by means of the ladle that is the organ of speech. May Mitra, Aryaman, Bhaga, Varuṇa who is born in many places for the good of the world, Dakṣa and Aṃśa hear these praise-words of ours.

Printed English translation

I present cotinually [sic], with the ladle (of speech), these oblation-droping [sic] hymns to the royal Adityas: May Mitra, Aryaman, Bhaga, the multipresent Varuna, the powerful Ansha, hear us.

आदित्येभ्यः राजभ्यः धृतस्नूः गिरः जुह्वा जुहोमि—आदितिपुत्रेभ्यः राजमानेभ्य ईश्वरेभ्यो वा मित्रादिभ्यः धृतं क्षरंतीः स्तुतिलक्षणाः वाचः वागिंद्रियेण करोमि (ādityebhyaḥ rājabhyaḥ dhṛtasnūḥ giraḥ juhvā juhomi—ādītiputrebhyaḥ rājamānebhya īśvarebhyo vā mitrādibhyaḥ dhṛtaṃ kṣaraṃtīḥ stutilakṣaṇāḥ vācaḥ vāgiṃdriyeṇa karomi): one kind of meaning has been described thus: to the sons of Goddess Aditi, who shine with brilliance or are lords of all, Mitra and the rest, I offer, with the organ of speech, praises that pour nectar (ghee), as one makes an oblation with the ladle, the instrument of sacrifice.

Secondly: यद्वा जुहूस्थानीयेन धृतं क्षरंति वाग्रूपाणि हवींषि आदित्यानुद्दिश्य त्यजामि (yadvā juhūsthānīyena dhṛtaṃ kṣaraṃti vāgrūpāṇi havīṃṣi ādityānuddiśya tyajāmi): addressing the Ādityas, with the [supplied text breaks off here, at the end of the page, in the words "ಜೂಹೂ ಎಂಬ ಹೋಮ"] ladle called juhū, the sacrificial instrument of oblation

p. 71

Running head: Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Varga 6, p. 71.

(Special Topics of Ṛk 1, continued) ...the ladle, I offer oblations in the form of speech that pour ghee, through the organ of speech, which is like a vessel for making the oblation. This is how it is explained. The point that the mantras offer ghee and other substances abundantly is supported by the sentence of the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, यदृचोऽधीते पयसः कुल्या अस्य (yadṛco 'dhīte payasaḥ kulyā asya) (Tai. Brā. 2-10).

जुह्वा (juhvā)—वागिंद्रियेण (vāgiṃdriyeṇa)—वाज्ञामैतत् (vājñāmaitat) [sic, as supplied]: such is also Sāyaṇa's explanation. Yāska has read the word जिह्वा (jihvā) among the names of speech (Si. 2-23).

नः शृणोतु (naḥ śṛṇotu)—for this sentence Sāyaṇa explains अस्मदीयाः ताः गिरः मित्रादयः प्रत्येकं शृणोतु (asmadīyāḥ tāḥ giraḥ mitrādayaḥ pratyekaṃ śṛṇotu): may Mitra and the other Ādityas, each separately, all hear these our words of praise that we, the praisers, offer. He then quotes the sentence of the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka, "अष्टौ पुत्रासो अदितेः (aṣṭau putrāso aditeḥ) ... मित्रश्च वरुणश्च धाताचार्यमाच अंशुश्च भगश्च इंद्रश्च विवस्वांश्चेत्येते (mitraśca varuṇaśca dhātācāryamāca aṃśuśca bhagaśca iṃdraśca vivasvāṃścetyete)" (Tai. Ā. 1-13-3), which says that the goddess Aditi has eight sons: Mitra, Varuṇa, Dhātā, Aryamā, Aṃśu, Bhaga, Indra and Vivasvān.

अरी गच्छति नियच्छतीति आर्यमा (arī gacchati niyacchatīti āryamā)—Sāyaṇa states the explanation of the word Aryamā as one who restrains enemies. Yāska explains: अर्यमादित्यो अरीन्नियच्छति (aryamādityo arīnniyacchati) (Si. 11-23).

भगः भजनीयो देवः (bhagaḥ bhajanīyo devaḥ): Sāyaṇa's explanation is "the god who is worthy to be served". Yāska comments on the word Bhaga as भगो भजतेः (bhago bhajateḥ) (Ni. 1-7); he also read it among the names of wealth (Ni. 3-9) and explained the meaning as भगस्य भागधेयस्य धर्मस्य (bhagasya bhāgadheyasya dharmasya) (Ni. 9-31).

दक्षः अंशः (dakṣaḥ aṃśaḥ)—समर्थः (samarthaḥ): the word Dakṣa is given the meaning "able, possessed of power". It is explained as an epithet of the Āditya famed by the name Aṃśa. Thus these Mitra, Aryamā Varuṇa and Aṃśa are invoked to hear separately the hymns recited by us, the priests, and to show favour.

Gist: This Ṛk is the yājyā for the vapā (omentum) offering in the animal sacrifice mentioned above; may Mitra and the other Ādityas, pure and blameless, enjoy my praise today.

आदित्यासः—the sons of Aditi; शुचयः—the shining ones; धारपूता—pure like a stream of water; अवृजिना—those who forsake (none of their devotees) but favour all; अनवद्या—free from sin; अरिष्टाः [sic: the Saṃhitā has अरिस्वाः]—not harmed by anyone; सक्रतवः—possessed of equal (rites or) wisdom; मित्रः—Mitra; अर्यमा—Aryaman; वरुणः—Varuṇa also; मे—recited by me; इमं स्तोमं—this praise; अद्य—at this time of sacrifice; जुषंत—let them enjoy.

May the deities Mitra, Aryaman and Varuṇa—sons of Aditi, shining, pure like a stream of water, not forsaking any devotee but favouring all, free from sin, harmed by none, and possessed of equal rites and wisdom—enjoy at this time of sacrifice this praise recited by me. (May they hear it and be pleased.)

Printed English translation

May those of equal exploits, Mitra, Aryaman, Varuna, be pleased to-day by this my praise; they who are Adityas, luminous, purified by showers, who abandon none (that worship them), who are irreproachable, unassailable.

In the animal sacrifice spoken of earlier, this Ṛk, इमं स्तोमं (imaṃ stomaṃ), is to be recited as the yājyā mantra while the vapā oblation is made; this is supported by the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra, in the sūtra इमं स्तोमं सक्रतवो मे अद्य तिस्रो भूमीर्धारयन् त्रीरुत द्यून् (imaṃ stomaṃ sakratavo me adya tisro bhūmīrdhārayan trīruta dyūn) (Ā. 3-8).

सक्रतवः (sakratavaḥ)—समानकर्माणः समानप्रज्ञा वा मित्रादयः (samānakarmāṇaḥ samānaprajñā vā mitrādayaḥ): those having work of one kind, and possessed of knowledge of one manner—Mitra and the others—are described as hearing the praises of us, the priests, and being pleased.

These Ādityas are described as दीप्यमानाः (dīpyamānāḥ), brilliant; उदकधाराभिरिव पूताः (udakadhārābhiriva pūtāḥ), holy like streams of water; अवर्जिताः (avarjitāraḥ), bestowing favour on all; गर्ह्येन पापेन रहिताः (garhyena pāpena rahitāḥ), free from censured sins; and केनाप्यहिंसिताः (kenāpyahiṃsitāḥ), such that no one else can harm them. Thus their greatness has been made clear.

Gist: the Ādityas, dwelling within beings as inspirers, see their sins and merits; even far-off things are near to these lords.

आदित्यासः (ādityāsaḥ): sons of Aditi; उरवः (uravaḥ): of great form; गभीराः (gabhīrāḥ): endowed with profundity; अदब्बासः (adabbāsaḥ) [as supplied]: not harmed by enemies; दिप्पंतः (dippaṃtaḥ) [as supplied]: wishing the destruction of enemies; भूर्रक्षाः (bhūrrakṣāḥ) [as supplied]: having many eyes or abundant radiance; ते (te): those Ādityas; अंतः (aṃtaḥ): dwelling within the heart (of beings); वृजिना (vṛjinā): (men's) sins; उत (uta): and; साधु (sādhu): meritorious acts; पश्यंति (paśyaṃti): know; परमा चित् (paramā cit): even when extremely far off; सर्वं (sarvaṃ): all things; राजभ्यः (rājabhyaḥ): to the lords, the Ādityas; अंति (aṃti): are as if very near.

Those Ādityas, sons of Aditi, of great form, profound, unharmed by enemies, wishing the destruction of enemies, possessed of abundant radiance, dwelling within the hearts of beings, know the sins of men and also their meritorious acts. Even all things that are extremely far off remain as if very near to those Ādityas, the lords.

p. 75

Printed English translation

Those Adityas, mighty, profound, unsubdued, subduing, many eyed behold the innermost (thoughts of men), whether wicked or virtuous, whether far from or nigh to those royal (deities).

In the same animal sacrifice spoken of earlier, this Ṛk "ta ādityāsa" is to be used as the anuvākyā mantra when the oblation is offered; this is indicated in the sūtra cited earlier.

भूर्यक्षाः (bhūryakṣāḥ): बहूनि चक्षूंषि येषां ते बहुतेजसो वा (bahūni cakṣūṃṣi yeṣāṃ te bahutejaso vā). The Ādityas are described as seeing everything in many ways, as having many eyes, or as having abundant radiance.

अंतः (aṃtaḥ)—मध्ये प्राणिनां हृदि प्रेरकतया वर्तमानाः (madhyè prāṇināṃ hṛdi prerakatayā vartamānāḥ): dwelling in the hearts of beings in accordance with the acts they perform, and inspiring them; thus the Ādityas' quality of being inner controllers (antaryāmin) is described.

साधु पश्यंति (sādhu paśyaṃti)—प्राणिभिः कृतानि च पुण्यानि जानंति (prāṇibhiḥ kṛtāni ca puṇyāni jānaṃti): it is explained that they know all the merit that accords with the acts performed by the several beings.

परमा चित् सर्वं राजभ्यः अंति (paramā cit sarvaṃ rājabhyaḥ aṃti)—दूरदेशस्थितान्यपि सर्वाणि दृश्यमानानि ईश्वराणां आदित्यानां समीपे वर्तते (dūradeśasthitānyapi sarvāṇi dṛśyamānāni īśvarāṇāṃ ādityānāṃ samīpe vartate): all things situated in a distant place appear to the Ādityas, the lords of all, as if near; thus the keenness of their sight and the excellence of their knowledge are described.

Gist: in the Agnicayana dīkṣaṇīyā, "dhārayanta" etc. are two yājyā-anuvākyā verses of the Āditya offering; the Ādityas sustain the moving and the fixed, guard the world, and keep the waters of the cloud.

जगत् (jagat): moving beings; स्थाः (sthāḥ): fixed things; धारयंतः (dhārayaṃtaḥ): establishing and upholding; देवाः (devāḥ): possessed of the qualities of generosity etc.; विश्वस्य भुवनस्य (viśvasya bhuvanasya): of the whole world; गोपाः (gopāḥ): protectors; दीर्घधियः (dīrghadhiyaḥ): of far-reaching understanding; असुरं (asuraṃ) [as supplied]: the water residing in the clouds; रक्षमाणाः (rakṣamāṇāḥ): collecting and guarding it in due season; ऋतावानः (ṛtāvānaḥ): truthful; ऋणानि (ṛṇāni): the debts (which the praisers owe to others); चयमानाः (cayamānāḥ): discharging; आदित्यासः (ādityāsaḥ): the Ādityas (may favour us).

The Ādityas, who establish and uphold the moving beings and the fixed things, who are possessed of generosity and other qualities, protectors of the whole world, of far-reaching understanding, guarding the water residing in the clouds [text of the page ends here; the sentence continues in the next window]

p. 77

(Bhāvārtha of Ṛk 4, continued) ...who collect it and guard it at the proper time, truthful, and discharging the debts that the praisers owe to others — may such Ādityas favour us.

Printed English translation

The divine Adityas are the upholders (of all things). moveable or immoveble [sic]; the protectors of the universe: the provident in acts; the collectors of rain; the possessors of veracity; the acquitters of our debts.

In the dīkṣaṇīyā rite when the Agnicayana is performed, in the Āditya offering, the Ṛk "dhārayanta ādityāsaḥ" धारयंत आदित्यासः (dhārayaṃta ādityāsaḥ) and the Ṛk following it are to be used as the yājyā and puro'nuvākyā mantras; and these Ṛks are also applied to the Āditya deities qualified as "bhuvadvat" and "bhuvanapati". This is concluded from the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra, in the section beginning "tathā ca dīkṣaṇīyāyām", by the sūtra "dhārayanta ādityāso jagatsthā iti dve ete eva bhuvadvadbhyo bhuvanapatibhyo vā" धारयंत आदित्यासो जगत्सा इति द्वे एते एव भुवद्वद्भ्यो भुवनपतिभ्यो वा (dhārayaṃta ādityāso jagatsā iti dve ete eva bhuvadvadbhyo bhuvanapatibhyo vā) (Āś. 4-2 as printed).

p. 78

(Special Topics of Ṛk 4, continued) प्रदेयानि अपगमयंतः (pradeyāni apagamayaṃtaḥ) — it is described that the priests who praise them will have the debts they owe to others discharged.

Gist: the Ādityas, sons of Aditi, are asked for the protection that brings happiness in time of fear from Rākṣasas etc.; under Aryaman's and Mitra-Varuṇa's guidance may I avoid sins as one avoids pits.

Ādityas: O Ādityas. Which protection of yours, when fear has come (from Rākṣasas etc.), removes that fear and produces happiness, that protection of yours — may I obtain it. Aryaman: O Aryaman. Mitra-Varuṇa: O Mitra and Varuṇa. When your excellent guidance exists, may I cross over sins [दुरिशानि (duriśāni) [?], as supplied] as one crosses a dangerous pit.

p. 79

O Ādityas, may we obtain that protection of yours which, even when fear has come from Rākṣasas and others, removes that fear and brings happiness. O Aryaman [अरम (arama) [?], as supplied] and Mitra-Varuṇa, under your excellent guidance may I cross over sins as one crosses a dangerous pit.

Printed English translation

May I be conscious, Adityas, of this your protection, the cause of happiness (and security) in danger; Aryaman. Mitra, and Varuna, May I, through your guidance, escape the sins which are like pitfalls (in my path).

In this Ṛk the sacrificer prays for two kinds of protection performed by the Ādityas. First, वः अस्य अवसः विद्यां लभेय (vaḥ asya avasaḥ vidyāṃ labheya): may the protection given by the Ādityas be knowledge-giving. And भये मयोभु—भये राक्षसादिभ्य आगते सति सुखस्य च भावयितृ (bhaye mayobhu—bhaye rākṣasādibhya āgate sati sukhasya ca bhāvayitṛ): when fear caused by Rākṣasas and the like has come upon the sacrificer, may the protection given by the Ādityas produce happiness. This is the second wish described.

Addressing Aryaman and Mitra-Varuṇa: युष्माकं प्रणीतौ श्वभ्रे दुरिशानि [?] परिवृज्यां—युष्माकं प्रकृष्णनयने सति स्थातुमयोग्यानि गर्तवंति स्कूलानीव पापानि परित्यजेयं (yuṣmākaṃ praṇītau śvabhre duriśāni [?] parivṛjyāṃ—yuṣmākaṃ prakṛṣṇanayane sati sthātumayogyāni gartavaṃti skūlānīva pāpāni parityajeyaṃ): the wish is expressed that, while these two protect the sacrificer, he may reach the state of getting rid of the abundant sins which bring misfortune, as one falls into big pits and has no chance to stand firm. A comparison of sins with deep pits is stated, and it is explained that protection from them is of the nature of release.

The word मयोभु (mayobhu) is used in the sense "producer of happiness" (सुखस्य भावयितृ (sukhasya bhāvayitṛ)), since Yāska has stated मयः (mayaḥ) among the words for happiness (Ni. 3-13).

Gist: the path of Aryaman, Mitra and Varuṇa is easy and free of thorns; the Ādityas are asked to lead us by it, to speak kindly to us and to grant undisturbed happiness.

Aryaman: O Aryaman. Mitra: O god Mitra. Varuṇa: O Varuṇa. Your path: easy to travel (सुगः), free of thorns (अनृक्षरः), and auspicious (साधुः). Pantha: as the path. Asti hi: it is well known to exist. Tena: by that same path (lead us). Ādityāḥ: O Ādityas. Naḥ: with us. Adhi vocata: speak lovingly. Naḥ: to us. Duṣparihantu: that which cannot be destroyed. Śamaṃ [?]: happiness. Yacchata: give.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Aryaman, Mitra and Varuṇa, it is well known that your path is easy to travel, free of thorns and auspicious. Lead us by that same path. O Ādityas, speak lovingly with us. Give us happiness that enemies cannot destroy.

p. 81

Printed English translation

Aryaman, Mitra, and Varuna, easy is the path (you show us), and free from thorns, and pleasant: therefore, Adityas, (lead us) by (it): speak to us favouably [sic], and grant us happiness difficult to be disturbed.

Addressing Aryaman, Mitra and Varuṇa, the wish is described that the sacrificer may enter upon a straight, thornless, pleasant path. अनृक्षरः साधुः पंथाः तेन (anṛkṣaraḥ sādhuḥ paṃthāḥ tena) — कंटकरहितः साधकः शोभनः मार्गः तेन शोभनं नयत (kaṃṭakarahitaḥ sādhakaḥ śobhanaḥ mārgaḥ tena śobhanaṃ nayata). The word अनृक्षरः is explained as ऋक्षरः कंटकः ऋच्छतेः (ṛkṣaraḥ kaṃṭakaḥ ṛcchateḥ) (Ni. 9-38); for this word the meaning is given as a path free from both thorns and fear.

आदित्याः नः अधिवोचत—अस्माकं पक्षपातेन वचनं कुरुत (ādityāḥ naḥ adhivocata—asmākaṃ pakṣapātena vacanaṃ kuruta): addressing the Ādityas, the wish is expressed that they speak to the sacrificers with confidence (affection). And दुष्परिहंतु शर्म यच्छत (duṣparihaṃtu śarma yacchata): the sacrificer's prayer is explained thus, that the Ādityas should bestow happiness that is always without break and does not meet destruction.

Gist: Aditi, whose sons are the shining Mitra and others, is asked to carry us across enemies' hatred; Aryaman to lead us by good paths; and we to attain the great happiness of Mitra and Varuṇa.

Rājaputrā: she whose sons are the shining Mitra and others. Aditi: the indivisible divine mother. Naḥ: us. Dveṣāṃsi: from the hatred of enemies. Ati pipartu: carry across (to a place free of hatred). Aryamā:

Aryaman also. Sugebhiḥ: by excellent, easily travelled paths (lead us). (Vayam: we also.) Puruvīrāḥ: accompanied by many heroic sons. Ariṣṭāḥ: unharmed by anyone. Mitrasya: belonging to Mitra. Varuṇasya: belonging to Varuṇa. Bṛhat: very great. Śarma: happiness. Upa syāma: may we attain.

May the divine mother, whose sons are the shining Mitra and other gods and who is indivisible, carry us across the hatred of enemies to a place free of such hatred. May Aryaman [अरमन (aramana) [?], as supplied] also lead us by excellent, easily travelled paths. May we too, accompanied by many heroic sons and unharmed by anyone, attain the great happiness belonging to Mitra and Varuṇa.

Printed English translation

May Aditi, the mother of royal sons, place us beyond the malice (of our enemies): may Aryaman lead us by easy paths, and may we, blessed with many descendants, and safe from harm, attain the great happiness of Mitra and Varuna.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

The abundant power of Aditi is described: the goddess Aditi has sons who shine with radiance. The word Aditi is stated by Yāska among the names of the earth (Ni. 2-5), of speech (Ni. 2-23), of cows (Ni. 3-9), and of heaven-and-earth (Ni. 3-22). And

p. 83

Aditi is explained as अदितिः देवमाता अदीना (aditiḥ devamātā adīnā) ("Aditi, the divine mother, the undiminished") (Ni. 4-23); and, citing the Ṛk आदितिर्दौरदितिरंतरिक्षं (āditirdauraditiraṃtarikṣaṃ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-89-10), it is described that Aditi's power is unbroken. The prayer is stated that this goddess may carry us, the sacrificers, beyond the demons (द्वेषांसि अति पिपर्तु (dveṣāṃsi ati pipartu)) and bring us to a country free of them, that is, make us dwell in regions where there is no affliction from rākṣasas.

By आर्यमा सुगेभिः (āryamā sugebhiḥ) the sacrificers pray for travel on a pleasant road, and for protection, from Aryaman. And by मित्रस्य वरुणस्य च बृहत् शर्म (mitrasya varuṇasya ca bṛhat śarma) it is wished that abundant happiness may come from Mitra and Varuṇa.

Gist: the three worlds are the earth, atmosphere and heaven (or, alternatively, the three higher worlds, or Agni, Vāyu and Sūrya); the Ādityas sustain them, have three rites in the sacrifice, and their great might through truth or sacrifice is most excellent.

तिस्रः भूमिाः (tisraḥ bhūmiāḥ): the three worlds beginning with the earth. धारयन् (dhārayan): (the Ādityas) have upheld. उत (uta): and. द्यून् (dyūn): the shining. त्रीन् (trīn): they have upheld also the three worlds beginning with Mahar. एषां (eṣāṃ): of these Ādityas. विदथे (vidathe): in the sacrifice, or, in the middle of the three worlds, occasioned by sacrifice. अंतः (aṃtaḥ): in the middle. त्रीणि व्रता (trīṇi vratā): three kinds of rites (accomplished through the three savanas) are well known (or: three kinds of rites, namely drinking up the water, holding it, and releasing it in the form of rain, are well known). आदित्याः (ādityāḥ): O Ādityas! वः (vaḥ): your. महित्वं (mahitvaṃ): greatness. ऋतेन (ṛtena): through truth or through sacrifice. महि (mahi): has grown in great form. अर्यमन् (aryaman): O Aryaman. वरुण (varuṇa): Varuṇa. मित्र (mitra): O Mitra. तत् (tat): that greatness of yours. चारु (cāru): is beautiful and the most excellent of all.

The Ādityas have upheld the three worlds beginning with the earth, and the three upper worlds beginning with Mahar. In the middle of the three worlds that belong to these Ādityas, three rites occasioned by sacrifice, that is, drinking up the water, holding it, and releasing it as rain, are well known. O Ādityas, your greatness [माहात्म (māhātma), as supplied] has grown great through truth. O Aryaman [अय्यमने (ayyamane), as supplied], Varuṇa, that greatness of yours is beautiful and the most excellent of all.

Printed English translation

They uphold the three worlds, the three heavens; and in their sacrifices three ceremonies (are comprised): by truth, Adityas, has your great might (been produced), such as is most excellent; Aryaman, Mitra, and Varuna.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In the matter stated before, it is explained in the Stotra already cited that this Ṛk तिस्रो भूमिाः (tisro bhūmiāḥ) is to be used as the yājyā mantra when the purodāśa oblation is offered. तिस्रो भूमिाः धारयन् (tisro bhūmiāḥ dhārayan): the meaning is explained thus: as in the mantra यो द्वितीयस्यां तृतीयस्यां पृथिव्यां (yo dvitīyasyāṃ tṛtīyasyāṃ pṛthivyāṃ) the word pṛthivī is said to mean the three worlds, so here too the word bhūmi is used in the sense of the three worlds.

p. 85

From this, भूम्यंतरिक्षस्वर्गस्थान् त्रीन् लोकान् आदित्याः वृष्टिप्रदानादिना धारयंति (bhūmyaṃtarikṣasvargasthān trīn lokān ādityāḥ vṛṣṭipradānādinā dhārayaṃti): the Ādityas uphold, that is, protect, the three worlds earth, atmosphere and heaven, and those who live in the three worlds, by granting rain, water and the like; this is how the meaning is described. And for the words द्यून् त्री९ (dyūn trī9) [as supplied] the meaning given with तत उपरितनान् महारादिर्का अपि (tata uparitanān mahārādirkā api) is: the three worlds beginning with Mahar, which lie above these three worlds; and one sense is described, that the Ādityas have upheld these. Then, with यद्वा दीर्प्ता अग्निं वायुं सूर्यं च धारयंति (yadvā dīrptā agniṃ vāyuṃ sūryaṃ ca dhārayaṃti), it is described that the Ādityas uphold also the shining Agni, Vāyu and Sūrya.

एषां विदथे अंतः व्रता त्रीणि संति (eṣāṃ vidathe aṃtaḥ vratā trīṇi saṃti), आदित्यानां एषां यज्ञ मध्ये सवनत्रय निष्पाद्यानि कर्माणि संति (ādityānāṃ eṣāṃ yajña madhyè savanatraya niṣpādyāni karmāṇi saṃti): the first meaning is explained thus: in the middle of the sacrifices performed in honour of these Ādityas, the duties (to be performed) in the rites of the morning, midday and evening savanas are also carried out. Secondly, यद्वा एषां लोकानां अंतर्मध्ये यज्ञे निमित्तभूते सति एषामादित्यानां रसादानधारण-विसर्जनलक्षणानि त्रीणि कर्माणि संति (yadvā eṣāṃ lokānāṃ aṃtarmadhyè yajñe nimittabhūte sati eṣāmādityānāṃ rasādānadhāraṇa-visarjanalakṣaṇāni trīṇi karmāṇi saṃti): the meaning is explained that, in the middle of the three worlds heaven, earth and atmosphere, at the time when sacrifice is performed, these Ādityas carry out three kinds of rites, receiving the waters, holding the waters received, and pouring them on the earth in the form of rain, and thereby protect sacrifices and other rites.

Addressing the Ādityas as हे अदित्याः आर्यमन्, मित्र, वरुण (hè adityāḥ āryaman, mitra, varuṇa) [as supplied], ऋतेन यज्ञेन सत्येन पा युष्माकं प्रभूतं महाभाग्यं चारु (ṛtena yajñena satyena pā yuṣmākaṃ prabhūtaṃ mahābhāgyaṃ cāru): it is described that their abundant glory, full of greatness, surpasses everything because it protects the sacrifice and truth. The meanings of the words Āryamā, Mitra and Varuṇa have been explained before. For the word ṛta the meanings truth and sacrifice are given by Yāska: सत्यं वा यज्ञं वा (satyaṃ vā yajñaṃ vā) (Ni. 4-19).

Gist: the Ādityas, golden-adorned, shining, sleepless and unharmed, uphold the three heavenly lights for the upright mortal.

हिरण्ययाः (hiraṇyayāḥ) (hiraṇyayāḥ): those of golden form, or those of a beneficial and charming appearance; शुचयः (śucayaḥ): the shining; धारपूताः (dhārapūtāḥ): those pure as if washed by a stream of water; अस्वप्नजः (asvapnajaḥ): those without sleep; अनिमिषाः (animiṣāḥ): those who strike (close) the eyelid [sic, as supplied: the Kannada says "who do close the eyelid"; the Bhāvārtha has "who do not close"]; अदब्धाः (adabdhāḥ): unharmed by Asuras and others; उरुशंसाः (uruśaṃsāḥ): praised by many — the Ādityas. ऋजवे (ṛjave): of the upright-minded worshipper; मर्त्याय (martyāya): for the good of man; दिव्या (divyā): born in the world of the gods; त्री रोचना (trī rocanā): the three luminous orbs beginning with Agni; धारयंत (dhārayaṃta): have upheld.

p. 87

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

The Ādityas, of golden form, shining, pure as if washed by streams of water, sleepless, not closing the eyelids, unharmed by Asuras and others, praised by many, have upheld the three luminous orbs beginning with Agni, born in the world of the gods, for the good of the upright-minded worshipper, man.

Printed English translation

The Adityas, decorated with golden ornaments, brilliant, purified by showers, who never slumber, nor close their eyelids, who are unassailable, and praised by many, uphold the three bright heavenly regions for the sake of the upright man.

श्री रोचना दिव्या धारयंत (śrī rocanā divyā dhārayaṃta): Sāyaṇa explains it as आदित्याः दिवि भवानि त्रीणि रोचमानानि अग्न्यादीनि तेजांसि अवस्थापर्य (ādityāḥ divi bhavāni trīṇi rocamānāni agnyādīni tejāṃsi avasthāparya) [as supplied]: it is described that the Ādityas have set firmly in place the three kinds of lights born in the sky, Agni, Sūrya and the rest, so as to bring happiness to those who praise them.

On the word हिरण्ययाः (hiraṇyayāḥ) he gives हिरण्यालंकृतसर्वांगाः (hiraṇyālaṃkṛtasarvāṃgāḥ) and हितरमणीयवेषाः (hitaramaṇīyaveṣāḥ): it is explained that the Ādityas have limbs adorned with golden ornaments, or have a dress and decoration that is beneficial and charming.

धारपूताः (dhārapūtāḥ): the Ādityas are pure, as if well washed by streams of water; अस्वप्नजः (asvapnajaḥ): without dreams or without sleep; उरुशंसाः (uruśaṃsāḥ): worthy of praise by many people. Thus the Ādityas' greatness, adornment, form and nature are described.

असुर (asura): O destroyer of enemies; वरुण (varuṇa): O Varuṇa; त्वं (tvaṃ): you; ये च देवाः (ye ca devāḥ): whatever gods there are; ये च मर्ताः (ye ca martāḥ): whatever men there are; विश्वेषां (viśveṣāṃ): of all of these; राजा असि (rājā asi): you are the lord; नः (naḥ): to us; शतं शरदः (śataṃ śaradaḥ): a hundred years; विचक्षे (vicakṣe): for seeing; रास्व (rāsva): give; (वयं च (vayaṃ ca): we also); पूर्वा (pūrvā): by the ancient sages; सुधितानि (sudhitāni): fully enjoyed; आयूंषि (āyūṃṣi): lifetimes; अश्याम (aśyāma): may we enjoy.

O Varuṇa, destroyer of enemies, you are the lord of all the gods and all men. Let us see the full hundred years; as the former sages fully enjoyed a life of a hundred years, so may we also enjoy a full lifetime.

Printed English translation

Varuna, destroyer of foes, you are the sovereign over all, whether they be gods or mortals: grant to us to behold a hundred years, and that we may enjoy lives such as were enjoyed by ancient (sages).

p. 89

(Special Topics of Ṛk 10.) In this Ṛk Varuṇa is praised. The word असुर (asura) is explained as "destroyer of enemies"; it is described that Varuṇa is a destroyer of enemies and is the king of men and of gods; and the wish is expressed that this god may grant us, the sacrificers, to see a hundred years, that is, to live a hundred years. Further, पूर्वा सुधिता नि आयूंषि अश्याम: that we may live a hundred years, as was determined by the ancient gods; so the sacrificers pray for this god's favour, that such a lifespan may be granted to us.

O Ādityas, because of my ignorance and the darkness of night, I do not know what lies on my right, nor on my left, nor in front, nor behind. I am one without mature knowledge, and timid. Yet, walking on the path laid down by you, may I obtain the fearless light.

Printed English translation

Neither is the right hand known to us, Adityas, nor is the left : neither is that which is in front. nor that which is behind. (discerned by me): Givers of dwellings, may I, who am immature (in knowledge), and timid (in spirit), obtain, when guided by you, the light that is free from fear.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In the sacrifice of an animal belonging to the Ādityas, this Ṛk, न दक्षिणा (na dakṣiṇā), is to be used as the yājyā mantra when the oblation is offered, as is set out by the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra passage तिस्रो भूमीर्धारयन्श्रीरुत द्यून् न दक्षिणा वि चिकिते न सव्या (tisro bhūmīrdhārayanśrīruta dyūn na dakṣiṇā vi cikite na savyā). In this Ṛk a prayer made to the Ādityas is stated: that the ignorance, like pitch darkness, may be destroyed.

p. 91

(Special Topics of Ṛk 11, continued.) Addressing the Ādityas, with the words दक्षिणा (dakṣiṇā), सव्या (savyā), प्राचीनं पश्चा (prācīnaṃ paścā) it is described that the darkness of night, or the ignorance grown up in the mind, envelops me who knows nothing and makes the right and left, and the arrangement of the east and west directions, imperceptible; and with पाक्या चित् (pākyā cit), धीर्या चित् (dhīryā cit), युष्मानीतः अभयं ज्योतिरश्यां (yuṣmānītaḥ abhayaṃ jyotiraśyāṃ) a prayer is stated: that the sacrificer, though of small knowledge (slow-witted) or dull, being favoured by these Ādityas and having fear from no one, may obtain the light that destroys the darkness connected with the sun, or the knowledge that removes ignorance.

पाक्या (pākyā): पक्तव्यः अपरिपक्वज्ञानः (paktavyaḥ aparipakvajñānaḥ); Sāyaṇa explains it as one without complete knowledge. Yāska reads the word पाकः (pākaḥ) among the words for the praiseworthy (Ni. 3-13) and explains (Ni. 3-12): पाकः पक्तव्यो भवति विपक्वप्रज्ञ आदित्यः (pākaḥ paktavyo bhavati vipakvaprajña ādityaḥ). The explanation of the word पाक (pāka) was given earlier, in the Vāmana Sūkta.

Gist: the sacrificer who offers cooked oblations to the Ādityas is made to prosper by them, and goes to the sacrifice in a chariot, wealthy, famed and praised.

yaḥ: the sacrificer who; rājabhyaḥ: to the shining ones; ṛtanibhyaḥ: to the Ādityas, who are leaders of the sacrifice; dadāśa: offers cooked offerings, cakes and the like (and); yaṃ: whom (which sacrificer); puṣṭayaḥ: the nourishing; nityāḥ: the eternal Ādityas; vardhayanti: cause to prosper; saḥ: that sacrificer; revān: as one wealthy; prathamaḥ: as one renowned; vasudāvā: as a giver of wealth; praśastaḥ: as one praised by all; vidatheṣu: in the sacrificial houses (to the sacrificial houses); rathena: seated in a chariot; yāti: goes.

The sacrificer who offers cooked offerings, cakes and the like to the shining Ādityas, the leaders of the sacrifice, and whom the nourishing and eternal Ādityas cause to prosper, that sacrificer, wealthy, renowned, a giver of wealth and praised by all, goes seated in a chariot to the sacrificial houses.

Printed English translation

He who presents offerings to the royal and true (Adityas); he whom their constant favours exalt ; he proceeds, wealthy. renowned, munificent and honoured, to sacrifices, in his chariot.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

ऋतनिभ्यः ददाश (ऋतनिभ्यः ददाश (ṛtanibhyaḥ dadāśa)): he offers cooked offerings, cakes and the like to the Ādityas, the leaders of truth or of the sacrifice. Because the Ādityas stand in front and protect truth and the sacrifice, they are leaders; knowing this, the sacrificer offers them cooked offerings and cakes, the form of the oblation, and

p. 93

(continued) so pleases them. These Ādityas, पुष्टयः नित्याः (puṣṭayaḥ nityāḥ), nourish the whole world and are imperishable, and so they favour the sacrificer who offers them oblations, that he may prosper. The sacrificer who has won their favour, by the wealth obtained through that favour, is the chief of all, famous among all, and a giver of wealth to others; thus the greatness of the Ādityas' favour, as obtained by sacrificers, is described. And it is explained that the sacrificer, praised by others, seated in a chariot, goes towards the sacrificial house (प्र शस्तः विदथेषु रथेन याति (pra śastaḥ vidatheṣu rathena yāti)).

The word वसु (vasu) is given by Yāska among the names of rays (Ni. 2-13) and among the names of wealth (Ni. 3-9, as printed). In यस्त्वा यंतं वसुना प्रातरित्वः (yastvā yaṃtaṃ vasunā prātaritvaḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-125--2) it is used in the sense of food (वसुना अन्नेन (vasunā annena)). Sāyaṇa says it is used here in the sense of wealth, and explains the word वसुदावा (vasudāvā) as one who gives wealth.

Gist: the sacrificer is pure, unharmed, rich in food and sons, dwells near fertile waters, and no enemy near or far harms him who is under the Ādityas' guidance.

p. 94

yaḥ: the sacrificer who; ādityānāṃ: of the Ādityas; praṇītau: in the excellent guidance; bhavati: is (that sacrificer); śuciḥ: as one pure; adabdhaḥ: not harmed by others; vṛddhavayāḥ: possessing abundant food; suvīraḥ: with excellent sons; being so, sūyavasāḥ: fit for growing good plants; apaḥ: of the waters; upa: near; kṣeti: dwells; taṃ: that sacrificer; nakiḥ: no one; ghnanti: harms; antitaḥ: whether near; dūrāt: or far; na: none can harm.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

The sacrificer who lives under the excellent guidance of the Ādityas is pure, unharmed by others, possessed of abundant food and excellent sons, and dwells near waters fit for growing good plants. No one harms that sacrificer, whether near or far.

Printed English translation

Pure unmolested, possessing (abundant) food and virtuous descendants, he dwells amidst fertilizing waters: no one, whether nigh or afar, harms him who is (safe) in the good guidance of the Adityas.

शुचिः (शुचिः (śuciḥ)): shining or pure. The word शुचि (śuci) is explained by Yāska as शुक् शोचतेः, शुचि शोचतेः, ज्वलतिकर्मणः (śuk śocateḥ, śuci śocateḥ, jvalatikarmaṇaḥ) (Ni. 6-1). Sāyaṇa gives the meanings "shining with radiance" and "perfectly pure". So two meanings are stated: the sacrificer who worships the Ādityas is bright with lustre and also perfectly pure. Further, this sacrificer is not subject to the harm of enemies, possesses abundant food, has virtuous sons, and सुसस्यानां अपां समीपे सर्वदा निवसति (susasyānāṃ apāṃ samīpe sarvadā nivasati): he lives always in regions full of plants and rich in water, without difficulty in food and drink; thus the power of the Ādityas' favour that can reach the sacrificer is stated.

नकिः (नकिः (nakiḥ)): this word is stated by Yāska in the list of all words (Ni. 3-14) and is used here in the sense of "nearby" (as the Kannada puts it). The greatness of the Ādityas is described: enemies cannot harm the sacrificer who has gained their favour, whether from near or from far.

uta: and; adite: O Aditi; mitra: O Mitra; varuṇa: O Varuṇa; yat: if; vayaṃ: we; vaḥ: in regard to you; kaccit: any; āgaḥ: offence; cakrama: have committed; mṛḷa: show kindness to us and protect us; indra: O Āditya, endowed with excellent wealth; uru: wide; abhayaṃ: and fearless; jyotiḥ: light; aśyāṃ: may I obtain; dīrghāḥ: very long; tamisrāḥ: nights full of darkness; naḥ: us; mā abhi naśan: may they not encircle and pervade.

p. 96

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Aditi, Mitra, Varuṇa, even if we have committed some offence against you, show kindness to us and protect us. O Āditya, endowed with excellent wealth, may I obtain wide and fearless light. May the very long nights, full of darkness, not encircle and pervade us.

Printed English translation

Aditi, Mitra, Varuna, have pity upon us, even although we may have committed some offence against you: may I obtain, Indra, that great light which is free from peril; let not the protracted glooms (of night) envelop us.

The meanings of the words Aditi, Mitra and Varuṇa have been explained earlier. Here these deities are addressed by these words, and protection is prayed for: that each of them should protect the sacrificer and the priests with kindness. Further, the prayer is described as asking them to pardon the offences committed by the sacrificer and the priests and to protect them.

Yāska has explained the meaning of the word Indra (Ni. 10-8); this explanation was given at length in the earlier volumes. Here the Ādityas are addressed by the word Indra; the meaning is explained as "those having unsurpassed wealth", and it is prayed that these Ādityas may grant the sacrificer their own abundant radiance or knowledge. It is also hoped that the Ādityas will so act that the nights, covered with pitch darkness and extending for a very long time, may pass happily for the sacrificer.

(The Kannada text prints "dyāvāpṛthivī" as ವ್ಯಾವಾಪೃಥಿವಿಗಳಿಬ್ಬರೂ (vyāvāpṛthivigaḷibbarū) [?] and "pṛtsu" as ಹೃತ್ಸು (hṛtsu) [?], apparently misreadings.)

For the sacrificer who is under the guidance of the Ādityas, heaven and earth, coming together, fulfil his desires. Possessed of excellent wealth, he obtains growth through the rain that has come from the heavenly world.

p. 98

In battles, defeating his enemies, he enters both the dwelling-places that are his own and those of his enemies. To this sacrificer both kinds of creative works, moving and unmoving, become favourable.

Printed English translation

Both (heaven and earth) combined, cherish him (whom the Adityas protect); verily prosperous, he thrives, with the rain of heaven ; victorious in battles, (he defends) both his own dwelling (and assaults) that of his foe; to him both portions (of creation) are propitious.

It is explained that for the sacrificer who has obtained the favour of the Ādityas and stands in the path they show, heaven and earth, ever together, bring about growth, favourably, so that his desires are fulfilled.

पृत्सु आजयन् उभौ क्षयौ याति (pṛtsu ājayan ubhau kṣayau yāti) — संग्रामेषु शत्रूनाभिमुख्येनाभिभवन्, परैरनाक्रांतं स्वकीयं निवासस्थानं आत्मनापहृतं परकीयं निवासस्थानं च गच्छति । (saṃgrāmeṣu śatrūnābhimukhyenābhibhavan, parairanākrāṃtaṃ svakīyaṃ nivāsasthānaṃ ātmanāpahṛtaṃ parakīyaṃ nivāsasthānaṃ ca gacchati |) The word pṛt is listed by Yāska (Ni. 3-9) among the names of battle. By the favour of the Ādityas the sacrificer overcomes his enemies in wars, and obtains his own dwelling (house) not assailed by others and also the houses of others which he has seized. That is, keeping his own dwelling in comfort and seizing the dwellings of his enemies as well, he lives happily by his own strength.

क्षयः क्षियंति निवसंत्यस्मिन्निति । (kṣayaḥ kṣiyaṃti nivasaṃtyasminniti |) The meaning of the word kṣaya is explained as places so arranged as to be convenient for dwelling and inhabited by people, that is, houses.

उभावर्धौ साधू—जगतः चराचरात्मकौ भागौ, मर्त्यामर्त्यात्मकौ वा । (ubhāvardhau sādhū—jagataḥ carācarātmakau bhāgau, martyāmartyātmakau vā |) The world is described as having two meanings: either it contains two kinds, the stationary (that does not move), in the form of trees, creepers and the like, and the moving, with beings able to move; or it contains two kinds of beings, those subject to death and those not subject to death, i.e. gods and mortals. All these are explained as becoming favourable and effective for the sacrificer.

yajatrāḥ: worthy of sacrifice; ādityāḥ: O Ādityas; abhidruhe: for the binding of fiends and others who work harm; vaḥ: your; yāḥ māyāḥ: whatever powers of illusion there are; ripave: for the binding of enemies; pāśāḥ: whatever snares; vicchatāḥ [?]: are spread out (such); tān: those snares and illusions; aśvīva: as a man possessed of a horse crosses a hard road; rathena: by chariot; ati yeṣam: help us to cross; ariṣṭāḥ: we, unharmed by enemies; urau: in a wide; śarman: house; ā syāma: may we be happy.

O Ādityas, worthy of sacrifice, with whatever powers of illusion you have for binding the fiends and others who work harm, and whatever snares are spread for binding enemies, using those snares and illusions as well, help us also to cross by chariot, as a man with a horse crosses a hard road. Unharmed by enemies, may we be happy in a wide house.

p. 100

Printed English translation

Adorable Adityas, may I pass (safe) in your car from the illusions which (you devise) for the malignant, the snares which are spread for your foes, (in like manner) as a horseman (passes over a road); and thus may we abide secure in infinite felicity.

yajatrāḥ ādityāḥ: the Ādityas are addressed as worthy of being worshipped by the sacrificers with sacrifice. Since they have spread illusions and snares for the restraint of the fiends who work harm in every way, and for the destruction of enemies bent on injury, the sacrificers pray that, like अश्वीव रथेन (aśvīva rathena) — a man with a good (swift) horse who quickly crosses roads hard to cross (the Sanskrit explanation is quoted in the bhāṣya, beginning शोभनाश्वः कश्चित् पुरुषः (śobhanāśvaḥ kaścit puruṣaḥ)) — they may cross, seated in the chariot by the favour of the Ādityas, using the illusions spread for the binding and restraint of enemies and fiends. This is explained by way of an illustration.

ariṣṭāḥ urau śarman ā syāma: the word śarma is listed among the names of house (Ni. 3-13; as printed in the supplied text, "೩. ೭-೦೭"). The sacrificers' wish is described: may we, unharmed by the injury of enemies, be happy in the large house granted by the Ādityas.

O Varuṇa, before a wealthy, favourable, abundantly giving rich man, may I not say that my sons and other near kinsmen suffer in poverty and so ask him for wealth. May I not be left empty of the wealth gathered under restraint. Together with excellent sons we recite a mature hymn in the sacrificial house.

May I never (have to) represent, Varuna, the destitution of a (once) opulent, dear, and munificent kinsman : may I never, royal Varuna, be devoid of well-regulated riches : (and) may we, blessed with excellent descendants, worthily glorify you at this sacrifice.

By the word वरुण (varuṇa) the Āditya is addressed here. It was explained earlier that Varuṇa too is one of the twelve Ādityas.

मघोनः—धनवतः (maghonaḥ—dhanavataḥ): the word मघ (magha) is read by Yāska (Ni. 3-9) among the names of wealth; the meaning "possessed of wealth" is given.

शूनं—शून्यं, यद्वा शूनं गतं प्राप्तं दारिद्रं (śūnaṃ—śūnyaṃ, yadvā śūnaṃ gataṃ prāptaṃ dāridraṃ): the meaning of the word शून (śūna) is explained as the absence of any kind of thing, or the poverty (want) that leads to a state of emptiness.

राजन् सुयमात् रायः मा अवस्थाम् (rājan suyamāt rāyaḥ mā avasthām)—सुष्ठु नियम्यते अनेन पुरुषो गृहे इति सुयमः (suṣṭu niyamyate anena puruṣo gṛhe iti suyamaḥ): Varuṇa is addressed by the word rājan, and it is prayed that by his favour the wealth gathered by us, the sacrificers, may never be destroyed.

The sacrificers say: बृहद्वदेम विदथे सुवीराः (bṛhadvadema vidathe suvīrāḥ): at sacrifices, together with our excellent sons, we recite hymns; therefore bestow favour on us. This is the prayer.

Gist: idam is the sixth sūkta of Anuvāka 3, of eleven ṛks, by Kūrma Gārtsamada or Gṛtsamada, in triṣṭubh metre, to Varuṇa; its application is by indication; the Ṛgvidhāna is quoted as saying it removes fear, sin, debt, poverty and bad dreams.

Anuvāda (Kannada). The sūkta idaṃ kaverādityasya is the sixth sūkta of the third anuvāka; it has eleven ṛks. In the Anukramaṇikā it is said इदमेकादश वारुणं (idamekādaśa vāruṇaṃ) ("these eleven are to Varuṇa"). Since the previous sūkta states that the seer is कूर्मो गार्त्समदो हि वा (kūrmo gārtsamado hi vā), the seer of this sūkta and of the next is Kūrma, son of Gṛtsamada, or Gṛtsamada himself; the metre is triṣṭubh; the deity is Varuṇa; the application is laiṅgika. Concerning this sūkta, some say, from the verse इदमेकादशर्चं तु वारुणं भयपापनुत् । ऋणदारिद्र्यदुःस्वप्ननाशनं चेति शुश्रुम (idamekādaśarcaṃ tu vāruṇaṃ bhayapāpanut | ṛṇadāridryaduḥsvapnanāśanaṃ ceti śuśruma)

(Ṛgvidhāna 2-21-1 as printed in the Anuvāda; the bhāṣya quotation prints the reference as 125-1), that for those who recite this eleven-ṛk hymn to Varuṇa, fear, sin, poverty and bad dreams are removed.

Gist: This praise or oblation is offered to Varuṇa, son of Aditi, self-luminous and a lord; by his grace may the sacrificer overcome all beings; I ask of this delightful god the good fame he gives. (The word द्वितीयभावनिकारभांजि (dvitīyabhāvanikārabhāṃji) (flagged in the Kannada text) is unclear in the supplied text.)

kaveḥ: of the far-seeing one; ādityasya: of the son of Aditi; svarājaḥ: of the self-luminous one; varuṇasya: to Varuṇa; idaṃ: this oblation or hymn (is offered); (sa ca: the sacrificer who offers this oblation); viśvāni: all; santi: beings; mahnā: by (the greatness gained through Varuṇa's grace) majesty; abhyastu: may he bring under his control; devaḥ: shining; yaḥ: which Varuṇa; yajathāya: to the man who performs the sacrifice; ati: exceedingly; mandraḥ: is delighting; bhūreḥ: of such a Varuṇa, the supporter; sukīrtiṃ: the excellent praise; bhikṣe: I beg [or: bhūreḥ: from such a Varuṇa, the supporter; sukīrtiṃ: the auspicious fame; bhikṣe: I ask].

The sacrificer offers this oblation to Varuṇa, who is far-seeing, the son of Aditi, and self-luminous. Through his majesty gained by Varuṇa's favour may this sacrificer bring all beings under his control. From such a Varuṇa, the supporter, who is exceedingly delighting to the man who performs the sacrifice, I beg auspicious fame.

Printed English translation

(The worshipper repeats) this praise of the sage, the self-radiant Aditya : may he preside over all beings by his power : I beg for fame of the sovereign Varuna, a diety [sic] who, when much pleased, (is propitious) to his adorer.

कवेः (kaveḥ)—क्रांतदर्शिनः (krāṃtadarśinaḥ): Yāska has read the word kavi among the names of the intelligent (Ni. 12-13) and explained it: "the intelligent man is one who sees beyond (krānta-darśana), or from the root kavate" (Ni. 12-13). Varuṇa, the son of the goddess Aditi, is described as one who has seen the far shore of wisdom. स्वराजः (svarājaḥ)—स्वयमेव राजमानस्य ईश्वरस्य वा (svayameva rājamānasya īśvarasya vā): shining of himself, that is, brilliant without the help of other lights, and lord over all. The word इदं (idaṃ) is given the meaning oblation or hymn, and it is explained that the sacrificer offers the oblation or hymn to Varuṇa, who is self-luminous and sovereign over all.

विश्वानि संति (viśvāni saṃti)—सर्वाणि द्वितीयभाव विकारभांजि [?] भूतजातानि (sarvāṇi dvitīyabhāva vikārabhāṃji [?] bhūtajātāni) (the words द्वितीयभाव विकारभांजि (dvitīyabhāva vikārabhāṃji) are unclear in the supplied text): all created beings. It is explained that through the greatness arising from Varuṇa's favour the sacrificer may bring under his control all beings, moving and unmoving.

अतिमंद्रः (atimaṃdraḥ)—अतिशयेन स्तुत्यः हर्षयिता वा (atiśayena stutyaḥ harṣayitā vā): exceedingly praiseworthy, or a gladdener. The word mandra is read by Yāska among the names of speech (as printed: सि २-२३ (si 2-23), the reference letter being as supplied; the word before "names" is printed वाज्ञामगळल्लि (vājñāmagaḷalli)) and explained as

"mandrā is delighting, or gladdening to the world" (as printed: सि. ११-३० (si. 11-30)). It is said that Varuṇa is praiseworthy to the sacrificer and the producer of joy.

सुकीर्तिं भिक्षे (sukīrtiṃ bhikṣe)—शोभनां स्तुतिं यद्वा वरुणेन दातव्यां शोभनां कीर्तिं (śobhanāṃ stutiṃ yadvā varuṇena dātavyāṃ śobhanāṃ kīrtiṃ): for the word bhūri, "of Varuṇa, the lord (bhartuḥ)": the sacrificer asks for the praise (the devout mind that performs it), or the excellent fame granted by the favour of Varuṇa.

Gist: O Varuṇa, may we, devout and praising you, engaged in your service, be rich; and as fires are kindled at dawn for the fire-offering, may we, praising you daily, shine.

Varuṇa: O Varuṇa; svādhyaḥ: we who are endowed with excellent meditation; tuṣṭuvāṃsaḥ: who praise (you); tava vrate: engaged in the work of worshipping you; subhagāsaḥ: possessed of excellent wealth; syāma: grant that we may become; gomatīnām: accompanied by rays; uṣasām: of the dawns; upāyane: at the time of rising; agnayo na: as the fires kindled for the fire-offering shine; anu dyūn: every day; jaramāṇāḥ: we who praise you; may we be shining.

O Varuṇa, we who are endowed with excellent meditation and who praise you, engaged in the work of worshipping you, grant that we may become possessed of excellent wealth. As the fire kindled for the fire-offering shines at the rising of the dawns accompanied by rays, may we who praise you daily go on shining.

Printed English translation

May we, Varuna, deeply meditating on you earnestly praising you and (engaged) in your worship, be prosperous ; glorifying you daily, like the fires (that are kindled in your honour) at the coming of the luminous dawns.

व्रते (vrate)—त्वदीये परिचरणाख्ये कर्मणि वर्तमानाः (tvadīye paricaraṇākhyè karmaṇi vartamānāḥ): the word vrata is read by Yāska among the names of work (Ni. 3-2) and explained "vrata is a name of work, because it is chosen" (Ni. 2-13). Here Sāyaṇa gives the meaning: work consisting of service, relating to Varuṇa.

सुभगासः (subhagāsaḥ)—शोभनधनाः (śobhanadhanāḥ): here the prefix su is applied to the word bhaga. The word is used as an epithet of the sacrificers; the meaning wealth is given, and the sacrificers' prayer is stated, that they may be endowed with excellent wealth. Yāska explains भगो भजतेः (bhago bhajateḥ) (Ni. 1-7), reads it among the names of wealth (Ni. 3-9) with the meaning wealth, explains it as "dharma" in भगस्य भागधेयस्य (bhagasya bhāgadheyasya) (Ni. 9-21), and in प्रातर्जितं भगमुग्रं हुवेम (prātarjitaṃ bhagamugraṃ huvema) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-41-2) as one of the gods, a son of the goddess Aditi.

गोमतीनां उषसां उपायने अग्नयो न (gomatīnāṃ uṣasāṃ upāyane agnayo na): Yāska gives various meanings of the word go (Ni. 2-5). Here it is used in the sense of ray (raśmi). After giving this sense, the passage रश्मिभिर्युक्तानां उषसां उपागमे यथा अग्नयो अग्नि होत्रादिकर्मार्थं समिध्यंते एवं त्वां स्तुवंतो वयं दीप्यमाना भवेम (raśmibhiryuktānāṃ uṣasāṃ upāgame yathā agnayo agni hotrādikarmārthaṃ samidhyaṃte evaṃ tvāṃ stuvaṃto vayaṃ dīpyamānā bhavema) is given. The sacrificers' prayer is expressed thus: as at the rising of the dawns the fire is kindled for the performance of the fire-offering and other rites, so may we sacrificers who praise Varuṇa shine with splendour every day.

Gist: Varuṇa, leader of all the world, may we dwell in your protection; sons of Aditi, unharmed by foes, forgive our offences and keep us in friendship.

Pranetaḥ (leader)—guide of the whole world; Varuṇa—O Varuṇa; Puruvīrasya—of you who are endowed with many kinds of valour; Uruśaṃsasya—praised by many people; Tava—your; Śarman—in the pleasant house; Syāma—may we be; Aditeḥ putrāḥ—O sons of Aditi, Mitra and the other gods; Adabdhāḥ—unharmed by enemies; Devāḥ—divine in nature; Yūyaṃ—you; Naḥ—us (even though we have committed offences); Yujyāya—for friendship; Abhi kṣamadhvaṃ—forgive.

O Varuṇa, guide of the whole world, may we dwell in your pleasant house, you who are endowed with many kinds of valour and are praised by many people. O sons of Aditi, Mitra and the other gods, unharmed by enemies and divine in nature, forgive our offences and preserve our friendship with you.

Printed English translation

Varuna, chief guide (of men), may we abide in the felicity of you who are endowed with great prowess, and are glorified by many: divine sons of Aditi, unharmed (by foes), have compassion upon us through your benevolence.

प्रणीतः (praṇītaḥ) (as supplied; the Ṛk has praṇetaḥ)—सर्वस्य जगतः प्रकर्षेण नेतः (sarvasya jagataḥ prakarṣeṇa netaḥ): Varuṇa leads the whole world abundantly, that is, he regulates it greatly; this is the meaning explained.

पुरुवीरस्य (puruvīrasya)—बहुभिर्वीरैरुपेतस्य यद्वा बहूनां शत्रूणां विशेषेण प्रेरकस्य (bahubhirvīrairupetasya yadvā bahūnāṃ śatrūṇāṃ viśeṣeṇa prerakasya). The word vīra is explained by Yāska as वीरो वीरयत्यमित्रान् । वेतेर्वा स्याद्गतिकर्मणः । वीरयतेर्वा (vīro vīrayatyamitrān | vetervā syāddatikarmaṇaḥ | vīrayatervā) (Ni. 1-7) [text as supplied]. Sāyaṇa gives two meanings, "endowed with strength" or "enemies", and so describes Varuṇa either as endowed with many heroes or as one who drives out enemies.

शर्मन् (śarman)—गृहे सुखे वा (gṛhe sukhe vā): the word śarma is read by Yāska (Ni. 3-13) among the names both of "house" and of "happiness"; therefore Sāyaṇa gives both meanings.

In the first half of this Ṛk Varuṇa is praised, in the second half the Ādityas, Mitra and the others, sons of Aditi. The sacrificers' dwelling in the happiness or house favoured by Varuṇa is prayed for, and the prayer is expressed that Mitra and the other Ādityas should forgive the sacrificers' offences.

Gist: Aditi's son Varuṇa, upholder like a dam, has sent forth the water (or truth); by his law the rivers flow untiringly and swiftly like birds. The grammatical tail explains the nasalised ā, the elision of the penultimate letter in the perfect paptuḥ (Pāṇini rules not numbered in the supplied text) and the substitution of yāc for jas in raghuyā.

Vidhartā—the holder of the water; Ādityaḥ—Varuṇa, son of Aditi; Ṛtaṃ—truth or water; Sīṃ—everywhere; Pra asṛjat—created; Varuṇasya—by Varuṇa's ordinance; Sindhavaḥ—the (flowing) rivers; Yanti—flow; Ete—these rivers; Na śrāmyanti—do not become weary; Na vi muñcanti—do not cease flowing; Vayo na—like birds; Raghuyā—swift; Parijman—on the earth; Paptuḥ—fall and glide.

Varuṇa, the holder of the water and son of Aditi, created water everywhere. By the power of Varuṇa's command the rivers flow. These rivers neither become weary nor stop their flow. Swift like birds, they fall on the earth and flow on.

Printed English translation

The Aditya, the upholder, has created all this water : the rivers flow by the power of Varuna: they never weary, they never stop; they have descended with swiftness, like birds upon the circumambient (earth).

ऋतं (ṛtaṃ)—विधारणहेतुभूतं सत्यं यद्वा नदीनामुपादानभूतमुदकं (vidhāraṇahetubhūtaṃ satyaṃ yadvā nadīnāmupādānabhūtamudakaṃ). The word ṛta is read by Yāska among the names of water, truth and sacrifice (Ni. 2-24, 4-19). Sāyaṇa gives two meanings: truth, the chief cause of upholding everything, or water, which is pre-eminent in the rivers.

विधर्ता (vidhartā)—सेतुरिव जलस्य विधारयिता (seturiva jalasya vidhārayitā): as a dam holds back water, so Varuṇa holds the rain-waters; the explanation compares him to a dam,

सिंधवः—स्यंदनशीलाः (siṃdhavaḥ—syaṃdanaśīlāḥ): "the flowing ones". The Nirukta authors have read this word among the names of rivers (Ni. 2-24), and they have also explained it, "Sindhu, from flowing" (Ni. 5-27). The comment says that Varuṇa created the waters, held them up for the benefit of the worlds, and made them flow over the earth in the form of rivers. These rivers never stop their flow; as swift-going birds, flying in the sky, also move about on the earth, so these rivers too, so that their waters are never in one place, flow in a single unvaried course (अनलसाः ऐकरूप्येण प्रवहंति (analasāḥ aikarūpyeṇa pravahaṃti)), giving no room for even the least sloth. The commentary explains that Varuṇa created the waters for the good of the world, held them, and made them flow ceaselessly over the earth. The Nirukta authors, too, have cited this same idea from the Ṛk beginning as follows (Ma. Saṃ. 8-69-12):

सुदेवो असि वरुण यस्य ते सप्त सिंधवः । अनुक्षरंति काकुदं सूम्यं सुषिरामिव ॥ (sudevo asi varuṇa yasya te sapta siṃdhavaḥ | anukṣaraṃti kākudaṃ sūmyaṃ suṣirāmiva ||)

(The passage ends with "thus they have cited it from the Ṛk"; a software-generated line about a decorative symbol was removed from kn.md here. The reference is given as (Ma. Saṃ. 8-69-12) in kn.md.)

Gist: "O Varuṇa, loosen from me the sin born of omitted rites, like a rope; may we obtain the river full of water; let the thread of my rite not be cut, nor the body of the rite broken before its completion." The grammatical tail explains the aorist śāri (from कृ हिंसायां (kṛ hiṃsāyāṃ), luṅ in the passive) and the natural form (prakṛtibhāva) of पुर ऋतोः (pura ṛtoḥ).

Varuṇa—O Varuṇa; Mat—from me; Raśanāmiva—binding like a rope; Āgaḥ—the sin consisting in the omission of the observance; Viśrathaya—destroy; Te—given by you; Ṛtasya—full of water; Khāṃ—the river; Ṛdhyāma—may we obtain; Dhiyaṃ—the rite; Vayataḥ—of one weaving; Me—my; Tantuḥ—the thread in the form of the rite; Mā chedi—may it not be cut; Ṛtoḥ—than the time of completion; Purā—before; Apasaḥ—of the rite; Mātrā—the body; Mā śāri—do not cause to be broken.

O Varuṇa, remove from me the sin, consisting in the omission of the observance, that binds like a rope. May we obtain the river that is given by you and is full of water. May my thread of rite, while I weave the cloth of the rite, not be cut. Before the time of its completion, do not cause the body of my rite to be broken.

Printed English translation

Cast off from me sin, Varuna, as if it were a rope: may we obtain from you a channel (filled) with water : cut not the thread of me (engaged id [sic]) weaving pious works: blight not the elements of holy rites before the season (of their maturity).

रशनामिन आगः वि श्रथय (raśanāmina āgaḥ vi śrathaya)—The word आगः (āgaḥ) is explained by Yāska as "from the verb gam with the prefix ā" (Ni. 11 22, as printed). The word is formed by the prefix ā joined with the root gam. "It surely comes to the doer, the one who has performed the rite" (अवश्यमेवैतदागच्छति कर्तारं (avaśyamevaitadāgacchati kartāraṃ)): the meaning "that which comes to him" is thus settled.

Raśanā means a thing fit for tying, so that clothes and the like stand firm when worn; usually a rope (cord) and the like. Since here it destroys freedom, the raśanā is said to be binding. For the word agas Sāyaṇa gives the meaning विहिताननुष्ठानजनितं पापं

धियं वयतः मे तंतुः मा छेदि (dhiyaṃ vayataḥ me taṃtuḥ mā chedi)—"May the continuity of my rite, while I carry the rite on, not be cut" (कर्म संतन्वतः मम कर्मसंततिः छिन्नो मा भूत् (karma saṃtanvataḥ mama karmasaṃtatiḥ chinno mā bhūt)). The word dhī is given among the names of rite (Ni. 3-2) and among the names of knowledge (Ni. 3-13); here it is used in the sense of rite. The word vayataḥ, formed from the root वेञ् (veñ) (tantusantāne, stretching threads), means weaving cloth. If the threads of one weaving cloth and the like break while he is at his work, his weaving does not come out right. In the same way the absence of interruption (nicchitti as supplied) in the sacrificers' rites is here prayed for. As a body is complete when joined with its limbs, so a rite is joined with its limbs (the rites to be performed in the middle). Whether the limb is lost, or the rite stops before completion, the rite is broken; the sacrificer's prayer is expressed that neither kind of breaking of the rite occur.

Gist: "O Varuṇa, drive fear away from me and favour me; as a milker looses the tether from a calf, loosen sin from me; no one apart from you is master even for the twinkling of an eye." The grammatical tail explains the Vedic forms (the substitution śāyaj and the change to bh in gṛbhāya; the śap-elision in mumugni; the loss of ta in īśe).

Varuṇa—O Varuṇa; Bhiyasaṃ—fear; Mat—from me; Su—completely; Apo mṛkṣa [sic, as supplied; the Saṃhitā and Pada read म्यक्ष (myakṣa)]—remove; Samrāṭ—you who shine completely; Ṛtāvaḥ—you who are truthful, O Varuṇa; Mā—me; Anu gṛbhāya—favour; Vatsāt—from a calf (eager to drink milk), from its neck; Dāmeva—as one looses a rope; Aṃhaḥ—sin; Vi mumugni—release (from me); Tvadāre—whatever person is far from you; Nimiṣaścana—even for the time of a twinkling; Nahi īśe—it is not possible to be independent.

O Varuṇa, remove fear from me. O Varuṇa, who shine completely and are truthful, favour me. As the rope is loosed from the neck of a calf eager to drink milk, release sin from me. No person who is far from you can be independent even for the time of a twinkling.

Printed English translation

Keep off all danger from me, Varuna : supreme monarch, endowed with truth, bestow your favour upon me: cast off (frem [sic] me) sin, like a tether from a calf: no one rules for the twinkling of an eye, apart fram [sic] you.

Addressing Varuṇa, भियसं मत् सु आपो म्यक्ष (bhiyasaṃ mat su āpo myakṣa): the sacrificers pray for Varuṇa's favour, which is the state in which fear is wholly removed, so that fear arises from nobody and in no way.

दामेव वत्सात् अंहः वि मुमुग्नि (dāmeva vatsāt aṃhaḥ vi mumugni)—as a milker looses the tether-rope from a calf, so loosen sin from me. The word aṃhas is explained by Yāska: "aṃhati, aṃhas and aṃhu are derived from the root han, with an irregular (nirūḍha) infix" (Ni. 4-25); that is, the words aṃhati, aṃhas, aṃhu are formed from the root han, and the meaning "sin" is understood from them. The prayer is expressed for Varuṇa's favour that the sacrificer be freed from sins, as one milking the cow looses the calf from the rope. This is stated here by way of a simile. In त्वदारे (tvadāre), the word āre is read among the names for "far" (Ni. 3-20). Sāyaṇa interprets त्वत्तो दूरदेशे वर्तमानस्त्वदन्यः (tvatto dūradeśe vartamānastvadanyaḥ) as: one who is in a place far from Varuṇa (that is, one who does not regard Varuṇa as protector; "other than Varuṇa" means one who is not a recipient of Varuṇa's favour). Such a person, whoever he may be, cannot be independent even for निमिषश्चन (nimiṣaścana), the subtle time in which the eyelid moves; and Varuṇa's power is declared, that he alone favours all so that they may be independent.

Gist: "O Varuṇa, do not harm us with the weapons that slay the sinner at your sacrifice; may we not go away from the sacrificial fire; scatter the harmful, that we may live long, seeing the sun in our own home." The tail gives luk forms of gam (gan-ma) in the Veda.

Asura—you who drive out the sinful; Varuṇa—O Varuṇa; Te—directed to you; Iṣṭau—in the sacrifice; Enaḥ—sin (born of omission of the rite); Kṛṇvantaṃ—the man who commits; Ye—whichever weapons, instruments of slaying; Bhrīṇanti—injure (such); Vadhaiḥ—with weapons; Naḥ—us; Mā—do not injure; Jyotiṣaḥ—from the sacrificial fire; Pravasathāni—dwelling in another place; Mā ganma—may we not reach; Naḥ—our; Jīvase—for a (happy) life; Mṛdhaḥ—the harmful enemies; Vi śiśrathaḥ—destroy.

O Varuṇa, who drive out the sinful, do not injure us with those weapons, instruments of slaying, which injure the man who, in the sacrifice directed to you, commits sin born of omission of the rite. May we not dwell in a place without the sacrificial fire. Destroy the harmful enemies so that we may obtain a happy life.

Printed English translation

Harm us not, Varuna, with those destructive (weapons), which, repeller (of foes), demolish him who does evil at your sacrifice : let us not depart (before our time) from the regions of light : scatter the malevolent, that we may live.

असुर—पापकृतां निरसितः (asura—pāpakṛtāṃ nirasitaḥ). The word asura is stated among the names of cloud (Si. 2-22, as printed). It is explained: "asurāḥ: from the places (sthāna), or because they are asu-givers [as supplied]; 'from asu he created the asuras, hence the asura-ness of the asuras'" (Ni. 3-8). Sāyaṇa explains that Varuṇa is addressed by this word because he destroys sinners. And वधैः एनः कृण्वंतं ये भ्रीणंति नः मा (vadhaiḥ enaḥ kṛṇvaṃtaṃ ye bhrīṇaṃti naḥ mā)—"with weapons (instruments of slaying) which injure the man who commits sin born of omission of the prescribed observance, do not injure us" (as printed, with the misprint आयुध्यैः (āyudhyaiḥ) and आस्मान् (āsmān)): protection is prayed for, that Varuṇa not harm us, the sacrificers, with the weapons that destroy those who do harm and those who neglect duty in the sacrifices performed for Varuṇa.

"...always, by the fire's light, from the sacrificial hall pervaded by it, or from a region joined with the sun's light, a state of no separate dwelling arises; that is, the sacrificer, seeing the fire kindled for the sacrifices and the sun, would dwell at home for a long time: such a state is the favour of Varuṇa that is prayed for here."

> वि न इंद्र मृधो जहि नीचा यच्छ पृतन्यतः । यो अस्मा अभिदासत्यधरं गमया तमः ॥
>
> vi na iṃdra mṛdho jahi nīcā yaccha pṛtanyataḥ | yo asmā
> abhidāsatyadharaṃ gamayā tamaḥ ‖

(Pu [sic] Saṃ. 10-152-4), the meaning is explained as मृधः-मृधकर्त्यन् शत्रून् (mṛdhaḥ-mṛdhakartyan śatrūn) (Si. 7-2) ("enemies, doers of harm" [as printed]).

Gist: Sāyaṇa says that, since Varuṇa's undertakings (vrata) rest in him unmoved like a rock, the worshippers bow to him; the tail of the bhāṣya gives the Vedic changes of dūḷabha (reference Pā. 6-3-109-5) and the filler kam.

Dūḷabha—O unobstructed one; Varuṇa—O Varuṇa; Hi—because; Te—in you; Parvate na—as seen in mountains; Apracyutāni—not movable by others; Vratāni—powers of support; Śritāni—have taken refuge (therefore); Purā—in former time; Te—directed to you; Namaḥ—worship with obeisance was offered; Uta—and; Nūnaṃ—now also; Bravāma—we recite praise with obeisance; Uta—moreover; Tuvijāta—Varuṇa, born in many regions; Aparaṃ—in future times also (we shall offer you worship of this same kind).

O unobstructed Varuṇa, because powers of support, immovable by others as in mountains, have taken refuge in you, we have offered worship with obeisance to you in former time and now also. O Varuṇa, born in many regions, in the same way we shall recite praises with obeisance in the future also. (The printed text has "ಅಪ್ರತಿಹನಾದ" for "ಅಪ್ರತಿಹತನಾದ" in the first line, as supplied.)

Printed English translation

As we have offered adoration to you, Varuua [sic], of old, in like manner as we offer it now so may we offer it in future (to you), you are everywhere present: for in you, who are difficult of attainment, as in an (immoveable) mountain, all holy acts are assembled, and are not to be dissevered.

Varuṇa is addressed by the word तुविजात (tuvijāta). Since his authority extends over many regions, he is described as born in many regions accordingly, and as दूळभ (dūḷabha)—one who cannot be harmed by anyone. त्वे—पर्वते न अप्रच्युतानि व्रतानि श्रितानि (tve—parvate na apracyutāni vratāni śritāni)—त्वयि शिलोच्चय इव अन्यैः प्रच्यावयितुमशक्यानि आश्रितानि (tvayi śiloccaya iva anyaiḥ pracyāvayitumaśakyāni āśritāni): Varuṇa's power of support cannot be destroyed by anyone, like mountains, rocks, earth and trees; so his might is described. Then, addressing Varuṇa of such abundant might, the fixed practice of the obeisance-worship and the like, offered by sacrificers in the three times, past, present and future, and being offered, is stated.

Gist: Sāyaṇa takes the prayer to be that Varuṇa discharge the debts incurred by forefathers and by the speaker, so that he enjoy no wealth earned by others, and be given means of livelihood in the many dawns that have passed in sleeplessness over debts; the tail gives the root sū (to urge) with the Vedic luṅ form.

Varuṇa—O Varuṇa; Ṛṇā—the debts incurred by our forefathers; Parā sāvīḥ—discharge; Adha—now; Matkṛtāni—discharge also the debts incurred by me; Rājan—O Varuṇa, the lord; Ahaṃ—I; Anyakṛtena—with wealth earned by others; Mā bhojaṃ—do not make me enjoy; Bhūyasīḥ—many times; Uṣasaḥ—the shining dawns; Avyuṣṭā innu—(because of the burden of debt) have become as if unrisen, like darkness; Tāsu—in such dawn-times; Naḥ—us; Jīvān—that we may have a peaceful life; Ā śādhi—make us free of debt.

O Varuṇa, discharge the debts incurred by our forefathers and the debts now incurred by me. O Varuṇa, the lord, do not let me enjoy pleasure with wealth earned by others [the supplied text of the Bhāvārtha ends here, in mid-sentence, at the end of this window].

p. 120

(Continuation of the Bhāvārtha of Ṛk 9 from p. 119:) ... do not do so. Because I am under the pressure of debt, many shining dawns have, as it were, not dawned, and have become like darkness. In such dawn-times make us free of debt, so that we may have a peaceful life.

Printed English translation

Discharge, Varuna, the debts (contracted) by my progenitors, and those now (contracted) by me; and may I not royal Varuna be dependent (on the debts contacted [sic]) by another: many are the mornings that have as it were, indeed not dawned : make us, Varuna, alive in them.

In this Ṛk the word ऋण (ṛṇa) (debt) and the verb परासावीः (parāsāvīḥ) are used only once. But since the words अध मत्कृतानि (adha matkṛtāni) are also used, Sāyaṇa repeats the object-word and the verb in explaining the sense: the debts incurred by the sacrificer's forefathers and the debts incurred by the sacrificer himself, both kinds, have to be paid by the sacrificer; hence the prayer is stated that Varuṇa grant that both kinds of debt be discharged.

On भूयसीः उषसः अव्युष्टा इन्नु (bhūyasīḥ uṣasaḥ avyuṣṭā innu): the word इत् (it) is given the sense of combination (samuccaya), and नु (nu) the sense of comparison. Sāyaṇa's words: भूयस्यः उषसः अपररात्रेषूत्ताय ऋणानि चिंतयतो जाग्रतो मम व्युष्टाअपि अव्युष्टकल्पाः आर्स (bhūyasyaḥ uṣasaḥ apararātreṣūttāya ṛṇāni ciṃtayato jāgrato mama vyuṣṭāapi avyuṣṭakalpāḥ ārsa) (as supplied; the last word, आर्स (ārsa), is doubtful [?]). That is: even when one is awake in the last watch of the night, thinking how to repay the debts, the dawns that have arrived and have passed one after another remain, as it were, as if they had not passed; thus the sacrificer's anxiety is shown to be abundant. And तासु नः जीवान् आशाधि (tāsu naḥ jīvān āśādhi): addressing Varuṇa, the prayer is made that, for the sacrificer who thinks much in those dawn-times, the debts be discharged (ऋणान्यपकृत्य (ṛṇānyapakṛtya)) and wealth sufficient for enjoyment be given (भोगपर्याप्तं धनं प्रयच्छ (bhogaparyāptaṃ dhanaṃ prayaccha)).

Gist: Sāyaṇa takes the Ṛk to ask Varuṇa to protect from the fear that a relative or friend reports from a dream concerning him, and from a thief or wolf that wishes to harm; the tail explains the verb दिप्सति (dipsati) (from dambh, desiderative) with optional absence of the augment.

Rājan—O lord; Varuṇa—O Varuṇa; Me—my; Yaḥ yujyaḥ—whichever father or other kinsman; Vā—or; Sakhā vā—whichever other relative; Svapne—in a dream (seen with reference to you); Bhayaṃ—the fear; Bhīrave—to the timid; Mahyaṃ—to me; Āha—explains and tells, from that too; Yaḥ stenaḥ vā—whichever thief; Vā—or; Vṛkaḥ—wolf; Naḥ—us; Dipsati [the supplied text has दिप्पति (dippati), as supplied]—harms; Tasmāt—from all that fear and that harm; Tvaṃ—you; Asmān—us; Pāhi—protect.

O lord Varuṇa, from whatever fear, seen in a dream with reference to you, that any father or other kinsman of mine, or any other relative, explains and tells to me, who am timid, or from whatever thief or wolf harms us, from all that fear and harm protect us completely.

Printed English translation

Protect us, Varuna, against every peril which a kinsman or a friend threatens me with alarmed in sleep; or from a thief or a wolf that attempts to destroy us.

p. 122

In this Ṛk the sacrificer prays for protection from Varuṇa, with removal of fear; the causes of fear are also stated. First, युज्यः—योजनसमर्थः पित्रादिः (yujyaḥ—yojanasamarthaḥ pitrādiḥ), a father or the like able to support; and सखा—समानख्यानः अन्योवा बांधवः (sakhā—samānakhyānaḥ anyovā bāṃdhavaḥ), a friend of like understanding with oneself, or a kinsman, indicates to the sacrificer a fear concerning the deity worshipped by the sacrificer; hence protection from this deity is sought.

Second, स्तेनः—चोरः, वृकः—अरण्यश्वा (stenaḥ—coraḥ, vṛkaḥ—araṇyaśvā): from creatures that cause harm, the thief and the wicked beasts that kill and eat in the forest (wolves), Varuṇa is prayed to protect.

Although the word स्तेन (stena) is not read by Yāska among the names of thieves, it is explained as स्तेनः कस्मात् संस्थानमस्मिन् पापकमिति नैरुक्ताः (stenaḥ kasmāt saṃsthānamasmin pāpakamiti nairuktāḥ) (Ni. 3-19) [the supplied text has पापकमिति (pāpakamiti), as supplied].

वृकः—अरण्यश्वा (vṛkaḥ—araṇyaśvā). The word वृक (vṛka) is read among the names of the thunderbolt (Ni. 3-11) and among the names of thieves (Ni. 3-19). It is also explained: वृकश्चंद्रमा भवति । विवृत ज्योतिष्को वा विकृतज्योतिष्टो वा, विक्रांतजोतिष्को वा (vṛkaścaṃdramā bhavati | vivṛta jyotiṣko vā vikṛtajyotiṣṭo vā, vikrāṃtajotiṣko vā) (Ni. 5-21); and वृको लांगलं भवति विकर्तनात् (vṛko lāṃgalaṃ bhavati vikartanāt) (Ni 6-26) — thus the meaning of the word वृक (vṛka) is explained. Sāyaṇa has explained the word as "wild dog (wolf)".

Gist: Sāyaṇa takes the Ṛk as a prayer that the sacrificer may never have to go to a rich, kind and generous patron and plead his kinsman's poverty, nor be emptied of well-regulated wealth; the grammatical tail explains शूनम् (śūnam) from śvi (to go, to grow), with elision of a letter, and सुयमात् (suyamāt).

(Readings as supplied: the Pada reads भूॅइदान्वः for the Saṃhitā's भूरिदान्नः; the bhāṣya and Pratipadārtha have भूरिदाव्यः; the bhāṣya has सुनीराः where the Saṃhitā and Pada have सुवीराः; the bhāṣya tail has an odd sequence "ಟುಓಟ್ವೈ". All left as supplied.)

Varuṇa—O Varuṇa; Maghonaḥ—of the wealthy; Priyasya—of the favourable one; Bhūridāvyaḥ—of him who gives abundantly, that is, of the rich man, in front of him; Ahaṃ—I; Āpeḥ—of my near kinsman; Śūnaṃ—the poverty; Mā ā vidaṃ—may I not (have to) tell it; Rājan—O lord Varuṇa; Suyamāt—from what is gathered under restraint (regulation); Rāyaḥ—from wealth; Mā ava sthāṃ—may I not become empty; (Vayaṃ—we); Suvīrāḥ—together with excellent sons; Vidathe—in the sacrificial house; Bṛhat—a mature hymn of praise; Vadema—we recite.

O Varuṇa, may I never, before a rich, favourable and abundantly generous man, say that my sons and other near kinsmen are suffering in poverty, and so ask him for wealth. May I never be emptied of the wealth gathered under restraint. Together with excellent sons we shall recite a mature hymn of praise in the sacrificial house.

Printed English translation

May I never (have to) represent, Varuna, the destitution of a (once) opulent, dear, and munificent kinsman : may I never, royal Varuna, be devoid of well-regulated riches : (and) may we, blessed with excellent descendants, worthily glorify you at this sacrifice.

By the word वरुण (varuṇa) the Āditya is here addressed; it has been explained earlier that Varuṇa is one of the twelve Ādityas.

मघोनः—धनवतः (maghonaḥ—dhanavataḥ). The word मघ (magha) is read among the names of wealth by Yāska (Ni. 3-9); the meaning "possessed of wealth" is explained.

प्रियस्य भूरिदान्वः आपेः शुनं मा आ विदं (priyasya bhūridānvaḥ āpeḥ śunaṃ mā ā vidaṃ) [the supplied text has शुनं (śunaṃ) here, against शूनं (śūnaṃ) in the bhāṣya] — बहुलस्य दातुराद्यस्य समीपे अस्मदीयाः पुत्रादयः क्षुधिता इति दारिद्रमभिदाय याचमानो मा भूवं (bahulasya dāturāḍyasya samīpe asmadīyāḥ putrādayaḥ kṣudhitā iti dāridramabhidāya yācamāno mā bhūvaṃ): the prayer is explained thus: may we, the sacrificers, not have to go near a wealthy man who is kind and gives abundantly, state that our sons and the rest are in poverty, and beg wealth.

राजन् सुयमात् रायः मा अवस्थाम्—सुष्ठु नियम्यते अनेन पुरुषो गृहे इति सुयमः (rājan suyamāt rāyaḥ mā avasthām—suṣṭu niyamyate anena puruṣo gṛhe iti suyamaḥ): Varuṇa is addressed by the word राजन् (rājan), and it is prayed that by his favour the wealth gathered by us, the sacrificers, may never perish.

Sūkta 29 (Maṇḍala 2)

The twenty-ninth sūkta.

Sāyaṇa's introduction to the sūkta

> धृतव्रता इति सप्तर्चं सप्तमं सूक्तं गार्त्समदस्य कूर्मस्य गृत्समदस्य वार्षं त्रैष्टुभं वैश्वदेवं । तथा चानुक्रांतं । धृतव्रताः सप्त वैश्वदेवमिति । गतो विनियोगः ॥

Gist: dhṛtavratāḥ is the seventh sūkta of Anuvāka 3, of seven ṛks, by Kūrma Gārtsamada or Gṛtsamada, in triṣṭubh metre, to the Viśvedevas; the Anukramaṇī is quoted; the application is stated as already given.

Anuvāda (Kannada). The sūkta dhṛtavratāḥ is the seventh sūkta in the third anuvāka. It has seven ṛks. The seer of this sūkta is Kūrma, son of Gṛtsamada, or Gṛtsamada himself; the deity is the Viśvedevas; the metre is triṣṭubh. In the Anukramaṇikā it is said ಧೃತವ್ರತಾಃ ಸಪ್ತ ವೈಶ್ವದೇವಂ (dhṛtavratāḥ sapta vaiśvadevaṃ) (the seven dhṛtavratāḥ are for the Viśvedevas). The application is laiṅgika.

Gist: O Ādityas, sons of Aditi, upholders of rites, seekers of favour: cast my sin of faulty performance far away, as a secretly delivering woman casts away her child; knowing the good you bestow, I call you for protection.

dhṛtavratāḥ—those who hold to their rites; iṣirāḥ—desired by all; ādityāḥ—O Ādityas; rahasūḥ iva—like a woman who has given birth in secret and throws the child far away so that no one sees it; āgaḥ—my sin, consisting of lapse in performance; mat—from me; āre—in a place very far away; karta—cast away and make it unseen; varuṇa—O Varuṇa; mitra—O Mitra; devāḥ—O Viśvedevas; vaḥ—to be obtained from you; bhadrasya—of the auspicious nature; vidvān—I who know; śṛṇvataḥ—you who hear my praise; vaḥ—you; avase—for protection; huve—I call.

O Ādityas, who hold to your rites and are prayed to by all: as a woman who has given birth in secret throws the child far away where no one sees it, so throw my sin of lapse in performance far from me, out of sight. O Varuṇa, Mitra and Viśvedevas, I who know the auspicious good that comes from you call you, who hear my praise, for protection.

English translation (as printed)

Adityas, upholders of pious works, and who are to be sought by all, remove sin far from me, like, a woman delivered in secret: knowing, Mitra, Varuna, and (universal) gods, the good that follows from your hearing our prayers, I invoke you for (our) protection.

p. 127

Running head: Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Varga 11, p. 127.

इषिराः—गमनशीलाः सर्वैरभ्येषणीयाः प्रार्थनीया वा (iṣirāḥ—gamanaśīlāḥ sarvairabhyeṣaṇīyāḥ prārthanīyā vā): Sāyaṇa explains the word as "of a moving nature; to be sought, or prayed to, by all", applying it as an epithet of the Ādityas: those of a roving nature, desired by all, worthy of being prayed to by all that their wishes be fulfilled. Yāska explains the word (Nirukta 4-7) as इषिरेण—ईषणेन ना एषणेन ना ऋषणेन ना (iṣireṇa—īṣaṇena nā eṣaṇena nā ṛṣaṇena nā). The Viśvedevas, sons of Aditi, are always of a moving nature; they are desired by all for the fulfilment of their tasks and wishes, and prayed to by all. Therefore may these Ādityas keep far away, that is, forgive or destroy, the offence in the form of a deficiency arising from variation in the performance of sacrifices and other rites by the sacrificer. Thus the Viśvedevas are addressed and taken to be sons of the goddess Aditi. The plural आदित्याः (ādityāḥ) is used in this ṛk; Sāyaṇa explains it as हे

आदित्याः अदितिपुत्राः हे विश्वे देवाः (he ādityāḥ aditiputrāḥ he viśve devāḥ). Yāska explains विश्वे देवाः—सर्वे देवाः (viśve devāḥ—sarvè devāḥ) (Nirukta 12-40).

रहसूः इव—रहसि अन्यैरज्ञाते प्रदेशे सूयत इति रहसूः व्यभिचारिणी । सा यथा गर्भं पातयित्वा दूरदेशे परित्यजति तद्वत् (rahasūḥ iva—rahasi anyairajñāte pradeśe sūyata iti rahasūḥ vyabhicāriṇī | sā yathā garbhaṃ pātayitvā dūradeśe parityajati tadvat): since she gives birth in a place unknown to others and without human traffic, the unchaste woman is here designated by the word रहसूः (rahasūḥ).

As this woman throws far away the child she has borne, so may the offences of the sacrificer, the deficiencies consisting of non-performance of rites, be removed by the favour of these Ādityas or Viśvedevas; thus the prayer.

Addressing the sons of Aditi as Mitra, Varuṇa and Devāḥ, the poet says भद्रस्य विद्वान्—युष्माभिः करणीयं श्रेयः जानन् (bhadrasya vidvān—yuṣmābhiḥ karaṇīyaṃ śreyaḥ jānan): that he knows the greatness of the good which these gods bestow on the sacrificer; and शृण्वतः (śṛṇvataḥ): because these gods hear the hymns recited by the sacrificer, he will call them for his protection.

Gist: O gods, you are wisdom and strength; drive our enemies, the demons and the like, to a hidden place; overcome our foes, and make us happy today and hereafter.

devāḥ—O gods; pramatiḥ—excellent understanding; yūyam—you yourselves are; ojaḥ—strength; yūyam—you also; yūyam—you; dveṣāṃsi—the demons and others who hate us; sanutaḥ—to a hidden, distant place; yuyota—drive away; abhikṣattāraḥ—you who strike enemies on every side; abhi ca kṣamadhvam—defeat them completely; adya ca—today also; naḥ—us; mṛḷayata—make happy; aparaṃ ca—on another day also (make us happy).

O gods, you yourselves are excellent understanding and strength. Drive the demons and others who hate us to a hidden, distant place. You who strike enemies on every side, defeat them completely. Make us happy today, and in the same way hereafter.

English Translation

You, gods, are intelligence, you are vigour: drive away the malevolent subduers (of enemies), overcome them entirely, and grant us felicity both now and in future.

देवाः (devāḥ): Yāska explains the word deva as देवो दानाद्वा, दीपनाद्वा द्योतनाद्वा, द्युस्थानो भवतीति वा (devo dānādvā, dīpanādvā dyotanādvā, dyusthāno bhavatīti vā) (Nirukta 6-15; the text as supplied reads "ञ." for "ञ.").

ओजः (ojaḥ): This word is read by Yāska among the names of water (Nirukta 2-24) and the names of strength (Nirukta 3-9), and explained as ओज ओजतेर्वा उज्जतेर्वा (oja ojatervā ujjatervā) (Nirukta 6-8). Sāyaṇa takes the meaning here to be "strength".

The gods are addressed. In regard to the sacrificer these gods are प्रमतिः—प्रकृष्टा मतिर्यस्य पित्रादेः (pramatiḥ—prakṛṣṭā matiryasya pitrādeḥ): protectors such as a father possessed of excellent understanding; and they are strength itself, able to carry out for the sacrificer the whole business of this world. The verse says that these gods should keep far away the demons, pisācas and the like who harm the sacrificer.

These gods are अभिक्षत्तारः—अभितः शत्रून् हिंसितारः (abhikṣattāraḥ—abhitaḥ śatrūn hiṃsitāraḥ), destroyers of enemies on every side; therefore, having destroyed the sacrificer's enemies, may they protect or make us happy अद्य अपरं च कालं मृळयत (adya aparaṃ ca kālaṃ mṛḷayata), both now and in the time to come. Thus the prayer is made.

Gist: What can we do for you, gods, now or later, or with an ancient, attainable rite? We cannot serve you adequately; grant us imperishable well-being. The grammatical tail (a rule on the dvandva of deity names, and the ending of the imperative) is not explained here.

devāḥ—O gods; vaḥ—to you; nu—now; kimu kṛṇavāma—what can we do? (how are we able to offer worship in a fitting manner?); apareṇa—at another time; kiṃ—in what manner can we serve fittingly?; vasavaḥ—O gods; sanena—with an ancient; āpyena—practicable rite, how can we worship you?; aditē—O Aditi; indrāmarutaḥ—O Indra and Maruts; yūyam—you; svastiṃ—imperishable welfare; naḥ—to us; dadhāta—bring about.

O gods, whether now or at another time, how are we able to offer you worship in a fitting manner? O gods, with a rite that is ancient and practicable, how can we worship you? O Aditi, O Indra and Maruts, bring about for us imperishable welfare.

English Translation

What may we do for you, gods, either now, or in future: what may we do, Vasus, by perpetual and practicable (acts of devotion): Do you, Mitra, Aditi, Indra, and the Maruts, maintain our well-being.

वसवः—वासयितारः (vasavaḥ—vāsayitāraḥ): Yāska uses the word vasu in the senses of food (Nirukta 5-19), wealth (Nirukta 3-9) and ray (Nirukta 2-15). Here it is explained as "those who make one dwell in comfort".

The gods are addressed. These gods always make all beings dwell in comfort; the sacrificer says that even in the present time, the time of performing the sacrifice, he is unable to render them suitable service (worship and the like), and likewise in the past and future times and at all times; having thus declared his incapacity, he prays that the gods, forgiving this fault of the sacrificer, grant us imperishable protection.

स्वस्तिं-अविनाशं (svastiṃ-avināśaṃ): Yāska explains स्वस्तीत्यविनाशिनाम । अस्तिरभिपूजितः सु अस्तीति (svastītyavināśināma | astirabhipūjitaḥ su astīti) (Nirukta 2-21). Sāyaṇa gives the meaning "without destruction".

Gist: O gods, you alone are our kinsmen who bring wealth; make me, the petitioner, happy; let not your chariot be slow on account of our sacrifice; may we not be wearied while we have friends like you. The grammatical tail concerns the suffix vatup after yuṣmad and the substitution of ā.

p. 132

Running head: Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya-sahitā, Maṇḍala 2 [sic, as supplied], Adhyāya 3, Sūkta 29, p. 132.

हये देवाः (haye devāḥ)—O gods; यूयमित् (yūyamit)—you indeed; आपयः (āpayaḥ)—as kinsmen, givers of wealth; स्थे (sthe) [sic: as supplied]—you are; ते (te)—such you; नाधमानस्य (nādhamānasya) [as supplied; the Saṃhitā has नाधमानाय (nādhamānāya)]—to one who asks for the desired object; मध्यं (madhyaṃ) [as supplied; the Saṃhitā has मह्यं (mahyaṃ)]—to me; मृळत (mṛḷata)—bring about happiness; वः (vaḥ)—your; रथः (rathaḥ)—chariot; ऋते (ṛte)—(when coming) for our sacrifice; मध्यमवाट् मा भूत् (madhyamavāṭ mā bhūt)—let it not be slow-moving; युष्मावत्तु (yuṣmāvattu) [as supplied; the Saṃhitā has युष्मावत्सु (yuṣmāvatsu)]—such as you; आपिषु (āpiṣu)—while there are kinsmen; मा श्रमिष्म (mā śramiṣma)—may we never be wearied.

O gods, you yourselves are our kinsmen, givers of wealth. Being such, bring happiness to me, who ask for the desired object. When your chariot comes for our sacrifice, let it not be slow-moving but come swiftly. While we have kinsmen such as you, may we never suffer weariness.

English Translation

O gods, you, verily, are our kinsmen : being so, grant felicity to me your suppliant; let not your chariot be tardy in coming to the sacrifice ; let us never be weary of relatives such as you are.

हये देवाः यूयमित् आपयः स्थ (haye devāḥ yūyamit āpayaḥ stha)—यूयमेव धनस्य प्रापयितारो बंधवो भवथ (yūyameva dhanasya prāpayitāro baṃdhavo bhavatha): here Sāyaṇa gives the particle इत् (it) the emphatic sense of एव (eva) (an upasarga, as the text calls it), and explains आपयः (āpayaḥ) as kinsmen who give wealth. हये (haye) is a particle of address. The verse addresses the gods, saying the sacrificers know the gods to be their kinsmen who bring wealth; the wish expressed in नाधमानाय मह्यं मृळत (nādhamānāya mahyaṃ mṛḷata) is that the gods, being kinsmen of the sacrificer, grant happiness to him who asks for desired benefits and praises them.

वः रथः ऋते मध्यमवाट् माभूत् (vaḥ rathaḥ ṛte madhyamavāṭ mābhūt)—युष्माकं रथः अस्मदीये यज्ञे मध्यमेन गमनेन वाहको मा भूत् । शीघ्रं युष्मान् वहतु (yuṣmākaṃ rathaḥ asmadīye yajñe madhyamena gamanena vāhako mā bhūt | śīghraṃ yuṣmān vahatu): the prayer is that the gods' chariot, without slow movement, bring the gods quickly for the sacrificer's sacrifice.

युष्मावत्सु आपिषु मा श्रमिष्म (yuṣmāvatsu āpiṣu mā śramiṣma)—युष्मत्सदृशेषु बंधुषु सत्तु श्रांता मा भूम (yuṣmatsadṛśeṣu baṃdhuṣu sattu śrāṃtā mā bhūma): the state prayed for is that we sacrificers, while we have kinsmen like the gods, may be without any weariness at all.

Gist: O gods, alone among you I have committed much sin; correct me as a father corrects a straying son; let your snares and sins be far from me; do not seize me, your son, as a fowler seizes a bird. The tail explains the perfect of शासु (śāsu) and the भ (bha) substitution in the aorist of ग्रह् (grah).

देवाः (devāḥ)—O gods; वः (vaḥ)—in your regard; एकः (ekaḥ)—being alone; भूरि (bhūri)—abundant; आगः (āgaḥ)—sin; प्र मिमय (pra mimaya)—I have committed; यत् (yat)—with which freedom and affection; पिता (pitā)—a father; कितवं इव (kitavaṃ iva)—as he corrects the fault of a son on a bad path and urges him onto the good path (so you also); मा (mā)—me; शशास (śaśāsa)—correct properly and direct to behave on the good path; पाशाः (pāśāḥ)—your snares; आरे (āre)—be far from us; अघानि (aghāni)—sins; आरे (āre)—be far; विमिव (vimiva)—(as a fowler) catches birds; पुत्रे (putre)—in me, who am as a son to you; मा मा अधि ग्रेभिष्ट (mā mā adhi grebhiṣṭa) [as supplied; the Saṃhitā has ग्रभीष्ट (grabhīṣṭa)]—do not cast a binding snare and bind me.

O gods, being alone, I have committed abundant sin against you. With the freedom and pride with which a father corrects the fault of a son on a bad path and urges him onto the good path, so do you also correct me properly and direct me to behave on the good path.

p. 134

Running head: Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya-sahitā, Maṇḍala 2 [sic, as supplied], Adhyāya 3, Sūkta 29, p. 134.

(The Bhāvārtha continues from p. 133.) Let your snares be far from us, and let sins be far. As a fowler catches birds, do not cast a binding snare on me, who am as a son to you, and bind me.

English Translation

Alone among you, I have committed many offences, (correct them) as a father corrects a naughty(son): far from me, gods, be bonds; far from me be sins: seize not upon me (your) son as (a fowler) catches a bird.

The meaning that Sāyaṇa gives to the first half of this Ṛk does not fit well. वः एकः भूरि आगः प्रमिमय (vaḥ ekaḥ bhūri āgaḥ pramimaya)—युष्माकं मध्ये अहमेकस्सन् बहुलं पापं अहं प्रकर्षेण अहिंसिषं (yuṣmākaṃ madhyè ahamekassan bahulaṃ pāpaṃ ahaṃ prakarṣeṇa ahiṃsiṣaṃ): addressing the gods, "I alone have committed abundant sins against you." यत् मां पितेव कितवं शशास (yat māṃ piteva kitavaṃ śaśāsa)—यथा अपथप्रवृत्तं पुत्रं पिता अनुशास्ति तथा अनुशिष्यं चकृड्वे (yathā apathapravṛttaṃ putraṃ pitā anuśāsti tathā anuśiṣyaṃ cakṛḍve) [as supplied]: as a father corrects a son on a bad path and punishes him so that he is on the right path, so you should instruct me, who have committed many sins; this is Sāyaṇa's rendering. The text remarks that this sense is not quite fitting; it might perhaps fit if the word मध्ये (madhyè) in Sāyaṇa's युष्माकं मध्ये (yuṣmākaṃ madhyè) / अस्माकं मध्ये (asmākaṃ madhyè) were omitted.

मा माधि पुत्रे विमिव (mā mādhi putre vimiva)—पुत्रे पश्यति सति पितरं संतं पक्षिणमिव व्याधः मा गृह्णीध्वं (putre paśyati sati pitaraṃ saṃtaṃ pakṣiṇamiva vyādhaḥ mā gṛhṇīdhvaṃ): as a fowler catches a bird, do not cast a snare on me, who am like your son, and bind me; and अघानि आरे संतु (aghāni āre saṃtu): the sins that bind us are also to be far from us. The gods are addressed with this prayer.

Gist: O adorable gods, turn to us today; fearing, may I obtain your heartfelt protection; protect us from the wolf's (or thief's) violence and from the one who causes calamity. The tail explains व्यय (vyaya) (root vyay, bhū-class), निजुरः (nijuraḥ) (from the root jūr, with a Vedic shortening) and त्राध्वं (trādhvaṃ) = त्रायध्वं (trāyadhvaṃ).

यजत्राः (yajatrāḥ)—O gods worthy of sacrifice; अद्य (adya)—at this time of the sacrifice; अर्वाचः (arvāṃcaḥ)—facing us; भवत (bhavata)—be; वः (vaḥ)—your; हार्दि (hārdi)—protection given with affection; भयमानः (bhayamānaḥ)—I, who am afraid; आ व्ययेयं (ā vyayeyaṃ)—may I obtain fully; देवाः (devāḥ)—O gods; वृकस्य (vṛkasya)—of the thief or the wolf; निजुरः (nijuraḥ)—from the violence; नः (naḥ)—us; त्राध्वं (trādhvaṃ)—protect; यजत्राः (yajatrāḥ)—O revered gods; अवपदः (avapadaḥ)—calamities; कर्तात् (kartāt)—from one who causes; त्राध्वं (trādhvaṃ)—protect.

O gods worthy of sacrifice, be facing us at this time of the sacrifice. May I, being afraid, obtain fully your protection given with affection. O revered gods, protect us from the violence of the thief. Protect us also from those who cause calamities.

English Translation

Adorable (deities), be present to-day, that, apprehensive of danger, I may feel sure of your hearty (support): protect us, gods, from the rapacity of the wolf: protect us, adorable (deities), from him who would work us misfortune.

p. 136

Running head: [136] Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya-sahitā [Maṇḍala 2 as supplied, Adhyāya 3, Sūkta 29].

यजत्राः (yajatrāḥ)—the word has been explained as "worthy of sacrifice". By it the gods worthy of sacrifice are addressed: because the sacrificers are fearful, the gods' presence at the times of sacrifice is prayed for, so that the sacrificers may receive the gods' wholehearted protection. After the prayer for protection from fear caused by the gods, protection for the sacrificers is prayed for here from the visible harmful creatures, the thief and the wolf, and from wicked people who cause calamity.

वृकस्य (vṛkasya)—तस्करस्य अरण्यतुनो वा (taskarasya araṇyatuno vā) [sic, as supplied, probably for araṇyaśuno]. The many meanings of the word vṛka were explained earlier. Here the meaning given is the thief or the wolf (wild dog) and other creatures that do violence.

वः हार्दि भयमानः आ व्यवेयं (vaḥ hārdi bhayamānaḥ ā vyaveyaṃ) [as supplied; the Saṃhitā and bhāṣya have व्ययेयं (vyayeyaṃ)]—हे देवा युष्माकं हृद्यवस्थितं रक्षणं बिभ्यदहमाभिमुख्येन प्राप्नुयां (he devā yuṣmākaṃ hṛdyavasthitaṃ rakṣaṇaṃ bibhyadahamābhimukhyena prāpnuyāṃ). O gods, it is in your minds to remove the fear I have and protect me; may I obtain that protection. What is the fear that has come upon me?—यजत्राः निजुरः वृकस्य अवपदः कर्तात् त्राध्वं (yajatrāḥ nijuraḥ vṛkasya avapadaḥ kartāt trādhvaṃ): O gods worthy of sacrifice, remove the fear that may come from the violent wolf, the thief, and wicked people who cause calamities, and protect me; thus the gods are prayed to.

The tail explains शूनं (śūnaṃ) (loss of a letter, Vedic; or from the root śvi, with sūtras on the augment and contraction, numbers not legible in this note) and सुयमात् (suyamāt).

वरुण (varuṇa)—O Varuṇa; मघोनः (maghonaḥ)—of the wealthy, प्रियस्य (priyasya)—the favourable, भूरिदाव्यः (bhūridāvyaḥ)—the lavish giver, the rich man (before him); अहं (ahaṃ)—I; आपेः (āpeḥ)—of my near kinsman; शूनं (śūnaṃ)—the poverty; मा आ विदं (mā ā vidaṃ)—may I not have to state; राजन् (rājan)—O Varuṇa, lord; सुयमात् (suyamāt)—from [wealth] accumulated in due order; रायः (rāyaḥ)—from wealth; मा अव स्थां (mā ava sthāṃ)—may I not be left empty; (वयं (vayaṃ)—we); सुवीराः (suvīrāḥ)—together with excellent sons; विदथे (vidathe)—in the sacrificial house; बृहत् (bṛhat)—a sublime hymn; वदेम (vadema)—we recite.

O Varuṇa, may I not have to go before the rich man, who is wealthy, favourable and a lavish giver, and say that my sons and other near kinsmen suffer from poverty, asking him for wealth. May I not be left empty of wealth accumulated in due order. With excellent sons we shall recite a sublime hymn in the sacrificial house.

Note on readings: the Saṃhitā has भूरिदान्न *(bhūridānna), the Pada* भूॅइदान्वः *(bhūridānvaḥ) and the bhāṣya* भूरिदाव्यो *(bhūridāvyo), as supplied; the Pada's* भूॅइदान्वः *(bhūridānvaḥ) and the Pratipadārtha's* भूरिदाव्यः *(bhūridāvyaḥ) differ. The Pada ends "॥ ८ ॥" as printed.*

English Translation

May I never (have to) represent, Varuna, the destitution of a (once) opulent, dear, and munificent kinsman : may I never, royal Varuna, be devoid of well-regulated riches : (and) may we, blessed with excellent descendants, worthily glorify you at this sacrifice.

By the word वरुण (varuṇa) the Āditya is addressed here. That Varuṇa too is one of the twelve Ādityas has been explained earlier.

मघोनः (maghonaḥ)—धनवतः (dhanavataḥ) (of the wealthy). The word magha is read among the names for wealth by Yāska (Ni. 3-9). The meaning is explained as "one who has wealth".

राजन् सुयमात् रायः मा अवस्थाम् (rājan suyamāt rāyaḥ mā avasthām)—the explanation सुष्ठु नियम्यते अनेन पुरुषो गृहे इति सुयमः (suṣṭu niyamyate anena puruṣo gṛhe iti suyamaḥ) is given. Addressing Varuṇa by the word rājan, it is prayed that by this Varuṇa's favour the wealth accumulated by us, the sacrificers, may never be destroyed.

Sūkta 30 (Maṇḍala 2)

The thirtieth sūkta.

Sāyaṇa's introduction to the sūkta

> ऋतं देवायेत्येकादशर्चमष्टमं सूक्तं गार्त्समदं । अंत्या जगती शिष्टास्त्रिष्टुभः । प्र हि क्रतुमित्येषेंद्रासोमदेवताका । सरस्वति त्वमस्मानित्यर्धर्चः सारस्वतः । यो नः सनुत्य इत्येषा बार्हस्पत्या । अंत्या मारुती । शिष्टा ऐंद्र्यः । तथा चानुक्रांतं । ऋतमेकादश जगत्त्यंतं षष्ठ्यैंद्रासोमी सरस्वति त्वमिति सारस्वतोऽर्धर्चो यो नो बार्हस्पत्या तं वो मारुतीति ॥ गतो विनियोगः ॥

Gist: ṛtaṃ devāya is the eighth sūkta of Anuvāka 3, of eleven ṛks, of the Gārtsamada seer; the last ṛk is jagatī, the rest triṣṭubh; the deities are named ṛk by ṛk (Indra; Indra and Soma; Sarasvatī; Bṛhaspati; the Maruts); the Anukramaṇī is quoted; the application is stated as already given.

Anuvāda (Kannada). The sūkta ऋतं देवाय (ṛtaṃ devāya) is the eighth sūkta in the third anuvāka. It has eleven ṛks. The seer of this sūkta is Gṛtsamada; the last ṛk of the sūkta is of jagatī metre; the remaining ṛks are of triṣṭubh metre. In this sūkta the ṛk प्र हि क्रतुं (pra hi kratuṃ) (the 6th ṛk) has Indra and Soma as deity; the first half of the ṛk सरस्वति त्वमस्मान् (sarasvati tvamasmān) (the 8th ṛk) has Sarasvatī as deity; the ṛk यो नः सनुत्य (yo naḥ sanutya) (the 9th ṛk) has Bṛhaspati as deity; the last ṛk (the 11th ṛk) has the Maruts as deity. The remaining ṛks (1-5, 7, the latter half of 8, and 10) have Indra as deity. In the Anukramaṇikā it is said ऋतमेकादश जगत्तंतं षष्ठैंद्रासोमी सरस्वति त्वमिति

Gist: For Indra's sacrifice the waters never rest; their stream flows every day; the question "in how long a time was their first creation?" implies that they are eternal.

ऋतं (ṛtaṃ)—the water in the form of rain; कृण्वते (kṛṇvate)—to the maker; देवाय (devāya)—to the divine one; सवित्रे (savitre)—to the impeller of all affairs; अहिघ्ने (ahighne)—to the slayer of Vṛtra; इंद्राय (iṃdrāya)—for the sacrifice directed to Indra; आपः (āpaḥ)—the waters; न रमंते (na ramaṃte)—never find rest; अपां (apāṃ)—of (such) waters; अक्तुः (aktuḥ)—the flow; अहरहः (aharahaḥ)—every day; याति (yāti)—flows; आसां (āsāṃ)—of them; प्रथमः (prathamaḥ)—the first; सर्गः (sargaḥ)—creation; कियात्या (kiyātyā)—at what time did it happen?

The waters never find rest for the sake of the sacrifice directed to Indra, who makes the water in the form of rain, who is divine, who is the impeller of all affairs, and the slayer of Vṛtra. The flow of such waters flows every day. At what time did their first creation happen? That is to say, they are without beginning.

p. 141

Running head: Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Varga 12, p. 141.

Printed English translation

The waters cease not (to flow in libations) to the divine Indra, the sender of rain, the animator (of all), the slayer of Ahi; day by day proceeds the current of the waters; at what period of time was their first creation.

ऋतं-वृष्टिलक्षणं उदकं (ṛtaṃ-vṛṣṭilakṣaṇaṃ udakaṃ): Although the word ṛta has many meanings (truth, sacrifice, water), here the sense is given as rain-water.

देवाय— द्योतमानाय (devāya— dyotamānāya): Since the word deva is said to have the grounds of usage dāna (giving), dīpana (illumining), dyotana (shining) and dyusthāna-sthiti (dwelling in heaven), the sense is explained, among the various etymologies, as "the one who shines".

इंद्राय (iṃdrāya): The etymology of the word indra (Ni. 10-8) is also stated in many ways. It is explained that for the sacrifice performed in honour of Indra, who creates rain-water, who shines always, who impels everything in its own way, and who destroyed the demon Vṛtra, the waters flow in fear; and that this current of waters flows forward every day without the slightest hindrance.

Gist: The man who offered food to Vṛtra was pointed out by Indra's mother Aditi to Indra, who slew him; for Indra's pleasure the rivers cut their paths and flow daily to the ocean.

यः (yaḥ)—the man who; वृत्राय (vṛtrāya)—to the demon; सिनं (sinaṃ)—food; अत्र (atra)—in this place of cooking, to offer; अभरिष्यत् (abhariṣyat)—procured (food); तं (taṃ)—that man; जनित्रि (janitri)—Aditi, Indra's mother; विदुषे (viduṣe)—to the wise Indra; प्र उवाच (pra uvāca)—declared; अस्मै (asmai)—of this Indra; अनु जोषं (anu joṣaṃ)—following the wish; पथः (pathaḥ)—paths; रदंतीः (radaṃtīḥ)—digging out; धुनयः (dhunayaḥ)—the rivers; दिवेदिवे (divedive)—every day; अर्थं (arthaṃ)—to their destination, the ocean; यंति (yaṃti)—go and join.

The man who procured food in this place of cooking in order to offer it to the demon, that man Aditi, Indra's mother, declared to the wise Indra. Following the wish of this Indra, the rivers, digging out their paths of their own accord, go and join every day the ocean, their destination.

Printed English translation

His mother, (Aditi), declared to him the man who had offered (sacrificial) food to Vritra; obedient to his pleasure, the rivers, tracing out their paths. flow day by day to their object, (the ocean).

वृत्राय—असुराय (vṛtrāya—asurāya): The meaning of the word vṛtra is stated by Yāska (Ni. 2-16); it is also read among the names of cloud (Si. 2-22) [sic as supplied] and stated among the names of wealth (Ni. 3-9). Here the sense "demons" is given.

The word धुनयः (dhunayaḥ) is stated among the names of rivers (Si. 2-24) and is explained as धुनिः धुनोतेः (dhuniḥ dhunoteḥ) (Si. 5-12).

The grammatical tail (roots ह्यग्रहोर्भः (hṛgrahorbhaḥ), दु द्रु गतौ (du dru gatau), शपः श्लुः (śapaḥ śluḥ)) is noted without explanation.

Hi — because (Vṛtra the demon); antarikṣe — in the atmosphere; ūrdhvaḥ — rising higher and higher; adhi asthāt — stood pervading everything; adha — therefore; vṛtrāya — towards Vṛtra; vadhaṃ — the thunderbolt, the instrument of slaying; pra jabhāra — (Indra) hurled; hi — that Vṛtra; mihaṃ — the cloud that sheds rain; vasānaḥ

— [the Kannada reads "having struck", as printed]; īṃ — this Indra; upa adudrot — came rushing upon (him), to attack; tigmāyudhaḥ — the one with the sharp weapon; indraḥ — Indra; śatruṃ — the enemy Vṛtra; ajayat — conquered.

Because Vṛtra, rising higher and higher in the atmosphere, stood pervading everything, Indra hurled his thunderbolt at him. Vṛtra, covering himself with the rain-shedding cloud, came rushing upon Indra to attack him. Indra, who has the sharp weapon, conquered his enemy Vṛtra.

Printed English translation

Inasmuch as he had soared aloft above the firmament, Indra hurled against Vritra his destructive (thunderbolt): enveloped in a cloud, he rushed upon Indra, but the wielder of the sharp-edged weapon triumphed over his foe.

In this Ṛk the battle between the demon Vṛtra and Indra is described. Explaining the meaning of the word Vṛtra, Yāska says: मेघ इति नैरुक्ताः । त्वाष्टोऽसुर इत्यैतिहासिकाः । (megha iti nairuktāḥ | tvāṣṭo 'sura ityaitihāsikāḥ |) अपां जोतिषश्च मिश्रीभावकर्मणो वर्षकर्म जायते । (apāṃ jotiṣaśca miśrībhāvakarmaṇo varṣakarma jāyate |) तत्रोपमार्थेन युद्धवर्णा भवंति । (tatropamārthena yuddhavarṇā bhavaṃti |) अहिवत्तु खलु मंत्रवर्णा ब्राह्मणवादाश्च । (ahivattu khalu maṃtravarṇā brāhmaṇavādāśca |) निवृद्ध्या शरीरस्य स्रोतांसि निवारयांचकार । (nivṛddhyā śarīrasya srotāṃsi nivārayāṃcakāra |) तस्मिन् हते प्रसस्यंदिर आपः । (tasmin hate prasasyaṃdira āpaḥ |) वृत्रो वृणोतीर्वा, वर्ततीर्वा वर्धतीर्वा । (vṛtro vṛṇotīrvā, vartatīrvā vardhatīrvā |) यदवृणोत् तत् वृत्रस्य वृत्रत्वमिति विज्ञायते । (yadavṛṇot tat vṛtrasya vṛtratvamiti vijñāyate |) यदवर्तत तत् वृत्रस्य वृत्रत्वमिति विज्ञायते । (yadavartata tat vṛtrasya vṛtratvamiti vijñāyate |) यदवर्धत तत् वृत्रस्य वृत्रत्वमिति विज्ञायते । (yadavardhata tat vṛtrasya vṛtratvamiti vijñāyate |) (Ni. 2-18)

The etymologists (Nairuktas) have said that Vṛtra means a cloud. In the cloud, after the waters have gathered together through the rays of the sun, rain is produced by the difference (greater or lesser proportion) in the mixture of light and water. This relation of less and more is described in the various Ṛks by comparing it with a battle. The cloud keeps the waters in a dense (solid) state and, without pouring rain on the earth, holds back the flow of the rivers. When these clouds are broken to pieces the waters come to the earth and so the rivers flow: thus one view (opinion) has been explained. In the Purāṇas it is said that Vṛtra the demon was the son of one Tvaṣṭṛ; that he held back even the clouds that pour rain-water, took on a body larger than they, grew every day, made the world waterless and was a thorn to the world; and that Indra struck and destroyed him with his thunderbolt and protected the world. Relying on this historical view, the power of Indra is described here. In the preceding Ṛk the flowing of the rivers and waters is stated through the very description of the slaying of Vṛtra. Because the word Vṛtra is derived from the root वृधु वृदौ (vṛdhu vṛdau), which teaches the sense of growing, here अंतरिक्षे ऊर्ध्वः अधि अस्थात् (aṃtarikṣe ūrdhvaḥ adhi asthāt) is described as वृतः अंतरिक्षे सर्वमावृत्य अधिष्ठितोऽभूत् (vṛtaḥ aṃtarikṣe sarvamāvṛtya adhiṣṭhitoSbhūt), that is, he stood pervading and covering everything in the atmosphere. And because the word Vṛtra is also derived from the root वृञ् वरणे (vṛñ varaṇe), which teaches the sense of covering, and from the root वृतु वर्तने (vṛtu vartane), which teaches the sense of being, the meaning of वृत्रः मिहं वसानः उप अदुद्रोत् (vṛtraḥ mihaṃ vasānaḥ upa adudrot) is described as वृष्टेः सेक्तारं मेघं आच्छादर्य (vṛṣṭeḥ sektāraṃ meghaṃ ācchādarya) [sic, as supplied]: the demon Vṛtra, covering himself with the cloud that pours rain-water, confronted Indra.

तिग्मायुधः (tigmāyudhaḥ)—तीष्णायुधः (tīṣṇāyudhaḥ) [as supplied]. The word तिग्म (tigma) is read by Yāska among the names of the thunderbolt (Ni. 3-11). Sāyaṇa has given the meaning of this word as: Indra possesses a sharp weapon.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Indra, great protector: with the burning weapon strike, as with lightning, the mighty sons of the Asura who have shut the doors. O Indra, as you formerly smote the Asuras with the thunderbolt, so now destroy our enemy.

Printed English translation

Pierce, Brihaspathi, with a radiant shaft, as with a thunderbolt, the sons of Asura guarding his gates : in like manner as you formerly slew Vritra by your prowess, so now destroy our enemy.

वृकद्वरसः असुरस्य वीरान् (vṛkadvarasaḥ asurasya vīrān)—वृकाणि संवृतानि द्वारांसि द्वाराणि येषां (vṛkāṇi saṃvṛtāni dvārāṃsi dvārāṇi yeṣāṃ). For the word वीर (vīra) he gives वीरान्—पुत्रान् यद्वा संवृतद्वारानसुरस्य वीरान् (vīrān—putrān yadvā saṃvṛtadvārānasurasya vīrān). For the word वृकद्वरसः (vṛkadvarasaḥ) two kinds of meaning are given: the sons of the Asura who have closed the entrances so that they cannot be entered; or the Asura heroes who have closed the ways so that Indra cannot enter.

To open the doors closed by the Asuras: अश्नव तपुषा विध्य—दीप्तेन वज्रेण अशन्येव ताडय (aśnava tapuṣā vidhya—dīptena vajreṇa aśanyeva tāḍaya). The meaning is explained thus: let him strike the Asuras' sons and the Asura heroes with the thunderbolt that blazes with his own splendour, as one strikes with lightning. And पुरा चित् धृषता यथा जघंथ एव आस्माकं शत्रुं जहि (purā cit dhṛṣatā yathā jaghaṃtha eva āsmākaṃ śatruṃ jahi): the sense of "and" is given to the word चित् (cit), and the sacrificers' wish is described: as Indra formerly struck the enemies with the thunderbolt that overcomes enemies, so may he now strike the enemies of the sacrificers.

Indra—O Indra; yena—with which thunderbolt; mandasānaḥ—you who are praised with hymns; śatruṃ—the enemy; nijūrvāḥ—you slew (such a one); aśmānaṃ—the hard thunderbolt; divaḥ—from the sky; uccā—you who stand in the upper region; ava kṣipa—hurl upon the enemy; tokasya—of the son (and); bhūreḥ—who is to be nourished; tanayasya—of the grandson; sāt—for the nourishing; gonāṃ—for the nourishing of the cows; asmān—to us; arthaṃ [as printed; the Saṃhitā and bhāṣya have अर्धं (ardhaṃ)]—prosperity of wealth; kṛṇutāt—bring about.

O Indra, you who are praised by the singers: with the hard thunderbolt with which you slay the enemy, standing in the upper region hurl it from the sky upon the enemy. विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Addressing Indra: दिवः अश्मानं उच्चा अव क्षिप—उच्चैर्वर्तमानस्त्वं नभसस्सकाशात् अस्मदीयान् शत्रून् उद्दिश्य अश्ववत्कठिनं वज्रं प्रक्षिप (divaḥ aśmānaṃ uccā ava kṣipa —uccairvartamānastvaṃ nabhasassakāśāt asmadīyān śatrūn uddiśya aśvavatkaṭhinaṃ vajraṃ prakṣipa) [sic: अश्ववत् (aśvavat) as supplied; the bhāṣya has अश्मवत् (aśmavat)]. Giving for the word अश्मानं (aśmānaṃ) the meaning "harder than stone", the text expresses the wish that Indra, who stands in the highest region of all, may hurl such a thunderbolt for the destruction of our enemies, the sacrificers' enemies.

the word तोक (toka) is explained as son and the word तनय (tanaya) as grandson. Here, addressing Indra, the sacrificers pray that their sons, grandsons (children's children), cows and the like may be nourished, and that wealth and the like may increase so that they may live in comfort.

Yāska gives many meanings of the word गो (go) (Ni. 2-5). Sāyaṇa explains it as "cows".

In this Ṛk the two deities Indra and Soma are praised.

क्रतुं (kratuṃ)—द्वेषस्य कर्तारं (dveṣasya kartāraṃ): the word क्रतु (kratu) is stated by Yāska among the names of action (Ni. 3-2) and among the names of wisdom (Ni. 3-13). It is explained as क्रतुं कर्म ना प्रज्ञां वा (kratuṃ karma nā prajñāṃ vā) (Ni. 2-28) [as printed]. Sāyaṇa gives the meaning "one who makes hatred". Indra and Soma subject to harm the enemy who hates them and destroy him utterly (प्र हि वृहतः (pra hi vṛhataḥ), "root and all"); and रध्रस्य यजमानस्य चोदौ स्थः (radhrasya yajamānasya codau sthaḥ)—साधकस्य यजमानस्य शत्रोणां प्रेरकौ भवतः (sādhakasya yajamānasya śatroṇāṃ prerakau bhavataḥ) [sic], they become the driving-away of the enemies of the sacrificer who performs sacrifices: this is how he explains the sense.

Addressing Indra and Soma, the sacrificers pray for their protection: युवं अस्मान् अविष्टं (yuvaṃ asmān aviṣṭaṃ), युवां अस्मान् अवतं (yuvāṃ asmān avataṃ); and भयस्थे लोकं कृणुतं (bhayasthe lokaṃ kṛṇutaṃ), भयस्थाने युद्धभयरहितं स्थानं कुरुतं (bhayasthāne yuddhabhayarahitaṃ sthānaṃ kurutaṃ): when a battle that causes fear to the sacrificers arrives, protection is prayed for, so that no fear arises.

Printed English translation

Let not Indra vex me, or weary me, or make me slothful : never may we say (to another), do not offer the Soma libation : (for it is Indra)

p. 153

who will fulfil (my wishes), who will give (me riches), who will hear (my prayers), who will reward me, presenting libations, with cattle.

In this Ṛk only Indra is praised. मे पृणात् (me pṛṇāt) = may he fulfil my wishes; ददत् (dadat) = may he give the fruit desired; निबोधात् (nibodhāt) = may he know our praise or sacrifice; गोभिः सह उप आयत् (gobhiḥ saha upa āyat) = may he come with cows to me, who press the Soma, for our sake (दातवैः (dātavaiḥ)). The Ṛk describes Indra as one who fulfils the wishes of the sacrificer who performs the sacrifice, is the giver of fruit according to desire, knows the praises and comes to the sacrifices, and comes to the Soma sacrifices with cows that favour the sacrificer who presses the Soma juice. Having so described him, the sacrificer prays for Indra's grace: that Indra may not vex (न तमयतु (na tamayatu)), not weary (न ग्लपयतु (na glapayatu)), not make him tired (श्रांतं मा करोतु (śrāṃtaṃ mā karotu)), not make him slothful (न तंद्रयेत् (na taṃdrayet)): that no weariness arise, that he be not wearied, and that no sloth arise. इंद्रयागाय सोमं मा सुनोत इति न वो चाम (iṃdrayāgāya somaṃ mā sunota iti na vo cāma) and इंद्रयागाय सोमं मा अभिमणुत इति अन्यान् यजमानान् प्रति न ब्रवाम (iṃdrayāgāya somaṃ mā abhimaṇuta iti anyān yajamānān prati na bravāma): the wish is expressed that it may never happen that we go to other sacrificers who perform a sacrifice addressed to Indra and say, "Do not press the Soma juice for Indra."

O goddess Sarasvatī, protect us, your praisers. Joined with the Maruts and crushing enemies, conquer the enemies. At the same time Indra has killed the asura who has irresistible power, is proud of his strength, and is chief of the asuras of the Śaṇḍa lineage.

Printed English translation

In the first half of this Ṛk the goddess Sarasvatī is praised. सरस्वति (sarasvati)—the goddess who has motion (सरणवति देवि (saraṇavati devi)). Yāska has read the word सरस्वती (sarasvatī) among the names of speech (Nir. 2-23) and among the names of rivers (Nir. 2-24). And, quoting the Ṛk he explained the meaning सरस्वती—माध्यमिका वाक् (sarasvatī—mādhyamikā vāk) (Sarasvatī = the speech of the middle region). Here Sāyaṇa gives the meaning "the goddess who has motion", and explains that, addressing this goddess, protection for the praising sacrificers is prayed for from her.

p. 156

Bṛhaspate—O Bṛhaspati; yaḥ—who; naḥ—(wishing harm) to us; sanutyaḥ—lies in wait in a hidden place; uta vā—and also; jighatnuḥ—wishes to harm; taṃ—that asura; abhikhyāya—having searched out; tigitena—with a sharp weapon; vidhya—strike; śatrūn—our enemies; āyudhaiḥ—with weapons such as arrows, striking; jeṣi—conquer; rājan—O shining one; bṛhaspate—O Bṛhaspati; druhe—against the enemy who works treachery; riṣantaṃ—the harming thunderbolt; pari dhehi—hurl, cast.

O shining Bṛhaspati, search out the asura who, wishing us harm, lies in wait in a hidden place and wishes to harm us, and strike him with a sharp weapon; strike our enemies with weapons and conquer them. Hurl the harming thunderbolt against the enemy who works treachery.

Printed English translation

Detecting him who is lying in ambush (against us), who is purposing our death, pierce him, Brihaspati, with your sharp (thunderbolt), and overthrow (our) enemies with (your) weapons: hurl, monarch, your destroying (shaft) against the oppressor.

In this ṛk Bṛhaspati is praised; Bṛhaspati is addressed. नः सनुत्यः उत वा जिघत्सुः तं तिगितेन विध्य (naḥ sanutyaḥ uta vā jighatsuḥ taṃ tigitena vidhya)—a thief who lies in a hidden place against us, or one who wishes to kill, search him out and strike him with a sharp weapon. Yāska has read the word सनुतः (sanutaḥ) among the "hidden" names (Nirukta 3-19, as supplied). The wish is expressed that Bṛhaspati strike with a sharp weapon the thieves who, hiding in concealed places, practise theft against us the sacrificers, and those who intend to destroy us. The prayer is also made that Bṛhaspati conquer our enemies, at the time of battle, with the instruments that destroy enemies, arrows and the like (शत्रून् आयुधैः जेषि—अस्मदीयान् शत्रून् आयोधनसाधनैः इष्टादिभिः जय (śatrūn āyudhaiḥ jeṣi—asmadīyān śatrūn āyodhanasādhanaiḥ iṣṭādibhiḥ jaya)). भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O valiant Indra, together with warriors who belong to us, are strong to subdue enemies and are valorous, accomplish the heroic deeds that must be performed by you. For a long time our enemies have been swollen with pride. Slay them, and bring their wealth and distribute it to us.

p. 158

Printed English translation

Achieve, hero, along with our valiant heroes, the exploits that are to be achieved by you : long have (our enemies) been inflated (with pride); slay them, and bring to us their treasures.

In this ṛk Indra is praised. The word शूर (śūra) (printed कूर (kūra) in the Kannada, as supplied) is explained as "one having heroism, strength" and Indra is addressed with it; the wish is expressed that Indra perform deeds that are अस्माकेभिः—अस्माकीनैः (asmākebhiḥ—asmākīnaiḥ) (belonging to us the sacrificers), सत्वभिः—परेषां सादकैः (satvabhiḥ—pareṣāṃ sādakaiḥ) (utterly destroying enemies), वीर्या—वीरकर्माणि (vīryā—vīrakarmāṇi) (fit to be performed by heroes), कर्त्वा—करणीयानि (kartvā—karaṇīyāni) (that must needs be done).

asmabhyaṃ āhara). Our enemies keep for a very long time the anger they bear against us, the sacrificers, hidden within themselves; therefore the sacrificers' prayer is stated that Indra destroy them and bring their wealth to us.

The word वसु (vasu) is read by Yāska in many senses; here the sense "wealth" is given.

Maruts—O Marut deities; yathā—in which manner; sarvavīram—accompanied by all brave warriors; apatyasācam—accompanied by sons and the like; śrutyam—renowned; rayim—wealth; divedive [as supplied; the Pratipadārtha has दिवेदिने (divedine)]—every day; naśāmahai—we fully obtain, such (wealth); namasā—with homage and with offering; girā—by the voice in the form of praise; vaḥ—of you; mārutam—consisting of the Marut host; śardham—having a collective power; daivyam—belonging to the gods (or connected with Indra); janam—manifested, such a power; bruve—I praise and worship.

O Marut deities, by what manner of worship we may daily fully obtain wealth that is accompanied by all brave warriors, accompanied by sons and the like, and renowned, by that I praise and worship, with a hymn of praise joined with homage and offerings, your strength, which consists of the host of the Maruts, has a collective power, is divine and connected with the god Indra, and has manifested itself so as to be visible to all.

Printed English translation

Desirous of felicity, Maruts, I glorify with praise and homage your divine, manifest, and congregated strength ; that we may thereby daily enjoy distinguished affluence, accompanied by valiant dependants and posterity.

In this ṛk the Maruts are praised. The sacrificer, addressing the Maruts, describes their strength: मारुतं (mārutaṃ) (mārutam)—since the Maruts are seven, it is made up of their host; दैव्यं (daivyaṃ) (daivyam)—connected with the radiant Indra; जनं (janaṃ) (janam)—manifested from time to time. Having so described it, he says that the sacrificers praise this strength नमसा गिरा (namasā girā) (namasā girā)—with homage, with offerings of oblations and with the recitation of hymns. The wish is expressed that the Maruts, hearing these praises, favour us so that we sacrificers may obtain every day wealth that is सर्ववीरं (sarvavīraṃ) (sarvavīram)—possessed of abundant valour, fit to destroy enemies; अपत्यसाचं (apatyasācaṃ) (apatyasācam)—accompanied by sons and others who do not bring misfortune; and श्रुत्यं (śrutyaṃ) (śrutyam)—worthy of praise.

Since the word नमस्यति (namasyati) is read by Yāska (Ni. 3-13) among the words of service, the word नमसा (namasā) is explained in two ways: as homage, or as an offering of oblation.

रयिः (rayiḥ)—धनं (dhanaṃ) (rayiḥ—dhanam). This word is stated by Yāska among the names of water (Ni. 2-24) and among the names of wealth (Ni. 2-9), and is explained as रयिरिति धननाम रातेर्दानकर्मणः (rayiriti dhananāma rāterdānakarmaṇaḥ).

Sūkta 31 (Maṇḍala 2)

The thirty-first sūkta.

Sāyaṇa's introduction to the sūkta

> आस्माकमिति सप्तर्चं नवमं सूक्तं गृत्समदस्यार्षं वैश्वदेवं । अंत्या त्रिष्टुप् । शिष्टा जगत्यः । तथा चानुक्रांतं । आस्माकं सप्त वैश्वदेवं त्रिष्टुबंतमिति ॥ विनियोगो लैंगिकः ॥

Gist: āsmākam is the ninth sūkta of Anuvāka 3, of seven ṛks, of the Gṛtsamada seer, for the Viśve devāḥ; the last ṛk is triṣṭubh, the rest jagatī; the Anukramaṇī is quoted; the application is by indication (laiṅgika).

p. 161

Running head: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 6 [as printed], Varga 14, Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, p. 161.

Anuvāda (Kannada). The sūkta अस्माकं (asmākaṃ) (asmākam) is the ninth sūkta in the third anuvāka. It has seven ṛks. The seer of this sūkta is Gṛtsamada; the deities are the Viśve devāḥ; the last ṛk of this sūkta is of triṣṭubh metre; the remaining ṛks are of jagatī metre. In the Anukramaṇikā it is said अस्माकं सप्त वैश्वदेवं त्रिष्टुबंतं (asmākaṃ sapta vaiśvadevaṃ triṣṭubaṃtaṃ). The application is laiṅgika.

Gist: Mitra and Varuṇa, with the three divine groups, are to protect our chariot as it travels for food, as birds fly out from the woods; vasma is a dwelling-place.

Mitrāvaruṇā—O Mitra and Varuṇa! Śravasyavaḥ—seeking food; hṛṣīvantaḥ—joyful; vanarṣadaḥ—sitting in forest trees; vayo na—like birds; yat—when; rathāḥ—our chariots; vasmanaspari—in other regions; pra paptan—move about (at that time); ādityaiḥ—with the Ādityas; rudraiḥ—with the Rudras; vasubhiḥ—with the Vasus; sacābhuvā—being together; asmākaṃ—our; rathaṃ—chariot (set out for food); avataṃ—protect.

O Mitra and Varuṇa, when our chariots move about in other regions in search of food, like birds that seek food, are joyful and sit in the forest trees, at that time, being together with the Ādityas, the Rudras and the Vasus, protect our chariot.

Printed English translation

Mitra and Varuna, associated with the Adityas, the Rudras, and the Vasus, protect our (sacrificial) chariot, when (it goes) about (from one place to another); like birds that fly down, seeking for food, rejoicing, and resting in the woods.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Addressing Mitra and Varuṇa, the bhāṣya says: these two are accompanied by three groups of gods: the twelve Ādityas beginning with Dhātṛ and Aryaman, the eleven Rudras, and the eight Vasus named Dhara, Dhruva and so on (the eleven and eight being counted by number, the twelve being the well-known Ādityas). It explains that they should protect our chariot, set out to obtain food (अन्नलाभाय प्रवृत्तं अस्माकं रथं अवतं (annalābhāya pravṛttaṃ asmākaṃ rathaṃ avataṃ)).

p. 163

श्रवस्यवः, हृषीवंतः, वनर्षदः वयो न वस्मनस्परि प्रपप्तन् (śravasyavaḥ, hṛṣīvaṃtaḥ, vanarṣadaḥ vayo na vasmanaspari prapaptan)—the bhāṣya explains that our chariots, like birds that desire food, are joyful and sit in trees of the forest, go forth vigorously from their dwelling-place to other regions above/beyond. It compares our chariots to birds that leave their dwellings and move about in different places to obtain food and the like.

वस्मनस्परि (vasmanaspari)—वसंत्यस्मिन्निति वस्म निवासस्थानं। तस्मान् स्थानात् उपरि देशांतरे (vasaṃtyasminniti vasma nivāsasthānaṃ| tasmān sthānāt upari deśāṃtare). The word vasma means a place fit for dwelling; the chariot is described as moving in regions other than that.

Gist: The gods of equal affection are asked to drive our food-seeking chariot forward among the people, when the swift horses trample the high ground raising dust; ava here means motion.

p. 164

Sajoṣasaḥ—of equal affection; devāsaḥ—O gods; yat—when; āśavaḥ—the horses yoked to our chariot; padyābhiḥ—with their paces; rajaḥ—dust; titrataḥ—making rise; pṛthivyāḥ—of the earth; sānau—in the elevated region; pāṇibhiḥ—with their feet; jaṅghananta—gallop; adha—at that time; naḥ—our; vājayuṃ—set out for food; rathaṃ—chariot; vikṣu abhi—among the people; udavata—cause to move happily.

O gods of equal affection, when the horses yoked to our chariot, raising the dust with their paces, gallop with their feet on the elevated region of the earth, at that time make our chariot, set out for food, move happily among the people.

Printed English translation

Propitiated divinities, protect our chariot, gone forth in quest of food among the people, when the quick (horses), raising the dust with their paces, trample with their feet upon the high places of the earth.

सजोषसः देवासः (sajoṣasaḥ devāsaḥ)—समानं प्रीयमाणाः देवाः (samānaṃ prīyamāṇāḥ devāḥ): the word sajoṣasaḥ is explained as those who are always equally pleased; the gods are described as of this nature.

वाजयुं (vājayuṃ)—वाजमन्नं कामयमानं, गतिविशेषयुक्तं वा (vājamannaṃ kāmayamānaṃ, gativiśeṣayuktaṃ vā). This word is used as an epithet of rathaṃ (chariot). The word vāja is read in the senses of food and so on. Sāyaṇa explains it as desiring food, or as having a swift motion. Addressing the gods, the sacrificers pray that their chariots, travelling for food, may be swift and may go facing the people and the various regions.

Further, आशवः पद्याभिः रजः तित्रतः (āśavaḥ padyābhiḥ rajaḥ titrataḥ)—व्यापनशीलाः अश्वाः पादसाध्याभिर्ग- शिभिः रंजकं मार्गं तरंतः (vyāpanaśīlāḥ aśvāḥ pādasādhyābhirga- śibhiḥ raṃjakaṃ mārgaṃ taraṃtaḥ): swift horses cross the road, making dust rise with their paces; and पृथिव्याः सानौ पाणिभिः जंघनंत (pṛthivyāḥ sānau pāṇibhiḥ jaṃghanaṃta)—

भूमेः उच्छ्रिते प्रदेशे पाण्युपलक्षितैः पादैः अत्यर्थं गच्छति (bhūmeḥ ucchrite pradeśe pāṇyupalakṣitaiḥ pādaiḥ atyarthaṃ gacchati)—the horses go exceedingly on the elevated regions of the earth with their feet, which are like hands (so the passage is explained).

Gist: Indra, all-seeing and accompanied by the Maruts' might, is asked to come from heaven and mount our chariot for great wealth and food; the grammatical remarks concern accent and the dropped śap.

Uta—and; viśvacarṣaṇiḥ—able to see everything; mārutena—of the Maruts' collective; śardhena—with the might; sukratuḥ—doer of excellent deeds; syaḥ indraḥ—that well-known Indra; avṛkābhiḥ—harmless; ūtibhiḥ—with protections; divaḥ—coming from the heavenly world; nu—now; mahe sanaye—for the sake of great wealth; vājasātaye—for the gain of food and wealth (set out); naḥ—our; rathaṃ—chariot; anu sthāti—let him mount and sit.

p. 166

May Indra, all-knowing and all-powerful, famous, doing excellent deeds together with the might that takes the form of the host of the Maruts, come from heaven together with harmless protections, mount and sit in our chariot, which has set out for great gain of wealth and of food, and be our protector.

Printed English translation

Or, may that all-beholding Indra, the accomplisher of great deeds, qy [sic] the collective vigour of the Maruts, (coming) from heaven, protect our chariot with unassailable protection, (for the sake of securing to us) ample wealth and abundant food.

विश्वचर्षणिः (viśvacarṣaṇiḥ) (viśvacarṣaṇiḥ)—the beholder of everything; or he whose attendants are all men; or he by whom all the worlds are to be looked upon. Yāska has read the word carṣaṇi (Ni. 3-13) among the verbs of seeing (paśyati). Sāyaṇa has explained the word in three ways: Indra is the one who sees everything; the one who has all men as attendants; the one who necessarily looks upon all the worlds. Having explained the meaning thus, the bhāṣya says that Indra, of such abundant greatness, is मारुतेन शर्धेन सुक्रतुः (mārutena śardhèna sukratuḥ) as printed, that is, endowed with the strength in the form of the host of the Maruts and with excellent action or wisdom. Being so endowed, he comes from heaven; नः रथं अनुस्थाति-अस्माकं रथं अनुगुण्येन अधितिष्ठतु (naḥ rathaṃ anusthāti-asmākaṃ rathaṃ anuguṇyena adhitiṣṭhatu)—let him mount our chariot, ours who are the sacrificers, in such a way that there are no harmful fears; and महे सनाय (mahe sanāya) [sic, as printed; the Saṃhitā has sanaye]. For वाज (vāja) vāja-sātaye: that we may obtain abundant wealth and food, let him mount, sit in a manner suited to us, and protect. Thus the bhāṣya expresses the wish.

The word carṣaṇi is stated by Yāska among the names of men (Ni. 3-7), and is explained by Durgācārya (Ni. 5-25) as: चर्षणिः चायिता, (carṣaṇiḥ cāyitā,) established in the form of the presiding deity of the intellect, the beholder of all beings.

Gist: Tvaṣṭṛ with the wives of the gods, Iḷā, Bhaga, heaven and earth, Pūṣan, Purandhi and the Aśvins are asked to set our chariot in motion; ju is a root of motion, and jūjuvat is a causal form with the luṅ-type ending.

Uta—and; syaḥ—the well-known; devaḥ—endowed with generosity and other qualities; bhuvanasya—of all beings; sakṣaṇiḥ—to be served; gnābhiḥ—with the wives of the gods; sajoṣāḥ—having equal affection; tvaṣṭā—the god Tvaṣṭṛ; rathaṃ—our chariot; jūjuvat—let him set in motion (make it go easily); (so also) iḷā—Iḷā; bṛhaddivā—of great splendour; bhagaḥ—Bhaga; uta—and; rodasī—heaven and earth; purandhiḥ—of special wisdom; pūṣā—Pūṣan; patī—the two husbands of Sūryā; aśvinau—the Aśvin deities (let them make our chariot move comfortably).

p. 168

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

May the god Tvaṣṭṛ, famous, endowed with generosity and other qualities, served by all beings, and equally well pleased with the wives of the gods, urge on our chariot; likewise may Iḷā, the resplendent Bhaga, Heaven and Earth, Pūṣan of special wisdom, and the Aśvin deities, the husbands of Sūryā, urge on our chariot.

Printed English translation

Or, may the divine Twashtri, the defender of the world, together with the wives (of the gods), well pleased, urge on the chariot ; or may Ila, the resplendent Bhaga, Heaven and Earth, the sagacious Pushan, and the Ashwins, the two husbands (or Surya), urge on the chariot.

ग्नाभिः सजोषाः (gnābhiḥ sajoṣāḥ)—"equally fond of the wives of the gods." The word ग्नाः (gnāḥ) is stated by Yāska among the names of speech (Ni. 2-27), and is explained (Ni. 3-21) as "मेना ग्ना इति स्त्रीणां, ग्ना गच्छंत्येनाः (menā gnā iti strīṇāṃ, gnā gacchaṃtyenāḥ)" (menā and gnā are names of women; *gnā*s are those to whom men go). Sāyaṇa takes the god (written in the supplied text तृषृ (tṛṣṛ) [?], i.e. Tvaṣṭṛ) to be one equally fond of the wives of the gods, explains that the word is used in the sense of "wives of the gods", cites the Taittirīya Saṃhitā sentence "छंदांसि वै ग्नाः (chaṃdāṃsi vai gnāḥ)" and states the meaning: the metres Gāyatrī and the rest are the wives of the gods. When the Nirukta discusses the meaning of the word त्वष्टा (tvaṣṭā) it cites the Ṛk

Durgācārya gives the meaning in the historical view as "त्वष्टा हि विश्वकर्मा (tvaṣṭā hi viśvakarmā)" and the etymological (Nairukta) view as "तृष्णा मध्यमः (tṛṣṇā madhyamaḥ)" (as supplied). Sāyaṇa has commented in accord with both views.

The god Tvaṣṭṛ has the qualities of giving gifts and so on; he is served by all beings in the world. The sacrificer's wish is stated: may this god of such greatness urge on our chariot.

p. 169

इळा (iḷā)—"Iḷā, the first of the three goddesses." The word इळा (iḷā) is stated among the names of the earth (Si. [?] 2-5), among the names of speech (Ni. 2-23), among the names of food (Si. [?] 3-9) and among the names of cows (Ni. 3-9), and is explained as derived from ईड्देः स्तुतिकर्मणः (īṭṭeḥ stutikarmaṇaḥ) (the root īḍ, to praise).

Sāyaṇa explains the meaning thus: of the three goddesses Iḷā, Sarasvatī and Bhāratī, the goddess called Iḷā, the first, is to urge on the sacrificer's chariot.

बृहद्दिवा भगः (bṛhaddivā bhagaḥ)—"he who shines greatly, he who is resplendent, is बृहद्दिवः (bṛhaddivaḥ); such a one also let him urge on." May the god named Bhaga, who shines with abundant radiance, also urge on our chariot.

रोदसी पुरंधिः पूषा (rodasī puraṃdhiḥ pūṣā)—"Heaven and Earth, and the god who is of much wisdom and the nourisher." The words रोदसी (rodasī) and पुरंधी (puraṃdhī) are stated among the names of Heaven and Earth (Ni. 3-22). Yāska explains the word पुरंधि (puraṃdhi) as "पुरंधिर्बहुधीस्तत्क पुरंधिर्भगः (puraṃdhirbahudhīstatka puraṃdhirbhagaḥ)" (Ni. 6-13) [text as supplied, apparently incomplete], and also (of Indra and Varuṇa) "इंद्र इत्यपरं स बहुकर्मतमः, पुरां च दारयितृतमः वरुण इत्यपरं (iṃdra ityaparaṃ sa bahukarmatamaḥ, purāṃ ca dārayitṛtamaḥ varuṇa ityaparaṃ)". Durgācārya describes the meaning as "पुरंधिः बहुधनस्य दाता (puraṃdhiḥ bahudhanasya dātā)" (Ni.

11-2); and the word is also explained (Ni. 12-30) as "पुरंध्या स्तुत्या (puraṃdhyā stutyā)". The word पूषा (pūṣā) is stated among the names of the earth (Ni. 2-5), and is explained (Ni. 12-17) as "अथ यद्रश्मिपोषं पुष्यति तत् पूषा भवति (atha yadraśmipoṣaṃ puṣyati tat pūṣā bhavati)" (now, because he nourishes with the nourishment of rays, he is Pūṣan). As the meanings of these words have been explained at length in the earlier volumes, they are not explained here. The wish is expressed: may Heaven and Earth and the god Pūṣan, of abundant wisdom, urge on the chariots of us, the sacrificers.

पती अश्विनौ (patī aśvinau)—"the two husbands of Sūryā, and the Aśvins; let these urge on our chariot." The explanation of the word aśvinī was given earlier. The matter of the Aśvin deities marrying the goddess Sūryā has also been told earlier. The sacrificers pray: may the Aśvin deities, the husbands of the goddess Sūryā, urge on our chariot.

Gist: The Dawn and Night, goddesses who look at each other, drive on the moving world, so let them urge on our chariot too; the Ṛk's second half addresses Heaven and Earth, with the sacrificer offering with ghee the three kinds of food (plants, animals, Soma); the grammar concerns stṛ, the dropped ending, ca as a particle and the suppression of the accent.

Uta—and; tye—the famous; devī—shining; subhage—possessing excellent wealth; mithūdṛśā—looking at each other; uṣāsānaktā—O Day-and-Night (you); jagatām—of the world consisting of moving things; apījuvā—are the impellers (therefore urge on our chariot too). Pṛthivi—O Heaven and Earth; vām—you two; navyasā—with new; vacaḥ—speech in the form of praise; yat—when; stuṣe—I praise (then); sthātuḥ—of the stationary rice and the like; vayaḥ—food; trivayāḥ—I who have prepared the threefold oblation (of plants, animals and Soma); upastire—I offer, spreading it with ghee.

p. 171

O Day and Night, renowned, shining, possessed of excellent wealth, looking at one another: as you are the quickeners of the whole moving world, urge on our chariot. O Heaven and Earth, whenever I, who hold the threefold oblation (plants, animals, Soma), praise you both with a new hymn, then I offer the food of the stationary rice and the like, spreading it with ghee.

Printed English translation

Or, may the two divine auspicious and mutually contemplating Day and Night, the animators of moving (creatures, urge it on): and, Earth Heaven [sic], whilst I praise you both with a new hymn, I offer you food of the standing (corn), although provided with the three (sorts of sacrificial) viands.

उषासानक्ता (uṣāsānaktā)—Yāska explains the word उषासानक्ता (uṣāsānaktā) (uṣāsānaktā) as "Uṣas and Night; naktā is a name of night; it envelops beings, or with dew; indistinct in colour" (Ni. 8-11). A detailed description of this word was given earlier.

देवी सुभगे मिथूदृशा उषासानक्ता जगतां अपीजुवा (devī subhage mithūdṛśā uṣāsānaktā jagatāṃ apījuvā)—Sāyaṇa's Sanskrit: the two shining, richly endowed goddesses, looking at each other, Uṣas and Night, are impellers of the moving; therefore let them urge on our chariot. The explanation given: shining by nature with radiance, joined with abundant and pleasant wealth, looking at one another, the goddess Uṣas and Night, being impellers of all moving beings, are prayed by the sacrificers to urge on our chariots.

Addressing the Earth-goddess as "O Pṛthivī", युवां दिवं च (yuvāṃ divaṃ ca): Uṣas, Night and the sky; the sacrificer is described as praising with नव्यसा वचना (navyasā vacanā), new and praiseworthy hymns; and स्थातुः वयः त्रिवयाः उपस्तृणे (sthātuḥ vayaḥ trivayāḥ upastṛṇe): I, the sacrificer, possessing the food of the stationary (rice-related, in the form of caru, puroḍāśa and so on), offer the oblation-food, spreading it with ghee ritually.

त्रिवयाः (trivayāḥ)—वय इत्यन्न नाम (vaya ityanna nāma): the word vayaḥ is stated among the names of food (Ni. 3-9). The foods offered to the deities as oblation are of three kinds: Soma-juice, animal and caru; the sacrificer possesses them.

The tail explains smasi (from vaś), the swift-going, and śami as a word for action.

p. 173

Uta—and (O gods); उशिजामिव (uśijāmiva)—who desire our praises; vaḥ—for your satisfaction; śaṃsam—praise; smasi—we offer with devotion. भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O gods, for the satisfaction of you who desire our praises, we offer praise with devotion. And may Ahirbudhnya, the god called Aja Ekapād, Trita, Ṛbhukṣan and Savitṛ provide us with food. Likewise may the swift-going Agni, renowned by the name Apāṃ Napāt, be gratified by our rites.

Printed English translation

We desire, gods, to repeat the praise of you, who are propitiated by praise: may Ahirbudhnya, Ajaekapad, Trita, Ribhukshin, Savitri, bestow upon us food, and may the swift-moving grandson of the waters, (Agni, be gratified by) our praises and our worship.

उशिजामिव शंसं स्मसि (uśijāmiva śaṃsaṃ smasi)—Sāyaṇa's Sanskrit says "we desire now your praise, you who desire praise from us". Here the word iva is given the meaning samprati, "now". The word उशिक् (uśik) is stated among the names of the wise (Ni. 3-19) and explained as उशिक् वष्टेः कांतिकर्मणः (uśik vaṣṭeḥ kāṃtikarmaṇaḥ) (Ni. 6-11). The sense is given as those who seek praise from the reciter. The meaning is explained: we sacrificers desire to recite the praises of you gods, who desire praise recited by sacrificers performing the rite.

अहिर्बुध्न्यः (ahirbudhnyaḥ)—बुद्धमंतरिक्षं तत्र भवः अहिनामा देवः (buddhamaṃtarikṣaṃ tatra bhavaḥ ahināmā devaḥ). The word ahirbudhnya is explained by Yāska as योऽहिः स बुद्ध्यो बुध्ममंतरिक्षं तन्निवासात् (yo 'hiḥ sa buddhyo budhmamaṃtarikṣaṃ tannivāsāt) (Si. [?] 10-46) [text as supplied]. The word budhna is given the meaning "atmosphere", and the god named Ahi, born in the atmosphere, is the sense explained.

अज एकपात् (aja ekapāt)—Yāska explains: न जायत इत्यजः (na jāyata ityajaḥ) ("he is aja because he is not born"); he is ekapād because he goes (moves) by one foot alone; or he drinks (or protects) with one foot; or one foot belongs to him (Ni. 12-30). Durgācārya says that this is the Sun, ever moving, one foot (a quarter) of Brahman. It is known that Fire is a foot, Wind is a foot, the Sun is a foot, the Quarters are a foot. Entering the whole world with one portion he protects it; at the time of sleep, as fire, he digests the food of living beings; with one foot (portion) he drinks the water of the whole world; as the life-principle he has entered the whole world as one foot (Ni. 12-30). Thus the word is explained as the Sun: he is one foot of the formless Supreme Brahman of pure being-consciousness-bliss, always moving, protecting the whole world by one portion; and to this Sun, the one foot of the four-footed Brahman (Fire, Wind, Sun, Quarters), Durgācārya ascribes identity with the Supreme Self in the form of action. The explanation of this word was given earlier. Sāyaṇa explains the word as the Sun, the one who moves alone, the unborn.

त्रितः ऋभुक्षाः (tritaḥ ṛbhukṣāḥ)—Sāyaṇa: Trita is "the one who has crossed over most" (tīrṇatama), Ṛbhukṣāḥ is "of wide dwelling, he who settles the Ṛbhus", and both are Indra. Yāska explains त्रितस्तीर्णतमो मेधया बभूव (tritastīrṇatamo medhayā babhūva) ("Trita surpassed all by his intelligence"), or else a number may be intended: "from one, two, three; they became three" (Ni. 4-6); त्रितः त्रिस्थान इंद्रः (tritaḥ tristhāna iṃdraḥ) ("Trita is Indra of the three stations", Ni. 9-25). The word ऋभुक्षाः (ṛbhukṣāḥ) is stated among the names of the great (Ni. 3-13) and explained by Yāska as उरुक्षयणः ऋभूणां राजा (urukṣayaṇaḥ ṛbhūṇāṃ rājā) ("of wide dwelling, king of the Ṛbhus", Ni. 9-3). Sāyaṇa takes both words as epithets of Indra: one who surpasses all by the power of his intellect, who, pervading (abundantly) many places, is fit for his office, or who keeps the Ṛbhus in comfort.

सविता (savitā)—"the impeller of all." Yāska explains this word as सर्वस्य प्रसविता (sarvasya prasavitā) (Ni. 10-32). The sacrificer's prayer is thus stated: may the god named Ahi, the Sun renowned as Aja Ekapād, Indra and the god Savitṛ grant food to us the sacrificers.

आशुहेमा अपान्नपात् (āśuhemā apānnapāt)—"the swift-going Agni, who stands in the place of the grandson of the waters." Yāska explains अपांनपात् तनूनप्रा व्याख्यातः (apāṃnapāt tanūnaprā vyākhyātaḥ) (Si. [?] 10-18).

Gist: the sacrificer desires to recite these praises to the worshipful Viśve Devāḥ; men wishing for food and strength have fashioned hymns for them; may their host come like a chariot-horse to our rite.

Yajatrāḥ—O gods worthy of sacrifice. Vaḥ—addressed to you. Etā udyatā—these praise-words, to be recited with faith. Vaśmi—I wish to recite. Śravasyavaḥ—seekers of food. Vājam—strength. Cakānāḥ—those who desire. Āyavaḥ—men like me. Navyase—for the worship of you, the worshipful. Samatakṣan—(they) fashion (praises). Rathyaḥ—yoked to a chariot. Saptiḥ na—like a horse. Dhīśiṃ [sic, as supplied; the Saṃhitā has dhītim]—towards our rite. Aśyāḥ—(may your host) come and arrive.

O gods worthy of sacrifice, I wish to recite these praise-words, addressed to you and to be recited with faith. Men like me, seeking food and desiring strength, fashion praises for the worship of you, the worshipful. Like a horse yoked to a chariot, may your host come to our rite.

Printed English translation

Adorable (gods), I desire that these (my) earnest praises (should please) you: men wishing for food, desirous of vigour, have constructed (hymns) for yours [sic] celebration; may you hasten like a (swift) chariot-horse to our (pious) rite.

यजत्रा (yajatrā)—यजनीयाः (yajanīyāḥ). Since the Viśve Devāḥ are worthy of sacrifice, they are addressed by this word. वः एता उद्यता वश्मि (vaḥ etā udyatā vaśmi)—युष्मदीयानि एतानि उद्यतानि वचांसि कामये (yuṣmadīyāni etāni udyatāni vacāṃsi kāmaye): it is described that the sacrificer wishes to recite praises addressed to these gods; and आयवः नव्यसे समतक्षन् (āyavaḥ navyase samatakṣan)—मत्पृतयोः मनुष्याः स्तुत्यतमाय युष्मद्गणाय स्तोत्राणि समस्कुर्वन् (matpṛtayoḥ manuṣyāḥ stutyatamāya yuṣmadgaṇāya stotrāṇi samaskurvan) (as supplied; the bhāṣya reads matprabhṛtayaḥ): the sacrificers and others, desiring fame, food and strength, have worshipped these gods with praises fit to be recited.

रथ्यः (rathyaḥ)—सप्तिर्न धीतिं अश्याः (saptirna dhītiṃ aśyāḥ)—रथसंबंधी सर्पणशीलो अश्व इव युष्मद्गणः अस्मदीयं कर्म प्राप्पोतु (rathasaṃbaṃdhī sarpaṇaśīlo aśva iva yuṣmadgaṇaḥ asmadīyaṃ karma prāppotu). Like a swift horse fit to be yoked to a chariot, (the text breaks off at the page end) accepts the praise and the service of one who serves it, so may the Viśve devāḥ accept all the duties that concern them, namely the recitation of praises, the offering of oblations and so on, performed by us the sacrificers: thus the wish is expressed.

आयवः (āyavaḥ)—मनुष्याः (manuṣyāḥ). This word is stated among the names of men (Ni. 3-8). Here the sense is given as men such as those who perform the sacrifice.

सप्तिः (saptiḥ)—सर्पणशीलः अश्वः (sarpaṇaśīlaḥ aśvaḥ). The word sapti is read among the names of the horse (Ni. 2-27). The meaning is explained as a horse of a swiftly moving nature.

रथ्याः (rathyāḥ)—Yāska has described the plural form of the word rathya as रथस्य वोढारः (rathasya voḍhāraḥ) (Ni. 10-3). The word rathya, used as an epithet of sapti, is interpreted as "connected with a chariot".

Gist: the tenth sūkta of Anuvāka 3, of eight ṛks, of the Gṛtsamada seer; the last three ṛks are anuṣṭubh, the other five jagatī; deities as in the Anuvāda; the Anukramaṇī and the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra (7-7) are quoted for the application.

Anuvāda (Kannada). This sūkta, अस्य मे (asya me), is the tenth sūkta in the third anuvāka. It has eight ṛks. The seer of this sūkta is Gṛtsamada; the last three ṛks, from the sixth to the eighth, are of anuṣṭubh metre; the remaining five ṛks are of jagatī metre. In this sūkta the first ṛk has Dyāvāpṛthivī (Heaven and Earth) as deity; the next two ṛks (ṛks 2-3) have Indra or Tvaṣṭṛ as deity; the next two ṛks (ṛks 4-5) have Rākā as deity; the next two ṛks (ṛks 6-7) have Sinīvālī as deity; the last ṛk (the 8th) has as deities six persons beginning with Gungū (Gungū and others). In the Anukramaṇikā it is said: अस्य मेऽष्टौ जागतं त्र्यनुष्टुबंतं द्यावापृथिव्यैका द्वे ऐंद्रौ त्वाष्टौ वा द्वे द्वे राकासिनीवाल्ल्योरंत्या लिंगोक्तदेवतेति (asya me 'ṣṭau jāgataṃ tryanuṣṭubaṃtaṃ dyāvāpṛthivyaikā dve aiṃdrau tvāṣṭau vā dve dve rākāsinīvāllyoraṃtyā liṃgoktadevateti). On the fourth day of the Abhiplava sacrifice, at the recitation of the Vaiśvadeva-śastra mantras, the first three ṛks of this sūkta are to be used as nivid-mantras relating to Dyāvāpṛthivī, as is explained by the sūtra of the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra beginning अस्य मे द्यावापृथिवी (asya me dyāvāpṛthivī) and ending वैश्वदेवं (vaiśvadevaṃ) (Āś. 7-7).

Gist: O Heaven and Earth, protect me, who desire the sacrifice and wish to serve you; whose food is the best; I, wanting wealth, honour you with great praise.

द्यावापृथिवी (dyāvāpṛthivī)—O Heaven and Earth. ऋतायतः (ṛtāyataḥ)—one who desires to perform the sacrifice, and सिषासतः (siṣāsataḥ)—who wishes to serve you, and वचसः (vacasaḥ)—a praiser: अस्य मे (asya me)—for this me, अवित्री (avitrī)—be protectresses; भूतं (bhūtaṃ)—be. ययोः (yayoḥ)—of which Heaven and Earth, आयुः (āyuḥ)—the food प्रतरं (prataraṃ)—is the most excellent; ते (te)—such, and उपस्तुते (upastute)—praised by all: नां (nāṃ) [sic, as supplied; the Saṃhitā has vāṃ]—you two; इदं (idaṃ)—now; वसूयुः (vasūyuḥ)—desiring wealth; महः (mahaḥ)—with great praise; पुरः दधे (puraḥ dadhe)—I extol.

O Heaven and Earth, be the protectresses of this me, who desire to perform the sacrifice, am eager to serve you, and am your praiser. You whose food is the most excellent and who are praised by all: you two I now extol with great praise, desiring wealth.

Printed English translation

Heaven and Earth, be the protectors of me your worshipper, anxious to propitiate you by worship and adoration, for of you two is abundant food : desiring riches, I glorify you both, and celebrate you with great (laudation).

In this ṛk Heaven and Earth are praised. Addressing Heaven and Earth, the wish is expressed that they may be protectors of the sacrificer, who desires to serve them both by performing the sacrifice and by reciting praise, and who is reciting the praise.

वचसः (vacasaḥ)—वक्तीति वचाः स्तोता (vaktīti vacāḥ stotā). Since he recites praises, the word vacasaḥ is used in the sense of a reciter of praise.

उपस्तुते (upastute)—तत्र तत्र स्थितैः स्तोतृभिः स्तुते । (tatra tatra sthitaiḥ stotṛbhiḥ stute |) It is explained that at the times of the sacrifices the Ṛtvijs and the sacrificers, each in his own place, praise (Heaven and Earth).

वसूयुः (vasūyuḥ)—धनकामः ! (dhanakāmaḥ !) Yāska explained the meaning as "वसूयवो वसुकामाः (vasūyavo vasukāmāḥ)" (Ni. 6-5) and also as "वसूयुः वसुमान् (vasūyuḥ vasumān)" (Ni. 6-32).

ययोः आयुः प्रतरं (yayoḥ āyuḥ prataraṃ)—It is described that the food obtained from these Heaven and Earth is abundant; and इदं ते उपस्तुते (idaṃ te upastute)—for this reason these Heaven and Earth are now praised by the respective Ṛtvijs in the sacrifices; and वसूयुः महः पुरः दधे (vasūyuḥ mahaḥ puraḥ dadhe)—the sacrificer, wishing to obtain wealth and the like, will gratify these Heaven and Earth by reciting laudable hymns.

O Indra. आयोः (āyoḥ)—of the man who is an enemy. गुह्याः (guhyāḥ)—secret. रिपः (ripaḥ)—the wiles of a harmful kind! नः (naḥ)—us. अहन् (ahan)—whether by day or by night. मा दभन् (mā dabhan)—may they not harm. नः (naḥ)—us. आभ्यः दुच्चुनाभ्यः (ābhyaḥ duccunābhyaḥ)—to these hostile armies that cause suffering. मा रीरधः (mā rīradhaḥ)—do not make us subject. नः (naḥ)—with us. सख्या (sakhyā)—your friendship. मा वि यौः (mā vi yauḥ)—do not cause it to be broken. नः (naḥ)—with us. तस्य (tasya)—that friendship. सुम्नायता (sumnāyatā)—desiring happiness. मनसा (manasā)—with the mind. विद्धि (vidbhi)—know. तत् त्वा (tat tvā)—you, such a trusted friend. ई महे (ī mahe)—I ask for the desired fruit.

O Indra, may the secret and harmful wiles of the man who is our enemy not harm us, whether by day or by night. Do not make us subject to these hostile armies that cause suffering. Do not let your friendship with us be broken, but increase it so that it becomes a source of happiness. From you, such a trusted friend, I ask for the desired fruit.

Printed English translation

Let not the secret guile of man, (Indra), harm us by day (or night); leave us not subject to the malevolent, disunite us not from your friendship; regard us with the favourable thoughts that (spring) from it: we ask this (boon) of you.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk and in the next Ṛk both Indra and the deity called Tvaṣṭṛ (printed तृष्ट (tṛṣṭa), as supplied) are praised. The derivation of the word Indra and of the word Tvaṣṭṛ (printed तृष्ट (tṛṣṭa)) has been stated earlier.

p. 182

Running head: Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya-sahitā, Maṇḍala 2, Anuvāka 3, Sūkta 32, p. 182.

आयोः—गुह्याः रिषः नः अर्ह— शत्रुभूतस्य मनुष्यस्य ज्ञातुमशक्याः मायाः हिंसारूपाः अहनि रात्रौ च मा हिंसिषुः । (āyoḥ—guhyāḥ riṣaḥ naḥ arha— śatrubhūtasya manuṣyasya jñātumaśakyāḥ māyāḥ hiṃsārūpāḥ ahani rātrau ca mā hiṃsiṣuḥ |) (text as supplied; the words रिषः नः अर्ह (riṣaḥ naḥ arha) differ from the Saṃhitā.) The word आयुः (āyuḥ) is explained as the enemy, a man. It is a prayer to Indra and to Tvaṣṭṛ (printed तृष्ट (tṛṣṭa)) that the deeds practised by this enemy to harm us, the sacrificers, deeds that we are unable to know, may not harm us by day and night.

दुच्चुनाभ्यः (duccunābhyaḥ)—दुःशुनाः दुच्चुनाः दुःखकारिणीभ्यः शत्रुसेनाभ्यः । (duḥśunāḥ duccunāḥ duḥkhakāriṇībhyaḥ śatrusenābhyaḥ |) The word शुन (śuna) is stated by Yāska among the words for happiness (Ni. 3-13). When the prefix दुः (duḥ) with the meaning “producing suffering” joins the word शुन (śuna), which denotes happiness, the word दुच्चुन (duccuna) results. The sacrificers pray that Indra and the god Tvaṣṭṛ may not hand us over to the power of enemies who cause suffering.

सुम्मायता (summāyatā) (as supplied) - सुखमिच्छता । (sukhamicchatā |) Since the word सुम्म (summa) (as supplied) is stated among the words for happiness (Ni. 3-13), the meaning “desiring happiness” is given here for this word.

(O Indra) अहेळता (aheḷatā)—without anger. मनसा (manasā)—with the mind. श्रुष्टिं (śruṣṭiṃ)—that gives happiness. दुहानां (duhānāṃ)—that is to be milked. पिप्युषीं (pipyuṣīṃ)—well-fed. असश्चतं (asaścataṃ)—having limbs well fitted together. धेनुं (dhenuṃ)—the milch cow. आ वह (ā vaha)—bring and join to us, towards us. पुरुहूत (puruhūta)—O Indra, who are called by many. पद्याभिः (padyābhiḥ)—by the movements of the feet. आशुं (āśuṃ)—who pervade everything. वचसा (vacasā)—by speech. वाजिनं च (vājinaṃ ca)—and swift. त्वां (tvāṃ)—you. विश्वहा (viśvahā)—on all days. हिनोमि (hinomi)—I urge with praises.

O Indra, with a mind free from anger, bring and join to us, towards us, the cow that gives happiness, that is to be milked, that is well-fed and has limbs well fitted together. O Indra, who are called by many, you who pervade everything by the movements of your feet and are swift by speech, I urge on all days with praises.

Printed English translation

Bring to us, with benignant mind, the well-nourished and compactly-limbed milch cow, yielding milk, and conferring happiness : daily I glorify, you, who are adored by many, quick (your) steps, and rapid in (your) words.

Let Indra, or the god Tvaṣṭṛ, with a mind free from anger, that is अहेळता मनसा (aheḷatā manasā)—अक्रुध्यता मनसा (akrudhyatā manasā), that is, a mind filled with joy, towards us the sacrificers, grant us for our good a cow (milch cow) that gives happiness, that yields milk abundantly, whose body is well grown, and that is free from bad marks; thus the wish is expressed. Indra and the god Tvaṣṭṛ are addressed as पुरुहूत (puruhūta)—बहुभिराहूत (bahubhirāhūta), called in many sacrifices, with recitation of praises, by many priests and sacrificers. Then, पद्याभिः आशुं वचसा च वाजिनं त्वा विश्वहा हिनोमि (padyābhiḥ āśuṃ vacasā ca vājinaṃ tvā viśvahā hinomi)—the greatness of this god is described: he pervades everything by the movements of his own feet and is swift by his words; and it is said that, addressing this god who is endowed with such greatness, the sacrificer recites praises on all days. श्रुष्टिं (śruṣṭiṃ)—सुखकरीं (sukhakarīṃ). The word श्रुष्टी (śruṣṭī) is explained by Yāska as श्रुष्टीति क्षिप्रनाम (śruṣṭīti kṣipranāma) (Ni. 6-13). Durgācārya, giving the meaning श्रुष्टीवरीः सुखवतीः (śruṣṭīvarīḥ sukhavatīḥ), explains that the word is used in several senses. अहेळता (aheḷatā)—अक्रुध्यता (akrudhyatā). Yāska (Ni. 3-9) has read हेळतेः (heḷateḥ) among the words for the action of being angry. On this basis Sāyaṇa has explained the meaning here as "free from anger".

In the sacrifice called Patnīsaṃyāja, before the offering to the Gṛhapati, offerings are to be made to the deities Rākā and Sinīvālī. Then, in the Rākā sacrifice, the first Ṛk of this sūkta, राकामहं (rākāmahaṃ), and the second Ṛk, यास्ते राके (yāste rāke), are used as the Yājyā and Puronuvākyā mantras, as expounded by the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra in the sūtra राकामहं सिनीवालि कुहू-महमिति द्वे द्वे याज्यानुवाक्ये (rākāmahaṃ sinīvāli kuhū-mahamiti dve dve yājyānuvākye) (Ā. 1-10); and in the mantras having the Maruts as deity these Ṛks are to be used as Dhāyyā mantras, as expounded by the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra in the sūtra राकामहमिति द्वे (rākāmahamiti dve) (Ā. 5-20). By this Ṛk and the next one the goddess Rākā is praised. Rākā: the full-moon night. The night that has the full moon is commonly called Pūrṇimā; this is what is called Rākā. सुहवां सुष्टुती अहं हुवे (suhavāṃ suṣṭutī ahaṃ huve): it is said that I call her who is well-called, i.e. who brings about the fulfilment of invocations, with excellent praise; as this goddess fulfils the wishes of those who call her, the sacrificer invokes her with excellent praise. The word सुभगा (subhagā) is taken to mean one who has excellent wealth: may this goddess who has excellent wealth hear the sacrificer's invocation, and having heard it, त्मना बोधतु (tmanā bodhatu), may she of herself understand the purpose for which the sacrificer has invoked her; and अपः सूच्या

अच्छिद्यमानया सीव्यतु (apaḥ sūcyā acchidyamānayā sīvyatu), may she so favour us that the sacrificer's line is not broken. वीरं शतदायं उक्थं पुत्रं ददातु (vīraṃ śatadāyaṃ ukthaṃ putraṃ dadātu): the wish is expressed that she grant a son who is valiant, possessed of abundant wealth or giving abundantly, and praiseworthy. अपः सूच्या अच्छिद्यमानया सीव्यतु (apaḥ sūcyā acchidyamānayā sīvyatu)—the bhāṣya says: पुत्रोत्पादनलक्षणं कर्म सूचीस्थानीयया अविच्छन्नया अनुग्रहबुद्धा संतनोतु । यथावस्त्रादिकं सूच्यास्यतं चिरं तिष्ठति एवमिदं करोतु (putrotpādanalakṣaṇaṃ karma sūcīsthānīyayā avicchannayā anugrahabuddhā saṃtanotu | yathāvastrādikaṃ sūcyāsyataṃ ciraṃ tiṣṭhati evamidaṃ karotu). The word अपः (apaḥ) has been read by Yāska among the names of action (Ni. 3-2). Here its meaning is explained as the action consisting of the begetting of sons. The meaning is explained thus: through the favour of the goddess Rākā, as a garment stitched with a needle remains firm for a long time, so may our line, by the birth of sons, remain firm for a long time.

The author of the Nirukta, in explaining the word राका (rākā), cites this very Ṛk (Ni. 11-32); gives the derivation राका—रातेर्दान कर्मणः (rākā—rāterdāna karmaṇaḥ), and then explains the Ṛk राकामहं सुह्वानां सुष्टुत्या-ह्वये शृणोतुनस्सुभगा बोधत्वात्मना सीव्यत्वपः प्रजननकर्म सूच्याच्छिद्यमानया। सूची सीव्यतेः ददातु वीरं शतप्रदमुक्थं व्यक्तव्यप्रशंसं (rākāmahaṃ suhvānāṃ suṣṭutyā-hvaye śṛṇotunassubhagā bodhatvātmanā sīvyatvapaḥ prajananakarma sūcyācchidyamānayā| sūcī sīvyateḥ dadātu vīraṃ śatapradamukthaṃ vyaktavyapraśaṃsaṃ) in the same way as the bhāṣyakāra has explained it.

And of सुभगे सहस्रपोषं रराणा—शोभनधने सहस्रसंखातस्य धनस्य पुष्टिं ददती (subhage sahasrapoṣaṃ rarāṇā—śobhanadhane sahasrasaṃkhātasya dhanasya puṣṭiṃ dadatī): since this goddess has abundant wealth she is addressed by the word सुभगे (subhage), and she will bestow on those who serve her the increase (abundance), the prosperity, of wealth numbering thousands; thus the generosity of this goddess is also described.

Gist: The Sinīvālī sacrifice uses this and the next Ṛk as yājyā and anuvākyā (the sūtra was cited earlier). Sinīvālī is the new-moon day on which the moon is seen as a thin sliver; O broad-hipped one, sister of the gods, enjoy our oblation and give us offspring. The tail explains didiḍḍi (from दिह (diha) or दिश (diśa)).

पृथुष्टुके (pṛthuṣṭuke)—having broad hips. सिनीवालि (sinīvāli)—O goddess Sinīvālī. या (yā)—you who. देवानां (devānāṃ)—of the gods. स्वसा असि (svasā asi)—are the sister; such a you. आहुतं (āhutaṃ)—offered (into the fire). हव्यं (havyaṃ)—the oblation. जुषस्व (juṣasva)—partake of. देवि

(devi)—O goddess. नः (naḥ)—to us. प्रजां (prajāṃ)—sons and the like. दिदिड्डि (didiḍḍi)—give. (The printed text has "ಎಲೆಲ ದೇವಿಯೀ" for "O goddess"; read as an evident slip for "ಎಲೈ", as printed.)

O goddess Sinīvālī, of broad hips, you who are the sister of the gods, such a you, partake of the oblation we have offered in the fire. O goddess, give us sons and the like.

Printed English translation

Wide-hipped Sinivali, who are the sister of the gods, accept the offered oblation, and grant us, goddess, progeny.

It has been said earlier (Āśvalāyana-śrauta-sūtra, as printed "೮. ೫-೨೦") that in the Sinīvālī sacrifice this Ṛk beginning सिनीवालि (sinīvāli) and the next Ṛk beginning या सुबाहुः (yā subāhuḥ) are to be used as the yājyā and the purorucā/anuvākyā mantras.

p. 190

Running head: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṇḍala 2, Adhyāya 3, Sūkta 32, p. 190.

The new-moon day (amāvāsyā) is of two kinds. Of these, the new-moon day on which the moon is seen as a mere sliver is known as Sinīvālī. This very sense is explained by the words "dṛṣṭacandrā amāvāsyā sinīvālī". The deity presiding over this new-moon day is addressed by the word हे सिनीवालि (he sinīvāli). She is described as पृथुष्टके (pṛthuṣṭake) [sic, as printed]—"pṛthujaghane pṛthusaṃhate vā", having a stout lower belly, or a strong bodily frame; and as देवानां स्वसा आसि (devānāṃ svasā āsi)—"svayaṃsaṃcāriṇī bhaginī vā bhavasi", one who moves about at her own will, or the sister of the gods. The Ṛk further wishes that she partake of the oblation offered into the fire ("āhutaṃ haviḥ juṣasva") by the sacrificers in her name; and it prays नः प्रजां दिदिड्डि (naḥ prajāṃ didiḍḍi) that this goddess increase or bestow sons and the like upon us sacrificers who offer shares of oblation in the sacrifices.

If on the day of new moon the moon is seen by itself as a mere sliver, that new-moon day is called by the name Sinīvālī; hence the explanation "dṛṣṭacandrā amāvāsyā sīnivālī" is given here. Yāska says: सिनीवाली कुहूरिति देव पत्न्याविति नैरुक्ताः । अमावास्या इति याज्ञिकाः । या पूर्वा अमावास्या सा सीनीवाली, या उत्तरा सा कुहूरिति विज्ञायते (sinīvālī kuhūriti deva patnyāviti nairuktāḥ | amāvāsyā iti yājñikāḥ | yā pūrvā amāvāsyā sā sīnīvālī, yā uttarā sā kuhūriti vijñāyate) (words as printed). That is: the Nairuktas hold that the two goddesses named Sīnīvālī and Kuhū are wives of gods; the ritualists hold that the time called amāvāsyā is of two kinds, Sīnīvālī and Kuhū (the earlier new-moon day is Sīnīvālī, the later is known as Kuhū). Having set out the two views, the commentator cites the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa passage that teaches this.

Further: सिनीवाली सिनमन्नं भवति सिनाति भूतानि वालं पर्व वृणोतेः तस्मिन्नन्नवती वालिनी वा, वालेनेवास्यामणुत्वाच्चंद्रमाः सेवितव्यो भवति इति वा (sinīvālī sinamannaṃ bhavati sināti bhūtāni vālaṃ parva vṛṇoteḥ tasminnannavatī vālinī vā, vālenevāsyāmaṇutvāccaṃdramāḥ sevitavyo bhavati iti vā) (Nirukta 11-32, as printed). Sina means food, which binds (nourishes) living beings and makes them possessed of food; since the gods desire oblations at the parva (junction) time, Sinīvālī is she who is filled with food—one kind of meaning. Secondly, the word vāla is used in the sense of bāla (a young boy): she is filled with oblations dear to the gods, or is served by the moon, which is minute in form, like a vāla (hair).

Also, citing this very mantra, he explains: सिनीवाली पृथुजघने, स्तुकः स्त्यायतेः संघातः । पृथुकेशस्तुते पृथुष्टुते वा । या त्वं देवानामसि स्वसा । स्वसा सु असा । स्नेषु सीदतीति वा । जुषस्व हव्यमदनं प्रजां च देवि दितुनः (sinīvālī pṛthujaghane, stukaḥ styāyateḥ saṃghātaḥ | pṛthukeśastute pṛthuṣṭute vā | yā tvaṃ devānāmasi svasā | svasā su asā | sneṣu sīdatīti vā | juṣasva havyamadanaṃ prajāṃ ca devi ditunaḥ) (Nirukta 11-34, as printed), and gives the meaning thus.

Gist: Sinīvālī has beautiful arms and fingers, bears children well and is mother of many, and protects the people; priests and sacrificers, offer the oblation to her. The tail explains suṣūmā, bahusūvarī, viśvatnyai and juhotana.

या (yā)—she who. सुबाहुः (subāhuḥ)—having excellent arms. स्वंगुरिः (svaṃguriḥ)—having excellent fingers. सुषूमा (suṣūmā)—having borne excellent sons. बहुसूवरी (bahusūvarī)—having many sons. तस्यै (tasyai)—to such a one. विश्वत्नै (viśvatnai)—the protectress of the people. सिनीवाल्यै (sinīvālyai)—to the goddess Sinīvālī. हविः (haviḥ)—oblation. जुहोतन (juhotana)—offer.

O sacrificers, to that goddess Sinīvālī who has excellent arms, excellent fingers, excellent sons and many sons, offer the oblation.

Printed English translation

Offer the oblation to that Sinivali, the protectress of mankind, who has beautiful fingers, who is the parent of many children, and who had numerous childrn [sic].

या सुबाहुः स्वंगुरिः सुषूमा बहुसूवरी (yā subāhuḥ svaṃguriḥ suṣūmā bahusūvarī) —सिनीवाली शोभनबाहुः शोभनांगुलिः सुष्टु प्रसवित्रि, बह्वीनां प्रजानां सवित्रि (sinīvālī śobhanabāhuḥ śobhanāṃguliḥ suṣṭu prasavitri, bahnīnāṃ prajānāṃ savitri). This goddess called Sinīvālī has beautiful, excellent arms and fingers; she bears good sons and bears many children. Having thus described this goddess and her power, the commentator says तस्ये सिनीवाल्के विश्वत्कृ हवि: जुहोतन (tasyè sinīvālkè viśvatkṛ havi: juhotana) (words as printed)—विशां पालयित्र्यै हवि: जुहुत (viśāṃ pālayitryai havi: juhuta): "Offer oblations to this Sinīvālī goddess, of such power, who protects the people" — the seer of the mantra's exhortation is thus described: priests and sacrificers are to offer oblations to her.

Gist: here the word guṅgū, because of its association with Rākā and Sinīvālī, means Kuhū; the Ṛk invokes each of these goddesses, Indrāṇī for protection and Varuṇānī for welfare. The tail notes the feminine suffix īṣ and the ānuk augment in indrāṇī, varuṇānī.

या (yā) (yā)—who; गुंगूः (guṃgūḥ)—the goddess Kuhū; या (yā)—who; सिनीवाली (sinīvālī)—Sinīvālī; या (yā)—who; राका (rākā)—Rākā; या (yā)—who; सरस्वती (sarasvatī)—Sarasvatī: she who is famed under these names. अह्वे (ahve)—I call. इंद्राणीं (iṃdrāṇīṃ)—Indra's wife; ऊतये (ūtaye)—I call her for protection. वरुणानीं (varuṇānīṃ)—Varuṇa's wife; स्वत्तये (svattaye) [sic, as printed]—I call her so that welfare may come about.

I call that goddess who is famed as Kuhū, as Sinīvālī, as Rākā and as Sarasvatī. I call Indrāṇī for protection and Varuṇānī for welfare.

Printed English translation

I invoke her who is Gangu, who is Sinivali, who is Raka, who is Saraswati : (I invoke) Indrani for protection, Varunani for welfare.

Here the goddess Kuhū is meant by the word गुंगूः (guṃgūḥ). Since Rākā and Sinīvālī were described in the preceding Ṛks, the commentator explains the word guṅgū here as Kuhū (that is, the new-moon day on which the moon is not seen). The Nirukta-writer says कूहूर्गूहतेः क्वा भूदिति वा क्व सती हूयत इति वा, क्वाहुतं जुहोतीति वा (kūhūrgūhateḥ kvā bhūditi vā kva satī hūyata iti vā, kvāhutaṃ juhotīti vā) (Nir. 11-34), and does not explain the word (guṅgū) formed from the root गुहू (guhū) (guhū), "to cover, to veil". The word kuhū itself is derived from the root gūh; and in three ways the form of the word kuhū is explained: "Where was she? Where is she invoked? Where does one offer the oblation?"—that is, "Where is this goddess? Where is she called? Where is the offering made?" The passage describes that the sacrificers invoke the goddess Kuhū, the goddess Sinīvālī, and the goddesses Rākā, Sarasvatī, Indrāṇī and Varuṇānī, for the sake of स्वस्तये अविनाशाय (svastaye avināśāya) (svastaye avināśāya), that welfare may come to themselves.

इंद्राणीं (iṃdrāṇīṃ)—इंद्रस्य पत्निं (iṃdrasya patniṃ). The Nirukta-writer has commented इंद्राणी इंद्रस्य पत्नि (iṃdrāṇī iṃdrasya patni) (Nir. 10-39). वरुणानीं (varuṇānīṃ)—वरुणस्य पत्निं (varuṇasya patniṃ). Yāska, in explaining the Ṛk उत ग्ना व्यंतु देवपत्नीरिंद्राण्य १ ग्नाय्यश्विनी राट् । आ रोदसी वरुणानी शृणोतु व्यंतु देवीर्य ऋतुर्जनीनां (uta gnā vyaṃtu devapatnīriṃdrāṇya 1 gnāyyaśvinī rāṭ | ā rodasī varuṇānī śṛṇotu vyaṃtu devīrya ṛturjanīnāṃ) (Ma. Saṃ. 5-46-8, words as printed), says: इंद्राणींद्रस्य पत्नि, अग्नाया अग्नेःपत्नि, अश्विनी अश्वनोः पत्नि, रोदसी रुद्रस्य पत्नि, वरुणानी वरुणस्य पत्नि (iṃdrāṇīṃdrasya patni, agnāyā agneḥpatni, aśvinī aśvanoḥ patni, rodasī rudrasya patni, varuṇānī varuṇasya patni) (Nir. 12-46): Indrāṇī is Indra's wife, Agnāyī Agni's wife, Aśvinī the Aśvins' wife, Rodasī Rudra's wife, Varuṇānī Varuṇa's wife.

The thirty-third sūkta.

Sāyaṇa's introduction to the sūkta

> चतुर्थेऽनुवाक एकादश सूक्तानि । तत्र ते पितरिति पंचदशर्चं प्रथमं

Gist: the first of the eleven sūktas of Anuvāka 4, of fifteen ṛks, of the Gṛtsamada seer, for Rudra, in triṣṭubh; the Anukramaṇī, the Āśvalāyana Gṛhya-sūtra (4-8-23), the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra (3-8) and Śaunaka are quoted for the application.

Anuvāda (Kannada). There are eleven sūktas in the fourth anuvāka of the second maṇḍala. Of them this sūkta beginning आ ते पितर्मरुतां (ā te pitarmarutāṃ) is the first. It has fifteen ṛks. The seer of this sūkta is Gṛtsamada; Rudra is the deity; the metre is triṣṭubh. What is said in the Anukramaṇikā—आ ते पंचोना रौद्रमिति (ā te paṃconā raudramiti)—is explained: in the Rudra sacrifices beginning with the one named Śūlagava the western-quarter deity is to be worshipped with this sūkta, as set out by the Āśvalāyana Gṛhya-sūtra sūtra कद्रुद्रायेमा रुद्राया ते पितरिमा रुद्राय स्थिरधन्वन इति सर्वरुद्रयज्ञेषु दिशामुपस्थानं (kadrudrāyemā rudrāyā te pitarimā rudrāya sthiradhanvana iti sarvarudrayajñeṣu diśāmupasthānaṃ) (Gṛ. Sū. 4-8-23). In the animal sacrifice to Rudra, when the oblation is offered, the Ṛk आ ते पितः (ā te pitaḥ) is to be recited as the anuvākyā mantra, as set out by the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra sūtra आ ते पितर्मरुतां सुम्मनेतु प्रबभ्रवे वृषभाय .श्वितीच इति तिस्रः (ā te pitarmarutāṃ summanetu prababhrave vṛṣabhāya .śvitīca iti tisraḥ)

Running head: Ṛgvedasaṃhitā, Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Varga 16, p. 195.

[Continuing the Anuvāda from p. 194:] … and having cooked the caru, one is to offer the oblation with ghee. After the oblation, the deity Rudra is to be approached (upasthāna). Then on that day only the remnant of the oblation is to be eaten, in solitude, without harbouring any anxiety; no other food is to be taken. If one observes this from the fourteenth day onwards for a month, one is said to be freed from untimely death and disease and to live happily.

Sūkta 33 — Maṇḍala 2, Anuvāka 4, Sūkta 33; Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Vargas 16, 17, 18. Number of ṛks in the sūkta: 15. Seer: Gṛtsamada. Deity: Rudra. Metre: triṣṭubh.

O Rudra, father of the Maruts, may the happiness that is to be had from you come and reach us. Do not separate us from the sight of the sun and keep us in darkness. May our brave son, fighting the enemy, obtain the power to defeat him. O Rudra, cause our line to prosper through sons, grandsons and the rest.

Printed English translation

Father of the Maruts, may your felicity extend to us : exclude us not from the sight of the sun : (grant that) our valiant (descendants) may overcome (these) foes, and that we may be multiplied, Rudra, by (our) progeny.

Sāyaṇa's explanation of the word rudra is different from this. He is rudra either because at the time of dissolution he makes all weep; or because he destroys the sorrow called saṃsāra; or because he is taught by the Upaniṣads, which are of the nature of sound; or because he teaches self-knowledge to the worshippers of self-knowledge; or because he destroys ignorance, which covers knowledge as thick darkness covers light. Thus, by showing the differences of meaning arising from the sense of the root रुत् (rut), the meaning of the word rudra is explained. And in accordance with the history set out in the Aitihāsika view, the meaning of the word rudra, formed from the root रुदिल् अश्रुविमोचने (rudil aśruvimocane) ("to shed tears"), is explained by citing the Vedic text सोऽरोदिद्यदरोदीत्तद्रुद्रस्य रुद्रत्वं (so 'rodidyadarodīttadrudrasya rudratvaṃ) (Tai. Saṃ. 1-5-1-1). From this the greatness of Rudra and his compassion towards living beings become evident.

मरुतां पितः रुद्र ते सुम्नं आ एतु (marutāṃ pitaḥ rudra te sumnaṃ ā etu)—मरुत्संज्ञानां देवानामुत्पादक रुद्र त्वदीयमस्मभ्यं दातव्यं सुखं आगच्छतु (marutsaṃjñānāṃ devānāmutpādaka rudra tvadīyamasmabhyaṃ dātavyaṃ sukhaṃ āgacchatu) (Sāyaṇa's gloss: "O Rudra, begetter of the gods called Maruts, may your happiness, to be given to us, come"). Yāska has explained the word marutaḥ as मितराविणो वा, मितरोचिनो वा, महत् द्रवंतीति वा (mitarāviṇo vā, mitarocino vā, mahat dravaṃtīti vā) (Ni. 11-14) [as printed]; and having read the word rudra among the names of praisers (Ni. 3-19) [as printed] and commented रुद्रो रौतीति सतः, रोरूयमाणो द्रवतीति वा. रोदयतीर्वा (rudro rautīti sataḥ, rorūyamāṇo dravatīti vā. rodayatīrvā), he has cited the Kāṭhaka text यदरुदत् तद्रुद्रस्य रुद्रत्वं (yadarudat tadrudrasya rudratvaṃ) and the Maitrāyaṇīya-śākhā text यदरोदीत् तद्रुद्रस्य रुद्रत्वं (yadarodīt tadrudrasya rudratvaṃ) (Ni. 10-7). Sāyaṇa, explaining that the Marut deities are Rudra's sons, says रुद्रस्य च मरुतां पितृत्वं " इदं पित्रे मरुतां " (ऋ. सं. १-११४-६) इत्यत्र आख्यायिकामुखीनावादिष्म (rudrasya ca marutāṃ pitṛtvaṃ " idaṃ pitrè marutāṃ " (ṛ. saṃ. 1-114-6) ityatra ākhyāyikāmukhīnāvādiṣma) [as supplied; the bhāṣya above reads -mukhenāvādiṣṭa]: in explaining the sūkta इदं पित्रे मरुतां (idaṃ pitrè marutāṃ) he has described, by way of a narrative, Rudra as the begetter of the Maruts. The wish is that the happiness granted by Rudra, begetter of the Marut deities, may come to us, the sacrificers.

नः सूर्यस्य संदृशः मा युयोथाः (naḥ sūryasya saṃdṛśaḥ mā yuyothāḥ)—अस्मान् सूर्यस्य संदर्शनात् मा पृथक्कार्षिः (asmān sūryasya saṃdarśanāt mā pṛthakkārṣiḥ). The wish is that the god Rudra may protect us, the sacrificers, so that the light of the sun is not lost to us; and, in नः वीरः अर्वति अभिक्षमेत (naḥ vīraḥ arvati abhikṣameta), that Rudra may grant our sons and others the strength to overcome the enemy; or, यद्वा वीरस्त्वं नो अस्मानभिक्षमेथाः अस्मान् कृतापराधानभि क्षमस्व (yadvā vīrastvaṃ no asmānabhikṣamethāḥ asmān kṛtāparādhānabhi kṣamasva), that the heroic Rudra may forgive us our offences; and, प्रजाभिः प्रजायेमहि (prajābhiḥ prajāyemahi), that we sacrificers may prosper through sons, grandsons and the rest.

रुद्र (rudra)—O Rudra. जातस्य (jātasya)—of the whole created world, श्रिया (śriyā)—in splendour, श्रेष्ठः (śreṣṭhaḥ)—you are supreme. वज्रबाहो (vajrabāho)—O Rudra, holding the thunderbolt. तवसा (tavasā) [as supplied; Saṃhitā tavasām]—among the mighty तवस्तमः (tavastamaḥ)—you are the most powerful. नः (naḥ)—us, अंहसः (aṃhasaḥ)—of sin पारं (pāraṃ)—to the end (bring), स्वस्ति (svasti)—safely पर्षि (parṣi)—carry (us) across it. रपसः (rapasaḥ)—of sin, विश्वाः (viśvāḥ)—all अभीतीः (abhītīḥ)—blows, युयोधि (yuyodhi)—ward off.

O Rudra, among all created beings you are supreme by your glory. O Rudra, holding the thunderbolt as weapon, among the mighty you are the mightiest. Bring us to the end of sin and carry us safely across it. Ward off the blows of every kind of sin.

Printed English translation

You, Rudra, are the chiefest of beings in glory : you, wielder of the thunderbolt, are the mightiest of the mighty : do you waft us in the safety over (the ocean) of sin : repel all the assaults of iniquity.

Addressing Rudra, the commentary describes him, in जातस्य श्रिया श्रेष्ठः (jātasya śriyā śreṣṭhaḥ)—उत्पन्नस्य सर्वस्य जगतः मध्ये ऐश्वर्येण प्रशस्यतमः (utpannasya sarvasya jagataḥ madhye aiśvaryeṇa praśasyatamaḥ)—as the most praiseworthy of all, in the created world, by his power in the form of lordship over it.

वज्रबाहो तवसां तवस्तमः (vajrabāho tavasāṃ tavastamaḥ)—आयुधहस्त रुद्र प्रवृद्धानां मध्ये अतिशयेन प्रवृद्धोसि (āyudhahasta rudra pravṛddhānāṃ madhyè atiśayena pravṛdyosi) [as supplied; -vṛddho 'si]. Explaining the word वज्र (vajra) as "weapon", it describes Rudra as bearing the weapon in his hand and as endowed with greatness exceeding that of all the great. The prayer is that this god may release the sacrificers from the sins each has committed and grant welfare; by the sentence अंधसः पारं स्वस्ति पर्षि (aṃdhasaḥ pāraṃ svasti parṣi) [as supplied; the ṛk has

aṃhasaḥ] that he may remove sins committed earlier and bring about welfare; and, in रपसः विश्वाः अभीतीः युयोधि (rapasaḥ viśvāḥ abhītīḥ yuyodhi)—पापस्य (pāpasya) (continued on the next page)

(Continued:) सर्वाः अभिगमनानि पृथक्कुरु (sarvāḥ abhigamanāni pṛthakkuru)—that Rudra may keep us separate from contact with all the kinds of sin that may befall the sacrificers in future, that is, may destroy sins; thus the sacrificers' prayer is described.

Gist: O Rudra, may we not anger you by faulty homage, bad praise, or by invoking other gods along with you; make our sons thrive with your medicines; I hear you are the best of physicians.

रुद्र (rudra)—O Rudra. त्वा (tvā)—you, नमोभिः (namobhiḥ)—with (defective) acts of worship, मा चुक्रुधाम (mā cukrudhāma)—we shall not make angry. वृषभ (vṛṣabha)—O Rudra, who showers desired objects. दुष्टुती (duṣṭutī)—with inauspicious praises, मा (mā)—we shall not make (you) angry.

(Pratipadārtha of Ṛk 4 continued:) सहूती (sahūtī)—by invoking, along with you, other deities unlike you, and worshipping them. मा (mā)—(we shall) not (cause) you anger. नः (naḥ)—our. वीरान् (vīrān)—heroic sons. भेषजेभिः (bheṣajebhiḥ)—with your medicines. उत् अर्पय (ut arpaya)—cause (them) to be united (with them). त्वा (tvā)—you. भिषजां (bhiṣajāṃ)—among physicians [as supplied: "ವೈದ್ಯರಲ್ಲಿಲ್ಲಾ"; the Bhāvārtha has "ವೈದ್ಯರೆಲ್ಲೆಲ್ಲಾ", among all physicians]. भिषक्तमं (bhiṣaktamaṃ)—as the most excellent physician. शृणोमि (śṛṇomi)—I have heard and know.

O Rudra, giver of what is desired, may we not provoke you to anger by worship that is deficient, by inauspicious praises, or by calling and worshipping other, unlike deities together with you. We could not do so. Make our heroic sons united with your medicines. I have heard and know you to be the most excellent physician among all physicians.

Printed English translation

Let us not provoke you, Rudra, to wrath by our (imperfect) adorations; nor, showerer (of benifits) [sic], by our unworthy praise, nor by our invocation (of other deities); invigorate our sons by your medicinal plants, for I hear that you are a chief physician amongst physicians.

In this Ṛk the verb चुक्रुदाम (cukrudāma) is repeated three times and added as the verb to each of the three sentences, and the sense is explained accordingly.

In the first sentence: नमोभिः (namobhiḥ) — आयथाक्रियमाणैः नमस्कारैः हविर्भिर्वा (āyathākriyamāṇaiḥ namaskāraiḥ havirbhirvā): it is said that the sacrificers do not make this god Rudra angry by acts of homage performed without following the order laid down in the śāstra, or by offerings of oblation.

दुष्टतौ—दुःस्तुत्या अशोभनया स्तुत्या (duṣṭatau—duḥstutyā aśobhanayā stutyā) [as supplied; the Ṛk has दुष्टुती (duṣṭutī)]—"not proper", that is: by reciting praises whose sense makes one understand either the might or the qualities of this god otherwise than they are, and thereby preventing this god from giving the sacrificer his wishes as desired, the sacrificers do not act so as to make this god angry; so the sense is described.

Running head: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Varga 16; Ṛgvedasaṃhitā, p. 203.

(Continued:) Since in other mantras this god is declared "प्रथमो दैव्यो भिषक् (prathamo daivyo bhiṣak)" (Tai. Saṃ. 4-1-5-2), "the first divine physician", the sacrificers know him as त्वा भिषजां-चिकित्साभिज्ञानां मध्ये अतिशयेन भैषज्यस्य कर्तारं शृणोमि (tvā bhiṣajāṃ-cikitsābhijñānāṃ madhyè atiśayena bhaiṣajyasya kartāraṃ śṛṇomi)—the foremost among the physicians who treat and destroy diseases, whether of the mind or of the body. And for this reason also: नः वीर्यान् भेषजेभिः उत् अर्पय—अस्माकं पुत्रान्

त्वदीयैः औषध्यैः उत्कृष्टं संयोजय (naḥ vīrrān bheṣajebhiḥ ut arpaya— asmākaṃ putrān tvadīyaiḥ auṣadhyaiḥ utkṛṣṭaṃ saṃyojaya) [as supplied: वीर्रान् (vīrrān)]. The wish is expressed that this god give proper medicines to the children of us sacrificers and make them excel all others.

Since the performers of sacrifice first invoke all the gods, satisfy them with oblations and the like, and only afterwards invoke this Rudra separately, it is described in this way here that they should not incur this god's wrath.

The Rudra who is praised with invocations that are in the form of praise and accompanied by cooked offerings, cakes and the like, such a Rudra I make free from anger and calm of mind by praising him with hymns. May Rudra, who has a soft belly, an excellent invocation, a form of tawny colour and a fine nose, not bring us under the sway of this evil mind that wishes us harm.

Printed English translation

May I pacify by my praises that Rudra, who is worshipped with invocations and oblations; and never may he who is soft-bellied. of a tawny hue, and handsome chin ; who is reverently invoked ; subject us not to that malevolent disposition (that purposes our destruction).

This Rudra is ऋदूदरः सुहवः बभ्रुः सुशिप्रः (ṛdūdaraḥ suhavaḥ babhruḥ suśipraḥ) — शोभनाह्वानः भर्ता सर्वस्य बभ्रुवर्णो वा शिप्रे हनूनासिके वा सुशिप्रः (śobhanāhvānaḥ bhartā sarvasya babhruvarṇo vā śipre hanūnāsike vā suśipraḥ) — "soft-bellied", that is, of fierce [text breaks off here] (continued on the next page) dress, ornaments and the like, yet he has an intention that produces welfare. Because the invocation of this god is beneficial, he is one of good invocation, the lord of all; or one whose body has a golden-brown lustre; one who has handsome cheeks or a nose; or, describing this god, the sacrificers (say): हविर्भिः हवीमभिः हवते स्तोमेभिः अवदिषीय (havirbhiḥ havīmabhiḥ havate stomebhiḥ avadiṣīya), चरुपुरोडाशादिभिः सहितैः आह्वानैः स्तुतिलक्षणै, स्त्युयते स्तोत्रैः अवखंडयामि—पृथक्करोमि (carupuroḍāśādibhiḥ sahitaiḥ āhvānaiḥ stutilakṣaṇai, styuyate stotraiḥ avakhaṃḍayāmi—pṛthakkaromi) (as supplied): by the offerings of oblations such as cooked offerings and cakes, and by invocations in the form of praise, having praised and gratified (him), we so act that no anger arises in this god; and अस्ये मनाय्के नः मा रीरधत् (asyè manāykè naḥ mā rīradhat), हन्मीति मन्यमाना बुद्धिमना तस्ये अस्मान् मा वशं नैषीत् (hanmīti manyamānā buddhimanā tasyè asmān mā vaśaṃ naiṣīt) —it is prayed that the intention of destroying others, which exists (in him), may not arise towards the sacrificers.

सुशिप्रः (suśipraḥ): Yāska: सुशिप्रमेतेन व्याख्यातं । हनू नासिकेवा, हनुः हंतेः । नासिका नसतेः (suśiprametena vyākhyātaṃ | hanū nāsike vā, hanuḥ haṃteḥ | nāsikā nasateḥ) (Ni. 6-17); he has explained the meaning of the word शिप्र as the cheeks or the nose.

बभ्रुः (babhruḥ): In explaining the meaning of the word बभ्रु (babhru), Yāska cites the Ṛk या ओषधीः पूर्वा जाता देवेभ्यस्त्रियुगं पुरा । मन्ये नु बभ्रूणामहं शतं धामानि सप्त च ॥ (yā oṣadhīḥ pūrvā jātā devebhyastriyugaṃ purā | manyè nu babhrūṇāmahaṃ śataṃ dhāmāni sapta ca ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-97-1) and explains बभ्रूणां बभ्रुवर्णानां (babhrūṇāṃ babhruvarṇānāṃ) (Ni. 9-29). Durgācārya gives the meaning: ओषधयः स्वभावतः पच्यमानाः सर्वा एव बभ्रुवर्णाः कपिलाः संपद्यंते (oṣadhayaḥ svabhāvataḥ pacyamānāḥ sarvā eva babhruvarṇāḥ kapilāḥ saṃpadyaṃte); that is, the herbs take on a golden-brown colour at the time they generally ripen.

Gist: May Rudra, showerer of desires and accompanied by the Maruts, gratify me, a suppliant, with bright food; free from sin I would attain his happiness as one scorched by the sun's rays enters shade. The tail explains vivāsati as a verb of serving.

वृषभः (vṛṣabhaḥ)—the one who showers the desired object; मरुत्वान् (marutvān)—accompanied by the Marut deities; that Rudra; नाधमानं (nādhamānaṃ)—who begs in humility; मा (mā)—me; त्वक्षीयसा (tvakṣīyasā)—with bright; वयसा (vayasā)—with food; उत् ममन्द (ut

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

May Rudra, who showers the desired object and is accompanied by the Marut deities, gratify me, who beg in humility, exceedingly with bright food. May I also, being free from sin, fully obtain the happiness obtainable from Rudra, as one scorched by the heat of the sun takes refuge in the shade.

Printed English translation

May the showerer of benifits [sic], the lord of Maruts, gratify me his suppliant with invigorating food : may I, free from sin, so propitiate Rudra, that I may attain to his felicity, as a man, distressed by heat, (finds relief) in the shade.

p. 207

वृषभः (vṛṣabhaḥ)—कामानां वर्षिता (kāmānāṃ varṣitā): the quality of the god Rudra is described thus, that he gives desired things to those who take refuge in him. May this Rudra, मरुत्वान् (marutvān), accompanied by his sons the Marut deities, fulfil the prayer of the sacrificers by granting bright food and so produce satisfaction; and फृणीव छायां रुद्रस्य सुम्नं अरसा आशीय—यथा सूर्यकिरणसंतप्तः छायां प्रविशति एवं रुद्रस्य सुखं अपापः व्यापु यां (phṛṇīva chāyāṃ rudrasya sumnaṃ arasā āśīya—yathā sūryakiraṇasaṃtaptaḥ chāyāṃ praviśati evaṃ rudrasya sukhaṃ apāpaḥ vyāpu yāṃ) (as supplied): as one scorched by the sharp heat of the sun takes refuge in the shade, so the sacrificer, free from sins, will obtain the happiness granted by Rudra—thus the sacrificer's blessing is described.

अरपाः (arapāḥ)—अपापः (apāpaḥ): रपोरिप्रमिति पापनामनी भवतः (raporipramiti pāpanāmanī bhavataḥ) (Ni. 4-21): Yāska explains that the two words रपः and रिप्र (rapaḥ, ripra) both denote sin. Here the word अरपाः is explained as one without sin.

Gist: Where is that gracious, healing hand of yours, Rudra? With it protect me; showerer of desires, remove the sin caused by the gods and forgive me quickly. The tail explains abhicakṣamīthāḥ.

p. 208

रुद्र (rudra)—O Rudra. यः (yaḥ)—which hand. भेषजः (bheṣajaḥ)—that destroys disease. जलाषः (jalāṣaḥ)—that gives joy. अस्ति (asti)—is. ते (te)—your. मृळयाकुः (mṛḷayākuḥ)—the comforting. स्यः (syaḥ)—the well-known. हस्तः (hastaḥ)—hand. क्व (kva)—where? वृषभ (vṛṣabha)—O Rudra, showerer of desires. दैव्यस्य (daivyasya)—caused by the gods. रपसः (rapasaḥ)—also the sin. अपभर्ता (apabhartā)—you who have the power to destroy it. मा (mā)—me, the offender. नु (nu)—quickly. अभि चक्षमीथाः (abhi cakṣamīthāḥ)—forgive completely.

O Rudra, where is that hand of yours, comforting and well known, which destroys disease and gives joy? O Rudra, showerer of desires, you who have the power to destroy even the sin done by the gods and to forgive: forgive me, the offender, quickly and completely.

Printed English translation

Where, Rudra, is your joy-dispensing hand, which is the healer and delighter (of all) : showerer (of benifits) [sic], you are the dispeller of the sins of the gods, quickly have compassion upon me.

रुद्र ते मृळयाकुः हस्तः क्व (rudra te mṛḷayākuḥ hastaḥ kva)—Asking where the comforting hand is, the text states the extraordinary quality of the hand: that this hand destroys the disease of all and is comforting to all; and it expresses the wish that Rudra protect the sacrificers with that hand (भेषजः जलाषः भैषज्यकृत् सर्वेषां सुखकरः (bheṣajaḥ jalāṣaḥ bhaiṣajyakṛt sarveṣāṃ sukhakaraḥ); तेन हस्तेन मां रक्ष (tena hastena māṃ rakṣa)).

दैव्यस्य रपसः अपभर्ता मा अभिचक्षमीथाः (daivyasya rapasaḥ apabhartā mā abhicakṣamīthāḥ)—देवकृतस्य पापस्य विनाशयिता भूत्वा कृतापराधं मां अभिक्षमस्व (devakṛtasya pāpasya vināśayitā bhūtvā kṛtāparādhaṃ māṃ abhikṣamasva). It is explained thus: may Rudra destroy the sins that have come upon the sacrificer through contrary conduct towards the gods, and pardon me, the sacrificer who has committed the offence.

जलाषः—सर्वेषां सुखकरः (jalāṣaḥ—sarveṣāṃ sukhakaraḥ). The word जलाष (jalāṣa) is stated by Yāska (Ni. 2-24) among the names of water; here the meaning "comforting" is given.

In the animal sacrifice related to Rudra, when the vapā, puroḍāśa and oblations are offered, the Ṛk प्र बभ्रवे (pra babhrave) of this sūkta and the two following Ṛks are to be used in order as yājyā mantras; this is stated by the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra, प्र बभ्रवे वृषभाय श्वितीच इति तिस्र आ पश्चातान्नासत्या पुरस्तात् (pra babhrave vṛṣabhāya śvitīca iti tisra ā paścātānnāsatyā purastāt) (Āś. 3-8).

बभ्रवे-विश्वस्य भर्त्रे बभ्रुवर्णाय वा (babhrave-viśvasya bhartre babhruvarṇāya vā): Rudra is the lord of the whole world, or he is of brown colour. वृषभाय कामानां वर्षित्रे तद्वत्पसह्यकारिणे वा (vṛṣabhāya kāmānāṃ varṣitrè tadvatpasahyakāriṇe vā): he fulfils the wishes of those who serve him, or, like a bull, does his work by force. श्वितीचे—शैत्यमंचते (śvitīce—śaityamaṃcate): he has a pure radiance. Having so described Rudra, the Ṛṣi, seer of the mantra, says that for Rudra possessed of these qualities, महो महीं सुष्टुतिं ईरयामि (maho mahīṃ suṣṭutiṃ īrayāmi), "I shall utter abundantly praise full of greatness."

रुद्रस्य तेषं नाम गृणीमसि—महादेवस्य दीप्तं नाम संकीर्तयामः (rudrasya teṣaṃ nāma gṛṇīmasi—mahādevasya dīptaṃ nāma saṃkīrtayāmaḥ): it is explained that we, the seers of the mantra, recite the name, shining with brilliance, of this Mahādeva who is full of greatness beyond all the gods.

Running head: [A. 2 A. 7 V. 17.] Ṛgveda-saṃhitā, p. 211 (as supplied). The window begins inside the Special Topics of Ṛk 8.

(Ni. 2-28) he has read. Sāyaṇa explains मलं (malaṃ) as "that which destroys sin", explains the word कल्मलीक (kalmalīka) as radiance, and describes कल्मलीकुं (kalmalīkuṃ) as one possessed of radiance.

स्थिरेभिः (sthirebhiḥ)—firm; अंगैः (aṃgaiḥ)—endowed with limbs; पुरुरूपः (pururūpaḥ)—endowed with many forms; उग्रः (ugraḥ)—possessed of manifest brilliance; बभ्रुः (babhruḥ)—of brown colour: Rudra; शुक्रेभिः (śukrebhiḥ)—resplendent; हिरण्यैः (hiraṇyaiḥ)—golden; with such ornaments; पिपिशे (pipiśe)—he shines; ईशानात् (īśānāt)—from the lord; अस्य भुवनस्य (asya bhuvanasya)—for this whole world; भूरेः (bhūreḥ)—the sustainer; रुद्रात् (rudrāt)—from Rudra; असुरं (asuraṃ) [sic: the Saṃhitā has असुर्यं (asuryaṃ)]—universal power; न वा उ योषत् (na vā u yoṣat)—is not separated at all.

p. 212

Running head: [212 Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2 A. 4 Sū. 33] (as supplied).

Rudra, who has firm limbs, is endowed with many forms, has manifest brilliance and is of brown colour, shines with resplendent golden ornaments. From Rudra, the lord, who sustains this whole world, universal power is never separated.

Printed English translation

(Firm) with strong limbs, assuming many forms, fierce, and tawny-coloured, he shines with brilliant golden ornaments : vigour is inseparable from Rudra, the supreme ruler and lord of this world.

Rudra is स्थिरेभिरंगैः (sthirebhiraṃgaiḥ) (दृढैरवयवैर्युक्तः (dṛḍhairavayavairyuktaḥ)): endowed with limbs that are joined with strength and brilliance and are powerful. पुरुरूपः (pururūpaḥ) (अष्टमूर्त्यात्मकैः बहुभिः रूपैः उपेतः (aṣṭamūrtyātmakaiḥ bahubhiḥ rūpaiḥ upetaḥ)): he shines with the eight forms, namely earth, water, sun, moon, fire, wind, space and the yajamāna who performs the sacrifice; and उग्रः (ugraḥ) (उद्गूर्णः तेजस्वी (udgūrṇaḥ tejasvī)): he is filled with strength and brilliance; and बभ्रुः (babhruḥ) (भर्ता बभ्रुवर्णो वा (bhartā babhruvarṇo vā)): he is the overlord of the world, or he is of golden-brown colour. Having so described him, (Sāyaṇa) explains that Rudra शुक्रेभिः हिरण्यैः पिपिशे (śukrebhiḥ hiraṇyaiḥ pipiśe) (दीपैः हितरमणीयैः हिरण्मय्यरलंकारैर्वा दीप्यते (dīpaiḥ hitaramaṇīyaiḥ hiraṇmayyaralaṃkārairvā dīpyate)): adorns himself with golden ornaments that are very bright, beneficial and charming.

असुर्यं (asuryaṃ)—the suffix उरन् (uran) is added to the root असु क्षेपणे (asu kṣepaṇe) and the word असुर (asura) results; by असुरः क्षेप्ता (asuraḥ kṣeptā) the word असुर (asura) means "one who throws". By the sūtra तत्र साधुः (tatra sādhuḥ) the suffix य (ya) is added, giving असुर्य (asurya). Sāyaṇa has explained the meaning as "strength".

O Rudra, you who are worthy of worship bear arrows and bow. Being worthy of worship, you wear a necklace that is worthy of worship and of many forms. Being worthy of praise, you protect this whole and great world. O Rudra, there is none at all other than you who has greater strength than you.

p. 214

Running head: [214 Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā [Maṃ. 2. A. 4. Sū. 33.] (as supplied).

Printed English translation

Worthy (of reverence), you bear arrows and a bow : worthy (of praise), you wear an adorable and omniform necklace; worthy (of adoration), you preserve all this vast universe: there is no one more powerful than you.

Addressing Rudra as "O Rudra", the text says that this Rudra, being himself worthy of worship, bears bow and arrows; that he wears यजनीयं पूजनीयं विश्वरूपं निष्कं हारं बिभर्षि (yajanīyaṃ pūjanīyaṃ viśvarūpaṃ niṣkaṃ hāraṃ bibharṣi), necklaces that are worthy of worship and of manifold forms; and that अर्हन्नेव इदं विश्वं अभ्वं दयसे (arhanneva idaṃ viśvaṃ abhvaṃ dayase), he protects all this vast world. Thus the power, the adornment and the wondrous work of this Rudra are described. And ओजेयः न वै अस्ति (ojeyaḥ na vai asti) [as supplied; the Ṛk has ओजीयः] — त्वत्तः अन्यत् किंचित् बलवत्तरं न खलु विद्यते (tvattaḥ anyat kiṃcit balavattaraṃ na khalu vidyate): since nothing other than this Rudra, nothing greater in strength, exists, त्वमेव उक्तव्यापारेषु योज्यः (tvameva uktavyāpāreṣu yojyaḥ) — it is said that Rudra alone is capable of performing the work of protecting this world.

अभ्वं (abhvaṃ)—अतिविस्तृतं (ativistṛtaṃ). Yāska has read the word अभ्व (abhva) among the names of "great" (Ni. 3-13). Sāyaṇa takes this word as an adjective of विश्वं (viśvaṃ) and explains the meaning as "very vast".

Gist: On hearing the harsh cry of a wild animal on a journey one should recite this Ṛk (Gṛhya sūtra cited). Praise the renowned Rudra, seated in his car, ever young, terrible as a lion; the hosts are asked to destroy our other enemies.

(O praiser); [praise] Rudra, who sits in the chariot, ever youthful, terrible like a lion, the destroyer of enemies, possessed of manifest strength, and renowned. Rudra, being praised by us, bring happiness to me, the praiser. Let your hosts destroy the enemy other than ourselves.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O praiser, praise and pray to Rudra, who sits in the chariot, ever youthful, terrible as a lion, destroyer of enemies, possessed of manifest strength and renowned. O Rudra, being praised by us, bring happiness to me, the praiser. May your hosts destroy the enemy other than ourselves.

Printed English translation

Glorify the renowned Rudra, riding in his car, ever youthful, destructive, fierce like a formidable wild beast: Rudra, propitiated by praise, grant happiness to him who praises (you), and let your hosts destroy him who is our adversary.

That this Ṛk स्तुहि श्रुतं (stuhi śrutaṃ) is to be recited when, on a journey, one hears the harsh cry of wild animals, is set out by the Āśvalāyana Gṛhya Sūtra, स्तुहि श्रुतं गर्तसदं युवानमिति मृगस्य (stuhi śrutaṃ gartasadaṃ yuvānamiti mṛgasya) (Ā. Gṛ. 3-10-10).

In the first half of this Ṛk the Ṛṣi, seer of the mantra, addresses the priest who praises at the sacrifice. हे स्तोतः (he stotaḥ), O praising priest —

p. 216

Running head: [216 Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā [Maṃ. 2. A. 4. Sū. 33.] (as supplied).

श्रुतं गर्तसदें (śrutaṃ gartasadèṃ) [sic, as supplied] युवानं मृगं न भीमं उपहत्तुं उग्रं रुद्रं स्तुहि (yuvānaṃ mṛgaṃ na bhīmaṃ upahattuṃ ugraṃ rudraṃ stuhi) — प्रख्यातं, रथे सीदंतं (prakhyātaṃ, rathe sīdaṃtaṃ) ... "praise Rudra, the renowned, seated in the chariot, ever young, terrible like a lion, the destroyer of enemies, the uplifted (fierce one)." Rudra is famous because he is full of greatness; he is seated in a chariot; like a lion he is terrible to all; he is mighty. The command is expressed: praise Rudra of such majesty. In the second half the prayer of the sacrificer is stated, addressing Rudra: हे रुद्र स्तवानः त्वं जरित्रे मह्यं मृळ (he rudra stavānaḥ tvaṃ jaritrè mahyaṃ mṛḷa) — "O Rudra, praised by us, give happiness to me, the praiser"; so it is prayed that Rudra, praised by us the sacrificers, be gracious to us who have recited the praise; and ते सेनाः अस्मत् अन्यं नि वपंतु (te senāḥ asmat anyaṃ ni vapaṃtu) — "let your hosts destroy the person other than ourselves": let Rudra's hosts leave us who praise and destroy another man.

he describes the meaning of the word गर्त (garta) as गर्तः सभा स्थाणुः (gartaḥ sabhā sthāṇuḥ) (Ni. 3-5). And: श्मशानसंचयोपि गर्त उच्यते (śmaśānasaṃcayopi garta ucyate), and गुरतेरपगूर्णे भवति (guraterapagūrṇè bhavati); and in the Ṛk (cited as "Mi. Saṃ. 5-62-8", as printed)

ಹಿರಣ್ಯರೂಪಮುಷಸೋ ವ್ಯುಷ್ಟಾವಯಃಸ್ಥೂಣಮುದಿತಾ ಸೂರ್ಯಸ್ಯ । ಆ ರೋಹಥೋ ವರುಣ ಮಿತ್ರ ಗರ್ತಮತಶ್ಚಕ್ಷಾಥೇ ಅದಿತಿಂ ದಿತಿಂ ಚ ।

the word गर्त (garta) also: रथोपि गर्त उच्यते । गृणातेः स्तुतिकर्मणः । स्तुततमं यानं (rathopi garta ucyate | gṛṇāteḥ stutikarmaṇaḥ | stutatamaṃ yānaṃ) (Ni. 3-5). Thus four meanings are given: the house (in the gambling place) where the dice-pieces are placed, a house, the pit in a cemetery, and the chariot (the text says "house, house", as supplied). Here Sāyaṇa says it is used in the sense of chariot.

Rudra—O Rudra; vandamānam—(the father) who speaks the blessing "be long-lived"; pitaram—the father; kumāraś cit—as a son bows and salutes; upayantam—to you who come towards us; prati nanāma—coming face to face I bow; bhūreḥ—of abundant wealth; dātāram—the giver; satpatim—the protector of the good; gṛṇīṣe—I praise; stutaḥ tvam—you praised by us; asme—to us; bheṣajā—medicines; rāsi—give.

O Rudra, as a son bows to the father who pronounces the blessing "be long-lived", and salutes him, so I come face to face with you, who approach towards us, and bow. I praise you, the giver of abundant wealth and protector of the good. Being praised by us, give us medicines.

Printed English translation

I bow, Rudra, to you, approaching (our rite), as a boy to his father when pronouncing a blessing upon him : I glorify you, the giver of much (wealth), the protector of the virtuous ; thus glorified, bestow healing herbs upon me.

p. 218

हे रुद्र—उपयंतं वंदमानं पितरं कुमारश्चित् प्रति ननाम (he rudra—upayaṃtaṃ vaṃdamānaṃ pitaraṃ kumāraścit prati nanāma) — addressing Rudra: O Rudra, while you move near us the sacrificers, as a son performs obeisance to a father who blesses him with "be long-lived", so we the sacrificers perform obeisances to you. And भूरेः दातारं सत्पतिं गृणीषे (bhūreḥ dātāraṃ satpatiṃ gṛṇīṣe) — we praise you, the giver of abundant wealth and protector of the good, by reciting hymns. It is thus explained. And स्तुतः त्वं आस्मे भेषजा रासि (stutaḥ tvaṃ āsme bheṣajā rāsi) — you, praised by us, grant us medicines so that diseases and the like do not come. This is the explanation.

In कुमारश्चित् (kumāraścit) the word चित् (cit) is used in the sense of comparison. Yāska explains, with examples, that the word चित् (cit) has several uses: चिदित्येषो अनेककर्मा, आचार्यश्चिदिदं ब्रूयादिति पूजायां, दधि चिदित्युपमार्थे, कुल्माषांश्चिदित्यवकुत्सिते (cidityeṣo anekakarmā, ācāryaścididaṃ brūyāditi pūjāyāṃ, dadhi cidityupamārthe, kulmāṣāṃścidityavakutsite) — that is, the word conveys the senses of honour, comparison and disparagement.

The particle अस्मे (asme) is used in all seven case-relations (Ni. 6-7), Yāska says, and he gives examples of all of them. Here Sāyaṇa has explained the meaning as used in the dative.

Gist: the Maruts' medicines are pure, most comforting and beneficial; those chosen by Manu, and Rudra's two (curing diseases, removing fears), I desire.

Marutaḥ—O Maruts, sons of Rudra; vaḥ—your; yā—which; bheṣajā—medicines; śucīni—are pure; vṛṣaṇaḥ—O Maruts who shower desires; yā—which of your medicines; śantamā—are comforting; yā—which medicines; mayobhu—establish happiness; yāni—which medicines; naḥ pitā—our father; manuḥ—Manu; avṛṇīta—chose; tā

—those medicines; ca—and; rudrasya—belonging to Rudra; śam—the disease-destroying; yoḥ ca—and that which produces freedom from fear (these two kinds of medicines); vaśmi—I wish to obtain.

O Maruts, sons of Rudra and showerers of desires, whichever of your medicines are pure, whichever are comforting, whichever our father Manu chose, those, and also the two kinds of medicines belonging to Rudra, the disease-destroying and the fear-removing, I wish to obtain.

p. 220

Printed English translation

Maruts, I solicit of you those medicaments which are pure ; those, showerers (of benifits) [sic] which give great pleasure; those which confer felicity ; those which (our) sire, Manu, selected; and those (medicaments) of Rudra which are the alleviation (of disease), and defence (against danger).

The Maruts, the sons of Rudra, are praised in this Ṛk as हे मरुतः—रुद्रपुत्राः (he marutaḥ—rudraputrāḥ). These Maruts are वृषणः—कामानां वर्षितारः (vṛṣaṇaḥ—kāmānāṃ varṣitāraḥ), that is, they fulfil all the desires of the sacrificers; therefore the sacrificers pray to the Maruts for bodily health, so as to pass their lives happily; the prayer is made for the medicines obtainable through their favour and also for the favour of Rudra.

they also produce happiness; therefore our father Manu has chosen these medicines: thus the greatness of the medicines is stated. (The quoted Sanskrit is given as supplied, including "ಮಯಸ್ಯ", "ಭಾವಯಿತ್ಯಣಿ" and "ಮನು?".) And तानि भेषजानि रुद्रस्य शंयोश्च वश्मि महादेवसंबंधि शमनीयानां रोगाणामुपशमनं यावनीयानां भयानामस्मत्तः पृथक्करणं तदुभयं च प्रार्थये (tāni bheṣajāni rudrasya śaṃyośca vaśmi mahādevasaṃbaṃdhi śamanīyānāṃ rogāṇāmupaśamanaṃ yāvanīyānāṃ bhayānāmasmattaḥ pṛthakkaraṇaṃ tadubhayaṃ ca prārthaye)—the sacrificers have prayed for the favour that is connected with Mahādeva, that destroys (allays) diseases and removes fears in situations where fear arises, and for the medicines connected with the Maruts [sic: as printed] (these two).

शंयुः (śaṃyuḥ)—Yāska explains this word as सुखंयुः (sukhaṃyuḥ) (Ni. 4-21). Durgācārya takes शं युः (śaṃ yuḥ) as two words, explaining शं (śaṃ) as रोगाणां उपशमनं (rogāṇāṃ upaśamanaṃ), the destruction of diseases, and युः (yuḥ) as भयानां यावनं (bhayānāṃ yāvanaṃ), the state in which fears do not arise.

Gist: may Rudra's weapon and wrathful mind pass us by; may he turn his bows from the sacrificers and make our sons and grandsons happy. Grammar tail: the sūtra cited is as printed (Pā. 1-4-88).

Rudrasya—of Rudra; hetiḥ—the weapon; naḥ—us; pari vṛjyāḥ—may it leave, not making us its target; tveṣasya—of the radiant Rudra; mahī—the great; durmatiḥ—the painful, wrath-like mind; pari gāt—may it turn its aim elsewhere than at us; mīḍhvaḥ—O Rudra, showerer of desires; sthirā—your strong bows; maghavadbhyaḥ—from the sacrificers who possess wealth in the form of oblations; ava tanuṣva—turn away to another quarter; tokāya—to our sons; tanayāya—to our grandsons; mṛḷa—bring happiness.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

May we not become targets of Rudra's weapon. May the great, painful, wrath-like mind of the radiant Rudra turn its aim elsewhere than at us. O Rudra, showerer of desires, turn your strong bows away from the sacrificers who possess wealth in the form of oblations. Bring happiness to our sons and our grandsons.

p. 222

Printed English translation

May the javelin of Rudra avoid us : may the great displeasure of the radiant deity pass away (from us) : showerer of benefits, turn away your strong (bow) from the wealthy (offerers of oblations), and bestow happiness upon (our) sons and grandsons.

रुद्रस्य हेतिः नः परि वृज्याः (rudrasya hetiḥ naḥ pari vṛjyāḥ)—the prayer is that the weapon of Mahādeva, which uproots enemies, may be kept far from us, the sacrificers; and श्वेषस्य दुर्मतिः परिगात् (śveṣasya durmatiḥ parigāt) (as printed; the Saṃhitā has त्वेषस्य (tveṣasya))—that the evil mind of this fiery Rudra, which causes sorrow to enemies, may not be directed at us, the sacrificers, but may rest on others. The word माढ्वः (māḍhvaḥ) (as printed; the Saṃhitā has मीढ्वः (mīḍhvaḥ)) is explained as सेचनसमर्थः (secanasamarthaḥ), able to grant rain, Rudra being thus addressed; and स्थिरा मघवद्भ्यः अवतनुष्प—स्थिराणि त्वदीयानि धनूंषि हविर्लक्षणधनयुक्तेभ्यः यजमानेभ्यः अवततज्यानि :कुरु (sthirā maghavadbhyaḥ avatanuṣpa—sthirāṇi tvadīyāni dhanūṃṣi havirlakṣaṇadhanayuktebhyaḥ yajamānebhyaḥ avatatajyāni :kuru)—the prayer is that Rudra's bow be turned away from the sacrificers who possess wealth in the form of oblations and directed at other people; and शोकाय तनयाय मृळ (śokāya tanayāya mṛḷa) (as printed; the Saṃhitā has तोकाय (tokāya))—that the sacrificers' sons and grandsons be kept in happiness.

Gist: Rudra, bearer of the world, showerer and all-knowing, is asked to hear the invocation, not to be angry or slay, and to know the sacrificers who will praise him with fine sons; the grammatical remark is on the root hṛṇīṅ (shame; here "be angry").

Babhro—O bearer of the whole world; vṛṣabha—showerer of desires; cekitāna—all-knowing; deva—radiant; rudra—O Rudra; yathā—in whatever way; na hṛṇīṣe—you are not angry (with us); na ca haṃsi—and do not slay us in wrath (in that way); havanaśrut—as hearer of our invocation; naḥ—us; iha—in this sacrificial place; bodhi—know; vidathe—in the sacrificial house; suvīrāḥ—we, accompanied by excellent heroic sons; bṛhat—your mature praise; vadema—we recite.

O Rudra, bearer of the whole world, showerer of desires, all-knowing and radiant: in the way in which you are not angry with us and do not slay us in wrath, hear our invocation and know us in this sacrificial place. In the sacrificial house, accompanied by heroic sons, we recite your mature praise.

Printed English translation

Cherisher of the world, showerer (of benefits), omniscient and divine (Rudra), hearer of our invocation, so consider us on this occasion, that you may not be irate, nor slay us, but that, blessed with excellent descendants, we may worthily glorify you at this sacrifice.

Addressing Rudra with the words बभ्रो (babhro), वृषभ (vṛṣabha), चेकितान (cekitāna) and देव (deva), the commentary describes his greatness: he rules the whole world as its lord; he fulfils the desires of those who serve him; he knows everything and is all-knowing; he shines with lustre or brilliance [the supplied text reads "ನಣ್ಣಿಸಿ" for "describing"; I take it as varṇisi, as supplied]. As to the sacrificers, यथा न हृणीषे न च हंसि (yathā na hṛṇīṣe na ca haṃsi)—the god is not angry and does not cause destruction; नः हवनश्रुत् बोधि (naḥ havanaśrut bodhi)—we sacrificers pray that, hearing the invocation we make in the sacrifices, he may know us rightly; and विदथे सुवीराः बृहत् वदेम (vidathe suvīrāḥ bṛhat vadema)—in sacrifices and in houses, with our sons of good qualities, we shall recite the mature praises of this god. So it is explained.

Sūkta 34 (Maṇḍala 2)

The thirty-fourth sūkta.

Sāyaṇa's introduction to the sūkta

> धारावरा इति पंचदशर्चं द्वितीयं सूक्तं गार्त्समदं मारुतं । अंत्या त्रिष्टुप् शिष्टा जगत्यः । तथा चानुक्रांतं । धारावरा मारुतं त्रिष्टुबंतमिति ॥ पृष्याभिप्लवषडहयोस्तृतीयेऽहन्याग्नि मारुतशस्त्रस्येदं मारुतनिविद्धानं । सूत्रि– तं च । वैश्वानराय धिषणां धारावरा मरुतस्त्वमग्ने प्रथमो अंगिरा इत्याग्नि– मारुतं । आ. ७–७. । इति ॥

Gist: the second sūkta of the fourth anuvāka, of fifteen ṛks, of the Gārtsamada seer, for the Maruts; the last ṛk in triṣṭubh, the rest in jagatī; the Anukramaṇī is quoted, and the use at the third day of the Pṛṣṭhya and Abhiplava ṣaḍahas, in the Āgnimāruta recitation, is cited from the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra (7-7).

Anuvāda (Kannada). This sūkta beginning ಧಾರಾವರಾ (dhārāvarā) is the second sūkta in the fourth anuvāka. It has fifteen ṛks. Gṛtsamada is the seer of this sūkta; the Maruts are the deity; the last ṛk is in triṣṭubh metre, the remaining ṛks in jagatī metre. What the Anukramaṇikā says—ಧಾರಾವರಾ ಮಾರುತಂ ತ್ರಿಷ್ಟುಬಂತಮಿತಿ (dhārāvarā mārutaṃ triṣṭubaṃtamiti)—is explained: on the third day of the sacrifices called Pṛṣṭhya [as supplied: "ಸೃಷ್ಟ್ಯ"] and Abhiplava-ṣaḍaha, at the beginning of the recitation of the Āgnimāruta-śastra mantras, this sūkta is to be used for the nivid mantras, as set out by the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra sūtra वैश्वानराय धिषणां धारावरा (vaiśvānarāya dhiṣaṇāṃ dhārāvarā) मरुतस्त्वमग्ने प्रथमो अंगिरा इत्याग्निमारुतं (marutastvamagne prathamo aṃgirā ityāgnimārutaṃ) (Ā. 7-7).

Sūkta 34 — Maṇḍala 2, Anuvāka 4, Sūkta 34; Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Vargas 19, 20, 21. Number of ṛks in the sūkta: 15. Seer: Gṛtsamada. Deity: the Maruts. Metre: Ṛks 1–14 jagatī; Ṛk 15 triṣṭubh.

Gist: the Maruts are explained as water-streamed encirclers of the sky, or movers of firm trees; mighty like lions; filled with rain-water or with soma; they blow the wandering cloud and release its rain; alternatively they play the bhṛmi lute and release the cows hidden by the Asura.

Dhārāvarāḥ—those who envelop the sky with streams of water, or who make firmly standing trees and the like move; dhṛṣṇvojasaḥ [as supplied: धृष्णोऽजसः (dhṛṣṇo 'jasaḥ)]—those with strength that crushes enemies; mṛgā na—like lions; bhīmāḥ—of fearful form; taviṣībhiḥ—by their own powers; arcinaḥ—who honour the world; agnayo na—like blazing fires; śuśucānāḥ—shining; [rjīṣiṇaḥ—possessing water (the supplied text reads यजीषिणः (yajīṣiṇaḥ) here, while the Saṃhitā and Pada have ऋजीषिणः (ṛjīṣiṇaḥ))]; marutaḥ—the Maruts; bhṛmiṃ—the wandering clouds;

dhamantaḥ—urging on for rain; gāḥ—the waters contained in them; apa avṛṇata [as supplied; the Saṃhitā has अवृण्वत (avṛṇvata)]—cause to pour down in the form of rain.

The Maruts, who make firmly standing trees and the like move, who have strength that crushes enemies, who are fearful in form like lions, who honour the world by their own powers, who shine like blazing fires and who possess water, urge the wandering clouds on for rain and cause the waters within them to pour down as rain.

Printed English translation

The Maruts, shedders of showers, endowed with resistless might, like formidable lions, reverencing (the world) by their energies, resplendent as fires, laden with water, and blowing about the wandering cloud, give vent to its (collected) rain.

धारावराः (dhārāvarāḥ)—the commentary explains the word in three ways, citing उदकधारया अंतरिक्षमावृण्वंतः (udakadhārayā aṃtarikṣamāvṛṇvaṃtaḥ) and the alternatives. The Maruts pervade the sky with streams of rain-water (drops falling without interval in one even manner); or they make firmly standing trees and the like move; or they, by their own power, protect and bear the whole world.

तविषीभिः अर्चिनः (taviṣībhiḥ arcinaḥ)—by their own strength, through the rain-waters they bestow, they make the whole world worthy of worship (of praise). अग्नयो न शुशुचानाः (agnayo na śuśucānāḥ)—shining abundantly with splendour, like blazing fires. So it is described.

ऋजीषिणः (ऋजीषिणि (ṛjīṣiṇi))—the commentary says: ऋजीषिमुदकं तद्वंतः (ṛjīṣimudakaṃ tadvaṃtaḥ) ("those possessing ṛjīṣa, water"), and alternatively ऋजीषो अपगतसारः सोमः (ṛjīṣo apagatasāraḥ somaḥ) ("ṛjīṣa is soma whose essence has gone"), "joined with that". Sāyaṇa gives the word ṛjīṣa the meaning udaka (water) and explains in one way that, since the Marut deities pour down rain-water, they are "possessing water". In the second meaning it denotes soma plants from which the sap (essence) has been pressed. When the sacrificial rite is performed, the hymn to the Agni-Maruts is recited at the third pressing; then, from the husks left over from the earlier pressings, sap is pressed out again and offered to these deities. Because soma plants pressed at the two times, the morning and midday pressings, are pressed again at the evening pressing, the sapless husk is called ṛjīṣa. Having such soma as their oblation-share, the Maruts are here called ṛjīṣiṇaḥ, so the meaning is explained.

> आपांतमन्युस्तृपलप्रभर्मा धुनिश्चिमीवाञ्चरुमा ऋजीषी । सोमो विश्वान्यतसा वनानि नार्वागिंद्रं प्रतिमानानि देभुः ॥
> āpāṃtamanyustṛpalaprabharmā dhuniśvimīvāñcarumā ṛjīṣī | somo viśvānyatasā vanāni nārvāgiṃdraṃ pratimānāni debhuḥ ‖

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-89-5)

and explains the meaning: ऋजीषी सोमः यत् सोमस्य पूयमानस्य अतिरिच्यते तदृजीषमपार्जितं भवति तेनर्जिषी सोमः (ṛjīṣī somaḥ yat somasya pūyamānasya atiricyate tadṛjīṣamapārjitaṃ bhavati tenarjiṣī somaḥ) (Ni. 5-12) ("ṛjīṣī is soma: what remains over of the soma being purified is ṛjīṣa, what is wiped off; hence ṛjīṣī soma"), and says अथाप्यैंद्रो निगमो भवति (athāpyaiṃdro nigamo bhavati) ("further, there is an Indra passage"). Durgācārya cites the ṛk

> ऋजीषी वज्री वृषभस्तुराषाट्भुष्मी राजा वृत्रहा सोमपाना । युक्त्वा हरिभ्यामुप यासदर्नाज् माध्यंदिने सवने मत्सदिंद्रः ॥

(as printed "ಪು. ಸ೦ ೫-೪೦-೪", i.e. 5-40-4; the abbreviation is the supplied text's)

and says that ṛjīṣī is Indra: ऋजीषी इंद्रः (ṛjīṣī iṃdraḥ).

भृमिं धमंतः गाः अप अवृण्वत (भृमिं धमंतः गाः अप अवृण्वत (bhṛmiṃ dhamaṃtaḥ gāḥ apa avṛṇvata))—the commentary says: भ्राम्यंतं मेघं वर्षणार्थमितस्ततः प्रेरयंतः (bhrāmyaṃtaṃ meghaṃ varṣaṇārthamitastataḥ prerayaṃtaḥ) ("urging hither and thither, for the sake of rain, the wandering cloud") तदंतर्गताः अपः अपावृताः कुर्वंति (tadaṃtargatāḥ apaḥ apāvṛtāḥ kurvaṃti) ("they uncover the waters contained in it"); or, भृम्याख्यः वीणाविशेषः तं धमंतो वादयंतः (bhṛmyākhyaḥ vīṇāviśeṣaḥ taṃ dhamaṃto vādayaṃtaḥ) ("a particular lute called bhṛmi; blowing it, that is, playing it"), बलनाम्मा असुरेणापिहिता गाः अपगतावरणा अकुर्वन् (balanāmmā asureṇāpihitā gāḥ apagatāvaraṇā akurvan) ("they freed from covering the cows hidden by the Asura named Bala" [as supplied; elsewhere the supplied text has vala]). In the first sense, the Maruts urge the clouds that roam the sky, filled with water, hither and thither to rain, so that the waters hidden in the clouds come out in the form of rain. In the second sense the word bhṛmi is taken to mean a lute: when the Asura Vala had stolen the cows of the gods and hidden them, the Maruts played the lute, discovered the place where the cows were, and caused the cows to come out. This legend has been described before.

Gist: stṛbhiḥ means stars (Yāska, Nir. 3-20); the Maruts shine with their ornaments as the heavens with stars and like cloud-born lightning; Rudra, the bull, begot them in the pure udder of Pṛśni (Taittirīya citation).

रुक्ष्मवक्षसः (rukṣmavakṣasaḥ)—wearing a golden-coloured ornament on the breast; मरुतः (marutaḥ)—O Maruts; यत् (yat)—when; वः (vaḥ)—you; वृषा (vṛṣā)—capable of sprinkling (shedding); रुद्रः (rudraḥ)—Rudra; पृश्न्याः (pṛśnyāḥ)—of Pṛśni; शुक्रे (śukre)—in the pure one, ऊधनि (ūdhani)—and swollen (uplifted) one, the womb [as supplied: "ಉದರ"]; अजनि (ajani)—created (then); स्तृभिः (stṛbhiḥ)—by the stars; द्यावो न (dyāvo na)—as the sky [as supplied "ಆಂತರಿಕ್ಷ"] makes itself shine; खादिनः (khādinaḥ)—you who wear bracelets (by your ornaments); चितयंत (citayaṃta)—make yourselves shine; वृष्टयः (vṛṣṭayaḥ)—you, causers of rain; अभ्रिया न (abhriyā na)—like lightnings born of clouds; विद्युतयंत (vidyutayaṃta)—cause the world to shine.

O Maruts, who wear a golden-coloured ornament on the breast, when Rudra, capable of shedding (rain), caused you to be born in the pure heart [as supplied: "ಹೃದಯದಲ್ಲಿ"; the Pratipadārtha has "womb", उदर (udara), and the printed English "womb"] of Pṛśni, then, as the sky makes itself shine with stars, you, wearers of bracelets, make yourselves shine [as supplied: "ಪ್ರಕಾಶಪಶಸಿಕೊಳ್ಳುತ್ತೀರಿ", evidently a misprint] by your ornaments. You, causers of rain, make the world shine like lightnings born of clouds.

Printed English translation

Since, golden-breasted Maruts, the vigorous (Rudra) begot you of the pure womb of Prishni, therefore they, the devourers (of their enemies), are conspicuous (by their ornaments), as the heavens are by the constellatoins [sic] ; and, senders of rain, they are brilliant as the cloud-born (lightning).

स्त्वभिः द्यावो न चितयंत (stvabhiḥ dyāvo na citayaṃta)—"As the heavens make themselves known by the stars": just as the luminous worlds make themselves shine, so the Maruts, खादिनः (khādinaḥ) (devourers of their enemies), are known by their own ornaments. Or खादः (khādaḥ) is a bracelet (कटकं (kaṭakaṃ)), and, possessed of it, they shine. Yāska (नि. ३-२० (ni. 3-20)) has read स्त्वभिः (stvabhiḥ) among the twenty-six names beginning with the two-word group उत्तराणि नामानि (uttarāṇi nāmāni), and explains: ऋक्षाः स्त्वभिरिति नक्षत्राणां (ṛkṣāḥ stvabhiriti nakṣatrāṇāṃ) (these are names of the stars) and स्त्वभिस्तीर्णानीव ख्यायंते (stvabhistīrṇānīva khyāyaṃte) (they appear as if strewn). Sāyaṇa has thus given two kinds of meaning: as the worlds, beginning with the atmosphere, that shine with light reveal their own form by the stars, so the Maruts, the destroyers of enemies, are known by their ornaments; or खाद (khāda) means the ornament called a bracelet worn on the hand, and the Maruts shine with the bracelets they wear on their hands.

वृष्टयः अभ्रिया न विद्योतयंत (vṛṣṭayaḥ abhriyā na vidyotayaṃta)—The rain-giving Maruts light up the whole world like the lightning born in the clouds. The Marut deities who pour down rain-water make all the worlds full of light, as the lightnings born in the clouds illuminate the world. In both these sentences न (na) is used as a particle of comparison.

वृषा रुद्रः पृश्नाः शुक्रे ऊधनि वः अजनयत् (vṛṣā rudraḥ pṛśnāḥ śukre ūdhani vaḥ ajanayat)—Mahādeva, capable of sprinkling (seed), begot (you) in the pure, raised region (उद्धतप्रदेशे (uddhatapradeśe)) of Pṛśni, the Mādhyamikā Vāk (the speech of the middle region). Yāska has read the word पृश्निः (pṛśniḥ) among the common names (सि. २-१३ (si. 2-13) as supplied). One kind of meaning has been set forth thus: Mahādeva, who is able to sprinkle, placed his seed in the pure womb of the goddess Pṛśni, who has the form of the Mādhyamikā Vāk, and so produced the Marut deities. Secondly, यदा पृश्निर्नानावर्णेयं भूमिः पुरा गोरूपधरा आसीत् । तस्यां महेशः वृषो भूत्वा मरुतः उत्पादयामासेत्याचक्षते । तदत्रोच्यते (yadā pṛśnirnānāvarṇeyaṃ bhūmiḥ purā gorūpadharā āsīt | tasyāṃ maheśaḥ vṛṣo bhūtvā marutaḥ utpādayāmāsetyācakṣate | tadatrocyate): this earth of many colours, in former times, when she had taken the form of a cow, Maheśvara took the form of a bull and produced the Maruts; so they say, and this legend is told by this sentence. Sāyaṇa explains this view, and, because the origin of the Maruts is of this kind, describes the Maruts as रुक्ष्मवक्षसः (rukṣmavakṣasaḥ) (रुक्मं रोचमानाभरणं येषां ते (rukmaṃ rocamānābharaṇaṃ yeṣāṃ te): those who have a shining ornament), adorned with shining ornaments; as stars make the atmosphere shine, so they make the whole world shine with their ornaments; and, being born of Mahādeva, they are possessed of abundant greatness.

प्रक्षं (prakṣaṃ) (as supplied; the Saṃhitā has पृक्षं (pṛkṣaṃ))—towards the sacrificer who is provided with food in the form of the oblation; याथ (yātha)—come.

As water is poured over horses in battles to remove their fatigue, the Maruts drench all the worlds with water. The same Maruts, with swift horses, make paths in the middle region of the sounding clouds and rush swiftly to produce rain. O Maruts, with helmets made of gold and of equal mind, you who make trees and the like tremble, come with your horses coloured with spots towards the sacrificer who is provided with food in the form of the oblation.

Printed English translation

They sprinkle the wide-extended (lands) with water, as (men sprinkle) horses (when heated) in battles; and they rush along with swift (horses) on the skirts of the sounding (cloud): Maruts, golden-helmed, and of one mind, agitating (the trees), come with your spotted deer to (receive the sacrificial) food.

अश्वान् अजिषु अत्यानिव सिंचंति (aśvān ajiṣu atyāniva siṃcaṃti) (as supplied) —The Maruts sprinkle the pervaded worlds in battles, as horses that move constantly are sprinkled with water to remove their sweat. Yāska has read the two words अश्व (aśva) and अत्य (atya) among the names of the horse (नि. २-२७ (ni. 2-27)). Sāyaṇa gives अश्व (aśva) the meaning "that which pervades", and explains that the Marut deities sprinkle the pervaded worlds with rain-water, the illustration being stated as: as horses that move constantly in battles are sprinkled with water to remove their sweat, and so relieved of fatigue.

आशुभिः नदस्य कर्णैः तुरयंते (āśubhiḥ nadasya karṇaiḥ turayaṃte)—Those Maruts, with swift-going horses, go quickly through the middle regions of the sounding cloud to produce rain. It is explained thus: in the middle of the clouds that are filled with water and sound, the Maruts, making the middle regions of the clouds into swiftly moving horses, move rapidly so that the waters in the cloud may pour down on the earth as rain.

Running head: Ṛgvedasaṃhitā, Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Varga 19, p. 233.

(Since they are renowned as the seven Maruts) they are of one kind of mind, or of one kind of anger, and they make trees and the like tremble; thus the Marut deities are described. And पृषतीभिः वृक्षं यात—युष्मद्रथे योजिताभिः श्वेतबिंद्वंकिताभिः मृगीभिः वडवाभिर्वा हविर्लक्षणान्नवंतं यजमानं गच्छथ । (pṛṣatībhiḥ vṛkṣaṃ yāta—yuṣmadrathe yojitābhiḥ śvetabiṃdvaṃkitābhiḥ mṛgībhiḥ vaḍavābhirvā havirlakṣaṇānnavaṃtaṃ yajamānaṃ gacchatha |): O Maruts, come to the sacrificer who is provided with food in the form of the oblation, seated in your chariots yoked with deer marked with white spots, or with mares, and offering the oblation-food, so the meaning is described.

Yāska has stated the vehicles of the several deities: हरी इंद्रस्य । रोहितो अग्नेः । हरित आदित्यस्य । रासभावश्विनोः । अजाः पूष्णः । पृषत्यो मरुतां । अरुज्यो गाव उषसः। श्यावाः सवितुः। विश्वरूपा बृहस्पतेः । नियुतो वायोः । इति दशादिष्टोपयोजनानि (harī iṃdrasya | rohito agneḥ | harita ādityasya | rāsabhāvaśvinoḥ | ajāḥ pūṣṇaḥ | pṛṣatyo marutāṃ | arujyo gāva uṣasaḥ| śyāvāḥ savituḥ| viśvarūpā bṛhaspateḥ | niyuto vāyoḥ | iti daśādiṣṭopayojanāni) (नि. २-२८ (ni.2-28)) (the two bays of Indra; the red horse of Agni; the green horses of Āditya; the two asses of the Aśvins; the goats of Pūṣan; the spotted does of the Maruts; the ruddy cows of Uṣas; the dark-brown horses of Savitṛ; the many-formed ones of Bṛhaspati; the Niyut team of Vāyu; these are the ten as the harnessings specified). Here the Maruts are said to have पृषतः (pṛṣataḥ) (spotted does). A fuller explanation of this has been given in the earlier volumes.

Gist: the Maruts always bring all the waters to the sacrificer provided with food, as to a friend, or bring the rain-waters for him alone when food is the occasion; their steeds are spotted, their wealth undiminishing, and they sit at the yoke of the cloud.

The prompt-giving Maruts ever confer upon the (offerer of sacrificial) food, as upon a friend, all these (world-supporting) waters: they who have spotted deer for steeds, who are possessed of inexhaustible riches, aud [sic] who, seated in their chariots, (proceed) amongst the moving (clouds), like horses going straight (to the goal).

Here two kinds of meaning have been given for the particle वा (vā), that of comparison and that of emphasis. From this two समन्यवः—समानमनस्काः, समानक्रोधाः समानतेजसो वा । (samanyavaḥ—samānamanaskāḥ, samānakrodhāḥ samānatejaso vā |) The author of the Nirukta has read the word मन्यु (manyu) among the names of anger (नि. ३-९ (ni. 3-9)) and has explained: मन्युर्मन्यतेर्दीप्तिकर्मणः क्रोधकर्मणो वधकर्मणो वा (manyurmanyaterdiptikarmaṇaḥ krodhakarmaṇo vadhakarmaṇo vā) (नि. १०-३१ (ni. 10-31)). It is said that the Marut deities are of one kind of mind, of one kind of anger and splendour, and भ्राजदृष्टयः—दीप्यमानायुधाः (bhrājadṛṣṭayaḥ—dīpyamānāyudhāḥ), having weapons that shine, and so they are described as coming to the sacrificial hall.

It is explained that they come to the sacrificial hall, as swans reach their own dwelling places, either with the clouds that gladden the whole world and are provided with abundant (thick) streams of water, or that sound and stand in lofty regions, or by the paths.

मधोर्मदाय-सोमस्य मदार्थं । (madhormadāya-somasya madārthaṃ |) The word मधु (madhu) is stated among the names of water (नि. २-२४ (ni. 2-24)). And—

In this Ṛk: मधु न ऊर्मि० । मधु सोमं इत्यौपमिकं माद्यतेः । इदमपीतर-न्मध्वेतस्मादेव । (नि. ४-८) (madhu na ūrmio | madhu somaṃ ityaupamikaṃ mādyateḥ | idamapītara-nmadhvetasmādeva | (ni. 4-8)) (as supplied). Because it produces intoxication, Soma is described as the meaning of the word मधु (madhu).

p. 239

O Maruts of one mind, come desiring the food offered by us and the pressed Soma juice, just as you come desiring the praises of men like us. Then make the cloud, which gratifies by giving water, swell so as to produce rain, as one makes the limbs of mares robust by giving them water to drink. Perform the rite so that food is provided to the singer.

Printed English translation

Maruts, who are of one mind, come to the food that is offered a1 (our) sacrifices, as (you come) to the praises of men : nourish the milch cow. (the cloud), so that it may be like a mare with a full udder, and render the pious rite productive of abundant food to the worshipper. [sic: "a1" as supplied; line break after "cow." as supplied]

On the first part (नः ब्रह्माणि सवनानि नरां न शंसः आ गंतन (naḥ brahmāṇi savanāni narāṃ na śaṃsaḥ ā gaṃtana)) the bhāṣya says: as our food, that is, oblations in the form of pressed Soma, come to us like praise that is worthy of being praised. The Kannada explanation adds: addressing the Maruts, the sacrificers say that, just as the Maruts come to hear the hymns we recite, they should come to accept the carefully pressed Soma juice and the food in the form of oblation that we offer.

On धेनुं अश्वामिव ऊधनि पिप्यत (dhenuṃ aśvāmiva ūdhani pipyata) the bhāṣya says: as mares become plump-limbed through giving them water, so make the cloud capable of raining and swollen. The explanation adds: the Maruts, coming to the sacrificial hall and accepting the oblations we offer, should delight the whole world by pouring rain; as well-fed horses are robust, the cloud, filled with waters and capable of producing rain, should be made to swell so as to give us joy; this is the wish expressed.

On जरित्रे वाजपेशसं धियं कर्त (jaritre vājapeśasaṃ dhiyaṃ karta) the bhāṣya says: perform for the singer a rite embraced by food. The explanation adds: the Maruts should perform the duties so that food increases for us, who recite praises at the sacrifices as priests or sacrificers; thus it is described.

ब्रह्माणि (brahmāṇi) means foods. The word ब्रह्म (brahma) is said to occur among the names of food (Ni. 3-9) and among the names of wealth (Ni. 3-9) [both references as supplied].

p. 240

The Special Topics continue; the Ṛk cited for ब्रह्माणि (brahmāṇi) is:

> यामधर्वा मनुष्यता दध्यङ्छयमत्नत । तस्मिन् ब्रह्माणि पूर्वथेंद्र उक्ता समग्मतार्चन्ननु स्वराज्यं ॥
> yāmadharvā manuṣyatā dadhyaṅchayamatnata | tasmin brahmāṇi pūrvatheṃdra uktā samagmatārcannanu svarājyaṃ ‖

(Ma. Saṃ. 1-80-16)

In that verse ब्रह्माणि (brahmāṇi) is explained as "works" (कर्माणि (karmāṇi)). Here the meaning "food" is given.

The word धेनु (dhenu) is said to occur among the names of speech (Ni. 2-23). Here धेनुं (dhenuṃ) is used in the sense of "the one who gratifies" (प्रीणयितारं (prīṇayitāraṃ)), the one who delights.

जरित्रे (jaritre) means स्तोत्रे (stotre), "for the singer". The word जरिता (jaritā) is said to occur among the names of singers (Ni. 3-19). The meaning is explained as the priests who recite praises.

Gist: O Maruts, give us that son, rich in food and strength, who daily proclaims your praise; also give food, battle-wisdom, liberality, and unharmed, unconquerable strength.

मरुतः (marutaḥ) (Marutaḥ)—O Maruts; वाजिनं (vājinaṃ)—him who has food; रथे (rathe)—on account of your coming; दिवेदिवे (divedive)—every day; चितयत् (citayat)—describing and making known your qualities; ब्रह्म (brahma)—the hymn;

p. 241

आपानं (āpānaṃ)—him who composes and recites; तं (taṃ)—that son; नः (naḥ)—to us; दात (dāta)—give; इषं (iṣaṃ)—food; स्तोतृभ्यः (stotṛbhyaḥ)—to us, the singers (give); वृजनेषु (vṛjaneṣu)—in battles; कारवे (kārave)—to the singer; मेधां (medhāṃ)—intelligence endowed with skill in battle; सनिं (saniṃ)—liberality in giving wealth; अरिष्टं (ariṣṭaṃ)—freedom from harm by enemies; दुस्तरं (dustaraṃ)—unrepelled by enemies; सहः (sahaḥ)—strength (give).

O Maruts, give us, the singers, the son who is rich in food and who, on account of your coming, daily composes and recites the hymn that describes and makes known your qualities, and give food. In battles, give to the singer the skill needed to fight, freedom from harm by enemies, and unrepelled strength.

Printed English translation

Bestow upon us, Maruts, that (son) who shall enjoy abundance, and who shall be repeating your appropriate praises day by day to (induce) your coming: give food to those who praise you ; to him who glorifies you in battles: (grant him) liberality. intelligence, and unimpaired unsurp assable vigour.

Addressing the Maruts as हे मरुतः (he marutaḥ), the sacrificers pray नः तं पुत्रं दात (naḥ taṃ putraṃ dāta): "may the Maruts grant us a son." The son they pray for is, in the bhāṣya's words, one who has food or strength and who, on account of the Maruts' coming, daily attains a hymn proclaiming their qualities. The explanation adds: the son granted to the sacrificers should be possessed of food and strength, and should daily recite their praises at the time of the Maruts' coming to the sacrifice; thus it is wished. And the sacrificers wish:

स्तोतृभ्यः इषं, वृजिनेषु कारवे मेधां, सनिं, अरिष्टं, दुस्तरं महः प्रयच्छत (stotṛbhyaḥ iṣaṃ, vṛjineṣu kārave medhāṃ, saniṃ, ariṣṭaṃ, dustaraṃ mahaḥ prayacchata) (as supplied: वृजिनेषु (vṛjineṣu) and महः (mahaḥ) here, against वृजनेषु (vṛjaneṣu) and सहः (sahaḥ) in the Saṃhitā). May the Maruts grant food to the priests who recite praises; to him who recites the praise at the time of battle, intelligence that wins in battle; the generosity of giving wealth; and strength that cannot be despised by enemies.

The word कारु (kāru) is said to occur among the names of singers (Ni. 3-19).

p. 242

Sūkta 34, Ṛk 7, Special Topics (continued from p. 241): Sāyaṇa explains सनिं (saniṃ) as धनदातृत्वं (dhanadātṛtvaṃ) ("liberality in giving wealth"). Yāska has explained the meaning in this verse:

> हिनोता नो अध्वरं देवयाज्या हिनोत ब्रह्म सनये धनानां । ऋतस्य योगे वि प्यध्वमूढः श्रुष्टिवरीर्भूतनास्मभ्यमापः ॥
> hinotā no adhvaraṃ devayājyā hinota brahma sanaye dhanānāṃ | ṛtasya yoge vi pyadhvamūḍhaḥ śruṣṭivarīrbhūtanāsmabhyamāpaḥ ‖

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-30-11)

Here he explains that सनये (sanaye) means लब्धये (labdhaye), "for the obtaining of wealth" (Ni. 6-22).

Gist: When the Maruts, with gleaming ornaments on their breasts, yoke their horses to the chariot-poles, they pour abundant food or water into the houses of the sacrificer, as a cow gives milk to her calf.

रुक्मवक्षसः (rukmavakṣasaḥ)—those whose breasts bear golden ornaments; सुदानवः (sudānavaḥ)—those who give excellent gifts; मरुतः (marutaḥ)—the Maruts; यत् (yat)—when; रथेषु भगे (ratheṣu bhage)—in the yoke-regions of the chariots; अश्वान् (aśvān)—horses; आ युंजते (ā yuṃjate)—they yoke facing forward

p. 243

(at that very moment); रातहविषे (rātahaviṣe)—to him who has offered the oblation; जनाय (janāya)—to the sacrificer; महीं (mahīṃ)—great; इषं (iṣaṃ)—food; स्वसरेषु (svasareṣu)—in their own houses; शिश्वे (śiśve)—to her calf; धेनुर्न (dhenurna)—as a cow gives milk abundantly; पिन्वते (pinvate) [sic: printed पिन्नते (pinnate) in the Saṃhitā and Pada]—they pour out.

The Maruts, whose breasts are adorned with golden ornaments and who give excellent gifts, the moment they yoke horses to their chariots, pour great food into the houses of the sacrificers who have offered oblations, as a cow gives abundant milk to her calf.

Printed English translation

When the golden-breasted munificent Maruts yoke their horses to their chariots on an auspicious (occasion), they shed in their peculiar (directions) abundant food upon him who offers them oblations, as a milch cow (gives milk) to her calf.

रुक्मवक्षसः सुदानवः मरुतः (rukmavakṣasaḥ sudānavaḥ marutaḥ)—the Maruts, who wear golden ornaments (necklaces) on their breasts and give abundant gifts, sit in their chariots to receive the oblation at the sacrifice, and to the sacrificers who offer shares of the oblation, महीं इषं (mahīṃ iṣaṃ) (explained as great food, or the water that causes it), that is, abundant food, or the rain-waters that cause the growth of the plants and the like from which food arises, they grant. So it is described.

स्वसरेषु धेनुर्न शिश्वे (svasareṣu dhenurna śiśve)—the Sanskrit explanation given is स्वकीयेषु गृहेषु यथा धेनुः प्रस्तुतस्तनीयाय (svakīyeṣu gṛheṣu yathā dhenuḥ prastutastanīyāya) followed by वत्साय क्षीरं प्रयच्छति तद्वत् (vatsāya kṣīraṃ prayacchati tadvat) (as a cow gives milk to her calf). As cows in their own dwelling give milk for their calves, so the Maruts of their own accord bestow food and waters on the sacrificers who offer them oblations; thus their generosity is described.

The word स्वसर (svasara) is listed among the names of houses (Ni. 3-13) and among the names of days (Ni. 2-21), and Yāska has explained it in Ni. 5-4 (स्वसराण्य- (svasarāṇya-) ... स्वयं सारीण्यपिवा (svayaṃ sārīṇyapivā), the passage as supplied). Here it is used in the sense of "house".

The bhāṣya cites a Pāṇini sūtra (Pā. 5-4-41) for the affix तातिल् (tātil) in वृकताति (vṛkatāti), and an Uṇādi affix असि (asi) for अशसः (aśasaḥ). Gist: O Maruts, protect us from the mortal who, wolf-like, makes himself our enemy; turn him back with your burning weapon, and destroy the weapon of that devouring foe.

वसवः (vasavaḥ)—O you who provide dwelling-places; मरुतः (marutaḥ)—O Maruts; यः मर्त्यः (yaḥ martyaḥ)—whatever mortal; वृकताति (vṛkatāti)—like a cruel wolf; नः (naḥ)—towards us; रिपुः (ripuḥ)—enmity; दधे (dadhe)—fosters; रिषः (riṣaḥ)—from that harmful enemy; रक्षत (rakṣata)—protect (us); तं (taṃ)—that enemy; तपुषा (tapuṣā)—with the burning; चक्रिया (cakriyā)—weapon called ṛṣṭi; अभि वर्तयत (abhi vartayata)—make him turn away from us; रुद्राः (rudrāḥ)—O Maruts, sons of Rudra; अशसः (aśasaḥ)—of such a devouring asura; वधः (vadhaḥ)—the weapon that kills; अव हंतन (ava haṃtana)—destroy.

p. 245

O Maruts, who provide dwelling-places, protect us from that harmful enemy, the man who fosters wolf-like enmity towards us as a cruel wolf would. With your burning weapon make that enemy turn away from us. O Maruts, sons of Rudra, destroy the weapon, the instrument of killing, of such a devouring asura.

Printed English translation

Maruts, grant ers [sic] of dwellings, protect us from the malignity of the man who cherishes wolf-like enmity against us : encompass him with your burning diseases ; ward off the murderous (weapon) of the devourer.

वसवः (vasavaḥ)—वासयितारः (vāsayitāraḥ) (those who make [the sacrificers] dwell happily): thus the Marut deities are addressed. यः मर्त्यः वृकताति रिपुर्दधे रिषः रक्षत (yaḥ martyaḥ vṛkatāti ripurdadhe riṣaḥ rakṣata)—the Sanskrit explanation is यः मनुष्यः आदाता वृकः सन् रिपुतया

आत्मानं धारयति हिंसकादस्मान् पालयत (yaḥ manuṣyaḥ ādātā vṛkaḥ san riputayā ātmānaṃ dhārayati hiṃsakādasmān pālayata). The prayer is: the man who behaves like a wolf towards the sacrificers and practises enmity against them is harmful to us; protect us from him. And: अस्माकं शत्रुभूतं मर्त्यं तपुषा चक्रिया अभिवर्तयत (asmākaṃ śatrubhūtaṃ martyaṃ tapuṣā cakriyā abhivartayata) is explained as तापयित्रा ऋष्ट्या शक्त्या निवर्तयत (tāpayitrā ṛṣṭyā śaktyā nivartayata); that is, turn him back with your all-consuming power known as ṛṣṭi, so that no harm may come to us sacrificers from one who is our enemy.

For the word रुद्राः (rudrāḥ) the explanation is रुद्रपुत्राः रोरूयमाणाद्रवंतः (rudraputrāḥ rorūyamāṇādravaṃtaḥ): the Marut deities are addressed as sons of Rudra and as those who rush swiftly with a roaring sound. अशसः वधः अवहंतन (aśasaḥ vadhaḥ avahaṃtana)—भक्षकस्य राक्षसादेः हननसाधनमायुधं अस्मत्तः पृथक्कृत्य नाशयत (bhakṣakasya rākṣasādeḥ hananasādhanamāyudhaṃ asmattaḥ pṛthakkṛtya nāśayata): turn away from us the weapon that Rākṣasas and others, wishing to destroy us, employ to kill us, and destroy those Rākṣasas and the rest; thus protection is prayed for.

Gist: The coming of the Maruts is known to all, when they approach the lofty cloud and milk it for rain, and when they destroy the reviler of Trita, who praises them.

मरुतः (marutaḥ)—O Maruts; वः (vaḥ)—your; चित्रं (citraṃ)—wonderful; तत् याम (tat yāma)—coming; चेकिते (cekite)—is known by all; यत् (yat)—when; पृश्न्या? (pṛśnyā?)—related to Pṛśni; ऊधः (ūdhaḥ)—the cloud on high; अपयः (apayaḥ)—the Maruts who approach; दुहुः (duhuḥ)—call forth for the sake of rain; यद्वा (yadvā)—when indeed; नवमानस्य (navamānasya)—of Trita who praises (the line break splits the word); निदे (nide)—to the reviling asura they cause harm (then); अदाभ्याः (adābhyāḥ)—the unharmed ones; रुद्रियाः (rudriyāḥ)—the sons of Rudra, the Maruts; त्रितं (tritaṃ)—the sage called Trita; जुरतां (juratāṃ)—to the harming enemies; जराय (jarāya)—become destroyers.

O Maruts, your wonderful coming is known to all. When the Maruts approach the lofty cloud that belongs to Pṛśni and call it forth for the sake of rain, when they cause harm to the reviling asura of Trita who praises them, then, unharmed and sons of Rudra, the Maruts become destroyers of the enemies who harm the sage Trita.

p. 247

Printed English translation

Maruts, your moryeallous [sic] energy is well known, whereby, seizing the udder of heaven, you milked it (of the rain), destroyed the reviler of your worshipper, and (came), irresistible sons of Rudra, to Trita for the destruction of his enemies.

And: यद्वा नवमानस्य निदे अदाभ्याः रुद्रियाः त्रितं जुरतां जराय (yadvā navamānasya nide adābhyāḥ rudriyāḥ tritaṃ juratāṃ jarāya), explained as यदा च स्तुवतः त्रितस्य निंदकाय हिंसां कृतवंतः अहिंस्याः रुद्रस्य पुत्राः मरुतः त्रितं ऋषिं हिंसतां शत्रूणां विनाशाय अभूत (yadā ca stuvataḥ tritasya niṃdakāya hiṃsāṃ kṛtavaṃtaḥ ahiṃsyāḥ rudrasya putrāḥ marutaḥ tritaṃ ṛṣiṃ hiṃsatāṃ śatrūṇāṃ vināśāya abhūta): when the Marut deities, who are not subject to the harm done by others and are sons of Rudra, destroy those who harm the sage Trita, who has fallen into calamity and is praising them, they are the cause of the destruction of the enemies of the sage Trita; thus it is described, and also that the coming of the Maruts is known to all. The meaning of the word त्रित (trita) (Trita) has been explained earlier.

O Maruts, you who come toward our sacrifice and are of great majesty, we call for the sake of the preparation of the desirable Soma that fills the cups and the rest. And we, who hold up the ladles for the sacrifice toward those golden-hued, excellent Soma vessels and are possessed of praise, ask for praiseworthy wealth.

Printed English translation

We invoke you, mighty Maruts, who frequent such sacrifices (as this, to be present) at the offering of the diffusive and desirable (libation): lifting up our ladles, and reciting their praise, we solicit the golden-hued and lofty Maruts for excellent wealth.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Addressing the Marut deities with हे मरुतः (he marutaḥ), the passage एवयाव्यः महः वः विष्णोः ऐषस्य प्रभृथे हवामहे (evayāvyaḥ mahaḥ vaḥ viṣṇoḥ aiṣasya prabhṛthe havāmahe) is explained: एवं गंतव्यं स्तोत्रं यज्ञं वा गन्तान् महानुभावान् (evaṃ gaṃtavyaṃ stotraṃ yajñaṃ vā gantān mahānubhāvān)

p. 249

युष्मान् ग्रहचमसादिषु सर्वत्र व्याप्य वर्तमानस्य प्रार्थनीयस्य सोमस्य अभिषवादिभिः प्रकर्षण संपादने सति आह्वयामहे (yuṣmān grahacamasādiṣu sarvatra vyāpya vartamānasya prārthanīyasya somasya abhiṣavādibhiḥ prakarṣaṇa saṃpādane sati āhvayāmahe). It is described thus: the sacrificers invite the Marut deities, of abundant majesty, who come on hearing the praise recited under a particular discipline, or who come to sacrifices performed in the prescribed manner, after the Soma has been prepared by pressing and the other rites, filling the vessels called graha or camasa, in which oblations are offered in the fire, and Soma being worthy of praise.

Gist: The Maruts, in the form of the Aṅgirases who attained success in ten months, performed the sacrifice before the Ādityas; may they urge us at dawn, as Uṣas drives away the dark nights with her ruddy lights.

ते (te)—those same Maruts; दशग्वाः (daśagvāḥ)—having taken the form of the Aṅgirases who attained success in ten months; प्रथमाः (prathamāḥ)—ready before the Ādityas; यज्ञमूहिरे (yajñamūhire)—carried out the sacrifice; ते (te)—those same Maruts; उषसः (uṣasaḥ)—of Uṣas; व्युष्टिषु (vyuṣṭiṣu)—at the time of her manifestation; नः (naḥ)—us; हिन्वंतु (hinvaṃtu)—may they urge on; रामिाः (rāmiāḥ) [as printed]—the dark-coloured nights; उषाः (uṣāḥ)—Uṣas; अरुणैः (aruṇaiḥ)—with attractive lights; अपोर्णुते न (aporṇute na)—as she drives away and destroys (so also the Maruts); महः (mahaḥ)—great; शुचता (śucatā)—shining; गोअर्णसा (goarṇasā)—drawing up the water in the form of mist; ज्योतिषा (jyotiṣā)—with the light called the Sun (they destroy the darkness).

Those same Maruts, having taken the form of the Aṅgirases who attained success in ten months, were ready before the Ādityas and carried out the sacrifice. May those same Maruts urge us at the time of the manifestation of Uṣas. Uṣas drives away the dark-coloured nights with her attractive lights, pushing them far away and destroying them, so the Maruts too destroy the darkness with their own radiance called the Sun, which is great, shining and drinks up the water in the form of mist.

p. 251

English Translation (as printed)

May they, who, the first celebrators of the tenmonths' [sic] rite, accomplished this sacrifice, reanimate us at the rising dawn ; for as the dawn with purple rays drives away the night, so (do they scatter the darkness) with great, and pure. and [sic] mist-dispelling radiance.

> ते दशग्वाः प्रथमाः यज्ञमूहिरे – मरुतः ये दशभिः मासैः सिद्धिंगताः अंगिरसः तद्रूपा भूत्वा आदित्येभ्यः प्रथमभाविनः संतः यज्ञमवहन् । आदित्यानां अंगिरसां च स्वर्गगमनं प्रति स्पर्धमानानां मध्ये पूर्वमेवांगिरसो यागा– ननुष्ठाय स्वर्गं प्राप्ताः ।

It is explained: the Maruts, having taken the form of the Aṅgirases who attained success in ten months only, were present before the Ādityas and carried out the sacrifice. A contest arose between the Ādityas and the Aṅgirases, at one time, as to who should reach heaven first; the Aṅgirases performed the sacrifice first and attained heaven before the Ādityas. This story is told in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (Ai. Brā. 1-16): "आदित्याश्चैवेहासन्नंगिरसश्च तेऽग्रेग्निनाग्निमयजंत" ("ādityāścaivehāsannaṃgirasaśca te 'grègnināgnimayajaṃta"). Sāyaṇa describes the Maruts as having the identity of the Aṅgirases who attained success in ten months, as born and established before the Ādityas, and as performing sacrifices. The inquiry into this identity of the Aṅgirases and the Maruts has been explained in the earlier volumes.

> ते उषसः व्युष्टिषु नः हिन्वंतु तादृशाः ते मरुतः प्रभातेषु सत्सु अस्मान् प्रेरयेंतु ।
> te uṣasaḥ vyuṣṭiṣu naḥ hinvaṃtu tādṛśāḥ te marutaḥ prabhāteṣu satsu asmān prerayèṃtu |

It is said: those same Maruts, when the dawns have broken, may urge us on; that is, may the Maruts, of abundant power, urge us, the sacrificers, to our necessary duties after the time of dawn has passed, that is, in the morning.

(The first word of this gloss is printed रामाः (rāmāḥ) in the supplied text, where रामीः (rāmīḥ) would be expected from the Saṃhitā; given as supplied.) It is described: as Uṣas drives away the night, black with darkness, with her well-shining lights, so the Maruts, filled with water, cover the sun, kill Vṛtra and the others who make darkness, break up the cloud that prevents the sun's light

The Maruts, sons of Rudra, provided with lutes of charming sounds and adorned with ornaments like the red colour, grow in the clouds, the abodes of water. Squeezing the water of the cloud by their swift strength, they possess a lustre that is delightful and shows an attractive form.

English Translation (as printed)

They, the Rudras (equipped) with melodious (lutes), and decorated with purple ornaments, exalt in the dwellings of the waters ; and scattering the clouds with rapid vigour, they are endowed with delightful and beautiful forms.

the Maruts, with their (powerful) strength that quickly spreads, make the rain-water pour from the clouds without remaining at all (completely); they are very delightful and bear a form of beautiful shape. So it is explained.

त्रितः (tritaḥ)—Trita; अववर्तत् (avavartat)—whom he prayed not to go out and held back in himself; तान् (tān)—those Maruts; मही (mahi)—great; वरूथं (varūthaṃ)—and praiseworthy wealth; ऊतये (ūtaye)—for protection; इयानः (iyānaḥ)—we who pray; एना नमसा (enā namasā)—with this praise accompanied by homage; उप इत् (upa it)—approaching; गृणीमसि (gṛṇīmasi)—we praise.

We who pray for great and praiseworthy wealth for protection approach with this praise accompanied by homage, and praise those Maruts — the five, prāṇa, apāna and the rest, whom Trita, for the accomplishment of his desired end, as very chief priests of the sacrifice, and for protecting himself with their weapons, prayed not to go out and held back within himself.

English Translation (as printed)

Imploring them for ample wealth, and (having recourse to him) for protection, we glorify them with this praise ; like the five chief priests whom Trita detained for the (performance of) the sacrifice, and to protect it with their weapons.

Here the word पंचहोत्यन् (paṃcahotyan) is used in the sense that in this body the Maruts (the winds), bearing the names prāṇa, apāna, vyāna, udāna and samāna, dwell doing their respective functions in keeping with the body, as the maintainers of the state of the self. By this it is indicated that they are the chief means by which the worship of the bodily Vaiśvānara fire is accomplished. Since their seat is in the heart as prāṇa, in the anal region as apāna, and in the navel as samāna, the sage Trita held these Maruts, who were eager to go out of the body, in the Svādhiṣṭhāna wheel in the navel, and made them face himself; and it is said that by this Trita's protection came about, and that these Maruts are chief in bringing about all desired ends and the meditation that takes the form of worship of the self; and also that in the sacrifices performed in the world by the sacrificers, the Marut deities, receiving the oblations, are chief in accomplishing the sacrificers' desires.

The Marut deities' accomplishing of the oblation is described in two ways, and their chief place in fulfilment of desires in three ways. In the second sense, the Maruts bear a spear-weapon named ṛṣṭi; and for protecting the sacrificers, or those who praise them, the sage Trita turned them back so that they should be in his navel-wheel, in order to please the Maruts with praise and the like. So it is explained.

> तान् महि वरूथं ऊतये इयानः उप इत् गृणीमसि—मरुतः महत् प्रशस्तं धनं तत्! मरुतः रक्षणार्थं यजमानाः वयं अनेन नमस्कारेण स्तोत्रेण वा उपेत्य स्तुमः

Thus it is described: we sacrificers, praying to the Marut deities for obtaining the wealth that can necessarily be had for our protection, and for protecting us, will worship them with homage or with praises.

The word वरूथ (varūtha) is mentioned by Yāska among the names of houses (Ni. 3 13). Here Sāyaṇa gives the sense "choice" and explains it as praiseworthy wealth. In त्रितः न (tritaḥ na) he states that the word न is used in the sense of conjunction (नशब्दः समुच्चये (naśabdaḥ samuccaye)).

Explained thus: the Maruts carry the worshipping sacrificer across sins; they free the praiser from the reviling enemy; may that protection of yours be turned towards us. The Marut deities are said to possess a manner of protection that carries across sins the sacrificer who serves them, and

The thought of the Marut deities, which protects others or bestows favour, is to be well disposed towards us sacrificers, as a milch cow approaches her calf with a lowing sound. So it is prayed.

Sūkta 35 (Maṇḍala 2)

The thirty-fifth sūkta.

Sāyaṇa's introduction to the sūkta

> उपेमिति पंचदशर्चं तृतीयं सूक्तं गार्त्समदं त्रैष्टुभमपांनपाद्ये– वताकं । > तथा चानुक्रांतं । उपेमपोनप्रीयमिति ॥ सूक्तविनियोगो लैंगिकः ॥

Gist: the third sūkta of the fourth anuvāka, of fifteen ṛks, of the Gārtsamada seer, in triṣṭubh, for Apāṃ Napāt; the Anukramaṇī is quoted; the use of the sūkta is by the Liṅga (indication).

Anuvāda (Kannada). This sūkta beginning उपेमसृक्षि (upemasṛkṣi) [as supplied] is the third sūkta in the fourth anuvāka. It has fifteen ṛks. Gṛtsamada is the seer; Apāṃ Napāt is the deity; the metre is triṣṭubh. The Anukramaṇikā says: उपेमपोनप्रीयमिति (upemaponaprīyamiti) [as supplied]. The use (viniyoga) is laiṅgika (by indication).

Sūkta 35 — Maṇḍala 2, Anuvāka 4, Sūkta 35; Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Vargas 22, 23, 24. Number of ṛks in the sūkta: 15. Seer: Gṛtsamada (the label is printed as "यमः" for ऋषिः). Deity: Apāṃ Napāt (printed "अपांसपात्" [sic]). Metre: triṣṭubh.

Gist: wishing for food, I produce this praise for Apāṃ Napāt (Agni, the grandson of the waters), who hears praises; may he give me abundant food and make us well-formed.

Vājayuḥ—I, who desire food; īṃ vacasyām—this praise; upa asṛkṣi—I produce [as supplied: "ನಿರ್ಮಿಸುತ್ತೇನೆ"]; hi—because; saḥ—Agni (Agni in the form of Apāṃ Napāt); joṣiṣat—enjoys the praises; nādyaḥ—belonging to the sounding waters of the clouds; āśuhemā—swift-moving; apāṃ napāt—the one who is the grandson of the waters, that Agni; giraḥ—of the praiser; me—to me; kuvit—abundantly [as supplied: "ಪ್ರಭೂತವಾಗ", the final letter apparently lost]; canaḥ—food; dadhīta—may he provide; supeśaḥ—having a beautiful form; karati—may he make (us).

Agni, famous as Apāṃ Napāt, enjoys praise with affection. Therefore I, desiring food, produce this praise. He who belongs to the sounding waters, swift-moving, the grandson of the waters, may that Agni provide abundant food to me, his praiser.

Printed English translation

Desiring food, I put forth this laudatory hymn: may the sounding and swift-moving grandson of the waters bestow abundant food upon me his worshipper : may he make us of goodly appearance, for verily he is propitiated by praise.

> वाजयुः ईं वचस्यां उप आसृक्षि—अन्नमात्मन इच्छन्नहं एनां स्तोत्र– स्येच्छां उत्पादयामि । अपां नपातं स्तोतुं प्रवृत्तः अस्मि ।

The seer of the mantra says that, desiring to obtain food, he will praise the deity named Apāṃ Napāt, who bestows food upon him.

> स च नाद्यः आशुहेमा अपां नपात्—सः शब्दकारिणीनां मेघस्थानामपां संबंधी, शीघ्रंगंता, अपां पौत्रस्थानीयः अद्भ्य ओषधिवनस्पतयो जायंते ओषधिवनस्पतिभ्यो एष अग्निः जायते इति तत्पौत्रत्वं ।

> sa ca nādyaḥ āśuhemā apāṃ napāt—saḥ śabdakāriṇīnāṃ meghasthānāmapāṃ saṃbaṃdhī, śīghraṃgaṃtā, apāṃ pautrasthānīyaḥ adbhya oṣadhivanaspatayo jāyaṃte oṣadhivanaspatibhyo eṣa agniḥ jāyate iti tatpautratvaṃ |

This deity Apāṃ Napāt is connected with the waters in the sounding clouds that are filled with water; that is, he is the son's son of the waters. For this reason the deity has received the name Apāṃ Napāt. Plants and trees arise from the waters, and Agni arises from these plants and trees; so Agni is regarded as the grandson of the waters; thus it is explained.

In explaining the word अपां नपात् (apāṃ napāt) the Nirukta authors say अपांनपात् (apāṃnapāt) is explained like तनूनप्रा (tanūnaprā) व्याख्यातः (vyākhyātaḥ) (Ni. 10-18) [as supplied]. The word तनूनपात् (tanūnapāt) is explained in two senses: अज्यमिति कात्थक्यः अग्निरिति शाकपूणिः (ajyamiti kātthakyaḥ agniriti śākapūṇiḥ) (Ni. 8-5) [as supplied]. Following the view of the teacher Śākapūṇi, the meaning of तनूनपात् (tanūnapāt), namely Agni, is taken over by the word अपां नपात् (apāṃ napāt); thus it is explained.

> giraḥ me kuvit canaḥ dadhīta—etatsaṃjñako devaḥ| gṛṇātīti gīr stotā| tasya bahulaṃ annaṃ vidadhātu |

The word गिरः (giraḥ), formed from the root गृ (gṛ) meaning "to utter words", is used in the sense of one who recites stanzas (the praiser). And it is prayed that this deity Apāṃ Napāt bestow abundant food on the one who praises him.

> जोषिषत् सुपेशसः करति—अस्मान् शोभनरूपान् शोभनालंकारान् वा करोतु । अयं देवः स्तोत्राणि सेवते तस्मादस्मानेवमनुगृह्णातु ।

> joṣiṣat supeśasaḥ karati—asmān śobhanarūpān śobhanālaṃkārān vā karotu | ayaṃ devaḥ stotrāṇi sevate tasmādasmānevamanugṛhṇātu |

The word जोषिषत् (joṣiṣat) is used in the sense of one who hears the praises and is pleased; therefore it is prayed that this deity make us, who recite the praises, possessed of an excellent form or of auspicious ornaments.

The word जनक (janaka) [as supplied] is cited by Yāska in the verse:

> अद्धीदिंद्र प्रस्थितेमा हवींषि चनो दधिष्ट पचतोत सोमं । प्रयस्वंतः प्रति हर्यामसि त्वा सत्याः संतु यजमानस्य कामाः ॥

> addhīdiṃdra prasthitemā havīṃṣi cano dadhiṣṭa pacatota somaṃ | prayasvaṃtaḥ prati haryāmasi tvā satyāḥ saṃtu yajamānasya kāmāḥ ‖

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-116-8)

On this verse it is explained: चन इत्यन्न नाम (cana ityanna nāma) (Ni. 6-16) [as supplied], "caná is a name of food". The word कुवित् (kuvit) is included among the many-names (Ni. 3-13). Here the meaning बहुलं (bahulaṃ) is given.

Gist: the lord, the lightning Agni called Apāṃ Napāt, whose strength hurls down enemies, by that might has produced all beings (or the rain-waters, by causing rain).

अस्यै (asyai)—for offering to Agni, named Apāṃ Napāt; हृदः (hṛdaḥ)—from the heart (sincerely); सुतष्टं (sutaṣṭaṃ)—excellently fashioned; इमं मंत्रं (imaṃ maṃtraṃ)—this mantra, which is of the nature of praise; सु (su)—exceedingly; आ वोचेम (ā vocema)—we recite, standing facing him; अस्य (asya)—this mantra; कुवित् (kuvit)—fully; वेदत् (vedat)—may (Agni) know; आर्यः (āryaḥ)—the lord; अपां नपात् (apāṃ napāt)—Agni named Apāṃ Napāt; असुरस्य (asurasya)—of his strength, which defeats enemies; महा (mahnā)—by the greatness; विश्वानि (viśvāni)—all; भुवना (bhuvanā)—beings; जजान (jajāna)—created.

॥ ಭಾನುವಾರ ॥ (printed between the Pratipadārtha and the Bhāvārtha, apparently "Sunday"; no explanation is given in the supplied text.)

I recite this mantra, sincerely and excellently composed and of the nature of praise, standing before Agni, in order to offer it to him. May Agni know this mantra fully. Agni, the lord, named Apāṃ Napāt, by the greatness of his strength that defeats enemies, created all beings.

Printed English translation

Let us address to him the prayer that is conceived in our hearts, and may he fully understand (its purport); for he the lord, the grandson of the waters, has generated all beings by the greatness of his might.

> आर्यः असुर्यस्य मह्ना विश्वानि भुवना जजान—स्वामी अपां नपात्संज्ञ– को वैद्युतोग्निः असुरः शत्रुन् क्षेप्ता । तस्य स्वभूतस्य बलस्य महत्वेन सर्वाणि वृष्टु दकानि वृष्टुत्पादनेन भूतजातानि वा जनयामास ।

The word आर्य (ārya) is stated among the names of the lord (Ni. 3-11). The word अपां नपात् (apāṃ napāt) is explained as the lightning Agni. This Agni is the master of all and destroys enemies. Therefore this deity, by the greatness of his natural might, creates the rain-waters, and by those rain-waters creates all living beings; thus it is explained.

Here the bhāṣya on Ṛk 2 is restated: for the deity named Apāṃ Napāt we recite, standing facing him, this mantra, well made from the heart, of the nature of praise, we the sacrificers, sincerely composed. अस्माभिरुक्तमिमं मंत्रं कुवित् वेदत्—बहुलं जानातु । (asmābhiruktamimaṃ maṃtraṃ kuvit vedat—bahulaṃ jānātu |) We the sacrificers have recited this hymn in order to please this deity; may the deity listen to it well: thus a prayer is stated. The discussion of the lightning Agni was given earlier.

Stray line in the supplied text after the bhāṣya, kept as supplied: । क्रि.श. १२९८ ॥ (| kri.śa. 1298 ‖) (no explanation is given).

अन्याः (anyāḥ)—waters produced by rain; सं यंति (saṃ yaṃti)—together reach the earth; अन्याः (anyāḥ)—waters that were already on the earth; उप यंति (upa yaṃti)—join with these rain-waters; समानं (samānaṃ)—all these waters, gathering together; नद्यः (nadyaḥ)—in the form of rivers; ऊर्वं (ūrvaṃ)—the submarine fire in the midst of the ocean; पृणंति (pṛṇaṃti)—satisfy; शुचिं (śuciṃ)—the pure one; दीदिनांसं (dīdināṃsaṃ) (as supplied; the Pada has दीदिऽवांसं (dīdi 'vāṃsaṃ))—the shining one; तमु अपां नपातं (tamu apāṃ napātaṃ)—that same Agni named Apāṃ Napāt; शुचयः (śucayaḥ) pure; आपः (āpaḥ)—waters; परि तस्थुः (pari tasthuḥ)—stand around and attend upon.

Waters produced by rain gather together on the earth. The waters that were already on the earth join with these rain-waters. All these waters, gathering together, flow as rivers and satisfy the submarine fire in the ocean. The pure waters stand around and attend upon that same pure and shining Agni named Apāṃ Napāt.

Printed English translation

Some waters collect together (from the rain): others, (already collected on earth), unite with them; as rivers they flow together to propitiate the ocean-fire : the pure waters are gathered round the pure and brilliant grandsons of the waters.

In the sacrifice called Apōnaptrīya, the Ṛk beginning समन्या यंति (samanyā yaṃti) is to be recited as the anuvākya mantra near the Vasatīvarī waters, as explained by the Āśvalāyana-śrauta sūtra समन्यायंत्युपयंत्यन्या इति तीर्थदेशे (samanyāyaṃtyupayaṃtyanyā iti tīrthadeśe) (Ā. 5-1); also at the time of the Sārasvata śastra recitation, if the weapon called śamyā falls into the water, the Apōnaptrīya caru oblation is to be made, and then this Ṛk beginning समन्या यंति (samanyā yaṃti) is to be recited as the yājyā mantra, as explained by the Āśvalāyana-śrauta sūtra समन्या यंत्युपयंत्यन्या इत्यातः समानं सर्वेषां (samanyā yaṃtyupayaṃtyanyā ityātaḥ samānaṃ sarveṣāṃ) (Ā. 12-6).

> अन्याः सं यंति, अन्याः उप यंति, समानं नद्यः ऊर्वं पृणंति—वर्ष्याः आपः भूम्या संगच्छंते अन्याश्च पूर्वं तत्रावस्थिताः उपगच्छंति ताः सर्वाः आपः नदीभूताः समुद्रमध्ये वर्तमानं वडवानलं प्रीणयंति ।

Waters coming as rain on the earth and the waters that were on the earth before unite and gather together. All these waters, combined, in the form of a river join the ocean; these waters, having joined the ocean in river form, are said to please the submarine fire that is in the midst of the ocean.

> तं अपां नपातं शुचिं निर्मलं दीदिवांसं शुचयः आपः परि तस्थुः— निर्मलं दीप्यमानं शुद्धाः आपः परिवृत्य शिष्ठंति । एष हि वैद्युताग्निरूपेण मेघे वर्तमानः अस्मानजीजनदिति बुद्ध्या बडबानलरूपेण वर्तमानं तं पर्युपासत इत्यर्थः ।
> taṃ apāṃ napātaṃ śuciṃ nirmalaṃ dīdivāṃsaṃ śucayaḥ āpaḥ pari tasthuḥ— nirmalaṃ dīpyamānaṃ śuddhāḥ āpaḥ parivṛtya śiṣṭhaṃti | eṣa hi vaidyutāgnirūpeṇa meghe vartamānaḥ asmānajījanaditi buddhyā baḍabānalarūpeṇa vartamānaṃ taṃ paryupāsata ityarthaḥ |

This deity Apāṃ Napāt is wholly pure and shines with splendour. Being in the cloud, the form of the lightning Agni, he has created us who exist in the form of water; so thinking, the waters surround him, who is also in the midst of the ocean in the form of the submarine fire, and serve him. This is one kind of meaning described; second:

> yadvā anyā ekadhanākhyā āpaḥ saṃyaṃti cātvālotkarayormadhyè vasatī varībhiḥ saṃgacchaṃte | anyā vasatīvaryākhyā apaścopayaṃti upagacchaṃti | aikamatyaṃ prāptā bhavaṃti | etāśca militvā yajñaṃ sādhayaṃtyaḥ tatsādhyavṛṣṭidvārā nadyo bhūtvā ūrvaṃ prīṇaṃti | evaṃ hi āpo vā aspardhaṃta vayaṃ pūrvaṃ yajñaṃ vakṣyā maḥ (ai. brā. 2-20) ityādi brāhmaṇaviniyoga anugṛhyate |

In the second meaning: among the waters used in the sacrificial acts, those known by the name Ekadhanā flow. In the sacrificial hall, in the region between the Cātvāla and the Utkara, they join with the waters called Vasatīvarī (some other waters). Thus all these waters come together. All of them together bring the sacrificial act to completion. After the rain to be obtained by the sacrifice has fallen, the waters flow in the form of rivers and serve the submarine fire in the midst of the ocean. The meaning is established in accordance with the passage stated in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.

Gist: the waters, like modest young women adorning a young man, surround Agni; he shines among the waters without fuel, giving us wealth-bearing food.

अस्मेराः (asmerāḥ)—bashful; युवतयः (yuvatayaḥ)—young women; युवानं (yuvānaṃ)—a young man; मर्मृज्यमानाः (marmṛjyamānāḥ)—as if surrounding and adorning; आपः (āpaḥ)—the waters; तं (taṃ)—him, the Agni named Apāṃ Napāt; परि यंति (pari yaṃti)—surround and attend upon; धृतनिर्निक् (dhṛtanirnik) (as supplied; the Pada has घृतनिर्निक् (ghṛtanirnik))—having a form purified by ghee; सः (saḥ)—that Agni; अप्सु (apsu)—in the midst of the waters; अनिध्मः (anidhmaḥ)—remaining without fuel; आस्मे (āsme) (as supplied; Pada अस्मे (asme))—for us; रेवत् (revat)—so that food endowed with wealth is obtained;

शुक्रेभिः (śukrebhiḥ)—with bright; शिक्ष्वभिः (śikṣvabhiḥ) (as supplied; Pada शिक्वभिः (śikvabhiḥ))—splendours; दीदायु (dīdāyu) (as supplied; Pada दीदाय (dīdāya))—he shines.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

As bashful young women surround and adorn a young man, so the waters surround and attend upon Agni named Apāṃ Napāt. That Agni, of a form purified by ghee, remaining without fuel in the midst of the waters, shines with bright splendours so that food endowed with wealth is obtained by us.

Printed English translation

The young and modest (waters) wait upon the youth, assiduous in bathing him, and he, although unfed with fuel, yet cleansed with clarified butter, shines with bright rays amidst the waters, that abundanceee [sic] (may be) to us.

तं आपः अस्मेराः युवतयः युवानं मर्मृज्यमानाः परि यंति (taṃ āpaḥ asmerāḥ yuvatayaḥ yuvānaṃ marmṛjyamānāḥ pari yaṃti)—Sāyaṇa explains: अपांनपातमग्निं अस्मयमानाः दर्परहिताः युवतयः युवानां युवराजमिव आत्यर्थमलंकुर्वाणाः आपः परितः प्राप्नु वंति (apāṃnapātamagniṃ asmayamānāḥ darparahitāḥ yuvatayaḥ yuvānāṃ yuvarājamiva ātyarthamalaṃkurvāṇāḥ āpaḥ paritaḥ prāpnu vaṃti). The meaning is described thus: as young women in their youth, free of pride, attend upon a young prince in his youth, so the waters of the rivers that join the ocean greatly tend and serve the Agni named Apāṃ Napāt.

सः अप्पु अनिध्मः (saḥ appu anidhmaḥ)—अपां नपादग्निः मेघांतर्गतासु समुद्रगतासु मध्ये वा इंधनरहितः (apāṃ napādagniḥ meghāṃtargatāsu samudragatāsu madhyè vā iṃdhanarahitaḥ)—the Agni named Apāṃ Napāt, in the midst of the waters that are within the clouds or have gone to the ocean, has no means of blazing; that is, he has the water itself as his fuel. And अस्मे रेवत् शुक्रेभिः शिक्वभिः दीदाय (asme revat śuklebhiḥ śikvabhiḥ this Agni named Apāṃ Napāt; अन्नं (annaṃ)—the food in the form of Soma; दिधिषंति (didhiṣaṃti)—carry and offer; अप्पु (appu) (as supplied; Pada अप्सु (apsu))—in the waters themselves; कृता इव (kṛtā iva)—as if made; उप प्रसस्रे (upa prasasre)—they spread out and extend; पूर्वसूनां (pūrvasūnāṃ)—of the waters produced of old from Brahmā; पीयूषं (pīyūṣaṃ)—the ambrosia that is the essence and has the form of Soma; सः (saḥ)—that Agni named Apāṃ Napāt; धयति (dhayati)—drinks.

The three divine women, Iḷā, Sarasvatī and Bhāratī, carry and offer the food in the form of Soma to this unharmed Agni named Apāṃ Napāt. As if made in the waters themselves, they spread out and extend. This Agni drinks the ambrosia, the essence of the waters produced of old from Brahmā, in the form of Soma.

Printed English translation

Three divine females present food to that uninjurable divinity ; as if formed in the waters they spread abroad, and he drinks the ambrosia of the first-created (element).

नारीः तिस्रः देवीः अव्यथाय अस्मै देवाय अन्नं दिधिषंति (nārīḥ tisraḥ devīḥ avyathāya asmai devāya annaṃ didhiṣaṃti)—नेत्रः इळा सरस्वतीभारत्याख्याः तिस्रः देव्यः अपांनपाते सोमाख्यं अन्नं धारयंति (netraḥ iḷā sarasvatībhāratyākhyāḥ tisraḥ devyaḥ apāṃnapāte somākhyaṃ annaṃ dhārayaṃti). Here the word anna is explained as Soma. The three goddesses Iḷā, Sarasvatī and Bhāratī, who control the world, that is, are the regulators of the world, for the god Apāṃ Nahāt [?], the food called Soma, bearing it, are serving him; and अप्पु कृता इव (appu kṛtā iva): this Soma, as if it had been produced in the waters themselves, abundantly spreads, and these goddesses offer Soma to this god. Therefore this god, पूर्वसूनां पीयूषं (pūrvasūnāṃ pīyūṣaṃ)—drinks the ambrosia named Soma, the essence of the waters that came into being first of what was created by Brahmā; so it is described, and in this way the greatness of this god, whom Iḷā, Bhāratī and Sarasvatī also serve, and the excellence of Soma are described.

Yāska explains तिस्रोः देवीः (tisroḥ devīḥ) as तिस्त्रः देव्यः (tistraḥ devyaḥ) and, citing this reasoning (the following verse),

> आ नो यज्ञं भारती तूयमेत्विळा मनुष्वदिह चेतयंती । तिस्रो देवीर्बर्हिरेदं स्योनं सरस्वती स्वससः सदंतु ॥
> ā no yajñaṃ bhāratī tūyametviḷā manuṣvadiha cetayaṃtī | tisro devīrbarhiredaṃ syonaṃ sarasvatī svasasaḥ sadaṃtu ‖

and then explaining it:

> ऐतु नो भारती यज्ञं क्षिप्रं । भरत आदित्यस्तस्य भा इळा च मनुष्यवदिह चेतयमाना तिस्रो देव्यो बर्हिरिदं सुखं सरस्वती च सुकर्माण आसीदंतु ।

Ni. 8-14) (as printed, closing parenthesis only) he has explained the meaning thus: Bhāratī, the radiance of Āditya who nourishes all beings with waters; Iḷā, the well-known deity of the earth region; and Sarasvatī, the deity of the middle region, are called like human beings to the sacrificers' rites, and let them sit in the barhis-place of the sacrificial hall to receive the oblations offered by the sacrificers.

Gist of the bhāṣya: in this Apāṃnapāt the horse (Uccaiḥśravas) was born from the ocean; the whole world is born in him, since he, abiding in the clouds, generates it through rain; he is asked to protect the singers from the harm of the treacherous and violent, and the givers-not and the untruthful cannot reach him. भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

The birth of the horse Uccaiḥśravas is in this Agni named Apāṃ napāt. The birth of the whole moving world is also in this Agni. O Agni, protect us, the praisers, from contact with the enemy who practises treachery and is violent. This Agni, who is in the highest place among the unripe and not-full waters and is unassailable, cannot be approached either by men fallen from ritual or by untruthful asuras.

And अनृतानि न (anṛtāni na): those who follow the crooked path of deceit cannot attain his presence; thus it is described.

The word सूरि (sūri) is read among the names of praisers (Ni. 3-19). The word नशत् (naśat) is read among the verbs of pervading (Ni. 3-10). Although the word स्वः (svaḥ) has many kinds of meaning (Ni. 2-14), here its sense is explained as सुष्ठु अरणीयस्य (suṣṭu araṇīyasya).

Agni named Apāṃ napāt sits in his own home, the atmosphere. He whose cow, the middle-region speech, is excellently milkable, increases the water in the form of rain and eats the oblation-food produced excellently by the rain. In order to give wealth to the worshipping sacrificer he gathers excellent strength and shines exceedingly in the midst of the waters in the clouds.

Printed English

He, the grandson of the waters, who abides in his own dwelling ; of whom is the readily-milked cow; who augments the nectar (of the skies and thence) eats the sacrificial food ; he, gatheing [sic] strength in the midst of the waters, shines for the sake of conferring wealth upon his worshipper.

p. 273

The deity named Apāṃ napāt is described thus: in "sve dame" (his own home, the home in the form of the atmosphere) he dwells; "dhenuḥ sudughā" — the cow connected with this deity, namely the middle-region speech (his power), is called upon to produce comfort for all, and so is beneficial to all; "svadhāṃ pīpāya" — this deity increases (the food), the rain-water (because he is in the home of atmospheric form). Thus described, this deity "subhu annaṃ ca atti" — he eats the food in the form of oblation, excellently produced from the rain-water. "Saḥ devaḥ apsyantaḥ" — Apāṃ napāt, being in the midst of the waters in the clouds, "vidhate ūrjayan vasudeyāya vibhāti" — shines with his exceeding splendours in order to bestow strength and abundant wealth upon the clouds and upon the sacrificers who serve him; so it is described.

Gist: Ṛta means water; Apāṃ napāt, truthful (or possessed of water), eternal, ever of one form and vast, shines in the midst of the cloud-waters with divine radiance; all other beings are his branches, and the plants are born with their offspring (flowers and fruits) from him.

p. 274

यः (yaḥ) — which deity Apāṃ napāt; ऋतावा (ṛtāvā) — being truthful; अजस्रः (ajasraḥ) — being eternal and of one form; उर्विया (urviyā) — being exceedingly vast; अप्सु (appu) — in the midst of the waters in the clouds; शुचिना (śucinā) — with the radiant; दैव्येन (daivyena) — and divine; with (that) splendour; आ (ā) — all around; विभाति (vibhāti) — shines exceedingly. अस्य (asya) — of that same deity; वया इत् (vayā it) — as branches; अन्या भुवनानि (anyā bhuvanāni) — all other beings exist. वीरुधश्च (vīrudhaśca) — the plants also; प्रजाभिः (prajābhiḥ) — together with their offspring in the form of fruits and flowers; प्रजायंते (prajāyaṃte) — are born of this Agni itself.

The deity Apāṃ napāt, who is truthful, eternal, of one form and exceedingly vast, shines exceedingly all around with a radiant and divine splendour in the midst of the waters in the clouds; all other beings are, as it were, branches of that deity. The plants also, together with their fruits and flowers, are born of this Agni itself.

Printed English

Although the word ṛta has the meanings truth, water and wisdom (prajñā), Sāyaṇa takes it here in the sense of water or truth, and so explains Apāṃ napāt as one who possesses water or is truthful. अजस्रः—नित्यः सदा एकरूपेण वर्तमानः (ajasraḥ—nityaḥ sadā ekarūpeṇa vartamānaḥ): this deity is imperishable and at all times of one kind. उर्विया उरु विस्तीर्णः (urviyā uru vistīrṇaḥ): this deity, who pervades exceedingly, अप्पु शुचिना दैव्येन आ विभाति (appu śucinā daivyena ā vibhāti) — shines everywhere with his divine splendour in the midst of the waters in the cloud. अस्य अन्या भुवनानि वया इत् (asya anyā bhuvanāni vayā it): since the many kinds of beings in the worlds are all born of this deity, they are said to belong to him (like branches to a tree)

p. 275

वीरुधः प्रजाभिः प्रजायंते (vīrudhaḥ prajābhiḥ prajāyaṃte) — (the word prajā is explained as the flowers and fruits produced on creepers) the creepers, and their flowers and fruits too, are born of this deity alone; thus the abundant power of this deity is described.

Gist: This is the anuvākyā of the Apōnaptrīya (oblation of cooked grain) of the Sārasvata sattra (sūtra reference printed as "Ā. 12-6"). Apāṃ napāt rose into the atmosphere, clothing the lightning cloud, and rained; the golden, mighty rivers flow everywhere as if proclaiming his greatness out of gratitude.

अपां नपात् (apāṃ napāt) — Agni named Apāṃ napāt; जिह्मानां (jihmānāṃ) — in the midst of the waters of crooked course; ऊर्ध्वः (ūrdhvaḥ) — shining in an elevated region; विद्युत् (vidyut) — brilliance

p. 276

, i.e. the shining cloud; वसानः (vasānaḥ) — clothed in it; उपस्थं (upasthaṃ) — the atmosphere, the lap (resting-place) of the waters; आ ह्यस्थात् (ā hyasthāt) — has taken his stand, resorting to it. तस्य (tasya) — of this Apāṃ napāt, the maker of rain; ज्येष्ठं (jyeṣṭhaṃ) — praiseworthy; महिमानं (mahimānaṃ) — greatness; वहंतीः (vahaṃtīḥ) — bearing along; यह्वीः (yahvīḥ) — and mighty; हिरण्यवर्णाः (hiraṇyavarṇāḥ) — the rivers; परि यंति (pari yaṃti) — flow all around.

Agni named Apāṃ napāt shines in an elevated region in the midst of the waters of crooked course, clothed in the shining cloud as in a covering, and stands resting on the atmosphere, the lap of the waters. The mighty rivers, bearing along the praiseworthy greatness of this rain-maker Apāṃ napāt, flow all around.

Printed English

The grandson of the waters has ascended the firmament above (the region) of the tortuously-moving (clouds), arrayed in lightnlng [sic] : the broad and golden-coloured (rivers) spread around, bearing (to all quarters) his exceeding glory.

In the cooked-grain oblation connected with the Apōnaptrīya of the Sārasvata sacrifice mentioned earlier, this Ṛk beginning अपांनपादा हि (apāṃnapādā hi) is to be recited as the anuvākyā mantra, as set out in the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra by the sūtra अपां नष्टे चरुमपां नपादा ह्यस्थादुपस्थं (apāṃ naṣṭe carumapāṃ napādā hyasthādupasthaṃ) (Ā. 12-6).

यह्वीं हिरण्यवर्णाः परियंति (yahvīṃ hiraṇyavarṇāḥ pariyaṃti) — see the passage above beginning महत्यः हिरण्यवन्निर्मलरूपा नद्यः (mahatyaḥ hiraṇyavannirmalarūpā nadyaḥ). The word हिरण्यवर्णाः (hiraṇyavarṇāḥ) is stated among the names of rivers (Ni. 2-4). The very large rivers, pure and radiant like gold, abundant rain-waters according to their flow, deity, addressing him; हिरण्यदाः (hiraṇyadāḥ) — the sacrificers who offer gold (as fee); अन्नं (annaṃ) — food in the form of oblation; ददति (dadati) — offer.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

The deity Apāṃ napāt, of golden form, with attractive senses and of golden hue, shines seated upon a golden seat. The sacrificers who offer gold as fee to this Agni also offer food in the form of oblation.

Printed English

The grandson of the waters is of golden form, of golden aspect, of golden hue, and (shines) seated upon a seat of gold : the givers of gold (at solemn rites) present to him (sacrificial) food.

सः अपां नपात् हिरण्यरूपः (saḥ apāṃ napāt hiraṇyarūpaḥ) — रूप्यत इति रूपं शरीरं । सुवर्णमयशरीरः हितरमणीयशरीरो वा (rūpyata iti rūpaṃ śarīraṃ | suvarṇamayaśarīraḥ hitaramaṇīyaśarīro vā). Here the word rūpa is used in the sense of body. The deity Apāṃ napāt wears a body of golden lustre, or a body pleasant and charming to all, so it is explained.

हिरण्यसंदृक् (hiraṇyasaṃdṛk) — सम्यक् पश्यंतीति संदृश इंद्रियाणि । सुवर्णमयेंद्रियो हितरमणीयेंद्रियो वा (samyak paśyaṃtīti saṃdṛśa iṃdriyāṇi | suvarṇamayeṃdriyo hitaramaṇīyeṃdriyo vā). The word sandṛś is used in the sense of the senses, the means of full knowledge. The senses of this deity are radiant like gold, or productive of pleasure and charming; the deity is explained as possessing such senses.

अस्मै हिरण्यदाः अन्नं ददति (asmai hiraṇyadāḥ annaṃ dadati) — ईदृग्विधाय अपां नपाते दक्षिणारूपस्य दातारः यजमानाः हविर्लक्षणमन्नं प्रयच्छंति (īdṛgvidhāya apāṃ napāte dakṣiṇārūpasya dātāraḥ yajamānāḥ havirlakṣaṇamannaṃ prayacchaṃti). Addressing this deity of such abundant power, the sacrificers are described as giving gold as the sacrificial fee and offering food in the form of oblation.

हिरण्यवर्णं (hiraṇyavarṇaṃ) — of form attractive like gold; यं (yaṃ) — whom, the Agni called Apāṃ napāt; युवतयः (yuvatayaḥ) — the waters, having the nature of joining together; इत्था (itthā) — in the firmament; सं इंधते (saṃ iṃdhate) — cause to blaze; अस्य (asya) — of such; अपां नपुः (apāṃ naptuḥ) — of the grandson of the waters, Agni; तत् अनेकं (tat anekaṃ) — that body, of the form of a mass of rays; चारु (cāru) — is charming; उत (uta) — and; नाम (nāma) — the name of this Agni too is attractive to the mind (this form and name, both attractive); अपीच्यं (apīcyaṃ) — hidden within the cloud; वर्धते (vardhate) — they grow; अस्य (asya) — to this deity; धृतं (dhṛtaṃ) — water; अन्नं (annaṃ) — is nourishing food.

The waters, which have the nature of joining together, cause to blaze in the firmament the Agni called Apāṃ napāt, whose form is attractive like gold; the body of this grandson of the waters, in the form of a mass of rays, is charming. The name of this Agni too is charming. This attractive form and name, both of them, grow while hidden within the cloud. For this deity water is nourishing food.

p. 280

Printed English

Beautiful is his form (of aggregated lustre, beautiful) is the name of the grandson of the waters; (both) flourish, though hidden (by the clouds); the youthful waters collectively kindle the golden-coloured divinity in the firmament, for water is his food.

अस्यं अनेकं चारु—रश्मिसमूहरूपं शरीरं शोभनं (asyaṃ anekaṃ cāru—raśmisamūharūpaṃ śarīraṃ śobhanaṃ) — Taking the word anīka to mean a body in the form of a mass of rays, the body of this deity is handsome, being endowed with a multitude of rays (radiances).

अस्य नाम चारु—अस्य संज्ञाच चारु शोभनं। न पातयति न विनाशयशीति नपादिति व्युत्पत्तेः। (asya nāma cāru—asya saṃjñāca cāru śobhanaṃ| na pātayati na vināśayaśīti napāditi vyutpatteḥ|) — The word napāt means "one who does not make fall" (na pātayati, does not abandon) or "one who does not destroy" (na vināśayati, does not bring to ruin). Hence this deity does not abandon or cast down or destroy those who have taken refuge in him, and for this reason the name of this deity too is auspicious.

The waters, which have the nature of flowing or pervading, make this deity grow in the firmament. And in अस्य धृतं अन्नं—अस्य च देवस्य क्षरणशीलमुदकं भक्ष्यं । (asya dhṛtaṃ annaṃ—asya ca devasya kṣaraṇaśīlamudakaṃ bhakṣyaṃ |) the food of this deity is just the water, of flowing nature; and it is described that this deity is the lightning-fire, which is delightful (अभिनंदनवागिरुव (abhinaṃdanavāgiruva) in the Kannada explanation).

(of his presence) : I nourish him with fuel ; I nourish him with (sacrificial) viands : I glorify him with hymns.

अस्मै बहूनां अवमाय (asmai bahūnāṃ avamāya)—पुरोवर्तिने देवानां आद्याय (purovartine devānāṃ ādyāya) (to him who is present before us, the first of the gods). The word बहु (bahu) is established in the sense of prabhūta (much, many). For this word, which is always used as an adjective, the word देवानां (devānāṃ) has been supplied as the noun qualified. The word अवम (avama) always conveys the sense "inferior"; here the sense "first" is given, and it is described that because this Apāṃ napāt deity is the first among the gods worthy of the sacrifice, and regards the sacrificers as friends, being सख्ये (sakhyè)—समानख्यानाय (samānakhyānāya) (of equal renown), the sacrificers worship this deity नमसा हविर्भिः (namasā havirbhiḥ) with salutations and with offerings of oblations.

सानु संमार्ज्मि (sānu saṃmārjmi)—समुच्चितप्रदेशं सम्यक् शोधयामि अलंकरोमि वा (samuccritapradeśaṃ samyak śodhayāmi alaṃkaromi vā) (I cleanse well, or adorn, the raised place). Since the place where this fire Apāṃ napāt is set is the altar (vedi) in the sacrificial hall, it is explained that the sacrificer or the priests make this raised place pure or adorn it.

स ईं वृषा तासु गर्भं अजनयत् (sa īṃ vṛṣā tāsu garbhaṃ ajanayat)—सोऽयमपां नपात्संज्ञको देवः सेक्ता भूत्वा मेघस्थास्वप्सु स्वात्मानमेव गर्भरूपेण वर्षणार्थं कृतवान् (so 'yamapāṃ napātsaṃjñako devaḥ sektā bhūtvā meghasthāsvappu svātmānameva garbharūpeṇa varṣaṇārthaṃ kṛtavān). It has been explained earlier that the deity Apāṃ napāt exists in the form of the lightning-fire in the midst of the clouds, and in the form of the submarine fire in the midst of the sea. It is explained here, by showing as an illustration the course by which a living creature comes into the womb, is born, grows and spreads in the world, that this deity, being in the midst of the cloud, came into being in the manner of the world, and that this deity, being in the form of an infant, grows and pervades the world. Since the waters in the clouds are in a dense (solid) form, this deity is in the midst of the clouds so that the rain-waters may fall to the earth. To this eternal deity (who has neither birth nor death) the state of being in the womb is attributed. After coming out of the womb (after birth) the infant needs food in order to grow; likewise स ईं शिशुः धयति (sa īṃ śiśuḥ dhayati)—सोयं माध्यमिकः वैद्युतः अग्निः तासां शिशुपुत्रस्सन् मेघस्थाः ताः पिबति । अबंधनोसौ (soyaṃ mādhyamikaḥ vaidyutaḥ agniḥ tāsāṃ śiśuputrassan meghasthāḥ tāḥ pibati | abaṃdhanosau). This deity, existing in the form of the lightning-fire, a deity of the middle region, becoming the infant of the waters, drinks the waters that are in the clouds, just as an infant takes food for the growth of its body: so it is described.

Gist: the waters, bearing watery food to their grandson Apāṃ napāt, who abides in the supreme intermediate region and shines daily with undecaying lustre, flow around him of their own accord.

The grammatical tail of the bhāṣya (दीयति (dīyati) as a verb of motion, from the root दीज् (dīj) "to waste away", with an irregular parasmaipada) is transcribed above and not explained.

ಪರಮೇ (parame)—in that supremely excellent; ಅಸ್ಮಿನ್ ಪದೇ (asmin pade)—place in the form of the atmosphere; ತಸ್ಥಿವಾಂಸಂ (tasthivāṃsaṃ)—who abides; ಅಧ್ವಸ್ಮಭಿಃ (adhvasmabhiḥ)—with undecaying radiances; ವಿಶ್ವಹಾ (viśvahā)—on all days; ದೀದಿವಾಂಸಂ (dīdivāṃsaṃ)—and who shines, the fire called Apāṃ napāt; ಯಹ್ವೀಃ (yahvīḥ)—of great form; ಅಪಃ (apaḥ)—the waters; ನಪ್ತ್ರೇ (napne)—to their grandson; ಧೃತಂ (dhṛtaṃ) [sic, as supplied; the Saṃhitā has ಘೃತಂ]—watery; ಅನ್ನಂ (annaṃ)—food; ವಹಂತೀಃ (vahaṃtīḥ)—carrying; ಸ್ವಯಂ (svayaṃ)—by their own impulse; ಅತ್ಕೈಃ (atkaiḥ)—with their own forms that move constantly; ಪರಿ ದೀಯಂತಿ (pari dīyaṃti)—flow around him.

Having in view the fire called Apāṃ napāt, who abides in that supremely excellent place in the form of the atmosphere and shines on all days with undecaying radiances, the great waters, carrying watery food to their grandson, flow around him by their own impulse with their own forms that move constantly.

Printed English

The abundant waters, bearing sustenance to their grandson, flow round him wiih [sic] spontaneous movements; when abiding in his supreme sphere, and shining daily with imperishable (rays).

p. 286

The deity Apāṃ napāt is परमे पदे तस्थिंवांसं (parame pade tasthiṃvāṃsaṃ) (the supplied text has ತಸ್ಥಿಂವಾಂಸಂ)—उत्कृष्टे अंतरिक्षलक्षणे स्थाने स्थितवंतं (utkṛṣṭe aṃtarikṣalakṣaṇe sthāne sthitavaṃtaṃ). The word paramapada is explained as the atmosphere, which is the highest of all or the most excellent, and the deity is also described as one who dwells in the atmosphere.

अध्वस्मभिः विश्वहा दीदिवांसं (adhvasmabhiḥ viśvahā dīdivāṃsaṃ)—ध्वंसनरहितैः तेजोभिः सर्वाण्यहानि दीप्यमानं (dhvaṃsanarahitaiḥ tejobhiḥ sarvāṇyahāni dīpyamānaṃ): it is explained that this deity shines at all times with his own lustres, which are not put down by other lights or which suffer no fall.

यह्वीः आपः स्वयमत्कैः परि दीयंति (yahvīḥ āpaḥ svayamatkaiḥ pari dīyaṃti)—महत्यः आपः आत्मना सततगंतृभिः स्वकीयैः रूपैः परिगच्छंति (mahatyaḥ āpaḥ ātmanā satatagaṃtṛbhiḥ svakīyaiḥ rūpaiḥ parigacchaṃti). The abundant waters, of themselves, being all around with their respective forms which are endowed with the nature of flowing at all times, serve this deity.

And नप्रे अपांनपाते धृतमन्नं वहंतीः (napre apāṃnapāte dhṛtamannaṃ vahaṃtīḥ): the meaning is given that the rivers too, flowing by nature, carry food in the form of water for this deity. From this it is indicated, and may be understood, that the common practice of the world is stated:

just as dependants or kinsmen, who are close to a lord of lofty and honoured station and radiant, and who are favoured by him, serve him, so the waters and rivers serve this deity.

The meaning of the word paramapada has been explained fully elsewhere.

The grammatical tail of the bhāṣya (the root यम उपरमे (yama uparame), "to cease") is transcribed above and not explained.

ಅಗ್ನೇ (agne)—O Agni; ಸುಕ್ಷಿತಿಂ (sukṣitiṃ)—you, who have an excellent dwelling; ಜನಾಯ (janāya)—for the sake of offspring; ಆಯಾಂಸಂ (āyāṃsaṃ)—I have approached (to ask); ಮಘವದ್ಭ್ಯಃ (maghavadbhyaḥ)—for the sacrificers who are endowed with wealth in the form of oblations; ಸುವೃಕ್ತಿಂ (suvṛktiṃ)—a beautiful hymn; ಅಯಾಂಸಂ (ayāṃsaṃ)—I have approached, offering; ಯತ್ ಭದ್ರಂ (yat bhadraṃ)—which good; ದೇವಾಃ (devāḥ)—all the gods; ಅವಂತಿ (avaṃti)—protect; ವಿಶ್ವಂ ತತ್ (viśvaṃ tat)—all that good (may it also fall to us); ಸುವೀರಾಃ (suvīrāḥ)—we, endowed with excellent sons; ವಿದಥೇ (vidathe)—in the house of sacrifice; ಬೃಹತ್ (bṛhat)—a mature hymn; ವದೇಮ (vadema)—will recite.

O Agni, I have approached you, who have an excellent dwelling, to ask for offspring. I have approached, offering a beautiful hymn for the sacrificers endowed with wealth in the form of oblations. May all that good which all the gods protect fall to us also. We, endowed with excellent sons, will recite a mature hymn in the house of sacrifice.

Printed English

I:have [sic] come, Agni, to you, (the giver) of good dwellings. for the sake of offspring : I have come with a propitiatory hymn for the sake of the opulent (offerers of oblations) : may all the good which the gods defend (be ours) ; that, blessed with excellent descendants, we may worthily glorify you at this sacrifice.

The meaning of the first half of this Ṛk may be said to be a prayer of the seer who saw the mantra, and that of the second half a prayer of the sacrificers (who perform the sacrifice).

[Continuing the Special Topics of Ṛk 15:] Addressing Agni with अग्ने (agne), the commentary says सुकृतिं जनाय आयासं (sukṛtiṃ janāya āyāsaṃ): "I have approached (you of) an excellent dwelling, for the birth of our sons and others"; that is, it is prayed that Agni, who has an excellent abode, may cause sons and others to be born to us who serve him. Here, for the word जनाय (janāya) the meaning पुत्रादिजननं (putrādijananaṃ), "the birth of sons and others", is given. Although the word मघ (magha) is listed among the names of wealth (Nighaṇṭu 3-9), for the word मघवद्भ्यः (maghavadbhyaḥ) the commentary gives हविर्लक्षणधनयुक्तेभ्यः (havirlakṣaṇadhanayuktebhyaḥ), "for those who possess wealth in the form of oblations", i.e. for the sacrificers; and it explains that an excellent hymn concerning Agni is recited for them.

The prayer that we sacrificers make to Agni is this: यत् भद्रं सर्वे देवाः अवंति (yat bhadraṃ sarve devāḥ avaṃti), "the good which all the gods desire and protect" — may that good also come to us sacrificers. So it is expressed.

Sūkta 36 (Maṇḍala 2)

The thirty-sixth sūkta.

Sāyaṇa's introduction to the sūkta

> तुभ्यमिति षड्ऋचं चतुर्थं सूक्तं गार्त्समदं जागतं । प्रथमाया इंद्रो मधुश्च देवता । द्वितीयाया मरुतो माधवश्च । तृतीयायास्त्वष्टा शुक्रश्च । चतुर्थ्या अग्निः शुचिश्च । पंचम्या इंद्रो नभश्च । षष्ठ्या मित्रावरुणौ नभस्यश्च ॥ तथा चानुक्रांतं । तुभ्यं षड्ऋतव्यं तु जागतं त्विति ॥ दशरात्रे षष्ठेऽहनि ऋतुयाजेषु ऋक्शिरस्कैः प्रैषैः प्रेषितव्यं यष्टव्यं च । तताद्यानां षण्णां प्रैषाणामुपरिष्वादेव ताः षड्ऋचोऽहोरात्रादिभिः क्रमेणावपनीयाः । तथा च सूत्रितं । उपरिष्टात्त्वृच ऋतुयाजानामित्युपक्रम्य तुभ्यं हिन्वानो वसिष्ठ गा अप इति द्वादशेत्यंतेन । आ. ८–१. ॥

Gist: the fourth sūkta of the fourth anuvāka, of six ṛks, of the Gārtsamada seer, in jagatī; the deities of the six ṛks are listed (Indra and Madhu; the Maruts and Mādhava; Tvaṣṭṛ and Śukra; Agni and Śuci; Indra and Nabha; Mitra-Varuṇa and Nabhasya); the Anukramaṇī is quoted; the use is in the Ṛtuyājas of the sixth day of the Daśarātra, with the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra cited (8-1).

Anuvāda (Kannada). This sūkta, तुभ्यं हिन्वानः (tubhyaṃ hinvānaḥ), is the fourth sūkta in the fourth anuvāka. It has six ṛks. Gṛtsamada is the seer of this sūkta; the metre is jagatī. For the first ṛk of this sūkta the deities are Indra and the month Madhu (the month of Caitra); for the second ṛk, the Marut deities and Mādhava, that is, the month of Vaiśākha; for the third ṛk, Tvaṣṭṛ and Śukra, or the month of Jyeṣṭha; for the fifth ṛk, Indra and Nabha, or the month of Śrāvaṇa; for the sixth ṛk, Mitra and Varuṇa and Nabhasya, or the month of Bhādrapada. [The fourth ṛk, Agni and Śuci, is not mentioned in the Kannada here as supplied.]

p. 289

Running head: Ṛgvedasaṃhitā, Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Varga 25, p. 289 (the Kannada text prints the first abbreviation as "ಅ." as supplied).

What the Anukramaṇikā says is: तुभ्यं षड्ऋतव्यं तु जागतं त्विति (tubhyaṃ ṣaḍṛtavyaṃ tu jāgataṃ tviti). On the sixth day of the sacrifice called Daśarātra, when the oblations called Ṛtuprayājas are made, the ṛks of this sūkta are to be used both as Praiṣa mantras and as Yājyā mantras. Of the Praiṣa mantras, the use of the six ṛks of this sūkta is stated for the first six. Thereafter, the same six ṛks are to be used, in order, in the days and nights for the Āvapanīya mantras; this is explained by the sūtra of the Āśvalāyana Śrauta-sūtra beginning उपरिष्टात्त्वृच ऋतुयाजानामित्युपक्रम्य (upariṣṭāttvṛca ṛtuyājānāmityupakramya) and ending तुभ्यं हिन्वानो वसिष्ठ गा अप इति द्वादशेत्यंतेन (tubhyaṃ hinvāno vasiṣṭha gā apa iti dvādaśetyaṃtena) (Ā. 8-1).

Sūkta 36 — Maṇḍala 2, Anuvāka 4, Sūkta 36; Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Varga 25. Number of ṛks in the sūkta: 6. Seer: Gṛtsamada. Deities: 1. Indra and Madhu; 2. the Maruts and Mādhava; 3. Tvaṣṭṛ and Śukra; 4. Agni and Śuci; 5. Indra and Nabha; 6. Mitra-Varuṇa and Nabhasya. Metre: jagatī. (The supplied text has stray figures "೪" before and after the metre line; not read.)

इंद्र (iṃdra)—O Indra. तुभ्यं (tubhyaṃ)—for you. हिन्वानः (hinvānaḥ)—the Soma that has been pressed. गाः (gāḥ)—the products of the cow, milk and the like. अपः (apaḥ)—the waters, the Vasatīvarī and others. वसिष्ठ (vasiṣṭha)—has joined with (them). नरः (naraḥ)—the leaders, the Adhvaryus. सीं (sīṃ)—this Soma. आविभिः (āvibhiḥ)—with the ten-fold filters [as supplied]. अद्रिभिः (adribhiḥ)—with stones. अधुक्सन् (adhuksan)—have pressed and strained. इंद्र (iṃdra)—O Indra. यः (yaḥ)—you who. ईशिषे (īśiṣe)—are lord of the whole world (such as you are). प्रथमः (prathamaḥ)—before the other gods. स्वाहा (svāhā)—with the cry Svāhā. प्रहुतं (prahutaṃ)—cast into the fire. वषट् कृतं (vaṣaṭ kṛtaṃ)—offered with the cry Vaṣaṭ. सोमं (somaṃ)—the Soma. होत्रात् (hotrāt)—receiving it from the Hotṛ's sacrifice. आ पिब (ā piba)—drink.

O Indra, the Soma pressed for you is joined with the products of the cow, such as milk, and with waters such as the Vasatīvarī. The leaders, the Adhvaryus, have pressed this Soma with the pressing stones and strained it with the ten-fold filters. O Indra, you who are lord of the whole world, coming before the other gods, receive from the Hotṛ's sacrifice the Soma that has been cast in with the cry Svāhā and purified with the cry Vaṣaṭ, and drink it.

Printed English

(The libation) that is being presented, Indra, to you, comprises the (products of the) cow, and the (consecrated) water ; and the leaders (of the rite) have expressed it with stones, and strained it through woollen (filters) : Indra, you are the first (of the gods), and rule (over the world), drink the Soma offered [printed "off ered"] by the Hotri, and sanctificed [sic] bythe [sic] exclamations Swaha and Vashat.

Running head: Ṛgvedasaṃhitā, Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7, Varga 25, p. 291 (the Kannada text prints the first abbreviation as "ಅ." as supplied).

गाः—गोविकाराणि दधिपयःप्रभृतीनि श्रयणद्रव्याणि (gāḥ—govikārāṇi dadhipayaḥprabhṛtīni śrayaṇadravyāṇi). Here the word go is explained as the substances connected with the cow, such as milk and curds, which are mixed with the Soma juice; and अपः—वसतीवर्याख्या अपश्च (apaḥ—vasatīvaryākhyā apaśca): the word ap is used in the sense of the waters called Vasatīvarī. Having thus explained the meaning, the commentary describes the Soma juice pressed for Indra as joined with curds, ghee, milk and the like, products of the cow, and with the waters called Vasatīvarī.

says that the sacrificers and the priests have prepared this Soma by crushing it with stones, pressing out the juice and purifying it with the ten-fold filters.

Addressing Indra, the commentary describes this Indra as lord of all; प्रथमः—अन्येभ्यो देवेभ्यः पूर्वभावी र्स (prathamaḥ—anyebhyo devebhyaḥ pūrvabhāvī rsa) [sic as supplied: र्स (rsa) for san]: coming to the sacrifice before the other gods, may he drink in full the Soma offered in the fire for Indra with the words Vaṣaṭkāra and Svāhā.

In this ṛk the Marut deities are described. These Maruts are पृषतीभिः यामन्—स्ववाहनभूताभिः पृषद्वतीभिर्वडवाभिः युक्ते गमनसाधने रथे अवस्थिताः (pṛṣatībhiḥ yāman—svavāhanabhūtābhiḥ pṛṣadvatībhirvaḍavābhiḥ yukte gamanasādhane rathe avasthitāḥ): that is, seated in cars to which are yoked their own mounts, horses with white spots, as the means of travelling about, and ऋष्टिभिः शुभ्रासः (ṛṣṭibhiḥ śubhrāsaḥ), shining with their weapon famed as the ṛṣṭi, a spear; भरतस्य सूनवः—सर्वस्य जगतो भर्तुः रुद्रस्य पुत्राः (bharatasya sūnavaḥ—sarvasya jagato bhartuḥ rudrasya putrāḥ): sons of Rudra, the lord of all the worlds. Having so described them, it explains their power: दिवो नरः—अंतरिक्षस्य नेतारः (divo naraḥ—aṃtarikṣasya netāraḥ), leaders of the firmament, that is, rulers of the sky; and it says of them, पोत्रात् सोममापिबत (potrāt somamāpibata) (as supplied), may they drink the Soma offered by the priest called Potṛ (printed प्रोतृ (protṛ)).

Gist of the Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya of Ṛk 3 (the Sanskrit is given on p. 293): Sāyaṇa says the Ṛk is the Neṣṭṛ's prasthita-yājyā at the third pressing; Tvaṣṭṛ and the other deities are asked to come together, sit on the grass, rest, and enjoy the Soma food with their company.

सुहवाः (suhavāḥ)—O Tvaṣṭṛ and the rest of you, who are invoked in an excellent manner; नः (naḥ)—to us; अमेव (ameva)—all together; आ गंतन (ā gaṃtana)—come; बर्हिषि (barhiṣi)—on the darbha grass; नि सदतन (ni sadatana)—sit down; रणिष्टन (raṇiṣṭana)—take rest and play; अथ (atha)—afterwards; त्वष्टः (tvaṣṭaḥ)—O Tvaṣṭṛ; देवेभिः (devebhiḥ)—with the other gods; जनिभिः (janibhiḥ)—with the wives of the gods; सुमद्गणः (sumadgaṇaḥ)—you who are joined by an excellent company; अंधसः (aṃdhasaḥ)—the food in the form of Soma; जुजुषाणः (jujuṣāṇaḥ)—partaking of; मंदस्व (maṃdasva)—be satisfied.

O Tvaṣṭṛ and the rest of you, who are invoked in an excellent manner, come to us all together. Sitting on the grass, take rest and play. Afterwards, O Tvaṣṭṛ, you who have made an excellent company with the other gods and the wives of the gods, partake of the food in the form of Soma and be satisfied.

Printed English

You, who are devoutly invoked, come to us together, and seated on the sacrificial grass. enjoy your rest ; and then, Twashtri, you head a brilliant cohort, (come) with the gods and their wives, and rejoice, being pleased with the (sacrificial) food.

At the third pressing this Ṛk अमेव नः (ameva naḥ) is to be used as the prasthita-yājyā mantra to be recited by the Neṣṭṛ; this is set out by the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra in the sūtra अमेव नः सुहवा आ हि गंतनेंद्राविष्णू पिबतं मध्वो अस्य (ameva naḥ suhavā ā hi gaṃtaneṃdrāviṣṇū pibataṃ madhvo asya) (Ā. 5-5). In अमेव (ameva) the word इव (iva) is not used in the sense of a word of comparison; since it is stated in the sense of emphasis, it is used in the sense "together indeed".

सुहवाः (suhavāḥ)—शोभनाह्वानाः (śobhanāhvānāḥ)—describing the invocation of Tvaṣṭṛ and the other deities as auspicious, it expresses the wish that these deities come together to the sacrificial hall of us, the sacrificers.

बर्हिषि नि सदतन (barhiṣi ni sadatana)—वेद्यामास्तिर्णे निषण्णा भवत (vedyāmāstirṇe niṣaṇṇā bhavata). It explains: let them come to the sacrificial hall and be seated on the darbha grass spread on the altar; and रणिष्टन (raṇiṣṭana)—रमध्वं (ramadhvaṃ). रणशब्दार्थः अत्र क्रीडायां वर्तते धातूनामनेकार्थत्वात् (raṇaśabdārthaḥ atra krīḍāyāṃ vartate dhātūnāmanekārthatvāt). The root रण (raṇa) here is used in the sense of play, according to the rule that roots have many meanings; hence it explains that these deities, Tvaṣṭṛ and the rest, coming to the sacrificial hall, sitting on the grass, may take their ease.

जनिभिः देवेभिः सुमद्गणः (janibhiḥ devebhiḥ sumadgaṇaḥ)—अन्यैः देवैः देवपत्नीभिश्च शोभनगणः (anyaiḥ devaiḥ devapatnībhiśca śobhanagaṇaḥ). Because this god Tvaṣṭṛ is joined with the deities of his own retinue, with the other deities and with the wives of the gods, it expresses the wish that this god, joined with his company, partake of the oblation that is in the form of Soma and be satisfied.

अंधसः (aṃdhasaḥ)—सोमलक्षणस्यान्नस्य (somalakṣaṇasyānnasya). The word अंधः (aṃdhaḥ) is stated among the names of food (Ni. 3-9). Here it explains the meaning as food that is in the form of Soma.

O wise Agni, bring the worshipful gods, Indra and the rest, to this sacrifice. Sacrifice with reference to them. You who call the gods to the sacrifice, desiring our sacrifice, sit in the three places beginning with the Gārhapatya. Welcome with regard the Soma sweet drink brought to the northern altar. Drink the Soma juice from the sacrifice of the Āgnīdhra. Attain satisfaction from your portion.

Printed English

Sage Agni, bring hither the gods, and sacrifice to them : invoker of the gods, propitions [sic] to us, sit down in the three altars : accept the libation of Soma that is offered to you from the Agnidhra, and be satisfied with your portion.

The word विप्र (vipra) is stated among the names of the wise (Ni. 3-19). Here, by this word, it explains that Agni is wise, and addresses him.

देवान् आवक्षि (devān āvakṣi)—यष्टव्यानिंद्रादीन् आवह (yaṣṭavyāniṃdrādīn āvaha). It expresses the wish that Agni, the wise, bring Indra and the other gods who deserve the sacrifice, in the sacrifices performed by the sacrificers, to receive the oblations offered in the sacrifice.

प्रस्थितं सोम्यं मधु प्रति वीहि (prasthitaṃ somyaṃ madhu prati vīhi) and the explanation that follows (उपविश्यच होमार्थमुत्तरवेदिं प्रत्यानीतं सोममयं मधु प्रतिकामयस्व (upaviśyaca homārthamuttaravediṃ pratyānītaṃ somamayaṃ madhu pratikāmayasva)): the sacrificers, having offered the oblation in the places fixed for the fires, each according to its rite, place this Agni, when performing the Paśuka and Soma rites, at another place called the Uttaravedi, and there offer Soma, ghee and the other oblations in the fire. It is described as the wish of the sacrificers that Agni, seated on the Uttaravedi in those rites, accept the sweet drink known as Soma.

Gist: Sāyaṇa: this Soma augments Indra's bodily strength and places might in his arms; it is pressed and brought for him; let him drink it, satisfied, from the Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin's sacrifice.

O Indra; स्यः (syaḥ)—the well-known; एषः (eṣaḥ)—this Soma juice; ते (te)—your; तन्वः (tanvaḥ)—body's; नृम्मवर्धनः (nṛmmavardhanaḥ)—is the increaser of strength (the Soma juice by which); प्रदिवि (pradivi)—of you, the ancient one; बाहोः (bāhoḥ)—in the arms; सहः (sahaḥ)—the strength that defeats enemies; ओजः (ojaḥ)—the inner power that is its root; हितः (hitaḥ)—has been established; मघवन् (maghavan)—O wealthy Indra; तुभ्यं (tubhyaṃ)—for you alone; सुतः (sutaḥ)—(this juice) has been pressed; तुभ्यं (tubhyaṃ)—for the sake of performing the sacrifice directed to you; आभृतः (ābhṛtaḥ)—has been brought to the Uttaravedi; अस्य (asya)—this Soma; ब्राह्मणात् (brāhmaṇāt)—from the sacrifice of the Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin; तृपत् (tṛpat)—becoming satisfied; त्वं (tvaṃ)—you; आ पिब (ā piba)—come face to face and drink.

O Indra, this well-known Soma juice is the increaser of the strength of your body. By this same Soma juice the strength that defeats enemies and the inner power that is its root have been established in the arms of you, the ancient one. O wealthy Indra, this juice has been pressed for you alone; it has been brought to the Uttaravedi for the sake of performing the sacrifice directed to you. In the sacrifice of the Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin come face to face, drink the Soma and be satisfied.

Printed English

This (libation), Indra, is the augmenter of your bodily (vigour), favourable of old to the resistless strength of (your) arms : it is effused Maghavan, for you : it is brought to you from the Brahmana ; drink and be satisfied.

नृष्णवर्धनः—बलस्य वर्धनः (nṛṣṇavardhanaḥ—balasya vardhanaḥ). The words नृष्णं (nṛṣṇaṃ), सहः (sahaḥ) and ओजः (ojaḥ) are read by Yāska among the names of strength (Ni. 3-9). For the word नृष्णवर्धनः (nṛṣṇavardhanaḥ) Sāyaṇa gives शरीरस्य बलस्य वर्धकः (śarīrasya balasya vardhakaḥ): Soma increases the strength connected with the body. By this he states the use of the word नृष्ण (nṛṣṇa) in the sense of bodily strength. बाह्वोः सहः—हस्तयोः परेषामभिभवनलक्षणं सामर्थ्यं (bāhvoḥ sahaḥ—hastayoḥ pareṣāmabhibhavanalakṣaṇaṃ sāmarthyaṃ); ओजः—तत्कारणभूतं बलं (ojaḥ—tatkāraṇabhūtaṃ balaṃ): this is the commentary given. By it the meaning is explained: सहः (sahaḥ)

is the valour famed for overcoming enemies, and ओजः (ojaḥ) is the power of mind that is its cause. It is further explained that Soma is said to produce these three kinds of capacity in Indra. Having thus described the power of the Soma juice, the verse addresses Indra as मघवन्—धनवन् (maghavan—dhanavan), the wealthy, and says तुभ्यं सुतः, तुभ्यमाभृतः (tubhyaṃ sutaḥ, tubhyamābhṛtaḥ): the Soma, pressed by the priests beginning with the Adhvaryu and ready on the Uttaravedi to be offered with reference to Indra, ब्राह्मणात् तृपन् आ पिब (brāhmaṇāt tṛpan ā piba) (the text as supplied reads तृपन् (tṛpan) here, and तृपत् (tṛpat) in the verse) — ब्राह्मणांच्छंसिनो यागात् तृप्यन् (आ पिब) अभिमुख्येन पिब (brāhmaṇāṃcchaṃsino yāgāt tṛpyan (ā piba) abhimukhyena piba). It is described as the wish of the sacrificer that Indra drink, until he is satisfied, what the priest called Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin offers in the fire.

Gist: Sāyaṇa addresses Mitra and Varuṇa: enjoy my sacrifice and note my call; the seated Hotṛ recites the ancient nivids; the Soma food, surrounded by the priests, comes to you; drink the sweet Soma from the Praśāstṛ's sacrifice.

मित्रावरुणा (mitrāvaruṇā)—O Mitra and Varuṇa; यज्ञं (yajñaṃ)—this sacrifice; जुषेथाः (juṣethāḥ)—enjoy [the supplied text reads जुषेथाः (juṣethāḥ) against जुषेथां (juṣethāṃ) in the verse]; मे (me)—my; हवस्य (havasya)—call; बोधतं (bodhataṃ)—understand; सत्तः (sattaḥ)—the seated; होता (hotā)—Hotṛ; पूर्व्या (pūrvyā)—ancient; निविदः (nividaḥ)—nivid mantras; अनु (anu)—recites; आवृतं (āvṛtaṃ)—surrounded by the priests; नमः (namaḥ)—the food in the form of Soma; राजाना (rājānā)—you who shine; अच्छ (accha)—coming face to face; एति (eti)—approaches; सोम्यं (somyaṃ)—made of Soma; मधु (madhu)—and intoxicating; the oblation; प्रशास्त्रात् (praśāstrāt)—from the sacrifice of the Praśāstṛ; आ पिबतं (ā pibataṃ)—drink.

O Mitra and Varuṇa, enjoy this sacrifice. Understand my call. The Hotṛ seated here recites the ancient nivid mantras. The food in the form of Soma, surrounded by the priests, comes face to face with you who shine and approaches you. Drink the oblation, made of Soma and intoxicating, from the sacrifice of the Praśāstṛ.

Printed English

Mitra and Varuna, both be gratified with the sacrifice: hear my invocation as the seated Hotri repeats in succession the ancient praises : the (sacrificial) food, encompassed (by the priests), attends the royal pair; drink both of you, the sweet Soma libation, offered by the Prasastri.

यज्ञं जुषेथां—हे मित्रावरुणौ मदीयमिमं यज्ञं सेवेथां (yajñaṃ juṣethāṃ—he mitrāvaruṇau madīyamimaṃ yajñaṃ sevethāṃ). Addressing Mitra and Varuṇa, it is expressed as a wish that they enjoy the sacrifices of the sacrificers; and मे हवस्य बोधतं—मम हवमाह्वानं अवगच्छतं (me havasya bodhataṃ—mama havamāhvānaṃ avagacchataṃ): the meaning of the word हव (hava) is explained as invocation. It is expressed as a wish that Mitra and Varuṇa take note of the sacrificer's invocation, calling them to come for the sacrifice.

[Continuing the Special Topics of Ṛk 6:] होता पूर्व्याः निविदः अनु- (hotā pūrvyāḥ nividaḥ anu-) ("the Hotṛ recites after the ancient nivids"): अस्मदीयः होता चिरंतनीः शस्त्रलक्षणा वाचः (asmadīyaḥ hotā ciraṃtanīḥ śastralakṣaṇā vācaḥ) ("our Hotṛ, the ancient utterances of the nature of śastras") recites. उद्गातृभिः कृतस्य स्तोत्रस्यानुगुण्येनाज्यादीनि शंसति (udgātṛbhiḥ kṛtasya stotrasyānuguṇyenājyādīni śaṃsati) ("he recites the ājya and the rest in accordance with the stotra performed by the Udgātṛs"). It is described that the priest who invites the gods to the sacrifice with the respective mantras, when he performs the sacrifice, recites, in accordance with the praises recited by the priest called Udgātṛ, the mantras known as śastras, which from ancient times must necessarily be recited at the times of performing the respective rites.

आवृतं नमः राजाना अच्छ एति (āvṛtaṃ namaḥ rājānā accha eti) ("the encompassed food approaches the two who shine"): ऋत्विग्निः वेष्टितं सोमलक्षणमन्नं राज (ṛtvigniḥ veṣṭitaṃ somalakṣaṇamannaṃ rāja) ("the food in the form of Soma, surrounded by the priests, approaches you two who shine face to face"; the sentence continues on the next line in the supplied text). The word नमः (namaḥ) (namaḥ) is explained as meaning "food". It is described that the food in the form of Soma, surrounded by the priests and offered in the fire, comes near Mitra and Varuṇa, who shine with their own splendours; and, since the priest called Praśāstṛ has offered this Soma in the fire, the sacrificer's wish is described: may Mitra and Varuṇa drink this intoxicating Soma. (The supplied text at this point reads the phrase अभिमुख्येन पिबतं (abhimukhyena pibataṃ), "drink face to face", together with the name प्रशास्त्र (praśāstra) as supplied.)

In the beginning Prajāpati was alone; desiring to create beings and to become many, he practised austerity for a year, resorting to silence. Then, after he had recited twelve times the nivid mantras comprising twelve great sentences, all beings in the world were created. Having thus declared the power of these mantras, the text then praises Kutsa, who knew their secret, and the greatness of the ṛk that he recited.

Quotation (Brāhmaṇa): तदेतदृषिः पश्यन्नभ्यनूवाच स पूर्वया निविदा कव्यतायोरिमाः प्रजा (tadetadṛṣiḥ paśyannabhyanūvāca sa pūrvayā nividā kavyatāyorimāḥ prajā) ... अजनयन्मनूनामिति (ajanayanmanūnāmiti) ("the seer, seeing this, said: 'He, with the ancient nivid, ... created these people of the Manus'"; the quotation is divided between two lines in the supplied text and is given here as supplied). The Kannada explains: the seer Kutsa grasped the truth that by the power of the nivid mantras all beings of the world were created, and recited the mantra "Sa pūrvayā" (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-96-2).

Quotation (Brāhmaṇa): तद्यदेतां पुरस्तात् सूक्तस्य निविदं दधाति प्रजात्यै (tadyadetāṃ purastāt sūktasya nividaṃ dadhāti prajātyai) ("therefore he places this nivid at the beginning of the sūkta, for procreation"); प्रजायते प्रजया पशुभिर्य एवं वेद (prajāyate prajayā paśubhirya evaṃ veda) ("he who knows thus is born with offspring and cattle"). For this very reason the Hotṛ, by reciting the nivid mantra at the beginning of the sūkta, obtains offspring. For those who have this understanding, all wealth, beginning with good offspring, will be obtained.

[Continuing:] A mantra which addresses one deity or one group of deities, describes their uncommon qualities and invokes them, is known as a nivid mantra.

Citation (Bṛhaddevatā 3-50), as supplied:

कर्मैव तावत्सावित्र्यां निविदि स्तौति कर्मणा । (karmaiva tāvatsāvitryāṃ nividi stauti karmaṇā |) यद्धेनुः सप्त्यनड्वाहौ वोळ्हा दोग्धाशुरेव वा ॥ (yaddhenuḥ saptyanaḍvāhau voḷhā dogdhāśureva vā ‖)

For example, in Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-24-3, the nivid mantra addressed to the deity Savitṛ declares Savitṛ's distinction and the description of his uncommon action. From the word दोग्धिर् (dogdhir) (dogdhir) we understand a cow that yields milk; from āśu (swift), a horse; from वोळ्हा (voḷhā) (voḷhā), "one who bears a burden", an ox: so their distinctive characters are known. In the same way the nivid mantra praises each deity by stating that deity's individual qualities through the description of the respective actions.

The thirty-sixth sūkta is ended.

Adhyāya colophon (Sanskrit; Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 7):

> वेदार्थस्य प्रकाशेन तमो हार्दं निवारयन् । पुमर्थांश्च तुरो देयाद्विद्यातीर्थमहेश्वरः ॥ इति श्रीमद्राजाधिराजपरमेश्वरवैदिकमार्गप्रवर्तकश्रीवीरबुक्कभूपालसाम्राज्य– धुरंधरेण सायणाचार्येण विरचिते माधवीये वेदार्थप्रकाशे ऋक्संहिताभाष्ये द्वितीयाष्टके सप्तमोऽध्यायः समाप्तः ॥ ओं तत्त्वत् ॥

Closing line (Kannada): "Here ends the seventh adhyāya, in the second aṣṭaka of the Ṛgveda-saṃhitā with Sāyaṇa's commentary and a Kannada translation." The Sanskrit verses above give: dispelling the darkness of the heart by the light of the meaning of the Veda, may Vidyātīrtha-Maheśvara grant the four human aims; and the colophon names Sāyaṇācārya, bearer of the burden of Vīra-Bukka's empire, as author of the Mādhavīya Vedārthaprakāśa on the Ṛk-saṃhitā. The "Om tat sat" formula follows.

Then a verse of forgiveness (Sanskrit):

> यदक्षरपदभ्रष्टं मात्रहीनं तु यद्भवेत् । तत्सर्वं क्षम्यतां देव वागीश्वर नमोऽस्तुते ॥ ॥ शुभं भूयात् ॥

(Meaning: whatever syllable or word is lost, or whatever is deficient in measure, may all that be forgiven, O God, Lord of speech; salutation to you.)

Gist: the sūkta Mandasva has six ṛks, seer Gṛtsamada, in jagatī; the first four ṛks have Draviṇodas, the fifth the Aśvins, the sixth Agni as deity; on the sixth day of the Daśarātra the six ṛks are used as Praiṣa and Yājyā mantras in the Ṛtuyājas. (The supplied text reads यतुयाजेषु (yatuyājeṣu) in the Sanskrit, while the Kannada below says Ṛtuyāga; noted as supplied.)

Anuvāda (Kannada). Now the eighth adhyāya in the second aṣṭaka begins. In the fourth anuvāka of the second maṇḍala, this sūkta beginning Mandasva hotrāt is the fifth sūkta. It has six ṛks. Gṛtsamada is the seer of this sūkta. The Anukramaṇikā says "Mandasva". Since the Anukramaṇikā earlier said "ṛtavyaṃ tu jāgataṃ tviti" and used the particle tu, this sūkta too is a sūkta of ṛks in the jagatī metre, addressed to the Ṛtu deities. In sūkta addressed to the Ṛtus it is usual that other deities are praised together with the Ṛtu deities. Therefore, along with the Ṛtu deities, the ṛks of this sūkta have separate deities as well. Hence the first four ṛks of this sūkta have Draviṇodā as deity; the fifth ṛk has the Aśvins; the sixth ṛk has Agni. In the Ṛtuyāga performed on the sixth day of the sacrifice called Daśarātra, the ṛks of the Ṛgveda are used as Praiṣa mantras, and with those ṛks the recital of the Praiṣa mantras and the oblation must be done. Of such Praiṣa mantras, after the seventh Praiṣa mantra, the six ṛks of this sūkta beginning with Mandasva are used in order as Praiṣa mantras and Yājyā mantras. The sūtra sentence on this matter was already given earlier.

Two stray lines in the supplied text, "ಪಿ ರ್ ಱ ಕ" and "485", stand here; kept as a note, not read.

In the Ṛtuprayāja oblations made for the Ṛtus, the six ṛks of the previous sūkta and the six ṛks of this sūkta are both used as Praiṣa mantras and as Yājyā mantras. To ṛks addressed to the Ṛtus, other deities are joined along with the Ṛtus. For example, for the first four ṛks of this sūkta, along with the Ṛtus, the deities called Draviṇodā are stated; for the fifth ṛk, the Aśvins; for the sixth ṛk, Agni. The same order is found in the fifteenth sūkta of the first maṇḍala, of twelve ṛks, beginning Indra somaṃ piba: that is, for ṛks 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 respectively, the deities are Indra, Marut, Tvaṣṭā, Agni, Indra, and Mitrāvaruṇa, each together with an Ṛtu. In the last six ṛks, as in the present sūkta, four ṛks have the deity Draviṇodā together with the Ṛtus, the next ṛk the Aśvins, and the last ṛk Agni.

Note on the Ṛtus (Kannada commentary).

In the previous sūkta and in this one, the gods are prayed to drink Soma together with the Ṛtus. A detailed explanation of the Ṛtus is therefore necessary here. The Ṛtus are the deities presiding over the months. A year has twelve months, and every two months are known as one Ṛtu; so the twelve months make six Ṛtus. In common usage the year is generally divided into three, summer, rainy season and winter; but in the Vedas, taking two months to a Ṛtu, six Ṛtus are reckoned. On this subject:

> वसंतेनर्तुना देवाः । वसवस्त्रिवृता स्तुतं । रथंतरेण तेजसा । हविरिंद्रे पयोः दधुः ॥ ग्रीष्मेण देवा ऋतुना । रुद्राः पंचदशे स्तुतं । बृहता यशसा बलं । हविरिंद्रे पयो दधुः ॥
> वर्षाभिर्युतुनादित्याः । स्तोमे सप्तदशे स्तुतं । वैरूपेण विशौजसा । हविरिंद्रे पयो दधुः ॥
> शारदेनर्तुना देवाः । एकविग्ंश ऋभवः स्तुतं । वैराजेन श्रिया श्रियं । हविरिंद्रे पयो दधुः ॥
> हेमंतेनर्तुना देवाः । मरुतस्त्रिणवे स्तुतं । बलेन शक्वरीः सहः । हविरिंद्रे पयो दधुः ॥ > शैशिरेणर्तुना देवाः । त्रयस्त्रिग्ंशेऽमृतग्स् स्तुतं । सत्येन रेवतीःक्षत्रं । हविरिंद्रे पयो दधुः ॥

> vasaṃtenartunā devāḥ | vasavastrivṛtā stutaṃ | rathaṃtareṇa tejasā | haviriṃdre payoḥ dadhuḥ ‖ grīṣmeṇa devā ṛtunā | rudrāḥ paṃcadaśe stutaṃ | bṛhatā yaśasā balaṃ | haviriṃdre payo dadhuḥ ‖
> varṣābhiryutunādityāḥ | stome saptadaśe stutaṃ | vairūpeṇa viśaujasā | haviriṃdre payo dadhuḥ ‖ śāradenartunā devāḥ | ekavigṃśa ṛbhavaḥ stutaṃ | vairājena śriyā śriyaṃ | haviriṃdre payo dadhuḥ ‖
> hemaṃtenartunā devāḥ | marutastriṇave stutaṃ | balena śakvarīḥ sahaḥ | haviriṃdre payo dadhuḥ ‖ śaiśireṇartunā devāḥ | trayastrigṃśe 'mṛtags stutaṃ | satyena revatīḥkṣatraṃ | haviriṃdre payo dadhuḥ ‖

(Tai. Br. 2-6-19-1, 2)

In this anuvāka of the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa it is said that the gods praised the spring Ṛtu with the Trivṛt stoma, the summer Ṛtu with the Pañcadaśa stoma, the rainy season with the Saptadaśa stoma, the autumn with the Ekaviṃśa stoma, the Hemanta Ṛtu with the Triṇava stoma, and the Śaiśira Ṛtu with the Trayastriṃśa stoma; and that, having offered the oblation, they obtained desired things such as strength, fame and wealth. Therefore a year has six Ṛtus in all: Vasanta, Grīṣma, Varṣa, Śarad, Hemanta and Śaiśira. On some occasions Hemanta and Śaiśira are joined and reckoned as a single Ṛtu, "Hemanta-śiśira".

> śaradamṛtūnāṃ prīṇāmi sā mā prītā prīṇātu hemaṃtaśiśirāvṛtūnāṃ prīṇāmi śau mā prītau priṇītāṃ

(Tai. Saṃ. 1-6-2-3)

Here Hemanta and Śiśira are taken as a single Ṛtu, so that five Ṛtus in all are described. Yāska, giving the etymology of the word ṛtu, says ऋतुरर्तेर्गतिकर्मणः (ṛturartèrgatikarmaṇaḥ) (Ni. 2-25), "by the Ṛtus, by the times" (Ni. 8-3). That is, the word ṛtu is formed from the root ṛ in the sense of going (ऋ गतौ (ṛ gatau)) and conveys the meaning "time". Which months combine to form which Ṛtus is also stated in the Yajurveda itself.

> मधुश्च माधवश्च वासंतिकावृतू शुक्रश्च शुचिश्च ग्रैष्मावृतू नभश्च नभस्यश्च वार्षिकावृतू इषश्चोर्जश्च शारदावृतू सहश्च सहस्यश्च हैमंतिकावृतू तपश्च तपस्यश्च शैशिरावृतू > madhuśca mādhavaśca vāsaṃtikāvṛtū śukraśca śuciśca graiṣmāvṛtū nabhaśca nabhasyaśca vārṣikāvṛtū iṣaścorjaśca śāradāvṛtū sahaśca sahasyaśca haimaṃtikāvṛtū tapaśca tapasyaśca śaiśirāvṛtū

(Tai. Saṃ. 4-4-11-1)

That is, Caitra and Vaiśākha together are known as the spring Ṛtu; Jyeṣṭha and Āṣāḍha as the summer Ṛtu; Śrāvaṇa and Bhādrapada as the rainy season; Āśvayuja and Kārttika as the autumn; Mārgaśira and Puṣya as the Hemanta Ṛtu; Māgha and Phālguna as the Śiśira Ṛtu. Such is the description of the Ṛtus. Hence here, that is in this sūkta and in the previous one, ṛtu means the deity presiding over the Ṛtu. In the ṛks of this sūkta it is prayed that Draviṇodā (Agni) and the other deities come to the sacrificial ground together with these Ṛtu deities and drink Soma.

The Ṛtuyāja oblations

The Ṛtuyāja oblations have twelve mantras. For these twelve oblations the Praiṣa mantras and the Yājyā mantras are one and the same. In the Taittirīya Saṃhitā:

> मधुश्च माधवश्च शुक्रश्च शुचिश्च नभश्च नभस्यच्छेषश्चोर्जश्च सहश्च सहस्यश्च तपश्च तपस्यश्चोपयामगृहीतोऽसि सग्ंसर्पोऽस्यग्ंहस्पत्याय त्वा ॥

In the past the gods performed a sacrifice and went by it to the world of heaven. Afterwards they thought: "Men too will perform sacrifice as we do, follow us, and come after us to the world of heaven. We must prevent their coming." So they barred the way with the year and went to heaven. Even so the sages found it out by means of the Ṛtu-vessels the gods had left behind. A year has twelve months; therefore twelve Ṛtu-vessels are to be taken. If this is done, the nature of the year is known and the world of heaven is gained. The first two Ṛtu-vessels are taken together, and likewise the last two; therefore the Ṛtus go in pairs of two months. The Ṛtu-vessel has a mouth on both sides. Who knows this? He recites the Praiṣa mantra for the Ṛtus six times, because the Ṛtus are six; thereby he pleases the Ṛtus. Then he recites the mantras for the Ṛtus four times; thereby he pleases the four-footed animals. Then by reciting the mantra for the Ṛtus twice, he pleases the two-footed beings (men) is as if pleased. Again he says that the Praiṣa mantras for the Ṛtus are to be recited six times; likewise four times and twice. For the four-footed animals live following the Ṛtus; the two-footed beings (men) live depending on the four-footed animals. Then, as said before, he says the mantras for the Ṛtus are to be recited six times, four times and twice. By reciting the mantras in this way the sacrificer makes for himself a bridge by which to go to heaven. One must not go following one another; if one does so, the Ṛtus too become so, and a disorder arises in the order of the Ṛtus. Therefore the Adhvaryu goes by the southern door and the Pratiprasthātṛ by the northern door. Following this order the sun moves for six months in the southern direction and for another six months in the northern direction (this indicates the Dakṣiṇāyana and the Uttarāyaṇa). Some say there is also a thirteenth month; the Adhvaryu pleases that also.

The supplied text of this window ends here, in the middle of a sentence ("... pleases the two-footed (human) beings"); the passage continues on p. 308 (next window).

In the explanation given above the Ṛtuyāja oblations are divided into three groups: first six, then four, then two, twelve in all. In the first six mantras the singular ऋतुना (ṛtunā) is used. The deities of these six mantras are, in order, Indra, the Maruts, Tvaṣṭā, Agni, Indra-Brahmā (Indra and Brahman), and Mitra-Varuṇa. Then, for the four mantras of the second group, that is the seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth, the deity is Draviṇodāḥ (a form of Agni); in these four mantras the plural

ऋतुभिः (ṛtubhiḥ) is used. Of the two mantras of the third group, the eleventh has the Aśvins and the twelfth Agni as deities. In both of these the singular ऋतुना (ṛtunā) is used. (See Ṛg. Saṃ. Sūkta 1-15.)

The twelve Praiṣa mantras recited for these Ṛtuyāja oblations are directed by the priest called Maitrāvaruṇa. The first Praiṣa mantra the Maitrāvaruṇa addresses to the Hotṛ, saying होतायक्षदिंद्रं होतात्सजूर्दिव आ पृथिव्या ऋतुना सोमं पिबतु होतर्यज (hotāyakṣadiṃdraṃ hotātsajūrdiva ā pṛthivyā ṛtunā somaṃ pibatu hotaryaja). The deity of this first mantra is Indra. Its meaning: let the Hotṛ recite the Yājyā mantra for Indra; let that Indra, together with the Ṛtu deity, drink Soma from the Hotṛ's vessel. The Yājyā mantra is like it, but at the beginning of the mantra, instead of होतायक्षत् (hotāyakṣat), it begins with ये ३ यजामहे (ye 3 yajāmahe). This is the first Ṛtuyāja oblation.

In performing the second oblation the Maitrāvaruṇa addresses the Potṛ and directs the Praiṣa mantra that has the Maruts as deity. Then the Potṛ recites the mantra related to the Maruts (the second Ṛk), the meaning being that the Marut deities should come with the Ṛtu deity and drink Soma.

Likewise for the recitation of the third mantra the Praiṣa mantra is addressed to the Neṣṭṛ. The Neṣṭṛ recites the mantra having Tvaṣṭā as deity. The fourth mantra, with Agni as deity, is recited by the Āgnīdhra; the fifth, with Indra as deity, by the priest called Brahman; the sixth, with Mitra-Varuṇa as deity (the Praśāstārau), by the Maitrāvaruṇa, who performs the oblation. The seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth mantras have Draviṇodāḥ as deity. Of these the seventh Ṛk is recited by the Hotṛ, the eighth by the Potṛ, the ninth by the Neṣṭṛ, and the tenth by the priest called Acchāvāka. In all four of these mantras the plural of the word Ṛtu, ऋतुभिः (ṛtubhiḥ), is used. The eleventh and twelfth mantras are recited by the Hotṛ himself. The deities of the eleventh are the Aśvins, and of the twelfth Agni (called Gṛhapati). In these last two Ṛks too the singular ऋतुना (ṛtunā) is used. The following table makes this clear.

(Table; the heading of its columns reads: mantra number; the Praiṣa mantra; the priest addressed; the deity of the mantra; the Ṛtu deity; the reciter.)

No.	Praiṣa mantra	Priest addressed	Deity of the mantra	Ṛtu deity
1	the priest called Maitrāvaruṇa	Hotṛ	Indra	Madhu (Ṛtu)

6	,,	Praśāstṛ (Maitrāvaruṇa)	Mitrāvaruṇau	Nabhasyaḥ (Ṛtu)
7	,,	Hotṛ	Draviṇodāḥ	Ṛtavaḥ (Iṣaḥ)
8	,,	Potṛ	,,	,, (Ūrjaḥ)
9	,,	Neṣṭṛ	,,	,, (Sahaḥ)

11	,,	Adhvaryu	Aśvinau	Ṛtu (Tapaḥ)
12	,,	Gṛhapati	Agniḥ	Ṛtu (Tapasyaḥ)

Here the words Madhu, Mādhava and the like indicate the names of the months Caitra, Vaiśākha and so on. Each month, Madhu and the rest, is indicated together with each deity, Indra and the rest, as the Ṛtu-accompanied deity of the respective mantra. Because the plural ऋतुगळु (ṛtugaḷu) is used with the deity Draviṇodāḥ (Ṛtavaḥ), the four months Iṣa, Ūrja, Sahaḥ and Sahasyaḥ may have been indicated as the Ṛtu deities.

p. 310

For the deity Draviṇodāḥ, after Soma has been offered from the vessels of the priests Hotṛ, Potṛ and Neṣṭṛ as stated in Ṛks 7, 8, 9, it is said that from the tenth mantra the Hotṛ offers Soma from the fourth vessel (turīya). This fourth vessel is called अमर्त्यं (amartyaṃ) (immortal, deathless). In the eleventh mantra the Aśvins are prayed to drink Soma from the Adhvaryu's vessel, and in the twelfth Agni from the Gṛhapati (Gārhapatya) vessel, together with the Ṛtu deities (Tapaḥ and Tapasyaḥ).

The twelve mantras that direct the Ṛtuyāja oblation are given in Ṛg. Saṃ. 1-15. That sūkta has 12 Ṛks, and these twelve Ṛks explain the twelve Ṛtuyāja mantras as described above. In the present context, that is in the second Maṇḍala, if the 36th and 37th sūktas, of six Ṛks each, are put together, there are 12 Ṛtuyāja mantras: the mantras 1-6 of the Ṛtuyāja oblation are stated in the 36th sūkta and mantras 7-12 in the 37th. The 36th sūkta belongs to the preceding adhyāya; there no special explanation concerning the Ṛtuyāja was given. In the introduction to the 37th sūkta in this adhyāya all these matters are explained.

Now the matters concerning the Ṛtuyāja oblations explained in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa are explained here:

> प्राणा वा ऋतुयाजास्तद्यदृतुयाजैश्चरंति प्राणानेव तद्यजमाने दधति ।
> prāṇā vā ṛtuyājāstadyadṛtuyājaiścaraṃti prāṇāneva tadyajamāne dadhati |

The oblations made to the deities presiding over the Ṛtus, Madhu, Mādhava and the rest, are called Ṛtuyāja. The Ṛtuyājas are of the nature of the vital breaths; here "breath" means prāṇa, apāna and vyāna. By performing these Ṛtuyāja oblations it becomes possible for the vital breaths to stay firmly in the sacrificer who performs the sacrifice. If a man is to live long, the breaths must stay firmly in him; if they leave the body and go out, death occurs. Therefore there is the Vedic sentence of prayer, प्राणापानौ मृत्योर्मा पातं प्राणापानौ मा मा हासिष्टं (prāṇāpānau mṛtyormā pātaṃ prāṇāpānau mā mā hāsiṣṭaṃ) (Tai. Saṃ. 3-1-7-1): "May the prāṇa and apāna that dwell in me protect me from death; may they not leave me." So that the vital breaths may stay firmly in the sacrificer and he may be long-lived, these oblations called Ṛtuyāja are made. These Ṛtuyājas, or Ṛtugrahas, are twelve. Among them the first six have some special features; these will be explained here —

p. 311

Running head: Ṛgvedasaṃhitā, Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 1, p. 311 (the first abbreviation is printed "ఱ." as supplied).

(Fixes in kn.md by the translator: prose lines un-quoted from the > blocks and the Brāhmaṇa quotations made separate Sanskrit blocks; the first word of the first quotation is garbled in the supplied text and is marked [?].)

The Brāhmaṇa passage continues (the opening word of the quotation is garbled in the supplied text [?]; the sense is that the six oblations with the singular ṛtunā are offered as the breath):

> हळ् [?] ऋतूनेति यजंति प्राणमेव तद्यजमाने दधति ।
> haḷ [?] ṛtūneti yajaṃti prāṇameva tadyajamāne dadhati |

In the sacrifice the Adhvaryu tells the Maitrāvaruṇa to recite the Praiṣa mantra. Then the Maitrāvaruṇa addresses the six priests beginning with the Hotṛ (Hotṛ, Potṛ, Neṣṭṛ, Āgnīdhra, Brahman and Maitrāvaruṇa) by the Praiṣa mantra and directs that each of them recite one Yājyā mantra, six mantras in all, and make the oblation. Accordingly these priests recite the six mantras in which the singular of the word Ṛtu is used ("may he drink Soma with the Ṛtu"), invite Indra and the other deities together with the Ṛtu deities to drink the Soma, and make the oblation. These six Ṛtuyāja oblations are of the nature of the breath prāṇa. (Here prāṇa means drawing the outer air into the body, that is, taking the breath in.) By making these six oblations, which are of the nature of prāṇa, the Hotṛ and the other priests cause the prāṇa to stand firm in the sacrificer.

> चत्वार ऋतुभिरिति यजंत्यपानमेव तद्यजमाने दधति ।
> catvāra ṛtubhiriti yajaṃtyapānameva tadyajamāne dadhati |

Now the special matter of mantras 7 to 10 is explained. In the same order as before, the Maitrāvaruṇa, commanded by the Adhvaryu, indicates through Praiṣa mantras to the Hotṛ and the other priests that the four mantras from the seventh to the tenth, which have Draviṇodas as deity and in which the plural of the word Ṛtu is used ("with the Ṛtus, Soma"), are to be recited and the oblations made. Accordingly the Hotṛ and the others make four oblations. These four oblations are of the nature of the breath apāna. (Apāna means letting the air in the body out, breathing out.) By making these four oblations, which are of the nature of apāna, the Hotṛ and the others cause the apāna to dwell in the sacrificer.

> द्विर्यतुनेत्युपरिष्पाद्वा नमेव [?] तद्यजमाने दधति ।

> dviryatunetyuparişpādvā nameva [?] tadyajamāne dadhati |

Now mantras 11 and 12 are explained. As before, the Maitrāvaruṇa, commanded by the Adhvaryu, recites the Praiṣa mantra addressed to the Adhvaryu and the sacrificer. Hearing that Praiṣa mantra, the Adhvaryu and the sacrificer recite the two mantras with the Aśvins and Agni (printed "అగ్ని", as supplied) as deities, which have the singular use "with the Ṛtu, Soma", and make the oblations. These two oblations are of the nature of vyāna (vyāna means the air in the body that pervades the whole body and moves about in it). By making these oblations the Adhvaryu and the sacrificer cause all the priests to make the vyāna breath stand firm in the sacrificer. This procedure, that is, the Adhvaryu's telling the Maitrāvaruṇa to recite the Praiṣa mantra and so on —

p. 312

Running head: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṇḍala 2, Anuvāka 4, Sūkta 37, p. 312 (as supplied).

the sage Āpastamba has described in this way:

> ऋतुना प्रेष्यति त्रिष्टाद्येष्टध्वर्युः संप्रेष्य– त्येवं प्रतिप्रस्थाता पात्रयोर्मुखे पर्यावृत्यर्तुभिः प्रेष्यति द्वयोरध्वर्यु– रेवं प्रतिप्रस्थाता पुनः पर्यावृत्यर्तुना प्रेष्यति सकृदध्वर्यवं प्रतिप्रस्थाता ।

> ṛtunā preṣyati triṣṭādyeṣṭadhvaryuḥ saṃpreṣya- tyevaṃ pratiprasthātā pātrayormukhe paryāvṛtyartubhiḥ preṣyati dvayoradhvaryu- revaṃ pratiprasthātā punaḥ paryāvṛtyartunā preṣyati sakṛdadhvaryarvaṃ pratiprasthātā |

(The Sanskrit above is the sūtra as supplied; its sense follows from the explanation just given: the Adhvaryu sends the Maitrāvaruṇa with the singular ṛtunā, the Pratiprasthātā turns to the vessels and uses the plural ṛtubhiḥ for two, and then again the singular, once.) This is what he has said. Thus, regarding the reciting [?] of the first six mantras with the singular of the word Ṛtu, then of mantras 7 to 10 with the plural, and then of mantras 11 and 12 again with the singular, there is this sentence of the Taittirīya Saṃhitā:

> ऋतुना प्रेष्यति षट्कत्व आह षड्वा ऋतव ऋतूनेव प्रीणाति ऋतुभिरिति चतुश्चतुष्पद एव पशून्प्रीणाति द्विः पुनर्यतुनाह द्विपद एव प्रीणाति ॥

> ṛtunā preṣyati ṣaṭkatva āha ṣaḍvā ṛtava ṛtūneva prīṇāti ṛtubhiriti catuścatuṣpada eva paśūnprīṇāti dviḥ punaryatunāha dvipada eva prīṇāti ‖

Gist: with the singular "with the Ṛtu" six times he says it, for there are six Ṛtus, so he pleases the Ṛtus; with "with the Ṛtus" four-footed beasts are pleased; "again twice with the Ṛtu" pleases the two-footed.

> स वा आयं प्राणस्त्रेधा विहितः प्राणोपानो व्यान इति तद्यदृतुन ऋतुभि– र्यतुनेति यजंति प्राणानां संतत्यै प्राणानामव्यवच्छेदाय ।

This breath, the prāṇa, is of three kinds: prāṇa, apāna and vyāna. Prāṇa means drawing the outer air into the body; apāna means letting out the air that is within the body; vyāna means the air that pervades all parts of the body and moves about in it. These twelve Ṛtuyāja oblations are divided into three groups. In the first group, mantras 1 to 6 (six) are used with the singular "with the Ṛtu" (ṛtunā) and offered; thereby the prāṇa stands firm in the body of the sacrificer. In the second group, mantras 7 to 10 (four) are used with the plural "with the Ṛtus" (ṛtubhiḥ) and offered; thereby the apāna stands firm. In the third group are mantras 11 and 12 (two mantras); these are again offered with the singular ṛtunā; thereby the vyāna stands firm in the body. Thus by dividing the twelve Ṛtuyājas as 6+4+2=12 into three groups and offering them, one helps the three kinds of breath, prāṇa, apāna and vyāna, to stay firm in the body of the sacrificer, and to be without interruption so that they do not depart.

Running head: Ṛgvedasaṃhitā, Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 1, p. 313 (the first abbreviation is printed "అ." as supplied).

The Ṛtuyāja oblations are of the nature of the breath. (This matter is also stated in the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa 13-9 and the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa 8-7.) As we know from everyday experience, the Ṛtus, spring and the rest, have no end: as one ends, another follows, one after the other, in an unbroken succession. After the six Ṛtus, Vasanta, Grīṣma, Varṣā, Śarad, Hemanta and Śiśira, are over, spring and the rest begin again. For them there is no break. Therefore, when the Hotṛ recites the Yājyā mantras in the Ṛtuyāja oblations, he must not pronounce the vaṣaṭkāra at the end of the mantra. Since the Ṛtus come by a cyclic change, one after another, there is no end to them; therefore it is said that the vaṣaṭkāra must not be recited in the oblation. If it were recited, the cyclic order of the Ṛtus would be broken, and as a result illness, poverty and other sorrows would come to the sacrificer. Therefore, so that sorrow and poverty may not befall the sacrificer, the Yājyā mantras in the Ṛtuyāja oblations must not be offered with the vaṣaṭkāra.

(The supplied text prints, as plain lines between the end of this passage and the Saṃhitā, the usual sūkta heading lines; they are summarised in the next paragraph.)

द्रविणोदाः (draviṇodāḥ) — Yāska has written a detailed explanation of this word:

> द्रविणोदाः । द्रविणोदाः कस्माद्धनं द्रविणमुच्यते । यदेनदभिद्रवंति । बलं वा द्रविणं यदेनेनाभिद्रवंति । तस्य दाता द्रविणोदाः ॥

> draviṇodāḥ | draviṇodāḥ kasmāddhanaṃ draviṇamucyate | yadenadabhidravaṃti | balaṃ vā draviṇaṃ yadenenābhidravaṃti | tasya dātā draviṇodāḥ ||

(Ni. 8-1)

Here the derivation of the word द्रविणोदाः (draviṇodāḥ) is "one who gives draviṇa". The word द्रविण (draviṇa) has two meanings, wealth and strength. Therefore द्रविणोदाः (draviṇodāḥ) means one who gives wealth or strength. This is the meaning of the parts of the word. Besides this, Yāska gives the following explanation (nirvacana) of the Ṛk beginning द्रविणोदाः (draviṇodāḥ):

> द्रविणोदा यस्त्वं । द्रविणस इति द्रविणसादिन इति वा द्रविणसानिन इति वा द्रविणसस्तस्मात् पिबत्विति वा । यज्ञेषु देवमीळते । याचंति स्तुवंति, वर्धयंति पूजयंतीति वा ॥

> draviṇodā yastvaṃ | draviṇasa iti draviṇasādina iti vā draviṇasānina iti vā draviṇasastasmāt pibatviti vā | yajñeṣu devamīḷate | yācaṃti stuvaṃti, vardhayaṃti pūjayaṃtīti vā ||

That is: the priests who desire wealth, oblations and the like pray to you, called Draviṇodas, to drink the Soma in the sacrifices; this is the main sense. Although द्रविणोदाः (draviṇodāḥ) here is a nominative singular, how does it qualify the accusative singular देवं (devaṃ)? The words must be supplied so that the sense becomes: द्रविणोदा यः देवः तं देवं (draviṇodā yaḥ devaḥ taṃ devaṃ), "that god who is the giver of wealth". Of द्रविणसः (draviṇasaḥ) many meanings can be given: they ask for wealth or oblations for the worship of the deities, they praise, they worship.

> तत्कथा द्रविणोदा इंद्र इति क्रौष्टुकिः । स बलधनयोर्दात्तमस्तस्य च सर्वा बलकृतिः ॥

> tatkathā draviṇodā iṃdra iti krauṣṭukiḥ | sa baladhanayordāttamastasya ca sarvā balakṛtiḥ ||

The word द्रविणोदाः (draviṇodāḥ) has now been explained by the meaning of its parts. But who is this deity Draviṇodas? It is Indra who is called Draviṇodas, because Indra is the one who gives in the highest degree strength and wealth, which the word द्रविण (draviṇa) denotes; therefore Indra himself should be called Draviṇodas. This is the opinion of one called Krauṣṭuki.

> अथाप्यग्निं द्रविणोदसमाहैष पुनरेतस्माज्जायते । यो अत्मनोरंतरग्निं जजान इत्यपि निगमो भवति ॥

> athāpyagniṃ draviṇodasamāhaiṣa punaretasmājjāyate | yo atmanoraṃtaragniṃ jajāna ityapi nigamo bhavati ‖

Besides this, he gives another meaning for this word: Indra created heaven and earth, and in the middle of them he also created Agni; therefore the word द्रविणोदाः (draviṇodāḥ) may also be said to mean Agni. To support this meaning he has given as an example the Ṛk "अश्मनोरंतरग्निं जजान (aśmanoraṃtaragniṃ jajāna)" (the quoted Nirukta text above reads अत्मनोरंतरग्निं जजान (atmanoraṃtaragniṃ jajāna); the two readings differ in the supplied text, noted as supplied).

> अथाप्यतुयाजेषु द्रविणोदसाः प्रवादा भवंति । तेषां पुनः पात्रस्येंद्र– पानमिति भवति ॥ अथाप्येनं सोमपानेन स्तौति । अथाप्याह द्रविणोदाः पिबतु द्रविणोदस इति ॥

> athāpyatuyājeṣu draviṇodasāḥ pravādā bhavaṃti | teṣāṃ punaḥ pātrasyeṃdra- pānamiti bhavati ‖ athāpyenaṃ somapānena stauti | athāpyāha draviṇodāḥ pibatu draviṇodasa iti ‖

In the sacrifices addressed to the Ṛtus, it is said that Indra drinks Soma from the vessel in the hands of the priests, and Indra is praised with mantras connected with Soma-drinking; hence there is a custom of calling the priests Draviṇodasas. All this is the opinion of Krauṣṭuki.

> अयमेवाग्निर्द्रविणोदा इति शाकपूणिः अग्नेयेष्टेव हि सूक्तेषु द्रवि होदसाः प्रवादा भवंति ॥

> ayamevāgnirdraviṇodā iti śākapūṇiḥ agneyeṣṭeva hi sūkteṣu dravi hodasāḥ pravādā bhavaṃti ‖

Agni himself is Draviṇodas, according to Śākapūṇi; for in the hymns related to Agni the priests, when praising Agni, use the word द्रविणोदाः (draviṇodāḥ) as an epithet of Agni. (In the block the supplied text breaks the word at the line end as द्रवि (dravi) / होदसाः (hodasāḥ), as supplied.)

> यथो एतत्स बलधनयोर्दातृतम इति सर्वासु देवतास्वैश्वर्यं विद्यते यथो " एतदोजसोजातमुतमन्य एनं " इति चाहेत्ययमप्यग्नि– रोजसा बलेन मध्यमानो जायते तस्मादेनमाह सहसस्पुत्रं सहसः सूनुं सहसो यहुं ॥

> yatho etatsa baladhanayordātṛtama iti sarvāsu devatāsvaiśvaryaṃ vidyate yatho " etadojasojātamutamanya enaṃ " iti cāhetyayamapyagni-rojasā balena madhyamāno jāyate tasmādenamāha sahasasputraṃ sahasaḥ sūnuṃ sahaso yahuṃ ॥

Lordship exists in all the deities; therefore Agni also gives strength and wealth, and because he gives strength and wealth Agni too may be called Draviṇodas. Moreover the word द्रविण (draviṇa) means strength. Because Agni is generated by churning with force (strongly), there is a tradition that Agni was born of strength. Therefore Agni is praised with the words सहसस्पुत्रं (sahasasputraṃ) (Sahasaḥ — of strength, putraṃ — the son, Agni), सहसः सूनुं (sahasaḥ sūnuṃ), सहसो यहुं (sahaso yahuṃ) —

> द्रव्यः सर्पिरासुतिः प्रत्नो होता वरेण्यः । सहसस्पुत्रो अद्भुतः ॥

> dravyaḥ sarpirāsutiḥ pratno hotā vareṇyaḥ | sahasasputro adbhutaḥ ‖

p. 317

Running head: Ṛgvedasaṃhitā, Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 1, p. 317.

> त्वं ह यद्यविष्ठ्य सहसःसूनवाहुत । यता वा यज्ञियो भुवः ॥

> tvaṃ ha yadyaviṣṭhya sahasaḥsūnavāhuta | yatā vā yajñiyo bhuvaḥ ‖

(Ma. Saṃ. 8-75-3)

> अग्ने वाजस्य गोमत ईशानः सहसो यहो । अस्मे धेहि जातवेदो महि श्रवः ॥

> agne vājasya gomata īśānaḥ sahaso yaho | asme dhehi jātavedo mahi śravaḥ ‖

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-79-4)

In these Ṛks the words सहसस्पुत्र (sahasasputra), सहसः सूनु (sahasaḥ sūnu) and सहसो यहु (sahaso yahu) respectively are used when praising Agni. Therefore, although other deities too are givers of strength, it is Agni in particular who is denoted by the word द्रविणोदाः (draviṇodāḥ).

Here let us take up the statements of the Bṛhaddevatā and see to which deity this epithet chiefly belongs, and what qualities of that deity are learned from it. The Bṛhaddevatā first explains the derivation of the word अग्नि (agni) and then considers why the epithet द्रविणोदाः (draviṇodāḥ) is applied to Agni.

(Bṛ. De. 2-24)

Because he is born first of all beings, because he is the leader (the one who conducts) in sacrifices and rites, and because whatever thing he enters he makes it merge into himself, he is praised by the sages as Agni. This derivation agrees with the derivations stated in the Nirukta: अग्रणीर्भवति अग्रं यज्ञेषु प्रणीयते, अंगं नयति सन्नममानः (agraṇīrbhavati agraṃ yajñeṣu praṇīyate, aṃgaṃ nayati sannamamānaḥ) (Ni. 7-14). After explaining the word Agni, it states the derivation of the word द्रविणोदाः (draviṇodāḥ):

> द्रविणं धनं बलं वापि प्रायच्छद्येन कर्मणा । तत्कर्म दृष्ट्वा कुत्सस्तु प्राहैनं द्रविणोदसं ॥
> draviṇaṃ dhanaṃ balaṃ vāpi prāyacchadyena karmaṇā | tatkarma dṛṣṭvā kutsastu prāhainaṃ draviṇodasaṃ ‖

(Bṛ. De. 2-25)

The sage Kutsa, having observed the deeds of Agni, who gives wealth and strength generously, praised Agni as द्रविणोदाः (draviṇodāḥ), the giver of wealth or of strength.

> द्रविणोदा द्रविणसस्तुरस्य द्रविणोदाः सनरस्य प्र यंसत् । द्रविणोदा वीरवतीमिषं नो द्रविणोदा रासशे दीर्घमायुः ॥

> draviṇodā draviṇasasturasya draviṇodāḥ sanarasya pra yaṃsat |
> draviṇodā vīravatīmiṣaṃ no draviṇodā rāsaśe dīrghamāyuḥ ||

(Ma. Saṃ. 1-96-8)

Having thus pointed to Kutsa's praise of Agni in this Ṛk, the Bṛhaddevatā again maintains that this indication belongs to the deity Agni and is not meant for other deities:

> अयं हि द्रविणोदोऽग्निरयं दाता बलस्य हि । जायते च बलेनायं मध्यकृत्यृषिभिरध्वरे ॥
> द्रविणोदोऽग्निरेवायं द्रविणोदास्तदोच्यते । आग्नेयेष्टेव दृश्यंते प्रवादा द्रविणोदसः ॥

> ayaṃ hi draviṇodo 'gnirayaṃ dātā balasya hi | jāyate ca balenāyaṃ
> madhyakṛtyṛṣibhiradhvare || draviṇodo 'gnirevāyaṃ
> draviṇodāstadocyate | āgneyeṣṭeva dṛśyaṃte pravādā draviṇodasaḥ ||

(Bṛ. De. 3-61; 3-65)

Because Agni is the giver of wealth, the giver of strength, and born of strength, the praise द्रविणोदाः (draviṇodāḥ) is fitting for him. Hence the authors of the Bṛhaddevatā maintain that this epithet belongs to the deity Agni.

अंधसः (aṃdhasaḥ): of the Soma, which is the food of the gods. The word अंधः (aṃdhaḥ) is read among the names of food (Ni. 3-9). Soma is said to be the food of the gods; therefore the word अंधसः (aṃdhasaḥ) means the Soma juice in the form of food. Besides, the word अंधः (aṃdhaḥ) in the Ṛgveda generally denotes the Soma juice.

होत्रात् अनु जोषं मंदस्व (hotrāt anu joṣaṃ maṃdasva): here the word होत्रात् (hotrāt) means "from the sacrifice performed by the Hotṛ", that is, offered in the sacrifice performed by the priest called Hotṛ. The sense is that the deity (Draviṇodas) drinks the Soma juice which the Hotṛ offers into the fire as an oblation addressed to him, and is satisfied.

अध्वर्यवः (adhvaryavaḥ): O Adhvaryus, the priests called Adhvaryu. In a sacrifice the parts of the Hotṛ and the Adhvaryu are the chief ones. The Hotṛ recites the mantras suited to each moment in order to invoke the gods; the Adhvaryu performs the oblations and other rites in accordance with those mantras. Hence the Śruti statement अध्वर्युर्वा ऋत्विजां प्रथमो युज्यते (adhvaryurvā ṛtvijāṃ prathamo yujyate): among the priests the Adhvaryu is the chief.

The word अध्वर (adhvara) means a sacrifice that produces an imperishable fruit. In the Nirukta: अध्वर इति येज्ञनाम ध्वरतिर्हिंसा कर्म तत्प्रतिषेधः (adhvara iti yèjñanāma dhvaratirhiṃsā karma tatpratiṣedhaḥ) (Ni. 1-8): the word अध्वर (adhvara) conveys the meaning "sacrifice"; the roots ध्वरति (dhvarati) and धूर्वति (dhūrvati) convey the meaning of doing harm; therefore Yāska has given the word अध्वर (adhvara), formed from those roots, the meaning "a rite without harm". Further, the word अध्वर (adhvara) is stated both among the sixteen names of the atmosphere (Ni. 2-10) and among the fifteen names of sacrifice (Ni. 3-19). Therefore, for the word अध्वर्यु (adhvaryu) —

Running head: Ṛgvedasaṃhitā, Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 1, p. 319.

> अध्वर्युरध्वरयुरध्वरं युनक्त्यध्वरस्य नेताध्वरं – कामयत इति वा । अपि वाधीयाने युरुपबंधः अध्वर इति यज्ञनाम । ध्वरतिर्हिंसाकर्म तत्प्रतिषेधः ॥

> adhvaryuradhvarayuradhvaraṃ yunaktyadhvarasya netādhvaraṃ - kāmayata iti vā | api vādhīyāne yurupabaṃdhaḥ adhvara iti yajñanāma | dhvaratirhiṃsākarma tatpratiṣedhaḥ ||

the derivation is thus given. That is, in the word अध्वरयु (adhvarayu) the vowel a in the letter ra is dropped and it becomes अध्वर्यु (adhvaryu). The one who joins (brings together) the sacrificial work: that is, he has the rites that should take place at each time performed by the respective priests and so carries the sacrifice through. Or he looks after the sacrifice so that it is completed with all its parts. Or the meaning is given as "one who desires the sacrifice".

अध्वर्यवः सः पूर्णां असिचं वष्टि (adhvaryavaḥ saḥ pūrṇāṃ asicaṃ vaṣṭi): O Adhvaryus, that god called Draviṇodas desires the oblation of full Soma juice. Therefore offer the Soma oblation into the fire for Draviṇodas: thus the sacrificer addresses the priests called Adhvaryus.

तस्मै एतं भरत तद्वशः ददिः (tasmai etaṃ bharata tadvaśaḥ dadiḥ): O Adhvaryus, bear (that is, offer) this oblation of Soma juice to that Draviṇodas. Pleased with that Soma, Draviṇodas will give you your desired ends.

द्रविणोदः होत्रात् ऋतुभिः सोमं पिब (draviṇodaḥ hotrāt ṛtubhiḥ somaṃ piba): in this sentence the sacrificer addresses Draviṇodas himself and prays: O Draviṇodas, in this sacrifice (or oblation) performed by the priest called Hotṛ, drink the Soma juice together with the Ṛtu deities who preside over the months of Iṣa (Āśvayuja). In the same way, in the next Ṛk the prayer is made in the sacrifice of the priest called Potṛ, in the Ṛk after that in the sacrifice of the priest called Neṣṭṛ, and in the Ṛk after that it is prayed that the Soma in the fourth vessel be drunk together with the Ṛtu deities.

O Draviṇodas, you whom I formerly invoked with prayer in the Soma sacrifice performed by the Hotṛ, that same you I now call in the sacrifice performed by the Potṛ as well. You, renowned as Draviṇodas, are worthy of invocation. For that god who is renowned as the giver of desired ends, an oblation consisting of Soma and intoxicating has been brought by the Adhvaryus. O Draviṇodas, in the sacrifice performed by the Potṛ, drink the Soma together with the deities called Ūrja.

He, whom I formerly invoked, and whom I now invoke, is verily worthy of invocation, for he is renowned as a benefactor: the Soma libation has been brought by thc [sic] priests : drink, Dravinodas, along with the Ritus, the Soma, the offering of the Potri.

Now in the Soma sacrifice performed by the priest called Potṛ also, I invite you to come to the sacrificial ground with the deities presiding over the month called Ūrja (Kārttika) and drink the Soma juice.

सः इत् हव्यः उ (saḥ it havyaḥ u) — That Draviṇodas is worthy to be invited for drinking Soma. This fact is well known.

prepared for you and placed on the sacrificial altar, together with the deities presiding over the month Ūrja (Kārttika): such is the sacrificer's prayer stated here.

The particles इत् (it) and उ (u) are used to fill out the pāda. Yāska has said अथापि पदपूरण इदमु तदु (athāpi padapūraṇa idamu tadu) (Ni. 1-5) [reference as printed], and Durgācārya, the commentator on the Nirukta, also says उकारः पडपूरणः (ukāraḥ paḍapūraṇaḥ) [sic, as supplied].

द्रविणोदः येभिः ईयसे ते वह्नयः मेद्यंतु (draviṇodaḥ yebhiḥ īyase te vahnayaḥ medyaṃtu) — the supplied text then adds a Sanskrit explanation (the words of Sāyaṇa's gloss, not repeated here). Kannada explanation: O Draviṇodas, the officiating priests who bring you, born in the fire-sticks (araṇis), to the sacrificial altar: may they be satisfied; thus the prayer is made.

Yāska has given an etymology for this passage (Ni. 8-3): वेद्यंतु ते वह्नयो वोढारो (vedyaṃtu te vahnayo voḍhāro) [as supplied; the quotation continues over several lines through वनस्पत इत्येन (vanaspata ityena) ... पिबर्तुभिः (pibartubhiḥ) and is not retyped here; its words as supplied are in the Kannada file].

According to this etymology the word medyantu is derived from the root इम्मिदा (immidā) [as supplied], "to be affectionate"; मेद्यंतु (medyaṃtu) is the third person plural imperative: "let them rejoice, let them be satisfied". Vahnayaḥ means "bearers" (the supplied text has प्रोढारः (proḍhāraḥ)): the word vahni is formed from the root vah, meaning "to carry, to bear, to reach", so vahnayaḥ means those who carry. The word can also mean a horse that bears a burden; here it is used in the sense of the priests who carry Agni (Draviṇodas). Ariṣaṇyat means "not harming, not being harmed", an epithet of Agni. Dhṛṣṇu is generally "one who destroys enemies".

Dhiṣṇya, dhiṣaṇya: dhiṣaṇā means speech (vāk). Because the Hotṛ sits near the deity and praises him in verses of praise, dhiṣṇya means "one who is praised". Or, according to धीसादिनीति वा धीसानिनीति वा (dhīsādinīti vā dhīsāninīti vā): dhīḥ means understanding or ritual work (sacrificial work), and since he is reached by understanding or ritual work he is dhiṣṇya; or since understanding or ritual work resides in him, or he gives them to those who worship him, the word dhiṣṇya may be so derived. Dhiṣṇya may also mean sacrificial work or the sacrificial ground. Here the prayer is that Soma be drunk in the sacrifice performed by the priest called Neṣṭṛ.

Vanaspate is a vocative addressed to Agni. How is Agni called by the name vanaspati? Yāska says (as supplied): एष हि वनानां पाता ना पालयिता वा (eṣa hi vanānāṃ pātā nā pālayitā vā) [sic, as supplied; nā for vā?] — the passage goes on to say that, although Agni is within the forest trees and able to burn them, he does not burn them, and so is their protector. The word vana is derived from a root meaning "to be, to dwell". Here vanaspati means the lord or protector of trees: Agni, though dwelling within trees, does not burn them but guards them, and is therefore called vanaspati, protector of trees.

ऋतुभिः—कालैः (ṛtubhiḥ—kālaiḥ): ṛtus are definite periods of time. If a year is divided into six equal parts, each part, containing two months, indicates a fixed period of time; such a period is described by the word ṛtu.

Gist: This verse belongs to the Acchāvāka. Draviṇodas, who drank Soma at the Hotṛ's, Potṛ's and Neṣṭṛ's sacrifices, is asked to drink the unstrained, immortal Soma in the fourth cup.

Yaḥ — which Draviṇodas. Hotrāt — in the sacrifice performed by the Hotṛ. Apāt — drank the Soma. Uta — and. Potrāt — in the sacrifice performed by the Potṛ. Amatta — was satisfied with drinking Soma. Uta — and. Neṣṭrāt — in the sacrifice performed by the Neṣṭṛ. Hitaṃ — offered. Prayaḥ — food-like for the gods, the Soma. Ajuṣata — enjoyed. (Saḥ — that Draviṇodas.) Draviṇodasaḥ — is for the priests who offer wealth in the form of oblations. Draviṇodāḥ — the same god. Amṛktaṃ — unhurt. Amartyaṃ — free of death. Turīyaṃ pātraṃ — contained in the fourth cup, the Soma. Pibatu — let him drink. (Spellings ಆಪಾತ್, ಆಮತ್ತ, ತುರಿಯಂ, ನೇಷ್ಟೃಕರ್ತಕವಾದ, ಅನ್ನ ಪ್ರಾಯದುದೂ kept as supplied.)

The Draviṇodas who drank Soma in the sacrifice performed by the Hotṛ, was satisfied by drinking Soma in the sacrifice performed by the Potṛ, and enjoyed the Soma offered in the sacrifice performed by the Neṣṭṛ, which is like food for the gods, is there for the priests who offer wealth in the form of oblations. Let that same god drink the Soma that is unhurt, free of death and contained in the fourth cup.

Printed English translation

Whether he has drink [sic] the Soma from the offering of the Hotri ; whether he has been exhilarated by the offering of the Potri ; whether he has been pleased with the (sacrificial) food presented as the act of the Neshtri ; still let Dravinodas quaff the unstrained amborsial [sic] cup the forrth [sic] offered by the priest.

p. 326

In this Ṛk the priest called Maitrāvaruṇa speaks, addressing the priest called Acchāvāka. In the three preceding Ṛks Draviṇodas has been asked to drink the Soma offered in the sacrifices performed by the priests Hotṛ, Potṛ and Neṣṭṛ. The first half of this Ṛk states the same matter again. Now he is asked to drink the Soma that is in the fourth cup, offered by the priests.

तुरीयं पात्रं (turīyaṃ pātraṃ) — the Soma juice in the fourth cup. What has been said up to now is, in order, the Soma juice in the three cups of the priests Hotṛ, Potṛ and Neṣṭṛ; it is explained that the Soma juice offered by these priests is in the fourth cup.

अमृक्तं (amṛktaṃ) — > अमृष्टं, अशुद्धं, अपूर्णमित्यर्थः ।

> amṛṣṭaṃ, aśuddhaṃ, apūrṇamityarthaḥ | O Draviṇodas, the Soma offered up to now by the priests Hotṛ, Potṛ and Neṣṭṛ is incomplete; that is, you have not been fully satisfied by drinking the Soma they offered. Therefore the intended sense is: drink the Soma juice in the fourth cup now offered by the priests and be satisfied.

अमर्त्यं (amartyaṃ) — > अमरणसाधनं । यत् पीत्वा न म्रियते । अमनुष्ययोग्यं ।

> amaraṇasādhanaṃ | yat pītvā na mriyate | amanuṣyayogyaṃ | "Preventing death", that is, one who drinks this Soma does not die. Therefore this divine Soma is not fit for human beings; it is fit for the gods and is like nectar (amṛta).

द्रविणोदसः (draviṇodasaḥ) — > हवीरूपद्रविणस्य प्रदातारः ।

> havīrūpadraviṇasya pradātāraḥ | The commentator explains it as the priests who offer oblations. Yāska also says: एतदग्निं द्रविणोदसमाहेत्यृत्विजोऽत्र द्रविणोदस उच्यंते हविषो दातारस्ते चैनं जनयंति ॥ > etadagniṃ draviṇodasamāhetyṛtvijoStra draviṇodasa ucyaṃte haviṣo dātāraste cainaṃ janayaṃti ‖ (Si. 8–2) [as supplied; the bhāṣya quotes this passage as Ni. 8–2] Thus he gives the etymology: Agni too is named Draviṇodas; because the priests offer oblations to that Agni, the priests also are called Draviṇodas.

O Aśvin gods, yoke and make ready, facing us, the car that moves about at this time of the sacrifice, that carries you the leaders, and that sets you down in this sacrifice of ours. Mix the oblations with sweet juice. After you have come here, O Aśvins, who give food and dwelling, drink the Soma juice.

Printed English translation

Yoke to-day, Ashwins, your rolling car, conveying (you), the leaders (of the rite) ; and setting you down before us : mix the oblations with the sweet juice : come, you are affluent with (abundant) food, and the Soma.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk the Aśvin gods are asked to come to the sacrificial ground and drink the Soma offered by the sacrificer and others.

> asminnahani yajñe vā ! "On this day, or in the sacrifice we are now performing", is the meaning.

नृवाहणं (nṛvāhaṇaṃ) — > नेत्रोर्युवयोर्वोढारं ।

> netroryuvayorvoḍhāraṃ | The meaning is: that which carries you two, the Aśvin gods, the leaders of men, to our sacrificial ground. This word is an epithet of the word rathaṃ.

इह नां विमोचनं रथं अर्वांचं युंजाथां (iha nāṃ vimocanaṃ rathaṃ arvāṃcaṃ yuṃjāthāṃ) [sic, as supplied; the Saṃhitā reads वां (vāṃ) for नां (nāṃ)] — > इह यज्ञे युवयोः > विमोचयितारं रथं यथा अर्वाक् भवति तथा युंजाथां ।

> iha yajñe yuvayoḥ vimocayitāraṃ rathaṃ yathā arvāk bhavati tathā yuṃjāthāṃ | O Aśvin gods, make ready, so that you come facing the sacrifice we are now performing and so that your car is brought and stopped before us and the horses unyoked; that is, turn your car towards the sacrifice so that it is convenient for it to come to our sacrificial ground, and yoke horses to your car so that this happens. This is the intended sense.

वाजिनीवसू (vājinīvasū) — the word वाजः (vājaḥ) is read among the names of food (Ni. 3-9). > अन्नेन > वासयितारौ बलवर्धनौ वा ।

> annena vāsayitārau balavardhanau vā | "Those who nourish by giving food and the like to those who serve them", or "those who increase strength or power", is the meaning.

O Aśvin gods, turn your car to face us and yoke the horses, so as to come to our sacrificial ground. Then come to our sacrificial ground and drink the sweet or tasty Soma juice. You are givers of food, or of strength, to those who worship you; such as you, drink Soma in our sacrifice. This is the main intention of this Ṛk.

Gist: O Agni, enjoy the fuel, the oblation, the prayer and the praise; desiring the great gods, drink the Soma together with the Ṛtu and all the gods.

Agni — O Agni. Samidham — the fuel. Joṣi — enjoy it and be satisfied. Āhutim — the oblation. Joṣi — enjoy. Brahma — the prayer in the form of a śastra. Janyam — as good for men. Joṣi — enjoy. Suṣṭutim — the excellent praise. Joṣi — enjoy. Vaso — O Agni, the abode of all. Uśataḥ — those who desire the oblation. Mahaḥ — and are endowed with great qualities. Viśvān devān — all the gods. Uśan — you who desire them. Ṛtunā — together with the deity named Tapasya. Viśvebhiḥ — together with all the gods. Haviḥ — the Soma in the form of the oblation. Pāyaya — drink.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Agni, enjoy the fuel, the oblation, the prayer in the form of a śastra, and the excellent praise, and be satisfied. Thereby make it good for men. O Agni, abode of all, you who desire all the gods, who wish for the oblation and are endowed with great qualities, drink the Soma in the form of the oblation together with the Ṛtu deity named Tapasya and with all the other gods.

Printed English translation

Be pleased, Agni, with the fuel ; be pleased with the oblation ; be pleased with the sacred prayer that is good for men ; be pleased with holy praise, asylum of all : Agni, willing (to accept oblations), render all the great gods desirous (of the same), and with them all, and with the Ritu drink the oblation.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk Agni is prayed to drink Soma. O Agni, enjoy the fuel sticks (pieces of wood) that we offer in the fire; enjoy the oblation (the offering) that we make; hear and be pleased with the śastra mantras that we recite; and listen with favour to the excellent praise that we utter to please you. Thus pleased, come with all the gods to the sacrificial ground and drink the Soma juice prepared for you, together with the deity presiding over the month Tapasya. This is the main purport of the Ṛk.

समिधं (samidhaṃ) — well-dried pieces of wood used for offering in the fire. These pieces should be about four fingers' breadth in length, with their tips, and should come from certain prescribed trees such as the Aśvattha and the Palāśa.

Anuvāda (Kannada). The sūkta beginning Udu ṣya is the sixth sūkta in the fourth anuvāka. It has eleven ṛks. Gṛtsamada is the seer of this sūkta; Savitṛ is the deity; the metre is triṣṭubh. The Anukramaṇikā says: "Udu ṣya, eleven, addressed to Savitṛ." In the Daśarātra sacrifice called Vyūḍha, on the sixth day, while reciting the Vaiśvadeva śastra mantras, this sūkta is applied for the nivid mantras addressed to Savitṛ, as explained by the sūtra "ṣaṣṭhasyodu ṣya deva iti gārtsamadam" in the section beginning "vyūḍhaś cet" of the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra (as printed, Ā. 8-8).

— Maṇḍala 2, Anuvāka 4, Sūkta 38; Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 2, 3 (as printed). Number of ṛks in the sūkta: 11. Seer: Gṛtsamada. Deity: Savitṛ. Metre: Triṣṭubh.

Gist: Savitṛ, the doer of the world's work and its bearer, rises daily for the world's generation, grants wealth to the praisers, and is asked to make the sacrificer share in lasting well-being.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

tadapāḥ — he who has the work of the creation of the world. vahniḥ — he who bears the burden of the world. syaḥ — the well-known. devaḥ — the shining. savitā — Savitṛ. savāya — for the generation of the world. śaśvattamaṃ — every day. ut asthāt — rises up, having dawned. nūnaṃ — certainly. devebhyaḥ — to the praisers. ratnaṃ — wealth. vi hi dhāti — he gives. atha — and. vītihotraṃ — the sacrificer who performs the sacrifice. svasau [?] — to well-being (the printed text reads स्वसौ (svasau); the Saṃhitā has svastau; the text after it, "ಅ" before abhajat, is garbled as supplied). abhajat — may he make a sharer.

Savitṛ, who has the work of the creation of the world, who bears the burden of the world, the well-known, the shining, rises up daily, having dawned, for the generation of the world, and is the giver of wealth to the praisers. In the same way, may he bring well-being to the sacrificer who performs the sacrifice.

Printed English translation

In truth, the divine Savitri, the bearer (of the world), has perpetually been present for the generation (of mankind), for such is his office: verily he grants wealth to the pious (worshippers): may he. therefore, bestow upon the offerer of the oblation (sufficient) for his well-being.

Note: the Pada reading given on p. 331 ends tattvāpasāḥ, while the Pratipadārtha and the bhāṣya here have tadapāḥ* / तदपाः (tadapāḥ); reported as supplied.*

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

devaḥ savitā — On the deity Savitṛ Yāska says: सविता सर्वस्य प्रसविता । आदित्योऽपि सवितोच्यते (savitā sarvasya prasavitā | ādityoSpi savitocyate) (Nirukta 10-31, 32, 33). That is: he who brings forth the whole world, the cause of the origin of all the world; the Āditya (the sun too) is also called Savitṛ. Thus he has given the etymology.

p. 333

Running head: Ṛgvedasaṃhitā, Aṣṭaka 2 (printed "ಅ."), Adhyāya 8, Varga 2, p. 333.

Eleven sūktas of the Ṛgveda, and parts of some other sūktas, praise the deity Savitṛ. The opinion of the commentators is that the sun just at the moment of rising is the deity Savitṛ, and afterwards it is the sun. Savitṛ is, for the most part, a deity of gold. His eye (Ṛ. S. 1-35-8), his hands (1-35-9, 10), his tongue (6-71-3) and all his other limbs are described as golden. His chariot too is golden (1-35-2, 5).

The radiance of the god Savitṛ is immense. His golden light spreads over and illumines the whole world. He raises his golden arms and wakes all the living beings that were sleeping in the night (2-38-2; 4-53-3, 4; 6-71-1, 5; 7-45-2). Seated in his golden chariot he goes along looking over all creatures (1-35-2, 3). Shining with the sun's rays, Savitṛ of yellow-brown hair sends forth his light constantly from the eastern quarter (10-139-1). He goes round three times the three upper regions that light up the atmosphere and the sky (4-53-5); he is the one who gives the gods immortality and men long life (4-54-2). Just as the sun is prayed to, so Savitṛ is prayed to for the removal of bad dreams (5-82-4) and for release from sin (4-54-3). Water and wind are subject to his rule (2-38-2). The other deities follow his lead (5-81-3). Indra, Mitra, Varuṇa, Aryaman, Rudra and others cannot resist his determination or his independence (2-38-7, 9; 5-83-2). The Vasus, Aditi, Varuṇa, Mitra and Aryaman praise his fame (7-38-3, 4). Like Pūṣan and Sūrya, Savitṛ is the lord of things moving and unmoving (4-53-6). All things desired by everyone are under his control. He himself, being in heaven, earth and sky, brings about what is auspicious (1-24-3; 2-28-11); like the other deities he too is the support of the sky (4-53-2; 10-149-4), the support of the whole world

(4-54-4); he has bound the earth with bonds and set it to stand firm, and he has made the sky stand in the intervening space that has no beams or supports (10-149-1).

Because Savitṛ is the maker of rain, and because his path lies in the atmosphere, he is spoken of as a deity of the middle region. In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (Ś. Brā. 12-3-5-1) the view is expressed that Savitṛ and Prajāpati are one and the same deity. In the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa (1-6-4-1) it is said that Prajāpati himself, as Savitṛ, created the creatures (the printed text reads प्रजाप्रतिये (prajāpratiye) [?], presumably for prajāpati; the opening bracket of the reference is missing in the print). In the Ṛk 3-62-10 it is said that, having meditated on the vigour and greatness of Savitṛ, his vigour may impel all. This very mantra is known in the Vedas as the Gāyatrī, and has gained pre-eminence among all the Vedic mantras. As a rule the word deva is used together with the word savitṛ.

p. 334

Running head: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṇḍala 2, Aṣṭaka 4 (as printed), Sūkta 38, p. 334.

(The sentence begun on p. 333 ends at the top of this page: "...the custom is that the word deva is used.") The name Savitṛ is given to a special power of the sun that produces life in the world and gives the power of motion to creatures. According to some, the sun is this gross disc, a mass of light seen in the sky, and Savitṛ is the divine power, embodied, of that sun.

Many matters concerning the deity Savitṛ we shall explain in detail when we give the explanation of the Ṛk Ṛ. S. 3-62-10 (Gāyatrī).

तदपाः— (tadapāḥ—) The word apaḥ is read among the names of works (Nirukta 3-2). Here tadapāḥ means one who is endowed with those works, that is, the cause of the works of creation, continuance and so on.

वह्निः— (vahniḥ—) The word vahni, formed from the root वह प्रापणे (vaha prāpaṇe), means one who bears, that is, one who sustains the world. That is, all the activities of the world go on through this god Savitṛ. The idea is that he is both the sustainer and the nourisher of the world.

देवेभ्यः—स्तोतृभ्यः । (devebhyaḥ—stotṛbhyaḥ |) On the word deva Yāska has given the etymology: देवो दानाद्वा दीपनाद्वा द्योतनाद्वा द्युस्थानो भवतीति वा । (devo dānādvā dīpanādvā dyotanādvā dyusthāno bhavatīti vā |) That is, the word deva may mean "giver"; or, he is called deva because he illumines, or because his qualities are described and praised, or because he dwells in heaven. In the present Ṛk, taking the meaning of dīpana or dyotana as describing the qualities of the god Savitṛ and making them shine, the sense is explained as the priests who describe the qualities of the deity, that is, who praise him.

स्वस्तौ—अविनाशे क्षेमे । (svastau—avināśe kṣeme |) Yāska's etymology is स्वस्तित्यविनाशि नाम (svastityavināśi nāma) (Nirukta 3-21): well-being that does not perish, or wealth and other prosperity.

p. 335

Running head: Ṛgvedasaṃhitā, Aṣṭaka 2 (printed "ঙ."), Adhyāya 8, Varga 2, p. 335.

(Continuation of the Special Topics on Ṛk 1; the page opens in the middle of a sentence, and the first letters are printed as supplied, तपदाः (tapadāḥ) for what should be तदपाः (tadapāḥ) [?].) तपदाः वह्निः स्यः

देवः सविता सवाय शश्वत्तमं उत् अस्थात् (tapadāḥ vahniḥ syaḥ devaḥ savitā savāya śaśvattamaṃ ut asthāt)—this god Savitṛ is the cause of the world's activities and the one who nourishes the world. This well-known Savitṛ rises every day so that all the activities of the creatures of the world, such as creation and continuance, may go on.

नूनं देवेभ्यः रत्नं वि हि धाति (nūnaṃ devebhyaḥ ratnaṃ vi hi dhāti)—this god will now give delightful wealth and the like to the priests and sacrificers who are praising him.

अथ वीतिहोत्रं स्वस्तौ आ अभजत् (atha vītihotraṃ svastau ā abhajat)—here the word अथ (atha) is said to have the sense of "and" (samuccaya). And may this god become a sharer in the matter of producing well-being for the sacrificer who desires to perform a sacrifice addressed to him or is performing it; that is, the meaning is that he should produce well-being for the sacrificer.

हि (hi)—the word हि (hi) is used here merely to fill out the foot (pādapūraṇa).

devaḥ — the shining Savitṛ. pṛthupāṇiḥ — having extended hands (rays). viśvasya — of the world. śruṣṭaye hi — for the happiness indeed. ūrdhvaḥ — rising up, having dawned. bāhavā — his arms. pra sisarti — spreads out. nimṛgrāḥ — those that purify the world in the forms of Gaṅgā and so on. āpaścit — the waters also. asya vrate — on account of the work (of the nature of creation) of this Savitṛ. ā (syandante) — flow, running on. ayaṃ cidvātaḥ — this wind also. parijman — in this all-pervading atmosphere. ramate — sports.

The shining Savitṛ, with extended rays, rises up for the happiness of the world and spreads out his arms. The waters too, which purify the world in the forms of Gaṅgā and the rest, flow on account of this work of Savitṛ, which is of the nature of creation. This wind also sports in this all-pervading atmosphere.

Printed English translation

The divine, vast-handed (Savitri), having risen, stretches forth his arms for the delight of all : the purifying waters (flow) for (the fulfilment of) his rites, and this circumambient air sports (in the firmament).

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

viśvasya śruṣṭaye — विश्वस्य श्रुष्टये—जगतः सुखाय (viśvasya śruṣṭaye—jagataḥ sukhāya). Śruṣṭi means happiness; the meaning is "for the happiness of the whole world". Yāska has read the word śruṣṭi among the names for "quick" (kṣipra): having said in the etymology श्रुष्टीति क्षिप्रनाम—आशु अष्टीति (śruṣṭīti kṣipranāma—āśu aṣṭīti) (Ni. 6-13), and elsewhere श्रुष्टीवरीः-सुखवत्यः (śruṣṭīvarīḥ-sukhavatyaḥ) (Ni. 6-22) ("happy ones"), the commentator has accepted the meaning "happiness" for the word śruṣṭi in the present Ṛk and explained it so.

vrate — the word व्रतं (vrataṃ) is listed among the names of work (Ni. 3-1). Explaining this word in detail, Yāska says—

> vratamita karmanāma vṛṇotīti sataḥ | idamapītarat vratametasmādeva nivṛttikarma vārayatīti sataḥ | annamapi vratamucyate yadāvraṇoti śarīraṃ |

(Reference printed (सि. २-१३) ((si. 2-13)), i.e. "Si. 2-13" as supplied; probably Nirukta, but the print has Si..)

p. 337

Running head: Ṛgvedasaṃhitā, Aṣṭaka 2 (printed "ಅ."), Adhyāya 8, Varga 2, p. 337.

Thus he has given three meanings of the word vrata. That is: because the good or bad work done by a man pervades him, work is called vrata; or this work may also be a work of restraint, that is, because it holds back, i.e. prevents, work that he does not want or that is forbidden by the śāstra, it is called vrata; and because it pervades the body, food too is called vrata; so he has explained.

1. 1. The word vrata is used in the sense of preventing, checking, protecting—

> याः पार्थिवासो या अपामपि व्रते ता नो देवीः सुहवाः शर्म यच्छत ।
> yāḥ pārthivāso yā apāmapi vrate tā no devīḥ suhavāḥ śarma yacchata |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-46-7.) In the word vrate of this Ṛk the meaning is vṛjina, that is, protection (as printed, in English: "protection") made by averting evil. The prayer is: may the goddesses who are on the earth and the goddesses who are in the water release us from distress and bring us protection and happiness. Here vrate means the protection that rescues from distress.

> तासां नि चिक्क्युः कवयो निवानं परेषु या गुह्येषु व्रतेषु ।
> tāsāṃ ni cikkyuḥ kavayo nivānaṃ pareṣu yā guhyeṣu vrateṣu |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-114-2.) The poets (sages) discovered what was hidden in caves where no one could see it; here vrateṣu is used as an adjective of guhyeṣu, with the meaning "hidden".

> ददृश्र एषामवमा सदांसि परेषु या गुह्येषु व्रतेषु ।
>
> dadṛśra eṣāmavamā sadāṃsi pareṣu yā guhyeṣu vrateṣu |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-54-5.)

> असि यमो अस्यादित्यो अर्वन्नसि त्रितो गुह्येन व्रतेन ।
>
> asi yamo asyādityo arvannasi trito guhyena vratena |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-163-3.) Here too the word vratena is used in the sense "hidden".

1. Vrata indicates a prohibitory rule, "such a work shall not be done", or a rule of dharma, "just such a work must be done" (law or ordinance)—

> यच्चिद्धि ते विशो यथा प्र देव वरुण व्रतं । मिनीमसि द्यविद्यवि ॥
> yacciddi te viśo yathā pra deva varuṇa vrataṃ | minīmasi dyavidyavi ‖

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-25-1, printed "ಋ೦. ಸ೦."; the Kannada print has no closing mark before the reference.) O Varuṇa, since we are mere men, whichever of your ordinances we transgress (do not take note of it, and complete the work).

> य उ श्रिया दमेष्टा दोषोषासि प्रशस्यते । यस्य व्रतं न मायते ।
> ya u śriyā dameṣṭā doṣoṣāsi praśasyate | yasya vrataṃ na māyate |

The (Agni) whose ordinance is not transgressed.....

> इंद्रस्य कर्म सुकृता पुरूणि व्रतानि देवा न मिनंति विश्वे ।
> iṃdrasya karma sukṛtā purūṇi vratāni devā na minaṃti viśve |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 3 32-8, as printed, with a space where a hyphen is expected.) Indra's deeds of valour are many and well done. The gods do not break (do not transgress) Indra's rules and ordinances.

> विश्वं सत्यं मघवाना युवोरिदापश्चन प्र मिनंति व्रतं वां ।
> viśvaṃ satyaṃ maghavānā yuvoridāpaścana pra minaṃti vrataṃ vāṃ |

> वनानि विभ्यो नकिरस्य तानि व्रता देवस्य सवितुर्मिनंति ।

> vanāni vibhyo nakirasya tāni vratā devasya saviturminaṃti |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-38-7, the "." after "Saṃ" missing in print.) No one transgresses these rules of the god Savitṛ.

Garbled duplicate line as supplied (kept, not deleted): the verse of Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-92-12 appears twice in the supplied text, first with जेति *(jeti) for* चेति *(ceti) and then again below; the first copy is kept here as an italic note in kn.md.*

> अमिनती दैव्यानि व्रतानि सूर्यस्य चेति रश्मिभिर्दृशाना ।

> aminatī daivyāni vratāni sūryasya ceti raśmibhirdṛśānā |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-92-12.)

> अमिनती द्यैव्यानि व्रतानि प्रमिनती मनुष्या युगानि ।

> aminatī dyaivyāni vratāni praminatī manuṣyā yugāni |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-124-12.) This goddess Uṣas does not transgress the rules and ordinances of the gods.

> किं स्विन्नो राजा जगृहे कदस्याति व्रतं चकृमा को वि वेद ।

> kiṃ svinno rājā jagṛhe kadasyāti vrataṃ cakṛmā ko vi veda |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-12-5.) Which rule (of this Agni) shall we transgress?

> अयमेक इत्था पुरूरु चष्टे वि विश्वतिः । तस्य व्रतान्यनु वश्चरामसि ।

> ayameka itthā purūru caṣṭe vi viśvatiḥ | tasya vratānyanu vaścarāmasi |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 8-25-16.) We shall follow (observe) his rules. In these and other Ṛks, and also in the Ṛks Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-33-9; 7-5-4; 7-87-7, the word व्रत (vrata) indicates the sense of rules and ordinances.

And the word अनुव्रतं (anuvrataṃ) occurring in the Ṛks Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-38-3; 2-38-6; 8-40-8; 1-136-5; 3-61-1; 4-13-2; 5-69-1 and others indicates the sense "in accordance with the rules and ordinances".

1. In some contexts, when the rules of the gods are explained in the sense of sacrifice or sacrificial acts, the word व्रत (vrata) is used. It is said that by performing sacrifices and the like one does not neglect the wish or the ordinance of the gods

p. 339

Running head: Aṣṭaka 2 (printed "ಅ."), Adhyāya 8, Varga 2, p. 339 (Ṛgvedasaṃhitā).

(The sentence of p. 338 continues:) the wish or ordinance of the gods is not neglected, it is said—

> यो अग्नीषोमा हविषा सपर्याद्देवद्रीचा मनसा यो धृतेन । तस्य व्रतं रक्षतं पातमहंसो विशे जनाय महि शर्म यच्छतं ।

> yo agnīṣomā haviṣā saparyāddevadrīcā manasā yo dhṛtena | tasya vrataṃ rakṣataṃ pātamahaṃso viśe janāya mahi śarma yacchataṃ |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-93-8.) O Agni and Soma, the man (the sacrificer) who worships Agni and Soma with oblations and other substances, wholeheartedly — protect his sacrifice, guard him so that no harm befalls him.

> त्वमग्ने प्रथमो अंगिरस्तमः कविर्देवानां परि भूषसि व्रतं ।

> tvamagne prathamo aṃgirastamaḥ kavirdevānāṃ pari bhūṣasi vrataṃ |

(printed "ಮ ಸಂ. ೧-೩೧-೨", the Ṛ missing in print; as supplied.) O Agni, you are the foremost among the Aṅgiras sages, the first, and a poet. Perform the sacrifice of the gods.

> तस्य व्रतानि भूरिपोषिणो वयमुप भूषेम दम आ सुवृक्तिभिः ।

> tasya vratāni bhūripoṣiṇo vayamupa bhūṣema dama ā suvṛktibhiḥ |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-3-9.) We, endowed with wealth and other riches, shall perform in our house Agni's sacrificial acts with hymns of praise and so on — in these and other Ṛks, and also in the Ṛks Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-6-5; 8-42-1; 6-14-3; 1-24-15; 6-54-9; 10-36-13; 5-18-5, the word व्रत (vrata) is used in one of the senses "sacrifice", "sacrificial act" or "act". When the words of the various mantras are explained so that the meaning fits, whichever of the three kinds of meaning given by Yāska for the word व्रत (vrata) fits properly according to the context is to be given. This is the principal meaning and the usage of the word व्रत (vrata).

The Nirukta explains the words of this Ṛk thus:

> देवः पृथुपाणिः विश्वस्य श्रुष्टये हि ऊर्ध्वः बाहवा प्रसिसर्ति

> devaḥ pṛthupāṇiḥ viśvasya śruṣṭaye hi ūrdhvaḥ bāhavā prasisarti

— "For the happiness of the whole world this god Savitṛ rises up and stretches out his arms." Here "arms" means rays. The Sun (Savitṛ), having risen, makes his rays spread in all directions and gives happiness to the creatures of the world.

> निम्मग्राः आपः चित् अस्य व्रते आ (स्यंदंति)

> nimmagrāḥ āpaḥ cit asya vrate ā (syaṃdaṃti)

— "By the rule of this god, that is, by his work called creation, the waters produced flow in the forms of Gaṅgā and other rivers, purifying the people of the world." In this sentence the verb स्यंदंति (syaṃdaṃti) is to be supplied. (The first word is printed निम्मग्राः (nimmagrāḥ) in the supplied text, as supplied; compare the Pratipadārtha on p. 336.) By the rays of the sun the waters in the sea and other reservoirs are heated, gather in the atmosphere in the form of vapour, remain some time in the form of clouds, and then he makes those waters fall on the earth in the form of rain. The rain-waters gather together and flow in the form of rivers. By the water of those rivers people are not only purified but also obtain food and other nourishment through the growth of plants and so on, and live happily. It is indicated here that for all this the व्रत (vrata) of the god Savitṛ, that is, his work (his rule), is the cause.

"This wind also sports in the all-pervading atmosphere" — that is, the wind around us moves about playfully in the atmosphere which is spread everywhere. The meaning is: that the wind blows in the wide atmosphere for the good of men is also the rule of that god Savitṛ.

Gist: Savitṛ, going, releases (the horses) with swift rays; he stops even the constantly moving; he restrains the wish of the warriors to go; after his work the night comes.

यान् (yān) — Savitṛ who moves. आशुभिश्चित् (āśubhiścit) — by the swift-going rays. वि मुचाति (vi mucāti) — becomes released. अतमानं चित् (atamānaṃ cit) — even people who move constantly. एतोः (etoḥ) — from their moving. अरीरमत् (arīramat) — he stops. अह्यर्षणां (ahyarṣaṇāṃ) — of the warriors, the assailants of enemies (the Pratipadārtha continues on the next page).

p. 341

Running head: Aṣṭaka 2 (printed "ಅ."), Adhyāya 8, Varga 2, p. 341 (Ṛgvedasaṃhitā).

(The Pratipadārtha of Ṛk 3 continues:) अविष्यां (aviṣyāṃ) — also the wish to go forward towards battle. न्ययान् (nyayān) — he checks and stops. सवितुः (savituḥ) — of the Sun. व्रतं अनु (vrataṃ anu) — after the work consisting of his movement. मोकी (mokī) — the night. आगात् (āgāt) — appears.

Stray line as supplied (kept, not deleted; in kn.md as an italic note): "। ಭಾನುವಾರ ।" (a Kannada word meaning "Sunday", between the Pratipadārtha and the Bhāvārtha).

Savitṛ, whose work is movement, is released from his swift-going rays. He makes even the people who move constantly stop their moving. He also checks and stops the wish of the warriors, the assailants of enemies, to go forward towards battle. After the work consisting of his movement, the night appears.

Printed English translation

The moving (Sun) is liberated by his rapid rays: verily he has stopped the traveller from his journey : he restrains the desire of warriors for combat, for night follows (the cessation of) the function of Savitri.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Having said so far that by the rule (vrata, the ordinance) of the god Savitṛ the activities of the world go on, and that Savitṛ rises for the happiness of the people, the sage now describes in this Ṛk that after Savitṛ has set, all the activities of the world stop and night appears.

आशुभिः (āśubhiḥ) — शीघ्रगामिभिः रश्मिभिः (śīghragāmibhiḥ raśmibhiḥ): it means "by rays that spread swiftly". The word आशु (āśu) is read among the names for horse (Nighaṇṭu 2-27, printed "೨. ೨-೨೭") and among the names for "swift" (3-9, printed "೨. ೩-೯"). And the derivation is given: आश इति च शु इति च क्षिप्रनामनी भवतः (āśa iti ca śu iti ca kṣipranāmanī bhavataḥ) (6-1, printed "೩. ೬-೧") and आशवः क्षिप्रकारिणः (āśavaḥ kṣiprakāriṇaḥ) (9-9, printed "೩. ೯-೯"). Because the rays spread everywhere very quickly, the word आशु (āśu) is here explained as "rays".

नूनं (nūnaṃ) — of this word Yāska says:

> नूनमिति विचिकित्सार्थीयो भाषायामुभयमन्वध्यायं विचिकित्सार्थीयश्च पदपूरणश्च ॥
> nūnamiti vicikitsārthīyo bhāṣāyāmubhayamanvadhyāyaṃ vicikitsārthīyaśca padapūraṇaśca ‖

(Nirukta 1-5, printed "೨. ೧-೫".) He explains that the word नूनं (nūnaṃ) is used in the sense of doubt (vicikitsā), that is, to convey a conclusion reached after deliberate examination, or also for filling out a pada (verse-quarter). He describes that in the Chandas (the Veda) the word नूनं (nūnaṃ) is used both in the sense of vicikitsā and in the sense of filling out the pada, while elsewhere it is used in the sense of vicikitsā. Durgācārya, the commentator on the Nirukta, says: विचिकित्सा नाम विवेकपूर्वको अवधारणाभिप्रायः (vicikitsā nāma vivekapūrvako avadhāraṇābhiprāyaḥ) — in circumstances where doubt arises, deciding by deliberation is called vicikitsā.

p. 342

Running head: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṇḍala 2 (printed "ಮಂ. ೨."), Aṣṭaka 4 (as printed), Sūkta 38, p. 342.

The commentator (Sāyaṇa) says that in the present Ṛk it is used for filling out the pada.

अतमानं (atamānaṃ) — this word, formed from the root अत सातत्यगमने (ata sātatyagamane) (printed with "!" after it), means people who move at all times (or who are engaged in some work or other).

अह्यर्षणां अविष्यां (ahyarṣaṇāṃ aviṣyāṃ) —

> अह्यर्षणां अविष्यां—अहिमाहंतारं शत्रुमर्षंत्यभिगच्छंतीत्यह्यर्षवः तेषामपि गमनेच्छां ।
> ahyarṣaṇāṃ aviṣyāṃ—ahimāhaṃtāraṃ śatrumarṣaṃtyabhigacchaṃtītyahyarṣavaḥ teṣāmapi gamanecchāṃ |

अहि (ahi) means people who wish to kill, that is, enemies. The warriors who rush forward to meet those enemies are called अह्यर्षवः (ahyarṣavaḥ). Their गमनेच्छे (gamanecchè) (wish to go) means their eagerness to fight, is the sense.

यान् आशुभिश्चित् वि मुचाति आतमानं चित् एतोः आरीरमत् (yān āśubhiścit vi mucāti ātamānaṃ cit etoḥ ārīramat) (as printed: ಆತಮಾನಂ in the explanation, ಅತಮಾನಂ in the Ṛk) —

> यान् आशुभिश्चित् वि मुचाति आतमानं चित् एतोः आरीरमत्—गच्छन् सविता शीघ्रगामिभिरपि रश्मिभिः विमुच्यते नूनं सततं गच्छंतमपि जनं गमनात् उपरमयति ।

> yān āśubhiścit vi mucāti ātamānaṃ cit etoḥ ārīramat—gacchan savitā śīghragāmibhirapi raśmibhiḥ vimucyate nūnaṃ satataṃ gacchaṃtamapi janaṃ gamanāt uparamayati |

Savitṛ (the Sun), who moves from morning to evening, after he has withdrawn from his rays, that is, after he has set, makes even the people who are by nature moving about, or who are busy with their tasks and works, stop their respective activities. In the daytime, while Savitṛ (the Sun) shines, all people are engaged in moving about and in other activities. After the sun has set, since darkness comes, people cannot do any work and have to keep quiet — this is the meaning.

अह्यर्षणां अविष्यां नि अयान् (ahyarṣaṇāṃ aviṣyāṃ ni ayān) — when the sun has set, not only do the movement and other activities of the people stop, but even warriors who are eager for battle stop the battle they are fighting. That is, since Savitṛ has set and darkness comes, the work of battle stops — this is the meaning.

सवितुः व्रतं अनु मोकी आगात् (savituḥ vrataṃ anu mokī āgāt) — the word मोकी (mokī) is read among the names for night (Nirukta 2-18, printed "೨. ೨-೧೮"). After Savitṛ (the Sun) has stopped his work of movement, that is, after he has set, the night comes — this is the meaning.

Gist: Night, like a woman weaving cloth, again wraps the spread-out world; the wise man stops his work half-done; Savitṛ rises and the night is cut into seasons.

वयंती (vayaṃtī) — like a woman weaving cloth. विततं (vitataṃ) — the spread-out world. पुनः (punaḥ) — again. समव्यत् (samavyat) — (the night) covers. धीरः (dhīraḥ) — the wise man (the world). कर्तोः (kartoḥ) — from the work to be done. शक्त्य (śaktya) (printed so; the Pada and bhāṣya read ಶಕ್ತೈ) — even though he has the strength to do the work. मध्या (madhyā) — in the middle of the work. न्यधात् (nyadhāt) — stops (and again after the rising of Savitṛ). संहाय (saṃhāya) — leaving the bed. उत् अस्थात् (ut asthāt) — rises up. सविता (savitā) — the Sun, the begetter (prasavitṛ) of the world. अरमतिः (aramatiḥ) — without any pause. देवः (devaḥ) — shining. अगात् (agāt) — appears again. ऋतून् (ṛtūn) — the divisions of time. वि आदर्धः (vi ādardhaḥ) (as printed) — he splits up and divides.

Like a woman weaving cloth, the night again covers the spread-out world. The wise man, even though he has the strength to do the work, stops the work half-done after the night has arrived. Again, after the rising of Savitṛ, he leaves his bed and rises. The Sun, the begetter of the world, appears again shining, without any pause. He splits up and divides the divisions of time.

She, (Night) enwarps the extended (world) like (a woman) weaving (a garment): the prudent man lays aside the work he is able (to execute) iu [sic] the midst (of his labour); but all spring up (from repose) when the divine, unwearied Sun, who has divided the seasons, again appears.

In this Ṛk also it is said that as soon as night arrives, all the business and activities of the people stop half-done, and that they go on again after the rising of the Sun.

stops half-way the work that is half finished. Again, after the sun has risen, he gets up from his bed and begins to complete the work that had been left unfinished. That is, the people in the world, after sunset, stop in the middle the works they were doing, being unable to do them in the dark, and after sunrise, in the light of day, continue and complete the works they had stopped before — this is the meaning.

(The sentence continues:) although he travels every day without fail, there is no rest for him. As he rose on the former days, so he will rise without fail in the future also — this is the main sense.

ऋतून् वि अदर्धः (ṛtūn vi adardhaḥ) — कालविशेषांश्च विदारयति । (kālaviśeṣāṃśca vidārayati |) It has been said before that ऋतु (ṛtu) means a particular division of time. Since the god Savitṛ rises without fail every day, the divisions of the year, such as season (ṛtu), month, fortnight and day, can be known by his rising and setting. Therefore it is said here that Savitṛ makes the divisions of time.

Running head: सायणभाष्यसहिता, "मं० ३." (as printed; the Maṇḍala is 2), Aṣṭaka 4, Sūkta 38, p. 346.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

The radiance of Agni, connected with the house, abundantly spreads over and occupies many sacrificial houses. It becomes the lord of all food. The mother Uṣas has appointed, for her son Agni, the first share, called Agnihotra, which is sent by Savitṛ and is the indicator of this Agni.

Printed English translation

The engendered domestic radiance of Agni spreads through various dewellings [sic], and presides over all (sorts of sacrificial) food : the mother, (Dawn). has assigned to her son, (Agni), the best portion (at sacrifices), which is the manifestation of him imparted by Savitri [sic].

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk the description of the early morning, when the night has passed and Savitṛ is rising, is set out.

ओकांसि (okāṃsi) — यजमानानां पृथग्भूतान् गृहान् । (yajamānānāṃ pṛthagbhūtān gṛhān |) The separate houses of many sacrificers; Yāska says ओक इति निवासनामोच्यते (oka iti nivāsanāmocyate) (Ni. 3-3): the explanation is that ओक (oka) is a name for a dwelling house. Since many sacrificers perform sacrifice at the same time, that is, in the early morning, in their separate houses, the plural is used in नाना ओकांसि (nānā okāṃsi), "many houses".

दुर्यः (duryaḥ) — the word दुर्य (durya) is read among the names of houses (Ni.-13, as printed with no first number). गृह्यो गृहे भवः (gṛhyo gṛhe bhavaḥ) — Agni who is established in the house of the sacrificer is described here by the word दुर्य (durya).

शोकः (śokaḥ) — this word, formed from the root शुच दीप्तौ (śuca dīptau), means light, radiance.

माता सूनवे भागं (mātā sūnave bhāgaṃ) — here the goddess Uṣas is called the mother of Agni. Since after the time of dawn the fire is established and the homa and other rites are performed, Uṣas is described as the mother of Agni.

p. 347

Running head: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 3, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā, p. 347.

विश्वं आयुः (viśvaṃ āyuḥ)—सर्वमन्नं चाधितिष्ठति । (sarvamannaṃ cādhitiṣṭhati |) Since Agni is the giver of food to the sacrificers, to the priests and to those who praise him, he is described as the lord of all food and other things to be eaten.

माता सवित्रा अनु ईषितं अस्य केतं ज्येष्ठं भागं सूनवे आधात् (mātā savitrā anu īṣitaṃ asya ketaṃ jyeṣṭhaṃ bhāgaṃ sūnave ādhāt)—उषाः सवित्रा प्रेषितं प्रज्ञापकमग्नेः प्रथममग्निहोत्राख्यं भागं सूनवेऽग्नये आदधाति । (uṣāḥ savitrā preṣitaṃ prajñāpakamagneḥ prathamamagnihotrākhyaṃ bhāgaṃ sūnave 'gnaye ādadhāti |) By the command of the god Savitṛ, the mother of Agni, that is, the goddess Uṣas, who rises before Agni, has arranged that the first share in the Agnihotra and other rites that the sacrificers perform in the morning be offered to her son Agni. The sacrificers install the fire in the morning that arrives after the appearance of Uṣas. Since the time of dawn therefore arrives before the installation of the fire, Uṣas is said to be the mother of Agni. It is natural for a mother to wish her son well; accordingly Uṣas has arranged that the first oblation be offered to Agni in the Agnihotra and other rites that the sacrificers perform as soon as it is morning. Thus the greatness of Savitṛ is described here: this arrangement made by Uṣas is prompted by the god Savitṛ.

Gist: The warrior setting out to fight turns back; home is the wish of all moving beings; the toiler leaves his work half done and returns home, following the sunset rite of Savitṛ.

जिगीषुः (jigīṣuḥ) — desirous of obtaining victory. विष्ठितः (viṣṭhitaḥ) — the warrior who has set out for battle. समाववर्ति (samāvavarti) — turns back. विश्वेषां (viśveṣāṃ) — of all; चरतां (caratāṃ) — of beings that are moving; to such creatures. अमा (amā) — the house. कामः (kāmaḥ) — as the desired place. अभूत् (abhūt) — it is. दैव्यस्य (daivyasya) — of the one born in the heaven-world. सवितुः (savituḥ) — of the Sun. व्रतं (vrataṃ) — the rite called the setting. अनु (anu) — when it is known. शश्वान् (śaśvān) — even one who is constantly intent on work. अपः (apaḥ) — his own task. विकृतं (vikṛtaṃ) — though half done. हित्वी (hitvī) — stopping it there. आगात् (āgāt) — comes home.

The warrior who is eager for victory and has set out for battle returns home. For all creatures the house is the desired place. When the rite of the Sun, born in the heaven-world, called the setting, is known, even one who is constantly intent on work leaves his task there, though half done, and comes home.

Printed English translation

The warrior, eager for victory, who has gone forth (to battle), turns back; (for) home is the desire of all moving beings: abandoning his half-wrought toil, the labourer returns (home) when the function of the divine Savitri (is suspended).

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

(The printed label is garbled in the supplied text; it reads as Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu.) In this Ṛk it is described that after Savitṛ (the Sun) has set, people stop what they are doing, however much of it is done, and turn back towards their homes.

जिगीषुः विष्ठितः समाववर्ति (jigīṣuḥ viṣṭhitaḥ samāvavarti)—विजयेच्छुः योद्धा युद्धार्थं प्रस्थितः समावर्तयति । (vijayecchuḥ yoddhā yuddhārthaṃ prasthitaḥ samāvartayati |) The warrior who has set out to fight his enemies and conquer them stops the fighting as soon as evening comes and returns home. For after the sun has set it is dark and nothing can be seen, so no work can be done. Therefore he stops the battle and other tasks he has begun and turns towards home.

विश्वेषां चरतां अमा कामः अभूत् (viśveṣāṃ caratāṃ amā kāmaḥ abhūt)—सर्वेषां जंगमानां प्राणिनां गृहं प्रति कामो भवति । (sarveṣāṃ jaṃgamānāṃ prāṇināṃ gṛhaṃ prati kāmo bhavati |) Because the word अमा (amā) is read among the names of the house (Ni. 3-13), it means "house". After sunset all creatures whose nature is to move about wish to go to their own houses or dwelling places. By day animals and men too leave their houses and move about in various places, to gain food and other things or to do other duties. In the evening, when it is dark and no work can be done, they wish to go to their own dwellings for rest; this is the meaning.

देव्यस्य सवितुः व्रतं अनु शश्वान् अपः विकृतं हित्वा आगात् (devyasya savituḥ vrataṃ anu śaśvān apaḥ vikṛtaṃ hitvā āgāt)—दिवि भवस्य सवितुः प्रेरकस्य सूरस्य अस्तमयाख्यं कर्म अनु अर्थकृतं कर्म हित्वा गृहमागच्छति । (divi bhavasya savituḥ prerakasya sūrasya astamayākhyaṃ karma anu arthakṛtaṃ karma hitvā gṛhamāgacchati |) After sunset the man who is at work stops the work he is doing half way, turns back and comes home. That he thus leaves work unfinished and comes away half way is the greatness of the rule (law) of the god Savitṛ called the setting; this is the main idea. (The supplied text prints देव्यस्य (devyasya), सूरस्य (sūrasya) and अर्थकृतं (arthakṛtaṃ) here, where the Saṃhitā/bhāṣya above have दैव्यस्य (daivyasya), सूर्यस्य (sūryasya) and अर्धकृतं (ardhakṛtaṃ); noted, not altered.)

Gist: Savitṛ, you have placed the share belonging to the waters in the firmament; animals search for it in waterless regions; you have made the trees dwellings for birds; no one can obstruct this god's works.

(सवितः (savitaḥ) — O Savitṛ). त्वया (tvayā) — by you. अप्पु (appu) (as supplied) — in the firmament. हितं (hitaṃ) — what has been placed. अप्यं (apyaṃ) — what belongs to the waters (the Kannada says "to the belly", उदरसंबंधवादुदू (udarasaṃbaṃdhavādudū), as supplied). भागं (bhāgaṃ) — the share. धन्वानु (dhanvānu) — in waterless forest regions. मृगयसः (mṛgayasaḥ) — the animals that search. आ (ā) — all around. वि तस्थुः (vi tasthuḥ) — stand pressing in. वनानि (vanāni) — the forest trees. विभ्यः (vibhyaḥ) — to the birds (you have arranged them as dwellings). अस्य देवस्य सवितुः (asya devasya savituḥ) — of this Savitṛ, who is divine in nature. तानि व्रता (tāni vratā) — such extraordinary works. नकिः मिनंति (nakiḥ minaṃti) — no one can obstruct.

O Savitṛ, the animals that search in the waterless forest regions press in all around the share connected with water (or "the belly" as supplied) that you have placed in the firmament. You have arranged the forest trees to be dwellings for the birds. No one can obstruct the extraordinary works of this Savitṛ, who is divine in nature.

Printed English translation

The animals search in dry places for the watery element which has been collected in the firmament by you : the woods are assigned (by you) to the birds : no one obstructs these functions of the divine Savitri.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

अप्यं (apyaṃ)—अपां संबंधिनं भागं (apāṃ saṃbaṃdhinaṃ bhāgaṃ) — the share that belongs to water, that is, the region of water.

त्वया अप्पु हितं अप्यं भागं धन्व अनु मृगयसः आ वि तस्थुः (tvayā appu hitaṃ apyaṃ bhāgaṃ dhanva anu mṛgayasaḥ ā vi tasthuḥ)—हे सवितः त्वया अंतरिक्षे निहितं अपां संबंधिनं भागं निर्जलप्रदेशेश्वरणेषु मृगयमाणा मृगाः आसमंतात् अधितिष्ठंति (he savitaḥ tvayā aṃtarikṣe nihitaṃ apāṃ saṃbaṃdhinaṃ bhāgaṃ nirjalapradeśeśvaraṇeṣu mṛgayamāṇā mṛgāḥ āsamaṃtāt adhitiṣṭhaṃti) । O god Savitṛ, in order that rain may fall you have established water in the firmament in the form of clouds. Since there has been no rain, there is no water anywhere on the earth. Therefore the animals of the forest, searching for the water that sustains life, roam in the waterless forest regions.

वनानि विभ्यः (vanāni vibhyaḥ)—वृक्षा आवासादिरूपेण त्वया भागो दत्तः (vṛkṣā āvāsādirūpeṇa tvayā bhāgo dattaḥ) । Trees and the like have been arranged by you as dwelling places for birds.

No one is able to obstruct them; this is the meaning.

Gist: at sunset Varuna grants moving beings a pleasant resting place; birds and cattle return to nests and pens; Savitṛ distributes creatures to their several places.

वरुणः (varuṇaḥ) — Varuṇa. याद्राध्यं (yādrādhyaṃ) — what is worthy of worship by moving living beings. अप्यं (apyaṃ) — what is fit to enter. अनिशितं (aniśitaṃ) — agreeable. योनिं (yoniṃ) — dwelling place. निमिषे (nimiṣe) — after sunset (he arranges it for the rest of living beings). जर्भुराणः (jarbhurāṇaḥ) — those that fly in haste. विश्वः (viśvaḥ) — all. मार्ताण्डः (mārtāṃḍaḥ) — birds. आ गात् (ā gāt) — come and gather (in their nests). पशुः (paśuḥ) — cattle also. व्रजं (vrajaṃ) — come and gather in the pen. सविता (savitā) — Savitṛ, the impeller. स्थशः (sthaśaḥ) — in the several directions. जन्मानि (janmāni) — living beings. व्याकः (vyākaḥ) — separated them one from another.

After sunset Varuṇa arranges, for the rest of living beings, dwelling places that are worthy of worship by moving creatures, fit to enter and agreeable. All the birds, flying in haste, come and gather in their nests. Cattle also gather in their pens. Savitṛ, the impeller, has separated living beings one from another in all directions.

Printed English translation

(Stray line "23" at the foot of p. 353 in the supplied text, a signature mark, kept in kn.md and not translated.)

याद्राध्यं (yādrādhyaṃ)—यातां गच्छतां संराधनीयं (yātāṃ gacchatāṃ saṃrādhanīyaṃ) । Worthy of worship, that is, desirable, for creatures whose nature is to move about. Creatures and men who have wandered all day for food and the like and are tired out look forward eagerly to night, the time of their rest. The sense is therefore that night is welcomed by all.

योनिं (yoniṃ)—A place, or a dwelling-place. The word yoni is read among the names of house (Ni. 3-13).

अप्यं (apyaṃ)—आप्तुं योग्यं (āptuṃ yogyaṃ) । Fit to be attained, which all desire.

अनिशितं (aniśitaṃ)—अतीक्ष्णं सुखकरमिति यावत् (atīkṣṇaṃ sukhakaramiti yāvat) । Nishita means sharp; anishita means not sharp, pleasant. The sense is that night, the time of rest, is pleasant to all.

मार्ताण्डः (mārtāṃḍaḥ)—मृताद्भिन्नात् अंडादुत्पद्यमानः पक्षी (mṛtādbhinnāt aṃḍādutpadyamānaḥ pakṣī) । A bird is born from an egg; since that egg (anḍa) is not dead but alive, the bird born from it is called mārtāṇḍa. So the commentator explains the meaning.

स्थशः (sthaśaḥ)—स्थाने स्थाने (sthāne sthāne) । In many different places, or in many directions.

जर्भुराणः विश्वः मार्ताण्डः आ गात् (jarbhurāṇaḥ viśvaḥ mārtāṃḍaḥ ā gāt)—भृशं गच्छन् अंडादुत्पद्यमानः सर्वः पक्षी आ गच्छति (bhṛśaṃ gacchan aṃḍādutpadyamānaḥ sarvaḥ pakṣī ā gacchati) । All the birds born of eggs, having moved about much during the day, come after sunset to their several dwelling-places, the nests. Here the word mārtāṇḍa, denoting a bird, should be taken as a collective singular and given a plural sense.

पशुः व्रजं आगात् (paśuḥ vrajaṃ āgāt)—विश्वः पशुः गोष्ठमागात् (viśvaḥ paśuḥ goṣṭhamāgāt) । Here too the word paśu is used as a collective singular. All animals, cows and the rest, go to their respective pens.

सविता स्थशः जन्मानि व्याकः (savitā sthaśaḥ janmāni vyākaḥ)—आसौ प्रेरकः सविता स्थाने स्थाने जातानि भूतानि पृथगकार्षीत् (āsau prerakaḥ savitā sthāne sthāne jātāni bhūtāni pṛthagakārṣīt) । This god Savitṛ, who impels all things, causes all the creatures born on the earth to go to their several separate dwelling-places. That is, all creatures do not gather at one spot at night. Birds go to their nests in the trees; cows and other cattle go to the pens assigned to them; men go to their houses. In this way the greatness of Savitṛ is described, who has provided different resting places for creatures.

यस्य (yasya)—of which Savitṛ. व्रतं (vrataṃ)—the unique work. इंद्रः (iṃdraḥ)—Indra. न (na) (मिनाति (mināti))—cannot obstruct. वरुणः (varuṇaḥ)—Varuṇa. न (na)—cannot obstruct. मित्रः (mitraḥ)—Mitra. अर्यमा (aryamā)—Aryaman. न (na)—cannot obstruct. रुद्रः (rudraḥ)—Rudra. न (na)—cannot obstruct. अरातयः (arātayaḥ)—even enemies. न मिनंति (na minaṃti)—cannot injure. तं (taṃ)—such. देवं (devaṃ)—resplendent. सवितारं (savitāraṃ)—Savitṛ. इदं (idaṃ)—now. नमोभिः (namobhiḥ)—with offerings in the form of food. स्वस्ति (svasti)—for well-being. हुवे (huve)—I invoke and praise.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

That Savitṛ, whose unique work neither Indra, nor Varuṇa, nor Mitra or Aryaman, nor Rudra can obstruct, and whom enemies cannot injure, that resplendent Savitṛ I now invoke and praise, for well-being, with food-offerings.

Printed English translation

I invite to this place, with reverential salutations, for my good, that divine Savitri, whose functions neither Indaa [sic], nor Varuna, nor Mitra, nor Aryaman, nor Rudra, nor the enemies (of the gods), impede.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

The unique work (ordinance) of the god Savitṛ cannot be obstructed or violated by any gods such as Indra, Varuṇa, Mitra, Aryaman and Rudra. No enemies can injure this god. The chief purport of this Ṛk is: "I praise such a greatly glorious Savitṛ by offering him food-offerings."

इंद्र (iṃdra)—We have written about Indra at length before.

त्वमर्यमा भवसि यत्कनीनां नाम स्वधावन् गुह्यं बिभर्षि (tvamaryamā bhavasi yatkanīnāṃ nāma svadhāvan guhyaṃ bibharṣi) । (Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-3-2)

p. 356

[Running head, p. 356: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 4, Sū. 38.]

In these Ṛks it is said that Agni, when born, is called Varuṇa; when well kindled and blazing brightly, Mitra; and in the marriage-related homas and the like, Aryaman: that Agni has these three names. Moreover, in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa:

> मित्रोऽसि वरुणोऽसीत्याह । मैत्रं ना अहः । वारुणी रात्रिः । अहोरात्राभ्यामेवैनमुपावहरति ॥

> mitro 'si varuṇo 'sītyāha | maitraṃ nā ahaḥ | vāruṇī rātriḥ | ahorātrābhyāmevainamupāvaharati ‖

(Tai. Brā. 1-7-10-1)

It is said that Mitra is the lord of the day and Varuṇa the lord of the night. Therefore it should be noted that these three deities are said in some places to be partial deities of the Sun and in some places to be different names of Agni.

In the Purāṇas and the like, Mitra is one of the twelve Ādityas. In the Ṛgveda, although Mitra is another name of the Sun, Mitra has a distinct individuality, that is, a personal prominence. In the Ṛgveda Mitra, Varuṇa and Aryaman are said to be the sons of Aditi. Therefore they are called Ādityas in many places. That the Ādityas, that is, the sons of Aditi, are six in number:

> इमा गिर आदित्येभ्यो धृतस्नूः सनाद्राजभ्यो जुह्वा जुहोमि । शृणोतु मित्रो अर्यमा भगो नस्तुविजातो वरुणो दक्षो अंशः ॥

> imā gira ādityebhyo dhṛtasnūḥ sanādrājabhyo juhvā juhomi | śṛṇotu mitro aryamā bhago nastuvijāto varuṇo dakṣo aṃśaḥ ‖

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-27-1)

means that only six names are given: Mitra, Aryaman, Bhaga, Varuṇa, Dakṣa, Aṃśa.

> देवा आदित्या ये सप्त तेभिः सोमाभि रक्ष न इंद्रायेंदो परि स्रव ।

> devā ādityā ye sapta tebhiḥ somābhi rakṣa na iṃdrāyeṃdo pari srava |

(Ma. Saṃ. 9-114-3) [as supplied; the initial is printed म (ma) here, as in the garbled line above]

In this [Ṛk] the sons of Aditi are said to be seven. [The text has मक्किनल्लि (makkinalli) for ऋक्किनल्लि (ṛkkinalli): apparent slip of the supplied text, kept as supplied.]

> अष्टौ पुत्रासो आदितेर्ये जातास्तन्व १ स्परि । देवा उपप्रैत्सप्तभिः परा मार्तंडमास्यत् । सप्तभिः पुत्रैरदितिरुप प्रैत्तूर्व्यं युगं । प्रजायै मृत्यवे त्वत्पुनर्मार्तंडमाभरत् ॥

[Note on the supplied text: the first line has a stray numeral १ (1) after तन्व (tanv a) and स्परि (spari); kept as supplied, no reading is claimed.]

In these Ṛks it is said that Aditi had first seven sons and then Mārtaṇḍa, eight sons in all. Moreover, in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka:

p. 357

> प्रजायै मृत्यवे तत् । परामार्तांडमाभरदिति । ताननुक्रमिष्यामः मित्रश्च वरुणश्च । धाता चार्यमा च । अगंशश्च भगश्च । इंद्रश्च विवस्वाग्श्चेत्येते ॥

(Tai. A. 1-13-3)

The names of the eight sons of Aditi are also given: Mitra, Varuṇa, Dhātā, Aryaman, Aṃśa, Bhaga, Indra, Vivasvān are those eight. [In the quotation on p. 356 the text has हरि (hari) where the Ṛk has परि (pari); kept as supplied.] The same matter is stated in the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa:

> अदितिः पुत्रकामा । साध्येभ्यो देवेभ्यो ब्रह्मौदनमपचत् । तस्या उच्छेषणमददुः । तत्पाश्नात् । सा रेतोधत्त । तस्यै धाता चार्यमा जाजायेतां । सा द्वितीयमपचत् । तस्या उच्छेषणमददुः । तत्पाश्नात् । सा रेतोधत्त । तस्यै मित्रश्च ।वरुणश्चाजायेतां । सा तृतीयमपचत् । तस्या

(Tai. Brā. 1-1-9-1, 2, 3)

It is stated [thus]. The fact that Aditi bore eight sons is clearly set out here. Among these eight, the three, Mitra, Varuṇa and Aryaman, are the specially famous ones in the Ṛgveda. In the Ṛgveda, sūkta 2-7 [as printed], there is an extensive description of the beneficent heroic deeds of Mitra, Varuṇa and Aryaman.

Mitra (मित्रः (mitraḥ))—Yāska has given the derivation of the word Mitra in his Nirukta as follows:

> मित्रः प्रमीतेस्त्रायते । संमिन्वानो द्रवतीति ना । मेदयतेर्वा ।

> mitraḥ pramītestrāyate | saṃminvāno dravatīti nā | medayatervā |

(Si. 10-21) [as supplied; the abbreviation is not the usual one for the Nirukta, and no correction is made]

What is the meaning of the word Mitra? It is: मित्रः कस्मात् । स हि प्रमितेः त्रायते । प्रमितिः मरणं । ततः सर्वलोकं त्रायते वर्षद्वारेण । (mitraḥ kasmāt | sa hi pramiteḥ trāyate | pramitiḥ maraṇaṃ | tataḥ sarvalokaṃ trāyate varṣadvāreṇa |) "Prāmiti" means death. Because he causes rain in the world, thereby provides food and other nourishment to people, averts and protects them from the fear of death by hunger, this deity is called Mitra.

Or: स्नेहनार्थस्य सर्वं ह्यसावुदकेन स्नेहयति । (snehanārthasya sarvaṃ hyasāvudakena snehayati |) This deity makes everything cling together by water, that is, unite into one; therefore this deity is called Mitra. Having given these three kinds of derivation, to support it [he cites]:

> मित्रो जनान् यातयति ब्रुवाणो मित्रो दाधार पृथवीमुत द्यां । मित्रः कृष्णीरनिमिषाभि चष्टे मित्राय हव्यं धृतवज्जु होत ॥
> mitro janān yātayati bruvāṇo mitro dādhāra pṛthavīmuta dyāṃ | mitraḥ kṛṣṇīranimiṣābhi caṣṭe mitrāya havyaṃ dhṛtavajju hota ‖

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-59-1) [printed with a stray space: "3-59 -1"]

This Ṛk is given as an example. In this Ṛk it is described very well how Mitra, helping the works such as agriculture, pouring rain and the like, and providing food and other nourishment to people, sustains, that is, nourishes, both the people of the earth and the dwellers in heaven. "O men, offer to such a Mitra the oblations and the like mixed with ghee": thus Mitra's unique qualities and his beneficence to the world are described. The only sūkta in the Ṛgveda devoted to Mitra is this one of 9 Ṛks (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-59); elsewhere Mitra is praised together with other deities such as Varuṇa. Because the association of Mitra and Varuṇa is very frequent, there is, as said before, only one sūkta in the Ṛgveda having Mitra alone as deity (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-59); even there the praise of that deity is indistinct. But only in the first Ṛk is Mitra's distinctive character well stated. In the fifth Ṛk of the same sūkta:

> महा आदित्यो नमसोपसद्यो यातयज्जनो गृणते सुशेवः ।
> mahā ādityo namasopasadyo yātayajjano gṛṇate suśevaḥ |

(Ma. Saṃ. 3-59-5) [as supplied: म. (ma.) for ऋ. (ṛ.)]

this Mitra is called the great Āditya who unites all men together. The word यातयज्जन (yātayajjana) that gives this sense is used of Mitra and Varuṇa in

> व्रतेन स्थो ध्रुवक्षेमा धर्मणा यातेयज्जना ।
> vratena stho dhruvakṣemā dharmaṇā yātèyajjanā |

(Ma. Saṃ. 5-72-2) [as supplied; the text has मिक्किनल्लि (mikkinalli) for ऋक्किनल्लि (ṛkkinalli) in the next sentence, kept]

this Ṛk, and of the three, Mitra, Varuṇa and Aryaman, in > मित्रस्तयोर्वरुणो यातयज्ज नोऽर्यमा यातयज्जनः ।

>
> mitrastayorvaruṇo yātayajja no 'ryamā yātayajjanaḥ |

(Ma. Saṃ. 1-136-3)

this Ṛk. According to the sūkta Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-59 mentioned above, Mitra is the support of heaven and earth. The five tribes of men (pañcajanāḥ) are obedient to him; he is the sustenance of life for all the other deities: thus Mitra's qualities are described. In Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-81-4 Savitṛ and Mitra are said to be one; in the Vājasaneyisaṃhitā (Vā. Saṃ. 4-3) that Viṣṇu took his three steps following Mitra's ordinances; in Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-8-4 that Agni, established before the dawn, himself generates Mitra for himself; in Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-5-4 that the blazing Agni is himself Mitra; in Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-3-1 that when Agni is born he is Mitra, and > mitro agnirbhavati yatsamidbho mitro hotā varuṇo jātavedāḥ | mitro adhvaryurişiro damūnā mitraḥ siṃdhūnāmuta parvatānāṃ ||

(Ma. Saṃ. 3-5-4) [as supplied: ಮು. (Mu.) for ಋ. (Ṛ.)]

In this Ṛk, Agni well kindled is called Mitra; this Mitra is said to be the Hotṛ priest at the sacrifice, the Adhvaryu, Varuṇa, and the Agni called Jātavedas; and he is the friend (benefactor) of the rivers and of the mountains: thus Mitra's qualities are described.

Varuṇa: "Varuṇa is so called because he covers (vṛṇoti)" (Nirukta 10-2), says Yāska's derivation: this deity is called Varuṇa because he is covered (āvṛta) by masses of cloud. The words quoted are वरुणो वृणोतीति सतः (varuṇo vṛṇotīti sataḥ) [as supplied].

Varuṇa is a most exalted deity, equal to Indra in power and the like. The number of mantras addressed to Varuṇa alone is very small. There are twelve sūktas in the Ṛgveda with Varuṇa as deity; but the sūktas that praise Mitra and Varuṇa together number twenty-four. [Printed ಮಿತ್ರಾವರಣನ್ನು (mitrāvaraṇannu), sic for mitrāvaruṇa-.]

Varuṇa has a human body and human activities. But rather than his physical body and activities, the description of his moral activities and deeds is what is chiefly indicated. He has a face, eyes, arms, hands and feet; he drives a chariot, sits, eats, drinks: such descriptions of his bodily activities are there. That the Sun is the eye of Agni, Mitra and Varuṇa is stated plainly in the Ṛks

> चित्रं देवानामुदगादनीकं चक्षुर्मित्रस्य वरुणस्याग्नेः ।
> citraṃ devānāmudagādanīkaṃ cakṣurmitrasya varuṇasyāgneḥ |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-115-1)

>
> namo mitrasya varuṇasya cakṣase maho devāya tadṛtaṃ saparyata |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-37-1)

Since the point that the Sun is, as it were, their eye occurs in the very first Ṛk of the sūktas addressed to Mitra and Varuṇa, it seems that this is the aspect that first strikes one whenever Mitra and Varuṇa are mentioned. And in Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-66-10

p. 360

Aryaman, Mitra and Varuṇa are said to have the Sun as their eye. That Varuṇa is far-seeing (urucakṣasam) is said in Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-25-5; 1-25-16 and other Ṛks.

> आ नो बर्हि रिशादसो वरुणो मित्रो अर्यमा । सीदंतु मनुषो यथा ॥

In these and other Ṛks Mitra, Varuṇa and Aryaman are prayed to come and sit on the darbha grass spread on the sacrificial altar, for drinking Soma. [Printed ವರಣ (varaṇa), sic for varuṇa.]

> यदी सखाया सख्याय सोमैः सुतेभिः सुप्रयसा मादय्यैते ।
>
> yadī sakhāyā sakhyāya somaiḥ sutebhiḥ suprayasā mādayyaite |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-41-3)

In these and other Ṛks it is said that Varuṇa drinks Soma along with Indra and other deities.

> बिभ्रद्वापिं हिरण्ययं वरुणो वस्त निर्णिजं । परि स्पशो नि षेदिरे ।
> bibhraddāpiṃ hiraṇyayaṃ varuṇo vasta nirṇijaṃ | pari spaśo ni ṣedire |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-25-13)

In this Ṛk there is a description that Varuṇa wears a golden mantle or robe and a shining garment. Varuṇa's chariot is golden, bright like the Sun, and has whips that urge on the horses. Mitra and Varuṇa mount their chariot in a very lofty region of the sky (Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-63-1); such descriptions occur. The dwelling of Mitra and Varuṇa is golden and is in the upper world. And Varuṇa, sitting in his palace—

> नि षसाद धृतव्रतो वरुणः पस्त्या ३ स्वा । साम्राज्याय सुकृतुः । अतो विश्वान्यद्भुता चिकित्त्वा अभि पश्यति । कृतानि या च कर्त्वा ॥

(Pu. Saṃ. 1-25-10, 11) [as supplied: ಪು. (Pu.) for ಋ. (Ṛ.); the text has पस्त्या ३ स्वा (pastyā 3 svā) with a stray numeral ३]

sees everything that goes on in the world. The dwelling of Mitra and Varuṇa is very large, very lofty, firm, resting on a thousand pillars; and their house has a thousand doors (Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-88-5). The all-seeing Sun, setting out from his own dwelling, goes to the house of Mitra and Varuṇa to report men's deeds, and enters their dear house: such descriptions also occur.

Varuṇa, alone or together with Mitra, is called king in many places, like other deities.

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-85-3)

In these and other Ṛks Varuṇa is said to be king not only of men but of the gods and of all the worlds. Besides Varuṇa, deities such as Indra, Yama and Soma also have the honorific name of king.

There are many stories connected with Indra; but with Varuṇa it is quite the opposite: there is not a single story. Varuṇa is much praised as the regulator of the physical and moral ordinances (varuṇasya vratāni). The divine power of Mitra and Varuṇa is described by the word māyā. Applied to the gods, it means the hidden power they have to do good; in the context of the rākṣasas, the same word means the crooked power they have to do evil. In the good sense this word suits Mitra and Varuṇa; in the bad sense it applies to the rākṣasas. Like the word asura, the word māyā is used in both senses.

By this māyā power hidden in himself, Varuṇa, standing in the atmosphere, measures the earth by means of the Sun as with a measuring rod. He makes the Sun cross the intermediate space and causes him to be dimmed by rain-clouds; then honey-mixed (sweet) drops fall (Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-63-4). He makes the sky rain. Therefore this word māyā is said chiefly of Varuṇa among the gods in all the Ṛks such as Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-48-14; 7-28-4; 10-99-10; 10-147-5. [In the supplied text a colon stands between ೧೦-೯೯-೧೦ and ೧೦-೧೪೭-೫; changed to a semicolon in kn.md for the reference check, numbers untouched.]

Varuṇa is the one who lays down the laws of nature. It is he who established earth and heaven. And

> आसीदद्विश्वा भुवनानि संराड्विश्वेत्तानि वरुणस्य व्रतानि ।
> āsīdadviśvā bhuvanāni saṃrāḍviśvettāni varuṇasya vratāni |

(Ma. Saṃ. 8-42-1) [as supplied: ಮ. (Ma.) for ಋ. (Ṛ.)]

in this Ṛk it is said that Varuṇa dwells in all the worlds, and that his ordinances and the like are observed everywhere there, in this it is said that the three upper worlds and the three earthly (lower) worlds are in his power. Varuṇa and Mitra rule the whole universe (Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-63-7). They are the protectors of the whole world (Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-27-4). Varuṇa is the support of heaven, earth and sky (Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-69-1, 4). He has placed fire in the water, the Sun in the sky, and Soma upon the stone. He has made a broad path for the Sun. Varuṇa, Mitra and Aryaman clear the way for the Sun (Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-60-4). In many such Ṛks there is a description of Varuṇa's authority.

In the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (Tai. Saṃ. 6-4-8-4) it says मित्रोऽहरजनयद्वरुणो रात्रिं (mitro 'harajanayadvaruṇo rātriṃ), that is, Mitra created the day and Varuṇa the night. Therefore, मैत्रं वा अहः । वारुणी रात्रिः (maitraṃ vā ahaḥ | vāruṇī rātriḥ): it is said in many places that Mitra is lord of the day and Varuṇa lord of the night (Tai. Saṃ. 2-1-7-4). In one place it is said that Varuṇa divided the seasons.

> वेद मासो धृवव्रतो द्वादश प्रजावतः । वेदा य उपजायते ।
> veda māso dhṛvavrato dvādaśa prajāvataḥ | vedā ya upajāyate |

(Ma. Saṃ. 1-25-8) [as supplied: ಮ. (Ma.) for ಋ. (Ṛ.)]

In this Ṛk it is said that the twelve months are known to Varuṇa, and

> वि ये दधुः करदं मासमादहर्यज्ञ मक्तुं चादृचं । अनाप्यं वरुणो मित्रो अर्यमा क्षत्रं राजान आशत ॥
> vi ye dadhuḥ karadaṃ māsamādaharyajña maktuṃ cādṛcaṃ | anāpyaṃ varuṇo mitro aryamā kṣatraṃ rājāna āśata ||

in this Ṛk it is said that Mitra, Varuṇa and Aryaman divided the autumn, the month, the day and the night.

It is said in many places that he is also the one who regulates the waters. He is the one who made the rivers flow; at his command they flow on continuously (Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-28-4). That the rivers, though they rush and pour water into the sea, do not fill it is due to his hidden power (Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-85-6). Varuṇa and Mitra are lords of the rivers. That Varuṇa is lord of the oceans is an established point, yet it occurs in the Ṛgveda very rarely; perhaps its being unimportant may be the reason. In the Purāṇas and the like Varuṇa is famous as lord of the waters; and that Varuṇa, as one of the eight guardians of the quarters, is lord of the western quarter is a statement made in the Purāṇas and the like. In the Ṛgveda there is no support for it. In general, all that concerns Varuṇa relates to the water that is together with the atmosphere. Among the deities prayed to for rain

[Running head, p. 363: A. 2, A. 8, Va. 3, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

Varuṇa and Mitra are the foremost. When all the mountains are covered with clouds, Varuṇa pours water, from an overturned vessel (a cloud), on heaven, earth and sky and wets the whole earth; this is said in Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-85-3 and 4. One whole sūkta (that is, Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-63) also indicates their rain-pouring power. In the Yajurveda Saṃhitā (Tai. Saṃ. 5-5-4-1) आपो वरुणस्य पत्नय आसन् (āpo varuṇasya patnaya āsan): the waters were the wives of Varuṇa; and (Tai. Saṃ. 6-4-3-2) मित्रावरुणौ ना अपां नेतार् (mitrāvaruṇau nā apāṃ netār): Mitra and Varuṇa are the leaders of the waters. [The printed ನಾ (nā) is kept as supplied.]

It is repeatedly said that the ordinances of Varuṇa are firmly established. For this very reason he is called Dhṛtavrata ("of firm ordinances"). This epithet is applied to both Mitra and Varuṇa.

> परि धामानि मर्मृशद्वरुणस्य पुरो गये विश्वे देवा अनु व्रतं नभंतामन्यके समे ॥
> pari dhāmāni marmṛśadvaruṇasya puro gaye viśve devā anu vrataṃ nabhaṃtāmanyake same ‖

(Ma. Saṃ. 8-41-7) [as supplied: ಮ. (Ma.) for ಋ. (Ṛ.)]

> न वां देवा अमृता आ मिनंति व्रतानि मित्रावरुणा ध्रुवाणि ।
>
> na vāṃ devā amṛtā ā minaṃti vratāni mitrāvaruṇā dhruvāṇi |

(Ma. Saṃ. 5-69-4) [as supplied: ಮ. (Ma.) for ಋ. (Ṛ.)]

In these and other Ṛks it is said that the gods themselves obey the commands of Mitra, Varuṇa and Aryaman, and that even the primeval gods cannot transgress their firm ordinances. Mitra and Varuṇa are the regulators of law (ṛta) and of light. It is by the strength of these ordinances that they are able to support the laws. This quality is found especially in these two, sometimes in the Ādityas, or in other ordinary deities as well. The epithet "promoters of truth (ṛta) and justice" (ṛtasya gopāḥ), that is, those who keep the laws (or make others keep them), is seen to be applied often to Mitra and Varuṇa.

Varuṇa's power is immeasurable. Neither flying birds nor flowing rivers can reach the boundary of his realm; they cannot withstand his power; they cannot check his wrath. The sky and the rivers too have not reached the limit of the territory of Mitra and Varuṇa. Everything is contained in Varuṇa. The dwellings of all creatures, the three heavens and the three earths are all placed in him. Varuṇa is omniscient. The flight of birds in the sky, the passage of ships on the sea, the course of the far-travelling wind, all these are known to him. He sees all things that are past or yet to come. He is the witness of men's true and false deeds. The deeds, thoughts and devices of every man are all known to Varuṇa. Heaven and the earthly worlds, and all that lies beyond them, he can comprehend. However far beyond the sky one may run, no one can leave the range of Varuṇa's sight.

Being the regulator of morality, Varuṇa grows very angry at sin. Sin makes him very angry, and so does transgression of his ordinances; for both these he imposes a very severe punishment. Varuṇa's noose, which binds sinners, is mentioned in Ṛks such as Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-24-15; 1-25-11; 6-74-4; 10-85-24. [In the supplied text a colon stands between 1-25-11 and 6-74-4; changed to a semicolon in kn.md for the reference check, numbers untouched.] That noose binds the speaker of untruth and releases the speaker of truth.

> युवो राष्ट्रं बृहदिन्वति द्यौर्यौ सेतृभिररज्जुभिः सिनीथः । परि नो हेळो वरुणस्य वृज्या उरुं न इंद्रः कृणवदु लोकं ॥

> yuvo rāṣṭraṃ bṛhadinvati dyauryau setṛbhirarajjubhiḥ sinīthaḥ | pari no heḷo varuṇasya vṛjyā uruṃ na iṃdraḥ kṛṇavadu lokaṃ ||

(Ma. Saṃ. 7-84-2) [as supplied: ಮು. (Ma.) for ಋ. (Ṛ.)]

In this Ṛk it is said that Varuṇa, accompanied by Indra, binds with bonds that are not ropes. This word "noose" (pāśa) occurs in the whole Ṛgveda in only one place, in a mantra addressed to Agni, and that too in the context of praying to loosen the noose that binds his devotees. Therefore it may be said that these acts of noose-binding and release (loosening the noose) belong to Varuṇa alone. Varuṇa, together with Mitra, is the driver away, the hater and the punisher of untruth. Mitra and Varuṇa punish those who are negligent in their worship. But Varuṇa forgives those who repent; he unties them like a rope; and he effects the removal of sin. He releases a man not only from the sin committed by himself but also from the sin committed by his forefathers. Even those who daily transgress the very rules laid down by him and afterwards repent he saves. And he shows compassion to those who have transgressed his commands through forgetfulness. In Varuṇa there are hundreds and thousands of medicines. He drives death away and removes sin. He can take away life, and can also grant life. He is very skilful in protecting immortality (nityatva). Thus the description of Varuṇa's qualities is found in many Ṛks. Here we have described it very briefly; at a suitable occasion we shall describe it at length.

In the Taittirīya Saṃhitā—फल्गुनीनक्षत्रमर्यमा देवता .... अनूराधा नक्षत्रं मित्रो देवता (phalgunīnakṣatramaryamā devatā .... anūrādhā nakṣatraṃ mitro devatā) (Tai. Saṃ. 4--4-9-2 [as printed: two hyphens]), that is, it is said that Aryaman is lord of the (earlier) Phalgunī constellation and Mitra of the Anurādhā constellation.

Aryaman—In the sūktas addressed to the Ādityas, in general the Ādityas meant are Mitra, Varuṇa and Aryaman. As we have said before, in the Ṛgveda (Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-27-1) Mitra, Aryaman, Bhaga,

p. 365

Varuṇa, Dakṣa, Aṃśa: only the names of these six persons are there. In Ṛ. Saṃ. 9-114-3 the number of the Ādityas is given as seven, and in Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-72-8 it is said that Aditi first presented seven sons to the gods and afterwards obtained the eighth, Mārtaṇḍa. In Atharvaveda 8-9-21 and in Tai. Brā. 1-1-9-1 also it is said that Aditi had eight sons: Mitra, Aryaman, Varuṇa, Aṃśa, Bhaga, Dhātṛ, Indra and Vivasvān. In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (Śa. Brā. 6-1-2-8; 11-6-3-8) the Ādityas are said to be twelve, one for each month. In the Purāṇas and the like too the Ādityas are twelve in number.

Although the name of the deity Aryaman occurs in the Ṛgveda in about a hundred places, since he has no complete personality Yāska, in his Nirukta (Nighaṇṭu), when explaining the derivation of the names of the deities, has left out the name of this deity Aryaman. Except in two mantras, everywhere else he is mentioned only together with other deities, and that mostly together with Mitra and Varuṇa. Addressing Agni, in the context of wooing maidens, it is said:

> त्वमर्यमा भवसि यत्कनीनां नाम स्वधावन् गुह्यं बिभर्षि ।
> tvamaryamā bhavasi yatkanīnāṃ nāma svadhāvan guhyaṃ bibharṣi |

(Ma. Saṃ. 5-3-2) [as supplied: ಮ. (Ma.) for ಋ. (Ṛ.)]

that is, "you are Aryaman."

> भगो अर्यमा सविता पुरंधिर्मह्यं त्वादुर्गार्हपत्याय देवाः ।
>
> bhago aryamā savitā puraṃdhirmahyaṃ tvādurgārhapatyāya devāḥ |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-85-36)

In this Ṛk the bridegroom says: "O gods, Bhaga, Aryaman, Savitṛ and Purandhi gave this bride to me, to help me in the householder's stage of life."

> न तमंहो न दुरितं देवासो अष्ट मर्त्यं । सजोषसो यमर्यमा मित्रो नयंति वरुणो अति द्विषः ॥
>
> na tamaṃho na duritaṃ devāso aṣṭa martyaṃ | sajoṣaso yamaryamā mitro nayaṃti varuṇo ati dviṣaḥ ‖

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-126-1)

> शुनमस्मभ्यमूतये वरुणो मित्रो अर्यमा । शर्म यच्छंतु सप्रथ आदित्यासो यदीमहे अति द्विषः ॥
>
> śunamasmabhyamūtaye varuṇo mitro aryamā | śarma yacchaṃtu sapratha ādityāso yadīmahe ati dviṣaḥ ‖

(Ma. Saṃ. 10-126-7) [as supplied: മ. (Ma.) for ಋ. (Ṛ.)]

Although the deities of Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-126 are called Viśvedevas, it is chiefly the Ādityas who are praised here in the Ṛks cited above. Moreover, the words देवासः अष्ट (devāsaḥ aṣṭa) in the first Ṛk refer to the eight Ādityas (nowhere in the Veda is the number of the Ādityas said to be more than eight). Again, the word आदित्यासः (ādityāsaḥ) in the 7th Ṛk shows the same clearly. In every Ṛk of this sūkta (except the last Ṛk) the refrain वरुणो मित्रो अर्यमा (varuṇo mitro aryamā)

p. 366

("Varuṇa, Mitra, Aryaman"), the names of Mitra, Varuṇa and Aryaman, is repeated again and again like a refrain, which indicates that among the Ādityas these three, Mitra, Varuṇa and Aryaman, hold the chief place. Since the subject of Aryaman is not much described in the Ṛgveda, a detailed account is not possible.

Rudra—The explanation of the word Rudra by the Nirukta-writer is as follows:

> रुद्रो रौतीति सतः रोरूयमाणो द्रवतीति ना रोदयतेर्वा । यदरुदत्तद्रुद्रस्य रुद्रत्वं इति काठकं । यदरोदीत्तद्रुद्रस्य रुद्रत्वं इति हारिद्रविकं ॥
>
> rudro rautīti sataḥ rorūyamāṇo dravatīti nā rodayatervā | yadarudattadrudrasya rudratvaṃ iti kāṭhakaṃ | yadarodīttadrudrasya rudratvaṃ iti hāridravikaṃ ‖

(Ni. 10-5)

रुद्रनेंदरे रौति-स्तनयित्नुशब्दं करोति (rudranèṃdarè rauti-stanayitnuśabdaṃ karoti): Rudra is one who makes a sound like the thunder of a cloud; or रोरूयमाणो द्रवति (rorūyamāṇo dravati): one who moves swiftly while roaring; or रोदयतेः (rodayateḥ): one who makes enemies weep; and so on. In the Ṛgveda Rudra is not an influential deity, but in the Yajurveda, the Purāṇas and the like Rudra is regarded as a very important deity.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

भगं (bhagaṃ)—the worshipful; धियं (dhiyaṃ)—worthy of meditation; पुरंधिं (puraṃdhiṃ)—and all-wise Savitṛ; वाजयंतः (vājayaṃtaḥ)—worshipping (him); नः (naḥ)—us; नराशंसः (narāśaṃsaḥ)—the one praised by men; ग्नास्पतिः (gnāspatiḥ)—the protector of the gods' wives, Savitṛ; अव्याः (avyāḥ)—may he protect. वामस्य (vāmasya)—of wealth (and); रयीणां (rayīṇāṃ)—of cattle; आये (āye)—for the gain; संगथे (saṃgathe)—for the accumulation; देवस्य (devasya)—of the divine; सवितुः (savituḥ)—to Savitṛ; प्रियाः (priyāḥ)—(we) as beloved ones; स्याम (syāma)—may we be.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

May Savitṛ, who is praised by men and is the protector of the gods' wives, protect us who worship the worshipful, meditation-worthy, all-knowing Savitṛ. May we be beloved of the divine Savitṛ, for the gain and the accumulation of wealth and cattle.

Printed English translation

May he, who is adored by men, the protector of the wives (of the gods), preserve us; when worshipping him, who is auspicious, the object of meditation, and the all-wise : may we be the beloved of the divinc [sic] Savitri, that we may (thence be successful) in accumulation of wealth and the acquisition of cattle.

पुरंधिं— पुरस्य धारयितारं बहुप्रज्ञं वा (puraṃdhiṃ— purasya dhārayitāraṃ bahuprajñaṃ vā) ।—One who holds and nourishes our cities (puras). Or, since the word धी (dhī) also means wisdom, Purandhi is also understood as one possessed of much wisdom. Yāska has given the explanation of the word Purandhi as पुरंधिर्बहुधीः (puraṃdhirbahudhīḥ) (Ni. 6-13). The meaning is one of abundant intelligence, a discerning person.

p. 368

ग्नास्पतिः (gnāspatiḥ)—The word ग्नाः (gnāḥ) is read among the names of speech (Ni. 2-23) and among the names of women (Ni. 3-21). Yāska's explanation is also अपि च ग्ना व्यंतु देवपत्न्यः (api ca gnā vyaṃtu devapatnyaḥ) (Ni. 24-46) [as printed]. The commentator also cites the Vedic sentence छंदांसि वै ग्नाः (chaṃdāṃsi vai gnāḥ), that is, the metres too are called ग्ना (gnā). Therefore ग्नास्पतिः (gnāspatiḥ) may be taken as "the lord of the metres" or as "the husband of the gods' wives, that is, of the divine women". Yāska, citing the Ṛk

> उत ग्ना व्यंतु देवपत्नीरिंद्राण्य १ ग्नाय्यश्विनी राट् । आ रोदसी वरुणानी शृणोतु व्यंतु देवीर्य ऋतुर्जनीनां ॥

> uta gnā vyaṃtu devapatnīriṃdrāṇya 1 gnāyyaśvinī rāṭ | ā rodasī varuṇānī śṛṇotu vyaṃtu devīrya ṛturjanīnāṃ ‖

has stated the names of the gods' wives in his explanation:

> अपि च ग्ना व्यंतु देवपत्न्यः । इंद्राणींद्रस्य पत्न्यग्नाय्यग्नेः पत्न्यश्विन्यश्विनोः पत्नि राट् राजते । रोदसी रुद्रस्य पत्नि । वरुणानी च वरुणस्य पत्नि ॥

(Si. 12-46) [as printed]

That is: Indra's wife is called Indrāṇī, Agni's wife Agnāyī, the wife of the Aśvin gods Aśvinī, Rudra's wife Rodasī, and Varuṇa's wife Varuṇānī.

*[Note: in kn.md the two Sanskrit quotations above, printed as prose in the supplied text, were made > blocks with their references on their own lines; a line break with hyphen inside the second (*पत्न्यश्विन्य- / श्विनोः (patnyaśvinya- / śvinoḥ)) was joined; the readings इंद्राण्य १ ग्नाय्यश्विनी (iṃdrāṇya 1 gnāyyaśvinī) in the first and the reference letter सि. (si.) (for the Nirukta) are kept as supplied.]

The main purport: this god Savitṛ is worshipful and worthy of meditation, praised by men, the guardian of the gods' wives or the lord of the metres. May Savitṛ protect us who worship such a god. The meaning stated is that we, by worshipping this Savitṛ for the gain of wealth and the obtaining of cattle, may become the objects of his love.

Gist: Savitṛ, may the coveted wealth you give come to us from heaven, atmosphere and earth; may the wealth that brings happiness to the praisers' kin be mine, the praiser.

[Note: the bhāṣya as supplied reads अद्भो०तरिक्षलोकात् (adbhootarikṣalokāt); kept as supplied.]

सवितः (savitaḥ)—O Savitṛ; अस्मभ्यं (asmabhyaṃ)—to us; त्वया (tvayā)—by you; दत्तं (dattaṃ)—that which is given; तत् (tat)—the well-known; काम्यं (kāmyaṃ)—the attractive; राधः (rādhaḥ)—wealth; दिवः (divaḥ)—from the heavenly world; अदृ॑श्यः (adṛśyaḥ) [as supplied; evidently meant for अद्भ्यः (adbhyaḥ)]—from the atmosphere; पृथिव्याः (pṛthivyāḥ)—from the earth; आ गात् (ā gāt)—may it come and join; स्तोतृभ्यः (stotṛbhyaḥ)—of those who praise you; आपये (āpaye)—to the kinsfolk;

यत् (yat)—which wealth; शं (śaṃ)—as happiness-bringing; भवाति (bhavāti)—becomes; (तत् (tat)—that); उरुशंसाय (uruśaṃsāya)—to me who praises you greatly; जरित्रे (jaritre)—a devotee, the praiser (may it be obtained).

O Savitṛ, may the wealth given by you, well known and attractive, come and join me from the heavenly world, from the atmosphere and from the earth. The very wealth that becomes a source of happiness to the kinsfolk of those who praise you, may it be obtained also by me, who worship you and am your praiser.

Printed English translation

May that desirable wealth which is granted to us, Savitri, by you proceed from the sky, from the waters, from the earth; and may the happiness (which belongs) to the race of those who eulogise you, devolve upon me, repeating diligently you [sic] praises.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

अद्भ्यः—अंतरिक्षलोकात् (adbhyaḥ—aṃtarikṣalokāt)—Since the word अप् (ap) is read among the names of the atmosphere (Ni. 2-10), अद्भ्यः (adbhyaḥ) means "from the atmospheric world".

राधः (rādhaḥ)—Since the word राधः (rādhaḥ) is read among the names of wealth (Ni 3-9) [as printed, without the full stop], राधः (rādhaḥ) means wealth.

[Printed at the foot of p. 369: the stray figure "24" (a signature number), kept as an italic note.]

p. 370

आपेये—बंधवे तद्वंशजाय (āpèye—baṃdhave tadvaṃśajāya)—[The Kannada text spells the headword आपेये (āpèye), as supplied.] To the kinsfolk, and also to those born in their line.

उरुशंसाय—बहुस्तुतये (uruśaṃsāya—bahustutaye)—The word उरु (uru) is read among the names of "much" (Ni. 3-13). The meaning is: to one who praises you in many ways.

जरित्रे—स्तोत्रे मह्यं (jaritre—stotre mahyaṃ)—To me who am praising; the word जरिता (jaritā) is read among the names of praisers (Ni. 3-19).

The main purport: O god Savitṛ, whatever wealth you give to other praisers, obtainable from earth, atmosphere and heaven, give such wealth to me, who praise you in many ways, and to my kinsfolk. May happiness come to me through that attractive wealth that you give.

Anuvāda (Kannada). The sūkta beginning Grāṇeva [as supplied; the Sanskrit above has ग्रावेणेव (grāveṇeva)] is the seventh sūkta in the fourth anuvāka. It has eight ṛks. Gṛtsamada is the seer of this sūkta; the Aśvin gods are the deity; the metre is triṣṭubh. The Anukramaṇikā says: ग्राणेवाष्टावाश्विनं (grāṇevāṣṭāvāśvinaṃ) ("Grāṇeva, eight, addressed to the Aśvins" [the supplied text has ग्राणे (grāṇe) here]). Its application is in the Pravargya sacrifice, in the Abhiṣṭava in the earlier paṭala, as explained by the sūtra ग्राणेवेळे द्यावापृथिवी (grāṇeveḷe dyāvāpṛthivī) (Ā. 4-6) of the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra [as supplied]; and its application in the Prātaranuvāka and in the recitation of the Āśvina śastra is explained by the sūtra ग्राणेव नासत्याभ्यामिति त्रीणि (grāṇeva nāsatyābhyāmiti trīṇi) (Ā. 4-15).

Gist: Like two stones hurled at the foe, the Aśvins crush the foe; like two vultures to a fruit-laden tree they come to the wealthy sacrificer; like two priests and two royal messengers they are invoked by many.

(Aśvinau—O Aśvin gods). Grāvāṇeva—like stones thrown at an enemy. Tat artham—that enemy. Jarethe—destroy (him). Vṛkṣam—to the tree; Gṛdhreva—like a vulture going towards it. Vidathe—in the sacrificial house. Uktaśāsā—reciting the ukta. Brahmāṇeva—like Brāhmaṇas. Janyā—in the land. Dūteva—like royal messengers. Purutrā—by many sacrificers. Havyā—you who are to be invoked. Nidhimantam—to the wealthy sacrificer. Accha—come to him.

[Running head, p. 372: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3 [sic, as supplied; elsewhere Maṃ. 2], A. 4, Sū. 39.]

[Note: the label was garbled in the supplied text (೦ ಭಾನಾಥ್ಯ ೦) and was replaced by the standard label.]

O Aśvin gods, like stones thrown at the enemy, descend swiftly and destroy the foes. Like a vulture going towards a tree, like Brāhmaṇas reciting the ukta in the sacrificial house, like royal messengers in the land, you who are invoked by many sacrificers, come towards the wealthy sacrificer.

English Translation (as printed)

Descend, Ashwins, like falling stones, for the purpose (of destroying our foes); hasten to the presence of the wealth-possessing (worshippers), like, vultures to a tree: like two Brahmanas repeating hymns, (be present) at the sacrifice, and come like (royal) messengers in the land, welcomed by many people.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this sūkta the Aśvin gods are praised. In seven of its eight ṛks, all except the last, various similes (illustrations) are used in praying to the Aśvins; the use of many similes is the special feature of this sūkta. In many instances the simile does not fit exactly or is not apt to the occasion.

ग्रावाणेव तत् अर्थं इत् जरेथे—ग्रावाणेव अरातिं प्रति प्रेषितौ साषा-णाविव तमरातिं बाधेथां ।

commentator explains the word अर्थं (arthaṃ) as arāti, an enemy. For the word artha, formed from the root ऋ गतौ (ṛ gatau), the meaning is "the enemy who rushes forward (in battle)". Yāska states the etymology अर्थोऽर्तेः (arthoSrtèḥ) [as supplied, with a Latin S]; that is, according to the Kannada, the word artha is formed from the root आर्ति (ārti) (ārti), which indicates going; this is the sense of the etymology. O Aśvin gods, as stones thrown at enemies cause them pain, so you afflict them: such is the intention.

विदथे उक्तशासा ब्रह्माणेव-यज्ञे उक्तशंसितारौ ब्राह्मणाविव । (vidathe uktaśāsā brahmāṇeva-yajñe uktaśaṃsitārau brāhmaṇāviva |) The word vidatha is read among the names of sacrifice (Ni. 3-19). As Brāhmaṇas who recite the ukta and other mantras come to a sacrifice, so come to our sacrificial ground.

जन्या दूतेव—जनपदेषु राज्ञा प्रेषितौ दूताविव । (janyā dūteva—janapadeṣu rājñā preṣitau dūtāviva |) As a king sends his messengers into his realm and the messengers receive honour from the people, so you come to our sacrificial ground and be honoured with worship and the like: such is the intention.

Gist: The Aśvins go at dawn to the sacrifice, like two charioteer heroes, like a pair of twins, shining in body like two beautiful women, like husband and wife, skilled in rites among men; they come to the worshipper.

(Aśvinau—O Aśvin gods). Rathyeva vīrā—like two heroes seated in a chariot. Prātaryāvāṇā—going to the sacrifice at dawn itself. Ajīva [sic, as supplied; the Saṃhitā has अजाइव (ajāiva)]—like a pair of goats. Yamā—twins. Tanvā—by charming bodies. Śumbhamāne—shining.

[Running head, p. 374: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 4, Sū. 39.]

Mene iva—like two beautiful women. Dampatīva—like a husband and wife joined together. Janeṣu—among the people who perform sacrifice. Kratuvidā—you who know the nature of the rite being performed. Varam—to the sacrificer who worships in the best manner. Ā sacethe—come, both of you, together.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Aśvin gods, going at dawn itself to the sacrifice like two heroes seated in a chariot, twins like a pair of goats, like two beautiful women shining with charming bodies, like husband and wife, knowing the nature of the rites performed among the people who sacrifice, come, both of you together, to the sacrificer who worships in the best manner.

English Translation (as printed)

Moving at dawn like two heroes in a car ; like a pair of goats; like two women lovely in form ; or like husband and wife ; come together, knowing (how sacred) rites (are to be celebrated) amongst men, (to bestow) happiness (on the worshipper)

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this ṛk the Aśvins are described by several similes. प्रातर्यावाणा—प्रातरेव यज्ञार्थं गंतारौ । (prātaryāvāṇā—prātareva yajñārthaṃ gaṃtārau |) Those who go towards the sacrifice at dawn itself. Ordinarily the Aśvins, Uṣas and Savitṛ are invoked at dawn; so these are gods who go to the sacrifice at dawn. The Aśvins appear like two heroes seated in a chariot; like two goats of one form, that is, of like shape — the form of the two Aśvins is exactly the same, no difference is seen between them, so they are described as of like form, like twins; they are also like two beautiful women shining with charming bodies, and shine like a husband and wife endowed with beauty and youth. "Knowing the rites performed by people" means: knowing who in the land performs a sacrifice and at what times, they go there at their invitation. It is stated that such Aśvins should come together, both, to our sacrificial ground.

English Translation (as printed)

Come to us, the first (before other gods), like a pair of horns or like two hoofs, travelling with rapid (steps); like a pair of Chakravakas, awaiting day; overthrowers of foes, like warriors in cars, able (to perform all things), come to our presence.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

O Aśvin gods, you are lofty like the two horns of an animal; the foremost among the gods, or those who come to the sacrificial ground before all the other gods; swift in going like the hooves of horses, that is, travelling quickly. Such as you are, come toward us as the cakravāka bird awaits the day itself; and you who are like heroes seated in a chariot, who destroy enemies and are able in your deeds, come toward us, to the sacrificial ground — this is the main sense.

(Gist: like boats carry across rivers, like the yoke, nave, spokes and rim carry a chariot across rough places, carry us over difficulties; like two dogs or two coats of mail, be harmless to our bodies and protect us from old age.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

(Aśvinau—O Aśvin gods.) नावेव (nāveva)—as boats carry across a river. नः (naḥ)—us. पारयतं (pārayataṃ)—carry across from sorrow and protect. युगेव (yugeva)—like the "rogas" [sic, as supplied; the Bhāvārtha has "nogas", i.e. yokes] of a chariot, नभ्येव (nabhyeva)—like the naves, उपधीव (upadhīva)—like the spokes (as supplied, इरचि (iraci)), प्रधी इव (pradhī iva)—like the outer rims (as all these carry across a chariot with a pair of wheels), नः (naḥ)—us (carry across from sorrow). श्वानेव (śvāneva)—as dogs protect from those who do harm. नः (naḥ)—our. तनूनां (tanūnāṃ)—of the bodies. अरिषण्या (ariṣaṇyā)—be harmless. खृगलेव (khṛgaleva)—as coats of mail protect from the harm of enemies. विस्रसः (visrasaḥ)—from old age. आस्मान् (āsmān) [sic, as supplied for अस्मान् (asmān)]—us. पातं (pātaṃ)—protect.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Aśvin gods, as boats carry across a river, carry us across from sorrow and protect us. As the yokes, naves, spokes and outer rims of a chariot with two wheels carry it across rough places, so carry us across from sorrow. Like dogs and like coats of mail, protect us from the harm of enemies. Protect us from old age.

English Translation (as printed)

Bear us across (the sea of life), like two vessels, or (over difficult places), like the poles of a cas [sic], the axles, the spokes, the fellies (of two wheels): Be like two dogs, warding off injury to our persons, and, like two coats of mail, defend us from decay.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this ṛk the Aśvin gods are prayed, by many illustrations, to carry us, who offer praise, out of our troubles.

नावेव नः पारयतं—हे अश्विनौ नावाविव सिंधून् दुर्गाणि पारयतं । (nāveva naḥ pārayataṃ—he aśvinau nāvāviva siṃdhūn durgāṇi pārayataṃ |) O Aśvin gods, as a boat or ferry carries across rivers, remove our difficulties and carry us across our troubles. As rivers are crossed easily by a boat, so by your grace make us escape from our troubles — this is the sense.

[Running head, p. 378: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 4, Sū. 39. Line-end hyphens in the Sanskrit quotation joined by hand in the Kannada text. The Special Topics of Ṛk 4 continue from p. 377.]

युगेव नभ्येव उपधीव प्रधीव नः (पारयतं) (yugeva nabhyeva upadhīva pradhīva naḥ (pārayataṃ))—The yokes of a chariot, its axle, its spokes (iraci, as supplied) and its outer rims carry the chariot over (so that it travels easily); in the same way carry us out of sorrow.

श्वानेव नः तनूनां अरिषण्या—यथा श्वानौ बाधकेभ्यो रक्षंतौ तनोर्हिंसामपनयतः तथा अस्माकं अंगानां अहिंसकौ भवतं । (śvāneva naḥ tanūnāṃ ariṣaṇyā—yathā śvānau bādhakebhyo rakṣaṃtau tanorhiṃsāmapanayataḥ tathā asmākaṃ aṃgānāṃ ahiṃsakau bhavataṃ |) As the dogs we keep near us protect us from enemies who would do us harm, so protect us that no harm comes to our bodies.

खृगलेव विस्रसः अस्मान् पातं—यथा तनुत्राणे तनुहिंसाया रक्षतः तथा युवां जरायाः अस्मान् पातं । (khṛgaleva visrasaḥ asmān pātaṃ—yathā tanutrāṇe tanuhiṃsāyā rakṣataḥ tathā yuvāṃ jarāyāḥ asmān pātaṃ |) As the protective armour (iron coats of mail, "Armour" as printed in English) that we wear in battle and the like guards our body from the weapons of enemies, so protect us from the affliction of old age — this is the main purport.

O Aśvin gods, come toward us like the storm winds of unobstructed power, like swiftly flowing rivers, like eyes that have the power of sight. You who bring comfort to the body like two hands and two feet, lead us toward the best wealth.

English Translation (as printed)

Irresistible as two winds, rapid as two rivers, and quick of sight, come like two eyes before ns [sic]; like two hands; like two feet; subservient to the well-being of our bodies, conduct us to (the acquirement) of excellent (wealth).

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

अजुर्या वातेव, रीतिः नद्येव, चक्षुषा अक्षी इव अर्वाक् आ यातं । (ajuryā vāteva, rītiḥ nadyeva, cakṣuṣā akṣī iva arvāk ā yātaṃ |) The ṛṣi prays by illustrations that the Aśvin gods come quickly to us. Nothing can check the speed of a storm wind; it uproots the trees and the like in front of it. Often huts and houses cannot bear its force and are flung to a distant place. At sea it sinks ships. Therefore the force of the storm is unobstructed; nothing stands against it. In the same way a swiftly flowing river sweeps away everything in its path, and no one can stop a river's flow. For well-seeing eyes nothing is hidden; they can see what is near and what is far; their power of sight is vast. Therefore, O Aśvin gods, come toward us with unobstructed motion like the force of the storm, like a swiftly flowing river, like eyes that see everything. No one has the power to stop your coming toward us.

(Aśvinau—O Aśvin gods!) आस्ने (āsne) (āsne)—in the mouth. ओष्ठाविन (oṣṭhāvina) (oṣṭhāvina) [as supplied]—like the lips. मधु (madhu) (madhu)—sweetly. वदंता (vadaṃtā) (vadaṃtā)—speaking, and. स्तनाविव (stanāviva) (stanāviva)—like breasts (the Kannada gloss is printed స్తగళంతె (stagaḷaṃtè), a syllable missing). नः (naḥ) (naḥ)—us. जीवसे (jīvase) (jīvase)—for life. पिप्यतं (pipyataṃ) (pipyataṃ)—be nourishers. नासेव (nāseva) (nāseva)—like the nose. नः (naḥ) (naḥ)—our. तन्वः (tanvaḥ) (tanvaḥ)—of the body. रक्षितारा (rakṣitārā) (rakṣitārā)—be protectors. कर्णाविव (karṇāviva) (karṇāviva)—like ears. सुश्रिता (suśritā) (suśritā) [as supplied; the Saṃhitā has सुश्रुता (suśrutā)]—hearing excellent praises and the like. अस्मे (asme) (asme)—on our behalf. भूतं (bhūtaṃ) (bhūtaṃ)—be.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Aśvin gods, be to us like lips in the mouth, speaking sweetly; be like breasts, nourishing us for our living; and be like the nose, protectors of our body. Be to our share like ears, hearing excellent praises and the like.

English Translation (as printed)

Like two lips uttering sweet words; like two breasts yielding nourishment for our existence; be to us like two noses, preserving our persons, and like two ears for the hearing of agreeable (sounds).

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

> आस्ने ओष्ठाविव मधु वदंता—हे अश्विनौ ओष्ठाविव आस्याय मधुररसवद्वचनं वदंतौ ।
> āsne oṣṭhāviva madhu vadaṃtā—he aśvinau oṣṭhāviva āsyāya madhurarasavadvacanaṃ vadaṃtau |

O Aśvin gods, just as the two lips in our mouth give us joy when they speak pleasant words, sweet like honey-juice, so do good to us.

स्तनाविव नः जीवसे पिप्यतं (stanāviva naḥ jīvase pipyataṃ)—As the breasts of the mother, when we were infants, gave us milk and made us grow, so nourish us by giving us food and the like.

नासेव नः तन्न रक्षितारा (nāseva naḥ tanna rakṣitārā) (as supplied; the Pratipadārtha has ಅನ್ನಃ)—As our nose, by giving warning, keeps us from going to foul-smelling places, so protect us from any harm by enemies and from other kinds of danger.

कर्णाविव सुश्रिता अस्मे भूतं (karṇāviva suśritā asme bhūtaṃ) (as supplied)—As our ears feel joy on hearing pleasing words, so hear the excellent praises we recite and take delight.

अस्मे (asme)—This word is used in the sense of all seven case-endings. Example—

> अस्मे ते बंधुः । वयमित्यर्थः ॥
>
> asme te baṃdhuḥ | vayamityarthaḥ ||
>
> अस्मे इत्येतत्पदं सर्वविभक्त्यंतं । तस्मादनेकार्थं । एकमेव हैतच्छब्धरूपं सप्तस्वपि विभक्त्यर्थेषु वर्तते । प्रकरणादिवशात् तस्य नियमो भवति । तद्यथा— प्रथमायास्तावत्— अस्मे ते बंधुः । वयमित्यर्थः ॥
> asme ityetatpadaṃ sarvavibhaktyaṃtaṃ | tasmādanekārthaṃ | ekameva haitacchabdharūpaṃ saptasvapi vibhaktyartheṣu vartate | prakaraṇādivaśāt tasya niyamo bhavati | tadyathā— prathamāyāstāvat —asme te baṃdhuḥ | vayamityarthaḥ ||

That is, the word अस्मे (asme) is used in the sense of the seven case-endings according to context; that is, according to the passage, any one of the seven case meanings can be given to this word. For example, in the sentence अस्मे (asme) (continued on the next page)

[Running head, p. 382: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 4, Sū. 39. A stray "1." printed before items (2) and, on p. 383, (6) in the supplied text was removed.]

ते बंधुः (te baṃdhuḥ), the word अस्मे (asme) means वयं (vayaṃ)—"we". This is an example of the sense of the nominative.

> अस्मे यातं नासत्या सजोषाः । आस्मानित्यर्थः ॥
> asme yātaṃ nāsatyā sajoṣāḥ | āsmānityarthaḥ ||

द्वितीयायास्तावत् (dvitīyāyāstāvat)—for the word अस्मे (asme) the meaning is the accusative अस्मान् (asmān)—"us". As an example of this meaning:

> आ श्येन्यस्य जवसा नूतनेनास्मे यातं नासत्या सजोषाः । हवे हि वामश्विना रातहव्यः शश्वत्तमाया उषसो व्युष्टौ ॥
>
> ā śyenyasya javasā nūtanenāsme yātaṃ nāsatyā sajoṣāḥ | have hi vāmaśvinā rātahavyaḥ śaśvattamāyā uṣaso vyuṣṭau ||

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-118-111 as printed)

They have given this Ṛk. In it the word अस्मे (asme) means अस्मान् (asmān)—"us".

> अस्मे समानेभिवृषभ पौंस्येभिः । अस्माभिरित्यर्थः ।
> asme samānebhivṛṣabha pauṃsyebhiḥ | asmābhirityarthaḥ |

तृतीयायास्तावत् (tṛtīyāyāstāvat)—here अस्मे (asme) means अस्माभिः (asmābhiḥ)—"by us", the sense of the instrumental. On this point—

> भूरि चकर्थ युज्येभिरस्मे समानेभिवृषभ पौंस्येभिः । भूरीणि हि कृणवामा शविष्ठेंद्र क्रत्वा मरुतो यद्वशाम ॥
>
> bhūri cakartha yujyebhirasme samānebhivṛṣabha pauṃsyebhiḥ | bhūrīṇi hi kṛṇavāmā śaviṣṭheṃdra kratvā maruto yadvaśāma ||

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-165-7)

They have given this Ṛk as the example. Here अस्मे (asme) means अस्माभिः (asmābhiḥ)—"by us".

> अस्मे प्रयंधि मघवन्नजीषिन् । अस्मभ्यमित्यर्थः ॥
> asme prayaṃdhi maghavannajīṣin | asmabhyamityarthaḥ ||

चतुर्थ्यास्तावत् (caturthyāstāvat)—here अस्मे (asme) means अस्मभ्यं (asmabhyaṃ)—"for us", the sense of the dative. Example—

> अस्मे प्रयंधि मघवन्नजीषिन्निंद रायो विश्ववारस्य भूरेः । अस्मे शतं शरदो जीवसे धा अस्मे वीराञ्छत इंद्र शिप्रिन् ॥
> asme prayaṃdhi maghavannajīṣinniṃda rāyo viśvavārasya bhūreḥ | asme śataṃ śarado jīvase dhā asme vīrāñchata iṃdra śiprin ||

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-36-10)

In this Ṛk the words अस्मे (asme) mean अस्मभ्यं (asmabhyaṃ)—"for us", the sense of the dative.

> अस्मे आराच्चिद्वेषः सनुतर्ययोतु । अस्मदित्यर्थः ।
> asme ārāccidveṣaḥ sanutaryayotu | asmadityarthaḥ |

पंचम्यास्तावत् (paṃcamyāstāvat) here अस्मे (asme) means अस्मत् (asmat)—"from our side" (the Kannada text has ದಿಶೆಯಿಂದ, as supplied). Example—

> तस्य वयं सुमता यज्ञियस्यापि भद्रे सौमनसे स्याम । स सुत्रामा स्ववा इंद्रो अस्मे आराच्चिद्वेषः सनुतर्ययोतु ॥
>
> tasya vayaṃ sumatā yajñiyasyāpi bhadre saumanase syāma | sa sutrāmā svavā iṃdro asme ārāccidveṣaḥ sanutaryayotu ||

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-47-13)

[Running head, p. 383, as supplied: "ಅ. ೨. ಅ. ೮. ವ. ೫] ಋಗ್ವೇದಸಂಹಿತಾ 383".]

In this Ṛk the word अस्मे (asme) means अस्मत् (asmat)—"from our side"; this is the sense of the ablative (the Kannada text prints ಸಂಚಮೀ, as supplied).

1.

> ऊर्व इव पप्रथे कामो अस्मे । अस्माकमित्यर्थः ।
>
> ūrva iva paprathe kāmo asme | asmākamityarthaḥ |

षष्ठ्यास्तावत् (ṣaṣṭhyāstāvat)—here अस्मे (asme) means अस्माकं (asmākaṃ)—"to us" (as supplied; "our"). To explain this meaning—

> आ नो भर भगमिंद्र द्युमंतं नि ते देष्णस्य धीमहि प्ररेके । ऊर्व इव पप्रथे कामो अस्मे तमा पृण वसुपते वसूनां ॥
> ā no bhara bhagamiṃdra dyumaṃtaṃ ni te deṣṇasya dhīmahi prareke | ūrva iva paprathe kāmo asme tamā pṛṇa vasupate vasūnāṃ ‖

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-30-19)

They have cited this Ṛk. In it the word अस्मे (asme) means अस्माकं (asmākaṃ)—"our, to us", the sense of the genitive.

> अस्मे धत्त वसवो वसूनि । अस्मास्वित्यर्थः ॥
>
> asme dhatta vasavo vasūni | asmāsvityarthaḥ ‖

सप्तम्यास्तावत् (saptamyāstāvat)—here अस्मे (asme) means "in us". For example—

> अग्ने वाजस्य गोमत ईशानः सहसो यहो । अस्मे धेहि जातवेदो महि श्रवः ॥
>
> agne vājasya gomata īśānaḥ sahaso yaho | asme dhehi jātavedo mahi śravaḥ ‖

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-29-4)

In this Ṛk the word अस्मे (asme) means अस्मासु (asmāsu)—"in us", the sense of the locative.

Gist: the Aśvins are asked to give strength like two hands, to bestow waters or abodes like heaven and earth, and to sharpen the praises like a blade on a whetstone.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

अश्विनौ (aśvinau)—O Aśvin deities; हस्तेव (hasteva)—like two hands; शक्तिं (śaktiṃ)—strength; नः (naḥ)—to us; अभि संददी (abhi saṃdadī)—be givers (printed कोडुववरागिरि (koḍuvavarāgiri)); क्षामेव (kṣāmeva)—like heaven and earth; रजांसि (rajāṃsi)—waters (or places); नः (naḥ)—to us; समजतं (samajataṃ)—impel; स्वधितिं (svadhitiṃ)—a sword; क्षोत्रेणेव (kṣotreṇeva)—as one rubs it on a whetstone and makes it sharp; इमा

गिरः (imā giraḥ)—our words of praise; युष्मयंतीः (yuṣmayaṃtīḥ)—approaching you and pleasing you; सं शिशीतं (saṃ śiśītaṃ)—make sharp.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Aśvin deities, be givers of strength to us, like two hands. Like heaven and earth, impel (give) waters to us. As a sword is rubbed on a whetstone and made sharp, make these our words of praise so sharp that they approach you and give you satisfaction.

Printed English translation

Like two hands, Ashwins, be ever investing us with vigour ; like heaven and earth, bestow upon us rain : give sharpness to the praises that are addressed to you, as they whet an axe upon a grindstone.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

क्षामा—रोदसी इव (kṣāmā—rodasī iva). Although the word क्ष्या (kṣyā) or क्षामा (kṣāmā) is listed among the names of the earth, here it is a dual-ending word and is used to denote heaven and earth. Since all the qualifying words describing the Aśvin deities in this sūkta are in the dual, the word क्षामा (kṣāmā) too must be taken as dual, and the sense "the two worlds" or "heaven and earth" given to it.

p. 385

> रजो रजतेर्जोर्यती रज उच्यते । उदकं रज उच्यते । लोका रजांस्युच्यंते
>
> rajo rajaterjoryatī raja ucyate | udakaṃ raja ucyate | lokā rajāṃsyucyaṃte

(Nir. 4-19)

Since Yāska gives this etymology, in the present context both meanings, water and worlds, can be given.

क्षोत्रेणेव—तेजनशाणवत् (kṣotreṇeva—tejanaśāṇavat). A whetstone or another kind of stone used for rubbing and sharpening weapons such as swords and knives.

स्वधितिं (svadhitiṃ)—The word स्वधिति (svadhiti) is read among the names of the thunderbolt (Nir. 3-11). It is also customary to call sharp swords and other weapons स्वधिति (svadhiti); in the scriptural sentence ओषधे त्रायस्यैनं स्वधिते मैनगं् हिगं्सीः (oṣadhe trāyasyainaṃ svadhite mainagṃ higṃsīḥ) too the word स्वधिति (svadhiti) is used in the sense of a knife (a razor).

शिशीतं—सम्यक् तीक्ष्णीकुरुतं (śiśītaṃ—samyak tīkṣṇīkurutaṃ): make well sharp. For the word शिशीते (śiśīte) Yāska gives the etymology—

> शिशीते । शिशीते शृंगे रक्षसे विनिक्षे । निश्यति शृंगे रक्षसो विनिक्षणनाय । रक्षो रक्षितव्यमस्मात् । रहसि क्षणोतीति ना । रात्रौ नक्षत इति वा ॥
> śiśīte | śiśīte śṛṃge rakṣase vinikṣe | niśyati śṛṃge rakṣaso vinikṣaṇanāya | rakṣo rakṣitavyamasmāt | rahasi kṣaṇotīti nā | rātrau nakṣata iti vā ||

(Nir. 4-18)

Quoting the mantra शिशीते शृंगे रक्षसे विनिक्षे (śiśīte śṛṃge rakṣase vinikṣe), he explains the meaning of the word शिशीते (śiśīte): a bull (or an animal) rubs and sharpens its horn in order to kill enemies or to protect itself.

अश्विना हस्तेव शक्तिं नः अभि संददी (aśvinā hasteva śaktiṃ naḥ abhi saṃdadī)—

> हे अश्विनौ हस्ताविव सामर्थ्यं अस्माकमाभिमुख्येन प्रयच्छंतौ भवतं ।
> he aśvinau hastāviva sāmarthyaṃ asmākamābhimukhyena prayacchaṃtau bhavataṃ |

No work can be done without the help of the hands; hence the hands are well known to have the power of working. Therefore, O Aśvin deities, as our hands give us strength in all our tasks and carry the work through, so you two, like two hands, produce in us strength and capacity in all matters: this is the purport.

क्षामेव रजांसि नः समजतं (kṣāmeva rajāṃsi naḥ samajataṃ)—

> रोदसी इव नः स्थानान्युदकानि वा प्रयच्छतं ।
> rodasī iva naḥ sthānānyudakāni vā prayacchataṃ |

As heaven and earth provide us dwelling places to live in, and give the rain-waters that sustain life, and protect us, so you too provide us with dwelling places and rain, and protect us.

स्वधितिं क्ष्णोत्रेणेव इमा गिरः युष्मयंतीः सं शिशीतं (svadhitiṃ kṣṇotreṇeva imā giraḥ yuṣmayaṃtīḥ saṃ śiśītaṃ)—

> अपि च हे आश्विनौ आस्माभिः कृताः स्तुतीः युवामिच्छंतीः आसिं तेजनशाणवत् समक्तीक्ष्णि–

And, O Aśvin deities, as a sword is rubbed on a whetstone and made sharp, make sharp the words of praise we make for you; that is, listen to our praises with regard: this is the purport.

Gist: the Gṛtsamadas made these growth-giving mantras and praise for the Aśvins; they are asked to come, pleased, and the we, with good sons, will praise them at the sacrifice.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

अश्विना (aśvinā)—O Aśvin deities; वां (vāṃ)—of you two; वर्धनानि (vardhanāni)—means of growth (satisfaction); एतानि ब्रह्म (etāni brahma)—these mantras in the form of praise; स्तोमं (stomaṃ)—praise in the form of a stoma; गृत्समदासः (gṛtsamadāsaḥ)—the Gṛtsamada sages; अक्रन् (akran)—have made; तानि (tāni)—those praises; नरा (narā)—you leaders; जुजुषाणा (jujuṣāṇā)—enjoying them with regard; उपयातं (upayātaṃ)—come to us; सुवीराः (suvīrāḥ)—we, endowed with excellent heroic sons; विदथे (vidathe)—in the sacrificial house; बृहत् (bṛhat)—abundant praise; वदेम (vadema)—we recite.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Aśvin gods, the Gṛtsamada seers have composed these mantras in the form of praise, and this praise in the form of a stoma, which are the means of satisfying you both. O leaders, come to us, enjoying those praises with regard. We, endowed with excellent heroic sons, recite abundant praise in the sacrificial house.

Printed English

The Gritsmadas have composed this prayer, these praises, Ashwins, for your exaltation : be propitiated by them leaders of ceremonies, and come hither ; that, blessed with excellent descendants, we may worthily glorify you at this sacrifice.

वर्धनानि—वृद्धिसाधनानि । (vardhanāni—vṛddhisādhanāni |) (vardhanāni, means of growth). There is a custom of saying that when the gods' qualities are sung with mantras, their power and capacity increase. Therefore here the praises called brahma and stomaṃ are said to be means of growth. On this point many Śruti sentences can be cited, such as इमा वर्धंतु वां गिरः । (imā vardhaṃtu vāṃ giraḥ |), वर्धंतु त्वा सुष्टुतयः । (vardhaṃtu tvā suṣṭutayaḥ |), गीर्भिर्वर्धयामो वचोभिः । (gīrbhirvardhayāmo vacobhiḥ |) and others.

Anuvāda (Kannada). The sūkta beginning सोमापूषणा (somāpūṣaṇā) is the eighth sūkta in the fourth anuvāka. It has six ṛks. Gṛtsamada is the seer of this sūkta; the metre is triṣṭubh; the two deities Soma and Pūṣan are the deity of the sūkta. The Anukramaṇikā says: सोमापूषणा षट् सोमापौष्णमंत्योऽर्धर्चोऽप्यदितेः (somāpūṣaṇā ṣaṭ somāpauṣṇamaṃtyoSrdharcoSpyaditeḥ) ("Soma and Pūṣan, six; the last half-verse is addressed to Aditi as well"). The deity of the latter half of the last Ṛk, "Avatu devy aditiḥ", is Aditi. In the animal sacrifice performed for Soma and Pūṣan, when the offerings of omentum and cake are made, the first three Ṛks of this sūkta are to be used as anuvākyā mantras and the last three as yājyā mantras, as explained by the sūtra beginning सोमापूषणा जननना याणां (somāpūṣaṇā jananā yāṇāṃ) in the section "Agnīṣomau" of the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra (Ā. 3-8). [The sūtra is printed रयीणां (rayīṇāṃ) in the Sanskrit block above and याणां (yāṇāṃ) here, as supplied. The sūtra's anuvākya/yājyā sense is stated by the Kannada.]

[The heading lines of the supplied text, kept as a note: ಸೂಕ್ತ—೪೦; Maṇḍala 2, Anuvāka 4, Sūkta 40; Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 6; number of ṛks in the sūkta: 6; seer: Gṛtsamada; deity: Ṛks 1 to 5 and the first half of Ṛk 6: Soma and Pūṣan; the latter half of 6: आदितिः (āditiḥ) (as supplied, for Aditi); metre: Triṣṭubh.]

Pīṭhike (Introduction)

The deities of this sūkta are Soma and Pūṣan. In the Ṛgveda it is seen specially that two deities are joined together and invoked and praised together.

p. 389

[Running head, p. 389: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 6; Ṛgvedasaṃhitā 389.]

Mantras that address two deities of this kind (pairs of deities) are called saṃstavika mantras. The principal deities among them are fourteen: Agni, Soma, Varuṇa, Pūṣan, Bṛhaspati, Brahmaṇaspati, Parvata, Kutsa, Viṣṇu, Vāyu, Mitra, Rudra, Vāta, Parjanya. [Fourteen as stated in the supplied text; the list given has fourteen names.] Thus:

Indrāgnī (Indra + Agni)—

> इंद्राग्नी रोचना दिवः
>
> iṃdrāgnī rocanā divaḥ

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-12-9).

Indrāsomā (Indra + Soma)—

> इंद्रासोमा समघशंसं
>
> iṃdrāsomā samaghaśaṃsaṃ

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-104-2).

Indrāvaruṇā (Indra + Varuṇa)—

> इंद्रावरुणा युवमध्वराय नः
>
> iṃdrāvaruṇā yuvamadhvarāya naḥ

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-82-1).

Indrāpūṣaṇā (Indra + Pūṣan)—

> इंद्रापूषणा वयं
>
> iṃdrāpūṣaṇā vayaṃ

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-57-1).

Indrābṛhaspatī (Indra + Bṛhaspati)—

> इदं वामास्ये हविः प्रियमिंद्राबृहस्पती
>
> idaṃ vāmāsyè haviḥ priyamiṃdrābṛhaspatī

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-49-1).

Indrābrahmaṇaspatī (Indra + Brahmaṇaspati)—

> अच्छेंद्राब्रह्मणस्पती हविर्नः
>
> accheṃdrābrahmaṇaspatī havirnaḥ

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-24-12).

Indrāparvatā (Indra + Parvata)—

> इंद्रापर्वता बृहता रथेन
>
> iṃdrāparvatā bṛhatā rathena

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-53-1).

Indrākutsā (Indra + Kutsa)—

> इंद्राकुत्सा वहमाना रथेन
>
> iṃdrākutsā vahamānā rathena

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-31-9).

Indrāviṣṇū (Indra + Viṣṇu)—

> इंद्राविष्णू दृंहिताः शंबरस्य
>
> iṃdrāviṣṇū dṛṃhitāḥ śaṃbarasya

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-99-5).

Indravāyū (Indra + Vāyu)—

> इंद्रवायू इमे सुताः
>
> iṃdravāyū ime sutāḥ

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-2-4).

Mitrāvaruṇā (Mitra + Varuṇa)—

> आ नो मित्रावरुणा
>
> ā no mitrāvaruṇā

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-62-16).

Somāpūṣaṇā (Soma + Pūṣan)—

> सोमापूषणा जनना रयाणां
>
> somāpūṣaṇā jananā rayāṇāṃ

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-40-1).

Vātāparjanyā (Vāta + Parjanya)—

> धर्कारो दिव ऋभवः सुहस्ता वातापर्जन्या महिषस्य तन्यतोः [?]

> dharkāro diva ṛbhavaḥ suhastā vātāparjanyā mahiṣasya tanyatoḥ [?]

[Note: the first word of the quotation is धर्कारो (dharkāro) as supplied; marked [?]. In kn.md the quotations of this page were made > blocks with the reference left on its own line.]

Agnīṣomau (Agni + Soma)—

> अग्नीषोमाविमं सु मे

> agnīṣomāvimaṃ su me

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-93-1).

Agnīsarjanyā (Agni + Sarjanya) [sic: the heading reads सर्जन्य (sarjanya) where the quotation has पर्जन्य (parjanya)]—

> अग्नीपर्जन्याववतं धियं मे

> agnīparjanyāvavataṃ dhiyaṃ me

(Ya. Saṃ. 6-52-16) [reference printed with the abbreviation य. सं. (ya. saṃ.) as supplied].

Agnāviṣṇū (Agni + Viṣṇu)—

> अग्नाविष्णू सजोषसा

> agnāviṣṇū sajoṣasā

(Tai. Saṃ. 4-7-1).

There are many such saṃstava mantras in the Ṛgveda. There are also many Ṛks which, when indicating a pair of deities, do not use the dual number but use the singular separately for each. For example—

> अग्न इंद्रश्च दाशुषे दुरोणे

> agna iṃdraśca dāśuṣe duroṇe

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-25-4).

> त्वं नो अग्ने वरुणस्य विद्वान् > tvaṃ no agne varuṇasya vidvān

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-1-4).

> मरुतः पिबत ऋतुना

> marutaḥ pibata ṛtunā

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-15-2).

and so on. In these Ṛks, although the pairs of deities Agni + Indra, Agni + Varuṇa, Marut + Ṛtu are indicated, the dual number has not been used. The deities are indicated separately, each in the singular.

Soma.

We have given explanations about the Soma plant many times. But everywhere there it was said that soma is the juice drawn from a kind of creeper called soma, that it gives enthusiasm and joy to those who drink it, and that, when the deities are invoked, they should come to the sacrificial ground and drink the soma juice; many such descriptions have been given. Apart from the ninth Maṇḍala, sūktas praising Soma as a deity are very rare in the other Maṇḍalas. All the sūktas of the ninth Maṇḍala praise only the deity Soma. On that occasion a detailed account of Soma is necessary, but a brief account here cannot be out of place.

[End of the page text; the note "..", a doubled full stop after स्तुतिसुवुदागिदे (stutisuvu dāgidè), is printed as supplied.]

p. 391

Since Soma sacrifices are the most important among the rites of the Ṛgveda, it is natural that the deity Soma too is one of the principal deities. The 114 sūktas of the ninth Maṇḍala and 6 other sūktas, 120 sūktas in all, praise the deity Soma. Parts of 4–5 sūktas, and 5–7 sūktas jointly with Indra, Agni, Pūṣan or Rudra, also praise the deity Soma. The name Soma occurs, alone or as part of a compound, about 120 times. In terms of number, the deity Soma stands third. Anthropomorphism is very sparing. Since the Soma plant and its juices are mentioned again and again, it is impossible to forget them entirely; hence references to the form, limbs or movements of that deity are also rare. Whatever deeds of prowess are mentioned are similar to those of other deities, and are colourless or subordinate. Like other deities, under the name Indu or Soma he too is invited to come to the sacrifice, sit on the darbha seat and accept the offerings. Throughout the ninth Maṇḍala the matter in hand is the Soma juice: pressing out the juice with stones, filtering it through a woollen sieve into wooden vessels, offering it to the deities as a drink through Agni (1-94-14; 5-51-1; 8-43-11 etc.), or its being drunk by the priests, and so on.

The Soma juice is mixed in three ways (trāśiraḥ, 5-27-5): mixed with milk (gavāśir), mixed with curds (dadhyāśir) and mixed with barley (yavāśir). This mixing is called "putting on a garment" (vastra, vāsaḥ, atka); "nirṇik" (shining garment, 9-14-5) is also said. This word is also used of the sieve (9-70-7). For this reason Soma is described as beautiful (9-34-4; etc.) and as abundantly adorned with ornaments (9-81-2). Rarely a mixing with ghee (9-82-2) or with water is also mentioned; but the word āśir is not used for these.

In the sacrifices āpyāyana (soaking again in water the half-pressed soma plants) is a rite (Mai. Saṃ. 4-5-5). In the Ṛgveda this root (āpyā) is used in connection with Soma, but here it is used to indicate that Soma is equal to the moon. Only in one place (9-31-4) might this sacrificial rite be indicated. It is said that the Soma juice swells like a river or the sea (9-64-8, 9-107-12).

Soma is pressed three times a day. The Ṛbhu deities are invoked to the evening pressing (4-33-11 etc.), Indra alone (4-36-7) to the midday pressing (3-21-1 and 2; 8-37-1), and Indra, to drink first, to the morning pressing (10-112-1).

[Note: in kn.md two colons between references (after "3-21-1 and 2" on p. 391 and after "9-77-1" on p. 392) were changed to semicolons so that the check does not read them as one reference.]

p. 392

[Running head, p. 392: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 4, Sū. 40.]

The Soma juice has an inexpressible power which ordinary food or drink does not have. By this power it invigorates men, or whoever drinks it, and makes them accomplish even deeds that are impossible for men. For that reason it is a divine drink, equal to nectar, and gives occasion to the idea that it is nectar itself. It would not be an exaggeration to say that those who drink it become immortal. It is the intoxicating drink dear to the deities (9-85-2) and the bestower of immortality (1-84-4); this juice, pressed by men and mixed with milk, is drunk by all the deities (9-109-15); by it they are quickly exhilarated (8-2-18) and, having drunk, become glad (8-58-11). Soma is eternal (1-43-9; 8-88-12; 9-3-1 etc.); the deities drank it to obtain immortality (9-106-8). He (the deity Soma) bestows immortality on the deities (1-91-6; 9-108-3) and on men (1-91-1; 8-48-3). In the imperishable world, the seat of everlasting radiance and glory, the dwelling-place of Vaivasvata, he makes his worshipper immortal and places him there (9-113-7 and 8).

By drinking the Soma juice a man's enthusiasm increases. But the Soma juice is chiefly offered to the deities; therefore the joy and enthusiasm arising from Soma arise in the deities. The effect of the intoxication arising from Soma falls mostly on Indra. It helps Indra to subdue the hostile powers in the atmosphere. It is said many times that the special power and ability needed to fight Vṛtra came from the Soma juice (8-81-17 etc.). In the intoxication produced by the Soma juice Indra defeats all enemies (9-1-10), and no one can face in battle Indra who has drunk Soma (6-47-1). Soma is the very self of Indra (9-85-3); the auspicious Mitra (10-25-9) increases Indra's might (9-76-2) and helps in the slaying of Vṛtra (9-61-22). Accompanied by Soma, Indra made the waters flow for men and slew the serpent (4-28-1). Hence sometimes Soma itself is called Indra's thunderbolt (9-72-7; 9-77-1; 9-111-3). This Soma juice, belonging to Indra, becomes the thunderbolt that wins a thousand victories (9-47-3). The intoxicant that can destroy hundreds of strongholds is the Soma juice (9-48-2), and it is the plant that slays Vṛtra and intoxicates (6-17-11). In this way the deity Soma himself, like Indra, is called the slayer of Vṛtra and the breaker of strongholds (9-88-4). Indra's own epithet "Vṛtrahā" is applied to Soma five or six times.

Because it is the most important plant, the Soma plant is called the lord of all plants (9-114-2), the king (9-97-18 and 19), the lord of the forest (vanaspati, 1-91-6; 9-12-7) and of all plants and it is also said to be the fundamental (root) one (1-91-22). In the Brāhmaṇas all trees are named saumya (सौम्य (saumya), connected with Soma, Śa. Brā. 12-1-1-2). Moreover, like other principal deities, Soma too has the name "king". He is the king of the rivers (9-89-2) and of the whole world (9-97-58); the king or father of the deities (9-86-10; 9-87-2; 9-109-4); the king of the divine men (9-97-24) and of the Brāhmaṇas (Vā. Saṃ. 9-40; Tai. Saṃ. 1-8-10; Mai. Saṃ. 2-6-9). That he is a deity has been said many times; only in one place (9-3-6 and 7) is he described as a deity who is suta (pressed out, squeezed) for the deities.

p. 393

In later literature "Soma" is the name of the moon. When the deities have drunk him and he has waned, the sun makes him full again. In the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (5-10-1) it is said that the moon is Soma, that he is the food of the deities, and that they drink him up. In the Brāhmaṇas themselves the identity of moon and Soma is a common matter: King Soma is the food of the deities and he is the moon (Śa. Brā. 1-6-4-5). That plant useful in yoga, or its juice, indicates the moon-deity (Kau. Brā. 7-10; 4-4). The opinion of the Brāhmaṇas is that the moon wanes day by day because the Pitṛs and the deities consume him, who is of the nature of nectar. In the Yajurveda it is said that the daughters of Prajāpati are the wives of the moon and that they are the cluster of stars. In the Atharvaveda (Ā. Va. 7-81-3 and 4; 11-6-7 etc.) wherever "Soma" occurs the meaning is generally the moon. Among the passages that state the identity of moon and Soma, the 85th sūkta of the tenth Maṇḍala (10-85), describing the marriage of Soma and Sūryā [printed "Sūraiya", sic], is the chief. Here Soma is in the lap of the stars. It is said that no one eats the Soma known to the priests, and that there is a difference between this Soma and that which they have to press. The secret of this is known only to the Brāhmaṇas. There are descriptions of Soma as heavenly, radiant, dispelling darkness and so on; moreover it has the name "Indu" (इंदु (iṃdu)) (6-44-21). It is compared to the moon reflected in the water in vessels (8-71-8; compare 1-105-1). The Soma described as drapsa (द्रप्प (drappa), a drop, a bead) and going to the sea (10-123-8) must also be the moon.

In the opinion of some, Soma means the moon and nothing but the moon, not another deity. The whole ninth Maṇḍala praises this moon [as printed]; wherever this word occurs in the Ṛgveda it indicates either the Soma creeper or the moon, these two only. They argue that the juice that comes from that creeper is nectar, that the moon is the support of that nectar, that the moon is a more important deity than the sun, and that after him comes Indra. Others, again, say that the above opinion has insufficient support in the Ṛgveda [printed "Ṛgvada", sic] or none at all. However much support the identity of moon and Soma may find in later works, in the Ṛgveda [printed "Ṛgvada", sic], among the hundreds of ṛks addressed to the deity Soma, it is only rarely, here and there, that it is hinted at, and nowhere is it stated clearly.

Besides, none of the commentators has said that there is any basis for this point in the Veda.

Pūṣā-Pūṣan. Of the deity called Pūṣan too we shall give a detailed account here. Since this deity is famous as one who searches for lost things and brings them back, in many ṛks there is a description of this kind. For this word (पूषा (pūṣā)) Yāska has given the etymology—

Quotation from the Nirukta, in Sanskrit:

> पूषा । अथ यद्रश्मिपोषं पुष्यति तत्पूषा भवति ॥
>
> pūṣā | atha yadraśmipoṣaṃ puṣyati tatpūṣā bhavati ||

(Ni. 12-16)

That is, because he nourishes with rays or beams, this deity has the name Pūṣā. From this etymology of the word, when this deity is described, epithets such as "endowed with brilliance", "luminous", "radiant" are used. From this very description they say that Pūṣan is one of the twelve Ādityas and a special form of the sun.

Quotation from the Bṛhaddevatā, in Sanskrit:

> पुष्यन् क्षितिं पोषयति प्रणुदन् रश्मिभिस्तमः । तेनैनमस्तौत्पूषेति भरद्वाजस्तु पंचभिः ॥
>
> puṣyan kṣitiṃ poṣayati praṇudan raśmibhistamaḥ |
> tenainamastautpūṣeti bharadvājastu paṃcabhiḥ ||

(Bṛ. De. 2-63)

That is: since he destroys the darkness and nourishes the earth so that it grows, the name Pūṣan suits this deity. The seer Bharadvāja praised this deity with five sūktas, so it is stated in the work called Bṛhaddevatā.

Pūṣan sees all living beings clearly, at one time (3-62-9). Like the sun he too is the lord of all things that move and do not move (1-115-1; 7-60-2). All living beings are known to him and he looks upon all living beings. Pūṣan was born on the way of far heaven and earth. His vehicle is the ram (aja); because he knows the paths, they call him the protector of the ways. He is the protector of every road (6-49-8). He is prayed to remove the trouble that may come on the road (6-54-9) and to make the road auspicious (10-59-7). On the highway and in the forest he is the one who shows the way. Therefore it is said that everyone setting out on a journey should travel invoking Pūṣan, the lord of the roads, and reciting the 53rd sūkta of the sixth Maṇḍala (6-53). It is said that all who have lost their way should take refuge in Pūṣan alone (Ā. Gṛ. 3-6-8; Sāṃ. Śrau. 3-4-9). It is his work to follow the cattle and protect them (6-54-5, 6, 10 and 6-58-2), to guard them so that they do not fall into a pit and get hurt, and to drive them home so that no harm befalls them, and to bring back the cattle that have strayed (6-54-7, 10), and so on.

Pūṣan is used in the dual number with Soma (2-40) and Indra (6-57), the two; once (6-55-5) he is called Indra's brother. Apart from these two, he is most often addressed together with Bhaga (1-90-4; 4-30-24; 5-41-4; 5-46-2; 10-125-2; compare Śa. Brā. 11-4-3-3; Kā. Śrau. Sū. 5-13-1), and with Viṣṇu (1-90-5; 5-46-3; 6-21-9; 7-44-1; 10-66.5, as printed). In all these mantras Pūṣan and another deity are spoken of as exactly equal. With other deities too there is a use here and there.

From the passages quoted so far it does not appear that Pūṣan is an element of nature. But many passages show that he is connected with the sun. Yāska too (Ni. 7-9) calls him the Āditya who protects all things. His chief functions are: setting the paths in order and bringing the dead to the place where the righteous are. By the first quality he is a guide and the protector of animals; that is, one may say that he is the one who improves the condition of the people.

This word Pūṣan is formed from the root पुष् (puṣ) (to produce nourishment). This quality is clear both from his epithets (विश्ववेदाः (viśvavedāḥ) अनष्टवेदाः (anaṣṭavedāḥ), पुरूवसु (purūvasu), पुष्टिंभर (puṣṭiṃbhara)) and from the prayers for wealth (6-48-15; etc.). He is the lord of immense wealth, of a stream and a heap of riches (6-55-2 and 3). But the wealth obtained from Pūṣan is not connected with rain, as is the wealth obtained from Indra, Parjanya, the Maruts and others; it is connected with radiance [light]. In this world he is a fearless refuge for men and cattle; in the other world he shows the way to blissful regions. By these the condition of the people improves and the people become happy. That is, Pūṣan may be called the part of the sun which is beneficent to the people.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

सोमापूषणा (somāpūṣaṇā)—O Soma and Pūṣan deities (both of you together). रयीणां (rayīṇāṃ)—of wealth. जनना (jananā)—you are the producers. दिवः (divaḥ)—of the heavenly world. जनना (jananā)—you are the makers. पृथिव्याः (pṛthivyāḥ)—of the earth. जनना (jananā)—you are the creators. जात् (jāt)—as soon as born. विश्वस्य भुवनस्य (viśvasya bhuvanasya)—of the whole world. गोपौ (gopau)—you, the protectors. देवाः (devāḥ)—the gods. अमृतस्य (amṛtasya)—of immortality. नाभिं (nābhiṃ)—as the cause. अकृण्वन् (akṛṇvan)—made.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Soma and Pūṣan deities, you two are the makers of wealth, of the heavenly world and of the earth. As soon as you were born you became the protectors of the whole world, and the gods made you the cause of immortality.

Printed English translation

Soma and Pushan, you two are the generators of riches, the generators of heaven, the generators of earth ; as soon as born you are the guardians of the whole world : the gods have made you the source of immortality.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

The meaning of this Ṛk is clear. O deities Soma and Pūṣan, you two are the lords of wealth, that is, you produce wealth (wealth in cattle). The heavenly world, that is, heaven, and the earth you yourselves have produced; heaven and earth came into being from you.

Moreover, as soon as you were born, that is, from birth, you are the protectors of the entire world. Therefore the gods made you the chief cause of the deathless state, or made you yourselves the cause of the deathless state; that is, it is through you that all attained the state of immortality (freedom from death): this is the chief meaning.

अमृतस्य (amṛtasya)—mṛta means dying; amṛta is the state of not having that, long life. There is a tradition that the gods do not undergo death and live for ever. Amṛta has many meanings: the Soma juice, water, the best food of the gods.

(Note: the Pratipadārtha entry अभ्यां सोमापूषभ्यां ( abhyāṃ somāpūṣabhyāṃ*) is split by the page break; the words are joined here.)*

These two divine beings Soma and Pūṣan: as soon as they are born all the gods worship them. They destroy the darknesses not fit to be served (that is, wanted by nobody). With the help of these Soma and Pūṣan deities Indra produced ripe milk in the udders of cows in their youth.

Printed English translation

(The gods) propitiate these two divinities at the moment of their birth, for they drive away the disagreeable glooms : with these two, Soma and Pushan, Indra generates the mature (milk) in the immature heifers.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

पक्वं (pakvaṃ)—परिपक्वं पयः । (paripakvaṃ payaḥ |) Milk that is ready so as to be fit for taking. Yāska explains the word pakva as पक्वमौषधं (pakvamauṣadhaṃ) (Ni. 5-28), and

> पक्वं–उदकदानं मेघं । बहूनां मेघानां मध्ये यः पक्वो मेघः उदकदाने समर्थः तं
>
> pakvaṃ-udakadānaṃ meghaṃ | bahūnāṃ meghānāṃ madhyè yaḥ pakvo meghaḥ udakadāne samarthaḥ taṃ

as its explanation. That is, fruits or herbs in trees such as vanaspati, filled with juices and ready for use; or, if taken as referring to the cloud, the cloud that has gathered water in itself and is able to shower rain. In whatever context the word pakva is used, its meaning may be said to be: a thing fit and ready for use. Since in the present Ṛk the words उस्रियासु अंतः (usriyāsu aṃtaḥ) are used, the thing filled in the udders of cows and ready for use is payas, milk: this is the sense.

अमासु (amāsu)—अपक्वासु । (apakvāsu |) Not yet fully matured, that is, not aged, in the youthful state, having newly calved: this is the meaning.

उस्रियासु (usriyāsu)—The word usriyā is read among the names of the cow (Ni. 3-9), and there is also an explanation

> उस्रियायाः । उस्रियेति गोनाम ! उस्राविणोऽस्यां भोगाः । उस्रेति च
>
> usriyāyāḥ | usriyeti gonāma ! usrāviṇo 'syāṃ bhogāḥ | usreti ca

(Ni. 4-19)

That is, because in her (the cow) the juice (milk), the means of enjoyment, flows (is milked), the cow is called usriyā or usrā. Among those, a cow in youth, that is, fit to give milk, is meant.

(Editorial note: in the supplied text the Sanskrit quotations on this page ran on as prose; they have been set as > blocks in the Kannada file, with the references on their own lines, and a hyphenated line break inside the bhāṣya quotation has been joined.)

> आभ्यां सोमापूषभ्यां इंद्रः आमासु उस्रियासु अंतः पक्वं जनत्—एताभ्यां सोमापूषभ्यां सह इंद्रः तरुणेषु गोषु मध्ये ऊधः प्रदेशे परिपक्वं जनयति ।

Along with these deities Soma and Pūṣan, Indra fills the udders of cows in their youth with ripe milk, that is, milk fit for use. This act of Indra is described in the Ṛks

> आमासु पक्वमैरय आ सूर्यं रोहयो दिवि ।
>
> āmāsu pakvamairaya ā sūryaṃ rohayo divi |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 8-89-7)

> आमासु चिद्दधिषे पक्वमंतः पयः कृष्णासु रुशद्रोहिणेषु ।
>
> āmāsu ciddadhiṣe pakvamaṃtaḥ payaḥ kṛṣṇāsu ruśadrohiṇeṣu |

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-62-9)

In the second example quoted above it is described that Indra fills even black or red cows with white milk: whatever the colour of the cow, its milk is white only; this is described as arising from Indra's surpassing power. About the phrase आ सूर्यं रोहयो दिवि (ā sūryaṃ rohayo divi) in the first example, the commentator gives an ancient story:

> पूर्वं पणयो नामासुरा अंगिरसां गा आपहृत्यांधकारावृते कस्मिंश्चित्पर्वते ताः स्थापितवंतः । ततोऽङ्गिरस इंद्रं स्तुत्वा गाः पुनरस्मभ्यमाहरेति तैरुक्त इंद्रो गवां स्थानं तमसावृतं दृष्ट्वा तत्र गोदर्शनाय द्युलोके सर्वप्रकाशकं सूर्यमारोहितवान् स्थापितवान् ॥
> pūrvaṃ paṇayo nāmāsurā aṃgirasāṃ gā āpahṛtyāṃdhakārāvṛte kasmiṃścitparvate tāḥ sthāpitavaṃtaḥ | tato 'jjirasa iṃdraṃ stutvā gāḥ punarasmabhyamāhareti tairukta iṃdro gavāṃ sthānaṃ tamasāvṛtaṃ dṛṣṭvā tatra godarśanāya dyuloke sarvaprakāśakaṃ sūryamārohitavān sthāpitavān ||

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 8-89-7, Sā. Bhā.)

In former times the asuras called Paṇis stole the cows of the Aṅgirases and kept them in a cave full of dense darkness in a certain mountain. The Aṅgiras sages then praised and pleased Indra and prayed that he bring back their cows. Indra, seeing that the place of the cows was very dark and that searching was impossible, and knowing that light was necessary to find the cows, set in the sky the sun that illumines everything with its radiance. By the light of that sun it became possible to search out and bring the cows: this is the ancient story. In the present Ṛk also, the statement इमौ तमांसि गूहतामजुष्टे (imau tamāṃsi gūhatāmajuṣṭe) (the darkness that had spread here was destroyed by Soma and Pūṣan), although it concerns Soma and Pūṣan, may be supposed to support that same matter of Indra's setting the sun in the sky to find the cows.

Gist: Soma and Pūṣan, showerers of desires, are asked to send to us the seven-wheeled (seven-season) chariot that measures the world and is yoked by the mind; Sāyaṇa takes the seven as the seasons including the thirteenth month and the five reins as five seasons (Hemanta and Śiśira counted together), citing the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (as printed, 1-1).

वृषणा (vṛṣaṇā)—showerers of desires. सोमापूषणा (somāpūṣaṇā)—O Soma and Pūṣan deities. रजसः (rajasaḥ)—of the world. विमानं (vimānaṃ)—that which divides and measures. सप्तचक्रं (saptacakraṃ)—having seven wheels in the form of seasons. अविश्वमिन्वं (aviśvaminvaṃ)—not distinct from the universe. विषुवृतं (viṣuvṛtaṃ)—pervading everywhere. पंचरश्मिं (paṃcaraśmiṃ)—having five reins (the Kannada print reads ಕಡಿವಾಣಗುಳ್ಳೂದು (kaḍivāṇaguḷuḷḷadū) for "having reins", apparently a misprint). मनसा (manasā)—by the mind alone. युज्यमानं

(yujyamānaṃ)—to be yoked and made ready. तं (taṃ)—that well-known. रथं (rathaṃ)—chariot. जिन्वधः (jinvadhaḥ) (as printed; the bhāṣya and Pada read जिन्वथः (jinvathaḥ))—urge towards us.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Soma and Pūṣan, showerers of desires: the chariot that divides and measures the world, has seven wheels in the form of seasons, has no state distinct from the universe, is pervading everywhere, has five reins, is to be yoked and made ready by the mind alone, and is well known: urge it towards us.

p. 401

Printed English translation

Soma and Pushan, showeres [sic] (of benifits [sic]), direct towards us the seven-wheeled car, the measure of the spheres, undistinguishable from the universe, everywhere existing, (guided) by five reins, and to be harnessed by the mind.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk the sage prays to Soma and Pūṣan: send towards us the chariot that has seven wheels, has the reins of five (horses), is able to travel everywhere, and is to be yoked and made ready by mere resolve of the mind. The chariot here is the year (saṃvatsara). The six seasons of the year together with the intercalary thirteenth month make seven seasons, the seven wheels. The five seasons: since there is a custom of calling the last two of the six seasons together by the name हेमंतशिशिरौ (hemaṃtaśiśirau), the total is stated here as five seasons. Those five seasons are the reins of the five horses. Such a chariot, the year, is all-pervading, that is, time contains everything; there is nothing distinct from it. The prayer is uttered here: come to us with such a chariot. It is said in the introduction to this sūkta that the deity Pūṣan is of the nature of Āditya (the sun). Since the divisions of time, year, seasons, months, days and so on, arise from the course of the sun, this is described here as the chariot of Soma and Pūṣan and is invoked.

वृषणा सोमापूषणा रजसः विमानं (vṛṣaṇā somāpūṣaṇā rajasaḥ vimānaṃ)—O Soma and Pūṣan, who pour out desired things, your (chariot) divides and measures the world. Here रजसः (rajasaḥ) means लोकस्य (lokasya); according to Yāska's explanation लोकाः रजांस्युच्यंते (lokāḥ rajāṃsyucyaṃte) (Ni. 4-19), the word rajas means world. To divide and measure the world means: as a stretch of land is measured by the going of a chariot, so by the chariot of time the extent of the worlds, or the extent of time, is divided. The sense is that by the course of Soma and Pūṣan, or of Āditya (the going of the chariot), the divisions of year, season, month, fortnight and day come about. This is what is described here by the words लोकस्य विमानं (lokasya vimānaṃ).

सप्तचक्रंरथं अविश्वमिन्वं विषूवृतं (saptacakraṃ rathaṃ aviśvaminvaṃ viṣūvṛtaṃ)—Here the seven wheels are the seven seasons. Ordinarily there are six seasons in a year, one season to every two months. When an intercalary month occurs there are thirteen months in the year. That thirteenth month alone, as one (text breaks off at the end of this page) taken as a season, there are seven seasons in all. On the matter of there being thirteen months in a year, the commentator has also cited the Śruti text अस्ति त्रयोदशो मास इत्याहुः (asti trayodaśo māsa ityāhuḥ) (Tai. Saṃ. 6-5-3-4). These seasons proceed one after another in a cyclic order. When all seven seasons have come once and ended, the first season comes again. Therefore these seven seasons are compared to the seven wheels of a chariot that is always revolving. For the word अविश्वमिन्वं (aviśvaminvaṃ) the meaning is विश्वस्यापरिच्छेद्यं (viśvasyāparicchedyaṃ), that is, not distinct from the universe. The sense is: since everything, that is, all places and times, is contained in the universe, there is no thing distinct from (different from) the universe; following this doctrine the chariot called time is described here as non-different from the universe [the print reads विश्वदिंब (viśvadiṃba) for "from the universe", apparently a misprint]. And for the word विषूवृतं (viṣūvṛtaṃ) — विश्वक् सर्वत्र परिवर्तमानं (viśvak sarvatra parivartamānaṃ) — following the same doctrine, it is described here that, because time pervades everything and there is nothing outside time and place, the chariot called time is pervading everywhere.

Stray line kept from the supplied text (a lone number at the end of the window, not part of the sense): 26

पंचरश्मिं (paṃcaraśmiṃ)—पंचर्तुरश्मिं । हेमंतशिशिरयोः समासेन ऋतवः पंच । (paṃcarturaśmiṃ | hemaṃtaśiśirayoḥ samāsena ṛtavaḥ paṃca |) Although there are six seasons in the year, one season to every two months, it is the custom to take the last two seasons, that is, Hemanta and Śiśira, as one season and to speak of them by the single word हेमंतशिशिरौ (hemaṃtaśiśirau); therefore it is also the custom to speak of five seasons. This matter is stated in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa sentence द्वादशमासाः पंचर्तवो हेमंतशिशिरयोः समासेन (dvādaśamāsāḥ paṃcartavo hemaṃtaśiśirayoḥ samāsena) (Ai. Brā. 1-1), and the commentator has cited this Śruti proof. These five seasons are the five rays (ropes), that is, the five reins (bridles) of the horses, as explained here.

मनसा युज्यमानं तं रथं जिन्वथः (manasā yujyamānaṃ taṃ rathaṃ jinvathaḥ) —मनोमात्रेण युज्यमानं प्रसिद्धं रथं प्रेरयथः । (manomātreṇa yujyamānaṃ prasiddhaṃ rathaṃ prerayathaḥ |) For yoking this chariot the help of hands and other limbs is not needed; by the mere resolve of the mind the chariot is yoked and made ready. The sage prays to Soma and Pūṣan: "Impel towards us such a chariot."

The other, Soma, has made his abode on the earth in the form of the plant and in the atmosphere in the form of the moon. p. 404 us much-desired and much-commended abundant wealth of cattle, the source to us (of enjoyments.)

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

पुरुवारं (puruvāraṃ)— बहुभिर्वर्णीयं । (bahubhirvarṇīyaṃ |) Desired by many; needed by everyone.

धनस्य पुष्टिं । पश्वात्मकं धनमित्यर्थः । (dhanasya puṣṭiṃ | paśvātmakaṃ dhanamityarthaḥ |) (on रायस्पोषं (rāyaspoṣaṃ)): the increase of wealth, that is, abundance of wealth. Indicating that it may also be said to mean wealth in cattle, wealth in the form of cattle, the commentator cites in support the Śruti sentence पशवो वै रायस्पोषः (paśavo vai rāyaspoṣaḥ) (Tai. Saṃ. 5-4-6-2). Since in the present Ṛk रायः पोषः (rāyaḥ poṣaḥ) are two separate words, the two words may be explained separately: रायः (rāyaḥ)—wealth, पोषः (poṣaḥ)—increase.

अन्यः पृथिव्यां अधि अंतरिक्षे (anyaḥ pṛthivyāṃ adhi aṃtarikṣe)—अपरः सोमः पृथिव्यां ओषधिरूपेण अंतरिक्षे च चंद्ररूपेण सदनं चक्रे । (aparaḥ somaḥ pṛthivyāṃ oṣadhirūpeṇa aṃtarikṣe ca caṃdrarūpeṇa sadanaṃ cakre |) The other, the deity Soma, has set up his place of residence on the earth and in the atmosphere; the sense is that he is on the earth in the form of the plant, that is, of the soma creeper, and in the atmosphere in the form of the moon.

Here a point calls for consideration. That the deity Soma dwells in the atmosphere in the form of the moon gives room for difference of opinion. The word soma is nowhere in the Ṛgveda used in the sense of the moon. The word is used only in the senses of the soma creeper, the soma juice, or the deity who is the presiding spirit of the soma creeper. In the Yajurveda and in the Purāṇas and similar works it is customary to give the word soma, besides the meaning of soma juice, the meaning of the moon, and of Īśvara or Rudra (उमया सहितः सोमः (umayā sahitaḥ somaḥ)). For the Śruti sentence सोम ओषधीनामधिपतिः (soma oṣadhīnāmadhipatiḥ) it is proper to explain that the soma creeper is the lord or king of the plants and trees. In the Purāṇas and similar works the meaning that the moon is the lord of them is explained. In the Yajurveda:

> सोमाभूयो भरेत्याहापरिमितानेव पशूवनरुंधे चंद्रमसि मम भोगाय भवेत्याह ।
> somābhūyo bharetyāhāparimitāneva paśūvanaruṃdhe caṃdramasi mama bhogāya bhavetyāha |

(Kṛ. Saṃ. 6-1-4-8)

Note on the kn.md edits: the Yajurveda quotation at the end of p. 404 was moved into a > block with its reference on its own line; the hyphen line-breaks inside the Pada and bhāṣya blocks were joined (the Pada's अस्मे-इति *(asme-iti) keeps the printed hyphen). The print's page 404 text breaks off here at the quotation; the translation of the sentence follows on the next page.*

p. 405

In this sentence Soma is addressed as being in the form of the moon. In the sense of Rudra, too, for the word soma—

नमः सोमाय च रुद्राय च । (namaḥ somāya ca rudrāya ca |) (Tai. Saṃ. 4-5-8-1)

[The same line is repeated in the supplied text:] नमः सोमाय च रुद्राय च । (namaḥ somāya ca rudrāya ca |) (Tai. Saṃ. 4-5-8-1)

—many such sentences can be cited from the Yajurveda and the other Vedas. But in the Ṛgveda alone the word soma means the soma creeper or Soma, the deity presiding over it. In Ṛks such as या ओषधी सोमराज्ञीः (yā oṣadhī somarājñīḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-97-18, 19) and ओषधयः सं वदंते सोमेन सह राज्ञा । (oṣadhayaḥ saṃ vadaṃte somena saha rājñā |) (10-98-22) too, it is stated quite clearly that the soma creeper, or Soma its presiding deity, is the king or lord of the plants and trees. Therefore to explain the word soma here as the moon, as is said in the Purāṇas and similar works, is not quite appropriate.

Besides this, the sentence दिव्यः अन्यः सदनं चक्रे उच्चा (divyaḥ anyaḥ sadanaṃ cakre uccā) can also be explained in another way. The commentator has said that the word अन्यः (anyaḥ) here means the deity Pūṣan, one of Soma and Pūṣan. But the word अन्यः (anyaḥ) can also be explained as the deity Soma, one of Soma and Pūṣan. In that case the sense can be stated that Soma, one of Soma and Pūṣan, has made his abode in the extremely lofty heavenly world. In support of this there are many Śruti sentences, such as तृतीयास्यामितो दिवि सोम आसीत् (tṛtīyāsyāmito divi soma āsīt) (Tai. Brā. 3-2-1-1) and तृतीयस्यामितो दिवि सोमस्तमाहर (tṛtīyasyāmito divi somastamāhara) (Tai. Saṃ. 6-1-6-1).

Next, the second sentence, पृथिव्यां अन्यः अधि अंतरिक्षे (pṛthivyāṃ anyaḥ adhi aṃtarikṣe), can be explained with reference to Pūṣan. This Pūṣan, being on the earth in the form of the deity Pūṣan, helps people by recovering lost things for them and by being a guide to those who have lost their way. Since Pūṣan is a portion of Āditya, that is the Sun, or is one of the twelve Ādityas, it is natural that this deity dwells in the atmosphere (in the Sun's place). Therefore this sentence can be explained as meaning that this deity Pūṣan has provided for himself a place both on the earth and in the atmosphere.

तौ अस्मे नाभिं पुरुवारं पुरुक्षुं रायः पोषं अस्मभ्यं वि ष्यतां (tau asme nābhiṃ puruvāraṃ purukṣuṃ rāyaḥ poṣaṃ asmabhyaṃ vi ṣyatāṃ)—हे सोमापूषणौ युवां बहुभिर्वर्णीयं बहुकीर्तिं धनस्य पुष्टिं विश्वस्य भोगस्य नाभिं हेतुभूतं अस्मभ्यं प्रयच्छतां ॥ (he somāpūṣaṇau yuvāṃ bahubhirvarṇīyaṃ bahukīrtiṃ dhanasya puṣṭiṃ viśvasya bhogasya nābhiṃ hetubhūtaṃ asmabhyaṃ prayacchatāṃ ‖) Here the prayer is stated: O Soma and Pūṣan, may you two give us what is desired by many, great fame (or food), and the increase of wealth that is the means of enjoyment, that is, abundance of wealth and wealth in cattle.

(Gist: Soma, one of the two, produced all beings; the other, Pūṣan (Āditya), goes about beholding the universe; protect my rite; through you may we conquer all hostile hosts. Hand-fixes to kn.md: the doubled label Sāyaṇa-bhāṣya was reduced to one; the Pratipadārtha, which the supplied text had inside the bhāṣya block under a garbled label "1 ಪ್ರತಿಪದಾರ್ಥ 1", was set out as its own section and un-quoted. भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Soma and Pūṣan, one of you, Soma, has created all beings; the other, Pūṣan, moves about looking upon the whole world. O Soma and Pūṣan, protect my rite. With your help may we conquer all the hostile armies.

p. 407

Printed English translation

One of you, (Soma), has generated all beings ; the other proceeds looking upon the universe : Soma and Pushan, protect my (pious) rite : through you, may we overcome all the hosts of our enemies.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

सोमापूषण् अन्यः विश्वानि भुवनानि जजान (somāpūṣaṇ anyaḥ viśvāni bhuvanāni jajāna)—हे सोमापूषण् युवयोरेकः विश्वानि भुवनानि भूतानि अजनयत् । (he somāpūṣaṇ yuvayorekaḥ viśvāni bhuvanāni bhūtāni ajanayat |) O deities Soma and Pūṣan, one of you, the deity Soma, created all the worlds or all beings (living creatures). In this matter, in the Ṛk

सोमः पवते जनिता मतीनां जनिता दिवो जनिता पृथिव्याः । जनिताग्नेर्जनिता सूर्यस्य जनितेंद्रस्य जनितोत विष्णोः ॥ (somaḥ pavate janitā matīnāṃ janitā divo janitā pṛthivyāḥ | janitāgnerjanitā sūryasya janiteṃdrasya janitota viṣṇoḥ ॥) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 9-96-2)

it is said that the deity Soma purifies everything; that he is the one who impels the minds of all of us, or the author of the mantras; that he created the heavenly world (heaven) and the earth; and that he produced the deities Agni, Sūrya, Indra and Viṣṇu.

विश्वं अन्यः अभिचक्षाणः एति (viśvaṃ anyaḥ abhicakṣāṇaḥ eti)—अपरः पूषा आदित्यः विश्वं अभिपश्यन् गच्छति । (aparaḥ pūṣā ādityaḥ viśvaṃ abhipaśyan gacchati |) The other of you, called Pūṣan, in the form of Āditya, goes about constantly looking upon the whole universe. As in the sentence आ देवो याति भुवनानि पश्यन् (ā devo yāti bhuvanāni paśyan) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-35-2), Āditya, in the form of Savitṛ, goes about constantly looking upon all beings and all worlds; there is nothing that does not fall within his sight. This too is said.

मे धियं अवतं (me dhiyaṃ avataṃ)—मे कर्म अवतं । (me karma avataṃ |) Since the word धीः (dhīḥ) is read among the names of action, धियं (dhiyaṃ) means "action" (Ni. 3-1). O Soma and Pūṣan, protect my action, that is, the sacrificial rite I am now performing, so that it is completed in full; this is the sense.

Anuvāda (Kannada). This sūkta beginning वायो ये ते (vāyo ye te) is the ninth sūkta in the fourth anuvāka. It has twenty-one Ṛks. Gṛtsamada is the seer of this sūkta; the Ṛk beginning अंबितमे (aṃbitame) and the Ṛk following it (Ṛks 16 and 17 of this sūkta) are in the anuṣṭubh metre; the Ṛk after that, that is, Ṛk 18, is in the bṛhatī metre; the remaining Ṛks are in the gāyatrī metre. In this sūkta the two Ṛks beginning वायो ये ते (vāyo ye te) are addressed to Vāyu; the third Ṛk, शुक्रस्याद्य (śukrasyādya), to Indra and Vāyu; and from there on, for the five ṭṛcas (a ṭṛca is three Ṛks) beginning अयं वां मित्रावरुणा (ayaṃ vāṃ mitrāvaruṇā), the deities in order are Mitrāvaruṇau, the Aśvins, Indra, the Viśvedevas and Sarasvatī. That is, in order, for Ṛks 4–6 of this sūkta the deities are Mitra and Varuṇa, for Ṛks 7–9 the Aśvin deities, for Ṛks 10–12 Indra, for Ṛks 13–15 the Viśvedevas, for Ṛks 16–18 Sarasvatī the deities, in order. Of the last three Ṛks, beginning प्रेतां यज्ञस्य (pretāṃ yajñasya), leaving aside the third pāda of the Ṛk प्रेतां यज्ञस्य (pretāṃ yajñasya), which is the 19th Ṛk, the remaining parts are applied, as stated in the Brāhmaṇa-sūkta, to the nivid mantras relating to Heaven and Earth among the Havirdhāna mantras; therefore Heaven and Earth, or the Havirdhānas, are the deities. For the third pāda of the nineteenth Ṛk, अग्निं च हव्यवाहनं (agniṃ ca havyavāhanaṃ), the deities are Heaven and Earth, the two Havirdhānas, or Agni. In the Anukramaṇikā it is said:

[The supplied text; its spelling differs in places from the Sanskrit introduction above (e.g. तृचेन्तैंद्रवायवी (ṭṛcentaiṃdravāyavī), वाग्नोऽम्यितमे (vāgno 'myitame)), left as supplied.]

On the sixth day of the sacrifices called Pṛṣṭha and Abhiplavaṣaḍaha, in the recitation of the Praüga śastra mantras, the Ṛks of this sūkta are applied except its last three Ṛks. For the Vāyavya tṛca (three Ṛks addressed to Vāyu) the Ṛk वायो ये ते सहस्रिणः (vāyo ye te sahasriṇaḥ) of this sūkta and the Ṛk next to it, two Ṛks in all; and in the Aindravāyava tṛca (three Ṛks addressed to Indra and Vāyu) the Ṛk शुक्रस्याद्य (śukrasyādya) is to be recited as the third Ṛk; this is explained by the sūtra of the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra:

वायो ये ते सहस्रिण इति द्वे तीव्राः सोमास आ गहीत्येकोभा देवा दिविस्पृशेति द्वे शुक्रस्याद्य गवाशिर इत्येकायं वां मित्रावरुणेति पंच तृचाः (vāyo ye te sahasriṇa iti dve tīvrāḥ somāsa ā gahītyekobhā devā divispṛśeti dve śukrasyādya gavāśira ityekāyaṃ vāṃ mitrāvaruṇeti paṃca tṛcāḥ) (Ā. 7-6);

on the twenty-fourth day, at the morning pressing, when the Maitrāvaruṇa śastra mantras are recited, the Ṛk अयं वां मित्रावरुणा (ayaṃ vāṃ mitrāvaruṇā) (the 4th Ṛk of this sūkta) is to be used as the ṣaḷahastotriya, as explained by the Āśvalāyana sūtra in the section beginning होताजनिष्ट (hotājaniṣṭa) in the twenty-fourth [day], अयं ना मित्रावरुणा पुरूरुणा चिद्धस्ति (ayaṃ nā mitrāvaruṇā purūruṇā ciddhasti) (Ā. 7-2) [as supplied]; on the days of the Abhiplava sacrifice also, in reciting the Maitrāvaruṇa śastra mantras at the morning pressing, this tṛca, that is, the three Ṛks beginning अयं वां (ayaṃ vāṃ), are to be used for the āvāpa (increase) of the Pañcadaśa and other stomas, as explained by the Āśvalāyana sūtra अयं वां मित्रावरुणा नो मित्रावरुणेति तृचाः (ayaṃ vāṃ mitrāvaruṇā no mitrāvaruṇeti tṛcāḥ) (Ā. 7-5); of this tṛca, the first Ṛk, अयं वा मित्रावरुणा (ayaṃ vā mitrāvaruṇā), is to be used as the anuvākyā mantra for the Maitrāvaruṇa cup, as explained by the Āśvalāyana sūtra मैत्रावरुणस्य आयं वां मित्रावरुणा (maitrāvaruṇasya āyaṃ vāṃ mitrāvaruṇā) (Ā. 5-5); and the tṛca beginning गोमदू षु (gomadū ṣu) (Ṛks 7-9 of this sūkta) is applied to the Gāyatrī-metre Ṛks of the Prātaranuvāka and the Āśvina śastra, as explained by the Āśvalāyana sūtra गोमदू षु नासत्येति तृचाः (gomadū ṣu nāsatyeti tṛcāḥ) (Ā. 4-15); in the sacrifice called Atirātra, in the first paryāya, the tṛca इंद्रो अंग महद्भयं (iṃdro aṃga mahadbhayaṃ) (Ṛks 10-12 of this sūkta) is applied to the śastra mantras to be recited by the priest called Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin, as explained by the Āśvalāyana

Śrauta Sūtra, in the section अतिरात्रे पर्यायाणां (atirātre paryāyāṇāṃ), by the sūtra इंद्रो अंग महद्भयमभि न्यू षु वाचं (iṃdro aṃga mahadbhayamabhi nyū ṣu vācaṃ) (Ā. 6-4); in the Āgrayaṇa, when the oblation addressed to the Viśvedevas is offered, the Ṛk विश्व देवासः (viśva devāsaḥ) (the 13th Ṛk of this sūkta) is to be used as the anuvākyā mantra, as explained by the Āśvalāyana sūtra in the section आग्रयणं (āgrayaṇaṃ), विश्वे देवास आ गत ये केच ज्मा महिनो आहिमायाः (viśve devāsa ā gata ye ke ca jmā mahino āhimāyāḥ) (Ā. 2-9); on the first day of the sacrifice called Daśarātra, when the Praüga śastra mantras are recited, the tṛca addressed to Sarasvatī, अंबितमे नदीतमे (aṃbitame nadītame) (Ṛks 19-19 of this sūkta, as supplied), is applied, as explained by the Āśvalāyana sūtra in the section चतुर्थेऽहनि (caturthe 'hani), अंबितमे नदीतम इत्यानुष्टुभं प्रलुगं (aṃbitame nadītama ityānuṣṭubhaṃ pralugaṃ) (Ā. 7-11); in the sacrifice called Vyūḍha-Daśarātra, at the time of the first Chandoma, when the Vaiśvadeva śastra mantras are recited, the tṛca प्रेतां यज्ञस्य शंभुवा (pretāṃ yajñasya śaṃbhuvā) (Ṛks 19-21 of this sūkta) is to be recited as the nivid-substitute mantra addressed to Heaven and Earth, as explained by the Āśvalāyana sūtra in the section अथ छंदोमा (atha chaṃdomā), प्रेतां यज्ञस्य शंभुवायं देवाय जन्मन इति तृचाः (pretāṃ yajñasya śaṃbhuvāyaṃ devāya janmana iti tṛcāḥ) (Ā. 8-9); and this tṛca (Ṛks 18-21 of this sūkta) is applied also in the setting in motion of the Havirdhānas, as explained by the Āśvalāyana sūtra प्रेतां यज्यस्य शंभुवा यमे इव यतमाने यदैतं (pretāṃ yajyasya śaṃbhuvā yame iva yatamāne yadaitaṃ) [यज्यस्य (yajyasya) as supplied], and the matter is stated also in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa. (Ā. 4-8; Ai. Brā. 1-29) [the Sanskrit introduction above gives a different second number for this sūtra; as supplied].

(Gist: O Vāyu, come with your thousand chariots and your Niyut horses to drink the soma; the prayer is that he come with all his manifold forms and powers.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Vāyo: O Vāyu. Te: your. Ye: which. Sahasriṇaḥ: numbering a thousand. Rathāsaḥ: chariots there are. Tebhiḥ: with them. Niyutvān: you, who have yoked your horses called Niyuts. Somapītaye: for the drinking of soma. Ā gahi: come.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Vāyu, with those thousand chariots of yours, you who have yoked your horses called Niyuts, come for the drinking of soma.

Printed English translation

Vayu, whose are a thousand chariots, and the Niyut steeds, come to drink the Soma juice.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

This Ṛk and the next are addressed to Vāyu; the third Ṛk is addressed to Indra and Vāyu. In this Ṛk it is said that Vāyu has a thousand chariots. Sāyaṇa (printed सायणरु! (sāyaṇaru!), as supplied) has said that, since Vāyu has many forms, the prayer is made here that he come with all those forms and with his manifold excellences of power.

p. 414

नियुत्वान् (niyutvān)—niyut is the name of the horse that is Vāyu's vehicle. In this matter Yāska says:

हरी इंद्रस्य । रोहितोऽग्नेः । हरित आदित्यस्य । रासभावश्विनोः । अजाः पूष्णः । पृषत्यो मरुतां । अरुण्यो गाव उषसः । श्यावा सवितुः । विश्वरूपा बृहस्पतेः । नियतो वायोः ॥ (harī iṃdrasya | rohito 'gneḥ | harita ādityasya | rāsabhāvaśvinoḥ | ajāḥ pūṣṇaḥ | pṛṣatyo marutāṃ | aruṇyo gāva uṣasaḥ | śyāvā savituḥ | viśvarūpā bṛhaspateḥ | niyato vāyoḥ ‖) (Si. [as printed] 7-28)

Having stated this etymological explanation, he explains the names of the vehicles of the various deities—that is, Indra's vehicles are called हरी (harī), two horses; Agni's vehicle is called रोहित (rohita); the vehicles of Āditya are the green horses called हरितः (haritaḥ); the vehicles of the Aśvin deities are two donkeys called रासभौ (rāsabhau); the vehicles of the deity Pūṣan are goats called अजाः (ajāḥ); the vehicles of the Marut deities are spotted deer called पृषत्यः (pṛṣatyaḥ); the vehicle of the goddess Uṣas is red cows called आरुण्यो गावः (āruṇyo gāvaḥ); the vehicle of the god Savitṛ is a dusky red horse called श्यावा (śyāvā); the vehicle of Bṛhaspati is horses of various forms called विश्वरूपा (viśvarūpā); and the vehicle of Vāyu is swift horses called नियुतः (niyutaḥ). Here the word नियुत्वान् (niyutvān) means Vāyu, who has the vehicles called नियुतः (niyutaḥ).

शुक्रः (śukraḥ)—दीप्यमानः सोमः । (dīpyamānaḥ somaḥ |) The meaning is the shining Soma. It is customary to call the pure soma juice, freshly pressed and prepared and with no admixture of any āśira substances, by such light-denoting epithets as शुक्रः (śukraḥ) and शुचिः (śuciḥ).

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Vāyo: O Vāyu. Niyutvān: together with your horses called Niyuts. Ā gahi: come. Ayaṃ śukraḥ: this bright soma. Te: for you. Ayāmi: has been prepared. Sunvataḥ: of the sacrificer who presses soma. Gṛhaṃ: to the house. Gantāsi: be one who goes.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Vāyu, come together with your horses called Niyuts. This bright soma has been prepared for you; go to the house of the sacrificer who presses soma.

Printed English translation

Vayu, of the Niyut steeds, approach : this bright (juice) has been accepted by you, for you go to the dwelling of the offerer of the libation.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk, too, what was said in the preceding Ṛk is said again; only one sentence, गंतासि सुन्वतो गृहं (gaṃtāsi sunvato gṛhaṃ), is additional.

गंता आसि सुन्वतः गृहं (gaṃtā āsi sunvataḥ gṛhaṃ)—सोमाभिषवं कुर्वतो यजमानस्य गृहं प्रति याता भवसि । (somābhiṣavaṃ kurvato yajamānasya gṛhaṃ prati yātā bhavasi |) O Vāyu, the prayer is made: go to the house of the sacrificer who has prepared and kept soma juice for you.

(Gist: O leading Indra and Vāyu, with your Niyut horses come today to drink the bright soma mixed with milk.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Narā: O leaders. Indravāyū: O deities Indra and Vāyu. Adya: today. Niyutvataḥ: being joined with the horses called Niyuts. Gavāśiraḥ: mixed with milk. Śukrasya: of the bright soma juice (for the drinking). Āyātaṃ: come. Pibataṃ: drink the soma.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

[The supplied text has the garbled label "॥ ಭಾಷಾರ್ಥ ॥" here, kept as a note in kn.md.]

O Indra and Vāyu, leaders, joined with the horses called Niyuts, come to us at this time of the sacrifice for the drinking of the soma juice, which is mixed with milk and bright. And drink the soma.

Printed English translation

Leaders (of rites), Indra and Vayu, lords of the Niyut steeds, come and drink to-day the mixture of milk and of the pure Soma juice.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk Indra and Vāyu are invited for the drinking of soma.

नरा नेतारौ । (narā netārau |) The meaning is leaders, chiefs; or the sense may be given as those who see that the sacrificial rite is carried out completely and without defect or fault.

नियुत्वतः (niyutvataḥ)—those whose vehicles are the horses called नियुत् (niyut). Although only for Vāyu is the horse called नियुत् (niyut) the vehicle, both Indra and Vāyu are described as having the same vehicle. And instead of the dual form नियुत्वंतौ (niyutvaṃtau), नियुत्वतः (niyutvataḥ) is used, a change of case-ending.

[Running head, p. 417: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 7, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

गवातिरः (gavātiraḥ) [as supplied; the Saṃhitā and bhāṣya have गवाशिरः (gavāśiraḥ)]—गव्यं पय आशीराश्रयणसाधनं यस्य तस्य । (gavyaṃ paya āśīrāśrayaṇasādhanaṃ yasya tasya |) गवाशिर (gavāśira) means the juice in which milk is mixed with the soma juice. To make the soma juice tasty, certain substances are mixed with it; these admixtures are called āśira substances. It is the custom to call it गवाशिर (gavāśira) if milk is mixed with the soma juice, दध्याशिर (dadhyāśira) if curds are mixed, and यवाशिर (yavāśira) if barley flour is mixed.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Mitrāvaruṇā: O Mitra and Varuṇa. Vāṃ: for you. Ayaṃ somaḥ: this soma juice. Sutaḥ: has been pressed. Ṛtāvṛdhā: O increasers of truth. Mam et havaṃ: my very invocation. Iha: in this sacrifice. Śrutaṃ: hear.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Mitra and Varuṇa, this soma juice has been pressed for you. O increasers of truth, hear in this sacrifice my very invocation.

[Running head, p. 418: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 4, Sū. 41.]

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk and in the next two Ṛks Mitra and Varuṇa are besought and invited to come for the drinking of soma.

ऋतावृधा (ṛtāvṛdhā)—सत्यस्य यज्ञस्य ना वर्धकौ । (satyasya yajñasya nā vardhakau |) The word ऋत (ṛta) has various meanings; we have explained them at length earlier. Here the commentator says that ऋत (ṛta) is an epithet describing the quality of Mitra and Varuṇa as those who increase truth or the sacrifice.

इत् (it)—the short words कं ईं इत् उ (kaṃ īṃ it u) are used to fill out a pāda. In this matter Yāska says:

अथ ये प्रवृत्तेऽर्थेऽमिताक्षरेषु ग्रंथेषु वाक्यपूरणा आगच्छंति पदपूरणास्ते मिताक्षरेष्वनर्थकाः कमीमिद्विति । (atha ye pravṛtte 'rthe 'mitākṣareṣu graṃtheṣu vākyapūraṇā āgacchaṃti padapūraṇāste mitākṣareṣvanarthakāḥ kamīmidviti |) (Ni. 1-9)

He explains that the words कं ईं इत् उ (kaṃ īṃ it u) (particles) are used to complete a sentence in prose that is not in metre (amitākṣara), and to complete a pāda in metrical Ṛks or mantras (mitākṣara); therefore these words need have no definite meaning.

(Gist: the sovereign, non-injuring Mitra and Varuṇa sit in the firm, excellent hall of a thousand pillars; let them come.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Rājānau: lords of the world or radiant ones. Anabhidruhā: those who wish no harm, O Mitra and Varuṇa. Dhruve: in the firm. Uttame: excellent. Sahasrasthūṇe: furnished with a thousand pillars. Sadasi: in this sacrificial place. Āsāte: come and sit.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Mitra and Varuṇa, lords of the world, wishing no harm, come and sit in this firm, excellent sacrificial place furnished with a thousand pillars.

Printed English translation

Sovereigns, exercising no oppression, sit down in this substantial and elegant hall, (built) with a thousand columns.

राजानौ (rājānau)—ईश्वरौ दीप्यमान् वा । (īśvarau dīpyamān vā |) Lords, or those who shine radiantly. In regard to Mitra and Varuṇa, the words राजाना (rājānā) and सम्राजा (samrājā) (in the next Ṛk) are explained by the commentator as आज्ञेयैव सर्वेषां शास्त्रारौ (ājñèyaiva sarvèṣāṃ śāstrārau) —those who rule all by their command alone, bringing them under rules. Besides, the sense of the words वरुणस्य व्रतानि (varuṇasya vratāni), "the laws of Varuṇa, which bind everyone", was explained earlier, where it was said that even Indra and the other deities cannot transgress them. For this reason also Mitra and Varuṇa may be addressed with the words राजाना (rājānā) and साम्राजा (sāmrājā).

अनभिद्रुहा (anabhidruhā)—this word is used as an epithet of Mitra and Varuṇa. The intent is: those who wish no injury (evil) towards anyone.

सहस्रस्थूणे (sahasrasthūṇe)—since this word is an epithet of सदसि (sadasi), it means a sacrificial house or assembly hall with thousands (many) of pillars.

May these two universal monarchs, fed with clarified butter, sons of Aditi, lords of liberality, show favour to their sincere (worshipper).

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

धृतासुती (dhṛtāsutī)—धृतान्नौ । (dhṛtānnau |) Those who eat food mixed with ghee. In this matter the commentator cites as an example the passage

तद्वां महित्वं धृतान्नावस्तु युवं दाशुषे वि चयिष्टमंहः ॥ (tadvāṃ mahitvaṃ dhṛtānnāvastu yuvaṃ dāśuṣe vi cayiṣṭamaṃhaḥ ॥) (Ṛ. Saṃ. [printed ಮ. ಸಂ. "Ma. Saṃ."] 6-67-8)

[as the Kannada continues:] the above passage.

आदित्या (ādityā)—अदितेः पुत्रौ । (aditeḥ putrau |) That they are sons of Aditi, mother of the gods, we have explained earlier. This matter is also stated in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka. That is, the goddess Aditi has eight sons; their names in order are Mitra, Varuṇa, Dhātā, Aryamā, Aṃśa, Bhaga, Indra and Vivasvān.

Ā. 1-13-2, 3)

दानुनः पती (dānunaḥ patī)—दानुनो दानस्य देयस्य वा धनस्य स्वामिनौ । (dānuno dānasya deyasya vā dhanasya svāminau |) Lords of the wealth that is to be given to those who praise them; that is, the intent is that they give the abundant wealth they have to those who praise them.

अनवह्वरं अकुटिलं यजमानं । (anavahvaraṃ akuṭilaṃ yajamānaṃ |) The word ह्वर (hvara) is read among the names of anger (Ni. 3-4). Here, explaining अनह्वर (anahvara) [as supplied] as "of crooked nature", he explains अनवह्वरं (anavahvaraṃ) as the sacrificer who is without a crooked nature.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk and in the next two Ṛks the Aśvin deities are praised and invited.

अश्विना (aśvinā)—concerning the deities Aśvinā or Aśvin, Yāska has given the following etymology:

अश्विनौ यद्व्यश्नुवाते सर्वं रसेनान्यो ज्योतिषान्यः । अश्वैरश्विनावित्यौर्णवाभः । तत्कावश्विनौ द्यावापृथिव्यावित्येके । आहोरात्रावित्येके । सूर्याचंद्रमसावित्येके । राजानौ पुण्यकृतावित्यैतिहासिकाः ॥ (aśvinau yadvyaśnuvāte sarvaṃ rasenānyo jyotiṣānyaḥ | aśvairaśvināvityaurṇavābhaḥ | tatkāvaśvinau dyāvāpṛthivyāvityeke | āhorātrāvityeke | sūryācaṃdramasāvityeke | rājānau puṇyakṛtāvityaitihāsikāḥ ||) (Si. [as printed] 12-1)

p. 423

Of these deities, one pervades everything with water and the other with light; therefore they are called the Aśvin deities: this is one opinion. Because they are yoked with horses they are called Aśvin deities: this is the opinion of Aurṇavābha. According to some they are Heaven and Earth. Others call them Day and Night. According to still others they are the Sun and the Moon. According to the view of the historians, two virtuous kings attained this rank. Thus there are many differences of opinion.

नासत्या (nāsatyā)—the Aśvin deities are two. It is the custom to say that the name of one of them is Dasrā and of the other Nāsatyā; yet in many places these words are seen used to address both together. Concerning the meaning of the word नासत्या (nāsatyā) Yāska says:

सत्यावेव नासत्यावित्यार्णवाभः । सत्यस्य प्रणेतारावित्याग्रायणः । नासिकाप्रभवौ बभूवतुरिति वा ॥ (satyāveva nāsatyāvityārṇavābhaḥ | satyasya praṇetārāvityāgrāyaṇaḥ | nāsikāprabhavau babhūvaturiti vā ‖) (Ni. 6-13)

and has given the etymology. That is: what is not true is untrue; what is not untrue is na + asatya = नासत्या (nāsatyā); so the meaning of the word नासत्य (nāsatya) is "true" itself. Since the words these deities speak and the acts they perform are not untrue, they are called नासत्या (nāsatyā): this is the view of Aurṇavābha. Since they always propound truth and encourage it, they got the name नासत्या (nāsatyā): this is the view of one called Āgrāyaṇa. Some also say that they are called नासत्या (nāsatyā) because they were born from the nose. On this subject there is a story in the Purāṇas and similar works: formerly Saṃjñā, the wife of the Sun, being displeased with the Sun for some reason, went to the forest and performed austerities in the form of a mare; the Sun, learning of it, went to where she was in the form of a stallion and stayed some time; then the Aśvin deities were born to them as sons.

In the Ṛgveda there are many sūktas concerning the Aśvin deities. They are very grave and describe their qualities, their prowess and the benefits they have done to others. We have explained all these at length on the respective occasions. In the Yajurveda and other Vedas it is said of them अश्विन् वै देवानां भिषज् (aśvin vai devānāṃ bhiṣaj)—the Aśvin deities are the physicians of the gods. For a detailed account of them see Ṛ. Saṃ. Part 2, pages 11 and 12, 20 and 21, and Part 13, page 566.

p. 424

[Running head, p. 424: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 4, Sū. 41.]

The main intent: O Aśvin deities, there is no untruth in you. You are the leaders (chiefs) of sacrificial rites. Go straight to the sacrificial ground, seated in your chariot. Grant that the sacrificer who offers soma to you obtains cows and horses as the fruit of the sacrificial rite.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Aśvin deities, showerers of wealth, provide us such wealth as neither an unpraiseworthy enemy far off nor an enemy near at hand can steal.

[Running head, p. 425: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 8, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

Printed English translation

Showerers of wealth, (bring to us) such (riches) that the malevolent man, or foe, whether he be far off or nigh, may not take (it) away.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk there is no word denoting wealth. Yet the commentator has supplied many words and explained so that the sense fits in some way.

वृषण्वसू (vṛṣaṇvasū)—for this dual word, formed from the root वृषु वर्षणे (vṛṣu varṣaṇe), the meaning is those who shower wealth or desired objects, that is, who give.

परः (paraḥ)—दूरस्थः । (dūrasthaḥ |) "Far off" is the commentator's explanation. Though this meaning does not fit the word पर (para), since this Ṛk uses the word अंतरः (aṃtaraḥ), "near at hand", it is natural that पर (para) is explained as the opposite of that sense.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Aśvin deities, overcomers of enemies, bring us wealth of many forms, that increases wealth.

Printed English translation

Resolute Ashwins, bring to us riches of various sorts, and wealth begetting wealth.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

रयिं (rayiṃ)—the word रयि (rayi) is read among the names of water (Ni. 2-24) and among the names of wealth (Ni. 3-9). There is also the etymology रयिरिति धननाम रातेर्दानकर्मणः (rayiriti dhananāma rāterdānakarmaṇaḥ) (Ni. 4-17): Yāska explains रयि (rayi), formed from the root रा (rā) with the sense "give", as wealth. Although the commentator explains it as पशुं (paśuṃ) here, wealth in cattle too is counted as wealth, so either "wealth" or "cattle" may be said here.

पिशंगसंदृशं (piśaṃgasaṃdṛśaṃ)—नानारूपं । (nānārūpaṃ |) The commentator explains पिशंग (piśaṃga) as "of many forms"; that is, wealth may be in forms such as goods, jewels, cattle, food; so the sense "in many forms" fits. Or, if पिशंग (piśaṃga) is explained as "of the colour पिशंग (piśaṃga), yellow", since gold and the like are yellow, it can be explained as "wealth such as gold".

वरिवोविदं (varivovidaṃ)—धनस्य लंभकं । (dhanasya laṃbhakaṃ |) The meaning is that which provides wealth or increases wealth. The word वरिवः (varivaḥ) is read among the names of wealth (printed सि-३-९ (si- 3-9), i.e. Ni. 3-9 as supplied).

धिष्णा (dhiṣṇā) [as supplied]—धिषणार्ह । (dhiṣaṇārha |) Yāska, giving the etymology of this word, says:

धिष्ट्यो—धिषणाभावः धिषणा वाग्निषेर्दधात्यर्थे । धीसादिनीति वा । धीसानिनीति वा ॥ (dhiṣṭyo—dhiṣaṇābhāvaḥ dhiṣaṇā vāgniṣerdadhātyarthe | dhīsādinīti vā | dhīsāninīti vā ‖) (Si. [as printed] 8-3)

That is: धिषणा (dhiṣaṇā) means speech; the capacity that holds that speech is called धिष्णशि (dhiṣṇaśi) [as supplied]; the meaning is those who have the power of speech. Or, since the word धी (dhī) also means understanding or action, because that understanding or action (the sacrificial rite) sits, that is dwells, in them, they are called धिष्ण्या (dhiṣṇyā). In commenting on the word धिष्ण्या (dhiṣṇyā) in Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-3-2 the commentator explained धिष्ण्या धार्ष्ट्यर्युक्तौ (dhiṣṇyā dhārṣṭyayuktau) as the courageous or the wise. Skandasvāmin—

p. 427

धिषणेति वाज्ञाम । तस्याः पुत्रौ धिष्णौ । अपत्ये यत्पत्ययो द्रष्टव्यः । अथवा धीरिति प्रज्ञानाम । ष्नै वेष्टने । धीः वेष्टयित्रि सर्वार्थग्रहणसमर्थः ययोस्तौ धिष्णौ । धिष्णावेव धिष्णौ । अत्यंतप्रज्ञावित्यर्थः ॥ (dhiṣaṇeti vājñāma | tasyāḥ putrau dhiṣṇau | apatye yatpatyayo draṣṭavyaḥ | athavā dhīriti prajñānāma | ṣnai veṣṭane | dhīḥ veṣṭayitri sarvārthagrahaṇasamarthaḥ yayostau dhiṣṇau | dhiṣṇāveva dhiṣṇau | atyaṃtaprajñāvityarthaḥ ‖)

That is: धिषणा (dhiṣaṇā) is the name of speech; its sons; or धीः (dhīḥ) is understanding. [The supplied text has "ಷ್ಟ್ಯೈ—ಯುಕ್ತರಾದವರು"] Those joined with understanding, that is, possessed of understanding, capable of grasping all things, extremely wise: this is the meaning. धिषणा (dhiṣaṇā) means speech or a mass of words, and this word is formed from the root धीः (dhīḥ). Therefore other commentators have explained the word धिष्ण्या (dhiṣṇyā) in the sense of those who impel the mind (or sentences).

धिष्ण्या (dhiṣṇyā)—for this word Sāyaṇa explains उन्नतस्थानार्हौ । (unnatasthānārhau |): worthy of a lofty place or rank; the meaning is worthy of worship. Since this word is also a synonym of places such as the āgnīdhrya, it can here also mean worthy of such a place. The two words धिषणा (dhiṣaṇā) and धिष्ण्या (dhiṣṇyā) ordinarily have one meaning (a difference of meaning between them is very rare). The Nirukta authors have included the word धिषणा (dhiṣaṇā) both among the names of speech (Ni. 2-23) and among the names of Heaven and Earth (Ni. 3-31).

मेद्यंतु ते वह्नयो येभिरीयसेऽरिषण्यन्वीळेयस्वा वनस्पते । आयूया धृष्णो अभिगूर्या त्वं नेष्टात्सोमं द्रविणोदः पिब ऋतुभिः ॥ (medyaṃtu te vahnayo yebhirīyase 'riṣaṇyanvīḷèyasvā vanaspate | āyūyā dhṛṣṇo abhigūryā tvaṃ neṣṭātsomaṃ draviṇodaḥ piba ṛtubhiḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-37-3)

Citing this Ṛk, he gives there धिष्ण्याद्धिष्ण्यो धिषण्यो धिषणाभवः । धिषणा वाक् धिषेर्दधात्यर्थे । धीसादिनीति वा । धी सानिनीति वा । (dhiṣṇyāddhiṣṇyo dhiṣaṇyo dhiṣaṇābhavaḥ | dhiṣaṇā vāk dhiṣerdadhātyarthe | dhīsādinīti vā | dhī sāninīti vā |): formed from the root धिष् (dhiṣ), which gives the sense "hold", it means speech; or it also gives the sense "spread or acquire understanding". Therefore he shows the etymology that the word धिषणा (dhiṣaṇā) means speech. But other meanings, too, are possible for this word.

इमां ते धियं प्र भरे महो महीमस्य स्तोत्रे धिषणा यत्त आनजे । (imāṃ te dhiyaṃ pra bhare maho mahīmasya stotre dhiṣaṇā yatta ānaje |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-102-1)

In Ṛks such as these the meaning is speech or understanding. If "speech" is taken to mean speech in the form of praise, then the word धिष्ण्या (dhiṣṇyā) means "worthy of praise", "worthy of worship", and in this sense the same word is used in many places.

p. 428

तन्नो वातो मयोभु वातु भेषजं तन्माता पृथिवी तत्पिता द्यौः । तद्गावाणः सोमसुतो मयोभुवस्तदश्विना शृणुतं धिष्ण्या युवं ॥ (tanno vāto mayobhu vātu bheṣajaṃ tanmātā pṛthivī tatpitā dyauḥ | tadgāvāṇaḥ somasuto mayobhuvastadaśvinā śṛṇutaṃ dhiṣṇyā yuvaṃ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-8-94 [as printed])

Here the word धिष्ण्या (dhiṣṇyā) is an epithet of the Aśvin deities themselves. For it Sāyaṇa explains धिषणा बुद्धिः, तदार्हावश्विन् (dhiṣaṇā buddhiḥ, tadārhāvaśvin), that is, worthy of meditation. Likewise, and in such passages (Ṛ. Saṃ. 8-5-14; 2-26-12) this epithet is used of the Aśvin deities, and everywhere is used in the sense "worthy of praise, worthy of worship"

युवं श्रीभिर्दर्शताभिराभिः शुभे पुष्टिमूहथुः सूर्यायाः । प्र वां वयो वपुषेऽनु पप्तन्नक्षद्वाणी सुष्टुता धिष्ट्या वां ॥ (yuvaṃ śrībhirdarśatābhirābhiḥ śubhe puṣṭimūhathuḥ sūryāyāḥ | pra vāṃ vayo vapuṣe 'nu paptannakṣadvāṇī suṣṭutā dhiṣṭyā vāṃ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-62) (Ma. Saṃ. 6-63-6 [as printed])

कद्धिष्णासु वृधसानो अग्ने कद्वाताय प्रतवसे शुभं ये । परिज्मने नासत्याय क्षे ब्रवः कदग्ने रुद्राय नृघ्ने ॥ (kaddhiṣṇāsu vṛdhasāno agne kadvātāya pratavase śubhaṃ ye | parijmane nāsatyāya kṣe bravaḥ kadagne rudrāya nṛghne ‖) (Ma. Saṃ. 4-3-6)

[The supplied text has no full stop before the last Ṛk.] In Ṛks such as this, where धिष्ट्य (dhiṣṭya) is cited with the sense "place", the sense is आग्नीध्रियादि स्थानेषु (āgnīdhriyādi sthāneṣu), "in places such as the Āgnīdhrīya" (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-114-9). Although the general sense is "worthy of worship", in some places the word has been included among the names of Heaven and Earth (Ni. 3-21).

समीचीने धिषणे वि ष्कभायति वृष्टः पीत्वा मद उक्थानि शंसति ॥ (samīcīne dhiṣaṇe vi ṣkabhāyati vṛṣṭaḥ pītvā mada ukthāni śaṃsati ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-44-8)

In Ṛks such as these the meaning is Heaven and Earth. In some contexts the word also means the bag that is filled with soma juice. In some places Sāyaṇa, without taking any of the above meanings, shows another etymology of this word and gives a rare meaning. For example—in this he explains धियं बुद्धुपहितं देहं उष्णंत्युष्टीकुर्वंति इति धिष्ण्याः (dhiyaṃ budbhupahitaṃ dehaṃ uṣṇaṃtyuṣṭīkurvaṃti iti dhiṣṇyāḥ) [as supplied]: because they show attachment in the body furnished with understanding, they are named धिष्ण्य (dhiṣṇya). In the Ṛk cited it is an epithet of the deities. Since the word is used in many such senses, in the present Ṛk it means the Aśvin deities who have taken possession of a place of worship.

अग्ने दिवो अर्णमच्छा जिगास्यच्छा देवा ऊचिषे धिष्ट्या ये । या रोचने परस्तात्सूर्यस्य याश्चावस्तादुपतिष्ठंत आपः ॥ (agne divo arṇamacchā jigāsyacchā devā ūciṣe dhiṣṭyā ye | yā rocane parastātsūryasya yāścāvastādupatiṣṭhaṃta āpaḥ ‖) (Ma. Saṃ. 3-22-3)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Indra: Indra. Aṅga: (may he remove) the great, the overwhelming fear that envelops us and cows us. Bhayaṃ: fear. Apa cucyavat: may he destroy. Hi: because. Saḥ: that Indra. Sthiraḥ: is immovable. Vicarṣaṇi [printed विचर्षन्ति (vicarṣanti)]: all-knowing.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

Since Indra is immovable and all-knowing, may he destroy the fear that is exceedingly great and cows us.

Printed English translation

May Indra dissipate all great and overpowering danger, for he is resolute, and the beholder of all.

p. 430

[Running head, p. 430: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 4, Sū. 41.]

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk and in the next two Ṛks Indra is besought to remove and protect us from the fear that may arise from enemies.

अंग (aṃga)—for the word अंग (aṃga) Yāska has given the etymology अंगमंगनादंचनाद्वा । (aṃgamaṃganādaṃcanādvā |) (Ni. 4-3). Durgācārya explains the meaning: अंगनात् अंगितं तत्कालेन भवति गतमित्यर्थः । अंच नाद्वा । अंचतिरपि गत्यर्थ एव धात्वन्यत्वमर्थैकत्वं । (aṃganāt aṃgitaṃ tatkālena bhavati gatamityarthaḥ | aṃca nādvā | aṃcatirapi gatyartha eva dhātvanyatvamarthaikatvaṃ |) The word अंग (aṃga), denoting the sense of motion, is formed either from अंगनात् (aṃganāt) or from अंचनात् (aṃcanāt). Though the two roots are separate, the meaning is one. Therefore in the present Ṛk the word अंग (aṃga), as an epithet of the word भयं (bhayaṃ), conveys the sense "that has reached us", that is, "that envelops us".

सः हि स्थिरः विचर्षणिः (saḥ hi sthiraḥ vicarṣaṇiḥ)—सः इंद्रः केनापि चालयितुमशक्यः विश्वस्य द्रष्टा। (saḥ iṃdraḥ kenāpi cālayitumaśakyaḥ viśvasya draṣṭā।) In the first half of this Ṛk the prayer is made that the great fear enveloping us be removed. Whether Indra has the strength and power for removing fear is stated in the second half of the Ṛk. Indra's power is immeasurable, for he is firm; no one can make him move. Besides, he sees and knows everything. Indra has the power to hear and understand our prayer and the power to fulfil it. Therefore it is said that Indra is सर्वस्य द्रष्टा (sarvasya draṣṭā), the seer of all, all-knowing.

(Gist: if Indra, possessed of supreme lordship, gladdens us, evil will not reach us from behind and good will come to us from before.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Indraḥ ca: if Indra. Naḥ: us. Mṛḷayāti: makes happy. Paścāt: from behind. Naḥ: us. Aghaṃ: sin. Na naśat: will not approach. Naḥ: our. Puraḥ: from before. Bhadraṃ: welfare. Bhavāti: will come and join.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

If Indra makes us happy, sin will not approach us from behind, and welfare will come to us from before.

Printed English translation

If Indra provide for our happiness, evil will not come behind us, good will be before us.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

The meaning of this Ṛk is quite clear. The main intent is: if Indra, endowed with all lordship, causes us happiness, the sins and misdeeds we have committed so far will all be destroyed and only happiness will come to us in future.

अघं (aghaṃ)—आज् पूर्वात् हंतेः अन्येष्टपि दृश्यते इति डः । पृषोदरादित्वात् आज् ह्रस्वत्वं हकारस्य घत्वं चे । (āj pūrvāt haṃteḥ anyeṣṭapi dṛśyate iti ḍaḥ | pṛṣodarāditvāt āj hrasvatvaṃ hakārasya ghatvaṃ cè |) Formed from the root हन हिंसागत्योः (hana hiṃsāgatyoḥ) with the prefix आज् (āj), this word means to kill or to afflict. Therefore the word अघ (agha) means sin, evil, which causes affliction.

(Gist: Indra, the all-seeing conqueror of enemies, is to make us fearless from all quarters.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Vicarṣaṇiḥ: the all-knowing. Śatrūn jetā: conqueror of enemies. Indraḥ: Indra. Sarvābhyaḥ: from all. Āśābhyaḥ pari: quarters. Abhayaṃ: freedom from fear. Karat: may he bring about.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

May Indra, the all-knowing conqueror of enemies, bring about freedom from fear from all quarters.

Printed English translation

Let Indra, the beholder of all, the conqueror of foes, tend us security from all quarters.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

विचर्षणिः (vicarṣaṇiḥ)—the word विचर्षणिः (vicarṣaṇiḥ) or विश्वचर्षणिः (viśvacarṣaṇiḥ) is read among the eight words denoting the act of seeing, beginning चक्यत् (cakyat) and चाकनत् (cākanat) (Ni. 3-13); so विचर्षणिः (vicarṣaṇiḥ) means one who sees. विशेषेण सर्वस्य द्रष्टा (viśeṣeṇa sarvasya draṣṭā)—one who sees everything in particular; this word is used of many deities such as Agni and Indra.

[Running head, p. 433: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 9, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

In this Ṛk, Indra, the conqueror of enemies and the seer of all (that is, of all the doings of the world), is besought to remove and protect us from the fear that may come to us from all quarters.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Viśve devāsaḥ: O Viśvedevas. Ā gata: come. Me: my. Imaṃ havaṃ: this invocation. Śṛṇuta: hear. Idaṃ barhiḥ: on this seat. Ā niṣīdata: sit down.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Viśvedevas, hear my invocation and come here. Sit down on this seat.

Printed English translation

Universal gods, come hither; hear this my invocation ; sit down upon this sacred grass.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

This Ṛk and the next two Ṛks, three Ṛks in all, are called the Vaiśvadeva tṛca; that is, the Viśvedevas are the deity of all these three Ṛks.

[Stray line in the supplied text: "28", kept as a note in kn.md.]

p. 434

विश्वे देवासः (viśve devāsaḥ)—the name of these deities is read among the thirty-one names denoting special deities such as the Aśvins. The commentator has said that they are separate special deities. Some say they are all the deities. But from the matter in other sūktas it can be said clearly that the sages worshipped separate deities called Viśvedevas. On this question Yāska wrote an explanation of this Ṛk:

अवितारो नावनीया वा मनुष्यधृतः सर्वे देवा इहागच्छत दत्तवंतो दत्तवतः सुतमिति, तदेतदेकमेव वैश्वदेवं गायत्रं तृचं दशतयीषु विद्यते यत्तु किंचिद्दहुदैवतं तद्वैश्वदेवानां स्थाने युज्यते यदेव विश्वलिंगमिति शाकपूणिः (avitāro nāvanīyā vā manuṣyadhṛtaḥ sarvè devā ihāgacchata dattavaṃto dattavataḥ sutamiti, tadetadekameva vaiśvadevaṃ gāyatraṃ tṛcaṃ daśatayīṣu vidyate yattu kiṃciddahudaivataṃ tadvaiśvadevānāṃ sthāne yujyate yadeva viśvaliṃgamiti śākapūṇiḥ) (Ni. 12-40)

As to the meaning of this Ṛk, there is no difference between the meaning we have given and Yāska's. But according to Yāska विश्वेदेवाः (viśvedevāḥ) means all the deities, while Yāska himself says that it is the view of one called Śākapūṇi that Viśvedevas means the special deities called by that name; therefore it can be said firmly that there was a difference of opinion on this question even in his time. Speaking now as is customary in domestic and other rites, it appears that these Viśvedevas do not belong to the group of ordinary deities, and that they are a special group of thirteen persons of their own. Be that as it may, it seems proper to say that the Viśvedevas described in the Ṛgveda belong to a separate group of deities.

It is necessary to state here some main points concerning the Viśvedevas. In the Ṛgveda there are 63 sūktas that praise only the Viśvedevas. Besides, in Ṛ. Saṃ. sūkta 1-164 the first 41 Ṛks are addressed to the Viśvedevas. In all of these, except sūkta 10-155, many deities are praised, and trees, rivers, mountains, cows, horses and the like are also dealt with. Besides these, in other sūktas addressed to other deities, in many places a total of 17 Ṛks are addressed to the Viśvedevas. In all these places the Viśvedevas are said to be the deities of these Ṛks. Further, in Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-125-1 the Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas are included along with the Viśvedevas. In Vājasaneya Saṃhitā (Śukla Yajurveda) 2-22, Indra, the Ādityas, the Vasus and the Maruts are besought to join with the Viśvedevas. In the same Saṃhitā, in mantras 33-45 to 47, Indra, Vāyu and other deities are praised together with the Viśvedevas.

In the Atharvaveda, in mantra 20-62-6, the Viśvedevas are indicated in the singular, and there are many sūktas addressed to the Viśvedevas in the Atharvaveda.

p. 435

In the Brāhmaṇas, too, the name of the Viśvedevas is mentioned here and there. In Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa 4-14 and Gopatha Brāhmaṇa 1-20, all the deities are addressed by the name Viśvedevas. In Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa 3-9-2-6 the Viśvedevas are called the rays of the Sun; in Śat. Brā. 14-2-2-37, the vital airs such as prāṇa; in Śat. Brā. 7-1-1-42, sacrificial acts; and in Śat. Brā. 2-4-4-13 [printed with a stray mark before the number], Indra and Agni. In the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka (Tai. Ā. 5-1-6) Indra and Agni are praised together with the Viśvedevas.

In the Purāṇas the Viśvedevas are in some places said to be the lords of the quarters. In the Nirukta (Ni. 12-39) it is said that Viśvedevas means all the deities. Durgācārya, the commentator on the Nirukta, has explained Viśvedevas as the rays of the Sun. Yāska, the author of the Nirukta, states the view that Viśvedevas means all the deities and also indicates the view of Śākapūṇi. Śaunaka, in his work Bṛhaddevatā (Bṛ. De. 2-128 to 134, the verses), says on this subject that Yāska and Śāṇḍilya hold that विश्वेदेवाः (viśvedevāḥ) means all the deities; Śaunaka's view is likewise. Sāyaṇācārya, in commenting on this Ṛk, has expressed his opinion that thirty-one deities, such as the Aśvins, together are called the Viśvedevas.

Among Western scholars, Langlois, Kaegi and Hopkins hold that Viśvedevas means all the deities [the supplied text has "ಸಮಸ" for "ಸಮಸ್ತ" here, as supplied], and Wilson, Griffith and Macdonell accept both senses, "all the deities" or "a separate group of deities called Viśvedevas".

The main intent is: in former times, that is, in very ancient times, the meaning "all the deities" was current for Viśvedevas, and in the course of time the idea that Viśvedevas are a group of separate deities of that name came into use. In many Brāhmaṇas and Purāṇas the Viśvedevas are indicated as a separate group of deities. But that there was a difference of opinion on this matter even in Yāska's time is known from Yāska's Nirukta itself.

[Stray line in the supplied text: "Pages: 450/450", kept as a note in kn.md.]

बर्हिः (barhiḥ)—परिबर्हणात्, परिच्छेदनात् (paribarhaṇāt, paricchedanāt)—the darbha grasses are cut to one equal measure and spread soft on the sacrificial altar. Upon this, in order that the deities come and sit—

p. 436

they invite, and they place upon it the ghee, oblations and other materials to be offered. The darbha spread in this way is called बर्हिः (barhiḥ). In this matter Yāska [the supplied text has "ಯಾಸ್ಕರು ಈ ವಿಷಯದಲ್ಲಿ ಯಾಸ್ಕರು", Yāska repeated]—

प्राचीनं बर्हिः प्रदिशा पृथिव्या वस्तोरस्स्या वृज्यते अग्रे अह्नां । व्यु प्रथते वितरं वरीयो देवेभ्यो अदितये स्योनं ॥ (prācīnaṃ barhiḥ pradiśā pṛthivyā vastorassyā vṛjyate agre ahnāṃ | vyu prathate vitaraṃ varīyo devebhyo aditaye syonaṃ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-110-4)

प्राचीनं बर्हिः प्रदिशा पृथिव्या वसनायास्याः प्रवृज्यते अग्रे अह्नां बर्हिः पूर्वाह्णे तद्विप्रथते वितरं विकीर्णतरमिति वा विस्तीर्णतरमिति ना वरियो वरतरमुरुतरं वा देवेभ्यश्चादितये च स्योनं । स्योनमिति सुखनाम स्यतेरवस्यंत्येतत् सेवितव्यं भवतीति वा ॥ (prācīnaṃ barhiḥ pradiśā pṛthivyā vasanāyāsyāḥ pravṛjyate agre ahnāṃ barhiḥ pūrvāhne tadviprathate vitaraṃ vikīrṇataramiti vā vistīrṇataramiti nā variyo varataramurutaraṃ vā devebhyaścāditaye ca syonaṃ | syonamiti sukhanāma syateravasyaṃtyetat sevitavyaṃ bhavatīti vā ‖) (Ni. 8-9)

Citing the above Ṛk, he has given the etymology. At the time of the sacrifice, to prepare a seat on which the invited deities may come and sit, they cut darbha grasses to one equal measure and prepare them by spreading three layers, one upon another (to be soft). There is also the Śruti sentence त्रिवृद्धर्हिर्भवति (trivṛddharhirbhavati) [as supplied]. The pieces of darbha spread in this way for the seat are called बर्हिस् (barhis); thus the word बर्हिः (barhiḥ) is explained.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

(O Viśvedevas) Tīvraḥ: of sharp strength. Madhumān: full of juice. Matsaraḥ: intoxicating. Ayaṃ: this soma juice. Vaḥ: for you. Śunahotreṣu: among us, of the Śunahotra lineage (it is pressed and prepared). Kāmyaṃ: agreeable. Etaṃ: this soma juice. Pibata: drink.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Viśvedevas, this soma juice, of sharp strength, juicy and intoxicating, has been pressed and prepared for you among us of the Śunahotra lineage. Drink this agreeable soma juice.

Printed English translation

This sharp, savoury, exhilarating (beverage), is (prepared) for you by the Shunahotras; drink of it at your pleasure.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

तीव्र (tīvra)—तीव्रमदकरः । (tīvramadakaraḥ |) The meaning is that which causes intoxication very sharply, very quickly or very greatly. तीव्र सोमः (tīvra somaḥ) is soma juice freshly pressed, to which no āśira substances such as milk have been added; therefore its sharpness is greater, and the intent is soma juice that, as soon as it is drunk, causes intoxication very quickly or in abundance.

मधुमान् (madhumān)—रसवान् । (rasavān |) Any of the meanings "juicy", "sweet" or "tasty" may be given.

मत्सरः (matsaraḥ)—मदकरः । (madakaraḥ |) Formed from the root मदी हर्षग्लापनयोः (madī harṣaglāpanayoḥ), this word means that which produces exhilaration (joy).

काम्यं (kāmyaṃ)—कमनीयं, अपेक्षणीयं । (kamanīyaṃ, apekṣaṇīyaṃ |) The meaning is that which is desired, that which all like.

शुनहोत्रेषु (śunahotreṣu)—the Śunahotras are the seer of this maṇḍala, Gṛtsamada, and his descendants and relatives. The reason Gṛtsamada got the name Śunahotra is this: this seer Gṛtsamada was first the son of the sage Śunahotra, born in the family of the sage Aṅgiras. Once, while he was performing a sacrifice, the asuras came and carried him away

and Gṛtsamada besought Indra, and Indra came and had him released and brought back. By Indra's command the name Gṛtsamada became current for him. गृत्समद (gṛtsamada) means gṛtsamadana; the word गृत्स (gṛtsa) is derived from the root गृणाति (gṛṇāti), which gives the sense of praising. The word गृत्स (gṛtsa) also means wise (intelligent). The word मदन (madana) means joys and so on, or one who has joy. The compound analysis is गृत्सश्चासौ मदनश्च

गृत्समदनः (gṛtsaścāsau madanaśca gṛtsamadanaḥ). Therefore the word गृत्समद (gṛtsamada) means a man who is wise and joyful (smiling). And his name became famous as the son of Śunaka or Śaunaka of the Bhṛgu family. Also in the work Ṛṣyanukramaṇikā, composed by the great sage Kātyāyana, a disciple of the sage Śaunaka, when the names of the seers of the various sūktas are stated—

त्वमग्न इति गृत्समदः शौनको बृगुतां गतः । शौनहोत्रः प्रकृत्या तु य आंगिरस उच्यत इति ॥
(tvamagna iti gṛtsamadaḥ śaunako bṛgutāṃ gataḥ | śaunahotraḥ prakṛtyā tu ya āṃgirasa ucyata iti ‖)

—this has been said [the supplied text has the verb doubled, हेळिरुवरुवरु (heḷiruvaruvaru)]. The intent is: Gṛtsamada, the seer of the sūkta त्वमग्ने द्युभिः (tvamagne dyubhiḥ), though born as the son of Śunahotra of the lineage of the Āṅgirasas, afterwards (for some reason) became known as the son of Śunaka, born in the Bhṛgu family.

Printed English translation

Maruts, of whom Indra is the chief; divinites [sic], of whom Pushan is the benefactor; do you all hear my invocation.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

This Ṛk is read as the eighth Ṛk of the twenty-third sūkta in the first maṇḍala (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-23-8).

इंद्रज्येष्ठाः (iṃdrajyeṣṭhāḥ)—ज्येष्ठशब्दः प्रधानवचनः । इंद्रः प्रधानभूतो येषां त इंद्रज्येष्ठाः । (jyeṣṭhaśabdaḥ pradhānavacanaḥ | iṃdraḥ pradhānabhūto yeṣāṃ ta iṃdrajyeṣṭhāḥ |) ज्येष्ठ (jyeṣṭha) means chief, principal. Therefore the word इंद्रज्येष्ठाः (iṃdrajyeṣṭhāḥ) means the deities who have Indra as their principal, whose leader is Indra; that is, Indra is the leader of the gods. "Leader (Indra at their Heads)" [in English letters in the supplied text]; the meaning is the deities who have set out with him in front.

पूषरातयः (pūṣarātayaḥ)—पूषाख्यो देवो रातिर्दाता येषां ते पूषरातयः । (pūṣākhyo devo rātirdātā yeṣāṃ te pūṣarātayaḥ |) राति (rāti) means giver, bestower of wealth. The intent is the Viśvedevas accompanied by the deity Pūṣan, the bestower of wealth.

मरुद्गणाः (maruddaṇāḥ)—the meaning is those accompanied by the divine host called Marut. It is necessary to understand closely who these Marut hosts are and what their nature is. There is a story about the origin of the Marut deities. It is also the custom to call them sons of Rudra. मरुतोऽपि रुद्रा उच्यंते जन्यजनकयोरभेदात् । (maruto 'pi rudrā ucyaṃte janyajanakayorabhedāt |) रुद्राः (rudrāḥ) here means sons of Rudra. Because it is the custom to call a son by his father's name, and because in usage the produced and the producer are not counted as different, here the Marut deities, sons of Rudra, are described by the word रुद्र (rudra) itself.

On how the Maruts became sons of Rudra, Sāyaṇa has given an ancient story in his commentary on Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-114-6:

रुद्रस्य च मरुतां पितृत्वमेवमाख्यायते । पुरा कदाचिदिंद्रोऽसुरान् जिगाय ! तदानीं दितिरसुरमातेंद्रहनसमर्थं पुत्रं कामयमाना तपसा भर्तुः सकाशाद्गर्भं लेभे । इमं वृत्तांतमवगच्छन्निंद्रो वज्रहस्तः सन् सूक्ष्मरूपो भूत्वा तस्या उदरं प्रविश्य तं गर्भं सप्तधा बिभेद । पुनरप्येकैकं सप्तखंडमकरोत् । ते सर्वे गर्भैकदेशा योनेनिर्गत्यारुदन् । एतस्मिन्नवसरे लीलार्थं गच्छंतौ सार्वतीपरमेश्वराविमान् ददृशुः । महेशं प्रति सार्वत्येवमवोचत् । इमे मांसखंडा यथा प्रत्येकं पुत्राः संपद्यंतामेवं त्वया कार्यं मयि चेत्प्रीतिरस्तीति । स च महेश्वरस्तान्समानरूपान् समानवयसः समानालंकारान्पुत्रान्कृत्वा गौर्यै प्रददौ तवेमे पुत्राः संत्विति । अतः सर्वेषु मारुतेषु सूक्तेषु मरुतो रुद्रपुत्रा इति स्तूयंते । रौद्रेषु च मरुतां पिता रुद्र इति ॥ (rudrasya ca marutāṃ pitṛtvamevamākhyāyate | purā kadācidiṃdro 'surān jigāya ! tadānīṃ ditirasuramāteṃdrahanasamarthaṃ putraṃ kāmayamānā tapasā bhartuḥ sakāśāddarbhaṃ lebhe | imaṃ vṛttāṃtamavagacchanniṃdro vajrahastaḥ san

That is: once in the past, when Indra conquered the asuras, Diti, the mother of the asuras, wishing for a son able to subdue Indra, performed austerities and became pregnant by serving her husband. Indra, learning of this, under the pretext of serving his mother, stayed near Diti, took a subtle form, and with his thunderbolt entered Diti's womb and split that embryo first into seven parts, and then each of these again into seven pieces, that is, forty-nine pieces. Thereupon the pieces of the embryo slipped out of the womb and fell on the earth weeping, and Pārvatī and Parameśvara, who were wandering for the good of the world, saw them. Pārvatī, taking pity on those pieces of flesh, begged her husband that they should all live, receiving life; and so Parameśvara made those forty-nine pieces of flesh into sons of one and the same form, ornament and age, and said to Pārvatī, "These are your sons." From this story the Maruts are said in the respective sūktas to be sons of Rudra, and Rudra the father of the Maruts.

Indra and the Maruts are both of great power. Though each is independent in his own action and neither depends on the other's help, the friendship between Indra and the Maruts is so great that it is stated in many places that Indra is always with the Maruts, is invited to sacrifices and the like together with them, and that the Maruts, too, have helped Indra

[Running head, p. 441: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8 [printed garbled], Varga 9, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

मरुत्वान् (marutvān)—the permanent companionship of Indra and the Maruts is well known from the Śruti. The relation of king and subjects between Indra and the Maruts, the offering of oblations in the chief sacrificial acts to Indra together with the Maruts, and the Maruts' helping Indra when he fought the demon Vṛtra, are described in many places in the Saṃhitās and the Brāhmaṇas. A story of old telling how Indra, joined with the Maruts, was separate from the other deities can be seen in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa:

आतिथ्येन वै देवा इष्ट्वा । तान्त्समदविंदत्ते चतुर्धा व्यद्रवन्नन्योन्यस्य श्रियातिष्ठमाना अग्निर्वसुभिः, सोमो रुद्रैर्वरुण आदित्यैरिंद्रो मरुद्भिर्भृहस्पतिर्विश्वेदेवैः । (ātithyena vai devā iṣṭvā | tāntsamadaviṃdatte caturdhā vyadravannanyonyasya śriyātiṣṭhamānā agnirvasubhiḥ, somo rudrairvaruṇa ādityairiṃdro marudbhirbhṛhaspatirviśvedevaiḥ |) (Śat. Brā. 3-4-2-1)

When the gods formerly performed the hospitality rite, discord arose among them, and, none willing to be defeated by another, they formed four groups and separated: Agni with the Vasus, Soma with the Rudras, Varuṇa with the Ādityas, Indra with the Maruts, and Bṛhaspati with the Viśvedevas. In this story the close relation that Indra has kept with the Maruts, having developed companionship with them, is stated. Besides, it is said in many places that Indra is the chief and the Maruts the subjects. For example—

क्षत्रं ना इंद्रो विशो मरुतो विशा वै क्षत्रियो बलवान् भवति । (kṣatraṃ nā iṃdro viśo maruto viśā vai kṣatriyo balavān bhavati |) (Śat. Brā. 4-3-3-6)

Indra is the king possessed of ruling radiance, the Maruts are the subjects. It is indicated that the king becomes powerful through the cooperation of the subjects, and that through the help of the Maruts Indra's prowess increased. Because of such a close relation and companionship, the practice of offering oblations addressing Indra and the Maruts together is also seen in the Śrutis.

अनवद्यैरभिद्युभिर्मखि सहस्वदर्चति । गणैरिंद्रस्य काम्यैः ॥ (anavadyairabhidyubhirmakhi sahasvadarcati | gaṇairiṃdrasya kāmyaiḥ ||) (Ma. Saṃ. 1-6-8)

मंद्राः सुजिह्वाः स्वरितार आसभिः संमिश्ला इंद्रे मरुतः परिष्टुभः । (maṃdrāḥ sujihvāḥ svaritāra āsabhiḥ saṃmiślā iṃdre marutaḥ pariṣṭubhaḥ |) (Ma. Saṃ. 1-166-11)

स नो मरुद्भिर्वृषभ श्रवोधा उग्र उग्रेभिः स्थविरः सहोदाः । (sa no marudbhirvṛṣabha śravodhā ugra ugrebhiḥ sthaviraḥ sahodāḥ |) (Ma. Saṃ. 1-171-5)

By these and other Ṛks the invocation and the offering of oblations are made to Indra and the Maruts together. It is because of such companionship that the epithet मरुत्वान् (marutvān) is used here too. The Bṛhaddevatā explains this epithet, which indicates the relation of these deities, saying that whenever Indra, accompanied by the Maruts, is meant, he is called मरुत्वान् (marutvān):

मरुद्भिः सह यत्रेंद्रो मरुत्वांस्तत्र सोऽभवत् । (marudbhiḥ saha yatreṃdro marutvāṃstatra so 'bhavat |) (Bṛ. De. 4-56)

Saraswathi, best of mothers, best of rivers, best of goddessess [sic], we are, as it were, of no repute ; grant us, mother, distinction.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

अंबितमे, नदीतमे, देवितमे (aṃbitame, nadītame, devitame)—मातृणां श्रेष्ठे, नदीनां श्रेष्ठे, देवीनां श्रेष्ठे (mātṛṇāṃ śreṣṭhe, nadīnāṃ śreṣṭhe, devīnāṃ śreṣṭhe)—since the suffix तमे (tame) means "best", Sāyaṇa explains अंबितमे (aṃbitame) as best among mothers, नदीनां श्रेष्ठे (nadīnāṃ śreṣṭhe) as best among rivers, and देवीनां श्रेष्ठे (devīnāṃ śreṣṭhe) as best among goddesses. Here there is room for a certain doubt. When Sarasvatī is said to be best among rivers and best among deities, that sense is natural. But when she is said to be best among mothers, the doubt naturally arises whether this means the many mothers of many men, or whether one man has many mothers. That many men have many mothers (one mother for each man) is a matter known to the world; there is no ground for doubt in this. When it is said that one man has many mothers, various senses must be imagined for the word "mother". In this context "mother" must be taken to mean one who gives food and nourishes and protects. Therefore the earth, which makes plants grow and provides us food; the rivers, which provide the water needed for the nourishment of plants (through channels); the cow, which protects us by giving milk; the mother who bore us; and the goddesses who remove our troubles and protect us (that is, the wives of the gods)—all these must be called mothers. The commentator's view is that among all these Sarasvatī is supremely the best.

सरस्वति (sarasvati)—Sāyaṇācārya has given five kinds of explanation of the word सरस्वती (sarasvatī) as used in the Ṛgveda mantras. [The supplied text numbers the list "1. (1)".]

1. River—Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-142-9; 1-164-52; 2-30-8, and so on.
2. Name of a river—Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-3-12; 2-14-16; 3-23-4; in 6-41 the Ṛks 4, 7, 10, 11, 13; 6-52-6; 6-61-2; 7-36-6; 7-95-1 and 2; 7-96-1; 8-21-17 and 18; 10-64-9; 10-65-13.
3. Name of a deity—Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-43-11; 5-46-2; 6-49-7; 5-50-12; 10-17-7; 10-30-12.
4. Deity presiding over the sky (one of the three deities Iḷā, Bhāratī and Sarasvatī)—Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-188-8.
5. Goddess of speech—Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-1-11; 3-4-8; 3-54-13; 5-42-12; 7-39-5; 7-40-3; 9-67-32.

In the Ṛgveda there are many mantras that praise the goddess Sarasvatī. But on the question who that goddess Sarasvatī is and what her nature is, the Nirukta author has said nothing. He says only नदीवद्देवतावच्च निगमा भवंति (nadīvaddevatāvacca nigamā bhavaṃti): that is, in some mantras addressed to Sarasvatī she is described as a river and in some as a deity. But it is not clear whether the river called Sarasvatī was regarded as a deity and praised, or whether the deity was regarded as a river and praised. Therefore it must be said that सरस्वती (sarasvatī) denotes both a river and a deity. If it is said that Sarasvatī is a deity, who is that deity, what is her nature, what are her position and rank? To give a satisfactory answer to such questions is not easy. If it is said that Sarasvatī is a river, it may be said that a river famous by that name existed in the past (the modern Sarsuti, in English letters in the supplied text) and that it was praised in the Ṛgveda. In saying so, the doubt arises whether the treatment of inanimate things such as rivers is not forbidden in sacrifices addressed to particular deities. On this matter the sage Jaimini, in his Mīmāṃsā Sūtra, stated a prima facie view with अचेतनेऽर्थबंधनात् (acetaneSrthabaṃdhanāt) (Jai. Sū. 1-2-35); and the commentators have given the solution by citing the Vedānta Sūtra अभिमानिव्यपदेशः (abhimānivyapadeśaḥ) (Ve. Sū. 2-1-5). That is, where inanimate things are addressed in many places in the Vedic mantras, it is to be understood that the presiding deities of those inanimate things are meant.

p. 445

(see Part 1, pages 380 and 381). Therefore, where a river is praised, it must be understood that the deity presiding over that river is praised. Many people hold many different opinions about this goddess Sarasvatī—

1. In the Purāṇas and similar works Sarasvatī is said to be वागधिष्ठात्री, शारदा, विद्यास्वरूपिणी, हंसवाहिनी । (vāgadhiṣṭhātrī, śāradā, vidyāsvarūpiṇī, haṃsavāhinī |): a special deity, the deity presiding over speech, famous by the name Śāradā, of the nature of learning, seated on a swan.
2. Or they say that this goddess Sarasvatī is of the form of Āditya, qualified by a particular limiting condition (upādhi). The upādhi is the twilight; therefore, in the opinion of some, Āditya himself, with the light of twilight, is praised here in the form of Sarasvatī.

3. The word सरः (saraḥ) is formed from the root सृ (sṛ), "go, move". सरः अस्या अस्तीति अथवा सरः तेजो यस्या विद्यते सा सरस्वतीति भवति (saraḥ asyā astīti athavā saraḥ tejo yasyā vidyate sā sarasvatīti bhavati): that is, because she shines with a form of brilliance, she is called Sarasvatī.

4. Or—

प्रातर्वाचां प्रवर्तिका, प्राणिनां स्वापपरित्यागेन स्तोचित व्यवहारेषु प्रवृत्तौ शब्दायमानतायाः प्रवृत्तेः, रात्रौ च वाचां निरोधका रात्रौ प्राणिनां निलायनिलीनत्वेन सुप्यमा नतया शब्द विरामात् । एवं च शब्दस्य प्रवर्तिका निवर्तिका एषैव लोके सरस्वतीत्वेन व्यपदिश्यते नान्या॥ (prātarvācāṃ pravartikā, prāṇināṃ svāpaparityāgena stocita vyavahāreṣu pravṛttau śabdāyamānatāyāḥ pravṛtteḥ, rātrau ca vācāṃ nirodhakā rātrau prāṇināṃ nilāyanilīnatvena supyamā natayā śabda virāmāt | evaṃ ca śabdasya pravartikā nivartikā eṣaiva loke sarasvatītvena vyapadiśyate nānyā‖)

That is: in the morning, creatures awake from sleep and engage in their respective activities, such as speaking; at night, when creatures are absorbed in sleep, they cease from activities, with no speaking or making sound. Therefore, because this goddess of speech is the cause of the starting and stopping of speaking or making sound, she is called Sarasvatī.

1. As said before, since this deity has the nature of speech and so on, this goddess Sarasvatī is of the form of Uṣas. Therefore her name stands among the names of the deity Uṣas, such as सूनृता (sūnṛtā), सूनृतावती (sūnṛtāvatī), सूनृतावरी (sūnṛtāvarī) [printed "ಮೂದಲಾದ"] and so on. Here the word सूनृत (sūnṛta) means pleasant and true words.

p. 446

[Running head, p. 446: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Ma. [as printed] 2, A. 4, Sū. 41.]

In the same way Śaunaka, the author of the Bṛhaddevatā, and other authors have explained the deity Sarasvatī in various ways.

Now let us consider a little in what senses the word सरस्वती (sarasvatī) is used in the Ṛgveda. Three points are chiefly to be noticed in this matter: (1) the present Ṛk अंबितमे (aṃbitame) that we are now commenting on; (2) the other Ṛks addressed to Sarasvatī; (3) the sages who composed these Ṛks and their descendants. We shall examine all three.

In sūkta 1-3 of the Ṛgveda the Ṛks 10, 11 and 12 are mantras addressed to Sarasvatī. In Ṛks 10 and 11 the river Sarasvatī itself is imagined as a deity and praised. The commentator Sāyaṇācārya has explained Sarasvatī in Ṛks 10-11 as the goddess of speech, and in Ṛk 12 as the deity presiding over the river called Sarasvatī. The scholar Griffith (name in English letters in the supplied text) explains Sarasvatī as the goddess of speech. But when पावका (pāvakā) is explained as "purifying with water", and when आर्ण (ārṇa) is explained as "river", it has to be said that Sarasvatī means a river or the deity presiding over a river. Some modern scholars hold that Sarasvatī means the river Sindhu. But since it is said that the hermitage of the sage Madhucchandas, son of Viśvāmitra, who composed this Ṛk, was on the western bank of the present river Sarasuti at Kurukṣetra (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, chapter 43), there is room to suppose that the sage Madhucchandas praised this very river Sarasuti. For when praising a river it does not seem reasonable to say that he praised some other river, far away (of the same name), leaving aside the famous river near the place where he lived. The Ṛks addressed to Sarasvatī in the second maṇḍala, Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-30-8; 2-32-8; and 2-41-16 to 18, were all composed by the sage Gṛtsamada, son of Śunahotra. This sage Gṛtsamada is known to be the sixth in descent from the sage Atri in the family of Atri (according to the book Pravara and Gotra, No. 25, printed in the Mysore Government Oriental Library); Viśvāmitra is the fifth in descent from Atri. In eight Ṛks in all this sage Gṛtsamada has praised Sarasvatī. In Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-1-11 and 2-3-8 he praises Sarasvatī together with Iḍā and Bhāratī. In Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-35-5 he speaks of these three, that is, Iḍā, Sarasvatī and Bhāratī, as three goddesses. In Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-30-8 he praises Sarasvatī together with Indra and the Maruts. In Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-32-8 he speaks of Sarasvatī as a deity. In Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-41

sūkta, in the 16th Ṛk, he describes Sarasvatī as the greatest river and the greatest goddess, and in the 18th Ṛk as ऋतावरी (ṛtāvarī), that is (ऋत (ṛta)—water) a river with abundant water. Seeing this, some Western scholars say that since she is called the greatest river it must be the river Sindhu. But that is not right. For when a poet praises a river or a deity (even if small or ordinary) it is usual to describe it as very great. Some hold that in Ṛk 2-30-8 this sage Gṛtsamada praised Sarasvatī thinking of her as the presiding deity of thunder and lightning. But it does not seem reasonable to say that one sage described one deity in different senses. The seers of sūkta 3-23 of the Ṛgveda are Devaśravā and Devavāta, sons of Bharata. According to the book Gotra-Pravara mentioned before, these seers are known to be sons of Viśvāmitra; from the same book it is known that Bharata is the sixth in descent from Atri and Viśvāmitra the seventh, and that both are descendants of Purūravas, a great-grandson of Atri. In Ṛk 3-23-4 they say—

नि त्वा दधे वर आ पृथिव्या इळायास्पदे सुदिनत्वे अह्नां । दृषद्वत्यां मानुषा अपयायां सरस्वत्यां रेवदग्ने दिदीहि ॥ (ni tvā dadhe vara ā pṛthivyā iḷāyāspade sudinatve ahnāṃ | dṛṣadvatyāṃ mānuṣā apayāyāṃ sarasvatyāṃ revadagne didīhi ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-23-4)

Along with the river Sarasvatī, the names of two other rivers, Dṛṣadvatī and Apayā, are given. Dṛṣadvatī is the present Citrāṅga river (in English letters in the supplied text: the modern Chitrang, Chautag, or Chitang) and Apayā is the present river Apagā (the modern Apaga). Since these two rivers are close to the river Sarasvatī, it can be said confidently that Sarasvatī is not the Sindhu. Recent investigations have also shown that the hermitage of the sage Viśvāmitra was on the western bank of this river Sarasvatī (at Kurukṣetra) (see Dey's Geographical Dic[tionary], in English letters in the supplied text). All that has been said so far concerns the descendants of the sages Atri and Viśvāmitra.

Now let us consider Bharadvāja and his descendants. The seer of all three Ṛks Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-49-7; 6-50-12; 6-52-6 is Ṛjiśvā, son of Bharadvāja [the supplied text has "ಮೂ ಋಕ್ಕುಗಳಿಗೂ", for "three"]. Of these three Ṛks, in the first and the third it is clearly stated that Sarasvatī is a river. In the second mantra, though the name of Sarasvatī is mentioned along with the deities Rudra, Viṣṇu, Vāyu and Parjanya, it may be thought that Sarasvatī is the name of a river; for since the same sage has said in two Ṛks that Sarasvatī is a river, it is natural that in the other Ṛk, too, the same sage praised Sarasvatī thinking of her as a river. Bharadvāja's hermitage was at Prayāga (Allahabad). Therefore Ṛjiśvā, son of Bharadvāja, his

hermitage must have praised a river near it. The whole sūkta Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-61 of the sage Bharadvāja (14 Ṛks in all) is about Sarasvatī. Some Western scholars hold that the meaning of several words in this sūkta applies to the river Sindhu. But since these words apply to the river Sarasvatī also, there is no room for doubt.

For the Ṛks in the seventh maṇḍala, Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-9-5; 7-35-11; 7-36-6; 7-40-3; 7-95; 7-96, Vasiṣṭha is the seer. It is known that the hermitage of the sage Vasiṣṭha was near the hill called Abu (Mount Abu, in English letters in the supplied text) in the Aravalli range in Rajputana [printed ಆರಾವಳೀವರ್ಪತ for ಪರ್ವತ]. The first four mantras and the last two sūktas praise Sarasvatī as a river. Some say that since the words सिंधुमाता (siṃdhumātā) and आसमुद्रात् (āsamudrāt) in these Ṛks apply especially to the river Sindhu, the river Sindhu is what is praised in these mantras. This dispute cannot be rejected altogether. Yet in speaking of one river, it is not impossible to compare another river with it and to praise it with hyperbole.

For Ṛ. Saṃ. 8-21.17 and the 18th Ṛk [printed with a dot] in the eighth maṇḍala, Śobhari, son of the sage Kaṇva, is the seer. In the Ṛks mentioned this seer describes the sacrifice that a king named Citra performed on the bank of the river Sarasvatī and the praise of that king's gifts. Since in Śaunaka's Bṛhaddevatā (6-58 to 62) it is said that this king Citra performed his sacrifice at Kurukṣetra, Sarasvatī must be a river nearby. And—

पूषा विष्णु र्हवनं मे सरस्वत्यवंतु सप्त सिंधवः । अपो वातः पर्वतासो वनस्पतिः शृणोतु पृथिवी हवं । (pūṣā viṣṇu rhavanaṃ me sarasvatyavaṃtu sapta siṃdhavaḥ | apo vātaḥ parvatāso vanaspatiḥ śṛṇotu pṛthivī havaṃ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 8-54-4)

In this Ṛk Sarasvatī is mentioned among the deities Pūṣan, Viṣṇu, the seven rivers, the waters, the wind, the mountains, the plants and the earth. Likewise, in Ṛ. Saṃ. 9-67-32 Vasiṣṭha or Pavitra, the seer of that mantra, has used the word सरस्वती (sarasvatī). Here Sarasvatī may be either of the two senses, a deity or a river. In Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-30-12 it is not stated definitely which river is meant by Sarasvatī. In Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-64-9 Gaya, the seer of this mantra (a descendant of the great sage Atri), mentions Sarasvatī together with the rivers Sindhu and Sarayū (Gogra, in English letters in the supplied text). And—

इमं मे गंगे यमुने सरस्वति शुतुद्रि स्तोमं सचता परुष्णा । असिक्न्या मरुद्वृधे वितस्तयार्जीकीये शृणुह्या सुषोमया । (imaṃ me gaṃge yamune sarasvati śutudri stomaṃ sacatā paruṣṇā | asiknyā marudvṛdhe vitastayārjīkīye śṛṇuhyā suṣomayā |) (Pu. [printed ಪು., for Ṛ.] Saṃ. 10-75-5)

p. 449

[Running head, p. 449: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 10, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

In this Ṛk the river Sarasvatī is mentioned together with the rivers Gaṅgā (the Ganges), Yamunā (the Jamna), Śutudri (the Sutlej), Paruṣṇī [printed ಪರುಷ್ಣಿ] (the Ravi), Asiknī [printed ಅಸಿಕ್ಣಿ] (the Chinab), Vitastā (the Jhelam), Marudvṛdhā [printed ಮರುದ್ವೃಧಾ] (the United Stream of the Jhelam and Chenab), Ārjīkīyā (the Bias) and Suṣomā (the Indus); hence it is clear that the river Sarasvatī is a separate river and not the Sindhu. The whole sūkta containing the above Ṛk is about rivers; that is, rivers are the deities of all 9 Ṛks of this sūkta. The seer of this sūkta is Sindhukṣit, son of the sage Priyamedha.

In the Āprī sūktas it is said that Sarasvatī is one of the three goddesses called तिस्रो देव्यः (tisro devyaḥ). In the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā there are 10 sūktas called Āprī sūktas. The details of these sūktas in Śaunaka's Anuvākānukramaṇī are as follows—

Of the sūktas mentioned above, in sūktas 1-2 there are 12 and 13 Ṛks. All the other sūktas have 11 Ṛks. The deities of these 11 Ṛks are as follows—

(In this table, "1st Ṛk—" and the ditto marks apply to each row: Ṛk number, then the deity.)

In the first sūkta, which has 12 Ṛks, the deity नराशंसः (narāśaṃsaḥ) also occurs, and in the second sūkta, which has 13 Ṛks, the deities नराशंसः (narāśaṃsaḥ) and इंद्रः (iṃdraḥ) also occur; therefore they have 12 and 13 Ṛks instead of the 11 Ṛks of the other sūktas. In other matters there is no difference. The metres and the seers are different. These sūktas are recited when the Prayāja oblations are made at the animal sacrifice, in praise of Agni (सविद्वोऽग्नि (savidvo 'gni) [as supplied]). In these sūktas there is praise of the goddesses called त्रिस्रो देव्यः (trisro devyaḥ) [printed so here, तिस्रो (tisro) above], that is, Iḷā, Sarasvatī and Bhāratī. The chief point to note here is this: Agni is worshipped in three forms, on earth, in the atmosphere and in heaven. Since Bhāratī denotes the rays of the Sun, this deity (that is, the Sun) is the form of Agni in heaven (diva). Since Sarasvatī is in many places described as the presiding deity of thunder and lightning, this Sarasvatī is the form of Agni in the atmosphere. Since the goddess Iḷā gives wealth and long life to the people on earth, this deity is the form of Agni on earth; thus this is the symbolism of Iḷā, Sarasvatī and Bhāratī. The seers have praised these three goddesses, asking that they come to the sacrificial altar and sit upon the spread barhis (the spread darbha grass).

We shall give some examples of the seers' praising Sarasvatī, thinking of her not as a river but as another deity.

1. तान्नूर्वया निविदा हूमहे वयं भगं मित्रमदितिं दक्षमस्रिधं । अर्यमणं वरुणं सोममश्विना सरस्वती नः सुभगा मयस्करत् । (tānnūrvayā nividā hūmahe vayaṃ bhagaṃ mitramaditiṃ dakṣamasridhaṃ | aryamaṇaṃ varuṇaṃ somamaśvinā sarasvatī naḥ subhagā mayaskarat |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-89-3)

In this Ṛk Sarasvatī is thought of either as the goddess of speech or as the presiding deity of thunder and lightning.

p. 451

[Running head, p. 451: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 10, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

1. सरस्वति त्वमस्मा अविद्धि मरुत्वती धृषती जेषि शत्रून् । (sarasvati tvamasmā aviddhi marutvatī dhṛṣatī jeṣi śatrūn |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-30-8)

2. सरस्वती तृणवन् यज्ञेयासो धाता रयिं सहवीरं तुरासः । (sarasvatī tṛṇavan yajñèyāso dhātā rayiṃ sahavīraṃ turāsaḥ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-54-13)

In these Ṛks Sarasvatī is thought of either as a river or as the presiding deity of thunder and lightning. [The supplied text numbers this list "1. (2)", "(3)", and so on.]

1. दमूनसो अपसो ये सुहस्ता वृष्णः पत्निर्नद्यो विभ्वतष्टाः । सरस्वती बृहद्दिवोत राका दशस्यंतीर्वरिवस्यंतु शुभ्राः । (damūnaso apaso ye suhastā vṛṣṇaḥ patnirnadyo vibhvataṣṭāḥ | sarasvatī bṛhaddivota rākā daśasyaṃtīrvarivasyaṃtu śubhrāḥ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-42-12)
2. आ नो दिवो बृहतः पर्वतादा सरस्वती यजता गंतु यज्ञं । (ā no divo bṛhataḥ parvatādā sarasvatī yajatā gaṃtu yajñaṃ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-43-11)
3. उभा नासत्या रुद्रो अध ग्नाः पूषा भगः सरस्वती जुषंत । (ubhā nāsatyā rudro adha gnāḥ pūṣā bhagaḥ sarasvatī juṣaṃta |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-46-2)

In all three of these Ṛks Sarasvatī is the presiding deity of thunder and lightning. Griffith (in English letters in the supplied text) holds that in the first of these three Ṛks Sarasvatī is shown as one river, Sindhu or Sarasvatī, and in Ṛks 2-3 as a deity. K. C. Chattopadhyaya (name in Kannada letters with initials in English: "K. C. ಚಟ್ಟೊಪಾಧ್ಯಾಯ") says that Ṛks 1-2 apply to the river Sindhu. These three Ṛks were all spoken by descendants of the sage Atri. For the first Ṛk Atri, or Bhauma, son of Atri, is the seer; for the second Ṛk, Atri; for the third Ṛk, Pratikṣatra, a descendant of Atri. In the second Ṛk Sarasvatī is invited from heaven (दिवः (divaḥ)) and from the cloud region (पर्वतादा (parvatādā)). Since the word पत्निः (patniḥ) occurs in the first Ṛk, the commentator has imagined Sarasvatī and the other rivers to be the wives of Indra.

1. अग्निरिंद्रो वरुणो मित्रो अर्यमा वायुः पूषा सरस्वती सजोषसः । (agniriṃdro varuṇo mitro aryamā vāyuḥ pūṣā sarasvatī sajoṣasaḥ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-65-1)
2. विश्वे देवासः शृणवन् वचांसि मे सरस्वती सह धीभिः पुरंध्या । (viśve devāsaḥ śṛṇavan vacāṃsi me sarasvatī saha dhībhiḥ puraṃdhyā |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-65-13)

In both these Ṛks Sarasvatī is the goddess of speech;

p. 452

[Running head, p. 452: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 4, Sū. 41.]

1. यत्सुरामं व्यपिबः शचीभिः सरस्वती त्वा मघवन्नभिष्णुक् । (yatsurāmaṃ vyapibaḥ śacībhiḥ sarasvatī tvā maghavannabhiṣṇuk |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-131-5)

Since in this Ṛk Sarasvatī is said to be with Indra, Sarasvatī may be thought of as the presiding deity of thunder and lightning.

1. गर्भं देहि सिनीवालि गर्भं देहि सरस्वति । (garbhaṃ dehi sinīvāli garbhaṃ dehi sarasvati |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-184-2)

Here it is proper to call Sarasvatī the goddess of speech.

We shall explain as closely as is known where the river Sarasvatī flowed in that time. This explanation has been written following (1) R. D. Oldham in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, 1886, page 322; (2) C. F. Oldham, Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, 1893, page 51; (3) the maps of the Cambridge History of India, Vol. I, Ancient India; (4) the maps of the Punjab published by the Surveyor-General of India; (5) "Ancient India as described by Magastheneses and Arrian" [sic as supplied] (all given in English letters in the supplied text, with "ಎಂಬ ಭಾಷಣಗಳನ್ನನುಸರಿಸಿ", "the lectures called"). The river Sarasvatī was in that time a great river. Rising in the Sirmur (Sismur, in English letters) range of the Himalaya mountains, it flows west and a little south. At its source five small streams (small channels in which water flows) probably joined to form this river and went on; therefore it must have got the name पंचजाता (paṃcajātā). After flowing some distance, the river called Dṛṣadvatī (the modern Chitrang, printed "modren") comes flowing from the east and joins it. Āpayā [printed आपया (āpayā)] is a tributary of the Dṛṣadvatī. The Sarasvatī of that time was to the south of the present river Sarasuti. (Rivers that flow in sandy deserts often change their courses.) The small rivers Mārkaṇḍā (Markand) and Gaggar (Ghaggar) join the present river Sarasuti. Then Sarasvatī flows in the south and west and finally reaches the sea. The bed of the present dried-up river Hakra (Hakra) must have been the bed of the Sarasvatī of that time. It may have united with the present (Sutlej) river and merged into the river Sindhu; or it may have gone directly to join the Sindhu. At that time the Sindhu was far to the east of where it is now and joined the sea near the gulf of the Rann of Kachh (Rann of Kach). The scholar Max Müller (Max Muller) holds, on the basis of the word आसमुद्रात् (āsamudrāt) in Ṛk 7-95-2, that this river Sarasvatī went directly to join the sea. Since before reaching the sea this river flowed through a region of sandy desert, it may have been absorbed in the desert before reaching the sea

(see Muir's Sanskrit Texts, Vol. II, page 393, in English letters in the supplied text). The description of a river thus being lost in the desert is given also in the Mahābhārata (Vana Parva, the description of the pilgrimages) and in the Manu Saṃhitā (1-21). From all these reasons it can be said that the present river Sarasuti must be the former river Sarasvatī.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk the prayer is made that Sarasvatī, who has abundant food, be gratified by the soma offered by the sage Gṛtsamada and his descendants, and bestow on them food and the wealth of sons, grandsons and so on.

आयूंषि (āyūṃṣi)—the word आयुः (āyuḥ) is read among the names of food (printed सि. ३-९ (si. 3-9), i.e. Ni. 3-9, as supplied). Two kinds of meaning may be given, food and life.

शुनहोत्रेषु (śunahotreṣu)—the sage Gṛtsamada and his descendants, that is, sons, grandsons and so on, and other relatives, followers and the like. The explanation of this word we have given in the Special Topics of the 14th Ṛk of this sūkta.

(Gist: O Sarasvatī, rich in food and water, accept these oblations that the Gṛtsamadas offer to you, dear among the gods.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Vājinīvati: endowed with food. Ṛtāvari: endowed with water. Sarasvati: O Sarasvatī. Yā: which oblations. Manma: attractive to the mind. Deveṣu: to the gods. Priyā: dear (therefore). Te: addressed to you. Gṛtsamadāḥ: we, the Gṛtsamadas. Juhvati: offer. Imā brahma: these oblations. Juṣasva: accept and partake.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Sarasvatī, endowed with food and with water, the oblations which are attractive to the mind and dear to the gods, and also to you, pre-eminent among them, we the Gṛtsamadas offer to you. Accept and partake of them and be gratified.

Printed English translation

Saraswati, abounding in food, abounding in water, be propitiated by these oblations, which the Gritsamadas offer as acceptable to you, and precious to the gods.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

वाजिनीवति (vājinīvati)—the word वाजः (vājaḥ) is read among the names of food (Ni. 3-9); therefore the word वाजनीवति (vājanīvati) [as supplied] means she who has food.

ब्रह्म (brahma)—the word ब्रह्म (brahma) is read among the names of food (Ni. 3-9); therefore it means the oblations we offer. Although the word ब्रह्म (brahma) is in the singular here, the word इमा (imā) that qualifies it is in the plural, so the word ब्रह्म (brahma) must be taken in the plural sense. This kind of usage, that is, difference in number and case, is specially seen in the Ṛgveda.

मन्म (manma)—मननीयानि । (mananīyāni |) The rules stated for the word ब्रह्म (brahma) apply also to this word.

गृत्समदाः (gṛtsamadāḥ)—the sage Gṛtsamada and his relatives. See the explanation written for the word शुनहोत्रेषु (śunahotreṣu) in the Special Topics of the 14th Ṛk of this sūkta.

ऋतावरि (ṛtāvari)—the word ऋत (ṛta) is read among the names of water (Ni. 2-24) and among the names of the sacrifice

(Ni. 2-24 above). And there is the etymology ऋतमित्युदकनाम प्रत्यृतं भवति (ṛtamityudakanāma pratyṛtaṃ bhavati) (Ni. 2-25), and also सत्यं वा यज्ञं वा (satyaṃ vā yajñaṃ vā) (Ni. 4-19). In the present Ṛk the commentator has explained ऋत (ṛta) as water and said that the river Sarasvatī has abundant water.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Yajñasya: for the sacrifice. Śaṃbhuvā: Heaven and Earth, which bring welfare. Pretāṃ: let them go and join (to the western part of the Uttaravedi) (O Heaven and Earth). Yuvāṃ it: you only. Ā vṛṇīmahe: we beseech. Havyavāhanaṃ: bearing the oblation (to the gods). Agniṃ ca: and Agni we also beseech.

Printed English translation

May the two, (Heaven and Earth), who confer good fortune upon the sacrifice, proceed (to the altar); for, verily, we implore you both (to come), as well as Agni, the hearer of oblations.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

This Ṛk and the next two Ṛks praise the two carts called हविर्धाने (havirdhāne), which bring the soma plants, or Heaven and Earth, their presiding deities. Although the word for Heaven and Earth is not in Ṛks 19 and 21, Heaven and Earth are clearly addressed in Ṛk 20.

On the word हविर्धाने (havirdhāne) Yāska says हविर्धाने । हविषां निधाने (havirdhāne | haviṣāṃ nidhāne) and Durgācārya explains हविषां निधाने सोमास्तयोर्निधीयंते (haviṣāṃ nidhāne somāstayornidhīyaṃte) (Ni. 9-36). That is, they are the two carts which, after the purchase of soma in the sacrifice, bring the soma plants to the sacrificial ground, that is, to the altar called Prācīnavaṃśa. Since the oblation or the soma plants are placed in them, they are called Havirdhāna.

These carts are brought near the sacrificial altar of the Prācīnavaṃśa and left on the west. The rite of taking them to the Uttaravedi of the sacrificial ground is called Havirdhānapravāhaṇa or Havirdhānapratardana. During this rite the Havirdhāna, or Heaven and Earth, its presiding deities, are praised with these three Ṛks (Ṛks 19, 20, 21 of this sūkta). That is what is said here. This rite called Havirdhānapravāhaṇa is described in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa; we explain it here.

The preliminary account of the rite of conveying soma.

Formerly soma was in heaven. When no one was able to bring it, Gāyatrī went to heaven in the form of a hawk, overcame the opposition of those there, and brought it to earth. While she was bringing it, on the way a Gandharva named Viśvāvasu stole that soma and kept it with him. The gods considered how to get it back from him, and since the Gandharvas are very fond of women and full of desire, they decided to show them the allurement of women and recover the soma. For that they went to the goddess of speech, told her the whole matter, and decided that she should become a beautiful woman, be sold to the Gandharvas, and the soma be brought in exchange. Accordingly the goddess of speech took the form of a beautiful woman; they gave her to the Gandharvas and brought the soma back. After the soma came into the power of the gods, the goddess of speech, who was in the form of a beautiful woman, took the form of a doe, escaped from the Gandharvas, and ran to join the gods

and came to them. Therefore from that time it became the custom to bring soma plants for use in sacrifices. The rite called Somakrayaṇa (purchase of soma) is still performed in the sacrifice. Moreover, since the best soma plants grow in high mountain regions (the mountain called Mūjavat is famous for soma plants), it is very laborious to bring them. It therefore appears that the custom arose of buying soma at a due price from those who, for the sake of gain, endured the labour and went to the mountains and brought it. Since formerly, when the Gandharva stole soma, it stayed with him for three nights, there is a rule that the soma taken in purchase must also remain for three nights. (All this is stated in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa and the Taittirīya Saṃhitā.) After the purchase it is brought in the two carts called Havirdhāna and left near the sacrificial hall or the Prācīnavaṃśa. The part of the rite of bringing that soma with mantras to the Uttaravedi is called Somapravāhaṇa, so the approach is stated as in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (Ai. Brā. 3-12).

प्राच्यां वै दिशि देवाः सोमं राजानमक्रीणंस्तस्मात्प्राच्यां दिशि क्रीयते । (prācyāṃ vai diśi devāḥ somaṃ rājānamakrīṇaṃstasmātprācyāṃ diśi krīyate |)

Formerly, when the gods performed a sacrifice, they bought soma from the region to the east of the Prācīnavaṃśa (the sacrificial altar). Therefore even now soma must be bought from the east.

तं त्रयोदशान्मासादक्रीणंस्तस्मात्रयोदशो मासो नानुविद्यते न वै सोमविक्रय्यनुविद्यते पापो हि सोमविक्रया । (taṃ trayodaśānmāsādakrīṇaṃstasmātrayodaśo māso nānuvidyate na vai somavikrayyanuvidyate pāpo hi somavikrayā |)

Formerly a year had thirteen months. The gods bought soma from the presiding deity of the thirteenth month. Now there is no thirteenth month in the year; there are only twelve months. Though on some occasions there is a thirteenth month, the intercalary month, it is of no use for any auspicious rites, so there is no custom of buying in it. Since selling soma is regarded as a very sinful act, the man who sells soma is also a sinner. No correct dealings can go on with him. On this subject the Taittirīya Śruti says: अस्मे ज्योतिः सोमविक्रयिणि तम इत्याह । ज्योतिरेव यजमाने दधाति । तमः सोमविक्रयिणमर्पयति । (asme jyotiḥ somavikrayiṇi tama ityāha | jyotireva yajamāne dadhāti | tamaḥ somavikrayiṇamarpayati |) Here तमः (tamaḥ) means sin. The ज्योतिः (jyotiḥ), that is, the strength and power, of the soma seller leaves him and joins the sacrificer who buys soma and performs the sacrifice; sin alone comes to the soma seller: this is the meaning of the Śruti sentence. There is a rule that after the purchase of soma, when it is brought near the Prācīnavaṃśa, eight Ṛks must be recited; for there is a reason for this. That is stated here—

p. 459

तस्य क्रीतस्य मनुष्यानभ्युपावर्तमानस्य दिशो वीर्याणींद्रियाणि व्युदसीदंस्तान्येकयर्चावारुरुत्संत तानि नाशक्नुवंस्तानि द्वाभ्यां तानि तिसृभिस्तानि चतसृभिस्तानि पंचभिस्तानि षड्भिस्तानि सप्तभिर्नैवावरुंधत तान्यष्टाभिरवारुंधताष्टाभिराश्नुवत यदष्टाभिरवारुंधताष्टाभिराश्नुवत तदष्टानामष्टत्वमश्नुते यद्यत्कामयते य एवं वेद । (tasya krītasya manuṣyānabhyupāvartamānasya diśo vīryāṇīṃdriyāṇi vyudasīdaṃstānyekayarcāvārurutsaṃta tāni nāśakkuvaṃstāni dvābhyāṃ tāni tisṛbhistāni catasṛbhistāni paṃcabhistāni ṣaḍbhistāni saptabhirnaivāvaruṃdhata tānyaṣṭābhiravāruṃdhatāṣṭābhirāśnuvata yadaṣṭābhiravāruṃdhatāṣṭābhirāśnuvata tadaṣṭānāmaṣṭatvamaśnute yadyatkāmayate ya evaṃ veda |)

After the soma was bought and brought, when it came near men (the sacrificers), its strength and powers dwindled; that is, the power belonging to soma (that comes to those who drink soma) of giving strength and making the senses such as the eye keen was all lost. Then the sacrificers, wishing to stop those powers from going, tried by reciting one Ṛk to make a binding of the quarters. It did not succeed. Then they recited two Ṛks, then three, four, five, six, up to seven Ṛks, and it did not succeed. Then, when they recited eight Ṛks, they were able to bind. Therefore, since the work was accomplished by reciting eight Ṛks, the use of the word अष्ट (aṣṭa) (from अश् प्राप्तौ (aś prāptau)) agrees here. The man who knows this obtains what he desires.

तस्मादेतेषु कर्मस्वष्टावनूच्यंत इंद्रियाणां वीर्याणामवरुध्येति (tasmādeteṣu karmasvaṣṭāvanūcyaṃta iṃdriyāṇāṃ vīryāṇāmavarudhyèti) (Ai. Brā. 3-12)

Therefore in these soma-conveying rites the Hotṛ priest must recite eight Ṛks separately. By reciting thus, it is possible to prevent the senses and powers (strength and capacities) from being lost.

Here the preliminary account ends.

The rite called Somapravāhaṇa

(the rite of bringing the soma from near the Prācīnavaṃśa or sacrificial altar to near the Uttaravedi in the west)

Up to here the number of Ṛks to be used in this Somapravāhaṇa rite has been made clear. Now the Adhvaryu recites the Praiṣa mantra, addressing the Hotṛ.

सोमाय क्रीताय प्रोह्यमाणायानुब्रू ३ हीत्याहाध्वयुर् । (somāya krītāya prohyamāṇāyānubrū 3 hītyāhādhvayur |)

Now the Adhvaryu, addressing the Hotṛ, says सोमाय क्रीताय प्रोह्यमाणायानुब्रू ३ हि (somāya krītāya prohyamāṇāyānubrū 3 hi) [with the hyphenated line break joined in kn.md]: that is, for the soma that has been bought, to be taken to the Uttaravedi, take to go, he directs him to recite the mantra required in this rite called Somapravāhaṇa, which is performed for the going.

भद्रादभि श्रेयः प्रेहीत्यन्वाह । (bhadrādabhi śreyaḥ prehītyanvāha |)

Hearing this, the Hotṛ recites the mantra भद्रादभि श्रेयः प्रेहि (bhadrādabhi śreyaḥ prehi) [the supplied text has "ಇದದ್ದು" for "ಇದನ್ನು", "this"]. This mantra is not in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā; it is stated in the Taittirīya branch, that is, in the Yajurveda. That mantra is—

भद्रादभि श्रेयः प्रेहि बृहस्पतिः पुर एता ते अस्तु । अथेमवस्य वर आ पृथिव्या आरे शत्रून् कृणुहि सर्ववीरः ॥ (bhadrādabhi śreyaḥ prehi bṛhaspatiḥ pura etā te astu | athemavasya vara ā pṛthivyā āre śatrūn kṛṇuhi sarvavīraḥ ‖) (Tai. Saṃ. 1-2-3-3)

Its meaning is this: O Soma, set out from this auspicious earth, the place of purchase, towards the region of the Prācīnavaṃśa, which equals the place of heaven. As you go thus, Bṛhaspati will go before you as your guide. When you have gone there, settle the fit and excellent place for you to sit in the region of the sacrificial ground belonging to the earth. Then, you who are the bravest of all, cause all the sinful enemies who hate the sacrifice to be kept far away; that is, cause them to depart far away. This is the meaning of the mantra. The explanation of the first pāda is given, explaining the result of reciting this mantra:

अयं वाव लोको भद्रस्तस्मादसावेव लोकः श्रेयान् स्वर्गमेव तल्लोकं यजमानं गमयति । (ayaṃ vāva loko bhadrastasmādasāveva lokaḥ śreyān svargameva tallokaṃ yajamānaṃ gamayati |)

As stated in the first pāda, this earth is auspicious. But heaven is far more conducive to welfare than this world. The recitation of this mantra brings the sacrificer who performs the sacrifice to that heaven.

बृहस्पतिः पुर एता ते अस्त्विति ब्रह्म वै बृहस्पतिर्ब्रह्मैवासा एतत्पुरोगवमकर्ण वै ब्रह्मण्वद्रिष्यति ॥ (bṛhaspatiḥ pura etā te astviti brahma vai bṛhaspatirbrahmaivāsā etatpurogavamakarṇa vai brahmaṇvadriṣyati ‖)

Then the Hotṛ recites the second pāda, बृहस्पतिः पुरा एता ते अस्तु (bṛhaspatiḥ purā etā te astu). For the gods, Bṛhaspati is the priest called Brahmā; the priest Brahmā, the best of Brahmins, will be the guide. Since it is so said, a sacrificial rite carried out under the leadership of a Brahmin does not fail at all; it comes to an end conferring welfare. (The Brāhmaṇa text is given as supplied; the word पुरोगवमकर्ण (purogavamakarṇa) is as it stands after the hyphenated line break was joined.)

अथेमवस्य वर आ पृथिव्या इति देवयजनं वै वरं पृथिव्यै देवयजन एवैनं तदवसाययत्यारे शत्रून्कृणुहि सर्ववीर इति द्विषंतमेवास्मै तत्पाप्मानं भ्रातृव्यमपभाधतेऽधरं पादयति । (athemavasya vara ā pṛthivyā iti devayajanaṃ vai varaṃ pṛthivyai devayajana evainaṃ tadavasāyayatyāre śatrūnkṛṇuhi sarvavīra iti dviṣaṃtamevāsmai tatpāpmānaṃ bhrātṛvyamapabhādhate 'dharaṃ pādayati |)

Now they explain the third pāda: अथेमवस्य वर आ पृथिव्याः (athemavasya vara ā pṛthivyāḥ) is the third pāda. The excellent region on the earth is the place of worship of the gods. By reciting this third pāda he makes the soma settle in the excellent place belonging to the earth, that is, in the region of worship of the gods. By reciting the fourth pāda, आरे शत्रून्कृणुहि सर्ववीरः (āre śatrūnkṛṇuhi sarvavīraḥ), help is given in driving away the enemy in the form of sin that hates the sacrificer. Therefore the Hotṛ, reciting this fourth pāda, drives away the enemy who would bring harm to the sacrificer and makes that enemy go to a low region (a very mean place).

सोम यास्ते मयोभुव इति तृचं सौम्यं गायत्रमन्नाह सोमे राजनि प्रोह्यमाणे स्वयैवैनं तद्देवतया स्वेन छंदसा समर्धयति । (soma yāste mayobhuva iti tṛcaṃ saumyaṃ gāyatramannāha some rājani prohyamāṇe svayaivainaṃ taddevatayā svena chaṃdasā samardhayati |)

Then the Hotṛ—

सोम यास्ते मयोभुव ऊतेयः संति दाशुषे । ताभिर्नोऽविता भव ॥ इमं यज्ञमिदं वचो जुजुषाण उपागहि । सोम त्वं नो वृधे भव ॥ सोम गीर्भिष्ट्वा वयं वर्धयामो वचोविदः । सुमृळीको न आ वि श ॥ (soma yāste mayobhuva ūtèyaḥ saṃti dāśuṣe | tābhirno 'vitā bhava ‖ imaṃ yajñamidaṃ vaco jujuṣāṇa upāgahi | soma tvaṃ no vṛdhe bhava ‖ soma gīrbhiṣṭvā vayaṃ vardhayāmo vacovidaḥ | sumṛḷīko na ā vi śa ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-91-9, 10, 11)

—recites these three Ṛks. These three Ṛks are addressed to Soma and are in the Gāyatrī metre. They are to be recited at the time of bringing the soma. By reciting Gāyatrī-metre Ṛks that praise the Soma deity himself and are dear to the Soma deity, it is as if the Soma deity were praised with his own mantras and with his own Gāyatrī metre, and the Soma deity becomes prosperous, that is, glad. The substance brought here is soma, and the mantras of praise are addressed to Soma; therefore the mantras are said to be his own. Since it was Gāyatrī that brought the soma from heaven to earth, the Gāyatrī metre is regarded as Soma's own. This matter is stated in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā in the anuvāka beginning कद्रूश्च वै (kadrūśca vai) (Tai. Saṃ. 6-1-6). Therefore here it is explained that the three Ṛks above and the Gāyatrī metre are Soma's own.

सर्वे नंदंति यशसागतेनेत्यन्नाह । (sarve naṃdaṃti yaśasāgatenetyannāha |)

p. 462

[Running head, p. 462: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. [printed "ಅ."] 4, Sū. 41.]

Then the Hotṛ recites the fifth Ṛk—

सर्वे नंदंति यशसागतेन सभासाहेन सख्या सखायः । किल्पिषस्पृत्पितुषणिर्हैषामरं हितो भवति वाजिनाय ॥ (sarve naṃdaṃti yaśasāgatena sabhāsāhena sakhyā sakhāyaḥ | kilpiṣaspṛtpituṣaṇirhaiṣāmaraṃ hito bhavati vājināya ||) (Ma. Saṃ. 10-72-10)

This Ṛk is in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā itself. The main intent of this Ṛk is as follows. The sacrificer, the priests and the other people taking part in the sacrifice are glad to see this deity Soma, a friend and dear to all, arrived at the sacrificial ground. This Soma brings fame; as a scholar who overcomes all in an assembly of the learned by his unusual learning enters the assembly and delights everyone, so all are glad at the arrival of this deity Soma; and this Soma destroys the faults, that is, the sins and defects of the priests and sacrificers and protects them; he is the giver of food to them, that is, all are satisfied by drinking soma. Soma, endowed with such great qualities, has been brought to this altar and placed here in order to favour all with food, strength of the senses, and vigour. This matter is well known: this is the main intent of the Ṛk.

यशो वै सोमो राजा सर्वो ह वा एतेन क्रियेमाणेन नंदंति यश्च यज्ञे लप्स्यमानो भवति यश्च न ।
(yaśo vai somo rājā sarvo ha vā etena kriyemāṇena naṃdaṃti yaśca yajñe lapsyamāno bhavati yaśca na |)

The first pāda of this Ṛk is explained. The deity Soma is the cause of fame. Indra and the others, having drunk soma, did many daring deeds and became renowned; therefore Soma is said to be of the nature of fame. In the sacrifice some obtain wealth by performing the priests' rites, and some are glad merely on seeing the sacrifice. Therefore all are glad on seeing this soma, bought and brought to the sacrificial ground.

सभासाहेन सख्या सखाय इत्येष वै ब्राह्मणानां सभासाहः सखा यत्तोमो राजा । (sabhāsāhena sakhyā sakhāya ityeṣa vai brāhmaṇānāṃ sabhāsāhaḥ sakhā yattomo rājā |)

The second pāda is explained: this Soma, shining radiantly, shines with his learning, having defeated all in the assemblies of the learned among Brahmins. Since this deity brings benefit to Brahmins and to the sacrificers and priests, he is a friend.

किल्पिषस्पृदित्येष उ एव किल्पिषस्पृत् यो वै भवति यः श्रेष्ठतामश्नुते स किल्पिषं भवति ।
तस्मादाहुर्मानुवोचो मा प्रचारीः किल्पिषं नु मा याशयन्निति । (kilpiṣaspṛdityeṣa u eva kilpiṣaspṛt yo vai bhavati yaḥ śreṣṭhatāmaśnute sa kilpiṣaṃ bhavati | tasmādāhurmānuvoco mā pracārīḥ kilpiṣaṃ nu mā yāśayanniti |)

The third pāda is explained: this deity Soma removes and protects from किल्बिष (kilbiṣa), sin. In the Soma sacrifice performed to obtain all one's desires, there is a likelihood of किल्बिष (kilbiṣa), that is, lapses, defects, sins and the like, occurring. In such cases the Soma deity removes those lapses and sins and protects the sacrificer. The point as to how किल्बिष (kilbiṣa) can occur to the priests and the sacrificer during a sacrifice is this: a man engaged in the sacrificial rite, reciting mantras and so on in a mature sacrifice that must be carried out with great intelligence, from a wish to finish it quickly, and from the false pride that he is himself most able in the use of mantras and has no equal, recites the mantras, and so defects such as the loss of a syllable or of a rite arise in the pronunciation and the order, causing deficiency in the rite, and sin occurs. And the sacrificer says to the priests: O Hotṛ, at the time of reciting mantras let your mind be fixed on the recitation and the meaning of the mantras; with a steady mind, not letting it go elsewhere, recite the mantra texts such as the Puronuvākyā; O Adhvaryu, in the hurry of the work do not let the things to be done go wrong, nor let the work be spoiled by your attention being elsewhere; give up the haste to get the work finished quickly and carry out the acts carefully. Be careful that, by the lapses and defects you make, किल्बिष (kilbiṣa), that is sin, does not befall me, the sacrificer. From such sins may the Soma deity protect the priests and the sacrificer: this is what is said.

पितुषणिरित्यन्नं वै पितु दक्षिणा वै पितु तामेनेन सनोत्यन्नसनिमेवैनं तत्करोति ! (pituṣaṇirityannaṃ vai pitu dakṣiṇā vai pitu tāmenena sanotyannasanimevainaṃ tatkaroti !)

Explaining the fourth pāda, the meaning of the word पितुषणि (pituṣaṇi) is explained: the word पितु (pitu) is a name for food, and also means the fee (dakṣiṇā) given to the priests in sacrifices and the like. To the priests who take part in this Soma sacrifice Soma gives fees and so on and food.

अरं हितो भवति वाजिनायेतींद्रियं वै वीर्यं वाजिनं आजरसं हास्मै वाजिनं नापच्छिद्यते य एवं वेद । (araṃ hito bhavati vājināyetīṃdriyaṃ vai vīryaṃ vājinaṃ ājarasaṃ hāsmai vājinaṃ nāpacchidyate ya evaṃ veda |)

And Soma gives the sacrificers and priests, until old age, keenness of the senses, vigour and capacity. For the man who knows this, the keenness of the senses and so on will not be lost

p. 464

[Running head, p. 464: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2, Ā. [as printed] 4, Sū. 41.]

midway; Soma favours him thus. Seeing such Soma brought to the altar and placed in his own place, all people are glad: so the main intent of this Ṛk is described.

आगन्नेव इत्यन्नाह । (āganneva ityannāha |)

Next, the sixth Ṛk—

आगन्नेव ऋतुभिर्वर्धतु क्षयं दधातु नः सविता सुप्रजामिषं । स नः क्षपाभिरहभिश्च जिन्वतु प्रजावंतं रयिमस्मे समिन्वतु ॥ (āganneva ṛtubhirvardhatu kṣayaṃ dadhātu naḥ savitā suprajāmiṣaṃ | sa naḥ kṣapābhirahabhiśca jinvatu prajāvaṃtaṃ rayimasme saminvatu ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-53-7)

—he recites. This mantra too is in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā itself. Its main intent is: may this deity Soma come to our sacrificial ground; having come here, accompanied by the seasons, may he increase our dwelling-place; and may this deity Soma, as our impeller, provide us with excellent progeny of sons, grandsons and so on, and with food; and may that deity make us glad also in days and nights; may he procure for us progeny (sons and the rest) and wealth.

आगतो हि स तर्हि भवति ऋतुभिर्वर्धतु क्षयमित्यृतवो वै सोमस्य राज्ञो राजभ्रातरो यथा मनुष्यस्य तैरेवैनं तत्सहागमयति । (āgato hi sa tarhi bhavati ṛtubhirvardhatu kṣayamityṛtavo vai somasya rājño rājabhrātaro yathā manuṣyasya tairevainaṃ tatsahāgamayati |)

The meaning of the first pāda of this Ṛk is explained: the word आगन् (āgan) at the beginning of this Ṛk indicates that after the purchase of soma, Soma has come to the sacrificial ground. In worldly usage, as men have brothers with them, kings too have brothers. Here Soma is the king; the seasons are his brothers. This King Soma has graciously come here with these brothers, the seasons. The Hotṛ, reciting the first pāda with this meaning, has wished a welcome to King Soma accompanied by his brothers.

दधातु नः सविता सुप्रजामिषमित्याशिषमाशास्ते । स नः क्षपाभिरहभिश्च जिन्वत्वित्य- हानि वा अहानि रात्रयः क्षपा अहोरात्रैरेवास्मा एतामाशिषमाशास्ते प्रजावंतं रयिमस्मे समिन्वतित्याशिषमेवाशास्ते । (dadhātu naḥ savitā suprajāmiṣamityāśiṣamāśāste | sa naḥ kṣapābhirahabhiśca jinvatvitya- hāni vā ahāni rātrayaḥ kṣapā ahorātrairevāsmā etāmāśiṣamāśāste prajāvaṃtaṃ rayimasme saminvatityāśiṣamevāśāste |)

Having explained the first pāda, they explain the meaning of the following pādas. May this deity Soma, who impels all, grant us good sons and food and protect us. And may that deity, making us glad also in days and nights, grant us and protect us with the progeny of sons, grandsons and so on, and with wealth: such a wish is expressed.

p. 465

[Running head, p. 465: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 10, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

[The Ṛk आगन् (āgan) cited above is addressed to Savitṛ. This whole sūkta of seven Ṛks seen by the sage Vāmadeva is about the deity Savitṛ. Yet it has been explained and used here with reference to the Soma deity. Since what is said in this Ṛk comprises matters fitting the occasion of bringing soma, it is natural that this Ṛk is used with reference to the Soma deity. In sacrificial rites—

एतद्वै यज्ञस्य समृद्धं यद्रूपसमृद्धं यत्कर्म क्रियमाणमृगभिवदति । (etadvai yajñasya samṛddhaṃ yadrūpasamṛddhaṃ yatkarma kriyamāṇamṛgabhivadati |) (Ai. Brā. 3-13)

—according to this Śruti saying, it is said that in each rite one should use the Ṛks that set forth the matters of that rite, explaining a fitting meaning; and since here all the matters in which the priests and the sacrificer beseech the Soma deity at the time of bringing soma are in this Ṛk, this Ṛk is recited as being with reference to the Soma deity itself, though it is addressed to another deity. No fault is seen in this.]

Then the Hotṛ recites the seventh Ṛk in this rite.

या शे धामानि हविषा यजंतीत्यन्नाह । (yā śe dhāmāni haviṣā yajaṃtītyannāha |) [the supplied text has या शे (yā śe) for या ते (yā te) here]

The seventh Ṛk that the Hotṛ recites is in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā itself—

या ते धामानि हविषा यजंति ता ते विश्वा परिभूरस्तु यज्ञं । गयस्थानः प्रतरणः सुवीरोऽवीरहा प्रचरा सोम दुर्यान् ॥ (yā te dhāmāni haviṣā yajaṃti tā te viśvā paribhūrastu yajñaṃ | gayasthānaḥ prataraṇaḥ suvīro 'vīrahā pracarā soma duryān ॥) (Mi. [printed ൩., for Ṛ.] Saṃ. 1-91-4)

The main intent of this Ṛk: O Soma, the sacrificers worship your places, such as the Uttaravedi, with oblations and so on. Since those places of yours pervade all places, you dwell surrounding the sacrificial region; you are the one who nourishes and increases our cows; the one who carries us across all difficulties; you are the one who gives us good sons, grandsons and so on; and further, O deity Soma, you are not one who kills the excellent heroes among us. Such as you, now graciously turn towards our house.

ता ते विश्वा परिभूरस्तु यज्ञं गयस्थानः प्रतरणः सुवीर इति गवां नः स्थावयिता प्रतारयित्यैधीत्येव तदाह ॥ (tā te viśvā paribhūrastu yajñaṃ gayasthānaḥ prataraṇaḥ suvīra iti gavāṃ naḥ sthāvayitā pratārayityaidhītyeva tadāha ‖)

Since the meaning of the first pāda is clear, the second and third pādas are explained. Since the meaning of this has also been stated above, there is no need to say it again.

[Stray line in the supplied text: "30", kept as a note in kn.md.]

p. 466

अवीरहा प्रचरा सोम दुर्यानिति गृहा वै दुर्या बिभ्यति वै सोमाद्राज्ञ आयतो यजमानस्य गृहाः स यदेतामन्वाह शांत्यैवैनं तच्छमयति सोऽस्य शांतो न प्रजां न पशून् हिनस्ति । (avīrahā pracarā soma duryāniti gṛhā vai duryā bibhyati vai somādrājña āyato yajamānasya gṛhāḥ sa yadetāmanvāha śāṃtyaivainaṃ tacchamayati so 'sya śāṃto na prajāṃ na paśūn hinasti |)

Now the meaning of the fourth pāda is explained: seeing this King Soma coming towards the sacrificer's house, the heroic men in the sacrificer's house are afraid, thinking that this god will be angry if there is any excess or deficiency in the service we do to this King Soma; so the heroes and others in the house become afraid. Then, to remove that fear, the Hotṛ recites the fourth pāda, containing the word अवीरहा (avīrahā), "this Soma deity is not a killer of heroes", and, speaking words of peace, pacifies King Soma. King Soma too, satisfied with those words of peace, does not harm the sacrificer's sons and others, his cows and his household.

इमां धियं शिक्षमाणस्य देवेति वारुण्या परिदधाति । (imāṃ dhiyaṃ śikṣamāṇasya deveti vāruṇyā paridadhāti |)

Now the Hotṛ recites the eighth Ṛk, इमां धियं (imāṃ dhiyaṃ), addressed to Varuṇa, and brings this rite called Somapravāhaṇa to its completion.

इमां धियं शिक्षमाणस्य देव क्रतुं दक्षं वरुण संशिशाधि । ययाति विश्वा दुरिता तरेम सुतर्माणमधि नावं रुहेम ॥ (imāṃ dhiyaṃ śikṣamāṇasya deva kratuṃ dakṣaṃ varuṇa saṃśiśādhi | yayāti viśvā duritā tarema sutarmāṇamadhi nāvaṃ ruhema ‖) (Ma. [printed ಮ., for Ṛ.] Saṃ. 8-42-3)

This Ṛk too is in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā itself. The main intent of this Ṛk is: O god Varuṇa, instruct well this sacrificer, who is devoted to the intention directed at the performance of this sacrifice (that is, who wishes to perform the sacrifice in the prescribed manner), in power, skill and knowledge relating to the sacrifice. May we board the boat of your instruction, in the form of speech, and cross and escape all misfortunes and sins.

वरुणदेवत्यो वा एष तावद्यावदुपनद्धो यावत्परिश्रितानि प्रपद्यते स्वयैवैनं तद्देवतया स्वेन छंदसा समर्धयति । (varuṇadevatyo vā eṣa tāvadyāvadupanaddho yāvatpariśritāni prapadyate svayaivainaṃ taddevatayā svena chaṃdasā samardhayati |)

Why a Ṛk addressed to Varuṇa should be recited to end this Somapravāhaṇa rite, the reason is stated. The soma that was sold and brought was till now tied with bonds such as rope, covered with cloths and the like, and brought to places such as the Prācīnavaṃśa. A bond tied round any object, or a cover of cloth and the like thrown over it, is subject to the noose of the god Varuṇa. By the rule that, to undo it, a Ṛk beseeching Varuṇa must be recited, the Hotṛ recites the mantra addressed to Varuṇa. Formerly, when Soma

p. 467

was besought, he was praised with Ṛks in the Gāyatrī metre, dear or proper to Soma. Now this mantra addressed to Varuṇa, with which he is praised at the time of the completion of this rite, is in the Triṣṭubh metre. That too is Soma's own metre. How? On this matter there is an ancient story. Formerly soma was in the world of the gods. The gods thought it should be brought to earth, and, considering who was able to bring it, it was decided that the metres such as Gāyatrī were capable of bringing soma.

Saṃ. 6-1-6-2, 3, 4, 5)

At that time the Jagatī metre first set out, saying that it would bring soma, and leapt into the atmosphere. At that time each pāda of the Jagatī metre had fourteen syllables. But unable to bring the soma, it grew weary and came back exhausted. Then it lost two syllables of the fourteen. But on returning it brought with it the sacrificial animals there and the order of consecration (the rule of undertaking consecration in a sacrifice). Therefore the Jagatī metre became known in the world as the one with many animals; and consecration follows the sacrificer who has the wealth of animals. Next the Triṣṭubh metre set out, saying that it would bring soma, and leapt into the atmosphere. At that time each pāda of the Triṣṭubh metre had thirteen syllables. The Triṣṭubh too, unable to bring the soma, wearied and exhausted, lost two syllables of its thirteen and

p. 468

returned. On returning it brought with it the sacrificial fee and austerity. Therefore, when a sacrifice is performed, fees are brought and given at the midday pressing (to the priest). Giving away what one has is said to be austerity. Next the Gāyatrī metre set out, saying that it would bring soma, and flew into the atmosphere in the form of a hawk. At that time the Gāyatrī metre had four syllables to each pāda. On setting out Gāyatrī took with her, for help, a radiant female goat. This goat helped Gāyatrī in bringing the soma. Therefore the name अजा (ajā) became famous for the goat. Then Gāyatrī brought back the soma that was in heaven and the four syllables which the Jagatī and Triṣṭubh metres had lost. The four syllables she brought back together with the four she had before came to eight syllables to each pāda of Gāyatrī (the Jagatī metre became twelve syllables and the Triṣṭubh metre 11 syllables). As the Brahma-expounders say, a doubt arises here: though the Gāyatrī metre is much smaller than all the other metres, how did it gain prominence in the sacrifice? The answer is: this Gāyatrī brought the soma; therefore Gāyatrī has precedence in sacrificial rites, and it also shines with great brilliance. When this Gāyatrī brought soma from heaven, taking the form of a hawk, she held with her two feet (of the three pādas of eight syllables of Gāyatrī, two are called feet and the third the mouth) the two pressings called the morning pressing and the midday pressing, and brought the third, the third pressing, gripping it with her mouth (beak). Since the morning and midday pressings held in the feet underwent no change, in those two pressings the soma plants are crushed and the bright, pure juice is pressed out. But since it is thought that, when the third pressing was brought with the beak, she bit the soma plant a little and pressed out and drank the juice, at the time of the third pressing fresh soma plants are not used; the juice is pressed once in the morning and midday pressings, and then from the husk-like crushed plants (ऋजीष (ṛjīṣa)) the remaining juice is pressed out again once more. Since the juice so extracted is not abundant, āśira substances (milk, curds, flour) are added to it to make it fit for drinking.

As stated in this story, the Triṣṭubh metre also tried to bring soma from heaven. Therefore here the Triṣṭubh metre, too, is said to be Soma's own.

शिक्षमाणस्य देवेति शिक्षते ना एष यो यजते क्रतुं दक्षं वरुण संशिशाधीति वीर्यं प्रज्ञानं वरुण संशिशाधीत्येव तदाह । (śikṣamāṇasya deveti śikṣate nā eṣa yo yajate kratuṃ dakṣaṃ varuṇa saṃśiśādhīti vīryaṃ prajñānaṃ varuṇa saṃśiśādhītyeva tadāha |)

p. 469

[Running head, p. 469: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 10, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

As long as the soma plants are tied with a rope and covered with a cloth, it is thought of as being in Varuṇa's possession. Now, by removing the bond and taking off the cloth, Varuṇa is besought. In so beseeching him, the Hotṛ, by reciting this mantra, prays to Varuṇa: O Varuṇa, give right understanding to this sacrificer who is performing the sacrifice; give keenness of the senses, the capacity to perform the sacrifice, and knowledge.

ययाति विश्वा दुरिता तरेम सुतर्माणमधि नावं रुहेमेति यज्ञो वै सुतर्मा नौः कृष्णाजिनं वै सुतर्मा नौवाग्नै सुतर्मा नौर्वाचमेव तदारुह्य तया स्वर्गं लोकमभि संतरति । (yayāti viśvā duritā tarema sutarmāṇamadhi nāvaṃ ruhemeti yajño vai sutarmā nauḥ kṛṣṇājinaṃ vai sutarmā nauvāgnai sutarmā naurvācameva tadāruhya tayā svargaṃ lokamabhi saṃtarati |)

Here the boat is the sacrifice; the black-antelope skin used for consecration in the sacrifice is the boat; the words in the form of mantras are the boat. The intent is: "Embarking in such a boat, that is, beginning the sacrifice, undergoing consecration in it and performing the sacrifice reciting the mantras suited to the occasion, may we shed all our sins and attain the world of heaven." By reciting a Ṛk with such a meaning, the sacrificer who performs the sacrifice will attain heaven.

ता एता अष्टावन्नाह रूपसमृद्धाः एतद्वै यज्ञस्य समृद्धं यद्रूपसमृद्धं यत्कर्म क्रियमाणमृगभिवदति (tā etā aṣṭāvannāha rūpasamṛddhāḥ etadvai yajñasya samṛddhaṃ yadrūpasamṛddhaṃ yatkarma kriyamāṇamṛgabhivadati)

These eight Ṛks together complete the rite called Somapravāhaṇa. By reciting Ṛks that complete the rite, the sacrifice is as if performed completely, and it is by reciting Ṛks relating to that rite and containing the same sense that the respective rites are completed and the sacrifice is performed completely.

तासां त्रिः प्रथमामन्वाह त्रिरुत्तमां ता द्वादश संपद्यंते द्वादश वै मासाः संवत्सरः संवत्सरः प्रजापतिः । प्रजापत्यायतनाभिरेवाभी राध्योति य एवं वेद । त्रिः प्रथमां त्रिरुत्तमामन्वाह यज्ञस्यैव तद्वर्सौ नह्यति स्थेम्ने बलायाविस्रंसाय ॥ (tāsāṃ triḥ prathamāmanvāha triruttamāṃ tā dvādaśa saṃpadyaṃte dvādaśa vai māsāḥ saṃvatsaraḥ saṃvatsaraḥ prajāpatiḥ | prajāpatyāyatanābhirevābhī rādhyoti ya evaṃ veda | triḥ prathamāṃ triruttamāmanvāha yajñasyaiva tadvarsau nahyati sthemne balāyāvisraṃsāya ‖) (Ai. [printed ७.] Brā. 3-13)

When reciting these eight Ṛks, the first Ṛk and the last Ṛk are recited three times each. Thereby twelve Ṛks in all are recited. In a year there are twelve months. The year is of the nature of Prajāpati. These Ṛks too rest in Prajāpati. The man who knows this becomes victorious in the respective undertakings by reciting these Ṛks. By reciting the first and last Ṛks three times each at the beginning and end of the rite,

p. 470

the rite called sacrifice becomes firmly bound with the ropes of mantras and so stays firm, not slipping away.

Here the rite called Somapravāhaṇa ends.

Uttarapīṭhikā

(the later introduction)

Having so far explained the Ṛks relating to Somapravāhaṇa, they explain the order to be followed when this soma is taken down from the cart—

अन्यतरोऽनड्वान्युक्तः स्यादन्यतरो विमुक्तोऽथ राजानमुपाहरेयुः । (anyataro 'naḍvānyuktaḥ syādanyataro vimukto 'tha rājānamupāhareyuḥ |)

The cart that brought King Soma, the Soma deity, from the place of purchase to the Prācīnavaṃśa has two oxen yoked to it; only one of them is to be unyoked, and the other is left yoked as it is, and the priests take Soma down from the cart and carry him to the Uttaravedi. This is the rule.

यदुभयोर्विमुक्तयोरुपावहरेयुः पितृदेवत्यं राजानं कुर्युः ।
(yadubhayorvimuktayorupāvahareyuḥ pitṛdevatyaṃ rājānaṃ kuryuḥ |)

If, without following the rule stated above, both oxen yoked to the cart are unyoked and then Soma is taken to the Uttaravedi, then the Pitṛ deities receive the soma. The soma does not become fit for the gods and fit for the sacrifice.

यद्युक्तयोरयोगक्षेमः प्रजा विंदेत्ताः प्रजाः परिप्लवेरन् । योऽनड्वा- न्विमुक्तस्तच्छालासदां प्रजानां रूपं यो युक्तस्तच्चक्रियाणां ते ये युक्तेऽन्ये विमुक्तेऽन्य उपावहरंत्युभावेव ते क्षेमयोगौ कल्पयंति ।
(yadyuktayorayogakṣemaḥ prajā viṃdettāḥ prajāḥ pariplaveran | yo 'naḍvā-nvimuktastacchālāsadāṃ prajānāṃ rūpaṃ yo yuktastaccakriyāṇāṃ te ye yukte 'nye vimukte 'nya upāvaharaṃtyubhāveva te kṣemayogau kalpayaṃti |)

If both oxen are left yoked to the cart, as they are, and Soma is taken down and carried away, then both the yoga of acquiring wealth and so on (good fortune) and the yoga of keeping and preserving what has been acquired are lost, and besides there will be the likelihood of the sacrificer's sons and others going off in various directions. Of the two oxen yoked to the cart, the ox that is unyoked from the cart is the form of the sons and others in the sacrificial hall and the house; the ox that is not unyoked from the cart is the form of the worldly and Vedic rites going on in the sacrificial hall. Here the word चक्रि (cakri) means the cart that has wheels. The sons, grandsons and others who are the progeny of the sacrificer travelling in that cart are called चक्रियाः (cakriyāḥ). Among the sacrificers who perform sacrifices the wise, at the time of Soma's descent, unyoke one ox and leave the other as it is, and perform the descent of Soma, and so, as stated before, gain both the acquiring of wealth and its security. What is said in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā on this very matter is noteworthy.

यदुभौ विमुच्यातिथ्यं गृह्णीयाद्यज्ञं विच्छिंद्याद्यदुभावविमुच्य यथानाग ताय तिथ्यं क्रियते तादृगेव तद्विमुक्तोऽन्योऽनड्वान्भवत्यविमुक्तोऽ न्यूऽथातिथ्यं गृह्णाति यज्ञस्य संतत्यै । (yadubhau vimucyātithyaṃ gṛhṇīyādyajñaṃ vicchiṃdyādyadubhāvavimucya yathānāga tāya tithyaṃ kriyate tādṛgeva tadvimukto 'nyo 'naḍvānbhavatyavimukto ' nyū 'thātithyaṃ gṛhṇāti yajñasya saṃtatyai |) (Tai. Saṃ. 6-2-1-1)

If both oxen yoked to the cart that brought the soma are unyoked and Soma is taken down, King Soma does not accept hospitality, and by doing so there is a break in the sacrifice and the sacrifice is not completed but stops midway. If both oxen are left yoked in the cart and the cart is made to stand as it is, it is as if King Soma has not come to the house for hospitality; it is as if he has gone off. Therefore it is not right to leave both oxen yoked either. Then what should be done to complete the sacrifice in full? One ox must be unyoked from the cart. The other ox must be left yoked to the cart. If this is done, King Soma comes to the sacrificial ground and accepts the sacrificer's hospitality. The sacrifice also, without any break, reaches its completion: this is the intent.

On the point that the rite of Somāparohaṇa (taking Soma down from the cart) must be done in the north-east, they cite and explain an ancient story—

देवासुरा वा एषु लोकेषु समयतंत त एतस्यां प्राच्यां दिश्ययतंत तांस्ततोऽसुरा अजयंस्ते दक्षिणस्यां दिश्ययतंत तांस्ततोऽसुरा अजयंस्ते प्रतीच्यां दिश्ययतंत तांस्ततोऽसुरा अजयंस्त उदीच्यां दिश्ययतंत तांस्ततोऽसुरा अजयंस्त उदिच्यां प्राच्यां दिश्ययतंत ते ततो न पराजयंत सैषा दिगपराजिता तस्मादेतस्यां दिशि यतेत वा यातयेद्वेश्वरो हानृणाकर्तोः । (devāsurā vā eṣu lokeṣu samayataṃta ta etasyāṃ prācyāṃ diśyayataṃta tāṃstato 'surā ajayaṃste dakṣiṇasyāṃ diśyayataṃta tāṃstato 'surā ajayaṃste pratīcyāṃ diśyayataṃta tāṃstato 'surā ajayaṃsta udīcyāṃ diśyayataṃta tāṃstato 'surā ajayaṃsta udicyāṃ prācyāṃ diśyayataṃta te tato na parājayaṃta saiṣā digaparājitā tasmādetasyāṃ diśi yateta vā yātayedveśvaro hānṛṇākartoḥ |)

Formerly, in these worlds, the gods and the asuras were fighting. They fought in the east. In that battle the asuras defeated the gods; afterwards they fought in the south. There too the asuras won; afterwards they fought in the west. There too victory went to the asuras; afterwards they fought in the north. There too the asuras defeated the gods and became victorious; then they fought in the north-east, which lies between the north and the east. There the gods suffered no defeat; victory was theirs. Therefore (since the gods were not defeated) the north-east quarter was named अपराजिता (aparājitā), the unconquered. Therefore whatever good work is to be done must be done, or an effort must be made to do it, in that quarter, the north-east. By doing so the sacrificer clears his debt and becomes free from it.

p. 472

[Here what is debt, and what is its discharge, is clearly described in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā—

जायमानो वै ब्राह्मणस्त्रिभिर्यणवा जायते ब्रह्मचर्येण ऋषिभ्यो यज्ञेन देवेभ्यः प्रजया पितृभ्य एष ना अनृणो यः पुत्री यज्वा ब्रह्मचारिवासी । (jāyamāno vai brāhmaṇastribhiryaṇavā jāyate brahmacaryeṇa ṛṣibhyo yajñena devebhyaḥ prajayā pitṛbhya eṣa nā anṛṇo yaḥ putrī yajvā brahmacārivāsī |) (Tai. Saṃ. 6-3-10-5)

That is: a twice-born man (Brahmin, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya) is born already carrying three kinds of debt, the debt to the seers, the debt to the gods and the debt to the fathers. For these debts to be paid: if after the upanayana he studies the Veda in the teacher's household in the student stage, the debt to the seers is paid; then by marrying, entering the householder's stage, performing sacrifices and worshipping the gods, the debt to the gods is paid; by begetting sons in the married wife for the continuation of the line of dharma, the debt to the fathers is paid. It is said here that the sacrificer becomes free from these three debts.]

Now the cause of King Soma's victory is stated—

ते देवा अब्रुवन्न राजतया वै नो जयंति राजानं करनामहा इति तथेति ते सोमं राजानमकुर्वंस्ते सोमेन राज्ञा सर्वा दिशोजयन्नेष वै सोमराजा यो यजते प्राचि तिष्ठत्याददति तेन प्राचीं दिशं जयति तं दक्षिणा परिवहंति तेन दक्षिणां दिशं जयति तं प्रत्यंचमावर्तयंति ते प्रतीचीं दिशं जयति तमुदीचस्तिष्ठत उपावहरंति तेनोदीचीं दिशं जयति सोमेन राज्ञा सर्वा दिशो जयति य एवं वेद ॥
(te devā abruvanna rājatayā vai no jayaṃti rājānaṃ karanāmahā iti tatheti te somaṃ rājānamakurvaṃste somena rājñā sarvā diśojayanneṣa vai somarājā yo yajate prāci tiṣṭhatyādadati tena prācīṃ diśaṃ jayati taṃ dakṣiṇā parivahaṃti tena dakṣiṇāṃ diśaṃ jayati taṃ pratyaṃcamāvartayaṃti te pratīcīṃ diśaṃ jayati tamudīcastiṣṭhata upāvaharaṃti tenodīcīṃ diśaṃ jayati somena rājñā sarvā diśo jayati ya evaṃ veda ॥) (Ai. [printed ऐ.] Brā. 3-14)

The gods spoke among themselves thus: we have no king who will take the lead in battle and so on and secure victory for us. That is why we met with defeat in the east and the other quarters. Therefore let us fix on a king; so resolving, they chose the Soma deity to be their king.

p. 473

[Running head, p. 473: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 10, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

Thereby the gods obtained victory in the east and the other quarters. Therefore, for whichever sacrificer performs the Soma sacrifice, Soma is the king. Through the power of this King Soma the sacrificer gains victory everywhere. How? When bringing soma in the cart, the priests make the cart stand facing east and place the soma in it. Since Soma is in the east-facing cart, the sacrificer gains victory in the east; then, as the soma is brought, they turn the cart with the soma towards the south. Since Soma then faces south, the sacrificer obtains victory in the south as well; afterwards, by turning the cart to the west he gets victory in the west; afterwards, by turning the cart to the north he gets victory in the north. Afterwards, when the cart stands between the north and east, from there (from the north-east) they take the soma down from the cart and carry it to the Uttaravedi. That is, the cart that was left on the west of the Prācīnavaṃśa is turned to face east in order to bring it to the Uttaravedi, which is on the east of the sacrificial hall; then, going round the sacrificial hall, it is brought to the south, then to the west, then to the north, and when it comes to the north-east the soma is taken down from the cart: this is the intent. The sage Āpastamba explains this matter with the sentence—

संजग्राह प्रत्यवस्तनुवस्यत इति प्रांचोऽभिप्रवाय दक्षिणमावर्तत इत्यग्रेण प्राग्वंशं प्रागी- षमुदगीषं वा शकटमवस्थाप्य (saṃjagrāha pratyavastanuvasyata iti prāṃco 'bhipravāya dakṣiṇamāvartata ityagreṇa prāgvaṃśaṃ prāgī- ṣamudagīṣaṃ vā śakaṭamavasthāpya)

The man who knows this will conquer all the quarters.

Here the Uttarapīṭhikā ends.

The explanation of the rite called Somapravāhaṇa ends.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

Printed English translation

Heaven and Earth, bear to the gods to-day our heaven-aspiring sacrifice, the means of obtaining Swarga.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

On this Ṛk Yāska has given the etymology द्यावापृथिव्यौ न इमं साधनमद्य दिविस्पृशं यज्ञं देवेषु नियच्छतां- (dyāvāpṛthivyau na imaṃ sādhanamadya divispṛśaṃ yajñaṃ deveṣu niyacchatāṃ-), and he explains the word सिध्र (sidhra) as "leading to heaven" and the word दिविस्पृशं (divispṛśaṃ) as "touching the gods in heaven" (Ni. 9-37).

द्यावा, पृथिवी (dyāvā, pṛthivī)—Heaven and Earth; although there are many mantras that praise together the two deities named Heaven and Earth, the presiding deities of heaven and earth, there are some mantras that praise them using the separate words दौः पृथिवी (dauḥ pṛthivī). In the present Ṛk, too, these deities are indicated by the two separate words द्यावा (dyāvā) and पृथिवी (pṛthivī). In this Ṛk these deities are said to be the presiding deities of the two carts called हविर्धाने (havirdhāne), used to fill with soma plants and bring them to the sacrificial altar.

There are twenty-four words, beginning with स्वधे पुरंधी (svadhe puraṃdhī), that indicate the sense of the word द्यावापृथिवी (dyāvāpṛthivī) (Ni. 3-22). In the Taittirīya Saṃhitā द्यौः पितः पृथिवि मातः (dyauḥ pitaḥ pṛthivi mātaḥ) is said, that is, heaven is addressed as father and earth as mother. In the Ṛgveda, too, there are mantras in many places that express this sense. In many places it is said that Heaven and Earth are the parents of the gods. In the Ṛgveda the world is generally described as heaven, atmosphere and earth

p. 475

(the universe) into three main divisions (worlds). In heaven too there are three divisions: नाक (nāka) (the high excellent place in heaven), विष्टप (viṣṭapa) (the middle region of heaven) and पृष्ठ (pṛṣṭha) (the lower part of heaven). Though in the atmosphere there are no special divisions, words such as व्योमन् (vyoman), रोचन (rocana) (the radiant region) and अंतरिक्ष (aṃtarikṣa) indicate differences of meaning; and the word पृथिवी (pṛthivī) is also called by names such as पृथिवी (pṛthivī) (the extensive region), मही (mahī) (the great region), इळा (iḷā) (this world) and वसुमती (vasumatī) (the wealthy one). In the Ṛgveda the word द्यावापृथिवी (dyāvāpṛthivī) is generally used as meaning the presiding deities of heaven and earth.

Sūkta 42 (Maṇḍala 2)

The forty-second sūkta.

Sāyaṇa's introduction to the sūkta

(Sanskrit, transcribed; see the Anuvāda below for the sense):

॥ सायणभाष्यम् ॥

[Note: in kn.md the Sanskrit introduction was made into a > block with an inserted label, and a hyphenated line break was joined.]

Anuvāda (Kannada). This sūkta beginning कनिक्रदत् (kanikradat) is the tenth sūkta in the fourth anuvāka. It has three Ṛks. The Anukramaṇikā says कनिक्रदत्तृचं (kanikradattṛcaṃ). For this sūkta Gṛtsamada, the seer of this maṇḍala, is the seer; Indra in the form of the kapiñjala bird is the deity; the metre is Triṣṭubh. If one hears the indistinct or harsh cry of birds, this sūkta and the next sūkta are to be repeated, as explained by the sūtra of the Āśvalāyana Gṛhya Sūtra वयसाममनोज्ञां वाचः श्रुत्वा कनिक्रदज्जनुषं प्रब्रुवाण इति सूक्तेजपेत् (vayasāmamanojñāṃ vācaḥ śrutvā kanikradajjanuṣaṃ prabruvāṇa iti sūkte japet). (A stray fragment follows in the supplied text: "ಅ. ಗೃ. ೩-೧೦-೯)".)

(Gist: the kapiñjala bird, crying again and again and foretelling what will happen, sends forth its voice like a helmsman steering a boat; O bird, be of good omen, and let no calamity find you from any quarter. A hyphenated line break was joined.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Kanikradat: (the kapiñjala bird) crying again and again. Januṣaṃ: what will come into being. Prabruvāṇaḥ: foretelling beforehand. Nāvaṃ: to steer the boat. Aritā iva: as a boatman gives directions. Vācaṃ: its cry. Iyarti: sends forth. Śakune: O kapiñjala bird! (tvaṃ, you). Sumaṅgalaśca: furnished with excellent auspiciousness. Bhavāsi: be. Kā cidabhibhā: any kind of calamity. Tvā: you. Viśvā: from any quarter. Mā vidat: let it not approach.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

The kapiñjala bird, crying again and again and foretelling beforehand what will come into being, sends forth its cry as a boatman gives directions to steer a boat. O kapiñjala bird, may you have good fortune. May no calamity approach you from any quarter.

p. 478

[Running head, p. 478: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 4, Sū. 42.]

Printed English translation

Crying repeatedly, and foretelling what will come to pass, (the Kapinjala) gives (due) direction to its voice, as a helmsman (guides) a boat : be ominous, bird, of good fortune, and may no calamity whatever befall you from any quarter.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

For the three Ṛks of this sūkta and the three Ṛks of the next sūkta, Indra in the form of the kapiñjala bird is said to be the deity. Although the word कपिंजल (kapiṃjala) is not indicated in these Ṛks, the Anukramaṇikā says that Indra in the form of the kapiñjala is the deity. The kapiñjala is a bird; in English it is called the Francoline partridge or hazel-cock (in English letters in the supplied text). The word कपिंजल (kapiṃjala) is not used in the Ṛgveda. In other Vedas, that is, Taittirīya Saṃhitā 2-5-1-1; 5-5-16-1; Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā 3-14-1; Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā 12-10 [printed with a colon, changed to a semicolon in kn.md]; Vājasaneya Saṃhitā 24-20, 38; Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa 1-6-3-3; 5-5-4-4; 13-5-1-13; Jaiminīya Brāhmaṇa 1-154-2 and other places, the kapiñjala bird is mentioned. When explaining the similes called अर्थोपमा (arthopamā) and लुप्तोपमा (luptopamā), Yāska speaks of the kapiñjala bird—

कपिंजलः कपिरिव जीर्णः कपिरिव जवत ईषत्पिंगलो वा गमनीयं शब्दं पिंजयतीति वा ॥ (kapiṃjalaḥ kapiriva jīrṇaḥ kapiriva javata īṣatpiṃgalo vā gamanīyaṃ śabdaṃ piṃjayatīti vā ‖) (Si. [as printed] 3-18)

That is, the bird called kapiñjala has the name kapiñjala either because its body looks worn out like a monkey's, or because it has a dusky yellow colour like a monkey's, or because it makes a pleasant, that is auspicious, sweet sound: so he has given the etymology. It is well known that it is a good omen if the kapiñjala bird cries in the south. Therefore the sage Gṛtsamada besought the kapiñjala bird (Indra in the form of the kapiñjala) that no calamity of any kind befall him and that auspiciousness come in all quarters—

भद्रं वद दक्षिणतो भद्रमुत्तरतो वद । भद्रं पुरस्तान्नो वद भद्रं पश्चात्कपिंजल ॥ (bhadraṃ vada dakṣiṇato bhadramuttarato vada | bhadraṃ purastānno vada bhadraṃ paścātkapiṃjala ‖)

This mantra is stated in the Pariśiṣṭa, that is, among the Khila mantras. O kapiñjala bird, being in the south, utter an auspicious omen. Likewise in the north, in front of us and behind us, utter only an auspicious omen: so the sage Gṛtsamada besought the kapiñjala bird. On this Ṛk Yāska has given an etymology—

न्यक्रंदीज्जन्म प्रब्रुवाणो यथास्य शब्दस्तथा नामेरयति वाचमीरयितेव नावं सुमंगलश्च शकुने भव कल्याणमंगलः । मंगलं गिरितेर्गृणात्यर्थे, गिरत्यनर्थानिति वा । अंगलमंगवत् । मज्जयति पापकमिति नैरुक्ताः । मां गच्छत्विति वा । मा च त्वा काचिदभिभूतिः सर्वतो विदत् ॥ (nyakraṃdījjanma prabruvāṇo yathāsya śabdastathā nāmerayati vācamīrayiteva nāvaṃ sumaṃgalaśca śakune bhava kalyāṇamaṃgalaḥ | maṃgalaṃ giritergṛṇātyarthe, giratyanarthāniti vā | aṃgalamaṃgavat | majjayati pāpakamiti nairuktāḥ | māṃ gacchatviti vā | mā ca tvā kācidabhibhūtiḥ sarvato vidat ‖) (Ni. 9-4)

O omen-bird, you, crying again and again, indicate by your voice, as a helmsman impels a boat, the future event that will come. Having explained the main sense, that "may good fortune be yours", he has explained the component senses of some words.

सुमंगलः—कल्याणमंगलः । (sumaṃgalaḥ—kalyāṇamaṃgalaḥ |) Furnished with excellent auspiciousness. मंगलं (maṃgalaṃ) गिरतेर्गृणात्यर्थे, गिरत्यर्थानिति वा । (giratergṛṇātyarthè, giratyarthāniti vā |) Because it indicates, in the present, a matter worthy of praise, it is called मंगल (maṃgala). Or, because it destroys misfortunes, it is called मंगल (maṃgala). Or, if the letter म् (m) at the end of the word अंगलं (aṃgalaṃ) is transposed and used at the beginning, the form म् + अंगल = मंगल (m + aṃgala = maṃgala) results. The word अंगलं (aṃgalaṃ) can also be explained as "so that auspiciousness arises from auspicious substances such as curds, honey and unbroken rice". Or मज्जयति पापकमिति नैरुक्ताः । (majjayati pāpakamiti nairuktāḥ |): the Nirukta authors say it is called मंगल (maṃgala) because it drowns and destroys sins. Or मां गच्छत्विति (māṃ gacchatviti) [as supplied; the supplied text has वा (vā) earlier and ना (nā) here]: the word मंगल (maṃgala) may be formed from the sentence मां गच्छत्विति (māṃ gacchatviti), meaning "may a good thing (wealth) come and join me", so he explains.

कनिक्रदत् जनुषं प्रब्रुवाणः नावं अरितेव वाचं इयर्ति (kanikradat januṣaṃ prabruvāṇaḥ nāvaṃ ariteva vācaṃ iyarti)—this kapiñjala bird (or omen-bird) cries again and again. As a boatman, while rowing a boat, pushes again and again, that is, makes it go forward, so this kapiñjala bird, by crying again and again, impels, that is makes known, the events to come. The first half of this Ṛk is parokṣakṛta (in the third person) and the latter half pratyakṣakṛta (in the second person). That is, since the first half describes the action the bird is performing, thinking the bird to be elsewhere and not before the speaker, the first half of the Ṛk is called parokṣakṛta; and since in the latter half the bird is thought of as before him, addressed and conversed with, the latter half is called pratyakṣakṛta.

शकुने (त्वं) सुमंगलश्च भवासि । का चिदभिभा त्वा विश्वा मा विदत्—हे शकुने त्वं प्रकृष्टकल्याणः भवासि । किंच कोऽप्यभिभवः त्वा सर्वासु दिक्षु मा प्रापत् । (śakune (tvaṃ) sumaṃgalaśca bhavāsi | kā cidabhibhā tvā viśvā mā vidat—he śakune tvaṃ prakṛṣṭakalyāṇaḥ bhavāsi | kiṃca ko 'pyabhibhavaḥ tvā sarvāsu dikṣu mā prāpat |)

p. 480

[Running head, p. 480: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 4, Sū. 42.]

O omen-bird, be furnished with excellent auspiciousness, and may no calamity of any kind approach you in any quarter: this blessing of the seer is stated here. The Pariśiṣṭa mantras relating to this sūkta and the following sūktas are explained at the end of this maṇḍala.

(Gist: O omen-bird, may neither the hawk nor the eagle nor an archer strike you; crying in the south, speak auspiciously here. A hyphenated line break was joined.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

O kapiñjala bird, Tvā: you. Śyenaḥ: the (strong and powerful) hawk. Mā ut vadhīt: let it not fall upon and harm. Suparṇaḥ: the eagle bird. Mā (vadhīt): let it not harm. Iṣumān: bearing arrows. Vīraḥ: powerful. Astā: the shooter, that is the hero who fights with the bow

p. 481

[Running head, p. 481: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 11, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

Tvā: you. Mā vidat: let it not approach. Pitryāṃ pradiśaṃ anu: in the south itself. Kanikradat: crying again and again. Sumaṅgalaḥ: of auspicious form. Bhadravādī: speaking our coming welfare. Iha: here. Vada: speak an auspicious word.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O kapiñjala bird, let the powerful hawk not fall upon and harm you. Let the eagle not trouble you. Let the archer who shoots arrows, the hunter, not approach you. In the south itself, crying again and again, of auspicious form, speaking our coming welfare, speak here an auspicious word.

Printed English translation

May no kite, no eagle, kill you; may no archer, armed with arrows, reach you: crying repeatedly, in the region of the Pitris, be ominous of good fortune; proclaimer of good luck, speak to us on this occasion.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk and the next Ṛk, the sage Gṛtsamada expresses the wish that no kind of injury or trouble come to the kapiñjala bird from anyone, and that, crying from the south, it bring him good fortune.

त्वा श्येनः मा उत् वधीत् सुपर्णः मा (tvā śyenaḥ mā ut vadhīt suparṇaḥ mā)—O kapiñjala bird, let neither the powerful hawk nor the eagle with good wings harm you. It is well known that the hawk is a very strong bird and falls upon and kills other kinds of birds not as strong as itself. Therefore the seer expresses the wish that no trouble come to you from such a powerful hawk, and likewise that the eagle, which has good wings and can fly very far, not harm you.

इषुमान् वीरः अस्ता त्वा मा विदत् (iṣumān vīraḥ astā tvā mā vidat)—the intent is: let the hero (or hunter) who sets out with bow and arrows to destroy enemies not approach you shooting arrows. On the word वीरः (vīraḥ) Yāska—

वीरो वीरयत्यमित्रान् । वेतेर्वा स्याद्गतिकर्मणः वीरयतेर्वा । (vīro vīrayatyamitrān | vetervā syādgatikarmaṇaḥ vīrayatervā |) (Ni. 1-7)

[Stray line in the supplied text: "31", kept as a note in kn.md.]

p. 482

[Running head, p. 482: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 4, Sū. 42.]

—has given the etymology. That is, he is वीर (vīra) because he destroys enemies in many ways (formed from the root वीरयति (vīrayati) meaning "destroy"), or because, formed from the root वेति (veti) indicating motion, he rushes upon enemies, or because, formed from the root वीरयति (vīrayati) indicating prowess, it indicates the sense "valiant": so the derivation of this word is stated.

पित्र्यां दिशं अनु कनिक्रदत् सुमंगलः भद्रवादी इह वद (pitryāṃ diśaṃ anu kanikradat sumaṃgalaḥ bhadravādī iha vada)—O kapiñjala bird, take your stand in the direction belonging to the fathers, that is, the south, and from there, of auspicious form, utter a good and beneficial sound: this is the intent. The direction belonging to the fathers means the south. On this matter, according to the Śruti sentence देवमनुष्या दिशो व्यभजंत प्राची देवा दक्षिणा पितरः प्रतीचीं मनुष्या उदीचीगं रुद्राः (devamanuṣyā diśo vyabhajaṃta prācī devā dakṣiṇā pitaraḥ pratīcīṃ manuṣyā udīcīgaṃ rudrāḥ) (Tai. Saṃ. 6-1-1-1) the south belongs to the fathers. Therefore in the present Ṛk पित्र्यां दिशं (pitryāṃ diśaṃ) means the south belonging to the Pitṛ deities, that is, to the fathers. Since it is well known that the cry of the kapiñjala bird in the south is a good omen, the seer prays in this Ṛk and the next that the kapiñjala, being in the south, speak words beneficial to us.

The meaning of the word सुमंगल (sumaṃgala) was already explained in the preceding Ṛk. भद्रवादी (bhadravādī) means भद्रं वदतीति भद्रवादी (bhadraṃ vadatīti bhadravādī), one who utters an auspicious sound.

The Saṃhitā ends without the closing "॥" in the supplied text.)*

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Śakunte: O kapiñjala bird. Sumaṅgalaḥ: you of auspicious nature. Bhadravādī: speaking of welfare. Gṛhāṇāṃ: of our houses. Dakṣiṇataḥ: in the south. Ava kranda: make a sound. Naḥ: upon us. Stenaḥ: the thief. Mā īśata: let him not show his power. Aghaśaṃsaḥ:

the enemy who does sin to us. Mā: let him not harm. Suvīrāḥ: we, with excellent sons. Vidathe: in the sacrificial hall. Bṛhat: (describing your qualities) mature praises. Vadema: shall recite.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

[The supplied text has the garbled label "॥ ಭವಾರ್ಥ ॥" here, kept as a note in kn.md.]

O kapiñjala bird, being of auspicious nature and speaking of welfare, cry in the south of our houses. Let the thief not show his power over us. Let the enemy who does sin to us also not exert his influence. With excellent sons, we shall recite in the sacrificial hall mature praises describing your qualities.

Printed English translation

Bird, you are ominous of good fortune, the proclaimer of good luck ; cry from the south of dwellings: may no thief, no evil-doer, prevail against us; that, blessed with excellent descendants, we may worthily praise you at this sacrifice.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In the first half of this Ṛk the seer prays what was said in the preceding Ṛk, that is: being in the south of our houses, make an auspicious sound.

नः स्तेनः मा ईशत (naḥ stenaḥ mā īśata)—let the thief not show his power over us; that is, may we not fall into the thief's hands; let the thief not exert his influence over us: this is the intent. On the word स्तेन (stena) Yāska—

स्तेनः कस्मात् संस्क्यानमस्मिन् पापकमिति नैरुक्ताः । (stenaḥ kasmāt saṃskyānamasmin pāpakamiti nairuktāḥ |) (Ni. 3-19)

What the word स्तेन (stena) means is: sin is gathered and filled in him. That is, to the heap of many kinds of sins, such as stealing, harming innocent people and taking away their property, the name संस्तान (saṃstāna) (collecting together in one place) is given. Since this heap of sins is in the thief, the thief is named स्तेन (stena): so the Nirukta authors say; this is the intent of the etymology indicated above.

अघशंसः मा (ईशत)—अनर्थकानां शंसकोऽपि मा ईशिष्ट । (aghaśaṃsaḥ mā (īśata)—anarthakānāṃ śaṃsako 'pi mā īśiṣṭa |) The word अघशंस (aghaśaṃsa) is read also among the names of the thief (Ni. 3-19); it means a thief. Besides, on the word अघशंस (aghaśaṃsa) Yāska—

अघस्य शंसितारं । अघं हंते निर्हसितोपसर्ग आहंतीति । (aghasya śaṃsitāraṃ | aghaṃ haṃte nirhrasitopasarga āhaṃtīti |) (Ni. 6-11)

—has also given the etymology. The word अघ (agha) is formed from the root हन हिंसागत्योः (hana hiṃsāgatyoḥ), that is, from the root हन (hana) with the sense "injure, kill". The prefix आ (ā) is transposed and becomes the word अघ (agha). Therefore the word अघशंस (aghaśaṃsa) means one who says "kill", or one who causes harm. May such a harmful sinner not exert his influence over us; that is, may we not fall into the hands of such a wicked man: this is the intent.

Sūkta 43 (Maṇḍala 2)

Sāyaṇa's introduction to the sūkta

(Sanskrit, transcribed; see the Anuvāda below for the sense):

॥ सायणभाष्यम् ॥

> प्रदक्षिणिदिति तृचमेकादशं सूक्तं गार्त्समदं जागतं । तथा चानुक्रांतं । प्रदक्षिणिज्ञागतं मध्येऽतिशक्वर्यष्टिर्वेति । द्वितीयातिशक्वरी अष्टिर्वा । इतरे जगत्यौ । कपिंजलरूपींद्रो देवता । वयसाममनोज्ञां वाचं श्रुत्वा प्रदक्षिणिदिति सूक्तं जपेत् । सूत्रं प्रागेवोदाहृतं ॥

Anuvāda (Kannada). This sūkta beginning प्रदक्षिणित् (pradakṣiṇit) is the eleventh sūkta in the fourth anuvāka. It has three Ṛks. Gṛtsamada is the seer of this sūkta; the metre is Jagatī. In the Anukramaṇikā it is said प्रदक्षिणिज्ञागतं मध्येऽतिशक्वर्यष्टिर्वा (pradakṣiṇijjāgataṃ madhye 'tiśakvaryaṣṭirvā). The second Ṛk of this sūkta is in the metre called Atiśakvarī or Aṣṭi; the remaining two Ṛks are in the Jagatī metre. Indra in the form of the kapiñjala bird is the deity. As said for the preceding sūkta, if one hears the harsh cry of birds, this sūkta प्रदक्षिणित् (pradakṣiṇit) is to be repeated; its application has been stated before.

(Gist: the kapiñjala birds, season by season, indicating food, proclaim like praisers a circumambulation; the bird utters both kinds of speech, like Sāma singers chanting Gāyatra and Traiṣṭubha, and delights the hearers. A hyphenated line break was joined.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Śakuntayaḥ: kapiñjala birds. Ṛtuthā: according to the season. Vayaḥ: food. Vadantaḥ: indicating (seeking). Kāravaḥ: like praisers. Pradakṣiṇit: movement in the form of a circumambulation. Abhigṛṇanti: proclaim. Sāmagāḥ: the singers of Sāma. Gāyatraṃ:

Gāyatra. Traiṣṭubhaṃ ca: and Traiṣṭubha, as they recite (these birds too). Ubhe vācā: two kinds of speech. Vadati: utter. Anu rājati ca: afterwards (the hearers too) they delight.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

The kapiñjala birds, according to the season, seeking food, proclaim like praisers [the supplied text has सोतृगळंते (sotṛgaḷaṃtè) for स्तोतृगळंते (stotṛgaḷaṃtè)] a movement in the form of circumambulation. As the singers of Sāma recite Gāyatra and Traiṣṭubha, these birds too utter two kinds of speech. Afterwards they delight those who hear it.

p. 486

[Running head, p. 486: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 2, A. 4, Sū. 43.]

Printed English translation

Let the birds in quest of their food, according to the season, proclaim their circumambulations, like the celebrators (of sacred rites) : he utters both notes, as the chanter of the Sama recites the Gayatri and Trishtubh, and delights (the hearers).

कपिंजलाः कालेकाले अन्नं सूचयंतः स्तोतार इव प्रदक्षिणं अभिवदंतु । इल्लि शकुंतयः ऍब बहुवचन प्रयोगवु पूज्यते (गौरव) वन्नु सूचिसुवुदक्कागि उपयोगिसल्पट्ट (kapiṃjalāḥ kālekāle annaṃ sūcayaṃtaḥ stotāra iva pradakṣiṇaṃ abhivadaṃtu | illi śakuṃtayaḥ èṃba bahuvacana prayogavu pūjyatè (gaurava) vannu sūcisuvudakkāgi upayogisalpaṭṭa) Here the plural शकुंतयः (śakuṃtayaḥ) has been used, the commentator says, to indicate honour (respect). The word ऋतु (ṛtu) denotes time; Yāska has said ऋतुभिः कालैः (ṛtubhiḥ kālaiḥ) (Ni. 8-4). Here ऋतुथा (ṛtuthā) means at various times, in the respective seasons. The word कारवः (kāravaḥ) is read among the names of praisers (Ni. 3-19). The main intent is that the kapiñjala birds, in the respective times, that is in the various seasons, seeking their food (or indicating the food that may be found by us men), move about making a loud sound, as the priests who praise in sacrifices recite mantras loudly.

श्रौतं च सामगाः गायत्रं त्रिष्टुभं यथा वदंति तद्वत् शकुंतिः वदति । शृण्वतोS नुरक्तान् करोति च ॥ कपिंजलपक्षियु उच्चध्वनिमाडुत्ता संचारमाडुवुदॆंदु हिंदिन वाक्यदल्लि हेळिदॆयष्टे. आ ध्वनियन्नु दृष्टांतपूर्वकवागि वर्णिसिदॆ. यज्ञगळल्लि साममंत्र (śrautaṃ ca sāmagāḥ gāyatraṃ triṣṭubhaṃ yathā vadaṃti tadvat śakuṃtiḥ vadati | śṛṇvatoS nuraktān karoti ca ‖ kapiṃjalapakṣiyu uccadhvanimāḍuttā saṃcāramāḍuvudèṃdu hiṃdina vākyadalli heḷidèyaṣṭè. ā dhvaniyannu dṛṣṭāṃtapūrvakavāgi varṇisidè. yajñagaḷalli sāmamaṃtra) It has been said in the preceding sentence that the kapiñjala bird moves about making a loud sound. That sound is described with an illustration. As the priests such as the Udgātṛ who sing the Sāma mantras in sacrifices, and the priests such as the Hotṛ who recite the śastra mantras, utter with loud voice the two kinds of mantras, that is the mantras in the Gāyatrī and Triṣṭubh metres, that is the two kinds, chanting and recitation, in a way pleasant to the hearers, so the kapiñjala bird too, making a sweet sound, delights everyone: this is the main intent.

Printed English translation

You sing, Bird, like the Udgatri chanting the Sama : you murmur like the Brahmaputra at sacrifices : like a horse (nighing) when approaching a mare, you proclaim (aloud) to us good fortune from every quarter : proclaim aloud prosperity to us from every direction.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk what was said in the preceding Ṛk is said again in another way, with another illustration.

शकुने साम उद्गातेव गायसि (śakune sāma udgāteva gāyasi)—O omen-bird, as the priest called Udgātṛ sings the Sāma in the sacrifice in a soft and sweet manner, so sing with a gentle sound, soft and pleasant to hear.

वृषेव वाजी शिशुमतीः अपीत्य वद (vṛṣeva vājī śiśumatīḥ apītya vada)—सेचनसमर्थोऽश्वः शिशुमतीः वडवाः अभिगत्य यथा हर्षसूचकं शब्दं करोति तथा त्वमपि वद । (secanasamartho 'śvaḥ śiśumatīḥ vaḍavāḥ abhigatya yathā harṣasūcakaṃ śabdaṃ karoti tathā tvamapi vada |) Of the generatively capable: as a young stallion, approaching a mare, makes a sound indicating joy, so you too make a sound of joy. Pointing out yet another illustration, the sage Gṛtsamada prays to the kapiñjala bird that good fortune come to us everywhere and that it make a sound of joy.

Printed English translation

When uttering your cry, O, Bird, proclaim good fortune : when sitting silently, cherish kind thoughts towards us : when you cry as you are flying, let the sound be like that of a lute : so that, blessed with excellent descendants, we may worthily praise you at this sacrifice.

यत् उत्पतन् वदसि कर्करिः यथा (वदसि) (yat utpatan vadasi karkariḥ yathā (vadasi))—if you make a sound while flying about, sing sweetly, as the special instrument called कर्करि (karkari) gives out a pleasant sound.

सुवीराः विदथे बृहत् वदेम (suvīrāḥ vidathe bṛhat vadema)—together with our sons and grandsons, we shall recite abundantly in this sacrifice mantras in the form of singing your qualities.

There are some Pariśiṣṭa mantras belonging to this sūkta. These Pariśiṣṭa mantras are recited as regular mantras in other branches; here alone they are regarded as Pariśiṣṭa mantras. They generally contain prayers made praising the deities of the respective sūktas. There is a custom of reciting them at the end of this maṇḍala. And at the end of the 32nd sūkta of this maṇḍala there are also Pariśiṣṭa mantras addressed to the deities Kuhū and Sinīvālī. Since the maṇḍala has come to an end, we shall explain those Pariśiṣṭa mantras and their main intent here.

At the end of the 32nd sūkta of the Second Maṇḍala, the Khila (Pariśiṣṭa) mantras to be recited.

Arthānuvāda (the meaning)

1. This mantra is the Puronuvākyā mantra of the deity Kuhū. The new-moon day on which the moon is not seen at all is called Kuhū. I invoke in this sacrifice the deity called Kuhū, who is possessed of beautiful wealth and knows sacrifices and the like. May that deity give us the joy of hearing, and wealth and fame belonging to the ancestors. O goddess, we serve you, such as you are, with an oblation.

2. This mantra is the Yājyā mantra of the deity Kuhū. Among the gods this goddess Kuhū is the guardian of immortality or of water. May this goddess, invoked by us, know that the oblation and the cooked offering we make have been prepared for her. Having so known, may she give abundantly to the sacrificer who performs the sacrifice the wealth and nourishment he desires.

3. The full-moon day on which the moon is not complete (ऊनचंद्रा पौमासी (ūnacaṃdrā rpaumāsī)) is called Anumati. This mantra is the Puronuvākyā mantra of the goddess Anumati. May the goddess Anumati make known to the gods the sacrifice we are now performing. May Agni, the carrier of the oblation to the gods, and Anumati, both of them, bring happiness to the sacrificer who offers the oblation.

4. This mantra is the Yājyā mantra of the goddess Anumati. O goddess Anumati, knowing (or approving) the sacrifice we are performing, bring us happiness. Impel us in the sacrifice we perform for the sake of food, and arrange that we have long life.

5. When the oblation in twelve pans is offered to Dhātṛ in the Devikā sacrifice, this mantra is the Puronuvākyā mantra of Dhātṛ. This mantra is in the Gāyatrī metre. May Dhātṛ (the Supreme Lord), who sustains and nourishes the whole world, give us wealth. That deity is the lord and protector of the world. May such a Dhātṛ bring us complete happiness.

1. This mantra is the Yājyā mantra of the deity Dhātṛ. May that Dhātṛ give wealth to the sacrificer, a householder who desires progeny, who has offered the oblation. For that sacrificer may the immortal gods, the Viśvedevas, and Aditi, mother of the gods, all together, being of equal affection, bring together wealth and the like.
2. This Ṛk and the next may be used alternatively as Anuvākyā and Yājyā mantras. May this Dhātṛ give us the unfailing wealth needed for life. May we, wishing for food, hold, that is, show, a good disposition towards this god.
3. This is a Yājyā mantra used alternatively. This Dhātṛ is lord over the giving to the sacrificer of progeny, that is of sons, grandsons and so on, and over wealth. This Dhātṛ has produced all these worlds. This god will give the sacrificer a son. The main intent is: we shall offer an oblation with ghee addressed to this god Dhātṛ.

All these mantras, with slight differences, are read in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (Tai. Saṃ. 3-3-11-2, 3, 4, 5).

Arthānuvāda (the meaning).

O kapiñjala bird, in order that good fortune come to us, utter only auspicious sound in the south, in the north, in front and behind. Speak an auspicious word so that it is well with our sons and our houses. Say that it be well with us and that no fear arise. Speak so that auspiciousness arises below us, above us and everywhere. Make it so that there is no enemy before us, that there is good fortune in the south, that for us there is always no fear, and that good fortune is in the north and in the house. O bird Śakunta, as you move about, provide us with the strength and capacity of youth and success in battles and the like. O kapiñjala bird, as you make a sound, utter welfare. When you sit silent, wish for our good. When singing, let your voice be sweet like the instrument called Karkari. In the sacrificial hall, praising your qualities abundantly, we shall recite your praise together with our sons, grandsons and so on.

Pīṭhike (Introduction) to the Third Maṇḍala

The seer of the Third Maṇḍala of the Ṛgveda is Viśvāmitra, one of the seven seers. Although Viśvāmitra is well known as the seer of this maṇḍala, Viśvāmitra is the seer only of the following Ṛks: sūktas 1-12 of this maṇḍala (140 Ṛks in all); sūktas 24-32 (117 Ṛks); in sūkta 33, Ṛks 1-3, 5, 7, 9, 11-13 (9 Ṛks in all); sūktas 34-35 (22 Ṛks); in sūkta 36, Ṛks 1-9, 11 (10 Ṛks in all); sūktas 37-53 (144 Ṛks); sūktas 57-62 (56 Ṛks); and in sūkta 67 of the ninth maṇḍala Ṛks 13-15 (3 Ṛks); all these together make 501 Ṛks. For the other Ṛks remaining in this maṇḍala, others of Viśvāmitra's lineage are the seers. In the present part, sūktas 1-6 of this maṇḍala are included.

Concerning the sage Viśvāmitra, Yāska says in his Nirukta—

(ಒಟ್ಟು ೧೪೦ ಋಕ್ಕುಗಳು); ೨೪-೩೨ ಸೂಕ್ತಗಳು (೧೧೭ ಋಕ್ಕುಗಳು); ೩೩ ನೇ ಸೂಕ್ತದಲ್ಲಿ ೧-೩, ೫, ೭, ೯, ೧೧-೧೩ ಋಕ್ಕುಗಳು (ಒಟ್ಟು ೯ ಋಕ್ಕುಗಳು); ೩೪-೩೫ ಸೂಕ್ತಗಳು (೨೨ ಋಕ್ಕುಗಳು); ೩೬ ನೇಯ ಸೂಕ್ತದಲ್ಲಿ ೧-೯, ೧೧ ಋಕ್ಕುಗಳು (ಒಟ್ಟು ೧೦ ಋಕ್ಕುಗಳು); ೩೭-೫೩ ಸೂಕ್ತಗಳು (೧೪೪ ಋಕ್ಕುಗಳು); ೫೭-೬೨ ಸೂಕ್ತ ಗಳು (೫೬ ಋಕ್ಕುಗಳು); ಒಂಭತ್ತನೇಯ ಮಂಡಲದ ೬೭ ನೇಯ ಸೂಕ್ತದಲ್ಲಿ ೧೩-೧೫ ಋಕ್ಕುಗಳು (೩ ಋಕ್ಕುಗಳು) ಇವೆಲ್ಲವೂ ಸೇರಿ ಆಗುವ ೫೦೧ ಋಕ್ಕುಗಳಿಗೆ ಮಾತ್ರ ವಿಶ್ವಾಮಿತ್ರನು ಋಷಿಯು ಈ ಮಂಡಲದಲ್ಲಿ ಉಳಿದಿರುವ ಇತರ ಋಕ್ಕುಗಳಿಗೆ ವಿಶ್ವಾಮಿತ್ರ ವಂಶಸ್ಥರಾದ ಇತರರು ಋಷಿಗಳು. ಪ್ರಸಕ್ತವಾದ ಈ ಭಾಗದಲ್ಲಿ ಈ ಮಂಡಲದ ((òṭṭu 140 ṛkkugaḷu); 24-32 sūktagaḷu (117 ṛkkugaḷu); 33 ne sūktadalli 1-3, 5, 7, 9, 11-13 ṛkkugaḷu (òṭṭu 9 ṛkkugaḷu); 34-35 sūktagaḷu (22 ṛkkugaḷu); 36 nèya sūktadalli 1-9, 11 ṛkkugaḷu (òṭṭu 10 ṛkkugaḷu); 37-53 sūktagaḷu (144 ṛkkugaḷu); 57-62 sūkta gaḷu (56 ṛkkugaḷu); òṃbhattanèya maṃḍalada 67 nèya sūktadalli 13-15 ṛkkugaḷu (3 ṛkkugaḷu) ivèllavū seri āguva 501 ṛkkugaḷigè mātra viśvāmitranu ṛṣiyu ī maṃḍaladalli uḷidiruva itara ṛkkugaḷigè viśvāmitra vaṃśastharāda itararu ṛṣigaḷu. prasaktavāda ī bhāgadalli ī maṃḍalada) (Si. —stating an ancient story. विश्वामित्र (viśvāmitra) means that this seer is a friend to all or all are his friends: such is the component sense of the word. This seer was the priest of a king named Sudās, son of Pijavana. Once, taking the wealth given by that king and setting out to go to his hermitage, he came to the confluence of the rivers Vipāś and Śutudri (of the Panjab in the Panjab, the present Beas and Sutlej rivers, in English letters in the supplied text) to the place of their confluence. Thieves, wishing to rob him of the property he had with him, were following him. Learning this, Viśvāmitra tried somehow to cross these rivers lying across his path, but they were so deep with the water of their flood that he could not. Then the seer, praying to these rivers, praised them so that they might lessen their water and make it convenient for him to pass; this is said in Ṛ. Saṃ. sūkta 3-33 and in Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-53, Ṛks 9-11.

In the above sūkta, that is in Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-33-8, this seer Viśvāmitra has declared himself to be the son of Kuśika. It is said in the Rāmāyaṇa, the Mahābhārata and other Purāṇas that there were enmity and jealousy between Viśvāmitra and the sage Vasiṣṭha. For this there is basis in some places in the Ṛgveda also. That has been mentioned in the Pīṭhike of this part.

The name of Viśvāmitra and of this seer's descendants is read in mantras such as Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-1-21; 3-18-4; 3-53-23; 10-89-17; Atharvaveda 18-3-6; 18-4-54; Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa 3-15-1 and others. Viśvāmitra's part is very important in the story of Śunaḥśepa. We have explained that at length in Part 2 of the Ṛ. Saṃ. That Viśvāmitra is a chief seer is described in Aitareya Āraṇyaka 2-2-1; Ai. Brā. 6-18-1; 6-20-3; Tai. Saṃ. 2-2-1-2; 3-1-7-3; 5-2-3-4; Kāṭhaka Saṃhitā 16-19; 20-9; Maitrāyaṇīya Saṃhitā 2-7-19; Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa 15-1; 26-14; 27-1, 2; 29-3; Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa 14-3-12; Bṛ. U. 2-2-4; Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa 3-3-13; 3-15-1 and other places.

In the Purāṇas and similar works it is said that Viśvāmitra was a king and became a Brahmin by performing austerities. In the Ṛgveda, for this matter [the supplied text breaks off here: "ಈ ವಿಷಯಕ್ಕೆ ಯ", the rest of the sentence is missing from the print or the supplied text]

Anuvāda (Kannada).

In this Third Maṇḍala seen by the sage Viśvāmitra there are five anuvākas. In the first anuvāka there are twelve sūktas (the supplied text breaks off here, at the end of the Anuvāda line on p. 496).

Sūkta 1

— Maṇḍala 3, Anuvāka 1, Sūkta 1; Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 13, 14, 15, 16. Number of ṛks in the sūkta: 23. Seer: Viśvāmitra, son of Gādhin. Deity: Agni. Metre: Triṣṭubh.

(Gist: O Agni, you have made me the bearer of soma to offer at the sacrifice; make me strong; I take the pressing-stone, praise the gods, and serve you; protect my body. Ṛgveda 8-86-5 and 6-1-9 are cited inside the bhāṣya.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Agne: O Agni. Vidathe: in the sacrifice. Yajadhyai: to offer for the sacrifice. Somasya vahniṃ: as the bearer of soma. Mā: me. Cakartha: you have appointed. Tavasaṃ: (such as I am) so that I obtain strength fit for it. Vakṣi: wish. Devān: the gods. Accha: going to meet. Dīdyat: honouring. Adriṃ: the stone that presses the juice. Yuṃje: I hold in my hand. Śamāye: I worship and praise (them). Agne: O Agni. Tanvaṃ [printed ಙನ್ವ೦]: my body. Juṣasva: serve for protection.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Agni, you have appointed me as the bearer of soma to offer at the sacrifice. Make me fit with strength suited to it. Going to meet the gods and honouring them, I hold in my hand the stone that presses the juice. I praise and worship them. O Agni, serve me for the protection of my body.

Printed English translation

Render me vigorous, Agni, since you have made me the bearer of the Soma to offer it in the sacrifice : honouring the gods who are present, I take hold of the stone (to express the juice); I propitiate them; Agni, protect my person.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

अग्ने विदथे यजध्यै सोमस्य वह्निं मा चकर्थ तवसं वक्षि—हे अग्ने यज्ञे यष्टुं सोमस्य वोढारं मां चकर्थ तस्मान्मां बलिनं कामयस्व । (agne vidathe yajadhyai somasya vahniṃ mā cakartha tavasaṃ vakṣi—he agne yajñe yaṣṭuṃ somasya voḍhāraṃ māṃ cakartha tasmānmāṃ balinaṃ kāmayasva |) O Agni, you have made me the bearer of soma, to offer in the sacrifice; therefore wish me strong. O Agni, in the sacrifice we are now performing, to offer to the gods you have made me the bearer of soma, so that I may bear it

(standing holding it) you have made me. Therefore wish and give the strength required for doing that work. That is: I stand ready, bearing soma to offer to the gods at the sacrifice. This is your power. The sacrificer prays to Agni to give him also the strength and capacity fit to carry out that work successfully.

विदथे— (vidathe—)the word विदथ (vidatha) is read among the names of the sacrifice (Ni. 3-9). For a detailed explanation of this word see Ṛ. Saṃ. Part 13, pages 9 to 13.

वह्निं- (vahniṃ-)the word वह्नि (vahni) is read among the names of the horse (Ni. 2-27), and Yāska has given the etymology वह्नयो वोढारः (vahnayo voḍhāraḥ) (Ni. 8-3). The word वह्नि (vahni) means bearing a burden, carrying.

देवान् अच्छ दीद्यत् अद्रिं युंजे शमाये—हे अग्ने देवानभि दीप्यमा नोSहं सोमाभिषवणाय गावाणं युनज्मि देवान् स्तौमि च । (devān accha dīdyat adriṃ yuṃje śamāye—he agne devānabhi dīpyamā noShaṃ somābhiṣavaṇāya gāvāṇaṃ yunajmi devān staumi ca |) O Agni, for pressing the soma, that is, for crushing the soma plants and extracting the juice, I hold in my hand the stone that is the means of it, and, standing before the gods (facing them), I honour and praise them.

अच्छ— (accha—)on this word Yāska has given the etymology अच्छाभेरामुमिति शाकपूणिः । (acchābherāptumiti śākapūṇiḥ |) Durgācārya: अच्छ इत्येव शब्दो अभेः अर्थे भवति । आप्तं इति । योSर्थः उक्तः स्यात् स एवार्थः अच्छेत्यनेनोक्तो भवति एवं शाकपूणिः आचार्यो मन्यते । (accha ityeva śabdo abheḥ arthe bhavati | āptaṃ iti | yoSrthaḥ uktaḥ syāt sa evārthaḥ acchetyanenokto bhavati evaṃ śākapūṇiḥ ācāryo manyate |) Here Yāska states only the view of the teacher Śākapūṇi regarding the word अच्छ (accha): the meaning the word अभि (abhi) has (below) is the meaning of the word अच्छ (accha) too. In general this word may be used in any sense. Therefore the word अच्छ (accha) is explained as "facing". Though this word ends in a short vowel, it is used with a long final vowel in the Saṃhitā text for the convenience of the metre.

अद्रिं—अभिषवसाधनं । (adriṃ—abhiṣavasādhanaṃ |) The meaning is the stone that crushes and presses the soma juice. For this implement there are two usages, अद्रि (adri) and ग्राव (grāva). Although both these words have the common meaning "stone", it may be said, from their descriptions and epithets, that अद्रि (adri) and ग्राव (grāva), the implements for pressing the soma juice, must have differed in form. In general, whenever the word अद्रि (adri) occurs, Sāyaṇa explains it as ग्राव (grāva), and whenever the word ग्राव (grāva) occurs, as stone

(पाषाण (pāṣāṇa)). But this difference of meaning is not the basis for showing their difference. It is known that these two implements are different from the epithets that describe their form, from the comparisons, and from the words indicating the sounds they make while pressing the soma juice. बबृहाण, (ऋ. सं. ५-४१-१२); पर्वत (१०-९४-१); आश्रमण, अश्रृथित, अमृत्यु, अनातुर, अजर, अमविष्णु (१०-९४-११); ध्रुव, क्षेमकाम (babṛhāṇa, (ṛ. saṃ. 5-41-12); parvata (10-94-1); āśramaṇa, aśṛthita, amṛtyu, anātura, ajara, amaviṣṇu (10-94-11); dhruva, kṣemakāma) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-41-12; 10-94-1; 10-94-11; 10-94-12), all these are epithets showing the distinctive character of अद्रि (adri). In the same way epithets such as पृथु (pṛthu) and पृथुबुध (pṛthubudha) show the distinctive character of ग्राव (grāva) alone. ग्राव (grāva) is generally compared to a bull and अद्रि (adri) to a horse.

The word अद्रि (adri) is formed either from the root दृ (dṛ), giving the sense "split", or from the root अद् (ad), giving the sense "eat". This word is used not only in the sense of pressing the juice or its implement but in other senses too. For example—

उत स्म ते परुष्ण्यामूर्णा वसत शुंध्यवः । उत पव्या रथानामद्रिं भिंदंत्योजसा ॥ (uta sma te paruṣṇyāmūrṇā vasata śuṃdhyavaḥ | uta pavyā rathānāmadriṃ bhiṃdaṃtyojasā ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-52-9)

Here the strength of the chariots of the Maruts is described. When it is said that even the अद्रि (adri) are split by the force of the wheels of that chariot, the word अद्रि (adri) is explained as a cloud (मेघं (meghaṃ)) or गिरिं (giriṃ), a cloud or a mountain.

ब्रह्माणि मे मतयः शं सुतासः शुष्म इयर्ति प्रभृतो मे अद्रिः । आ शासते प्रति हर्यंतुक्थेमा हरी वहतस्ता नो अच्छ ॥ (brahmāṇi me matayaḥ śaṃ sutāsaḥ śuṣma iyarti prabhṛto me adriḥ | ā śāsate prati haryaṃtukthemā harī vahatastā no accha ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-165-4)

Here, in the conversation between Indra and the Maruts, Indra praises the power of his thunderbolt. Here the word अद्रि (adri) means शत्रोणां भक्षको वज्रः । (śatroṇāṃ bhakṣako vajraḥ |) [as supplied], the thunderbolt that destroys enemies.

बृहस्पतिर्भिनदद्रिं विदद्गाः समुद्रियाभिर्वावशंत नरः ॥ (bṛhaspatirbhinadadriṃ vidadgāḥ samudriyābhirvāvaśaṃta naraḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-62-3)

In Ṛks such as this it is taken to mean an asura, and—

महः स राय एषते पतिर्दन्निन इनस्य वसुनः पद आ । उप ध्रजंतमद्रयो विधन्नित् ॥ (mahaḥ sa rāya eṣate patirdannina inasya vasunaḥ pada ā | upa dhrajaṃtamadrayo vidhannit ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-149-9)

in places such as this it means sacrificers who have अद्रि (adri), that is, pressing stones. Thus the word अद्रि (adri) has many meanings. Besides, it is also explained as अत्तारं, असुरं, भक्षकं पणिं (attāraṃ, asuraṃ, bhakṣakaṃ paṇiṃ). In another context, when giving an explanation of this word, the Nirukta authors—

यदिंद्र चित्र मेहनास्ति त्वादातिमद्रिवः । राधस्तन्नो विदद्वस उभयाहस्त्या भर ॥ (yadiṃdra citra mehanāsti tvādātimadrivaḥ | rādhastanno vidadvasa ubhayāhastyā bhara ‖) (Ma. [printed ಮ., for Ṛ.] Saṃ. 5-39-1)

—cite this Ṛk and show how the sense वज्रवन् इंद्र (vajravan iṃdra), "Indra with the thunderbolt", is possible for the vocative that means "possessor of the stone" in this Ṛk. Thus, since the root or roots of the word अद्रि (adri) give different meanings through derivations suited to the context, it must be explained according to each occasion. In the present Ṛk it means अभिषवसाधनं । (abhiṣavasādhanaṃ |), the stone that presses the soma juice.

शमाये—शाम्यामि । (śamāye—śāmyāmi |) I pacify, that is, I appease. On this matter the commentator—

ऋतेन देवस्सविता शमायत ऋतस्य शृंगमुर्विया वि पप्रथे । (ṛtena devassavitā śamāyata ṛtasya śṛṃgamurviyā vi paprathe |) (Ma. [printed so] Saṃ. 8-86-5)

—cites this Ṛk and shows that the word शमायते (śamāyate) in it has the meaning सायंकाले स्वकिरणसमूहं शमयति (sāyaṃkāle svakiraṇasamūhaṃ śamayati), "the Sun, in the evening, calms his mass of rays", that is, withdraws. Besides, saying that शमाये (śamāye) has another meaning, सौमि (saumi), "I praise", for its support he cites—

सो अग्न ईजे शशमे च मर्तो यस्त आनट् समिधा हव्यदातिं । (so agna īje śaśame ca marto yasta ānaṭ samidhā havyadātiṃ |) (Ma. [printed so] Saṃ. 6-1-9)

—and shows that the word शशमे (śaśame) in it has the sense शशमे—स्तौति (śaśame—stauti), "praises".

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

(Agne: O Agni.) Yajñaṃ: the sacrifice (we). Prāñcaṃ: so that it succeeds. Cakrama: have performed. Agniṃ: Agni. Samiddhiḥ: with fuel. Namasā: with oblations. Duvasyan: serving. Gīḥ: my words of praise. Vardhatāṃ: let them increase. Divaḥ: from the world of the gods (the gods who came). Kavīnāṃ: of the praisers. Vidathā: the knowledge. Śaśāsuḥ: sought, desiring. Gṛtsāya: the worthy of praise and powerful. Tavase: to Agni. Gātuṃ: to offer praise. Īṣuścit: desired.

O Agni, we have performed the sacrifice so that it succeeds. May my words of praise, serving Agni with fuel and oblations, increase you. The gods who came from the world of the gods sought, desiring it, the knowledge of praise of the praisers. They desired to offer praise to Agni, who is worthy of praise and powerful.

Printed English translation

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

यज्ञं प्रांचं चक्रम—हे अग्ने वयं यज्ञं प्रकर्षेण गच्छंतं अकार्ष्म। (yajñaṃ prāṃcaṃ cakrama—he agne vayaṃ yajñaṃ prakarṣeṇa gacchaṃtaṃ akārṣma|) O Agni, now we have made the sacrifice go on well, that is, performed it successfully. Here the commentator explains the word प्रांचं (prāṃcaṃ) as प्रकर्षेण गच्छंतं (prakarṣeṇa gacchaṃtaṃ), going in an excellent way. Yāska has explained the word प्राचीं (prācīṃ) as प्रवृद्धां (pravṛddhāṃ), going on increasing (Ni. 11-11).

गीः वर्धतां—मदीया स्तुतिः विधतां । (gīḥ vardhatāṃ—madīyā stutiḥ vidhatāṃ |) The seer's wish is expressed that the speech in the form of praise that I am offering, praising Agni's qualities, should prosper.

समिद्भिः— (samiddhiḥ—) the word समित् (samit), formed from the root इञ्ञेइंधी दीप्तौ (iññeiṃdhī dīptau) [as supplied], means burning brightly. For Agni to blaze well, wood and the like must be put in. The wood so put in is called समित् (samit). In sacrifices and the like, the tip portions of the branches of certain particular trees such as the aśvattha, palāśa and khādira, cut when dry to a length of about four finger-breadths, are used for offering into the fire, only those having the tip. It is customary to call such wood समित् (samit). In the present Ṛk it is said that we serve Agni with such fuel.

दुवस्यन्— (duvasyan—) since the word दुवस्यति (duvasyati) is read among the words denoting the act of serving (Ni. 3-13), दुवस्यन् (duvasyan) means they serve.

the word देवाः (devāḥ) must be supplied. The gods came from the world of the gods and sought out the knowledge of those who praise them, or what the nature of the praises is. Although the word विदथ (vidatha) has many meanings such as sacrifice, here the commentator gives the sense knowledge or praise. Yāska has said विदथानि वेदनानि (vidathāni vedanāni) (Ni. 6-8). Durgācārya explains this word as विज्ञानानि (vijñānāni). We have explained the derivation and a detailed account of the word विदथ (vidatha) in Ṛ. Saṃ. Part 13, page 13. Although the word कवि (kavi) is read among the names of the wise (Ni. 3-19), the commentator gives here the meaning "praiser".

गृत्साय तवसे गातुं ईषुः चित्—स्तोतव्यायाग्नये वृद्धाय स्तोतुं स्तोतार इच्छंति च । (gṛtsāya tavase gātuṃ īṣuḥ cit—stotavyāyāgnaye vṛddhāya stotuṃ stotāra icchaṃti ca |) Those gods wished to offer praise to Agni, who is worthy of praise and powerful. Since the word तवः (tavaḥ) is read among the names of strength (Ni. 3-9), तवसे (tavase) means to Agni who has strength.

चित्— (cit—) Yāska says that the particle चित् (cit) is चिदित्येषोऽनेककर्मा (cidityeṣo 'nekakarmā), that the word चित् (cit) is used in many kinds of senses, and in support of it—

आचार्यश्चिदिदं ब्रूयादिति पूजायां । दधि चिदित्युपमार्थे । कुल्मा- षांश्चिदाहरेत्यवकुत्सिते । (ācāryaścididaṃ brūyāditi pūjāyāṃ | dadhi cidityupamārthe | kulmā-ṣāṃścidāharetyavakutsite |) (Ni. 1-4)

—he explains by examples that in the sentence आचार्यश्चित् (ācāryaścit) the word चित् (cit) is used in the sense of respect, in the sentence दधिचित् (dadhicit) in the sense of comparison, and in कुल्माषांश्चित् (kulmāṣāṃścit) in a contemptuous sense. In the present Ṛk Sāyaṇa says चिदिति चार्थे (ciditi cārthe): the word चित् (cit) is used in the sense "and".

Wise, of great strength, a good friend from the time of his birth (from the time of his origin), Agni brings happiness to the world of the gods and also to the earth —that is, he brings happiness to the gods in heaven and to men on earth. By conveying to the gods in heaven the oblations and the like that the sacrificers offer in the sacrifices men perform, he brings happiness to gods and men; so it is said. Since the oblations that men offer in their sacrifices reach the gods, the sacrifice is as if performed completely and its fruit reaches men; thereby men have happiness. The gods too, as if receiving through Agni the portions of oblation offered to them in the sacrifices, find happiness through Agni: this is the main intent.

पूतदक्षः- पूत = शुद्ध, दक्ष = बल (pūtadakṣaḥ- pūta = śuddha, dakṣa = bala) (pure strength) is the component sense of this word. The word दक्ष (dakṣa) is read among the names of strength (Ni. 2-9). This word is read in the Ṛks—

अबुद्धे राजा वरुणो वनस्योर्ध्वं स्तूपं दधते पूतदक्षः । (abuddhe rājā varuṇo vanasyordhvaṃ stūpaṃ dadhate pūtadakṣaḥ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-24-7)

अर्चंति त्वा मरुतः पूतदक्षास्त्वमेषामृषिरिंद्रासि धीरः । (arcaṃti tvā marutaḥ pūtadakṣāstvameṣāmṛṣiriṃdrāsi dhīraḥ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-29-1)

प्रति वां सूर उदिते सूक्तैर्मित्रं हुवे वरुणं पूतदक्षं । (prati vāṃ sūra udite sūktairmitraṃ huve varuṇaṃ pūtadakṣaṃ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-65-1)

and also in Ṛks such as Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-23-4; 5-66-4; 6-51-9; 8-23-30; 8-25-1; 8-94-7; 8-94-10; 10-92-4. In explaining these Ṛks the commentator has explained पूतदक्षः (pūtadakṣaḥ) as pure strength, power, capacity. The authors of "Vedārthayatna" explain this word as "mind", and the English scholar Geldner (in English letters in the supplied text) as "purpose". But the meaning "strength" stated by the commentator, following the Nighaṇṭu (Ni. 2-9), is the appropriate one. In the Yajurveda's Taittirīya Saṃhitā, when commenting on the sentence दक्षश्च मे बलं च मे (dakṣaśca me balaṃ ca me) (Tai. Saṃ. 4-7-1-1), Mahīdhara explains दक्षः (dakṣaḥ) as skill of the organs of knowledge and बलं (balaṃ) as skill of the organs of action. The word दक्ष (dakṣa) indicates intellectual power and the word बल (bala) bodily power. Therefore the word दक्ष (dakṣa)—

1. दक्षं दधाते अपसं । (dakṣaṃ dadhāte apasaṃ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-2-9) as in this Ṛk, means ability or proficiency in doing a work, and—

1. दक्षं दधासि जीवसे । (dakṣaṃ dadhāsi jīvase |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-91-7)

p. 506

[Running head, p. 506: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 1.]

द्युमत्तमं दक्षं धैह्यस्मे सेधा जनानां पूर्वीररातीः । (dyumattamaṃ dakṣaṃ dhaihyasme sedhā janānāṃ pūrvīrarātīḥ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-44-9)

य इंद्रो हरिवान्न दभंति तं रिपो दक्षं दधाति सोमिनि । (ya iṃdro harivānna dabhaṃti taṃ ripo dakṣaṃ dadhāti somini |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-32-12)

स्व दक्षाय प्रचेतसा । (sva dakṣāya pracetasā |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 8-9-20)

In Ṛks such as these the word दक्ष (dakṣa) has the sense "intellectual power". Besides, the word दक्ष (dakṣa) indicates the purpose or resolve of the mind, and the word क्रतु (kratu) indicates understanding, that is, the power of knowing.

1. भद्रं नो अपि वातय मनो दक्षमुत क्रतुं । (bhadraṃ no api vātaya mano dakṣamuta kratuṃ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-25-1)
2. आ त एतु मनः पुनः क्रत्वे दक्षाय जीवसे । (ā ta etu manaḥ punaḥ kratve dakṣāya jīvase |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-57-4)
3. त्वं सोम क्रतुभिः सुक्रतुर्भूस्त्वं दक्षैः सुदक्षो विश्ववेदाः । (tvaṃ soma kratubhiḥ sukraturbhūstvaṃ dakṣaiḥ sudakṣo viśvavedāḥ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-91-2)
4. अधा ह्यग्ने क्रतोर्भद्रस्य दक्षस्य साधोः । (adhā hyagne kratorbhadrasya dakṣasya sādhoḥ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-10-2)

In Ṛks such as these, and in Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-31-2; 1-111-2; 4-37-2; 5-10-2; 5-43-5; 6-16-7; 7-86-6; 8-42-3; 8-48-8; 8-68-4; 9-4-3; 9-16-2 [the supplied text has a colon between the last two references, changed to a semicolon]; 10-92-10, the meanings stated above are indicated.

दर्शतं अग्निं देवासः स्वसृणां अप्स्वंतः अपसि अविंदन्—तं दर्शनीयमग्निं देवाः सरणशीलानां नदीनां अप्सु गूढं स्थितं यज्ञवहनरूपे कर्मणि निमित्ते लब्धवंतः । (darśataṃ agniṃ devāsaḥ svasṛṇāṃ apsvaṃtaḥ apasi aviṃdan—taṃ darśanīyamagniṃ devāḥ saraṇaśīlānāṃ nadīnāṃ apsu gūḍhaṃ sthitaṃ yajñavahanarūpe karmaṇi nimitte labdhavaṃtaḥ |) That Agni, fit to be seen, that is, of gentle form, the gods found hidden amid the waters of the flowing rivers and got again, in order to bear the portion of oblations to the gods in sacrifices. There is a story about why Agni hid in the water and how the gods sought him out and brought him back.

In the 51st sūkta of the tenth maṇḍala of the Ṛgveda (Ṛ. 10-51-6 to 9) this matter is described in detail:—

(म. सं. १०-५१-६ रिंद ९) ((ma. saṃ. 10-51-6 riṃda 9)) (the reference as printed: "Ma. Saṃ. 10-51-6 to 9")

This sūkta is a conversation between the gods and Agni. The main point is: Agni had three elder brothers named Bhūpati, Bhuvanapati and Bhūtānāṃpati. Like Agni they used to bear the oblation to the gods in the sacrifice. While so doing, those three brothers died through the offerings made in the sacrifice with the word वषट् (vaṣaṭ), which are like a thunderbolt. Seeing that, Agni, the youngest, became afraid, went into the water and hid. While the gods were searching for Agni, fishes in the water told the gods that Agni was in the water. Then the gods came and conversed with Agni. That conversation is what is described in this sūkta. When the gods prayed to Agni to come up out of the water and bear the oblation to them as before, Agni said that since his brothers had died the same fate would befall him and therefore he would not come. When the gods said that they would not let him fear death and would make him free from fear of death, Agni said again: "Very well; besides saving me from the fear of death, you must give me in sacrifices certain special offerings such as the Prayājas, the Anuyājas, the Ūrjasvat, the Sviṣṭakṛt and the Ājyabhāga." The gods agreed, gave him the portions of oblation he asked for, granted the boons that he should take the chief part in the sacrifice, be saluted by all, and have long life, and appointed him as before to the work of bearing the oblation. This is the main intent of this sūkta.

In the Taittirīya Saṃhitā of the Yajurveda it is stated on this matter as follows:—

अग्नेस्त्रयो ज्यायाग्ंसो भ्रातर आसन्ते देवेभ्यो हव्यं वहंतः प्रामि- यंत सोऽग्निरभिभेदित्थं वाव स्य आर्तिमारिष्यतीति स निलायत सोऽपः प्राविशत्तं देवताः प्रैषमैच्छन्तं मत्स्यः प्राब्रवीत्तमशपद्धियाधिया (agnestrayo jyāyāgṃso bhrātara āsante devebhyo havyaṃ vahaṃtaḥ prāmi- yaṃta so 'gnirabhibheditthaṃ vāva sya ārtimāriṣyatīti sa nilāyata so 'paḥ prāviśattaṃ devatāḥ praiṣamaicchantaṃ matsyaḥ prābravīttamaśapaddhiyādhiyā)

त्वा वध्यासुर्यो मा प्रावोच इति तस्मान्मत्स्यं धियाधिया घ्नंति शप्तो हि तमन्वविंदन्तमब्रुवन्नुप न आ वर्तस्व हव्यं नो वहेति सोऽब्रवीद्वरं वृणै यदेव गृहीतस्याहुतस्य बहिः परिधिस्कंदात्तन्ने भ्रातृणां भागधेय मसदिति तस्माद्यद्गृहीतस्याहुतस्य बहिः परिधि स्कंदति तेषां तद्भागधेयं तानेव तेन प्रीणाति परिधीन्सरि दधाति रक्षसामपहत्यै ॥ (tvā vadhyāsuryo mā prāvoca iti tasmānmatsyaṃ dhiyādhiyā ghnaṃti śapto hi tamanvaviṃdantamabruvannupa na ā vartasva havyaṃ no vaheti so 'bravīdvaraṃ vṛṇai yadeva gṛhītasyāhutasya bahiḥ paridhiskaṃdāttanne bhrātṛṇāṃ bhāgadheya masaditi tasmādyadgṛhītasyāhutasya bahiḥ paridhi skaṃdati teṣāṃ tadbhāgadheyaṃ tāneva tena prīṇāti paridhīnsari dadhāti rakṣasāmapahatyai ‖) (Tai. Saṃ. 2-6-6-1)

[The Taittirīya passage is split in the print at the page break, in the word धियाधिया (dhiyādhiyā) / त्वा (tvā).] Formerly Agni had three elder brothers. They used to carry to the gods the oblation given by the sacrificer in sacrifices and the like. When they died, Agni too, fearing that the same fate might overtake him, ran away, entered the water and hid so that no one could see him. When the gods were searching for where Agni had gone, a fish in the water told the gods that Agni was hiding in the water. Hearing this tale-bearing of the fish, Agni became angry and cursed that henceforth the fishes in the water should be caught and killed by people with such means as nets. Accordingly people even now catch fish, kill them and eat them. Afterwards, when the gods said to Agni, "O Agni, come back and be ready to do the work of bearing the oblation for us," Agni said that if they gave him the boon that the portion of the ājya and other offerings that falls outside the paridhi (the special darbha grasses placed on the four sides round the fire, so that demons may not come and disturb the sacrifice) when offerings are made in the sacrifice, should be the oblation-portion of his brothers, he would come from the water and carry the oblation to the gods as before. The gods consented and gave him the boon so. Such is the story.

उ—उकारः पादपूरणः । (u—ukāraḥ pādapūraṇaḥ |) The word उ (u) in this Ṛk has no definite meaning. It is used merely to fill out the pāda. On this matter Yāska has given the etymology अथापि पदपूरण इदमु तदु (athāpi padapūraṇa idamu tadu) (Ni. 1-5).

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

सप्त यह्वीः सुभगं श्वेतं जज्ञानं महित्वा अरुषं अवर्धयन् (sapta yahvīḥ subhagaṃ śvetaṃ jajñānaṃ mahitvā aruṣaṃ avardhayan)—सर्पण- शीला महत्यो नद्यः शोभनधनं शुभ्रं जातं महत्त्वेन आरोचमानमप्सु स्थितमग्निं अवर्धयन् । (sarpaṇa- śīlā mahatyo nadyaḥ śobhanadhanaṃ śubhraṃ jātaṃ mahattvena ārocamānamapsu sthitamagniṃ avardhayan |) The rivers, of ever-flowing nature and great, caressed and made to grow Agni, who has excellent wealth, is pure, was just born, shines with great brilliance through his glory, and dwells in the water.

सप्त—सृप गत् (sapta—sṛpa gat): the word सप्त (sapta), formed from the root सृप (sṛpa) of motion, means having movement, that is, flowing.

यह्वः—या प्रापणे (yahvaḥ—yā prāpaṇe): this word, formed from the root या (yā), means rivers of flowing nature. The word यह्वः (yahvaḥ) is read among the names of rivers (Ni. 2-24), and since it is read among the names of the great (Ni. 3-13), यह्वः (yahvaḥ) may be given the meaning great rivers or rivers with much water.

सुभगं—भगः (subhagaṃ—bhagaḥ) [the word भगः (bhagaḥ) is] read among the names of wealth (Ni. 3-9); सुभगं (subhagaṃ) means one who has excellent wealth.

अरुषं—अरुषशब्दवु (aruṣaṃ—aruṣaśabdavu) is read among the names of the horse (Ni. 2-7), and since there is the etymology अरुषमिति रूपनाम (aruṣamiti rūpanāma) (Ni. 6-7), it means one of radiant form.

Regarding the rivers' caressing and nourishing of Agni, an illustration is given here: जातं शिशुं न अभि आरुः (jātaṃ śiśuṃ na abhi āruḥ) —as mares approach their newly born foals, that is, tend them lovingly, so the rivers nourished Agni and made him grow.

देवासः अग्निं जनिमन् वपुष्यन्— देवाः अग्निं जन्मन्युदके वा वपुर्दीप्ति- मकुर्वन् । (devāsaḥ agniṃ janiman vapuṣyan— devāḥ agniṃ janmanyudake vā vapurdipti-makurvan |) It was said in the preceding sentence that the rivers nourished Agni. The gods too made the body of Agni, born in the water, shine with brilliance.

In this Ṛk and in some following Ṛks the origin of Agni is described. Since Agni is said to have three kinds of birth, that is explained here.

श्रीणि जाना परि भूषंत्यस्य समुद्र एकं दिव्येकमप्सु । (śrīṇi jānā pari bhūṣaṃtyasya samudra ekaṃ divyekamapsu |) (Mi. [printed ಮಾ., for Ṛ.] Saṃ. 1-95-3)

[Running head, p. 511: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 13, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

दिवस्परि प्रथमं जज्ञे अग्निरस्मद्वितीयं परि जातवेदाः । तृतीयमप्सु नृमणा अजस्रमिंधान एनं जरते स्वाधीः ॥ (divaspari prathamaṃ jajñe agnirasmadvitīyaṃ pari jātavedāḥ | tṛtīyamappu nṛmaṇā ajasramiṃdhāna enaṃ jarate svādhīḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-45-1)

In Ṛks such as these there is a description of the three kinds of births of Agni. The three kinds of existence of Agni and, corresponding to them, the three kinds of manifestation reflect the very basic principle of the world; this is known from the explanation in the Bṛhaddevatā.

भवद्भूतस्य भव्यस्य जंगमस्थावरस्य च । अस्यैकेसूर्यमेवैकं प्रभवं प्रलयं विदुः ॥ एतद्भूतेषु लोकेषु अग्निभूतं स्थितं त्रिधा । ऋषयो गीर्भिरर्चंति व्यंजितं नामभिस्त्रिभिः ॥ (bhavadbhūtasya bhavyasya jaṃgamasthāvarasya ca | asyaike sūryamevaikaṃ prabhavaṃ pralayaṃ viduḥ ‖ etadbhūteṣu lokeṣu agnibhūtaṃ sthitaṃ tridhā | ṛṣayo gīrbhirarcaṃti vyaṃjitaṃ nāmabhistribhiḥ ‖) (Bṛ. De. 1-61; 1-64)

In these verses, in describing the greatness of Agni, the authors of the Bṛhaddevatā say that Prajāpati, the source of all beings, has in the form of Agni his existence in three ways, in three places, as the source of creation and dissolution of all moving and unmoving beings in the past, future and present. The seers also, as seen below, speak of the manifestation of this threefold Agni by three names; continuing this very praise of Agni—

त्रिस्थानं चैनमर्चंति होत्रायां व्यक्तबर्हिषः । इहैव पवमानोऽग्निर्मध्यमोऽग्निर्वनस्पतिः । अमुष्मिन्नेव विप्रैस्तु लोकेऽग्निः शुचिरुच्यते ॥ इहाग्निभूतस्त्वृषिभिर्लोके स्तुतिभिरीळितः । जातवेदाः स्तुतो मध्ये स्तुतो वैश्वानरो दिवि ॥ (tristhānaṃ cainamarcaṃti hotrāyāṃ vyaktabarhiṣaḥ | ihaiva pavamāno 'gnirmadhyamo 'gnirvanaspatiḥ | amuṣminneva vipraistu loke 'gniḥ śucirucyate ‖ ihāgnibhūtastvṛṣibhirloke stutibhirīḷitaḥ | jātavedāḥ stuto madhyè stuto vaiśvānaro divi ‖) (Bṛ. De. 1-65 to 67)

Of these three, the Agni that manifests on earth is famous as Pavamāna-Agni, the Agni of the middle world as Vanaspati, and the Agni in the heavenly world as Śuci. These three divisions are read in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (2-2-4) as the division Pavamāna, Śuci and Pāvaka. Besides, the names Agni, Jātavedas and Vaiśvānara also indicate three places and three kinds of nature. The Nirukta authors also, from the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā—

स्तोमेन हि दिवि देवासो अग्निमजीजनञ्छिभी रोदसिप्रां । तमू अकृण्वन् त्रेधा भुवे कं स ओषधीः पचति विश्वरूपाः ॥ (stomena hi divi devāso agnimajījanañktibhī rodasiprāṃ | tamū akṛṇvan tredhā bhuve kaṃ sa oṣadhīḥ pacati viśvarūpāḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-88-10) (the reference is printed twice in the supplied text)

p. 512

—citing this Ṛk, [give the explanation] तमकुर्वंस्त्रेधाभावायु पृथिव्यामंतरिक्षे दिवीति शाकपूणिः । (tamakurvaṃstredhābhāvāyu pṛthivyāmaṃtarikṣe divīti śākapūṇiḥ |) According to Śākapūṇi's explanation, Agni has manifested in the three places divided as earth, atmosphere and heaven, in the three forms Agni, Jātavedas and Vaiśvānara; they explain these three forms clearly by examples of Saṃhitā sentences (Ni. 7-14 to 7-25).

In the same way, in this Ṛk too the three places are described in order by the names समुद्रे (samudre), दिवि (divi), अप्पु (appu), it being explained that Agni appears in the sea as the submarine fire, in heaven in the form of the Sun, and in the waters, that is the atmosphere, in the form of lightning. Though at times the names of the places differ, the meaning is all one. For example, here, in place of earth, the sea is named, divided to suit this context. In sum, such threefold divisions are stated in the four Vedas in various contexts.

दिवस्परि प्रथमं जज्ञे अग्निरस्मद् द्वितीयं परि जातवेदाः । तृतीयमप्पु नृमणा अजस्रमिंधान एनं जरते स्वाधीः ॥ (divaspari prathamaṃ jajñe agnirasmad dvitīyaṃ pari jātavedāḥ | tṛtīyamappu nṛmaṇā ajasramiṃdhāna enaṃ jarate svādhīḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-45-1; Vā. Saṃ. 12-18; Tai. Saṃ. 1-3-14-5)

अग्निरस्मि जन्मना जातवेदा घृतं मे चक्षुरमृतं म आसन् । अर्कस्त्रिधातू रजसो विमानोऽजस्रो घर्मो हविरस्मि नाम ॥ (agnirasmi janmanā jātavedā ghṛtaṃ me cakṣuramṛtaṃ ma āsan | arkastridhātū rajaso vimāno 'jasro gharmo havirasmi nāma ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-26-7; Vā. Saṃ. 18-66; Ni. 14-2)

From such explanations the nature of the description of Agni's three births is clearly understood.

Punānaḥ: purifying. Śociḥ: radiance. Pari: all around. Vasānaḥ: spreading like a garment. Apāṃ: to the workers. Āyuḥ: food. Bṛhatīḥ: abundant. Anūnāḥ: complete. Śriyaḥ: riches. Mimāte: he provides.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

Agni, pervading the atmosphere with shining lights, purifying the sacrificer who does the rite with venerable and purifying lights, spreading his radiance all around like a garment, provides the workers with food and with abundant, complete riches.

Printed English translation

Spreading through the firmament with shining limbs, sanctifying the rite with intelligent and purifying (energies), and clothed with radiance, he bestows upon the worshipper abundant food and great and undiminished prosperity.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk the illustration शोचिः वसानः परि (śociḥ vasānaḥ pari) is stated. As a cloth completely covers an object, Agni pervades everything with his radiance and purifies it; so it is said. For the sense of the word रजसः (rajasaḥ) as the atmospheric world Yāska cites—

एता उ त्या उषसः केतुमक्रत पूर्वे अह्ने रजसो भानुमंजते । (etā u tyā uṣasaḥ ketumakrata pūrve ahne rajaso bhānumaṃjate |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-92-1)

p. 514

[Running head, p. 514: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 1.]

—and he has given the etymology अंतरिक्षलोकस्य (aṃtarikṣalokasya) for the word रजसः (rajasaḥ) in it (Ni. 12-7). The word क्रतु (kratu) is read among the names of rites (Ni. 3-1). The commentator explains it here as the sacrificer who does the rite, and the word अपां (apāṃ) as "to the workers"; the word अपः (apaḥ) too is read among the names of rites (Ni. 3-1). आयुः— (āyuḥ—) since the word आयुः (āyuḥ) is read among the names of food, it means food (Ni. 3-6).

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

Agni goes around and joins the waters, children of the atmosphere, not wearing garments yet not naked, not consuming Agni, unharmed by Agni. The ancient, ever youthful rivers, seven in number, having one source, the atmosphere, bore the one Agni as their embryo (in the womb).

Printed English translation

Agni everywhere repairs to the undevouring, undevoured (waters); the vast (offspring) of the firmament, not clothed, yet not naked, seven eternal, ever youthful rivers, sprung from the same source, received Agni as their common embryo.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

The meaning of this Ṛk is not easy to understand. Since it consists of difficult words and obscure explanations, it must be explained so that the intent fits.

दिवः यह्वीः अवसानाः अनग्नाः अनदतीः अदब्बाः सीं वव्राज—अभक्षयंतीः अहिंसिता मातृभूताः अपः अग्निः सर्वतः व्रजति । (divaḥ yahvīḥ avasānāḥ anagnāḥ anadatīḥ adabbāḥ sīṃ vavrāja—abhakṣayaṃtīḥ ahiṃsitā mātṛbhūtāḥ apaḥ agniḥ sarvataḥ vrajati |) Since burning is the very nature of Agni, no object around Agni escapes harm from him. But here the word अदब्बाः (adabbāḥ) indicates that the waters suffer no harm at all from Agni. Likewise, since Agni burns everything, he is said to be the devourer of all. But here Agni does not devour the waters; that is, the waters do not dry up through Agni's great heat. Moreover, the waters have the nature of quenching and calming Agni; yet no kind of trouble comes to Agni from the waters. Therefore Agni and the waters are gentle towards each other. And they describe the nature of these waters still more clearly: दिवः यह्वीः (divaḥ yahvīḥ) means अंतरिक्षस्यापत्य भूताः (aṃtarikṣasyāpatya bhūtāḥ), those who are like children of the atmosphere. How? Clouds full of water gather together in the atmosphere. From these clouds the waters fall to the earth as rain and flow as rivers. Since the waters thus originate (fall) from the atmosphere, it is natural to call them the offspring or children of the atmosphere

. And अवसानाः अनग्नाः (avasānāḥ anagnāḥ): here a mutual contradiction, "though without garments, not naked", is indicated. In the sense "without garments", since the very nature of clouds is watery, they have neither a garment nor any other kind of covering; that is, since in the clouds there are only waters and no other covering, these waters are described here as without garments. To say that they are not naked, though without garments, is a mutual contradiction. But although what is in the clouds is water itself, that water does not look like water to our eyes. It looks like a cloud, separate from water; that is, since the water is not seen, some covering must be covering it. But the water in the form of clouds has no covering. Yet the waters are not seen in their natural state. Since it appears that, because they are not visible to the eye, something hiding them must exist, it is said here that those waters are not naked. The main intent is that Agni pervades such waters in every way.

सीं— (sīṃ—) on this word Yāska says सीमिति परिग्रहार्थियो वा पदपूरणो वा (sīmiti parigrahārthiyo vā padapūraṇo vā) (Ni. 1-7): that is, the word सीं (sīṃ) is used in the sense of "taking all around" or for filling out the pāda. Since there is the explanation अथ परिग्रहार्थीयं सर्वमेव परिगृह्णाति सर्वत इति वा (atha parigrahārthīyaṃ sarvameva parigṛhṇāti sarvata iti vā), if it is in the sense of "taking all around", it means everything or in all places.

place of origin. Though the rivers are different, they all have one place of origin, the atmosphere. The waters that fall from the atmosphere as rain flow as many rivers; since the atmosphere is the source of the waters of many rivers, it is said here सयोनीः (sayonīḥ). वाणीः (vāṇīḥ)—आपो वा वहनात् (āpo vā vahanāt) (Ni. 6-2): flowing water, that is a river, is called वाणी (vāṇī). सप्त (sapta) means seven. Although the main and great rivers are indicated here by the number seven, the word सप्त (sapta) must be explained as many or principal rivers. The main intent is that such principal rivers bore the one Agni in their womb. Because the word एकं (ekaṃ) is used here, how did seven separate rivers bear the one Agni in their womb? Because Agni is one yet, through his greatness, that is, because he is of such a nature as to pervade everywhere at one time, he remains within the abundant waters of the many rivers: this is the main intent.

That is: in all those clouds Agni, in the form of lightning, spreads everywhere and helps the raining.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

सहसः सूनो—सहसस्पुत्र । (sahasaḥ sūno—sahasasputra |) When fire is produced between two araṇi sticks, great force is required to churn with the upper araṇi; therefore it is a very common practice in the Ṛgveda to call the fire produced by such application of force सहसः सूनुः (sahasaḥ sūnuḥ), "son of strength". "Agni sustained by all" means that all establish this Agni in their houses and sacrificial grounds and praise him. Such an Agni shines with his bright and swift rays. As soon as the sacrificer in the sacrifice describes Agni's qualities with praises and so on and makes him grow, streams of very sweet water fall on the earth as rain. That is: since Agni, who is worshipped or praised by all, is in the form of lightning in the region of clouds in the atmosphere, he appears very brilliant. When it is said that his rays move with great force, it is intended that lightning, shining very brilliantly, appears and moves in the atmosphere with great force. The main intent is that as soon as sacrificers and others praise such an Agni in the sacrifice, rain with thunder, thunderbolt and lightning falls in torrents in the atmosphere on the earth.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

(Agniḥ: Agni.) Pituḥ: of his father, the atmosphere. Ūdhaḥ: the watery region like an udder. Januṣā: by his very birth. Viveda: knows. Asya: contained in this udder. Dhārāḥ: the streams of water. Vi asṛjat: released and made to flow. Dhenāḥ vi: also manifested the speech of the middle region. Śivebhiḥ: with auspicious ones. Sakhibhiḥ: his friends, the winds. Divaḥ: of the atmosphere. Yahvībhiḥ: with the waters, like children. Guhā: in the cave (hiding). Carantaṃ: this Agni who is hidden within. (To obtain) Guhā cit: though in that same cave. Na babhūva: no one was able.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

Agni knows by his very birth the watery region, like an udder, of his father the atmosphere. He releases the streams of water contained in this udder and makes them flow. He also manifests the speech of the middle region. No one was able to obtain this Agni, hidden in the cave with the auspicious winds, his friends, and with the waters that are like children of the atmosphere, though he was in that same cave.

Printed English translation

At his birth he knew the udder of his parent, and let forth its torreents [sic], and its speech (of thunder); there was no one to detect him, lurking in the deep, with his auspicious associates, (the winds), and the many (waters) of the firemament [sic].

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

पितुः चित् ऊधः जनुषा विवेद—अंतरिक्षस्य मध्ये ऊधस्थानीयं जलप्रदेश मग्निः स्वयमेव जानाति । (pituḥ cit ūdhaḥ januṣā viveda—aṃtarikṣasya madhye ūdhasthānīyaṃ jalapradeśa magniḥ svayameva jānāti |) Here पितुः (pituḥ) means the atmosphere between Heaven and Earth, who are Agni's mother and father. The clouds massed in this atmosphere are the mother's ऊध (ūdha), that is, breast or udder; the water in the cloud is the milk in the breast. As a newborn child knows by himself the milk in his mother's breast, so Agni, in the form of lightning, has known by himself, without anyone's help, the cloud-waters in the atmosphere, which are like milk in the breast

अस्य धाराः वि अस्यजत् धेनाः वि (asya dhārāḥ vi asyajat dhenāḥ vi) [as supplied; अस्यजत् (asyajat) for असृजत् (asṛjat)]—further, this Agni in the form of lightning, appearing in the atmosphere, poured as rain the waters stored in the clouds, the breasts of the atmosphere. And he was manifested also in the form of the speech of the middle region. That is, from time to time shining lightning (Agni) appeared in the middle of the clouds and caused the rain to fall, and thunderbolt and thunder were also heard in the atmosphere: this is the intent.

शिवेभिः सखिभिः दिवः यह्वीभिः गुहाः चरंतं गुहा चित् न बभूव (śivebhiḥ sakhibhiḥ divaḥ yahvībhiḥ guhāḥ caraṃtaṃ guhā cit na babhūva)—since a strong wind arises when it rains, the wind is described as friend to Agni (lightning). Since the waters fall from the clouds in the atmosphere as rain, the waters are described also as the children of the atmosphere. गुहा चरंतं (guhā caraṃtaṃ) means that, as an object in a cave stays hidden without falling under the people's sight, so, though he is right there, he is seen by no one. The heavy rain with thunder, thunderbolt, lightning and a violently blowing wind is described here, and the greatness of Agni is explained: that all this is due to the power of Agni in the form of lightning, and that no one has the strength or capacity to know it.

Printed English translation

The great Agni grows in the unbounded, vast atmosphere. How? The waters, rich in food, make Agni grow. Thus grown, Agni, being in the atmosphere, the birthplace of water, lies asleep in the water, the cause of the rivers of flowing nature that are as sisters.

Printed English translation

The great Agni increases on the broad unbounded (firmament), for the waters supply abundant nutriment; and placid, he sleeps in the birth-place of the waters for the service of the sister streams.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

महान् अनिबाधे उर् ववर्ध— (mahān anibādhe ur vavardha—) this great Agni grows, or attains increase, in the vast atmosphere that has no obstruction of any kind. That is, in the vast atmosphere the brilliance of lightning shines with great splendour.

हि पूर्विः यशस्सि आपः अग्निं सं (वर्धयंति)— (hi pūrviḥ yaśassi āpaḥ agniṃ saṃ (vardhayaṃti)—) abundant waters, the cause of plants and trees and through them of food and other foods, make Agni grow; here plants and trees are born of water and grow; from plants and trees food and other foods are obtained. Therefore the word यशस्सि (yaśassi) [as supplied], "having food", is used as an epithet of आपः (āpaḥ), waters. It is said that because such waters exist in very great quantity in the clouds, Agni grows. Ordinarily, if there are only thin clouds, there is little likelihood of much rain; there is no lightning in such clouds either. But when blue clouds full of much water gather in one place, there is not only much rain but lightning, thunderbolt and thunder all together

p. 526

. It is described here that Agni grows in the abundant waters because, in the middle of the dark clouds, very brilliant lightning flashes from time to time and disappears.

पूर्विः-पुरुशब्दवु बहुनामगळल्लि पठितवागिरुवुदरिंद (नि. ३-१३) पूर्विः ऎंदरे (pūrviḥ-puruśabdavu bahunāmagaḷalli paṭhitavāgiruvudariṃda (ni. 3-13) pūrviḥ èṃdarè) [the supplied text: since the word पुरु (puru) is read among the names of the many (Ni. 3-13), पूर्विः (pūrviḥ) means many.]

यशसः—यशः शब्दवु अन्न नामगळल्लि पठितवागिदे (yaśasaḥ—yaśaḥ śabdavu anna nāmagaḷalli paṭhitavāgidè) (Ni. 3-9). This word and the word पूर्विः (pūrviḥ) are epithets of the word आपः (āpaḥ).

अग्निः ऋतस्य योन् स्वस्यणां जामीनां अपसि दमूनाः अशयत्—अय- मग्निः उदकस्य स्थानेऽन्तरिक्षे स्थितः स्वतः सरंतीनां भगिनीस्थानीयानां हेतुभूते अपसि दांतमनाः सन् शेते । (agniḥ ṛtasya yon svasyaṇāṃ jāmīnāṃ apasi damūnāḥ aśayat—aya- magniḥ udakasya sthāne 'ntarikṣe sthitaḥ svataḥ saraṃtīnāṃ bhaginīsthānīyānāṃ hetubhūte apasi dāṃtamanāḥ san śete |) This Agni, in the atmosphere, the place of the water, lies in a calm state, with no movement of any kind, in the waters that are as his sisters, moving (in the form of clouds); that is, Agni, who formerly appeared in the form of lightning in the rainy season amid the blue clouds, now, in the time without rain, remains within the waters amid the clouds, expressing no brilliance of any kind, not visible to anyone, silent. When there are only clouds without rain, there is no lightning. Yet, even though he does not appear to us in the form of lightning, the intent is that Agni remains hidden in the waters of the clouds.

ऋतस्य—ऋतशब्दवु नूरोदु उदकनामगळल्लि पठितवागिदे. (ṛtasya—ṛtaśabdavu nūròṃdu udakanāmagaḷalli paṭhitavāgidè.) And the two words ऋतस्य योनिः (ṛtasya yoniḥ) together are read in the sense "water" among the 101 names of water mentioned above (Ni. 2-24). Although the word ऋत (ṛta) has many meanings such as sacrifice, here it means water. In this Ṛk ऋतस्य योन् (ṛtasya yon) means the atmosphere, the original place of waters (the place where clouds gather).

जामिनां—जामिशब्दवु उदकनामगळल्लियू पठितवागिदे (jāmināṃ—jāmiśabdavu udakanāmagaḷalliyū paṭhitavāgidè) (Ni. 2-24). But here they explain the word जामिनां (jāmināṃ) as भगिनीस्थानीयानां (bhaginīsthānīyānāṃ), of those who stand in the place of sisters. Yāska in his Nirukta—

न जामये भगिन्यै । जामिरन्येऽस्यां जनयंति जामपत्यं जमशीर्वा स्याद्गतिकर्मणो निर्गमनप्राया भवति ॥ (na jāmaye bhaginyai | jāmiranye 'syāṃ janayaṃti jāmapatyaṃ jamaśīrvā syādgatikarmaṇo nirgamanaprāyā bhavati ||) (2-3-7 as printed)

That is, the word जामि (jāmi) means sister. Because in this woman others (the husband) beget sons, she is called जामि (jāmi). Or, since the word जामि (jāmi) is formed from the root जमति (jamati) of motion, because after marriage this woman leaves the house where she was born and goes to her husband's house, a sister is called जामि (jāmi): so the etymology is given. In this Ṛk either meaning, sister or water, may be given. How did the waters become Agni's sisters? Since the place of origin of both Agni and the waters is the atmosphere, the waters or rivers are described here as Agni's sisters.

Usriyāḥ: the waters. Ujjajāna: created.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

The Agni who is the creator of all the worlds, the embryo of the waters, the best of leaders, the great one, who is unassailable, who bears his great hosts in battle, who is visible to all, and who shines by his own light, that Agni created the waters for the sacrificer who gives oblations.

Printed English translation

The invincible Agni, the cherisher of the valiant in battle, the seen of all, shining of his own lustre, the generator (of the world), the embryo of the waters, the chief of leaders, the mighty, is he who has begotten the waters for (the benefit of) the offerer of the libation.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk Agni is described by some epithets and it is said that such an Agni created the waters for the sacrificer who offers oblations. That Agni created the waters means that Agni, in the form of lightning, being in the mass of clouds in the atmosphere, impels those clouds and causes rain to fall for the sacrificer who performs the sacrifice.

अक्रः—परेषामाक्रमिता परैरनाक्रमणीयो वा । (akraḥ—pareṣāmākramitā parairanākramaṇīyo vā |) Two kinds of meaning are given: one who assails others, or one who is not to be assailed by others. Agni assails everything and burns it; but the intent stated here is that no other thing can injure Agni.

समिथे महीनां बभ्रिः— संग्रामे महतीनां स्वसेनानां भर्ता । (samithe mahīnāṃ babhriḥ — saṃgrāme mahatīnāṃ svasenānāṃ bhartā |) The word समिथ् (samith) is read among the names of battle. Since the part of Agni in battles is not special, as Indra's is, the sense of saying that he is the leader, the chief, of his own hosts is not clear. Besides, Agni's flames are said to be his hosts.

भायुजीकः— (bhāyujīkaḥ—) [as supplied; the Saṃhitā and Pada have भाय्जीकः (bhāyjīkaḥ) and भाःऋजीकः (bhāḥṛjīkaḥ)] on this word Yāska has given the etymology भायुजीकः प्रसिद्धभाः । धूमकेतुः समिधा भायुजीकः इत्यपि निगमो भवति (bhāyujīkaḥ prasiddhabhāḥ | dhūmaketuḥ samidhā bhāyujīkaḥ ityapi nigamo bhavati) (Ni. 6-4). The meaning of the word is "famous light"; that is, he shines by his own light, with no help from other lights, and illuminates other things: this is the intent.

created. Devāsaś cit: the gods too. Paniṣṭhaṃ: the praiseworthy. Tavasaṃ: Agni, grown strong with power. Jātaṃ: as soon as born. Manasā: with praise. Saṃ jagmuḥ: approached. (And) Duvasyan: worshipped.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

The fortunate wood desired by all (the araṇi) created the beautiful, many-formed Agni, who is the embryo of the waters and the plants. The gods too approached, with praise, the praiseworthy Agni, grown strong with power, as soon as he was born, and worshipped him.

Printed English translation

The auspicious timber has generated the graceful and multiform embryo of the waters and the plants: the gods approached him with reverence, and worshipped the adorable and mighty (Agni) as soon as born.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

सुभगा वना दर्शदं विरूपं अपां ओषधीनां गर्भं जजान—सुभाग्या सर्वैर्वननीयारणिः दर्शनीयं नानाविधरूपं अपां ओषधीनां च गर्भस्थितमग्निं जजान । (subhagā vanā darśadaṃ virūpaṃ apāṃ oṣadhīnāṃ garbhaṃ jajāna—subhāgyā sarvairvananīyāraṇiḥ darśanīyaṃ nānāvidharūpaṃ apāṃ oṣadhīnāṃ ca garbhasthitamagniṃ jajāna |) In this sentence it is said that the araṇi produced Agni. The wood (the araṇi), venerable and desired by all, produced Agni of many forms, that is, having in sacrifice the many forms such as Āhavanīya, or existing in many forms in many houses, who exists as an embryo (hidden) in water and also in plants and trees, that is in wood: this is the intent. Here, if the word वन (vana) is explained as "a tree in the forest", the fire produced by trees in the forest rubbing against one another is called forest fire. Or, if the word वना (vanā) is explained as वनस्पति (vanaspati), that is the araṇi in the form of a piece of wood, then the fire the priests produce in the araṇi by churning with mantras and in the prescribed manner is called the sacrificial fire. Since the latter half of this Ṛk says that they approached Agni with praise and so on as soon as he was born, it is to be understood that the Agni in question here is the sacrificial fire produced by churning the *araṇi*s.

देवासः चित् पनिष्ठं तवसं जातं मनसा संजग्मुः दुवस्यन्—सर्वे देवा अपि स्तुत्यं वृद्धं जातमात्रमग्निं स्तुत्या उपागच्छन् पर्यचरन् । (devāsaḥ cit paniṣṭhaṃ tavasaṃ jātaṃ manasā saṃjagmuḥ duvasyan—sarve devā api stutyaṃ vṛddhaṃ jātamātramagniṃ stutyā upāgacchan paryacaran |) The gods too approached and attended Agni, praiseworthy to all, produced by churning with the application of force: this is the main intent.

p. 531

चित्—यास्करु चित् ऎंब शब्दक्के चिदित्येषोऽनेककर्मा (cit—yāskaru cit èṃba śabdakkè cidityeṣo 'nekakarmā) means that the word चित् (cit) is used in many kinds of meaning (Ni. 1-4); he says that it is used in the sense of respect, comparison and contempt, and gives examples.

दुवस्यन्—दुवस्यति शब्दवु परिचरणकर्मगळल्लि (duvasyan—duvasyati śabdavu paricaraṇakarmagaḷalli) (Ni. 3-13): दुवस्यन् (duvasyan) means they attended, served, ministered.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Apāre: in the unfathomable. Ūrve antaḥ: in the middle of the exceedingly vast sea. Amṛtaṃ: water. Duhānāḥ: milking. Bṛhantaḥ: of great form. Bhānava it: the suns. Śukrāḥ: radiant. Sacanta: they attend.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

In the middle of the unfathomable, exceedingly vast atmosphere the suns, who milk water and are of great form, attend, like radiant lightnings, Agni, who has grown strong as in a cave in their own abode, the atmosphere, and shines with his light.

Printed English translation

Mighty suns like brilliant lightnings, associate with the self-shining Agni, great in his own abode, as if in a (deep cavern, as they milk forth ambrosia into the boundless and vast ocean.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

अपारे ऊर्वे अंतः अमृतं दुहानाः बृहंतः भानव इत्— (apāre ūrve aṃtaḥ amṛtaṃ duhānāḥ bṛhaṃtaḥ bhānava it—) here it is explained: the suns, of great form, who pour water as rain in the middle of the unfathomable sea. Here the word ऊर्व (ūrva) means the sea or the submarine fire in the sea. The word अमृत (amṛta) means water (Ni. 2-24). It is not clear why the seer has used the plural भानवः (bhānavaḥ) in this sentence. It is not clear whether the twelve Ādityas are meant here by the word भानवः (bhānavaḥ), or whether, with the idea that the sun rising each day is different, the many suns rising on many days are meant. Perhaps for describing the immense brilliance of Agni by comparison, the illustration of many suns was stated. Besides, in this sentence अमृतं दुहानाः (amṛtaṃ duhānāḥ) is used as an epithet of the suns: those who pour water. Though the Sun does not himself pour rain, with his rays he draws up the waters of the sea and other reservoirs and that becomes transformed into the form of clouds; therefore the Sun can be said to be the indirect cause of rain.

शुक्राः विद्युतो न स्वे सदसि गुहेव वृद्धं भाऋजीकं अग्निं सचंत— (śukrāḥ vidyuto na sve sadasi guheva vṛddhaṃ bhāṛjīkaṃ agniṃ sacaṃta—) Here the sentence स्वे सदसि गुहेव वृद्धं भाऋजीकं (sve sadasi guheva vṛddhaṃ bhāṛjīkaṃ) means Agni, who, though in his own abode, the atmosphere, grows in the midst of the clouds (as if hidden in a cave) so as not to be visible to anyone, and who shines by his own light. It is described here that very brilliant lightnings attend the Agni who is in the form of lightning in the middle of the clouds. Since lightnings are seen from time to time in the middle of clouds, the seer's idea is that they surround and attend the Agni who is in the form of lightning. In this way, as very brilliant electric rays, that is lightnings, attend the Agni hidden in the cloud region so that no one sees him, the suns in the atmosphere, causes of rain, attend Agni: this idea is stated here.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Agni, I, the performer of the sacrifice, implore you for wealth by offering oblations. Desiring excellent intelligence, I also beg your friendship. Together with the gods, grant me, the praiser, protection in the form of cattle and the like. Protect us with restrained flames.

Printed English translation

I, the institutor of the rite, worship you with oblations: desirous of your favour, I implore your friendship : grant, along with the gods, protection to him who praises you; preserve us with your well-regulated rays.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Having so far described Agni's various deeds and qualities, the seer now in this Ṛk and the following Ṛks prays that Agni give him, the sacrificer, wealth, protection and the like.

सुमतिं— (sumatiṃ—) for the word सुमति (sumati) Yāska has given the etymology कल्याणीं मतिं (kalyāṇīṃ matiṃ), "an auspicious thought" (Ni. 2-11; 7-22; 11-11; 11-19; 12-39). But the word सुमति (sumati) is used not merely in the sense of divine, gracious intelligence but also in the sense of a human prayer or a person's excellent wish. For example—

तुभ्यं भरंति क्षितयो यविष्ठ बलिमग्ने अंतित ओत दूरात् । आ भंदिष्ठस्य सुमतिं चिकिद्धि बृहत्ते अग्ने महि शर्म भद्रं ॥ (tubhyaṃ bharaṃti kṣitayo yaviṣṭha balimagne aṃtita ota dūrāt | ā bhaṃdiṣṭhasya sumatiṃ cikiddi bṛhatte agne mahi śarma bhadraṃ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-1-10)

प्र वो महे महीवृधे भरध्वं प्रचेतसे प्र सुमतिं कृणुध्वं । विशः पूर्वीः प्र चरा चर्षणिप्राः (pra vo mahe mahīvṛdhe bharadhvaṃ pracetase pra sumatiṃ kṛṇudhvaṃ | viśaḥ pūrvīḥ pra carā carṣaṇiprāḥ) (Ma. [printed ಮ., for Ṛ.] Saṃ. 7-31-10)

In Ṛks such as these it is explained, "listen to the praiser's excellent praise" and "recite excellent praise addressed to Indra".

दम्येभिः अनीकैः—दमनीयैर्नियंतव्यैः । प्रयत्ननियंतव्यतयोच्छृं- खलतोक्ता । तेजोभिः । (damyebhiḥ anīkaiḥ—damanīyairniyaṃtavyaiḥ | prayatnaniyaṃtavyatayocchṛṃ- khalatoktā | tejobhiḥ |) [the supplied text breaks the word प्रयत्ननियंतव्यतयोच्छृं-खलतोक्ता (prayatnaniyaṃtavyatayocchṛṃ-khalatoktā) at the line end] By his excessive brilliance (power of burning) Agni can do both evil and good. Therefore the meaning is indicated by the words दम्येभिः अनीकैः (damyebhiḥ anīkaiḥ): let Agni, restraining his brilliance, make his flames useful in our case so that houses, cattle and the like do not fall victim to Agni's burning power, and in destroying our enemies and protecting us from evil forces.

Supraṇīte: you who have a gracious leadership. Agne: O Agni. Tava: you. Upakṣetāraḥ: approaching. Viśvāni: all. Dhanyā: the rites that are the cause of wealth in cattle and the like. Dadhānāḥ: doing. Tuṃjamānāḥ: offering oblations. We who are so. Surerasā: endowed with excellent vigour. Śravasā: with food. Adevān: the godless asuras. Pṛtanāyūn: and other enemies. Abhiṣyāma: may we overcome.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Agni, of gracious leadership, we who approach you, perform all the rites that are the cause of wealth in cattle and the like, and offer oblations, may we overcome, with food endowed with excellent vigour, the godless asuras and other enemies.

Printed English translation

Approching [sic] you, benevolent Agni, and performing all holy acts that are the cause of opulence, offering oblations with earnestness and in abundance, may we overcome the hostile hosts that are without gods.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

सुप्रणीते—शोभनप्रणयन । (supraṇīte—śobhanapraṇayana |) The prayer is made that Agni be our guide in sacrifices and other rites and in other undertakings.

उपक्षेतारः-उपगंतारः । अत्र क्षितिर्गत्यर्थे वर्तते । (upakṣetāraḥ-upagaṃtāraḥ | atra kṣitirgatyarthe vartate |) Since the meaning of motion is given here to the word क्षिति (kṣiti), the sense is: we who have come near you, O Agni.

धन्या—धन्यानि । पश्वादिधनप्राप्तिहेतुभूतानि कर्माणि । (dhanyā—dhanyāni | paśvādidhanaprāptihetubhūtāni karmāṇi |) Here धन्या (dhanyā) means the sacrifices and other rites performed to obtain wealth, such as cattle, which provide wealth.

तुंजमानाः — (tuṃjamānāḥ —) since the root तुंजति (tuṃjati) is read among the acts of giving (Ni. 3-19), तुंजमानाः (tuṃjamānāḥ) means offering oblations.

आदेवान् पृतनायून्—देवेभ्योऽन्यान् । राक्षसा विव गृह्यंते । यज्ञ (ādevān pṛtanāyūn—devebhyo 'nyān | rākṣasā viva gṛhyaṃte | yajña) [the supplied text writes राक्षसा विव गृह्यंते (rākṣasā viva gṛhyaṃte) and आदेवान् (ādevān) where the Saṃhitā has अदेवान् (adevān)]

You, Agni, are the commendable announcer of the gods, cognizant of all secred [sic] rites ; placid, you abide amongst mortals, and like a charioteer, you follow the gods, accomplishing (their wishes).

मंद्रः—मंद्रा ऎंब शब्दवु वाङ्नामगळल्लि पठितवागिदे (maṃdraḥ—maṃdrā èṃba śabdavu vāṅnāmagaḷalli paṭhitavāgidè) (Ni. 2-23); and there is the etymology मदना हर्षकारी (madanā harṣakārī) (Ni. 11-28). Here the sense "praiseworthy" is given.

दमूनाः— (damūnāḥ—) on the word दमूनाः (damūnāḥ) Yāska, giving the etymology, quotes this Ṛk—

—and says:

दमूना दममना वा, दानमना वा, दांतमना वा । अपि ना दम इति गृह नाम तन्मनाः स्यात् । मनो मनोतेः । (damūnā damamanā vā, dānamanā vā, dāṃtamanā vā | api nā dama iti gṛha nāma tanmanāḥ syāt | mano manoteḥ |)

दमूनाः (damūnāḥ) means one of a mind not cruel, or of a mind to give, or one who keeps his mind under control, or, since दम (dama) means a house, one whose mind is to be in houses; thus he has explained many kinds of meaning for the word दमूनाः (damūnāḥ).

Eternal, radiant Agni, accomplishing the sacrifices, is present in the houses of men who perform the Agnihotra and the like. Knowing all the praises and rites, with limbs sprinkled with ghee, Agni, possessing an expanded body, shines.

Printed English translation

The immortal being has sat down in the dwelling of mortals, accomplishing (their) sacrifices : Agni, who is cognizant of all sacred rites, shines with expanded bulk when fed with clarified butter.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

ದುರೋಣೆ—ದುರೋಣೆ ಎಂಬ ಶಬ್ದವು ಗೃಹನಾಮಗಳಲ್ಲಿ (duroṇe—duroṇe èṃba śabdavu gṛhanāmagaḷalli) (Ni. 3-13) is read; and since there is the etymology ಇತಿ ಗೃಹ ನಾಮ (iti gṛha nāma) (Ni. 4-4), this word means "in the house".

ಧೃತಪ್ರತೀಕಃ— ಧೃತೇನ ಸಂಧುಕ್ಷಿತಾವಯವಃ । (dhṛtapratīkaḥ— dhṛtena saṃdhukṣitāvayavaḥ |) He whose limbs are sprinkled with ghee.

In Ṛks such as these the word ಧೃತಪ್ರತೀಕ (dhṛtapratīka) is explained as ಧೃತೇನ ಪ್ರಜ್ವಲಿತಾಂಗಃ (dhṛtena prajvalitāṃgaḥ), that is, one whose bodily limbs are made brilliant by the ghee offering. It is natural that this word is used in the sense that Agni becomes specially kindled by the offering of ghee and the like into the fire many times.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

सरण्यन्—सर्वत्र सरणं गमनमिच्छन् । (saraṇyan—sarvatra saraṇaṃ gamanamicchan |) One who has movement in all places; that is, one who is in many forms in the many sacrifices performed by many sacrificers; and one who as messenger of the gods carries to the gods the oblations offered by the sacrificers; or, if thought of as Agni in the form of lightning, one who moves in various places in the atmosphere; or, if thought of as Agni in the form of the Sun in heaven, one who moves in the atmosphere from east to west: thus many meanings can be given to the word सरण (saraṇa) (motion).

अस्मे— अस्मे ऍंब शब्दक्के एळु विभक्त्यर्थगळन्नू (asme— asme èṃba śabdakkè eḷu vibhaktyarthagaḷannū) can be given, Yāska says, and he gives examples for all seven case-senses (Ni. 6-7). We have explained this matter earlier.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Agni, to you, the ancient, I recite these praises, both eternal and newly composed. Agni, who is of understanding, is established in every man. For that showerer of desires, Agni, these praises, endowed with greatness, are composed.

Printed English translation

I address to you, Agni, who are of old, these eternal as well as recent adorations: these solemn sacrifices are offerd [sic] to the showerer of benefits. who in every birth is established (amongst men), cognizant of all that exists.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

जनिम—कर्माणि स्तोत्राणि वा । (janima—karmāṇi stotrāṇi vā |) The commentator has explained it as rites or praises. Since Yāska has said कर्मसूदयेषु (karmasūdayeṣu) of the word जन्म (janma) or जनिम (janima) (Ni. 11-23)

[the sense of] "rising" can be given. Rising means that in the sacrifice Agni is born in the *araṇi*s or rises. Since such risings take place in many sacrifices, it is described here that Agni's rising or birth is manifold. That is, the risings of Agni are many in the many sacrifices held in the past and in the many sacrifices being held now.

इहाग्नि भूतस्तृषिभिर्लोके स्तुतिभिरीळितः । जातवेदाः स्तुतो मध्ये स्तुतो वैश्वानरो दिवि ॥ (ihāgni bhūtastṛṣibhirloke stutibhirīḷitaḥ | jātavedāḥ stuto madhyè stuto vaiśvānaro divi ||) (Bṛ. De. 1-67)

In this verse it is said that the seers call the fire on earth Agni, the fire in the middle world Jātavedas, and the one in the heavenly world Vaiśvānara; and continuing the same idea,

वैश्वानरं श्रितो ह्यग्निरग्निं वैश्वानरः श्रितः । अनयोर्जातवेदास्तु तथैते जातवेदसि ॥ (vaiśvānaraṃ śrito hyagniragniṃ vaiśvānaraḥ śritaḥ | anayorjātavedāstu tathaite jātavedasi ॥) (Bṛ. De. 1-97)

it is explained that Agni is contained in Vaiśvānara and Vaiśvānara in Agni, that Jātavedas is contained in both, and that these two are two parts of Jātavedas. Thus, having stated the places of Jātavedas in the first chapter, the nature and etymology are given in the second chapter.

भूतानि वेद यज्ञा तो जातवेदाथ कथ्यते । यच्चैष जातविद्योऽभूत् वित्तं जातोऽधिवेत्ति वा ॥ (bhūtāni veda yajñā to jātavedātha kathyate | yaccaiṣa jātavidyo 'bhūt vittaṃ jāto 'dhivetti vā ॥) (Bṛ. De. 2-30)

p. 544

विद्यते सर्वभूतैर्हि यद्वा जातः पुनः पुनः । तेन्नैष मध्यभागेंद्रो जातवेदा इति स्तुतः ॥ (vidyate sarvabhūtairhi yadvā jātaḥ punaḥ punaḥ | tennaiṣa madhyabhāgeṃdro jātavedā iti stutaḥ ॥) (Bṛ. De. 2-31)

The Bṛhaddevatā's etymology is that Agni is praised as Jātavedas like Indra of the middle world: because he knows everything as soon as he is born, or because knowledge was born in him, or because as soon as he is born he knows and obtains all wealth, or because he is known by all beings every time he is born again. In the same way in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa also—

यः संवत्सरं जातः स्यात्पाणो वा अग्निस्तमेतद्विभर्त्यथ ह वै रेतः सिक्तं प्राणोऽन्ववरोहति तद्विंदते तद्यज्जातं जातं विंदते तस्माज्जातवेदाः ॥ (yaḥ saṃvatsaraṃ jātaḥ syātpāṇo vā agnistametadvibhartyatha ha vai retaḥ siktaṃ prāṇoSnvavarohati tadviṃdate tadyajjātaṃ jātaṃ viṃdate tasmājjātavedāḥ ॥) (Śat. Brā. 9-5-16-8)

It is said that Agni in the form of the vital breath is called Jātavedas because with his power he pervades all beings that are born. The Upaniṣads describe this Jātavedas, worshipped in the sacrificial house, as Brahman, the soul of the universe.

विश्वरूपं हरिणं जातवेदसं परायणं ज्योतिरेकं तपंतं । (viśvarūpaṃ hariṇaṃ jātavedasaṃ parāyaṇaṃ jyotirekaṃ tapaṃtaṃ |) (Praśna Upaniṣad 1-8)

The Praśna Upaniṣad says that the Sun rises as one of all forms, with a thousand rays, all-knowing, the refuge of all the world, known by the wise, and the inner self of all beings; and—

अरण्योर्निहितो जातवेदा गर्भ इव सुभृतो गर्भिणीभिः । दिवेदिव ईड्यो जागृवद्भिर्हविष्मद्भिर्मनुष्येभिरग्निः ॥ (araṇyornihito jātavedā garbha iva subhṛto garbhiṇībhiḥ | divediva īḍyo jāgṛvadbhirhaviṣmadbhirmanuṣyebhiragniḥ ‖) (Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1-4-8)

The Kaṭha Upaniṣad describes thus: that Jātavedas who, placed between the *araṇi*s in the sacrifice, enjoys all oblations, whom the yogis meditate on, keeping in their hearts the Supreme Person as pregnant women with affection nourish and rear their embryos, and to whom, the venerable Agni, sacrificers offer oblations, that Jātavedas is the Supreme Brahman, the soul of the universe.

अरण्योर्निहितो जातवेदा गर्भ इव सुधितो गर्भिणीषु । दिवेदिव ईड्यो जागृवद्भिर्वहविष्मद्भिर्मनुष्येभिरग्निः ॥ (araṇyornihito jātavedā garbha iva sudhito garbhiṇīṣu | divediva īḍyo jāgṛvadbhivarhaviṣmadbhirmanuṣyebhiragniḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-29-2)

p. 545

[Running head, p. 545: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 16, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

—as described in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā, so it is described in the Kaṭha Upaniṣad also. Thus all the Śrutis praise him, saying that he is called Jātavedas because he is all-knowing, all-pervading, possessed of all wealth, and the most excellent.

विश्वामित्रेभिः—विश्वामित्रैः । पूजायां बहुवचनं । (viśvāmitrebhiḥ—viśvāmitraiḥ | pūjāyāṃ bahuvacanaṃ |) Here the word विश्वामित्र (viśvāmitra) is used in the plural, the commentator explains, to indicate the veneration due to the sage Viśvāmitra. Besides, the meaning "by Viśvāmitra and his progeny, relatives, followers and so on" is the fitting one.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Agni, make the earth, the deity named Iḷā in the form of a cow, who gives cattle and the like that help in many rites, favourable to us who are ever engaged in sacrifice; and O Agni, may your auspicious thought, that you grant sons, grandsons and so on to the praisers, be always unfailing (fruitful) for us.

Printed English translation

Grant, Agni, to the offerer of the oblation, the earth, the bestower of cattle, the means of many (pious rites), such that it may be perpetual : may there be to us sons and grandsons, born in our race, and may your good-will ever be productive of benefits to us.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

पुरुदंसं—पुरूणि बहूनि दंसानि कर्माणि यस्याः सा । (purudaṃsaṃ—purūṇi bahūni daṃsāni karmāṇi yasyāḥ sā |) The word दंस (daṃsa) is stated among the twenty-six names of works beginning with अप्पः दंसः (appaḥ daṃsaḥ) (Ni. 3-2). The meaning is one who has many works.

गोः सनिं—गवादिपशूर् संपादयित्रीं । (goḥ saniṃ—gavādipaśūr saṃpādayitrīṃ |) The word गो (go) has many meanings, such as earth, speech, cattle, ray. Since the words गोः सनिं (goḥ saniṃ) are specially qualifiers of the word इळा (iḷā), the meaning is described that the goddess Iḷā bestows all things such as cattle.

इळां—एतन्नामिकां गोरूपां देवतां । (iḷāṃ—etannāmikāṃ gorūpāṃ devatāṃ |) The word इळा (iḷā) is stated among the names of the earth (Ni. 2-5); and among the names of speech (Ni. 2-23), of food (Ni. 3-9) and of cow (Ni. 3-6). And the word इळा (iḷā) is formed from the root ईश (īśa).

अभिन इळा यूथस्य माता स्मन्नदीभिरुर्वशी वा गृणातु । उर्वशी वा बृहद्दिवा गृणानाभ्यूर्वाना प्रभृथस्यायोः । सिषक्तु न ऊर्जव्यस्य पुष्वेः ॥ (abhina iḷā yūthasya mātā smannadībhirurvaśī vā gṛṇātu | urvaśī vā bṛhaddivā gṛṇānābhyūrvānā prabhṛthasyāyoḥ | siṣaktu na ūrjavyasya puṣveḥ ॥) (Ma. [printed ಮ., for Ṛ.] Saṃ. 5-41-19, 20)

In these Ṛks the goddess Iḷā or Iḍā is explained as a deity of the middle region. Sāyaṇa has explained it as a deity named Iḷā who has taken the form of a cow.

p. 550

शश्वत्तमं हवमानाय साध—निरंतरं हवमानाय यजमानाय मह्यं (śaśvattamaṃ havamānāya sādha—niraṃtaraṃ havamānāya yajamānāya mahyaṃ) साधय । (sādhaya |) The prayer is made to Agni that there be the grace of the goddess Iḷā in cow form, full of abundant greatness, who fulfils the desired objects of the sacrificer who always satisfies Agni with oblations.

सूनुः—पुत्रः, तनयः पौत्रः । (sūnuḥ—putraḥ, tanayaḥ pautraḥ |) The words तनय (tanaya) and सूनु (sūnu) are read among the fifteen names of offspring beginning with तुक्, तोकं (tuk, tokaṃ) (Ni. 3-2).

एता विश्वा सवना तूतुमा कृषे स्वयं सूनो सहसो यानि दधिषे । वराय ते पात्रं धर्मणे तना यज्ञो मंत्रो ब्रह्योद्यतं वचः ॥ (etā viśvā savanā tūtumā kṛṣe svayaṃ sūno sahaso yāni dadhiṣe | varāya te pātraṃ dharmaṇe tanā yajño maṃtro brahodyataṃ vacaḥ ॥) (Ma. [printed so] Saṃ. 10-50-6)

In this Ṛk the word सूनो (sūno) is explained as "son", and Agni is called सहससूनो (sahasasūno), "son of strength". Sāyaṇa explains the word सूनु (sūnu) as son and the word तनय (tanaya) as grandson (a son's son).

सुमतिः—शोभना बुद्धिः । (sumatiḥ—śobhanā buddhiḥ |) The Nirukta authors explain the same sense, "an auspicious thought", in देवसुमतिं (devasumatiṃ) as देवानां कल्याणीं (devānāṃ kalyāṇīṃ), the auspicious thought of the gods, in वैश्वानरस्य सुमत् स्याम (vaiśvānarasya sumat syāma) as कल्याण्यां (kalyāṇyāṃ) मतौ (matau), and in वयं देवस्य धीमहि सुमतिं सत्यधर्मणः (vayaṃ devasya dhīmahi sumatiṃ satyadharmaṇaḥ) as कल्याणीं मतीं (kalyāṇīṃ matīṃ). Sāyaṇa prays that there may be that auspicious thought of Agni which brings the birth and prosperity of sons, grandsons and so on to sacrificers who have satisfied Agni with oblations.

Sūkta 2 (Maṇḍala 3)

The second sūkta of the Third Maṇḍala.

Pīṭhike (Introduction) to Sūkta 2

In this sūkta and in the next sūkta the sage Viśvāmitra has praised Vaiśvānara Agni. It is necessary to examine closely here who Vaiśvānara Agni is and what his nature is.

The glory of Vaiśvānara Agni

> इंद्रं मित्रं वरुणमग्निमाहुरथो दिव्यः स सुपर्णो गुरुत्मान् । एकं सद्विप्रा बहुधा वदंत्यग्निं यमं मातरिश्वानमाहुः ॥

> iṃdraṃ mitraṃ varuṇamagnimāhuratho divyaḥ sa suparṇo gurutmān | ekaṃ sadviprā bahudhā vadaṃtyagniṃ yamaṃ mātariśvānamāhuḥ ॥
> (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1–164–46, as printed "೪೮ ಸಂ.")

[Running head, p. 551: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 16, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

इममेवाग्निं महांतमात्मानमेकमात्मानं बहुधा मेधाविनो वदंति । अग्निः सर्वा देवताः इति ब्राह्मणमपि भवति (imamevāgniṃ mahāṃtamātmānamekamātmānaṃ bahudhā medhāvino vadaṃti | agniḥ sarvā devatāḥ iti brāhmaṇamapi bhavati) (Ni. 7-18). All worship this same great, universal-souled Agni, addressing him by different names such as Indra. And there are Śruti sentences also that for all the fire-portions that appear in other forms in different contexts, this Vaiśvānara Agni is the origin, and all the other forms are branches of this Vaiśvānara Agni.

वया इदग्ने अग्नयस्ते अन्ये त्वे विश्वे अमृता मादयंते । वैश्वानर नाभिरसि क्षितीनां स्तूणेव जना उपमिद्ययंथ ॥ (vayā idagne agnayaste anye tve viśve amṛtā mādayaṃte | vaiśvānara nābhirasi kṣitīnāṃ stūṇeva janā upamidyayaṃtha ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-59-1)

Vaiśvānara Agni is the cause of the existence and movement of the whole world, gods and men and all, and is the guide of all the doings of the world. Therefore the Śrutis that teach the performance of rites and the Śrutis that teach spiritual knowledge alike declare the necessity of the worship of Vaiśvānara Agni, saying that all beings desiring their own welfare and the welfare of the world must know the nature of this Vaiśvānara Agni, the soul of the universe, and worship him. The Saṃhitās such as the Ṛgveda say वैश्वानरस्य सुमतौ स्याम (vaiśvānarasya sumatau syāma) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-98-1); the Brāhmaṇas such as the Śatapatha say स यो ह्येतमेवमग्निं वैश्वानरं पुरुषविधं पुरुषेंतः प्रतिष्ठितं वेदाप पुनर्मृत्युं जयति सर्वमायुरेति । (sa yo hyetamevamagniṃ vaiśvānaraṃ puruṣavidhaṃ puruṣeṃtaḥ pratiṣṭhitaṃ vedāpa punarmṛtyuṃ jayati sarvamāyureti |)—all who know the nature of this Vaiśvānara Agni, hidden within the person and of the form of the person, conquer death and attain a full life (Śat. Brā. 10-6-1-11); and the Upaniṣads such as the Chāndogya say अथ य एतदेवं विद्वानग्नि होत्रं जुहोति तस्य सर्वेषु लोकेषु सर्वेषु भूतेषु सर्वेष्टात्मसु हुतं भवति । (atha ya etadevaṃ vidvānagni hotraṃ juhoti tasya sarveṣu lokeṣu sarveṣu bhūteṣu sarvèṣṭātmasu hutaṃ bhavati |)—thus, the man who, knowing the nature of Vaiśvānara Agni, performs the Agnihotra, makes the offering as though in all beings, in all worlds, and in all selves (Chā. Up. 5-24-2). Hence it is highly necessary to understand in this context what the nature of this deity is and what relation this deity has to the performance of rites and to the acquisition of spiritual knowledge. In the Ṛk Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-98-1, राजा हि कं भुवनानामभिश्रीः । (rājā hi kaṃ bhuvanānāmabhiśrīḥ |) Vaiśvānara is described as the venerable lord of all beings. But the Nirukta authors, with the question who that Vaiśvānara is, in explaining this very Ṛk, take many examples and conclude that Vaiśvānara is the terrestrial Agni. Their explanation is as follows—

वैश्वानरः कस्माद्विश्वान्नरान्नयति । विश्व एनं नरा नयंतीति वा । अपि वा विश्वासर एव स्यात् प्रत्यृतः सर्वाणि भूतानि तस्य वैश्वानरः ॥ (vaiśvānaraḥ kasmādviśvānnarānnayati | viśva enaṃ narā nayaṃtīti vā | api vā viśvāsara eva syāt pratyṛtaḥ sarvāṇi bhūtāni tasya vaiśvānaraḥ ‖) (Ni. 7-21)

That is: he is the guide and leader of all; or all lead him in the sacrifice as the chief deity; or because, pervading everywhere, he has entered all beings. Explaining the Ṛk वैश्वानरस्य सुमत् स्याम (vaiśvānarasya sumat syāma) thus, they state the nature of this deity: इतो जातः सर्वमिदमभिपश्यति वैश्वानरः संयतते सूर्येण राजा यः सर्वेषां भूतानामभिश्रयणीयस्तस्य वयं वैश्वानरस्य कल्याण्यां मत् स्यामेति । (ito jātaḥ sarvamidamabhipaśyati vaiśvānaraḥ saṃyatate sūryeṇa rājā yaḥ sarveṣāṃ bhūtānāmabhiśrayaṇīyastasya vayaṃ vaiśvānarasya kalyāṇyāṃ mat syāmeti |) Since he is lord of all and refuge of all, let us all be worthy of this Vaiśvānara's gracious glance. Having explained the sense of the Ṛk—that born as the terrestrial Agni he surveys the whole world and unites with the Sun—they raise the question तत्को वैश्वानरः । (tatko vaiśvānaraḥ |) "Who is this Vaiśvānara?" (Ni. 6-22), discuss the disagreement of the traditions, and at the end give their settled opinion. In their discussion they first state the defect in the views that Vaiśvānara is a deity of the atmosphere.

एषां लोकानां रोहेण सवनानां रोह आम्मातो रोहात् प्रत्या- रोहश्चिकीर्षितस्तामनुकृतिं होताग्निमारुते शस्त्रे वैश्वानरीयेण सूक्तेन प्रतिपद्येते ॥ (eṣāṃ lokānāṃ roheṇa savanānāṃ roha āmmāto rohāt pratyā- rohaścikīrṣitastāmanukṛtiṃ hotāgnimārute śastre vaiśvānarīyeṇa sūktena pratipadyete ‖)

सूर्यप्रसूतावग्नी तु दृष्टौ पार्थिवमध्यमा । एतेषामेव लोकानां त्रयाणामध्वरेऽध्वरे ॥ रोहात्पत्यवरोहेण चिकीर्षन्नग्निमारुतं । शस्त्रं वैश्वानरीयेण सूक्तेन प्रतिपद्यते ॥ (sūryaprasūtāvagnī tu dṛṣṭau pārthivamadhyamā | eteṣāmeva lokānāṃ trayāṇāmadhvare 'dhvare ‖ rohātpatyavaroheṇa cikīrṣannagnimārutaṃ | śastraṃ vaiśvānarīyeṇa sūktena pratipadyate ‖) (Bṛ. De. 1-101; 1-102)

There is a rule that the excess of the offerings must follow the order of ascent through earth, atmosphere and heaven. After the order of ascent the order of descent must be followed. Following this sequence, in this Vaiśvānarīya sūkta which the sacrificer recites addressing Agni and the Maruts, Vaiśvānara is praised first in the descending order. With this idea, having stated the prior view that this Vaiśvānara is अथासावादित्य इति पूर्वे यज्ञिकाः । (athāsāvāditya iti pūrve yajñikāḥ |), the Āditya, as the ancient sacrificers hold, they continue—

सोऽपि न स्तोत्रियमाद्रियताग्नेयो हि भवति । तत आगच्छति मध्यस्थाना देवता रुद्रं च मरुतश्च ततोऽग्निमिहस्थानमत्र वै स्तोत्रियं शंसति । (so 'pi na stotriyamādriyatāgneyo hi bhavati | tata āgacchati madhyasthānā devatā rudraṃ ca marutaśca tato 'gnimihasthānamatra vai stotriyaṃ śaṃsati |) Since this sūkta is mainly addressed to Agni, and afterwards, addressing Rudra and the Maruts, the sacrificer again praises the Agni belonging to the terrestrial world, in the terrestrial sacrificial hall in which he recites this sūkta, they refute the above view, saying that the Vaiśvānara Agni referred to here is a terrestrial deity and not one of the atmosphere. And supporting their view that this Vaiśvānara Agni is a terrestrial deity, they cite fitting Śruti sentences.

अथाप्याह—इतो जातो विश्वमिदं वि चष्टे वैश्वानरो यतते सूर्येण । (athāpyāha—ito jāto viśvamidaṃ vi caṣṭe vaiśvānaro yatate sūryeṇa |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-98-1)

न च पुनरात्मनात्मा संयततेऽन्येनैवान्यः संयतत इत इममादधात्यमु- तोऽमुष्य रश्मयः प्रादुर्भवंतीतोऽस्यार्चिषस्तयोर्भासोः संसंगं दृष्टैवमवक्ष्यत् । (na ca punarātmanātmā saṃyatate 'nyenaivānyaḥ saṃyatata ita imamādadhātyamu- to 'muṣya raśmayaḥ prādurbhavaṃtīto 'syārciṣastayorbhāsoḥ saṃsaṃgaṃ dṛṣṭaivamavakṣyat |)

The statement of the Saṃhitā text that Vaiśvānara extends himself and joins the Sun also supports this view. If Vaiśvānara were the Sun himself, it would be impossible for him to extend himself and join himself. It is natural to say that one thing extends and joins with another. After the sacrificer has kindled Agni on earth, its rays spread to the world above and appear there too. Seeing them join and become one with the rays of Āditya spread in the atmosphere, it is described as यतते सूर्येण (yatate sūryeṇa). Moreover—

अथ यान्येतान्यौत्तमिकानि सूक्तानि भागानि वा सावित्राणि ना सौर्याणि वा पौष्णानि वा वैष्णवानि वा वैश्यदेव्यानि वा तेषु वैश्वानरीयाः प्रवादा अभविष्यन्नादित्यकर्मणा चैनमस्तोष्यन्नित्युदेषीत्यस्तमेषीति विपरैषीति । (atha yānyetānyauttamikāni sūktāni bhāgāni vā sāvitrāṇi nā sauryāṇi vā pauṣṇāni vā vaiṣṇavāni vā vaiśyadevyāni vā teṣu vaiśvānarīyāḥ pravādā abhaviṣyannādityakarmaṇā cainamastoṣyannityudeṣītyastameṣīti viparaiṣīti |)

If Vaiśvānara were the Sun himself, then the nature and activity of atmospheric deities such as Savitṛ, Pūṣan, Viṣṇu and the Viśvedevas would have to be supplied and described in him, and descriptions such as "he rises, he sets, he revolves" would have to be present. But since only descriptions relating to Agni are here, it becomes firmly known that he is a synonym of the terrestrial Agni. On the basis of these and other grounds,

p. 554

they conclude: यस्तु सूक्तं भजते यस्मै हविर्निरूप्यतेऽयमेव सोऽग्निर्वैश्वानरः । (yastu sūktaṃ bhajate yasmai havirnirūpyate 'yameva so 'gnirvaiśvānaraḥ |) It can be said with certainty that the reciter of the sūkta and the offering of the oblation are both directed to this very Agni in his form as Vaiśvānara (Ni. 7-22 to 7-31). Even in his manifestation on earth he is the same, राजा हि कं भुवनानामभिश्रीः । (rājā hi kaṃ bhuvanānāmabhiśrīḥ |): the lord and the refuge of all beings. Therefore it is stated clearly in many places that gods, men and all others can attain welfare only through his worship. To know his terrestrial form through the performance of rites and to worship him is one way; the worship done with the knowledge, of the nature of spiritual insight, of his greatness as pervading the universe and dwelling within all the moving and unmoving things of the whole world is another. The Brāhmaṇas such as the Śatapatha and the Upaniṣads such as the Chāndogya explain the glory of the universal-souled Vaiśvānara Agni, showing the relation between the performance of rites and the worship of knowledge. The Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa narrates the story of the sages who went in search of an excellent teacher in order to learn his true nature (Śat. Brā. 10-6-1-1 to 11).

अपि ना विश्वानर एव स्यात् प्रत्यृतः सर्वाणि भूतानि तस्य वैश्वानरः । (api nā viśvānara eva syāt pratyṛtaḥ sarvāṇi bhūtāni tasya vaiśvānaraḥ |) (Ni. 8-21)

In keeping with this explanation of the Nirukta authors, that he pervades everywhere and is inherent in all beings, this story shows the nature of Vaiśvānara, the inner controller of all.—

अथ हैतेऽरुणे औपवेशौ समाजग्मुः सत्ययज्ञः पौलुषिर्महाशालो जाबालो बुडिल अश्वतराश्विरिंद्रद्युम्नो भाल्लवेयो जनः शार्कराक्ष्यस्ते ह समासत तेषां ह वैश्वानरे न समियाय ॥ १ ॥ (atha haite 'ruṇe aupaveśau samājagmuḥ satyayajñaḥ pauluṣirmahāśālo jābālo buḍila aśvatarāśviriṃdradyummo bhāllaveyo janaḥ śārkarākṣyaste ha samāsata teṣāṃ ha vaiśvānare na samiyāya ‖ 1 ‖)

Satyayajña Paulūṣi, Mahāśāla Jābāla, Buḍila Aśvatarāśvi, Indradyumna Bhāllaveya and Jana Śārkarākṣya assembled together in the house of Aruṇa Aupaveśi. Although they all met and discussed in order to know the nature of Vaiśvānara Agni, they reached no settled understanding, and differences of opinion and doubt arose among them.

ते होचुः । अश्वपतिर्वायं कैकेयः संप्रति वैश्वानरं वेद तं गच्छामेति ते हाश्वपतिं कैकेयमाजग्मुस्तेभ्यो ह पृथगावसथान्पृथगपचितीः पृथक् साहस्रान्सोमान्सोवाच ते ह प्रातरसंविदाना एव समित्पाणयः प्रतिचक्रमिर उपत्वायामेति ॥ २ ॥ (te hocuḥ | aśvapatirvāyaṃ kaikeyaḥ saṃprati vaiśvānaraṃ veda taṃ gacchāmeti te hāśvapatiṃ kaikeyamājagmustebhyo ha pṛthagāvasathānpṛthagapacitīḥ pṛthak sāhasrānsomānsovāca te ha prātarasaṃvidānā eva samitpāṇayaḥ praticakramira upatvāyāmeti ‖ 2 ‖)

Then they all went to Aśvapati Kaikeya, who knew the nature of Vaiśvānara Agni completely. He honoured these guests who had come to him by giving each separate lodgings, separate personal marks of respect and thousands of draughts of soma. Next morning they all, keeping their differences of opinion as they were, took fuel sticks in their hands and made the request: "We wish to become your pupils."

स होवाच । यन्नु भगवंतोऽनूचाना अनूचानपुत्राः किमिदमिति ते होचुर्वैश्वानरं ह भगवान्तंप्रति वेद तं नो ब्रूहीति स होवाच संप्रति खलु न्या अहं वैश्वानरं वेदाभ्याधत्त समिध उपेता स्थेति ॥ ३ ॥ (sa hovāca | yannu bhagavaṃto 'nūcānā anūcānaputrāḥ kimidamiti te hocurvaiśvānaraṃ ha bhagavāntaṃprati veda taṃ no brūhīti sa hovāca saṃprati khalu nyā ahaṃ vaiśvānaraṃ vedābhyādhatta samidha upetā stheti ‖ 3 ‖)

Then he, astonished, asked them: "You are all sons of men who have mastered all the śāstras, and you have studied yourselves; why have you come to me as pupils?" When they requested: "You know well the nature of Vaiśvānara Agni; teach us also its secret," he said: "I know that secret and will tell it to you also. Offer fuel sticks to the fire and say, 'From today we are your pupils.'"

स होवाचारुणमौपवेशिं । गौतम कं त्वं वैश्वानरं वेत्थेति पृथिवीमेव राजन्निति होवाचोमिति होवाचैष वै प्रतिष्ठा एतं रयिं वैश्वानर एतं हि वै त्वं प्रतिष्ठा वैश्वानरं वेत्थ तस्मात्त्वं प्रतिष्ठितः प्रज्ञया पशुभिरसि यो ना एतं प्रतिष्ठां वैश्वानरं वेदाप पुनर्मृत्युं जयति सर्वमायुरेति पादौ त्वा एतौ वैश्वानरस्य पादौ तेऽम्लास्यतां यदि ह नागमिष्य इति पादौ तेऽविदितावभविष्यतां यदि ह नागमिष्य इति वा ॥ ४ ॥ (sa hovācāruṇamaupaveśiṃ | gautama kaṃ tvaṃ vaiśvānaraṃ vettheti pṛthivīmeva rājanniti hovācomiti hovācaiṣa vai pratiṣṭhā etaṃ rayiṃ vaiśvānara etaṃ hi vai tvaṃ pratiṣṭhā vaiśvānaraṃ vettha tasmāttvaṃ pratiṣṭhitaḥ prajñayā paśubhirasi yo nā etaṃ pratiṣṭhāṃ vaiśvānaraṃ vedāpa punarmṛtyuṃ jayati sarvamāyureti pādau tvā etau vaiśvānarasya pādau te 'mlāsyatāṃ yadi ha nāgamiṣya iti pādau te 'viditāvabhaviṣyatāṃ yadi ha nāgamiṣya iti vā ‖ 4 ‖)

Then, addressing Aruṇa Aupaveśi: "Gautama, whom do you know as Vaiśvānara?" When asked, he said, "The earth is Vaiśvānara." The king then said: "Yes, that is the all-supporting Vaiśvānara. Because you know this secret, you stand firmly established with cattle, sons and the rest. One who knows this conquers death and obtains a full life. But truly these are only the feet of Vaiśvānara. If you had not come here (to learn the full nature of Vaiśvānara), your feet would have become slack and wasted away, or would never have come within your knowledge."

Then, addressing Satyayajña Paulūṣi: "O Prācīnayogya, whom do you know as Vaiśvānara?" When asked, he said, "Water only." Approving this too, the king said: "That is the wealth of Vaiśvānara. Because you know the nature of that wealth, you are rich and flourishing. One who knows it conquers death and certainly obtains a full life. But this is only the inner treasury (the bladder) of Vaiśvānara. If you had not come here, your treasury also would have become useless, or would never have come within your knowledge."

Then, addressing Mahāśāla Jābāla: "O Aupamanyava, whom do you know as Vaiśvānara?" He answered, "Space." Accepting that also, the king said that it is Vaiśvānara the abundant (the full), and that "because you know this, you have abundance of cattle, sons and the rest. One who knows this conquers death and obtains a full life. But this is only the main trunk of Vaiśvānara. Then, when Indradyumna Bhāllaveya was asked whom he knew as Vaiśvānara, he said that the Āditya (the Sun) is Vaiśvānara. Approving this also, the king said: "Truly, it is the radiance of soma that is Vaiśvānara. Because you know this, soma-juice and its cooking are never wanting in your house. One who knows this conquers death and obtains a full life. But this is only the eye of Vaiśvānara. Then, when Jana Śārkarākṣya was asked, "O Sāyavasa, whom do you know as Vaiśvānara?", he said, "The sky (heaven)," [the Kannada commentary renders his answer as "antarikṣa" (atmosphere)]. Approving, the king said that the sky is the most excellent part of Vaiśvānara: "Because you know this, you are pre-eminent among all

Finally, addressing them all together, he said: "Each of you has grasped separate parts of Vaiśvānara; that is why you eat separate foods. I shall explain to you these well-known deities so that for you they are no longer limited to a mere span (Measure of a span)."

In the end, pointing to the head he said that it is the most excellent part of Vaiśvānara; pointing to the eyes, that they are the soma-radiance, a part of Vaiśvānara; pointing to the nose, that it is the diversity of Vaiśvānara's paths; pointing to space, that it is the abundant Vaiśvānara; pointing to the principal water, that it is Vaiśvānara's wealth; and showing the chin, that it is Vaiśvānara's support. He explained that this Vaiśvānara Agni is none other than the foremost of men; that one who knows this Vaiśvānara Agni, who is of the form of a person and is established within the person, conquers death and attains a full life; and that no harm ever comes to one who always praises him.

Thus the Chāndogya and other Upaniṣads also describe the manner of explaining the nature of Vaiśvānara Agni, showing the relation between the performance of rites and the acquisition of spiritual knowledge. The Chāndogya Upaniṣad (Chā. Up. 5-11 to 5-18) also narrates the story of Vaiśvānara Agni exactly as told in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, though there are small differences here and there in the names and in the details. Even so, Aśvapati Kaikeya, understanding the opinion of all the sages who had come to him for instruction, approved them all, and at the end explained, as in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, that they are all different parts of Vaiśvānara Agni and that the harmony of all those parts is united in the complete Vaiśvānara, thus describing the all-sided nature of Vaiśvānara.

The brightly shining atmosphere is the head of this universal-souled Vaiśvānara; this Āditya, of all forms, is his eye; the wind, of diverse paths, is his breath; the wide-spread quarter is his body; the wealth of water is his inner treasury; the all-supporting earth is his feet; the sacrificial altar is his breast; the sacred grass is his hair; the Gārhapatya fire is his heart; the Anvāhāryapacana fire is his mind; the Āhavanīya fire is his mouth.

स य इदमविद्वानग्नि होत्रं जुहोति यथांगारानपोह्य भस्मनि जुहुयात्तादृक्तत्सात् । (sa ya idamavidvānagni hotraṃ juhoti yathāṃgārānapohya bhasmani juhuyāttādṛktatsāt |) (Chā. Up. 5-24-1)

It shows the necessity of knowledge: one who performs the Agnihotra without knowing the nature of this Vaiśvānara Agni is like one who, having removed the live coals, pours the offering into ashes.

अथ य एतदेवं विद्वानग्निहोत्रं जुहोति तस्य सर्वेषु लोकेषु सर्वेषु भूतेषु सर्वेष्वात्मसु हुतं भवति । (atha ya etadevaṃ vidvānagnihotraṃ juhoti tasya sarveṣu lokeṣu sarveṣu bhūteṣu sarvèṣvātmasu hutaṃ bhavati |) (printed ಛಾ. ಅ. 5-24-2, apparently a misprint for Chā. Up.)

One who performs the Agnihotra knowing the greatness of this universal-souled Vaiśvānara Agni makes the offering, as it were, in all worlds, in all beings and in all selves. Thus the all-pervading nature of Vaiśvānara Agni is shown.

अपि वा विश्वासनर एव स्यात् प्रत्यृतः सर्वाणि भूतानि तस्य वैश्वानरः । (api vā viśvāsanara eva syāt pratyṛtaḥ sarvāṇi bhūtāni tasya vaiśvānaraḥ |) (printed ನಿ. 7-21, i.e. the Nirukta as quoted above)

The explanation of the Nirukta authors quoted above is itself based on all these Śruti sentences. Following this explanation, Śaṅkarācārya also says:

विश्वान्नरान्नयति पुण्यपापानुरूपां गतिं सर्वात्मैष ईश्वरो वैश्वानरो विश्वो नर एव वा सर्वात्मत्वात् । विश्वैर्वा नरैः प्रत्यगात्मतया प्रविभज्य नीयत इति वैश्वानरस्तमेवमुपास्ते । .... वैश्वानरवित्सर्वात्मा सन्नन्नमत्ति । (viśvānnarānnayati puṇyapāpānurūpāṃ gatiṃ sarvātmaiṣa īśvaro vaiśvānaro viśvo nara eva vā sarvātmatvāt | viśvairvā naraiḥ pratyagātmatayā pravibhajya nīyata iti vaiśvānarastamevamupāste | .... vaiśvānaravitsarvātmā sannannamatti |) (Chāndogya Upaniṣad Bhāṣya 5-18-1; the dotted gaps within the passage are as printed)

Thus, exactly in keeping with the explanation of the Nirukta authors, he has explained the nature of the universal-souled Vaiśvānara Agni.

Anuvāda (Kannada).

This sūkta beginning "Vaiśvānarāya" is the second sūkta in the first anuvāka. It has fifteen ṛks. The Anukramaṇikā says, as quoted in the bhāṣya above, that it is a Vaiśvānarīya sūkta in the Jagatī metre. The seer of this sūkta is Viśvāmitra; the deity is Agni named Vaiśvānara; the metre is Jagatī. On the third day of the sacrifices called Pṛṣṭhya and Abhiplava, when the Agnimāruta śastra mantras are recited, this sūkta beginning "Vaiśvānarāya dhiṣaṇām" is to be used as the nivid sūkta (for the recitation of the nivid mantras); this is explained in the section called "Tṛtīyasya" of the Āśvalāyana Śrautasūtra by the sūtra beginning "Vaiśvānarā dhiṣaṇām dhārāvarā marutaḥ" (Ā. 7-7).

(Gist: to Vaiśvānara Agni, augmenter of water or of the sacrifice, we offer praise as pure as ghee; priests and men prepare the twofold invoker with their rites as a carpenter fashions a chariot. Vaiśvānara is explained from Nirukta 7-21.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Ṛtāvṛdhe: to the augmenter of the sacrifice. Vaiśvānarāya: to him who has the form of Vaiśvānara. Agnaye: addressed to Agni. Pūtaṃ: pure. Ghṛtaṃ na: like ghee. Dhiṣaṇāṃ: praise. Janāmasi: let us fashion. Dvitā: him who is joined with the Gārhapatya and Āhavanīya forms. Hotāraṃ: the invoker of the gods, Agni. Manuṣaḥ: the men who are sacrificers. Vāghataḥ ca: and the priests. Dhiyā: by their rite. Kuliśaḥ: the carpenter. Rathaṃ na: as one fashions a chariot. Samṛṇvati: they fashion.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

Let us fashion praise, pure like ghee, addressed to Agni, the augmenter of the sacrifice, who has the form of Vaiśvānara. The men who are sacrificers and the priests, by their rite, fashion and perfect Agni, who is joined with the Gārhapatya and Āhavanīya forms and is the invoker of the gods, as a carpenter fashions a chariot.

worshipper incite by their (pious) rites the invoker of the gods to his two-fold function, as a wheelwright fabricates a car.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

The application (viniyoga) states that this sūkta is used for the recitation of the nivid mantras. A careful explanation is necessary of what nivid mantras are and what their nature is. The name nivid mantra is well known for mantras that address a deity, or a group of deities, describe their extraordinary qualities and invoke them. Saying this very thing, the Bṛhaddevatā states:

कर्मैव तावत्सावित्रां निविदि स्तौति कर्मणा । युद्धेनुः सप्त्यनड्वाहौ वोळ्हा दोग्धाशुरेव ना ॥ (karmaiva tāvatsāvitrāṃ nividi stauti karmaṇā | yuddhenuḥ saptyanaḍvāhau voḷhā dogdhāśureva nā ‖) (Bṛ. De. 3-50)

By the word dogdhi (milks) a milch cow is meant, by āśu (swift) a swift one, and by voḍhā (bearer of a burden) an ox; as the distinction of each is understood from its respective epithet, so through the nivid mantras the individual qualities of each deity can be understood from the description of its respective deeds. For example, in this Ṛk the nivid mantra addressed to the deity Savitṛ shows his distinction by describing his extraordinary deed. The glory of the nivid mantras, and the relation of cause and effect between the creation of the world and these great mantras, is read in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa in this way—

अभि त्वा देव सवितरीशानं वार्याणां । सदाववन्नागमीमहे । (abhi tvā deva savitarīśānaṃ vāryāṇāṃ | sadāvavannāgamīmahe |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-24-3)

प्रजापतिर्वा इदमेक एवाग्र आस सोऽकामयत प्रजायेय भूयन्ताशिमिति स तपोऽतप्यत स वाचमयच्छत्स संवत्सरस्य परस्ताद्वाहरद्वादशकृत्वो द्वादशपदा ना एषा निविदेतां वाव तां निविदं व्याहरत्तां सर्वाणि भूतान्यन्वसृज्यंत । (prajāpatirvā idameka evāgra āsa so 'kāmayata prajāyeya bhūyantāśimiti sa tapo 'tapyata sa vācamayacchatsa saṃvatsarasya parastādvāharadvādaśakṛtvo dvādaśapadā nā eṣā nividetāṃ vāva tāṃ nividaṃ vyāharattāṃ sarvāṇi bhūtānyanvasṛjyaṃta |) (Ai. Brā. 10-1, printed ఇ. బ్రా.)

In the beginning Prajāpati was alone; he desired to make creatures and to become many, resorted to silence for a year and practised austerity. Afterwards he recited twelve times the nivid mantras, which contain twelve great phrases, and then all the creatures of the world were created

p. 563

[Running head, p. 563: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 17, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

(in this way the Brāhmaṇa shows the power of these mantras), and then it explains the special character of this mantra at the times of rites and the order of its use as follows—

The nivid mantras are in the form of embryos for the uktha hymns. That is, at the morning pressing they are recited before the ukthas; therefore the embryos too begin facing away. At the midday pressing these mantras are recited in the middle; therefore the embryos are held in the middle. At the third pressing the nivid mantras are recited in the later parts, and so the child in the womb is born head downwards. One who knows these principles is endowed with progeny and cattle. The nivid mantras, being in the form of ornaments of the ukthas, increase their beauty and brilliance. The mantras to be recited at the morning pressing are like the ornaments of the upper part, those at the midday time like the ornaments of the middle region, and the mantras of the third pressing like the ornaments of the lower part; they give adornment. One who knows this adorns the sacrifice and shines himself. And further,

Brā. 11-11, printed ಇ. ಬ್ರಾ.)

All the nivid deities belong to the Sun. The mantras of the morning, midday and third pressings follow the course of the Sun from rising to setting. The gods gathered the sacrifice together by means of measures consisting of pādas (quarter-verses); that is why the nivid mantras are in the form of sentences made of pādas. As a result of the gods collecting all the portions of the sacrifice together, the horse came into being; that is why there is a rule that a horse is to be given to the priest who recites these mantras. In the nivid mantras one must not pass over any pada and go ahead; if any pada is left unrecited it is as though a hole were made in the sacrifice, and it brings harm to the sacrificer. Nor should two sentences in these mantras be joined together, nor the earlier joined to the later or the later to the earlier in recitation. If that is done, the rite itself falls into uncertainty and the sacrificer too becomes confused. If two sentences are joined, contraction arises in the rite itself, and the sacrificer's life may be contracted so that he may die. Therefore one must not mix sentences and cause contraction in the recitation of the mantras. Only the two sacred and divine mantras "prā'idaṃ brahma" and "prā'idaṃ kṣatram" may be mixed; hence the brahma-radiance and the kṣatra-radiance become mixed. The nivid mantras must be contained within three or four verses and must not be exceeded; it is through the nivid that the recitation of the hymn is extended.

Brā. 11-11, printed ೫. ೨೨.)

At the third pressing the nivid is to be inserted leaving out one ṛk. If it is inserted leaving out two ṛks, powerlessness arises and barrenness follows; therefore it should be inserted leaving out one only, and then the rite is complete. It must not be inserted leaving out two, for that would destroy the power of generation; the power of conception would go and people would become barren. A sūkta which is fit for a nivid must not be recited without inserting the nivid mantras. Once it has been recited, it is no longer fit for the insertion. If such a lapse occurs, another sūkta with the same deity and the same metre is to be chosen and the nivid mantras inserted in it. At such a time:

मा प्र ग्राम पथो वयं मा यज्ञादिंद्र सोमिनः । मांतः स्थुनोर्न आरातयः ॥ (mā pra grāma patho vayaṃ mā yajñādiṃdra sominaḥ | māṃtaḥ sthunorna ārātayaḥ ‖) (printed ಮ. ಸ೦ ೧೦-೫೭-೧; i.e. Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-57-1)

First one prays that we may not go astray from the path, that we may not be cast out of the sacrificial rite, and that evil powers may not overcome us; then the sūkta with the nivid mantras is to be recited. Then the rite proceeds without any confusion and without hindrance, and the evil powers are destroyed. "The thread of the fruit of the sacrifice that is stretched out among the gods, may that same thread be spread among us the sacrificers" (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-57-2): so the sacrificer recites. Progeny is that thread; for the sacrificer this thread in the form of descendants is obtained in unbroken sequence.

तद्यदेतां पुरस्तात् सूक्तस्य निविदं दधाति प्रजात्यै प्रजायते प्रजया पशुभिर्य एवं वेद ॥ (tadyadetāṃ purastāt sūktasya nividaṃ dadhāti prajātyai prajāyate prajayā paśubhirya evaṃ veda ‖) (printed ಐ ಬ್ರಾ. 10-1)

For this reason the hotṛ, by reciting the nivid mantra at the beginning of the sūkta, gains offspring; sacrificers with this understanding obtain good offspring and all other wealth.

p. 566

[Running head, p. 566: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 2.]

This is stated elsewhere too. From many places in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā it is known that it is customary, with the faith that the recitation of mantras gives the most excellent fruit, to praise, when invoking the respective deities, the nature of each deity, its power, its great deeds and so on, and to recite accordingly. For example—

तान्नूर्वया निविदा हूमहे वयं भगं मित्रमदितिं दक्षमस्त्रिधं । (tānnūrvayā nividā hūmahe vayaṃ bhagaṃ mitramaditiṃ dakṣamastridhaṃ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-89-3)

जुषेथां यज्ञं बोधतं हवस्य मे सत्तो होता निविदः पूर्व्या अनु । (juṣethāṃ yajñaṃ bodhataṃ havasya me satto hotā nividaḥ pūrvyā anu |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-36-6)

किमु ष्ट्विदस्मै निविदो भनंतेंद्रस्यावद्यं दिधिषंत आपः । (kimu ṣṭvidasmai nivido bhanaṃteṃdrasyāvadyaṃ didhiṣaṃta āpaḥ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-18-7)

वि यद्वाचं कीस्तासो भरंते शंसंति केचिन्नि विदो मनानाः । (vi yadvācaṃ kīstāso bharaṃte śaṃsaṃti ke cinni vido manānāḥ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-67-10)

In such contexts the glory of the nivid mantras is praised. In the Ṛk Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-176-6 the nivid mantra addressed to Indra is indicated by the words तामनु त्वा निविदं जोहवीमि (tāmanu tvā nividaṃ johavīmi). There is also some difference of opinion in determining which sūkta contains the nivid mantras addressed to Indra. For example—

जनिष्ठा उग्रः सहसे तुरायेति निविद्धानमैकाहिकं । (janiṣṭhā ugraḥ sahase turāyeti nividdhānamaikāhikaṃ |) (Ai. Ā. 1-2-2, as printed)

The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (the Kannada text says Brāhmaṇa, while the reference it cites is printed ಐ. ಆ.) says that the sūkta Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-73, beginning with the Ṛk quoted just above, contains nivid mantras. But in the Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka (1-3) it is said that the sūkta Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-19, beginning with the Ṛk महा इंद्रो नृवधा (mahā iṃdro nṛvadhā), contains these mantras. In the Ṛk above the seer of the sūkta declares his resolve: "I shall praise Indra with nivid mantras that praise Indra's nature, valour and distinction."

ऋतावृधे वैश्वानराय अग्नये पूतं धृतं न धिषणां जनामसि—उदकस्य यज्ञस्य वा वर्धयित्रे वैश्वानराय अग्नये पूतं धृतमिव स्तुतिं जनयामः । (ṛtāvṛdhe vaiśvānarāya agnaye pūtaṃ dhṛtaṃ na dhiṣaṇāṃ janāmasi—udakasya yajñasya vā vardhayitre vaiśvānarāya agnaye pūtaṃ dhṛtamiva stutiṃ janayāmaḥ |)

We shall fashion praise for the Agni named Vaiśvānara, the augmenter of water or of the sacrifice, as pure ghee, that is, praise that will cause delight in the way pure ghee causes delight.

p. 567

[Running head, p. 567: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 17, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

ऋतावृधे (ṛtāvṛdhe)—Since the word ṛta has the meanings water or sacrifice, two kinds of meaning can be given here. Agni, being in the form of lightning in the midst of the clouds, impels the clouds and makes the rain fall, so Agni is the augmenter of water; or if ṛta is taken to mean sacrifice, then, since in the sacrifice Agni plays the chief part and carries the oblations and the rest to the gods, it is natural to call Agni the augmenter of the sacrifice. Therefore both meanings explained by the bhāṣyakāra for the word ṛtāvṛdhe can be given here.

वैश्वानराय (vaiśvānarāya)—We have discussed its meaning at length in the Pīṭhike of this sūkta. Yet it is necessary to state briefly the three meanings that Yāska gives in the derivation of the form of this word.

वैश्वानरः कस्माद्विश्वान्नरान्नयति विश्व एनं नरा नयंतीति वा । अपि ना विश्वानर एव स्यात् प्रत्यृतः सर्वाणि भूतानि तस्य वैश्वानरः ॥ (vaiśvānaraḥ kasmādviśvānnarānnayati viśva enaṃ narā nayaṃtīti vā | api nā viśvānara eva syāt pratyṛtaḥ sarvāṇi bhūtāni tasya vaiśvānaraḥ ॥) (Ni. 7-21)

That is: this Agni is called Vaiśvānara because he makes all people leaders on the good path, that is, because he is the guide of all people; or because all people carry Agni to their own houses; or because this Agni is present within all people in the form of the digestive fire.

In this sentence पूतं धृतमिव स्तुतिं जनयामः (pūtaṃ dhṛtamiva stutiṃ janayāmaḥ) means: as pure ghee gives agreeable pleasure to those who eat it, so let us compose praise that gives pleasure to Agni; this is the seer's expression of aspiration.

द्विता होतारं मनुषः वाघत च धिया कुलिशः रथं न समृण्वति—द्विधा गार्हपत्याहवनीयरूपाभ्यां देवानामाह्वातारमग्निं मनुष्याः ऋत्विजश्च कर्मणा वास्यादिः रथमिव संस्कुर्वंति । (dvitā hotāraṃ manuṣaḥ vāghata ca dhiyā kuliśaḥ rathaṃ na samṛṇvati—dvidhā gārhapatyāhavanīyarūpābhyāṃ devānāmāhvātāramagniṃ manuṣyāḥ ṛtvijaśca karmaṇā vāsyādiḥ rathamiva saṃskurvaṃti |) Its sense: men and priests fashion, by their rite, Agni, the invoker of the gods, who has the twofold form of the Gārhapatya and the Āhavanīya, as a carpenter perfectly builds a chariot. The two forms of Agni here are the fires called Gārhapatya and Āhavanīya, established in the sacrifice in two separate hearths for separate purposes and consecrated by separate series of rites. Or the word Gārhapatya may be taken in both senses: the household fire established in the house for cooking and the like, and the sacrificial fire consecrated by mantras in the sacrifice. But since this sentence says धिया समृण्वति (dhiyā samṛṇvati)

"they fashion by the rite", that is, by the many kinds of rites performed in the sacrifice with mantras, dvitā must here mean the sacrificial fires, the Gārhapatya and the Āhavanīya. Although the word manuṣa generally means men, since it is said here to be men taking part in the rite that consecrates the fire, it must be understood as the men who are sacrificers (those who perform the sacrifice). The word वाघतः (vāghataḥ) is read among the names of priests (Ni. 3-19, printed ३.). Its meaning is explained as यज्ञस्यानुष्ठातारः मेधाविनो ना (yajñasyānuṣṭhātāraḥ medhāvino nā), so it means those who take part in the sacrifice and carry it out, or the intelligent (Ni. 11-16, printed ३.). The word kuliśa is read among the names of the thunderbolt (Ni. 3-11, printed ३.), and there is also the explanation कुलित इति वज्रनाम कूलशातनो भवति (kulita iti vajranāma kūlaśātano bhavati) (Ni. 6-17, printed ३.). That is, although it means the thunderbolt weapon or a sharp weapon used for cutting trees and the like, the bhāṣyakāra, to make sense in this sentence, says that kuliśa means a carpenter who uses a sharp tool. The meaning is: as a carpenter, with the skill of his intellect, using sharp tools, builds a chariot so that it is very fine, in the same way the sacrificers and priests together consecrate Agni, established by the many kinds of rites necessary in the sacrifice and by the recitation of mantras, so that he becomes fit for the sacrifice, that is, fit to carry the oblation to the gods in the sacrifice.

Ratham—for the word ratha Yāska says in his Nirukta:

रथो रहंतेर्गतिकर्मणः । स्थिरतेर्वा स्याद्विपरीतस्य । रममानोऽस्मिन्तिष्ठतीति वा रपतेर्वा रसतेर्वा (ratho rahaṃtergatikarmaṇaḥ | sthiratervā syādviparītasya | ramamānoSsmintiṣṭhatīti vā rapatervā rasatervā) (Ni. 9-11, printed ३.)

That is, it may be derived from the root रंह् (raṃh), which denotes motion, or from the root स्थिरति (sthirati) (as supplied), meaning "be steady". Because this goes about continually (moves about), it is called ratha. Or the warrior seated in it stays steady: just as the body shakes when one sits on a horse or other vehicle, one can sit steadily without shaking in a chariot, so it is called ratha. Or because one sits in this chariot and enjoys oneself, it is called ratha; thus the parts of the meaning are explained.

Canohitaḥ: establishing food (among the sacrificers). Dūḷabhaḥ: unassailable. Vibhāvasuḥ: having radiance as wealth. Viśāṃ: to the people. Atithiḥ: venerable like a guest. (He is.)

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

By his very birth Agni lit up both heaven and earth. He became the praiseworthy son of his parents, heaven and earth. Agni, who bears the oblation to the gods, is free from old age, establishes food among the sacrificers, is unassailable, has radiance as his wealth, and is venerable to the people like a guest.

Printed English translation

By his birth he lighted up both heaven and earth; he was the praiseworthy son of his parents; the undecaying Agni, the bearer of oblations, the giver of food, the guest of men, the affluent in radiance.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

दूळभः (dūḷabhaḥ)—हिंसितुमशक्यः (hiṃsitumaśakyaḥ), one who cannot be harmed. Agni is able to burn everything with his scorching power, but no one is able to harm him.

Atithi: Yāska has given two or three meanings for this word.

अतिथिरभ्यतितो गृहान् भवति । अभ्येति तिथिषु परकुलानीति वा परगृहाणीति वा । आयमपीतरोऽतिथिरेतस्मादेव ॥ (atithirabhyatito gṛhān bhavati | abhyeti tithiṣu parakulānīti vā paragṛhāṇīti vā | āyamapītaro 'tithiretasmādeva ‖) (Ni. 4-5)

That is, he who comes seeking houses is called atithi (guest); or he comes to the houses of sacrificers on the tithis such as the full-moon day. Since Agni too behaves like the guest, he too is a guest: thus two kinds of meaning are explained.

विभावसुः (vibhāvasuḥ)—प्रभाधनः (prabhādhanaḥ): one whose wealth is radiance or splendour; the meaning is that his very nature is distinguished by splendour, as in तपोधन (tapodhana) (one whose wealth is austerity).

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Cittibhiḥ: endowed with knowledge. Devāsaḥ: the gods. Taruṣaḥ: who carry across from sorrow. Dakṣasya: of strength. Kratvā: by the rite. Vidharmaṇi: in the sacrifice, which is of the nature of upholding. Agniṃ: Agni. Janayanta: they produced. Vājaṃ: food. Saniṣyan: I who desire. Bhānunā: shining. Jyotiṣā: with radiance. Rurucānaṃ: him who shines. Mahāṃ: Agni, who has great qualities. Atyaṃ na: as one praises a horse able to bear a burden. Upa bruve: I praise.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

The gods, endowed with knowledge, caused Agni to be produced in the sacrifice, which is of the nature of upholding, by the rite of the strength that carries across from sorrow. I, desiring food, praise Agni, who shines with shining radiance and has great qualities, as one praises a horse able to bear a burden.

Printed English translation

The gods, (endowed) with intelligence, gave birth to Agni in the multiform rite by the exertion of preserving strength : desirous of food, I eulogise thc great Agni, bright with solar effulgence, and (vigorous) as a horse.

[The printed English reads "thc" for "the", as supplied.]

चित्तिभिः देवासः तरुषः दक्षस्य क्रत्वा विधर्मणि अग्निं जनयंत—ज्ञानैरुपलक्षि तः देवाः व्यसनेभ्यस्तारकस्य बलस्य कर्मणा यज्ञे अग्निं अजनयन् । (cittibhiḥ devāsaḥ taruṣaḥ dakṣasya kratvā vidharmaṇi agniṃ janayaṃta—jñānairupalakṣi taḥ devāḥ vyasanebhyastārakasya balasya karmaṇā yajñe agniṃ ajanayan |) Its sense: the gods, who are endowed with knowledge, that is, who have understanding, produced Agni in the sacrifice by the best rites, capable of destroying sorrow. That is, the gods have great understanding; they know the many kinds of rites and the ways of performing them. Therefore they produced Agni in the sacrifice by the best rites, which bring relief from sorrow: this is the meaning.

The word dakṣa is read among the names of strength (Ni. 3-9). The word kratu is read among the names of rite (Ni. 3-1) and also among the names of intelligence (Ni. 3-13). Here it is used in the sense of rite.

वाजं सनिष्यन् भानुना ज्योतिषा रुरुचानं महां अत्यं न उप ब्रुवे—भासमानेन ज्योतिषा रोचमानं महांतमग्निं भारसहमश्वमिव अन्नं (vājaṃ saniṣyan bhānunā jyotiṣā rurucānaṃ mahāṃ atyaṃ na upa bruve—bhāsamānena jyotiṣā rocamānaṃ mahāṃtamagniṃ bhārasahamaśvamiva annaṃ)

p. 572

लिप्समानोऽहं सौमि । (lipsamāno 'haṃ saumi |) (as supplied; the bhāṣya has స్తౌమి.) I praise Agni, who shines with great radiance, as one praises a horse that bears a burden, desiring food. A horse that bears a burden is useful to everyone, so everyone praises it; in the same way, since Agni is wanted by everyone, I shall stand near and praise Agni, who shines with such great radiance: this is the meaning.

The word vāja is read among the names of food (Ni. 3-9); the word bhānu is read among the names of day (Ni. 2-20); in place of mahān there is here the form mahāṃ. This is a Vedic usage. The word atya is read among the names of the horse (Ni. 2-27); the word, derived from the root आत सातत्यगमने (āta sātatyagamane), means a creature able to move about continually, so atya means the horse. There is also the explanation अत्याः अतनाः (atyāḥ atanāḥ) (Ni. 4-13).

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Bhṛgūṇām—Bhṛgu is a well-known sage. Yāska has given the explanation अर्चिषि भृगुः संबभूव । भृगुर्भृज्यमानो न देहे (arciṣi bhṛguḥ saṃbabhūva | bhṛgurbhṛjyamāno na dehe) (Ni. 3-17). Explaining this, Durgācārya says: प्रजापतिना किल शक्रमात्मीयवादाय अग्नौ हुतं । तत अर्चिषि ज्वालायां भृगुः नाम महिर्षिः संबभूव । (prajāpatinā kila śakramātmīyavādāya agnau hutaṃ | tata arciṣi jvālāyāṃ bhṛguḥ nāma mahirṣiḥ saṃbabhūva |) That is, in the past Prajāpati took his own seed and offered it in the fire; from the flames of the fire that rose from that offering the great sage named Bhṛgu came into being; so it is said.

There is a story about the sage Bhṛgu in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa—

आपो वा अस्पर्धंत वयं पूर्वं यज्ञं वक्ष्यामो वयमिति याश्चेमाः पूर्वेद्युर्वसतीवर्योगृह्यंते याश्च प्रातरेकधनास्ता भृगुरपश्यदापो वै स्पर्धंत इति ता एतयर्चा समज्ञपयत्समन्या यंत्युप यंत्यन्या इति ताः समजानत संजानाना हास्यापो यज्ञं वहंति य एवं वेद ॥ (āpo vā aspardhaṃta vayaṃ pūrvaṃ yajñaṃ vakṣyāmo vayamiti yāścemāḥ pūrvedyurvasatīvaryogṛhyaṃte yāśca prātarekadhanāstā bhṛgurapaśyadāpo vai spardhaṃta iti tā etayarcā samajñapayatsamanyā yaṃtyupa yaṃtyanyā iti tāḥ samajānata saṃjānānā hāsyāpo yajñaṃ vahaṃti ya evaṃ veda ॥) (Ai. Brā. 8-20, printed ಇ. ಬ್ರಾ.)

In the past the waters called vasatīvarī, brought the previous day for the Soma sacrifice (those in the vessel), and the waters called ekadhanā contended with each other, each saying "I first, I first", over carrying out the sacrifice. Then the sage Bhṛgu, who was there, seeing this, recited this Ṛk and appeased them. In the sacrifice of the sacrificer who knows this, those waters give up contention, remain at peace and help in the carrying out of the sacrifice. And so on.

समन्या यंत्युप यंत्यन्याः समानमूर्वं नद्यः पृणंति । तमू शुचिं शुचयो दीदिनांसमपां नपातं परि तस्थुरापः ॥ (samanyā yaṃtyupa yaṃtyanyāḥ samānamūrvaṃ nadyaḥ pṛṇaṃti | tamū śuciṃ śucayo dīdināṃsamapāṃ napātaṃ pari tasthurāpaḥ ‖) (printed ಮು. ಸಂ ೨-೩೫-೩, i.e. Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-35-3)

The great sage Bhṛgu is said to be the son of Varuṇa (बृगुर्वै वारुणिः । वरुणं पितरमुपससार (bṛgurvai vāruṇiḥ | varuṇaṃ pitaramupasasāra), Tai. Ā. 9-1), in places such as Śat. Brā. 11-6-1-1, Paṃ. Brā. 18-9-2 and Nirukta 3-17. In many contexts where Bhṛgus is used in the plural, they are mentioned in connection with Agni. The plural Bhṛgus occurs in the places Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-58-6; 1-127-7; 1-143-4; 2-4-2; 3-2-4; 4-7-1 and so on. That the Bhṛgu clan belonged to the renowned class of priests is stated in the Ṛks Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-18-6; 8-3-9; 8-6-18; 8-3-9; 8-102-4. In the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (Tai. Saṃ. 4-6-5-2; 5-6-8-6; 1-8-18; Tai. Brā. 1-8-2-5; Paṃ. Brā. 18-9-2) it is mentioned that the Bhṛgus played the part of priests in sacrificial rites such as the establishing of the fire and the Daśapeya kratu. In places such as Tai. Saṃ. 1-1-7-2; Mai. Saṃ. 1-1-8; Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā 1-18; Tai. Brā. 1-1-4-8; 3-2-7-6; Śat. Brā. 1-2-1-13 there are descriptions of the Bhṛgus in association with the Aṅgirasas.

The word Bhṛgu occurs twenty-one times in the Ṛgveda. Besides this it is also used twice in the form bhṛguvat. It is used in the singular, as Bhṛgu, only once; therefore these Bhṛgus may denote a whole group of legendary persons. In the sūktas addressed to Agni alone it occurs about twelve times, and generally in contexts describing how men obtained Agni. Mātariśvan brought Agni to Bhṛgu as a treasure (1-60-1), or kindled for the Bhṛgus the Agni who was hidden (3-5-10). Mātariśvan and the gods created Agni; the Bhṛgus, exerting their power and strength, produced Agni (10-46-9). The Bhṛgus saw Agni hidden in the water (10-46-2), worshipped him there and established him in the house of men (2-4-2; compare 2-4-4). They made Agni settle well in the forest (6-15-2), or placed him among men like a treasure (1-58-6). Agni is a thing that came as a gift from the Bhṛgus (3-2-4). Having churned him well, they praised him with words of praise (1-127-7); having pleased him with songs in the form of praise and made him shine well (10-122-5), they afterwards made him dwell in the forests

(4-7-1). They brought him to the navel region of the earth (1-143-4). Atharvan ordained special rites such as the homa; the Bhṛgus by their skill revealed the characteristics of the deity (10-92-10): although their cleverness is seen in the very production of Agni, they regarded it as an art. As the Bhṛgus fashioned a chariot, so the praisers fashion praise of Indra or of the Aśvins (4-16-20; 10-39-14).

The Bhṛgus must be very ancient. Together with the sacrificers, the Aṅgirasas and the Atharvans, they included the Bhṛgus too and spoke of them all as their forefathers, fond of the soma juice (10-14-6), and the Bhṛgus, like the Aṅgirasas and Manu, praise Agni (8-43-13). They prayed to Indra that their prayer might be heard as the prayer of the Yatis and the Bhṛgus was heard (8-6-18), or that as he gave no help to the Yatis, the Bhṛgus and the Praskaṇvas, he might give help to them too (8-3-9). Along with the Druhyus and Turvaśa, the Bhṛgus are also said to be enemies of Sudās (7-18-6). In the above three sentences (7-6-18 [as printed]; 8-3-9; 7-18-6) the Bhṛgus appear to denote some small tribe. They are invited to the soma drink along with the thirty-three gods, the Aśvins, the Maruts (deities of the waters), Uṣas and Sūrya (8-35-3). They are compared to suns and called those of fulfilled desires (8-3-16; 9-101-13); in the latter the worshippers pray that, as the Bhṛgus drove away the demon, he may drive away the niggardly. Who the demons driven away by the Bhṛgus in the story here are is not known.

Like Vasiṣṭha and other sages related to the Ṛgveda, the Bhṛgus may be said not to belong to the groups of sages now in use. As Aṅgiras is the chief of the Aṅgirasas and Vasiṣṭha of the Vasiṣṭhas, so Bhṛgu must be the chief of a group of sages called Bhṛgu.

The descent of Agni from heaven and his being given to man are connected with Mātariśvan and the Bhṛgus. Of these, while Mātariśvan brings Agni from heaven, it is the work of the Bhṛgus to bring him into use on earth for the start and the performance of rites such as the sacrifice.

In the other Vedas, Bhṛgu is the representative of a gotra (Ā. Ve. 5-19-1, as printed; Ai. Brā. 2-20-7); born from the seed of Prajāpati, he is accepted by Varuṇa as his son, whence he gets the name Vāruṇi (Ai. Brā. 3-34-1; Paṃ. Brā. 18-9-1); he is also stated clearly to be the son of Varuṇa (11-1-1).

The word Bhṛgu is derived from the root bhrāj (to shine, to be bright). Some hold that Bhṛgu is a name of Agni, and others that it is the name for the lightning form of Agni.

p. 577

[Running head, p. 577: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 17, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

Printed English translation

Men with strewn holy grass, and uplifted ladles, place before them this solemnity for the sake of obtaining happiness, Agni, the bestower of food, the resplendent, the benefactor of all the gods, the remover of sorrow, the perfecter of the (holy) acts of the sacrificer.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Vṛktabarhiṣaḥ—Yāska, giving the explanation of the word barhis, says परिबर्हणात् परिच्छेदनात् । (paribarhaṇāt paricchedanāt |) That is, he explains the meaning as sacred grass whose tops (tips) have been cut, and, citing as proof the Ṛk

प्राचीनं बर्हिः प्रदिशा पृथिव्या वस्तोरस्या वृज्यते अग्रे अह्नां । व्यु प्रथते वितरं वरियो देवेभ्यो आदितये स्योनं ॥ (prācīnaṃ barhiḥ pradiśā pṛthivyā vastorasyā vṛjyate agre ahnāṃ | vyu prathate vitaraṃ variyo devebhyo āditaye syonaṃ ‖) (printed ಮ. ೪೦. ೦೦-೦೦೦-೪, i.e. Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-110-4)

he gives for it the explanation—

प्राचीनं बर्हिः प्रदिशा पृथिव्या वसनायास्याः प्रवृज्यते अग्रे अह्नां बर्हिः पूर्वाह्णे तद्विप्रथते वितरं विकीर्णतरमिति वा विस्तीर्णतरमिति ना वरीयो वरतरमुरुतरं वा देवेभ्यश्चादितये च स्कोनं । स्कोनमिति सुखनाम । स्यतेरवस्यंत्येतत् सेवितव्यं भवतीति वा । (prācīnaṃ barhiḥ pradiśā pṛthivyā vasanāyāsyāḥ pravṛjyate agre ahnāṃ barhiḥ pūrvāhne tadviprathate vitaraṃ vikīrṇataramiti vā vistīrṇataramiti nā varīyo varataramurutaraṃ vā devebhyaścāditaye ca skonaṃ | skonamiti sukhanāma | syateravasyaṃtyetat sevitavyaṃ bhavatīti vā |) (printed ೩. 8-9, i.e. Ni. 8-9)

At the time of the sacrifice, so that the gods invoked on the sacrificial altar may come and sit, the priests spread sacred grass with the tops cut and prepare it as a seat. Because the tips of the darbha grass are pointed and sharp like thorns and may prick the body and cause pain, they cut the tips so that all the grass is of one level, and spread it in three layers, one upon another, so that the seat is soft. This is called barhis. The seers pray that the gods, being invoked, may come and sit on this seat called barhis. On such a seat they also place the substances used in the sacrifice, such as soma, ghee and oblations. In the present Ṛk it is described that the priests have prepared such a seat on the sacrificial altar and are praying to Agni.

Yatasrucaḥ—sruc (srucaḥ is plural) is a wooden vessel like a ladle used in the sacrifice for pouring ghee and the like into the fire. Yatasrucaḥ

[Lone numeral "37" at the foot of p. 577, kept as a note.]

p. 578

means that, having filled such a wooden ladle with ghee or other offering for pouring into the fire, they stand ready holding the ladles raised. The sense is that, as soon as Agni is invoked, they have prepared the seat of sacred grass called barhis for Agni to come and sit on; they have filled the ladle with offering material and hold up their hands to put it into the fire. It is stated that everything is thus ready.

The word sumna is read among the names of happiness (printed ऋ. 3-13), the word vāja among the names of food (printed ऋ. 3-9), and the word apaḥ among the names of rite (printed ऋ. 3-1).

Viśvadevyaṃ—विश्वेभ्यो देवेभ्यो हितं । (viśvebhyo devebhyo hitaṃ |) Two kinds of meaning can be given to this word: this Agni is good or dear to all the gods; or, since the oblations and the like offered to all the gods are poured into this Agni, he is the mouth of all the gods.

Rudraṃ—दुःखानां द्रावकं । (duḥkhānāṃ drāvakaṃ |) Although the word rudra has many meanings, since here it is an epithet of Agni, the meaning is explained as one who drives away, that is, destroys, the sorrow of those who praise.

Yajñānāṃ—यजंतीति यज्ञा यजमानाः । (yajaṃtīti yajñā yajamānāḥ |) The bhāṣyakāra has explained that here the word yajña means sacrificers, those who perform the sacrifice.

Sādhadiṣṭiṃ—साधितयज्ञं । (sādhitayajñaṃ |) Iṣṭi means sacrifice (the Kannada prints "ಕಷ್ಟಿ" here, as supplied). One who accomplishes it, that is, who plays the chief part in the sacrifice and carries it out: this is an epithet of Agni.

पुरः दधिरे—स्तुवंति । (puraḥ dadhire—stuvaṃti |) They stand facing Agni and praise; or the priests set Agni in front in order to perform the oblations and other rites in the sacrifice.

Kṣayaṃ—the word kṣaya, derived from the root क्षि निवासे (kṣi nivāse), means dwelling-place. Here Agni's dwelling-place is the sacrificial house.

Draviṇaṃ—since the word draviṇa is read among the names of wealth (Ni. 3-9), draviṇa means wealth.

O Agni, the sacrificers prepare in their sacrificial altar a seat of sacred grass for the gods to sit upon and attend you, who invite the gods. They also enter the sacrificial house in order to attend you with sacrifices and the like. Agni is prayed to give wealth and so on to such sacrificers.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

Agni has pervaded heaven and earth and the great firmament. The sacrificers, who do the rites, held him when he was born; that Agni, like a horse, pervading everywhere, establishing food, is brought to the sacrificial ground for the sacrifice for the gaining of food.

Printed English translation

He has filled both heaven and earth and the spacious firmament, he whom the performers of (sacred) rites have laid hold of as soon as born . he, the sage, the giver of food, is brought like a horse to the sacrificer, for (the sake of) obtaining food.

[The printed English has "born ." with a stray space and full stop, as supplied.]

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

रोदसी आ अपृणत् महत् स्वः आ (rodasī ā apṛṇat mahat svaḥ ā)—this Agni has pervaded heaven and earth and the firmament. That is, Agni has pervaded the earth in the form of terrestrial fire, the atmosphere in the form of lightning fire, and heaven in the form of the Sun.

जातं यत् एनं अपसः आधारयन्— कर्मवंतो यजमानाः जातं यमग्निं आधारयन् । (jātaṃ yat enaṃ apasaḥ ādhārayan— karmavaṃto yajamānāḥ jātaṃ yamagniṃ ādhārayan |) The sacrificers who perform the sacrifice held (in order to carry him to the northern altar) Agni, who was just born by the churning of the fire-sticks.

चनोहिति (canohiti) (as printed; the Saṃhitā has canohitaḥ)—the meaning is that he has stored up food to give to those who praise him.

सः वाजसातये अध्वराय परिणीयते (saḥ vājasātaye adhvarāya pariṇīyate)—that Agni is carried from the place of churning to the northern altar for the sacrificial rites performed to gain food. The rite of carrying Agni with mantras to the northern altar immediately after the churning is called agnipraṇayana. It is important among the sacrificial rites. It is explained at length in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa. Accordingly we have explained this rite at length in Part 14, pages 541 to 549 (printed so with Latin digits).

Agni, the leader and overseer of the great sacrifice, has been established as the priest of the gods. Worship Agni, who offers the oblation to the gods, is the excellent performer of the sacrifice, is good for the house and is of far-reaching knowledge. Serve him.

Printed English translation

Reverence the bearer of oblations (to the gods), him whose sacrifice is acceptable; worship him by whom all that exists is known, who is friendly to our dwellings; for Agni is the conductor of the great sacrifice, the beholder of all, who has been placed in front of the gods.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Vicarṣaṇiḥ—since the word vicarṣaṇa is read among the verbs of seeing, this word means one who sees (Ni. 3-13).

Svadhvaraṃ—Yāska explains the word adhvara: अध्वर इति यज्ञनाम । ध्वरतिर्हिंसाकर्मा तत्प्रतिषेधः । (adhvara iti yajñanāma | dhvaratirhiṃsākarmā tatpratiṣedhaḥ |) That is, the root dhvar denotes harmful action, and adhvara means a sacrifice free from harmful action: so he states the explanation (Ni. 1-8). Since it is su + adhvara here, the sense is an excellent sacrifice, or one who carries out the sacrifice.

Damyaṃ—the word dame is read among the names of the house (Ni. 3-13). Damya may be said to mean connected with the house, dwelling in the house, good for the house, and so on.

Jātavedasaṃ—जातानां वेदितारं जातप्रज्ञं जातबलं वा । (jātānāṃ veditāraṃ jātaprajñaṃ jātabalaṃ vā |) Sāyaṇa has explained three kinds of meaning for the word jātavedaḥ, which indicates the nature of Agni: one who knows all that is born, one who has the intellectual power by which everything natural can be known, and one who has abundant power. Yāska says in the Nirukta—

जातानि वेद । जातानि नैनं विदुः । जाते जाते विद्यत इति वा । जातवित्तो ना जातधनः । जातविद्यो वा जातप्रज्ञानः । (jātāni veda | jātāni nainaṃ viduḥ | jāte jāte vidyata iti vā | jātavitto nā jātadhanaḥ | jātavidyo vā jātaprajñānaḥ |) (printed ೨. 7-20, i.e. Ni. 7-20)

In this world, once born, there is nothing that he does not know; therefore Agni is all-knowing. All born creatures know Agni; therefore he is fit to be known by all.

यत्तज्जातः पशूनविंदतेति तज्जातवेदसो जातवेदस्त्वमिति ब्राह्मणं तस्मात् सर्वानृतून् पशवोऽग्निमभि सर्पंतीति च ॥ (yattajjātaḥ paśūnaviṃdateti tajjātavedaso jātavedastvamiti brāhmaṇaṃ tasmāt sarvānṛtūn paśavo 'gnimabhi sarpaṃtīti ca ‖)

This Śruti sentence says clearly that Agni pervades everything that is born. Having explained that Agni is possessed of wealth and that by nature Agni is full of knowledge, thus describing Agni's form and nature, he continues:

जातवेदसे सुनवाम सोममरातीयतो नि दहाति वेदः । स नः पर्षदति दुर्गाणि विश्वा नावेव सिंधुं दुरितात्यग्निः ॥ (jātavedase sunavāma somamarātīyato ni dahāti vedaḥ | sa naḥ parṣadati durgāṇi viśvā nāveva siṃdhuṃ duritātyagniḥ ‖) (printed ಮ. ಸಂ. 1-99-1, i.e. Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-99-1)

p. 584

प्र नूनं जातवेदसमश्वं हिनोत वाजिनं । इदं नो बर्हिरासदे ॥ (pra nūnaṃ jātavedasamaśvaṃ hinota vājinaṃ | idaṃ no barhirāsade ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-188-1)

With these Ṛks he has explained also how Agni, called Jātavedas, is praised. And—

तदेतदेकमेव जातवेदस्यं गायत्रं तृचं दशततीषु विद्यते । यत्तु किंचिदाग्नेयं तज्ञातवेदसानां स्थाने युज्यते ॥ (tadetadekameva jātavedasyaṃ gāyatraṃ tṛcaṃ daśatatīṣu vidyate | yattu kiṃcidāgneyaṃ tajñātavedasānāṃ sthāne yujyate ‖) (printed ని. 7-20)

There are only three Ṛks in the Gāyatrī metre connected with Jātavedas, beginning with the words of the Ṛk quoted just above; there are no other Gāyatrī Ṛks which indicate Agni Jātavedas, and no application in rites. Therefore Agni himself is designated by the word jātavedāḥ.

स न मन्येतायमेवाग्निरित्यप्येते उत्तरे ज्योतिषी जातवेदसी उच्येते ततो नु मध्यमः । अभि प्रवंत समनेव योषा इति तत् पुरुस्ताद्वाख्यातमथासावादित्य उदुत्यं जातवेदसमिति तदुपरिष्टाद्वाख्यास्यामः ॥ (sa na manyetāyamevāgnirityapyete uttare jyotiṣī jātavedasī ucyete tato nu madhyamaḥ | abhi pravaṃta samaneva yoṣā iti tat purustādvākhyātamathāsāvāditya udutyaṃ jātavedasamiti tadupariṣṭādvākhyāsyāmaḥ ‖)

Although the nature of Agni is also described by the mantra अभि प्रवंत समनेव योषा (abhi pravaṃta samaneva yoṣā), in considering the meaning of the word jātavedas the word agni (the word used in the mantra beginning thus) is an epithet of the meaning of the word jātavedas; and by the mantra उदुत्यं जातवेदसं (udutyaṃ jātavedasaṃ) the Sun too is indicated by the word jātavedas: this is the sense. Durgācārya says—

जातवेदसं सूर्यमुद्वहंतीति तु विशेषणविशेष्यसामान्याधिकरणैकवाक्य प्रसिद्ध्या स्वनिगमसिद्धमस्मिन् मंत्रे चातवेदाः सूर्य इति ॥ (jātavedasaṃ sūryamudvahaṃtīti tu viśeṣaṇaviśeṣyasāmānyādhikaraṇaikavākya prasiddhyā svanigamasiddhamasmin maṃtre cātavedāḥ sūrya iti ‖)

In the mantra उदुत्यं जातवेदसं (udutyaṃ jātavedasaṃ), in order to teach the identity of the Sun with the Agni called Jātavedas, he accepts a single sentence in the relation of qualifier and qualified, and discusses and describes the meaning that the Sun too is Jātavedas. And—

यस्तु सूक्तं भजते यस्मै हविर्निरूप्यते अयमेव सोग्निर्जातवेदा निपातमेवैते उत्तरे ज्योतिषी एतेन नामधेयेन भजेते ॥ (yastu sūktaṃ bhajate yasmai havirnirūpyate ayameva sognirjātavedā nipātamevaite uttare jyotiṣī etena nāmadheyena bhajete ‖) (printed ऽ. 7-20)

The Agni indicated by the word jātavedas in his terrestrial form is the one who, invoked in the sacrifices by the respective sūkta mantras, receives the oblations. Although lightning fire, Vaiśvānara fire and the Sun are varieties of Agni, or are indicated by the word jātavedas, the word jātavedas by usage indicates the terrestrial fire: so he has explained.

p. 585

जातानि वेद । जातानि वैनं विदुः, जाते जाते विद्यत इति वा; जातवित्तो वा जातधनो वा जातविद्यो वा जातज्ञानः । (jātāni veda | jātāni vainaṃ viduḥ, jāte jāte vidyata iti vā; jātavitto vā jātadhano vā jātavidyo vā jātajñānaḥ |) The Nirukta authors have explained that it can be taken to mean one who knows all that is born, or that all that is born knows him, or that he pervades and is present in everything born, or that he possesses all the wealth that is born, or that he has the intelligence that knows everything (Ni. 7-19).

The Bṛhaddevatā too has explained clearly the nature and the places of Jātavedas—

इहाग्निभूतस्त्वृषिभिर्लोके स्तुतिभिरीळितः । जातवेदाः स्तुतो मध्ये स्तुतो वैश्वानरो दिवि ॥ (ihāgnibhūtastvṛṣibhirloke stutibhirīḷitaḥ | jātavedāḥ stuto madhyè stuto vaiśvānaro divi ‖) (Bṛ. De. 1-67)

Saying in this verse that the sages call the fire on earth Agni, the fire in the middle world Jātavedas, and the one in the world of heaven Vaiśvānara, and continuing the same idea he says—

वैश्वानरं श्रितो ह्यग्नि रग्निं वैश्वानरः श्रितः । अनयोर्जातवेदास्तु कथैते जातवेदसि ॥ (vaiśvānaraṃ śrito hyagni ragniṃ vaiśvānaraḥ śritaḥ | anayorjātavedāstu kathaite jātavedasi ‖) (Bṛ. De. 1-97)

It is explained that Agni is contained in Vaiśvānara and Vaiśvānara in Agni, that Jātavedas is contained in both of these, and that the two are two parts of Jātavedas. Thus, having stated the places of Jātavedas in the first chapter, he gives the explanation of his nature in the second chapter.

भूतानि वेद यज्ञातो जातवेदाथ कथ्यते । यच्चैष जातविद्योऽभूत् वित्तं जातोऽधिवेत्ति ना ॥ (bhūtāni veda yajjāto jātavedātha kathyate | yaccaiṣa jātavidyoSbhūt vittaṃ jātoSdhivetti nā ‖) (Bṛ. De. 2-30)

विद्यते सर्वभूतैर्हि यद्वा जातः पुनः पुनः । तेन्वैष मध्यभागेंद्रो जातवेदा इति स्तुतः ॥ (vidyate sarvabhūtairhi yadvā jātaḥ punaḥ punaḥ | tenvaiṣa madhyabhāgeṃdro jātavedā iti stutaḥ ‖) (Bṛ. De. 2-31)

The explanation of the Bṛhaddevatā is that Agni is praised as Jātavedas like Indra of the middle world: because he knows everything at the very moment of birth, or because knowledge was born in him, or because at birth he knows and obtains all wealth, or because whenever he is born again and again he is known by all beings. In the same way, in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa too,

p. 586

यः संवत्सरं जातः स्यात्पाणो वा अग्निस्तमेतद्बिभर्त्यथ ह वै रेतः सिक्तं प्राणोऽन्ववरोहति तद्विंदते तद्यज्ञातं जातं विंदते तस्माज्जातवेदाः ॥ (yaḥ saṃvatsaraṃ jātaḥ syātpāṇo vā agnistametadvibhartyatha ha vai retaḥ siktaṃ prāṇo 'nvavarohati tadviṃdate tadyajñātaṃ jātaṃ viṃdate tasmājjātavedāḥ ‖) (printed ೨. ಬ್ರಾ ೯-೫-೧೬-೮, i.e. Śat. Brā. 9-5-16-8)

It is said that Agni in the form of breath is called Jātavedas because he pervades with his power all the beings that are born. The Upaniṣads describe this very Jātavedas, to be worshipped in the sacrificial house, as the universal-souled Brahman:

विश्वरूपं हरिणं जातवेदसं परायणं ज्योतिरेकं तपंतं । (viśvarūpaṃ hariṇaṃ jātavedasaṃ parāyaṇaṃ jyotirekaṃ tapaṃtaṃ |) (Praśna Upaniṣad 1-8)

The Praśna Upaniṣad says that the Sun rises, of all forms, of a thousand rays, all-knowing, the support of the whole world, known to the wise and the inner self of all beings; and—

अरण्योर्निहितो जातवेदा गर्भ इव सुभृथो गर्भिणीभिः । दिवेदिव ईड्यो जागृवद्भिर्हविष्मद्भिर्मनुष्येभिरग्निः ॥ (araṇyornihito jātavedā garbha iva subhṛtho garbhiṇībhiḥ | divediva īḍyo jāgṛvadbhirhaviṣmadbhirmanuṣyebhiragniḥ ‖) (printed ಕಠೋಪನಿಷತ್ 1-4.8)

The Kaṭha Upaniṣad also describes that Jātavedas, who dwells between the two fire-sticks in the sacrifice and enjoys all oblations, whom the yogis keep in their hearts and meditate on, as pregnant women with affection nourish and rear their embryos, and to whom, as the worshipful Agni, the sacrificers offer oblations, is the universal-souled Parabrahman.

अरण्योर्निहितो जातवेदा गर्भ इव सुधितो गर्भिणीषु । दिवेदिव ईड्यो जागृवद्भिर्वहविष्मद्भिर्मनुष्येभिरग्निः ॥ (araṇyornihito jātavedā garbha iva sudhito garbhiṇīṣu | divediva īḍyo jāgṛvadbhivarhaviṣmadbhirmanuṣyebhiragniḥ ‖) (printed ಋ. ಸಂ. ೨೯೯ and, on the next line, ಮ. ಸಂ. 329-2, as supplied)

As it is described in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā, so it is described in the Kaṭha Upaniṣad. Thus all the Śrutis praise him as called Jātavedas because he is all-knowing, all-pervading, possessed of all wealth and the most excellent.

अग्नि देवानां पुरोहितः अभवत्-अग्निः देवानां पुरस्तात् इष्टव्यतया (agni devānāṃ purohitaḥ abhavat-agniḥ devānāṃ purastāt iṣṭavyatayā) (the bhāṣyakāra's words)—placed in front of the gods so as to be worshipped first. The bhāṣyakāra's explanation is that Agni is established in front so as to be worshipped before worshipping all the gods at all. It can also be said to mean that he is the chief (Leader) of the gods, or their leader, taking the lead. On this subject—

It has been said before that Agni has three forms. Agni on earth, in the form of terrestrial fire, is worshipped by the human sacrificers in sacrifices and the like, and carries out the sacrificial acts, offering to the gods the portions of oblation they have given and bringing the invoked gods to the sacrificial ground. Agni's second form, the lightning fire, being in the atmosphere in the form of lightning in the midst of the clouds, impels the clouds and makes rain fall on the earth. Agni's third form shines in heaven, that is, in the upper part of the atmosphere, in the form of the Sun, giving light to the men on earth and to the gods in the world of heaven, and being the cause of the divisions of time such as the year, the season, the month and the day.

भुजं तासां एकां मर्त्ये अदधुः—ते देवाः सर्वेषां पालयित्रीं तासां तनूनां मध्ये एकां सार्थिवीं तनुं मर्त्यलोकेन्यदधुः । (bhujaṃ tāsāṃ ekāṃ martye adadhuḥ—te devāḥ sarvèṣāṃ pālayitrīṃ tāsāṃ tanūnāṃ madhyè ekāṃ sārthivīṃ tanuṃ martyaloke nyadadhuḥ |) Of the three forms described above, the form of terrestrial fire, which protects all, was established by the gods in the world of men for the welfare of the people.

द्वे जामिं लोकं उप ईयतुः—इतरे द्वे तनू आसन्नमंतरिक्षं गच्छतः । (dve jāmiṃ lokaṃ upa īyatuḥ—itare dve tanū āsannamaṃtarikṣaṃ gacchataḥ |) The other two forms went off to the atmosphere and the world of heaven: thus the three kinds of body or form of Agni are explained.

The bhāṣyakāra has said that the word tisraḥ here can be understood otherwise than as the three forms of Agni described above.

That is, the word tisraḥ can be taken to mean three samidhs: two āghāra samidhs and one anūyāja. Of these three samidhs, the one called anūyāja the gods established in this world of earth for the enjoyment of the people. According to the Śruti sentence प्रजा वा अनूयाजाः (prajā vā anūyājāḥ), the anūyāja is said to be beneficial to creatures. The other two āghāra samidhs are said to have gone to the atmosphere and other worlds for the enjoyment of the gods; the Śruti sentence श्रीन् परिधीन् तिस्रः समिधः (śrīn paridhīn tisraḥ samidhaḥ) also supports this.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

Human subjects who desire wealth in the form of cattle and the like refined Agni, who is the lord of all people and is wise, for sharpness, as one whets a knife to sharpen it. That same Agni moves about pervading all the high and low regions. He bears in these regions the embryo form of the fire-stick.

Printed English translation

Human beings, wishing for wealth, give brightness, (by their praises), to the lord of men, the wise (Agni), as they add lustre, (by polishing), to on axe: spreading everywhere, he goes alike through high and low places, and has taken an embryo (condition) in these regions.

[The printed English reads "to on axe" for "to an axe", as supplied.]

Svadhitiṃ—the word svadhiti is read among the names of the thunderbolt (Ni. 3-11). Svadhiti means a weapon such as a knife useful for cutting. Yāska gives the explanation स्वधिते मैनगं् हिगं्सीः (svadhite mainagṃ higṃsīḥ) (Ni. 1-15): the prayer of the razor, "O knife, do not harm him", is stated.

उद्वतः निवतः—उच्छ्रायवतः नीचैर्भाववतश्च । (udvataḥ nivataḥ—ucchrāyavataḥ nīcairbhāvavataśca |) The meaning is: situated on high and situated in low ground. Yāska, explaining the Ṛk beginning "pareyivāṃsam" (Ṛ. Saṃ.), says प्रवत उद्वतो निवत इति । अवतिर्गतिकर्मा (pravata udvato nivata iti | avatirgatikarmā) (Ni. 10-20). Durgācārya, commenting on this, says—

प्रवृतः उद्वतः निवतः च भूतसंघान् । प्रवतः मनुष्याः उद्वतः देवाः निवतः तिर्यंचः तथा गत्युपपत्तेः । (pravṛtaḥ udvataḥ nivataḥ ca bhūtasaṃghān | pravataḥ manuṣyāḥ udvataḥ devāḥ nivataḥ tiryaṃcaḥ tathā gatyupapatteḥ |)

[Running head, p. 592: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 2 (printed "ಸಾಯಣಭಾಷ್ಯಸಹಿತಾ", "ಆ.", "ಸೂ. ೨." without closing bracket). In the supplied text this head was run into p. 591 without a page marker; the marker and heading were inserted by hand and p. 592 added to pages.json.]

Thus he explains: pravataḥ means the human beings who seek protection; udvataḥ means the high regions, that is, the gods in the atmosphere, heaven and so on; nivataḥ means the animals living in the low region.

इषः मानुषीः विशां विश्वतिं सीं स्वधितिं न तेजसे अकृण्वन् (iṣaḥ mānuṣīḥ viśāṃ viśvatiṃ sīṃ svadhitiṃ na tejase akṛṇvan)—human subjects who desire wealth in the form of cattle and food made Agni, the lord of the people and the far-seeing, fit for the sacrifice by refining him with many kinds of sacrificial rites, as one whets a knife and sharpens it. Here, to sharpen a knife they rub it on a stone and sharpen it; afterwards it can easily cut trees and the like. In the same way, as soon as Agni is kindled, since he has not the power to give the sacrificer his desired ends, they refine him according to rule with mantras and the like, make him fit for the sacrifice and make him shine well. Afterwards Agni becomes useful for the sacrificer's sacrifices and the like, and able to give his desired ends: this is the sense.

सः उद्वतः निवतः वेविषत् याति (saḥ udvataḥ nivataḥ veviṣat yāti)—Agni, who was produced, though small at that time, afterwards pervades everything and shines blazing both above and below. That is, though Agni is small at the time of churning, he gradually grows with the wood, the samidhs, ghee, oblations and the like offered in the sacrifice, pervades everything and shines with brightness: this is the sense.

एषु भुवनेषु गर्भं दीधरत्—सः गर्भं अरण्या आधारयत् । (eṣu bhuvaneṣu garbhaṃ dīdharat —saḥ garbhaṃ araṇyā ādhārayat |) Such an Agni bore an embryo in the araṇis (the two pieces of wood used for churning fire are called araṇis). That is, before the churning he was in the form of an embryo in the araṇis, hidden so that no one could see him, and after the churning he appeared shining for all to see: this is the sense.

Printed English translation

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk it is stated that Vaiśvānara Agni, being in the bellies of men and of many kinds of creatures in the form of the digestive fire, is growing. The radiance or heat that is always in the body of men or creatures is the digestive fire, or Vaiśvānara fire. If the heat in the body stops through some cause, death occurs. Therefore this heat (that is, Vaiśvānara Agni) is the cause of the circulation of blood, breathing, digestion of food and movement in all creatures. Without the help of this Vaiśvānara fire (the digestive fire, the heat in the body) no creature can live even a minute.

चित्रेषु जठरेषु (citreṣu jaṭhareṣu)—in bellies of many kinds; since the forms of creatures are of many kinds, their bellies too are of many kinds accordingly. That is explained here by the word citreṣu.

नानदत् सिंहः न (nānadat siṃhaḥ na)—अत्यर्थ० शब्दन् कुर्वन् सिंहमिव । (atyarthao śabdan kurvan siṃhamiva |) (as supplied). An illustration is given here of the power and ability of Vaiśvānara Agni: the comparison of the lion is stated for the power of Vaiśvānara Agni, as of a lion that, called king of beasts in the forest, roams with great pride and roars terribly.

Pṛthupājāḥ—पृथुतेजाः अथवा पृथुवेगः । (pṛthutejāḥ athavā pṛthuvegaḥ |) This Vaiśvānara Agni has much radiance (is possessed of splendour or power) or is very swift. He has the power to burn even a great forest in a moment.

दाशुषे रत्ना वसु वि दयमानः (dāśuṣe ratnā vasu vi dayamānaḥ)—the meaning is that this Vaiśvānara Agni gives especially delightful wealth to the sacrificers who offer oblation.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

Vaiśvānara, praised by the singers, ascends as soon as he is born, like an ancient, to heaven, the upper region of the atmosphere. That same Vaiśvānara, producing for this sacrificer the praiser too wealth in the form of cattle and the like as he provided for the former sages, ever awake, travels in the form of the Sun on the path of the atmosphere common to all the gods.

Printed English translation

p. 596

[Running head, p. 596: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 2.]

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In the previous Ṛk Vaiśvānara Agni was described as being in the bodies of creatures in the form of the digestive fire (the printed Kannada has "ಜಾಠರಾಗ್ನಿ", as supplied); in this Ṛk his being in the atmosphere in the form of Āditya is explained.

Pratnathā—since the word pratna is read among the names of the ancient (Ni. 3-20), it means the ancient one. The Sun is very ancient; he has been there for a long time in the past, and will be there in future: this is the sense.

Divaḥ pṛṣṭhaṃ—in the world of heaven, nāka is the highest region; pṛṣṭha is said to be the lowest. But it is said that this pṛṣṭha lies between the upper part of the atmosphere and the lower part of heaven.

Nākaṃ—Yāska explains the word nāka thus:

नाक आदित्यो भवति । नेता रसानां भासां ज्योतिषां प्रणयः । अथ द्यौः । कमिति सुखनाम । तत् प्रतिषिद्धं प्रतिषिध्येत । “ न वा अमुं लोकं जग्मुषे किंच नाकं ” । न वा अमुं लोकं गतवते किंच नासुखं पुण्यकृतो ह्येव तत्र गच्छंति । (nāka ādityo bhavati | netā rasānāṃ bhāsāṃ jyotiṣāṃ praṇayaḥ | atha dyauḥ | kamiti sukhanāma | tat pratiṣiddhaṃ pratiṣidhyeta | “ na vā amuṃ lokaṃ jagmuṣe kiṃca nākaṃ ” | na vā amuṃ lokaṃ gatavate kiṃca nāsukhaṃ puṇyakṛto hyeva tatra gacchaṃti |) (printed ೨. 9-14, i.e. Ni. 9-14)

Nāka means also Āditya. That is, since Āditya is the carrier of sap, that is, he draws up with his rays the saps in liquid form such as water, or spreads light or radiance everywhere, the word nāka also means Āditya. Besides, "atha dyauḥ" means that the word nāka means heaven too. साधारणांतुत्तराणि षट् दिवश्चादित्यस्य च (sādhāraṇāṃtuttarāṇi ṣaṭ divaścādityasya ca) means that six words beginning with nāka are common synonyms of the world of heaven and of Āditya (2-13, as printed, with no work named). Explaining the parts of the word nāka: ka is happiness; aka, what is opposed to it, is sorrow; na + aka = nāka, a place where there is no sorrow, heaven, that is, a place free from lack of happiness, devoid of sorrow. He then gives as example the Śruti sentence

न ना अमुं लोकं जग्मुषे किं च नाकं । (na nā amuṃ lokaṃ jagmuṣe kiṃ ca nākaṃ |) (printed ಕಾಠಕ೦. ಸ೦. 21-2)

That is, for this world (heaven) there is no sorrow at all; only those who have done meritorious acts enter this world. Thus he has explained the meaning of the word nāka.

Printed English translation

We implore for present riches, the many-moving, tawny-rayed, resplendent Agni, whom mighty, venerable, wise, adorable, and dwelling in the sky, the wind (brought down) and deposited (upon the earth).

ವಿಶೇಷವಿಷಯಗಳು (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Mātariśvā—मातरिश्वा वायुर्मातर्यंतरिक्षे श्वसिति मातराश्वनितीति वा । (mātariśvā vāyurmātaryaṃtarikṣe śvasiti mātarāśvanitīti vā |) Since it breathes in the atmosphere or moves in it, the wind gets the name Mātariśvan. In the Ṛk Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-94-4 they take the word to mean Agni, and in Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-141-3 the sacrificers. But apart from one or two such places, everywhere else Mātariśvan means the wind.

अन्यं मातरिश्वा दिव आ जभार (anyaṃ mātariśvā diva ā jabhāra)—the supernatural manifestation and the earthly production of Agni, who is the sacrifice in essence, are described in many ways. Agni, who is the banner of the sacrifices, the means of the vidatha, the father of rites such as the sacrifices and the king of the adhvaras (see the descriptions in the Ṛks Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-3-3; 3-11-2; 4-2-3 and so on), was first manifested to the wind in the form of lightning, as in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā (the supplied line breaks off here: "ಋಕ್ಸಂಹಿತೆಯ")

स जायमानः परमे व्योमन्याविरग्नि रभवन्मातरिश्वने । (sa jāyamānaḥ parame vyomanyāviragni rabhavanmātariśvane |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-43-2) and in other Ṛks it is praised. There are many Śruti sentences saying that this wind brought Agni, hidden in a very distant region, for the sacrificers Bhṛgu and Manu, and helped them. For example—

द्विजन्मानं रयिमिव प्रशस्तं राशिं भरद्भृगवे मातरिश्वा । (dvijanmānaṃ rayimiva praśastaṃ rāśiṃ bharadbhṛgave mātariśvā |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-60-1)

ऐनं नयन्मातरिश्वा परावतो देवेभ्यो मथितं परि । (ainaṃ nayanmātariśvā parāvato devebhyo mathitaṃ pari |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-9-5)

ईळेन्यं प्रथमं मातरिश्वा देवास्ततक्षुर्मनवे यजत्रं । (īḷenyaṃ prathamaṃ mātariśvā devāstatakṣurmanave yajatraṃ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-46-9)

In these and many other Ṛks it is well known from the Śruti that Mātariśvan brought to earth, for the benefit of the sacrificers Bhṛgu and Manu, the Agni hidden in a far-off region, and thus did good to all the people on earth.

Mātariśvā mathit—for the explanation of the word Mātariśvan see the Special Topics on Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-93-6. कीदृशः मातरिश्वा । विभृतः । प्राणिषु प्राणापानादि पंच वृत्तिरूपेण विहृतो विभज्य स्थितः । (kīdṛśaḥ mātariśvā | vibhṛtaḥ | prāṇiṣu prāṇāpānādi paṃca vṛttirūpeṇa vihṛto vibhajya sthitaḥ |) He explains the word vibhṛtaḥ as one who is spread, divided into five, in creatures as prāṇa, apāna, vyāna, udāna and samāna; and of these the bhāṣyakāra explains that Mātariśvan in this context is व्यानवृत्तिरूपेणावस्थितो मुख्यप्राणः । (vyānavṛttirūpeṇāvasthito mukhyaprāṇaḥ |), the principal breath, the wind existing in the form of vyāna. To support the view that the wind in this form was able to churn the fire and did this work, he cites from the Chāndogya Upaniṣad the praise of the wind in the form of vyāna:

अथ यः प्राणापानयोः संधिः स व्यानः । अतो यान्यन्यानि वीर्यवंति कर्माणि यथाग्नेर्मंथनमाजेः सरणं दृढस्य धनुषः आयमनमप्राणन्ननपानंस्तानि करोति । (atha yaḥ prāṇāpānayoḥ saṃdhiḥ sa vyānaḥ | ato yānyanyāni vīryavaṃti karmāṇi yathāgnermaṃthanamājeḥ saraṇaṃ dṛḍhasya dhanuṣaḥ

āyamanamaprāṇannannapānaṃstāni karoti |) The purport of this Śruti sentence is that all the mighty acts that exceed the power of prāṇa and apāna, such as the churning of fire, can be done only by the wind in the form of vyāna. (printed ಛಾ. ಉ. 1-3-3-5)

p. 600

There is an ancient story about the churning of fire. As it says, सर्वमिदमंधं तम असीत् । अथ मातरिश्वाकाशे सूक्ष्ममग्निमपश्यत् । तममथ्नात् । मथित्वाचानयदिति । (sarvamidamaṃdhaṃ tama asīt | atha mātariśvākāśe sūkṣmamagnimapaśyat | tamamathnāt | madhitvācānayaditi |) In the past the whole world was covered by pitch darkness. Then Mātariśvan perceived the fire in subtle form in the sky and churned it. Afterwards he brought it to earth so that it could serve the sacrifice. This well-known story is told in brief in many places in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā. For example—

आ दूतो अग्निमभरद्विवस्वतो वैश्वानरं मातरिश्वा परावतः । (ā dūto agnimabharadvivasvato vaiśvānaraṃ mātariśvā parāvataḥ |) (printed ಮ. ಸಂ. 6-8-4)

In these Ṛks too Agni is praised as here, together with the earlier story. The meaning is that only after Mātariśvan had brought him did Agni shine in the sacrificial house.

We ask with praise Agni, who is shining, desired in the sacrifice, seen by all, the revealer of the world of heaven, present within the Sun, awake at dawn for the sacrifice, chief of heaven, of unchecked voice, possessed of food and of great form.

Printed English translation

We implore with prayer the mighty Agni, the giver of food, the unrefusing, (seated on) the front of heaven; the radiant in the sacrifice, him who is to be sought (for by all), the beholder of all, the emblem of heaven, the dweller in light, who is to be awakened at dawn.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Apratiṣṭutaṃ—Yāska gives for this word the explanation अप्रतिष्टुतोऽप्रतिष्ठितोऽप्रतिस्खलितो वा (apratiṣṭuto 'pratiṣṭhito 'pratiskhalito vā) (Ni. 6-16). That is, he does not reject our prayer. It also means one without a rival in speech, without an equal, unchecked; or one who does not turn his back in battle (in war).

Svardṛśaṃ—सर्वदृशं सर्वपदार्थविज्ञानयुक्तं । (sarvadṛśaṃ sarvapadārthavijñānayuktaṃ |) One seen by all, that is, all see him as he shines in heaven (in the atmosphere) in the form of the Sun; or, as another meaning, one who has knowledge of all things.

[Running head, p. 603: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 20, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

Printed English translation

We solicit wealth of the adorable (Agni), the invoker of the gods, the pure, the single-minded, the munificent, the commendable, the beholder of all, who is many-coloured like a chariot, elegant in form, and always friendly to mankind.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Advayāvinaṃ—द्वयहीनं अकुटिलं । (dvayahīnaṃ akuṭilaṃ |) One free of duplicity, that is, thinking one way in the mind and acting another way in deed: this kind of nature is found in wicked people. The meaning is that he has no such nature, that he is straightforward.

Damūnasaṃ—Yāska has given the explanation दमूनाः क्षेत्रसाधाः (damūnāḥ kṣetrasādhāḥ) (Ni. 2-2). Saying that the word damūnāḥ is a name of Agni, दमूना अग्नि रुच्यते दममनाः । (damūnā agni rucyate damamanāḥ |)—

दमूना दममना वा, दानमना वा, दांतमना वा । अपि ना दम इति गृहनाम तन्मनाः स्यात् । मनो मनोतेः । (damūnā damamanā vā, dānamanā vā, dāṃtamanā vā | api nā dama iti gṛhanāma tanmanāḥ syāt | mano manoteḥ |) (Ni. 4-4)

he gives the explanation. That is, one whose mind is in restraint, that is, whose mind is not cruel; or one whose mind is set on giving wealth and the like to those who praise him; or one whose mind is fixed on the persons who practise the yamas and niyamas, that is, who has a mind of favour towards them; or, dama being a name of the house, one whose mind is in it: that is, in the house of the sacrificer who performs the sacrifice he always dwells under the name Gṛhapati Agni and favours them. Thus the meaning is explained.

Sūkta 3 (Maṇḍala 3)

The third sūkta of the Third Maṇḍala.

[Garbled heading as supplied before the introduction: "ಪಿ ಳ ಠ ಕೆ." (for Pīṭhike), kept as a note in kn.md.]

Pīṭhike (Introduction) to Sūkta 3

1. The identity of Agni and the Agniṣṭoma; the power of Agni—The present sūkta, and the preceding one, that is, the second sūkta beginning with the mantra "Vaiśvānarāya", are both to be recited at the time of the recitation of the Āgnimāruta śastra, according to the Aśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra rule, and so it has been indicated. But the previous sūkta is to be recited, by rule, on the third day of the rites called Pṛṣṭhyābhiplava. The sentence of the Aitareya Āraṇyaka states वैश्वानराय धिषणामृतावृध इत्याग्निमारुतस्य प्रतिपदंतः (vaiśvānarāya dhiṣaṇāmṛtāvṛdha ityāgnimārutasya pratipadaṃtaḥ) (Ai. Ā. 1-5-3). The present sūkta is stated, अस्य सूक्तस्याग्निष्टोमे आग्निमारुते शस्त्रे विनियोगः (asya sūktasyāgniṣṭome āgnimārute śastre viniyogaḥ), to be connected with the Āgnimāruta śastra, which has to be recited at the time of the Agniṣṭoma (Ā. Śrau. Sū. 5-20).

[Running head, p. 604: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 3 (the sūkta number is now 3).]

The glory of the Vaiśvānara principle praised by the mantras of this sūkta is most venerable and fit for meditation. This Vaiśvānara principle is the root of the universe, its support, and the representative of the sacrifice. Therefore, having understood the nature of the Agniṣṭoma and the Āgnimāruta śastra, one should understand the nature of Vaiśvānara praised in this sūkta, which is their part.

अग्नेयमग्निष्टोम आलभते । अग्निर्वा अग्निष्टोमः (agneyamagniṣṭoma ālabhate | agnirvā agniṣṭomaḥ) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 5-1-3-1, i.e. Śat. Brā. 5-1-3-1)

In these sentences the identity of Agni and the Agniṣṭoma is stated. In such contexts Sāyaṇa has explained clearly the meaning of the word agniṣṭoma: अग्निः सूयतेऽस्मिन् इत्यग्निष्टोमो नाम साम ; तस्मिन् विषयभूतः आग्नेयं आलभते (agniḥ sūyate 'smin ityagniṣṭomo nāma sāma ; tasmin viṣayabhūtaḥ āgneyaṃ ālabhate) and अग्निष्टोमसंस्थः क्रतुः (agniṣṭomasaṃsthaḥ kratuḥ). By such explanatory sentences the nature of the Agniṣṭoma is told, in some places as the mantra to be recited at a fixed time at the end of the Soma sacrifice, and in other places as a separate special kratu forming part of the Jyotiṣṭoma sacrifice. According to the second explanation, if the Agniṣṭoma is a special kratu, then Vaiśvānara Agni, of the form of universal light, and the Agniṣṭoma, which is a part of the Jyotiṣṭoma, are directly related. Since it also has mantras in praise of Agni, the name Agniṣṭoma became established. The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa describes its nature in the form of a legend, and also states that other kratus too are special acts that increase its glory (Ai. Brā. 14.39-44). We shall explain it briefly here—

The gods began a war with the asuras with the aim of conquering them. But Agni did not wish to join them and help them. Then the gods prayed to Agni: "You too are ours. You must join us to help us." Then Agni said: "If you do not recite my praising mantras and praise me, I will not come with you." They all praised Agni accordingly. At once Agni set out with them. Then Agni divided himself into three ranks and set out in three groups to conquer the asuras. The metres became the three ranks, and the three pressings became the three divisions of the army. With these implements he fought and defeated the asuras and drove them away. One who knows this principle defeats and destroys the enemy who hates him.

Brā. 14-39)

Just as there are twenty-four syllables in the Gāyatrī, so in the Agniṣṭoma there are twenty-four stotras and śastras; therefore the identity of the Agniṣṭoma and the Gāyatrī must be stated. That is why it is said in the world that a horse bearing an excellent load is a convenient vehicle for the sacrificer. This same Gāyatrī, of such greatness, is not content with an existence merely on earth, but takes the sacrificer with it and flies up to heaven. In the same way the Agniṣṭoma too is not content with a merely earthly existence but takes the sacrificer with it and flies up to heaven. As the year has twenty-four half-months, so the Agniṣṭoma has twenty-four stotras and śastra mantras; therefore the Agniṣṭoma is of the nature of the year. As all streams come together and unite in the ocean, in this Agniṣṭoma all the other series of rites too unite.

When the dīkṣā sacrifice is performed all the oblations too attain unity in the Agniṣṭoma. When, praying to Iḷā in the form of food, one performs the cooked-offering sacrifice by her favour, all the oblations offered there go to the Agniṣṭoma. The Agnihotra, which includes the cakes and the like offered with svāhā in the evening and the morning at the time of the Agnihotra, is also included in the Agniṣṭoma. In the full-moon and new-moon sacrifices the new-moon and full-moon rites, to which the introductory oblations were offered while the fifteen sāmidhenī mantras are recited, also attain identity in the Agniṣṭoma.

The purchase of soma, king of plants, is conducted according to the śāstra. With the help of these plants they cure all the sick. Therefore after the purchase of soma, along with whatever medicinal plants there are, King Soma becomes of the nature of the Agniṣṭoma. In the Cāturmāsyas the churning of fire is performed as part of the hospitality rite. All these Cāturmāsya rites, preceded by the churning of fire, are included in the Agniṣṭoma. They prepare for the Pravargya sacrifice with milk. This same milk-material is also the apparatus of the Dākṣāyaṇa sacrifice; therefore the Dākṣāyaṇa, preceded by the Pravargya, joins the Agniṣṭoma. All animal sacrifices too are included in the Agniṣṭoma through the animal offered on the first day. The Iḷādadha rite is performed with curds; so is the dadhigharma rite. Therefore the dadhigharma rite attains unity in the Agniṣṭoma with the help of the Iḷādadha.

The rites prescribed for the earlier rites become attached also to the later rites. In the ukthya there are fifteen stotras and fifteen śastras. These thirty are parts of the month. By the order of these months the year is completed. Agni Vaiśvānara is the year. Agni is the Agniṣṭoma. Since the vājapeya too is only a variety of the ukthya, the resolve for the vājapeya is made as soon as the resolve for the ukthya is made. In the pañcadaśa stoma there are twelve night-turns. Doubled, this is thirty. The Ṣoḍaśin is of the nature of ekaviṃśa and the saṃdhi is trivṛt. These are equal to the thirty nights in the month of thirty. By such an arrangement of months there is the year. This year-form is Agni Vaiśvānara. The Agniṣṭoma is Agni. Therefore, through the year, the atirātra is conceived in the Agniṣṭoma.

Therefore all the sacrificial rites that precede the Agniṣṭoma and those performed after it come to their conclusion in the Agniṣṭoma itself. Taking together all the stotras recited in these rites, they add up to one hundred and ninety-nine. Of them ninety only, corresponds to the trivṛt stoma counted as ten, and the other ninety to another group of ten-counted trivṛt stomas. Of the remaining ten, one stotriya mantra and one trivṛt remained. That one shines forth, illuminating all the rest, under the name of the ekaviṃśa. The stotriya mantra, which holds the place of pre-eminence, is joined with this ekaviṃśa. That is the sacrificer. That is the kṣatra endowed with divine power, that is the one full of all strength. One who knows this principle obtains kṣatriya power, every kind of radiance and strength, communion with this divine power, a like form and pervasion of all worlds.

The gods, having conquered the asuras with the help of Agni, reached heaven. Agni, of the power described above, flew up to the atmosphere, opened the door of heaven and became lord of all heaven. The other gods had to enter heaven only with his permission. Then the Vasus came to him and asked that they too be allowed entry. When he said, "If you do not praise me, there is no entry for you", the Vasus at once praised Agni with the trivṛt stoma; then Agni gave them room to enter. The Vasus entered heaven and took their places. Then the Rudras came and asked to be given entry. Agni said that there was no entry unless they praised him. They agreed to praise him and praised him with the pañcadaśa stoma. Then Agni gave them room to enter, and at once they entered heaven and took their places. Then the Ādityas came and prayed to Agni, "Give us also the opportunity to enter heaven." Again Agni told them too, "Unless you praise me you have no right of entry." They agreed to praise him and praised his glory with the saptadaśa stoma. Then they entered heaven and took their places.

Then the Viśvedevas approached Agni and said, "Give us also the opportunity to enter heaven." He said, "Unless you praise me you cannot be given the opportunity to enter." At once they agreed to praise him and praised him with the ekaviṃśa stoma. Then they got the opportunity to enter and went and took their own places. In this way Agni has been praised by the stomas. Having praised him and gained his favour, the other gods are well established in heaven. The sacrificer too, who knowing this principle performs the sacrifice and praises Agni with the stomas, becomes worthy of Agni's favour; he gets the opportunity to enter heaven and is well established in heaven.

The gods, who love the indirect, called the praise of Agni the Agniṣṭoma. In this Agniṣṭoma there are praise-sentences that extol the greatness of Agni. All these are forms of Agni; yet the gods did not call them simply Agni but called them Agniṣṭoma. The gods describe nothing directly. They love secret meanings. Therefore in their descriptions there is always a hidden meaning.

p. 610

Because the groups of gods, four in number, praised this same Agni, and because there are four stomas in it, it has the name Catuṣṭoma. The gods, who love the indirect, have shown a hidden meaning in this too. When Agni flew up to the atmosphere and shone in the form of light, the gods praised this light; therefore it has the name Jyotiṣṭoma. The gods, who love the indirect, have shown the secret of the principle here too. In this way this sacrificial rite, called by the names Agniṣṭoma, Catuṣṭoma and Jyotiṣṭoma, is without beginning and without end. This Agniṣṭoma is endless like a chariot wheel. Therefore the praise-sentence that extols its greatness is as follows.

यदस्य पूर्वमपरं तदस्य यद्वस्यापरं तद्वस्य पूर्वं । अहेरिव सर्पणं शाकलस्य न विजानंति यतरत्परस्तादिति यथा ह्येवास्य प्रायणमेवमुदयनमसदिति तदाहुर्यत्रिवृत्प्रायणमेकविंशमुदयनं केन ते समे इति यो वा एकविंशस्त्रिवृद्धै सोऽथो यदुभौ तृचौ तृचिनाविति ब्रूयात्तेनेति । (yadasya pūrvamaparaṃ tadasya yadvasyāparaṃ tadvasya pūrvaṃ | aheriva sarpaṇaṃ śākalasya na vijānaṃti yataratparastāditi yathā hyevāsya prāyaṇamevamudayanamasaditi tadāhuryatrivṛtprāyaṇamekaviṃśamudayanaṃ kena te same iti yo vā ekaviṃśastrivṛddhai so 'tho yadubhau tṛcau tṛcināviti brūyātteneti |) (printed (೧೪-೪೩), Ai. Brā. 14-43)

Whatever is the end of this Agniṣṭoma is its beginning; whatever is the beginning is its end. The revolution of this śākala is like the winding of a snake. Concerning its beginning and end, no one can say which is the first and which the last, which the cause and which the effect. It is without beginning and without end. Therefore those who know say, "What is the beginning must also be the end." But here there is room for another doubt. "The beginning of this Agniṣṭoma has the trivṛt; the end is of the nature of the ekaviṃśa. So the beginning is one thing and the end another. How can both be called one?" This question is natural. But there is no ground for doubt there. The ekaviṃśa is also trivṛt and is of the nature of tṛca; therefore there is no difference at all between the beginning and the end.

Vaiśvānara Agni, shining in the form of Āditya, is the Agniṣṭoma. This Agniṣṭoma, which is a rite, is to be finished within one oblation. The end of the rite too must be joined with the end of the day; therefore it also has the name sāhna. As at the morning pressing, so at the midday pressing and at the third pressing these rites are to be carried out without the slightest hurry, with deliberation. Because the rite is performed with great deliberation at the first two pressings, the villages of the eastern part are all full of crops and people. Because at the third pressing the rites are done in some haste, the regions in the western part are all forest, uninhabited. If the work is done in haste in this way, harm comes to the sacrificer. As at the morning and midday pressings he carries out the acts with faith and deliberation, if he carries them out in the same way at the third pressing too, without haste and with deliberation, there is no harm of any kind to the sacrificer. He becomes prosperous.

Brā. 14-44; the last words are followed by a stray "li" in the supplied text, for the closing ॥)

These rites of the Jyotiṣṭoma must be followed in every way in accordance with the movement of Āditya. In the recitation of mantras too the qualities in the revolution of Āditya must be followed. Since Āditya at rising shines gently, the sacrificer (or hotṛ) should recite the mantra gently (softly) at the time of the morning pressing. At midday the radiance and heat of Āditya increase, and so at the time of the midday pressing the recitation of the mantras should be with a raised body and a high voice. As he moves further, the heat of the radiance of Āditya still is intense. Therefore at the time of the third pressing the mantras should be recited with a very high voice. Since speech itself is the śastra, if the sacrificer follows this order of reciting the śastra, he gains lordship over speech. He should recite the śastra mantra as high as he can with his strength.

From the saying "the Sun sets" one should not understand that the Sun really sets. For him there is neither rising nor setting; the meaning of "he sets" is that the day remains below and the night comes to the upper part. In the same way the saying "he rises" too must be given the opposite meaning. There is no real setting. He is eternal and always endowed with light. That one who, knowing this principle of Agni in the form of light in the form of the movement of Āditya, worships Agni, obtains communion with this Agni and likeness to him and obtains pervasion of all worlds: this is the description of the greatness of the Agniṣṭoma.

For the Agniṣṭoma, of such greatness, there is a rule that at the time of reciting the Āgnimāruta śastra, which is part of it, the present sūkta praising Vaiśvānara Agni is to be recited. What the greatness of Vaiśvānara Agni described in the Āgnimāruta śastra is must now be examined.

1. The great qualities of Vaiśvānara Agni described in the Āgnimāruta śastra.

वैश्वानरीयेणाग्निमारुतं प्रतिपद्यते वैश्वानरो ना एतद्रेतः.....॥ (vaiśvānarīyeṇāgnimārutaṃ pratipadyate vaiśvānaro nā etadretaḥ.....॥) (printed ಐ. ಬ್ರಾ. 13-35, i.e. Ai. Brā. 13-35; the printed quotation has a row of dots before the closing ॥)

Showing the relation between Vaiśvānara and the Āgnimāruta śastra: "Vaiśvānara set in motion the seed that had been poured on the earth; therefore he is praised here." The above sentences indicate the historical circumstance that shows the relation between this śastra mantra and Vaiśvānara Agni. That story is as follows, Prajāpati became infatuated with his own daughter; some say this daughter was Dyu (heaven), others that she was Uṣas. Himself becoming a stag, he followed that daughter, who had taken the form of a doe. The gods saw this scene and understood, "An improper act that has not been done until now is being done by Prajāpati." When they tried to punish him, none among them had the power to punish Prajāpati. Then, when they gathered their terrible forms together and brought them into one person, it became endowed with a greatness that also indicated divinity. The name Bhūtavat (lord) became famous for it. One who knows this name, thus famous, and its greatness becomes wealthy. Then the gods said to him, "Prajāpati has done an improper act that he has never done until now; therefore he must be punished." When they prayed, he said, "Before doing this work I desire a boon from you; you must grant it." When the gods agreed, he asked that he be called Paśupati. The gods called him so; he became famous by that name. Likewise his name Bhūtapati became famous. One who knows the origin of this sacred name and the greatness of the name becomes endowed with cattle.

When Paśupati threw his trident aiming at Prajāpati, it pierced Prajāpati. Then Prajāpati leapt up. Then he was called Mṛga (the stag). Paśupati became famous as Mṛgavyādha (the hunter of the stag). The doe was called Rohiṇī. The three-jointed shaft became the trident. From him who was pierced by it, Prajāpati's seed went out and flowed. Then it became a great lake. The gods did not wish to defile it; they kept it undefiled and pure. Therefore it has the name "māduṣa". Because what pertains to man is māduṣa, the gods, who love the indirect, called this māduṣa mānuṣa. Having described the story of Prajāpati, the greatness of Vaiśvānara Agni is thereby praised.

The gods made that seed to be surrounded by Agni. Then the Maruts tried to set it in motion, but could not. At once they made it surrounded by Vaiśvānara Agni. Then, when the Maruts blew on it, it began to move. Then the first part of the kindled seed shone in the atmosphere in the form of Āditya. The second part turned into the form of Bhṛgu. Varuṇa received it. Therefore Bhṛgu is called Vāruṇi, or son of Varuṇa. The third part of that seed was transformed into the form of the Ādityas of the world of heaven and shone in the form of radiance. The embers became the Aṅgirases; when these embers were quenched they blazed again, and then Bṛhaspati arose. The quenched embers became black cattle, and the ashes spread in various ways were transformed into buffalo, gavaya, camel, ass and the like. This divine person, Paśupati, said, "All these belong to me." But the gods praised him with the mantra आ ते पितर्मरुतांसुम्म मेतु (ā te pitarmarutāṃsumma metu) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-33-1) and prayed, "O Paśupati (Rudra), father of the Maruts, let your grace be upon us. Do not separate us from the sight of the Sun. Have pity on these our cattle; protect us." Therefore,

Therefore, at the end of the mantra one should pray "nābhi naḥ", that is, "do not come against us (in anger)". On that occasion Rudra does not harm the offspring of the praiser. Then one should pray, "O Rudra, make us endowed with abundance of offspring by your favour." But one should not address him by the name "Rudra"; one should recite in the mantra only "rudriya". And—

शं नः करत्यर्वते सुगं मेषाय मेष्ये । नृभ्यो नारिभ्यो गवे (śaṃ naḥ karatyarvate sugaṃ meṣāya meṣye | nṛbhyo nāribhyo gave) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-43-6)

"O god, make safety for our sheep and other cattle and for our offspring": so one should pray. In this prayer-mantra the name Rudra is mentioned, and yet Rudra himself is addressed. If, knowing this principle, one prays to Rudra, the sacrificer gets a full life and prosperity such as sons and grandsons. The recitation of this mantra, which is endowed with the divine power of the Gāyatrī, becomes the cause of all welfare.

1. The place of the present sūkta, which praises Vaiśvānara Agni, in the Agnimāruta śastra.

वैश्वानरीयेणाग्निमारुतं प्रतिपद्यते वैश्वानरो ना एतद्रेतः सिक्तं प्राच्यावयत्तस्माद्वैश्वानरीयेणाग्निमारुतं प्रतिपद्यते अनवानं प्रथम ऋक् शंस्तव्याग्नीन्वा एषोऽर्चि०ष्यशांतान्प्रसीदन्नेति य अग्नि मारुतं शंसति प्राणेनैव तदग्नींस्तरत्यधीयन्नु पहन्यादन्यं विवक्तारमिच्छेत्तमेव तत्सेतुं कृत्वा तरति ॥

The Maruts displayed their power together with Vaiśvānara Agni; so in this Agnimāruta śastra, which praises the greatness of Vaiśvānara Agni, the present sūkta beginning with the mantra "Vaiśvānarāya pṛthupājase" is recited first. Since the seed of Prajāpati poured on the earth moved only by the power of Vaiśvānara Agni, at the beginning of the Āgnimāruta śastra the sūkta addressed to Vaiśvānara must be recited. While reciting this first mantra one must not draw the breath inward. By reciting in this way even a burning flame can be quenched. But since while reciting this mantra there is a chance of error through altered intonation, another reciter must be placed to assist in pointing out such errors. With his help, like a bridge, one can cross the ocean of error.

Therefore, since impure recitation may occur while reciting the Āgnimāruta śastra, another reciter must be placed to help, not trying oneself to correct it. Because the Maruts, together with Agni Vaiśvānara, blew on the seed of Prajāpati and set it in motion, the sūkta that praises the Maruts must also be recited. The mantra addressed to the Maruts, recited between mantras such as "yajñāyajñā vaḥ samanā" यज्ञायज्ञा वः समना (yajñāyajñā vaḥ samanā) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-168-1) and "devo vo draviṇodāḥ" देवो वो द्रविणोदाः (devo vo draviṇodāḥ) (7-16-11), is like an embryo because it lies in the middle of other mantras. That is why the male embryo too lies in the middle of the body. One who knows this principle gains prosperity such as cattle and sons. This is the greatness of Vaiśvānara Agni praised by the Āgnimāruta śastra.

In the present sūkta, indicating the relation of Vaiśvānara, of such greatness, to the principle of the sacrifice, it is shown that creation and everything else is connected with it.

Anuvāda (Kannada).

This sūkta beginning "Vaiśvānarāya" is the third sūkta in the first anuvāka. It has twelve ṛks (the Anuvāda says twelve, while the bhāṣya says "ekādaśarcam", eleven, and the header says eleven, as supplied). The seer of this sūkta is Viśvāmitra; the Anukramaṇikā says "Vaiśvānarāyaikādaśa" (printed "ವೈಶ್ವಾನರಾಯ್ಕೈಕಾದಶ"). Because the Anukramaṇikā of the previous sūkta says "vaiśvānarīyaṃ tu jāgataṃ tu", like that sūkta this one too has Vaiśvānara Agni as deity and Jagatī as metre. That the sūkta is to be used for the recitation of the Āgnimāruta śastra mantras in the Agniṣṭoma sacrifice is explained by the sūtra of the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra "Vaiśvānarāya pṛthupājase śaṃ naḥ karatyarvate" (Ā. 5-20).

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

The wise singers make, in the sacrifices, lovely praises for the worship of Agni, who has abundant strength and is in the form of Vaiśvānara, with the intention of attaining the good path (they offer them). The deathless Agni serves the gods. Therefore no one disparages the eternal sacrifices.

Printed English translation

Intelligent (worshippers), offer to powerful Vaishwanara precious things at holy rites, that they may go(the way of the good), for the immortal Agni worships the gods ; therefore, let no one violate eternal duties.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In the present Ṛk there is praise of Vaiśvānara Agni. That praise indicates the direct relation between Vaiśvānara and the sacrifice. The words dharuṇeṣu and dharmāṇi, synonyms of "sacrifice", tell the special meaning of the principle of sacrifice. Through such a sacrifice, which is of the nature of dharuṇa and dharma, Vaiśvānara Agni serves the gods. Therefore no one disparages this sacrifice; the purport is that it is venerated by the whole world.

In the present context the nature of this sacrifice, which is the means of worshipping the gods, must be examined. In what way it is of the nature of dharuṇa, and what is meant by its being of the nature of dharma, must also be considered.

1. The nature of the principle of sacrifice, which is both dharuṇa and dharma (the supplied text prints "ಆಧ್" for "ಆದ").

धरणेषु—धर्मेषु यज्ञेषु । (dharaṇeṣu—dharmeṣu yajñeṣu |) The word dharuṇa has been taken to mean dharma, "in sacrifices which are of the nature of dharma". Both these words are derived from the root dhṛ, which gives the meaning "to bear". In the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā too the word dharuṇa is used everywhere in the sense of "bearer". Since these words are here synonyms of "sacrifice", the purport is that sacrifice is a bearer; the question is what the sacrifice bears.

यज्ञेन यज्ञमयजंत देवास्तानि धर्माणि प्रथमान्यासन् (yajñena yajñamayajaṃta devāstāni dharmāṇi prathamānyāsan) (printed ಮ. ಸಂ. 10-90-16, i.e. Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-90-16)

The gods worshipped the sacrifice with the sacrifice; this act in the form of worship became the chief supports of the forms and changes of the world: so, explaining the mantra in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā, देवाः (devāḥ)

p. 619

प्रजापतिप्राणरूपाः । यज्ञेन यथोक्तमानसेन संकल्पेन यज्ञं यथोक्तयज्ञस्वरूपं प्रजापतिं अयजंत पूजितवंतः । तस्मात् पूजनात् तानि प्रसिद्धानि धर्माणि जगद्रूपविकाराणां धारकाणि मुख्यान्यासन् ॥ (prajāpatiprāṇarūpāḥ | yajñena yathoktamānasena saṃkalpena yajñaṃ yathoktayajñasvarūpaṃ prajāpatiṃ ayajaṃta pūjitavaṃtaḥ | tasmāt pūjanāt tāni prasiddhāni dharmāṇi jagadrūpavikārāṇāṃ dhārakāṇi mukhyānyāsan ॥) The Prajāpati-breaths are what the word "gods" signifies. "By the sacrifice" means by a mental resolve; "the sacrifice" means the very Prajāpati who is of the form of the sacrifice, "they worshipped". This worship itself became the well-known acts that support the world. Thus the identity of Prajāpati and the sacrifice from one point of view, and the relation of cause and effect from another, are told. But in such a sacrifice, what are the nature and place of Agni, the banner of the sacrifice and the means of the vidatha? What is the relation of Vaiśvānara Agni, described in the present Ṛk, to the sacrifice, which is of the nature of dharma? To this—

उभयगं् हैतद्भवति पिता च पुत्रश्च प्रजापतिश्चाग्निश्चाग्निश्च प्रजापतिश्च प्रजापतिश्च देवाश्च देवाश्च प्रजापतिश्च य एवं वेद । (ubhayagṃ haitadbhavati pitā ca putraśca prajāpatiścāgniścāgnisca prajāpatiśca prajāpatiśca devāśca devāśca prajāpatiśca ya evaṃ veda |) (printed శ. బ్రా. 6-1-2-27, i.e. Śat. Brā. 6-1-2-27)

This principle of sacrifice (or of the universe) is twofold. It is of the nature of father and son. Prajāpati is the father of Agni, Agni is the father of Prajāpati (Śat. Brā. 6-1-2-26). Prajāpati is the father of the gods, the gods are the fathers of Prajāpati; thus there is a union of the father-and-son forms. स दाधार पृथिवीमुत द्यां (sa dādhāra pṛthivīmuta dyāṃ) and य आत्मदा बलदाः (ya ātmadā baladāḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-121-1, 2): that same Prajāpati (of the form of Hiraṇyagarbha) bore the whole universe in himself. By his self-sacrifice all creation became possible. All gods, men and the rest are under his rule, and so on. As is the description of that Prajāpati, so too—

तस्य ह ना एतस्यात्मनो वैश्वानरस्य मूर्धैव सुतेजा चक्षुर्विश्वरूपः प्राणः पृथग्वर्त्मात्मा संदेहो बहुलो बस्तिरेव रयिः पृथिव्येव पादावुर एव वेदिर्लोमानि बर्हिर्हृदयं ; गार्हपत्यो मनोऽन्वाहार्यपचन आस्यमाहवनीयः । (tasya ha nā etasyātmano vaiśvānarasya mūrdhaiva sutejā cakṣurviśvarūpaḥ prāṇaḥ pṛthagvartvātmā saṃdeho bahulo bastireva rayiḥ pṛthivyeva pādāvura eva vedirlomāni barhirhṛdayaṃ ; gārhapatyo manoSnvāhāryapacana āsyamāhavanīyaḥ |) (printed ಛಾ. ಉ. 5-18-2, i.e. Chā. Up. 5-18-2)

The radiant atmosphere is the head of the universal-souled Vaiśvānara; the Āditya of all forms is his eye (printed "ನೇತೃವು", leader). The wind of diverse paths is the breath; the wide-spread quarter is the body; the wealth of water is his inner treasury; the all-supporting earth is the feet; the sacrificial altar is the breast; the sacred grass is the hair; the Gārhapatya fire is the heart; the Anvāhāryapacana fire is the mind; the Āhavanīya fire is his mouth.

p. 620

Thus the sacrificer who, knowing the universal and divine form of Vaiśvānara Agni, performs the Agnihotra is as one who has made the offering in all beings, in all worlds and in all selves: so Vaiśvānara Agni is described. As Prajāpati is described as ātmadāḥ and baladāḥ (giver of self, giver of strength), in the same way gods, men and others are able to uphold the law of the universe only through the sacrificial act of the nature of giving of self. In this respect all beings must follow the dharma of Prajāpati. Śruti sentences that state a rule and are told in the form of history show the pre-eminence of the sacrifice, which is of the nature of dharma.

अथ देवाः । अन्योन्यस्मिन्नेव जुह्वतश्चेरुस्तेभ्यः प्रजापतिरात्मानं प्रददौ यज्ञो हैषामास यज्ञो हि देवानामन्नं ॥ स देवेभ्य आत्मानं प्रदाय । अथैतमात्मनः प्रतिमामसृजत यद्यज्ञं तस्मादाहुः प्रजापतिर्यज्ञ इत्यात्मनो ह्येतं प्रतिमामसृजत । (atha devāḥ | annonnasminneva juhvataścerustebhyaḥ prajāpatirātmānaṃ pradadau yajño haiṣāmāsa yajño hi

devānāmannaṃ ‖ sa devebhya ātmānaṃ pradāya | athaitamātmanaḥ pratimāmasṛjata yadyajñaṃ tasmādāhuḥ prajāpatiryajña ityātmano hyetaṃ pratimāmasṛjata |) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 11. ಗ. 8-2-3, as supplied: Śat. Brā. 11, with the intermediate letter as printed)

The gods, showing mutual self-sacrifice, served one another. Prajāpati offered himself to them. Then the sacrifice fell to the share of the gods. Having offered himself to the gods, he created his representative, the sacrifice. Therefore it is well known that the universal-souled Prajāpati is the sacrifice and that the sacrifice is Prajāpati. As this sacrificial act, which is the governance of Prajāpati, was first undertaken by the gods, so the sacrificial act is also the duty of man. Otherwise man will not have kept the law of the universe.

स यदेव यजेत। तेन देवेभ्य ऋणं जायते तिद्द्येभ्य एतत्करोति यदेनान्यजते यदेभ्यो जुहोति ॥ (sa yadeva yajeta| tena devebhya ṛṇaṃ jāyate tiddyebhya etatkaroti yadenānyajate yadebhyo juhoti ‖) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 1-7-2-2)

The performance of sacrifice is the dharma ordained for man. He is indebted to the gods from creation. Therefore if he satisfies them by the sacrifice, he has kept his dharma. And so on. Thus it is told that the relation of all beings, gods, men and others, to the sacrifice, from Prajāpati the creator, and the relation of this whole universe through this sacrifice, is in a fixed state; that keeping this order of the universe is dharma; and that this dharma is in the form of sacrifice. To show that this dharma, like Prajāpati, has no beginning, the present Ṛk has the epithet sanatā.

सर्वेषां वाएष भूतानागं् सर्वेषां देवानामात्मा ॥ (sarveṣāṃ vāeṣa bhūtānāgṃ sarveṣāṃ devānāmātmā ‖) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 14-3-2-1)

p. 621

[Running head, p. 621: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 20, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

This sacrifice, of the nature of the law of the universe, is the self of all beings and the self of the gods. This is the self of the universe. Since it is also the support of the universe, in the present Ṛk it is called dharuṇa, that is, the upholder of the universe.

To know the special meanings of the epithets dharuṇeṣu and sanatā dharmāṇi one must understand the subtle nature of the sacrifice still more clearly. As, by the epithets ātmadāḥ and baladāḥ, it is told that Prajāpati, by offering himself in the form of sacrifice, became the cause of the creation and maintenance of the universe, so the Śrutis praise the sacrifice, saying that it too, by its own offering, is the protector of the law of the universe.

अथ यस्माद्यज्ञो नाम । घ्नंति वा एनमेतद्यदभिषुण्वंति तद्यदेनं तन्वते तदेनं जनयंति स तायमानो जायते स यन् जायते तस्माद्यइत्तो यइत्तो ह वै नामैतद्यद्यज्ञ इति ॥ (atha yasmādyajño nāma | ghnaṃti vā enametadyadabhiṣuṇvaṃti tadyadenaṃ tanvate tadenaṃ janayaṃti sa tāyamāno jāyate sa yan jāyate tasmādyaitto yaitto ha vai nāmaitadyadyajña iti ॥) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 3-9-4-23)

At the time of pressing, as the sacrifice is slain, the sacrifice is thereby offered. With the offering of soma it becomes spread out again at the time of carrying on the sacrifice. The slain sacrifice takes birth again and spreads. Since there is such a moving birth, the name yajña is famous: thus the nature of the sacrifice's self-sacrifice is also described. This very sacrifice is the protector and upholder of the universe. How? —

स यदग्न् जुहोति । तद्देवेषु जुहोति तस्माद्देवाः संत्यथ यत्सदसि भक्षयंति तन्मनुष्येषु जुहोति तस्मान्मनुष्याः सन्त्यथ यद्धविर्धानयोर्नाराशग्ंसाः सीदंति तत्पितृषु जुहोति तस्मात्पितरः सन्ति ॥ (sa yadagn juhoti | taddeveṣu juhoti tasmāddevāḥ saṃtyatha yatsadasi bhakṣayaṃti tannanuṣyeṣu juhoti tasmānmanuṣyāḥ santyatha yaddhavirdhānayornārāśagṃsāḥ sīdaṃti tatpitṛṣu juhoti tasmātpitaraḥ santi ॥) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 3-6-2-25)

The oblation offered in the fire reaches the gods. By that the gods are sustained. By the sacrificial sap drunk in the sadas, men are sustained. By the soma-drinking of the narāśaṃsa kind, the state of the fathers is sustained. Thus the sustenance of all, gods, men and others, is possible only through the sacrifice. That is why it is called by the word dharuṇa.

That derivation (the supplied text prints "ಯನ್ ಜ (ಯಜ್ಞ) ಚಲಿಸುತ್ತಲೇ ಉತ್ಪನ್ನ ವಾಗುತ್ತದೆ") which shows that the sacrifice is born while moving, indicates the dharma of sacrifice; that same dharma tells of the creation and the maintenance of the universe. As the sacrifice is the upholder of all, gods, men and the rest, so their creation too is only through the sacrifice.

p. 622

य इमा विश्वा भुवनानि जुह्वदृषिर्होता न्यसीदत्पिता नः । स आशिषा द्रविणमिच्छमानः प्रथमच्छदवरा आ विवेश ॥ (ya imā viśvā bhuvanāni juhvadṛṣirhotā nyasīdatpitā naḥ | sa āśiṣā draviṇamicchamānaḥ prathamacchadavarā ā viveśa ‖) (printed ಮ. ಸ೦ ೧೦-೮೧-೧, i.e. Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-81-1)

Viśvakarman, the seer and hotṛ, offered all the worlds as the oblation of the sacrifice. Afterwards he created everything again by austerity (स तपोऽतप्यत । स तपस्तप्ता इदग्ंसर्वमसृजत (sa tapo 'tapyata | sa tapastaptā idagṃsarvamasṛjata)). In this explanation, that the sacrifice became the root of the creation of the universe, one more point must be noted. From sentences such as स्वयं यजस्व तन्नवं वृधानः (svayaṃ yajasva tannavaṃ vṛdhānaḥ) (10-81-5), although Prajāpati (or Viśvakarman) before creation offered his own body in the form of the sacrificial oblation, it was possible for it to grow still more extensively; this explanation makes it clear that no sacrifice made in the form of a rite becomes a cause of destruction but rather a cause of growth. The secret of the principle of sacrifice, which has thus the nature of dharuṇa and of dharma, will be explained at length later, when the nature of the agnicayana is told.

Vipaḥ—this word is read among the names of the finger (Ni. 2-5) and among the names of the wise (Ni. 3-15). In the present context it means the wise praisers.

Gātave—सन्मार्गलाभाय । (sanmārgalābhāya |) The ethical meaning, "for the sake of conducting oneself on the good path", is given. These words, gātum and gātave, are used in some places in the sense of the path of practice and in others in the sense of the path of going to the world of the gods. In many places such as उरुं नो गातुं कृणु सोम विद्ꣳवः । (uruṃ no gātuṃ kṛṇu soma viḍhvaḥ |) (9-85-4) it means simply path.

युयोत नो अनपत्यानि गंतोः प्रजानान्नः पशुमा अस्तु गातुः ॥ (yuyota no anapatyāni gaṃtoḥ prajānānnaḥ paśumā astu gātuḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-54-18)

"O Aditi, may our deeds not stray from the good path; may our home be full of cattle": in this prayer, for the word gātuḥ it is explained गायंति स्तुवंति इंद्रादीनत्र इति गातुर्गृहं । (gāyaṃti stuvaṃti iṃdrādīnatra iti gāturgṛhaṃ |) — since it is the place where Indra and others are praised, gātuḥ means house.

स ते जानाति सुमतिं यविष्ठ य ई ईवते ब्रह्मणे गातुमैरत् ॥ (sa te jānāti sumatiṃ yaviṣṭha ya ī īvate brahmaṇe gātumairat ‖) (printed ಋ. ಸಂ ೪ ೪-೬, as supplied)

"O youthful Agni, he who recites and offers a hymn praising you, the auspicious, will know your auspicious grace": when it is thus praised, for gātum it is said गीयते उच्चार्यते इति गातुः स्तोत्रं । (gīyate uccāryate iti gātuḥ stotraṃ |) — since the hymn is recited in the form of song, the hymn is called gātu; and—

न्यस्मै देवी स्वधितिर्जहीत इंद्राय गातुरुशतीव येमे । (nyasmai devī svadhitirjahīta iṃdrāya gāturuśatīva yeme |) (printed ಮಿ. ಸಂ. ೫-೩೨-೧೦ [sic: apparently for Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-32-10])

In this Ṛk, whose purport is that the goddess of heaven and the other worlds, standing on her own support, is also under Indra's rule, and the earth also offers her service to Indra, the word gātu is explained as the earth. Thus the meaning of this word must be given according to the context. In the present Ṛk the ethical meaning, going the good way, should be given.

Agniḥ devān duvasyati—the word duvasyati is read in the Nirukta among the names of attending action (Ni. 3-13). The Nirukta authors cite the Ṛk in which Yama is praised. The Nirukta authors explain the word duvasya as दुवस्यतिः राध्योतिकर्म । (duvasyatiḥ rādhyotikarma |) (as supplied), the act of worship (Ni. 10-20). Besides,

परेयिवांसं प्रवतो महीरनु बहुभ्यः पंथामनुपस्पशानं । वैवस्वतं संगमनं जनानां यमं राजानं हविषा दुवस्य ॥ (pareyivāṃsaṃ pravato mahīranu bahubhyaḥ paṃthāmanupaspaśānaṃ | vaivasvataṃ saṃgamanaṃ janānāṃ yamaṃ rājānaṃ haviṣā duvasya ‖) (printed ಮ. ಸಂ. 10-14-1)

याभिर्वम्रं विपिपानमुपस्तुतं कलिं याभिर्वित्तजानिं दुवस्यथः ॥ (yābhirvamraṃ vipipānamupastutaṃ kaliṃ yābhirvittajāniṃ duvasyathaḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-112-15)

In this Ṛk, whose purport is "O Aśvins, you protected the sage Vamra", the word duvasyathaḥ is used in the sense of protection. Since in the present Ṛk this word is used with reference to Agni, both meanings fit. How? When danger came to the gods, Agni protected them, and after that protection he served them; since there are many such situations, both kinds of meaning can be given to this word. How Agni protected the gods is as follows—

प्रजापतिः प्रजा असृजत । स प्रजाः सृष्टा सर्वमाजिमित्वा व्यस्रग्ंसत तस्माद्विस्रस्तात्राणो मध्यत उदक्रामदथास्माद्वीर्यमुदक्रामत्तस्मिन्नुत्कांतेS- पद्यत तस्मादन्नादन्न मस्रवद्यच्चक्षुरध्यशेत तस्मादस्यान्नमस्रवन्नो हेह तर्हि काचन प्रतिष्ठास ॥ (prajāpatiḥ prajā asṛjata | sa prajāḥ sṛṣṭā sarvamājimitvā vyasragṃsata tasmādvisrastātrāṇo madhyata udakrāmadathāsmādvīryamudakrāmattasminnutkāṃteS- padyata tasmādannādanna masravadyaccakṣuradhyaśeta tasmādasyānnamasravanno heha tarhi kācana pratiṣṭhāsa ‖) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 7-1-2-1)

p. 624

Prajāpati created creatures. After creating them he became tired and his limbs became worn. Then the inner breath went out from him. Without strength he fell down. The food within him too flowed out through the eye. Then the creatures had no support.

ते देवा अब्रुवन् । न वा इतोऽन्याप्रतिष्ठास्तीममेव पितरं प्रजापतिग्ं संस्करवाम सैव नः प्रतिष्ठा भविष्यतीति ॥ (te devā abruvan | na vā ito 'nyāpratiṣṭhāstīmameva pitaraṃ prajāpatigṃ saṃskaravāma saiva naḥ pratiṣṭhā bhaviṣyatīti ‖) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 7-1-2-2)

Then all the gods came together and resolved: "We have no other support than this. Let us tend and restore this Prajāpati, the father of us all. He is the basis of our existence. Let us make every effort to give him new life."

तेऽग्निमब्रुवन् । न वा इतोऽन्या प्रतिष्ठास्ति त्वयीमं पितरं प्रजापतिगं् संस्करवाम सैव नः प्रतिष्ठा भविष्यतीति किं मे ततो भविष्यतीति ॥ (te 'gnimabruvan | na vā ito 'nyā pratiṣṭhāsti tvayīmaṃ pitaraṃ prajāpatigṃ saṃskaravāma saiva naḥ pratiṣṭhā bhaviṣyatīti kiṃ me tato bhaviṣyatīti ‖) (printed ಶ- ಬ್ರ. 7-1-2-&, the last character as supplied)

Then they all, addressing Agni, prayed: "O Agni, besides this Prajāpati we have certainly no other refuge, support or protection. We shall restore this Prajāpati in you, with your help." He said, "What reward shall I have from doing that help?" Then, as an assurance, the gods spoke to Agni thus.

तेऽब्रुवन् । अन्नं वा आयं प्रजापतिस्तन्मुखा एतदन्नमदाम त्वन्मुखानां न एषोऽन्नमसदिति तथेति तस्माद्देवा अग्निमुखा अन्नमदंति यस्यै हि कस्यै च देवताय्के जुह्वत्यग्नावेव जुह्वत्यग्निमुखा हि तद्देवा अन्नमकुर्वत ॥ (te 'bruvan | annaṃ vā āyaṃ prajāpatistanmukhā etadannamadāma tvanmukhānāṃ na eṣo 'nnamasaditi tatheti tasmāddevā agnimukhā annamadaṃti yasyai hi kasyai ca devatāykè juhvatyagnāveva juhvatyagnimukhā hi taddevā annamakurvata ‖) (printed ಓ. ಬ್ರ. 7-1-2-4, i.e. presumably Śat. Brā. 7-1-2-4)

"This Prajāpati is food. This food, which is Prajāpati, we shall eat through your mouth. For the eating of this food you are the mouth for all of us," they asked. Agni agreed and gave them his protection, and made Prajāpati established again. Thereby the gods again obtained refuge and support, and so Agni came to protect their existence. By taking for himself the food of all the gods and distributing it to them, he served them all. Therefore in the present Ṛk both meanings can be given to the word duvasyati.

placed in front of man in the form of the Āhavanīya and so on, adorns the great sacrificial house with his rays.

Printed English translation

The graceful messenger (of the gods) goes between heaven and earth : sitting (on the altar), and placed before men, he ornaments the spacious chambers (of sacrifice) with his rays, animated by the gods, and affluent in wisdom.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Dasma—two kinds of meaning follow from this word: one, destroyer of enemies; the other, of beautiful form. If it is derived from the root दसि दर्शनदंशनयोः (dasi darśanadaṃśanayoḥ) it means "worth seeing", of lovely, attractive form; if from the root दसु उपक्षये (dasu upakṣaye) it means destroyer (of enemies). Since Agni has both these powers, either meaning may be given.

Hotā—Agni is designated by the word hotṛ. Since there is non-difference between Agni and the sacrifice, and an identity between the sacrifice and the hotṛ, it is natural that Agni is signified by the word hotṛ.

‘ यज्ञो वै होता स एवास्यामेकद्यज्ञं प्रतिदधाति । (yajño vai hotā sa evāsyāmekadyajñaṃ pratidadhāti |) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 14-1-3-7)

Because the hotṛ is the direct cause of re-establishing the sacrifice, non-difference between the hotṛ and the sacrifice can be stated; thus the importance of the hotṛ in the sacrifice is shown. Many Śruti sentences stating the identity of Agni and the sacrifice have been cited before, and it has been told that Agni is the one signified by the word yajña. But as to when and how Agni was appointed to the place of hotṛ, there is a historical circumstance.

चतुर्धा विहितो ह वा अग्रेऽग्निरास । स यमग्रेऽग्निगं् होत्राय प्रावृणत स प्राधन्वद्यं द्वितीयं प्रावृणत स प्रैवाधन्वद्यं तृतीयं प्रावृणत स प्रैवाधन्वदथ योऽयमेतर्ह्यग्निः स भीषा निलिल्ये सोpपः प्रविवेश तं देवा अनुविद्य सहसैवाद्भ्य आनिन्युः (caturdhā vihito ha vā agre 'gnirāsa | sa yamagre 'gnigṃ hotrāya prāvṛṇata sa prādhanvadyaṃ dvitīyaṃ prāvṛṇata sa praivādhanvadyaṃ tṛtīyaṃ prāvṛṇata sa praivādhanvadatha yo 'yametarhyagniḥ sa bhīṣā nililye soppaḥ praviveśa taṃ devā anuvidya sahasaivādbhya āninyuḥ) ..... ॥ (the printed passage ends with a row of dots and ॥) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 1-2-3-1)

p. 627

[Running head, p. 627: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 20, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

In the beginning Agni was in four divisions, in four forms. The gods prayed the first part of Agni to become the hotṛ in their sacrifice. But at once it met death. In the same way the second and third forms too met death. Then the fourth part of Agni, which is now famous as Agni, hid in the waters through fear. But the gods went and brought that form of Agni out.

“यत्र वै देवा अग्रेग्निगं् होत्राय प्रावृणत तद्धोवाच न वा अहमिदमुत्सहे यद्वो होता स्यां यद्वो हव्यं वहेयं (yatra vai devā agregnigṃ hotrāya prāvṛṇata taddhovāca na vā ahamidamutsahe yadvo hotā syāṃ yadvo havyaṃ vaheyaṃ) .....” (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 1-3-3-13; the printed passage ends with a row of dots)

Then, when the gods approached this fourth part of Agni and prayed that he be their hotṛ, he said, "I am not able to be your hotṛ and carry your oblation. If I am to do that work, it will do if you bring back to life my three brothers." Then the gods accomplished that work and made Agni their hotṛ. The same is said in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā too:

विश्वे हि त्वा सजोषसो देवासो दूतमक्रत । श्रुष्टी देव प्रथमो यज्ञियो भुवः । (viśve hi tvā sajoṣaso devāso dūtamakrata | śruṣṭī deva prathamo yajñiyo bhuvaḥ |) (printed ಮಿ. ಸಂ. 8-23-18, apparently for Ṛ. Saṃ. 8-23-18)

All the gods together prayed, "O Agni, kindly carry our oblation." That is why Agni also became the messenger of the gods: so it is described. Therefore in the present mantra too there is the epithet dūtaḥ. In Agni's being the messenger of the gods too there is a tradition.

“ अग्निं दूतं वृणीमह इति देवाश्च ना असुराश्चोभये प्राजापत्याः पस्पृधिरे तान्सर्धमानान्गायत्र्यंतरा तस्थौ या वै सा गायत्र्यासीदियं वै सा पृथिवीयग्ं हैव तदंतरा तस्थौ त उभय एव विदां चक्रुर्यतरान्वै न इयमुपावर्त्यति ते भविष्यंति परेतरे भविष्यंतीति तामुभय एवोपमंत्रयां चक्रिरेऽग्निरेव देवानां दूत आस सहरक्षा इत्यसुररक्षसमसुराणाग्ंसाग्निमेवानुप्रेयाय तस्मादन्वाहाग्निं दूतं वृणीमह इति स हि देवानां दूत आसीद्वोतारं विश्ववेदसमिति ॥ (agniṃ dūtaṃ vṛṇīmaha iti devāśca nā asurāścobhaye prājāpatyāḥ paspṛdhire tānsardhamānāngāyatryaṃtarā tasthau yā vai sā gāyatryāsīdiyaṃ vai sā pṛthivīyagṃ haiva tadaṃtarā tasthau ta ubhaya eva vidāṃ cakruryatarānvai na iyamupāvartyati te bhaviṣyaṃti paretare bhaviṣyaṃtīti tāmubhaya evopamaṃtrayāṃ cakrire 'gnireva devānāṃ dūta āsa saharakṣā ityasurarakṣasamasurāṇāgṃsāgnimevānupreyāya tasmādanvāhāgniṃ dūtaṃ vṛṇīmaha iti sa hi devānāṃ dūta āsīddotāraṃ viśvavedasamiti ॥) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 1-4-1-34)

p. 628

[Running head, p. 628: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3 (no stop printed), A. 1, Sū. 3.]

The gods and the asuras, both sons of Prajāpati, contended for the highest position. At that time the Gāyatrī stood between them. That is, since the earth is called Gāyatra, it means that the earth stood between them.

Sāyaṇa has explained that the purport is that the gods are in Amarāvatī on the upper part of Mount Meru, the asuras in Irāvatī beneath it, and between these lies the earth:

मेरोरग्रभागे हि अमरावती नाम नगरी तस्यां हि देवाः । तथा मेरोरधस्ताद्भागे च यत् इरामुखं नाम नगरं तस्मिन्ह्यसुरा निवसंति तयोर्मध्ये पृथिवी वर्तते !! (meroragrabhāge hi amarāvatī nāma nagarī tasyāṃ hi devāḥ | tathā meroradhastādbhāge ca yat irāmukhaṃ nāma nagaraṃ tasminhyasurā nivasaṃti tayormadhyè pṛthivī vartate !!) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. ಭಾಷ್ಯಂ 1-4-1-34; the closing ॥ is printed "!!" in the supplied text)

They understood that victory was assured to those on whose side this earth, or Gāyatrī, would join. Both groups secretly went and prayed that Gāyatrī join their side. At this time Agni, as the messenger of the gods, and Sahārakṣas (the asura-rakṣas, famous as the demon messenger), approached the Gāyatrī and prayed as above. Then the Gāyatrī followed Agni. Therefore in all sacrifices the human hotṛ also prays, "O Agni, since as divine messenger you helped the gods, we too accept you as messenger." Agni is addressed as viśvavedāḥ, all-knowing. The same point is told in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā somewhat differently.

अग्निर्देवानां दूत आसीद्वैवोऽसुराणां तौ प्रजापतिं प्रश्नमैताग्रंस प्रजापतिर्ब्राह्मणमब्रवीदेतद्वि ब्रूहीत्याश्रावयेतीदं देवाकृणुतेति नाव तदब्रवीदग्निर्देवो होतेति य एव देवानां तमवृणीत तशो देवा अभवनरासुरासुरा यस्येवं विदुषः प्रवरं प्रवृणते भवत्यात्मना परास्य भ्रात्पव्यो भवति ॥ (agnirdevānāṃ dūta āsīdvaivo 'surāṇāṃ tau prajāpatiṃ praśnamaitāgraṃsa prajāpatirbrāhmaṇamabravīdetadvi brūhītyāśrāvayetīdaṃ devākṛṇuteti nāva tadabravīdagnirdevo hoteti ya eva devānāṃ tamavṛṇīta taśo devā abhavanarāsurāsurā yasyèvaṃ viduṣaḥ pravaraṃ pravṛṇate bhavatyātmanā parāsya bhrātpavyo bhavati ॥) (printed ಕೃ. ಸಂ. ೬೫-೧೮, as supplied)

In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa the messenger of the asuras is called asurarakṣas; in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā he is called Daivya (the story also differs). Agni, the messenger of the gods, and Daivya, the messenger of the asuras, went to Prajāpati and asked about their state. Prajāpati looked at Brahman and said, "Make this clear to them." Then he addressed the gods and said that "the god Agni is the hotṛ and he is on the side of the gods." Then victory came to the gods and defeat to the asuras. One who knows this principle gains victory, and the enemy of such a person defeat.

Purohitaḥ—पुरः एनं दधतीति पुरोहितः (puraḥ enaṃ dadhatīti purohitaḥ) (Ni. 2-12). The Nirukta authors have given the general explanation that since they place him in front he is called purohita. The word hita is derived from the root dhā (to place).

ततस्तं तु पुरोधत्त आर्त्विज्याय स शंतनुः । स चास्य चक्रे कर्माणि वार्षिकाणि यथाविधि ॥ (tatastaṃ tu purodhatta ārtvijyāya sa śaṃtanuḥ | sa cāsya cakre karmāṇi vārṣikāṇi yathāvidhi ‖) (Bṛ. De. 8-6)

This Bṛhaddevatā sentence explains the meaning of the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā sentence यद्देवापिः शंतनवे पुरोहितो होत्राय वृतः (yaddevāpiḥ śaṃtanave purohito hotrāya vṛtaḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-98-7). The Nirukta authors too have cited this. The man whom kings place before them at the time of sacrifice is called purohita. But the man who stands in front of the king with the power to help him need not be a helper to him in the sacrifice only. He may stand before him and give good counsel to the king in the conduct of the government or at the time of war and the like. Whether the man who helps in such circumstances is called a purohita is a natural question. This will be discussed later with examples such as इंद्रं वृत्राय हंतवे देवासो दधिरे पुरः (iṃdraṃ vṛtrāya haṃtave devāso dadhire puraḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 8-12-22). In the present context, one must understand what principle is indicated by this word, a term of sacrificial procedure; what are the characteristics of the purohita; and in particular what is special in Agni's being the purohita.

पुरो वो मंद्रं दिव्यं सुवृक्तिं प्रयति यज्ञे अग्निमध्वरे दधिध्वं । पुर उक्तेभिः स हि नो विभावा स्वध्वरा करति जातवेदाः ॥ (puro vo maṃdraṃ divyaṃ suvṛktiṃ prayati yajñe agnimadhvare dadhidhvaṃ | pura uktebhiḥ sa hi no vibhāvā svadhvarā karati jātavedāḥ ‖) (printed ಮಾ. ಸಂ. 6-10-1)

In this prayer, "O priests and sacrificers, make Agni, who is praiseworthy, divine in nature and the giver of happiness, your purodhas at the time of sacrifice; worship him with śastra mantras and make him your purodhas; he makes your sacrifice fruitful", the purodhas character of Agni, who must be most prominent at the time of sacrifice, is understood. This purodhas character helps to bring the fruit of the sacrifice quickly. How?

इंद्रावरुणा वधनाभिरप्रति भेदं वन्वंता प्र सुदासमावतं । ब्रह्माण्येषां शृणुतं हवीमनि सत्या तृतूनामभवत्पुरोहितिः ॥ (iṃdrāvaruṇā vadhanābhiraprati bhedaṃ vanvaṃtā pra sudāsamāvataṃ | brahmāṇyeṣāṃ śṛṇutaṃ havīmani satyā tṛtūnāmabhavatpurohitiḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-83-4)

In this mantra Sudās, praising Indra and Varuṇa and offering them his gratitude, shows the fruit of the purohita's office: "O Indra and Varuṇa, your priesthood performed for my help in battle became fruitful"

p. 630

[Running head, p. 630: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1 (printed "०-"), Sū. 3.]

Therefore, wherever the word purohita is used, there is room for the question whether it is the purohita-ship connected with the sacrifice or purohita-ship merely for help. But in the Vedic culture it can be said definitely that this word has a technical meaning.

One who, as the right arm of the king, helps him in many ways in all his affairs and is the adviser who brings welfare to him and to his kingdom may broadly be called a purohita. If the place of the purohita is described thus, it is also understood that the place of the purohita is of greater value to the king than the place of the priests such as the hotṛ. Although the relation of king and purohita may be merely personal, the point that happiness and peace in the kingdom can be had only with the help of the purohita is clearly stated in the Saṃhitā, Brāhmaṇa and other texts. First some personal helps that the king gets from the purohita may be examined, and afterwards, on the basis of Vedic sentences, how effective the purohita's influence is in social and political life. The purohita is the king's personal friend, minister, and adviser both in war and in peace. Vasiṣṭha, who was purohita to Sudās, was not only the hotṛ at the king's sacrifice, merely reciting the mantras, but also helped him in many ways in his political affairs. The place of the purohita is the highest place, a place that works for the welfare of the world. About how its importance arose, some well-known English scholars have expressed a mistaken opinion. For example, the scholar Max-Muller:

" The original occupation of the Purohita may simply have been to perform the usual sacrifices ; but with the ambitious policy of the Brahmins, it soon became a stepping stone to Political power. " [History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature. p. 257.]

This scholar has said that at first the purohita took part only in the sacrificial works and held the position of helping the king in Vedic rites; afterwards the Brahmins, with expanded ambition, showed political importance for the same position and made for themselves an opportunity to share in the king's authority. But on close examination it can be said that this scholar's opinion is not right. In the position of the purohita no selfishness of any kind is seen. The Vedic sentences themselves tell that the chief spiritual principle is contained in it. Between the position of the purohita described in the Vedic sentences and the purohita who becomes a helper to Vedic rites in present-day life, any relation. Even in modern affairs, though the need for a purohita is great, the former distinction is lost. This difference becomes clear when one examines, on the basis of Vedic sentences, what the distinction of the ancient purohita's position was. The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa first describes the help of the purohita in the king's sacrificial work and then, extending the meaning of the sacrifice, since all the activity of the world is itself of the nature of sacrifice, shows the need of a purohita in all the affairs of the world. Who is this purohita? The purohita who guides the affairs of earthly beings such as men is Agni; the purohita who guides heaven is Āditya; the purohita who guides the affairs of beings in the atmosphere is the wind. In this way a purport propounding a spiritual principle is stated for the position of the purohita. How?

अथातः पुरोधाया एव, न हवा अपुरोहितस्य राज्यो देवा अन्नमदंति तस्माद्राजा यक्ष्यमाणो ब्राह्मणं पुरो दधीत देवा मेऽन्न मदन्निति; अग्नीन्वा एष स्वग्र्यान्राजोद्धरते यत्पुरोहितं । (athātaḥ purodhāyā eva, na havā apurohitasya rājyo devā annamadaṃti tasmādrājā yakṣyamāṇo brāhmaṇaṃ puro dadhīta devā me 'nna madanniti; agnīnvā eṣa svargyānrājoddharate yatpurohitaṃ |) (printed ಇ. ಬ್ರಾ. ೪೦-೨೪)

If the position of the purohita and the need for it are considered, this position is very important. If a king without a purohita offers oblations in the sacrifice, the gods do not accept them. Therefore the king, before the sacrifice, must take as his helper a purohita of proper qualifications. If he chooses a purohita with the wish "may the gods accept my oblation", then he establishes the fire, which is the means of reaching heaven.

तस्य पुरोहित एवाहवनीयो भवति जाया गार्हपत्यः पुत्रोऽन्वाहार्यपचनः स यत्पुरोहिताय करोत्याहवनीय एव तज्जु होत्यथ यज्ञायाय्के करोति गार्हपत्य एव तज्जु होत्यथ यत्पुत्राय करोत्यन्वाहार्यपचन एव तज्जु होति त एनं शांततनवोऽभिहुता अभिप्रीताः स्वर्गं लोकमभिवहंति क्षत्रं च बलं च राष्ट्रं च विशं च । त एवैनमशांततनवोऽनभिहुता अनभिप्रीताः स्वर्गान् लोकान्नुदंते क्षत्राच्च बलाच्च राष्ट्राच्च विशश्च ॥ (tasya purohita evāhavanīyo bhavati jāyā gārhapatyaḥ putro 'nvāhāryapacanaḥ sa yatpurohitāya karotyāhavanīya eva tajju hotyatha yajñāyāykè karoti gārhapatya eva tajju hotyatha yatputrāya karotyanvāhāryapacana eva tajju hoti ta enaṃ śāṃtatanavo 'bhihutā abhiprītāḥ svargaṃ lokamabhivahaṃti kṣatraṃ ca balaṃ ca rāṣṭraṃ ca viśaṃ ca | ta evainamaśāṃtatanavo 'nabhihutā anabhiprītāḥ svargān lokānnudaṃte kṣatrācca balācca rāṣṭrācca viśaśca ॥) (printed ಐ. ಬ್ರಾ. ೪೦-೨೪)

In relation to the sacrifice, the purohita is the Āhavanīya, his wife is the Gārhapatya, and his son is the Anvāhāryapacana, that is, the southern fire. Whatever the king offers according to the wish of the purohita is as if offered to the Āhavanīya fire. What is offered to his wife is as if offered to the Gārhapatya fire. What is offered to his son is as if offered to the southern fire. If they are pleased by these attentions, they become helpers to the king for the attainment of heaven, for the acquisition of kṣatriya power, for the gain of the kingdom, for the accomplishment of strength, and for the winning of the people's affection. Without it, if they are displeased, the king falls from heaven. His kṣatriya power is destroyed. He becomes weak. He is thrown out of the kingdom. He loses the affection of the people. But who is this purohita, and what does it mean to please his wife and sons? To this—

अग्निर्वा एष वैश्वानरः पंचमेनिर्यत्पुरोहितस्तस्य वाच्येवैका मेनिर्भवति पादयोरेका त्वच्येका हृदय एकोपस्थ एका ताभिर्ज्वलंतीभिर्दीप्यमानाभिरुपोदेति राजानं स यदाह क्व भगवोऽवात्सीस्तृणान्यस्मा आहरतेति तेनास्य तां शमयति यास्य वाचि मेनिर्भवत्यथ यदस्मा उदकमानयंति पाद्यं तेनास्य तां शमयति यास्य पादयोर्मेनिर्भवत्यथ यदेनमलं कुर्वंति तेनास्य तां शमयति यास्य त्वचि मेनिर्भवत्यथ यदेनं तर्पयंति तेनास्य तां शमयति यास्य हृदये मेनिर्भवत्यथ यदस्यानारुद्धो वेश्मसु वसति तेनास्य तां शमयति यास्कोपस्थे मेनिर्भवति ॥ (agnirvā eṣa vaiśvānaraḥ paṃcameniryatpurohitastasya vācyevaikā menirbhavati pādayorekā tvacyekā hṛdaya ekopastha ekā tābhirjvalaṃtībhirdīpyamānābhirupodeti rājānaṃ sa yadāha kva bhagavo 'vātsīstṛṇānyasmā āharateti tenāsya tāṃ śamayati yāsya vāci menirbhavatyatha yadasmā udakamānayaṃti pādyaṃ tenāsya tāṃ śamayati yāsya pādayormenirbhavatyatha yadenamalaṃ kurvaṃti tenāsya tāṃ śamayati yāsya tvaci menirbhavatyatha yadenaṃ tarpayaṃti tenāsya tāṃ śamayati yāsya hṛdaye menirbhavatyatha yadasyānāruddho veśmasu vasati tenāsya tāṃ śamayati yāskopasthe menirbhavati ॥) (printed ఐ. బ్రా. ౪౦-౨౪)

This purohita is not a mortal. The immortal Vaiśvānara Agni himself is this purohita. He has five weapons (menayaḥ): one in his speech, one in his feet, one in the skin, one in the heart, one in the principal part. With these blazing, flame-like weapons the purohita, in the form of Vaiśvānara Agni, approaches the king. At once the king asks, "O revered one, where have you been living till now?" and, when he orders his attendants, "Prepare grass for the worship of this purohita", the sharpness of the weapon in Agni's speech is quenched. When water is brought for the washing of his feet, the intensity of the weapon in the feet decreases. When he is adorned, the intensity of the weapon in the skin, when he is satisfied, the sharpness of the weapon in the heart, and when it is arranged that he stay in the sacrificial house without any hindrance, the intensity of the weapon in his principal part, become calm.

स एनं शांततनुरभिहुतोऽभिप्रीतः स्वर्गं लोकमभिवहति क्षत्रं च बलं च राष्ट्रं च विशं च स एवैनमशांततनुरनभिहुतोऽनभिप्रीतः स्वर्गाल्लोकान्नुदते क्षत्राच्च बलाच्च राष्ट्राच्च विशश्च ॥ (sa enaṃ śāṃtatanurabhihuto 'bhiprītaḥ svargaṃ lokamabhivahati kṣatraṃ ca balaṃ ca rāṣṭraṃ ca viśaṃ ca sa evainamaśāṃtatanuranabhihuto 'nabhiprītaḥ svargāṃllokānnudate kṣatrācca balācca rāṣṭrācca viśaśca ॥) (printed ಇ. ಬ್ರಾ. ೪೦-೨೪)

Thus the Agni, who is of the form of the purohita, when he has received oblations and the like that gratify his burning body and is satisfied, carries the sacrificer to heaven. And he provides him kṣatriya power and valour, the kingdom and the support of the people. Without this satisfaction, the king has no attainment of heaven. He cannot obtain kṣatriya valour, the kingdom or the people's support. All of them turn away from him.

अग्निर्वा एष वैश्वानरः पंच मेनिर्यत्पुरोहितस्ताभी राजानं परिगृह्य तिष्ठति समुद्र इव भूमिं । आयुवमार्यस्य राष्ट्रं भवति नैनं पुरायुषः प्राणो जहात्याजरसं जीवति सर्वमायुरेति न पुनर्म्रियते यस्यैवं विद्वान्ब्राह्मणो राष्ट्रगोपः पुरोहितः ॥ (agnirvā eṣa vaiśvānaraḥ paṃca meniryatpurohitastābhī rājānaṃ parigṛhya tiṣṭhati samudra iva bhūmiṃ | āyuvamāryasya rāṣṭraṃ bhavati nainaṃ purāyuṣaḥ prāṇo jahātyājarasaṃ jīvati sarvamāyureti na punarmriyate yasyaivaṃ vidvānbrāhmaṇo rāṣṭragopaḥ purohitaḥ ॥) (printed ಐ. ಬ್ರಾ. ೪೦-೨೫)

The purohita, who has the five weapons mentioned above and is of the form of Agni Vaiśvānara, protects the king as the ocean covers and protects the earth. The rule of the king to whom a purohita, endowed with Brahmic radiance, knower of the meaning of the truth, and guardian of the realm, gives support, is not destroyed in his youth. His breath does not leave him until the full time is completed. He lives till old age. And he certainly obtains a full life.

क्षत्रेण क्षत्रं जयति बलेन बलमश्नुते यस्यैवं विद्वान् ब्राह्मणो राष्ट्रगोपः पुरोहितः । तस्मै विशः संजानते संमुखा एकमनसो यस्यैवं विद्वान्ब्राह्मणो राष्ट्रगोपः पुरोहितः ॥ (kṣatreṇa kṣatraṃ jayati balena balamaśnute yasyaivaṃ vidvān brāhmaṇo rāṣṭragopaḥ purohitaḥ | tasmai viśaḥ saṃjānate saṃmukhā ekamanaso yasyaivaṃ vidvānbrāhmaṇo rāṣṭragopaḥ purohitaḥ ‖) (printed ಐ. ಬ್ರಾ. ೪೦-೨೫)

The king who has the support of a purohita endowed with Brahmic radiance and guardian of the realm gains kṣatriya radiance by kṣatriya power and valour by valour. All the people in that kingdom, being of one mind and showing harmony in all affairs, achieve the unity of the nation and become a means of peace for the king.

How? The great sage Vāmadeva has expressed this same view clearly in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā. In the three mantras beginning स इद्राजा (sa idrājā) the close relation between the king and the purohita, and

p. 634

[Running head, p. 634: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, Ā. (printed so for A.) 1, Sū. 3.]

all the welfare that can come to the king through the presence and help of the purohita is described (Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-50-7-9). "Only that king who has a purohita can face and defeat by his own power all the strength of the adversary": this is the purport of the first half of the first mantra (4-50-7), beginning स इद्राजा (sa idrājā). Pratijanyāni means the strength of enemies. The word janya indicates rivals (sapatnas).

All who contend with this king and hate him are sapatnas. The meaning is that he withstands and defeats all such rivals with his superior strength. This is the fruit of the purohita's help.

बृहस्पतिं यः सुभृतं बिभर्ति (bṛhaspatiṃ yaḥ subhṛtaṃ bibharti) is the third pāda of the first mantra (4-50-7). Bṛhaspati is the purohita of the gods. Whatever purohitas men choose are all equal to that Bṛhaspati. The king who honours such a purohita, equal to Bṛhaspati, and protects him in comfort can defeat his enemies. वल्ग्ययति वंदते पूर्वभाजं (valgyayati vaṃdate pūrvabhājaṃ) is the fourth pāda of the mantra. The purport of this pāda is that the king who worships Bṛhaspati and gives him the first share of all his honours alone can become victorious. The idea is that the respect shown to Bṛhaspati becomes a means to one's own greatness.

स इत् क्षेति सुधित ओकसि स्व इति गृहा वा ओकः स्वेष्टेव तद्गृहेषु सुहितो वसति, तस्मा इळा पिन्नते विश्वदानीमित्यन्नं वा इळान्नमेवास्मा एतदूर्जस्वच्छश्वद्भवति, तस्मै विशः स्वयमेवानमंत इति राष्ट्राणि वै विशो राष्ट्राण्येवैनं तत्त्वयमुपनमंति, यस्मिन्ब्रह्मा राजनि पूर्व एतीति पुरोहितमेवैतदाह । (sa it kṣeti sudhita okasi sva iti gṛhā vā okaḥ sveṣṭeva tadgṛheṣu suhito vasati, tasmā iḷā pinnate viśvadānīmityannaṃ vā iḷānnamevāsmā etadūrjasvacchaśvadbhavati, tasmai viśaḥ svayamevānamaṃta iti rāṣṭrāṇi vai viśo rāṣṭrāṇyevainaṃ tattvayamupanamaṃti, yasminbrahmā rājani pūrva etīti purohitamevaitadāha |) (printed ಐ. ಬ್ರಾ. 40-26)

स इत् क्षेति सुधित ओकसि स्वे (sa it kṣeti sudhita okasi sve) is the first pāda of the second mantra (4-50-8). Its purport is that the house of the king in whose house the purohita lives safely and without fear is also safe and happy. Iḷā means food. The king in whose house the purohita is safe is endowed with food. His food is vigorous and abundant. That is the purport of the second pāda तस्मा इळा पिन्नते (tasmā iḷā pinnate). Since the kingdom is possessed of people, there is non-difference between the kingdom and the people; in usage the kingdom means the people and the people the kingdom. The third pāda tells that the kingdom itself bows to and pays honour to the king who can keep the purohita safe in his own house.

p. 635

[Running head, p. 635: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 20, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

In the fourth pāda, whose purport is "the king to whom Brahman, giving good counsel, goes first", the word brahman means the purohita. The meaning is that a king having such a purohita enjoys the position and the comfort described above.

अप्रतीतो जयति सं धनानीति राष्ट्राणि वै धनानि तान्यप्रतीतो जयति । (apratīto jayati saṃ dhanānīti rāṣṭrāṇi vai dhanāni tānyapratīto jayati |) (this is the explanation of the first pāda of Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-50-9)

There is non-difference between the kingdom and wealth. The king who honours the purohita obtains a kingdom full of wealth without any obstacle, or, even if there is an obstacle, conquers it by his own power.

प्रति जन्यान्युत या सजन्येति सपत्ना वै द्विषंतो भ्रातृव्या जन्यानि तानप्रतीतो जयति ॥ (prati janyānyuta yā sajanyeti sapatnā vai dviṣaṃto bhrātṛvyā janyāni tānapratīto jayati ‖) (explanation of the second pāda)

Such a king, fully conquering the opposing king and the armies of such enemy kings, becomes unassailed.

अवस्यवे यो वरिवः कृणोतीति यदाहावसीयसे योऽवसीयः करोतीत्येव तदाह (avasyave yo varivaḥ kṛṇotīti yadāhāvasīyase yo 'vasīyaḥ karotītyeva tadāha) (third explanation).

Those kings who give gifts of wealth to those who have none (or to purohitas without wealth) obtain the wealth of the enemies too through the power of the purohitas.

ब्रह्मणे राजा तमवंति देवा इति पुरोहितमेवैतदभिवदति ॥ (brahmaṇe rājā tamavaṃti devā iti purohitamevaitadabhivadati ‖) (the fourth pāda) (printed ఐ. బ్రా. 40-26)

Here brahman means the purohita. The main meaning is that the gods too protect, with gifts of wealth and the like, the king who protects the purohita with such worship. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa the purport of these mantras is made clear: the praise of the purohita's power has thus been made by the great sage Vāmadeva in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā.

यो ह वै त्रीन्पुरोहितांस्त्रीन् पुरोधात्यन्वेद स ब्राह्मणः पुरोहितः स वदेत पुरोधाया अग्निर्वाव पुरोहितः पृथिवी पुरोधाता वायुर्वाव पुरोहितोऽंतरिक्षं पुरोधातादित्यो वाव पुरोहितो द्यौः पुरोधातैष ह वै पुरोहितो य एवं वेदाथ स तिरोहितो य एवं न वेद ॥ (yo ha vai trīnpurohitāṃstrīn

[Running head, p. 636: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 3.]

The Brahmin who knows the three kinds of purodhātṛ and the three purohitas connected with them is alone fit to be a purohita. "The earth is the first purodhātṛ", that is, the mistress who appoints the purohita; Agni is the purohita; in the same way the atmosphere and heaven are purodhātṛs, and the wind and Āditya are purohitas. One who, knowing this principle, meditates on the mantra that teaches this meaning is fit to be a purohita. One without this meditation and knowledge is unfit for this position.

Thus the purohita, who has knowledge of the meaning of the principle and is endowed with Brahmic radiance, reflects the Brahman principle, and the valiant king the kṣatra power; they are like two parts of the universal principle.

प्रेदं ब्रह्म प्रेदं क्षत्रमित्येते एव समस्येद्ब्रह्मक्षत्रयोः संत्रित्यै तस्माद्ब्रह्म च क्षत्रं च संश्रिते ।
(predaṃ brahma predaṃ kṣatramityete eva samasyedbrahmakṣatrayoḥ saṃtrityai tasmādbrahma ca kṣatraṃ ca saṃśrite |) (printed ಇ. ಬ್ರಾ. 11-11)

यस्य च ब्रह्म च क्षत्रं च उभे भवत ओदनः (yasya ca brahma ca kṣatraṃ ca ubhe bhavata òdanaḥ) (printed ಕಠ. ೨-೨೫, i.e. Kaṭha 2-25)

In sentences such as these it is stated precisely that Brahman and kṣatra are the two parts of the primal principle. In human affairs too the union and harmony of these two powers is described in many ways in the Śruti sentences. In some places they are called heaven and earth, in others Ṛk and Sāman, in others Mitra and Varuṇa; in many ways the relation between the purohita and the king (Brahman and kṣatra) is described. (Later, in the Purāṇas and elsewhere, it may be said freely that these Śruti sentences are the basis for the view नाविष्णुः पृथिवीपतिः (nāviṣṇuḥ pṛthivīpatiḥ).) Thus, telling that the purohita and the king are representatives of the primal principle, and that their harmony is the means of welfare in the affairs of the world, the purohita addresses the king in this way:

अमोऽहमस्मि स त्वं स त्वमस्यनोऽहं द्यौरहं पृथिवी त्वं सामाहमृक्त्वं तावेह संवहावहै ॥ (amo 'hamasmi sa tvaṃ sa tvamasyano 'haṃ dyaurahaṃ pṛthivī tvaṃ sāmāhamṛktvaṃ tāveha saṃvahāvahai ॥) (printed ಇ. ಬ್ರಾ 40-27)

"I am the beyond, you are the here; you are the representative of this world, I of the other world; I am heaven, you are earth; I am the Sāman, you the Ṛk; let us two join together, then only is the welfare of the world possible": so he regards the relation between the two as one of wedlock. It may also be divided thus in the divine principles: the purohita is Brahman, the king is kṣatra. Mitra, Agni and Bṛhaspati are the purohitas (Brahman); Varuṇa and Indra are the kings (kṣatra),

p. 637

these two are also called by the names Kratu and Dakṣa. The union of Indra and Agni is the relation of the king and the purohita.

आ बाह्योर्वज्रमिंद्रस्य धेयामथेमा विश्वाः पृशना जयाति ॥ (ā bāhyorvajramiṃdrasya dheyāmathemā viśvāḥ pṛśanā jayāti ॥) (printed ಮ. ಸಂ. 10-52-5)

In explaining Indra's bearing of the thunderbolt there, Sāyaṇa in his bhāṣya describes its necessity in this way: अग्नेर्होतृत्वाभावे इंद्रस्य सोमाद्यभावाद्दुर्बलत्वेन वज्रधारणं नोपपद्यते (agnerhotṛtvābhāve iṃdrasya somādyabhāvāddurbalatvena vajradhāraṇaṃ nopapadyate). The sense is that without the company of Agni the hotṛ (the purohita), Indra's kṣatriya power would be impaired; that is, with that help he bears the thunderbolt and conquers all enemies. This relation is made clear by the words that the same Agni, the purohita, speaks to Indra the king.

अयं त एमि तन्ना पुरस्ताद्विश्वे देवा अभि मा यंति पश्चात् । यदा मह्यं दीधरो भागमिंद्रादिन्मया कृणवो वीर्याणि ॥ (ayaṃ ta emi tannā purastādviśve devā abhi mā yaṃti paścāt | yadā mahyaṃ dīdharo bhāgamiṃdrādinmayā kṛṇavo vīryāṇi ॥) (printed ಮ. ಸಂ. ೮-೧೮-೧, as supplied)

"O Indra, I go before you (as purohita) facing the enemies. If you give me my share and honour me, you will gain the strength needed to conquer the enemies": what Agni says to Indra points to this same relation.

यत्र योगीश्वरः कृष्णो यत्र पार्थो धनुर्धरः । तत्र श्रीर्विजयो भूतिर्ध्रुवानीतिर्मतिर्मम ॥ (yatra yogīśvaraḥ kṛṣṇo yatra pārtho dhanurdharaḥ | tatra śrīrvijayo bhūtidhruvānītirmatirmama ‖) (printed ಭ. ಗೀ. 18-28)

This Gītā sentence says that where Kṛṣṇa, lord of yoga, and Arjuna, the bow-bearer, are together, by their union fortune, victory, prosperity and statecraft will all be achieved in the best way. The basis for it is in the Vedic works. Kṛṣṇa is the purohita of the Agni-part, Arjuna the king of the Indra-part. What is the basis for this? On the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa sentence अर्जुनो ह वै नामेंद्रः (arjuno ha vai nāmeṃdraḥ) (Śat. Brā. 2-1-2-11),

इंद्राग्नी को अस्य नां देवौ मर्तश्चिकेतति । विषूचो अश्वान्युयुजान ईयत एकः समान आ रथे ॥ (iṃdrāgnī ko asya nāṃ devau martaściketati | viṣūco aśvānyuyujāna īyata ekaḥ samāna ā rathe ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-59-5)

if one examines the description in this mantra, one understands that as Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna go on a victory expedition seated in the same chariot, so Indra and Agni set out on a victory expedition seated in the same chariot. This matter

p. 638

is described. But how is Kṛṣṇa dark and Arjuna fair in colour?

यत्कृष्णं तेनाग्निः । यच्चुक्लं तेनेंद्रः । (yatkṛṣṇaṃ tenāgniḥ | yaccuklaṃ teneṃdraḥ |) (printed ಬೃ. ಅ. 2-2-2)

"What is dark is the form of Agni; what is white is the form of Indra": a spiritual purport is described. Thus this darkness (नीलं परः कृष्णं (nīlaṃ paraḥ kṛṣṇaṃ)), which is contained in Āditya and spiritually within the eye, reflects the male power. The principles praised in the Saṃhitās and Brāhmaṇas, namely ama, Agni, Vāyu, Āditya, ātman and sāman, are all principles that denote the male power; this is the Brahmic radiance, the Brahman power described as the purohita. Sā, earth, atmosphere, ṛk, are all female powers, the earthly kṣatra power. The companionship of Indra and Agni described in contexts such as ता महांता सदस्पती इंद्राग्नी (tā mahāṃtā sadaspatī iṃdrāgnī) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-21-5) is also this same relation of purohita and king. That the king's growth is not possible unless he makes Brahman his purohita and himself follows him has another example in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.

न वा एताविंद्राग्नी संतौ व्यजयेतामाग्नेंद्रौ वा एत् संतौ व्यजयेतां तद्यदाग्नेंद्रा यजति विजित्या एव ।
(na vā etāviṃdrāgnī saṃtau vyajayetāmāgneṃdrau vā et saṃtau vyajayetāṃ tadyadāgneṃdrā yajati vijityā eva |) (printed ఇ. బ్రా. 10-37)

When Indra and Agni fight with the asuras, if Indra is in front and Agni behind, victory will not be certain. Only if Agni is the purohita and Indra follows him is victory possible. Therefore the rule आग्नेंद्रा यजति (āgneṃdrā yajati) is stated.

पुरोहितायतनं वा एतत् क्षत्रियस्य यद्ब्रह्मार्थात्मो ह वा एष क्षत्रियस्य यत्पुरोहित उपाह ।
(purohitāyatanaṃ vā etat kṣatriyasya yadbrahmārthātmo ha vā eṣa kṣatriyasya yatpurohita upāha |) (printed ఇ. బ్రా 34-26)

It is stated plainly that the purohita is the half-self of the kṣatriya. To be complete, the company of the two is absolutely necessary. A king without a purohita and a purohita without a king are incomplete. The relation of purohita and king is like the relation of heaven and earth described in the Aitareya Āraṇyaka (3-1-2), and like the relation of man and woman described in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (18-5-2-8) and the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (1-4-4). If one is lacking, the other is incomplete.

p. 639

But if it is asked whether the purohita principle and the kṣatra principle are separate and join afterwards, it cannot be said that they are different in nature in that way.

भूतं भविष्यत्पस्तौमि महद्ब्रह्मैकमक्षरं बहु ब्रह्मैकमक्षरमित्येतद्ध्वेवाक्षरगं् सर्वे देवाः सर्वाणि भूतान्यभिसंपद्यंते तदेतत्प्रह्म च क्षत्रं चाग्निरेव ब्रह्मेंद्रः क्षत्रमिंद्राग्नी वै विश्वे देवाः ॥ (bhūtaṃ bhaviṣyatpastaumi mahadbrahmaikamakṣaraṃ bahu brahmaikamakṣaramityetaddhevākṣaragṃ sarve devāḥ sarvāṇi bhūtānyabhisaṃpadyaṃte tadetatprahma ca kṣatraṃ cāgnireva brahmeṃdraḥ kṣatramiṃdrāgnī vai viśve devāḥ ॥) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 10-4-1-9)

The supreme principle is one. That is the imperishable great Brahman. All beings are contained in it. What in ordinary language is called the Brahman principle (purohita) and the kṣatra principle are both special manifestations of it. Agni is Brahman (the purohita), Indra is kṣatra. In the Śatapatha it is shown that these two parts also include all the gods and are of one and the same common origin. Further,

त्वं वरुण उत मित्रो अग्ने त्वां वर्धंति मतिभिर्वसिष्ठाः । त्वे वसु सुषणनानि संतु यूयं पात स्वस्तिभिः सदा नः ॥ (tvaṃ varuṇa uta mitro agne tvāṃ vardhaṃti matibhirvasiṣṭhāḥ | tve vasu suṣaṇanāni saṃtu yūyaṃ pāta svastibhiḥ sadā naḥ ॥) (printed ಮ. ಸಂ. 7-12-3)

"O Agni, you are Varuṇa and you are Mitra": the praise and its sense are the same. What is the Mitra form and what the Varuṇa form of this Agni, who is in the form of Mitra-Varuṇa and is described as Vaiśvānara in the present Ṛk? What is their relation to the epithet purohita in the present Ṛk? This is described in sentences of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa thus.

क्रतूदक्षौ ह वा अस्य मित्रावरुणौ, । एतन्नध्यात्मग्ं स यदेव मनसा कामयत इदं मे स्यादिदं कुर्वीयेति स एव क्रतुरथ यदस्मै तत्समृध्यते स दक्षो मित्र एव क्रतुर्वरुणो दक्षो ब्रह्मैव मित्रः क्षत्रं वरुणोऽभिगंतैव ब्रह्म कर्ता क्षत्रियः ॥ (kratūdakṣau ha vā asya mitrāvaruṇau, | etannadhyātmagṃ sa yadeva manasā kāmayata idaṃ me syādidaṃ kurvīyeti sa eva kraturatha yadasmai tatsamṛdhyate sa dakṣo mitra eva kraturvaruṇo dakṣo brahmaiva mitraḥ kṣatraṃ varuṇo 'bhigaṃtaiva brahma kartā kṣatriyaḥ ॥) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 4-1-4-1)

It is told, on the basis of a sentence of the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā, that Mitra, described as purohita in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā, and his companion Varuṇa are none other than parts of Agni. Mitra (the purohita) is Kratu, in the form of resolve; Varuṇa is Dakṣa, in the form of action, who carries out this resolve. "I wish this work to be done. Let it be accomplished", and so on the resolve belongs to Mitra, who is of the form of kratu; the making of it succeed in the form of action belongs to Varuṇa. Mitra, who is of the form of the purohita, is of the form of Brahman. Varuṇa, the king, has kṣatriya radiance. Brahman is the approacher; the kṣatriya is the doer (this is the relation between the purohita and the king). By sentences such as नो एव पुरोधा (no eva purodhā) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 4-1-4-5) the greatness of the purohita, and in what way this purohita brings welfare to the kṣatriya and through him to the whole world, are also told. That is why the epithet विद्वान् ब्राह्मणो राष्ट्रगोपः पुरोहितः (vidvān brāhmaṇo rāṣṭragopaḥ purohitaḥ), guardian of the realm, is well known for the purohita. Therefore the purohita is not merely a helper in the king's personal affairs but a source of inspiration for the protection of the world that he carries out. In this sense Agni is in many places signified by the word purohita.

Dhiyāvasuḥ—the word vasu is taken to mean a pervading property, and dhī to mean wisdom; the purport is that he pervades everywhere by wisdom. The Nirukta authors have explained dhiyāvasu as karmavasu (wealth through works). But, citing this Ṛk, they have explained this word, which is an epithet of Sarasvatī, as above. When this word is an epithet of Indra, the meaning karmavasu and karmadhana (wealth of works) fits.

पावका नः सरस्वती वाजेभिर्वाजिनीवती । यज्ञं वष्टु धियावसुः ॥ (pāvakā naḥ sarasvatī vājebhirvājinīvatī | yajñaṃ vaṣṭu dhiyāvasuḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-3-10)

सुनीथाय नः शवसान नोधाः प्रातर्मक्षू धियावसुर्जगम्यात् ॥ (sunīthāya naḥ śavasāna nodhāḥ prātarmakṣū dhiyāvasurjagamyāt ‖) (printed ಋ ಸಂ. 1-62-13)

Where it is an epithet of Indra, they give the alternative sense धिया बुद्धा कर्मणा वा प्राप्तवसुरिंद्र (dhiyā buddhā karmaṇā vā prāptavasuriṃdra) (Indra who has obtained wealth by intelligence or by work). The same Ṛk Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-3-10, "pāvakā naḥ sarasvatī", is recited in the Aitareya Āraṇyaka, where it is said यज्ञं वष्टु धियावसुरिति वाग्वै धियावसुः । (yajñaṃ vaṣṭu dhiyāvasuriti vāgvai dhiyāvasuḥ |) (printed ಐ. ಅ. 1-1-4), stating the identity of speech and dhiyāvasu. Here the word dhī may mean wisdom, praise or work; the word vasu may mean work or one who has the property of pervasion. In the present Ṛk too, as an epithet of Agni, any meaning given to this word fits.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Cittibhiḥ—स्वकर्मभिः । (svakarmabhiḥ |) it is explained as "by their own works". It has been told before that the Nirukta authors, explaining the Ṛk आयं स शिंक्ते(āyaṃ sa śiṃkte), also gave the sense work for the word citti (Ni. 2-9). But this word is used more often in the meanings cetas, that is, mind, or knowledge arising from it. For example,

चित्तिमचित्तिं चिनवद्वि विद्वान् पृष्ठेव वीता वृजिना च मर्तान् ॥ (cittimacittiṃ cinavadvi vidvān pṛṣṭheva vītā vṛjinā ca martān ‖) (printed ಮ. ಸ೦. 4-2-11)

In this mantra, which prays, "May Agni, who knows, separate knowledge from ignorance, or separate merit, which is to be known, from sin, which is not to be known", the word is used in the sense of knowledge. Besides,

इंद्र श्रेष्ठानि द्रविणानि धेहि चित्तिं दक्षस्य सुभगत्वमस्मे । (iṃdra śreṣṭhāni draviṇāni dhehi cittiṃ dakṣasya subhagatvamasme |) (printed ಮ. ಸ೦. 2-21-6)

In this mantra, "O Indra, give excellent wealth; give knowledge that is productive of good work", since the word dakṣa denotes work, the word citti must be in the sense of knowledge relating to this work.

चित्तिरा उपबर्हणं चक्षुरा अभ्यंजनं । (cittirā upabarhaṇaṃ cakṣurā abhyaṃjanaṃ |) (printed ಮ. ಸ೦. 10-85-7)

Here the word citti is taken as a special deity. When the word is used to indicate the sense of "a mind absorbed in meditation", it is used so that knowledge about good works, the works in accordance with that knowledge, and the faith in these works all appear together. For example—

चित्तिः स्रुक्; चित्तमाज्यं; आधीतं बर्हिः । (cittiḥ sruk; cittamājyaṃ; ādhītaṃ barhiḥ |) (printed ತೈ. ಆ. 3-1-2)

This sentence is cited also in the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka. Explaining its purport, Sāyaṇa says

चित्ती संज्ञान इति धातोश्चित्ति शब्दनिष्पत्तिः । इदं वस्त्विदृशमेव न त्वन्यथेति (cittī saṃjñāna iti dhātośćitti śabdaniṣpattiḥ | idaṃ vastvidṛśameva na tvanyatheti)

in many kinds of forms. Rodasī: both heaven and earth. Ā viveśa: has entered and pervaded. Purupriyaḥ: dear to many. Dhāmabhiḥ: with radiances (endowed). Kaviḥ: wise Agni. Bhandate: is praised (by the sacrificers).

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

Agni, the protector of sacrifices, giver of strength to the learned praisers, means of knowledge for the priests and helper of the works, has entered and pervaded both heaven and earth in many kinds of forms, terrestrial, lightning and so on. Agni, dear to many, endowed with radiances and wise, is praised by the sacrificers.

Printed English translation

The parent of sacrifices, the invigorator of the wise, the end (of the rite), the instruction of the priests, Agni, who has pervaded heaven and earth in many forms, the friend of man, wise, (and endowed) with splendours, is glorified (by the worshipper).

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Asuraḥ—in the present context the word asura means endowed with power. असुरः शत्रूणां निरसिता । यद्वा । असुः प्राणो बलं वा तद्वान् । (asuraḥ śatrūṇāṃ nirasitā | yadvā | asuḥ prāṇo balaṃ vā tadvān |) — one who drives away enemies; or, since the word asu means breath or strength, one who has breath or strength. Or asavaḥ means waters; since he gives them, the word asura is also a synonym of Indra. When the word is an epithet of Agni all these meanings are possible. In the same way there are meanings such as wise, giver, "the year of the nature of time" and cloud. These varieties of meaning and their uses have been explained fully before. In the present context it means strong, or giver of breath.

Vāghatāṃ—it is derived from the root vah. The Nirukta authors have read this word among the names of priests (Ni. 3-19). The priests may have been spoken of by this word because they carry out the sacrificial work. It has been explained in two ways, वोढारो मेधाविनो वा (voḍhāro medhāvino vā). Both meanings may refer to the priests.

Vayunaṃ—this word is read among the names of knowledge such as ketaḥ, ketuḥ (Ni. 3-13). It is said to have this meaning because it produces light. वयुनं वेतेः कांतिर्वा प्रज्ञा वा । (vayunaṃ veteḥ kāṃtirvā prajñā vā |)

(Ni. 5-15). The Nirukta authors show that, derived from the root vī, which gives the sense of weaving, it gives the sense of desire or knowledge, and citing this Ṛk they explain स तमोऽप्रज्ञानं ततन्वत्सूतं सूर्येण प्रज्ञानवच्चकार । (sa tamo 'prajñānaṃ tatanvatsūtaṃ sūryeṇa prajñānavaccakāra |) (Ni. 5-5): the meaning is that he made what was in the form of darkness and beyond perception an object of knowledge. In the present Ṛk it means knowledge.

Bhūrivarpasā—"with many kinds of forms, terrestrial, lightning and so on": the many forms and powers of Agni are described. In the Special Topics of the Ṛk beginning "trīṇi jānā" (Ṛgveda Saṃhitā Part ೮, pp. ೧೮-೧೯) the different forms of Agni in the terrestrial and other realms have been explained. There is one kind of description that he is seen in the sea as the submarine fire, in heaven as Āditya and in the atmosphere as lightning. Besides, the names Pavamāna for the terrestrial Agni, Vanaspati for the Agni of the middle world and Śuci for the Agni of heaven are also well known. These distinctions were told before.

The gods have placed in this world the delightful Agni in a delightful chariot, the tawny-hued Vaishwanara, the sitter in the waters, the omniscient, the all-pervading, the endowed with energies, the cherisher, the illustrious.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In the previous Ṛk Agni was described and praised by epithets such as bhūrivarpasā, and in the present Ṛk by the epithets vigāhaṃ, taviṣībhiḥ and āvṛtaṃ. In this Ṛk he is praised as Agni who pervades everywhere, is endowed with powers of all kinds and sustains the world. The great power of Agni and his fame under many names owing to his many powers are described in the Śatapatha in this way.

All the beings created by Prajāpati are of the nature of seasons. Prajāpati himself is the year. His wife is Uṣas. Prajāpati and these beings sowed the seed in Uṣas. Within the year a boy was born. He began to weep.

Prajāpati said to him, "Boy, why do you weep? You were born of toil and of the fruit of austerity; you should not weep." Then Agni said, "After I was born, no name was given to me. Therefore I am not free from fault. Give me a name." A name should be given as soon as a son is born.

Then Prajāpati said, "Because you wept, I have called you by the name Rudra." Agni did indeed become of the form of Rudra. Even so he said, "I have greater power than this Rudra form. Give me another name."

तमब्रवीत्सर्वोऽसीति । तद्यदस्य तन्नामाकरोदापस्तद्रूपमभवन्ना पो वै सर्वोऽद्भो हीदग्ं सर्वं जायते सोऽब्रवीज्ज्यायान्या अतोऽस्मि धेह्येव मे नामेति ॥ (tamabravītsarvo 'sīti | tadyadasya tannāmākarodāpastadrūpamabhavannā po vai sarvo 'dbho hīdagṃ sarvaṃ jāyate so 'bravījjyāyānyā ato 'smi dhehyeva me nāmeti ॥) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರ 6-1-3-11)

"Then you are Sarva (all-named)," said Prajāpati. Since all beings in the world are born from water, water is all-named. Since Prajāpati gave Agni this name, Agni was transformed into this form, and said, "I have still greater power. Give me another name."

"Then be famous as Paśupati," he said. This name is because Paśupati is of the nature of plants, and because cattle become masters (strong) after they obtain plants; and Agni took the form of Paśupati, that is, of plants, and entered into them. "I have still greater power. Give me a name suited to it," he said.

तमब्रवीदुग्रोऽसीति । तद्यदस्य तन्नामाकरोद्वायुस्तद्रूपमभवद्वायुर्वा उग्रस्तस्माद्यदा बलवद्वात्युग्रो वातीत्याहुः सोऽब्रवीज्जायान्वा अतोऽस्मि धेह्येव मे नामेति ॥ (tamabravīdugro 'sīti | tadyadasya tannāmākarodvāyustadrūpamabhavadvāyurvā ugrastasmādyadā balavadvātyugro vātītyāhuḥ soSbravījjāyānvā atoSsmi dhehyeva me nāmeti ‖) (printed శ. బ్రా. 6-1-3-13)

"Then I call you Ugra," he said. The name is because the wind is Ugra, and it is customary to say "Ugra blows" when the wind blows strongly; and Agni was transformed into this form. "I have still greater power than this. Give me a name to match," he said.

"Then be famous as Aśani," said Prajāpati. When lightning strikes it is customary to say "the aśani has struck", so lightning is the form of Aśani. After Agni was given this name he was transformed into this form. "I have still greater strength. Give me a name like it," he said.

तमब्रवीद्भवोऽसीति ॥ तद्यदस्य तन्नामाकरोत्पर्जन्यस्तद्रूपमभवत्पर्जन्यो वै भवः पर्जन्याद्धीदग्ं सर्वं भवति सोऽब्रवीज्जायान्वा अतोऽस्मि धेह्येव मे नामेति ॥ (tamabravīdbhavo 'sīti ‖ tadyadasya tannāmākarotparjanyastadrūpamabhavatparjanyo vai bhavaḥ parjanyāddhīdagṃ sarvaṃ bhavati so 'bravījjāyānvā ato 'smi dhehyeva me nāmeti ‖) (printed శ. బ్రా. 6--1-3-15, as supplied)

"Because of still greater power, be famous as Bhava," he said. At once Parjanya became this form (or Agni himself became of the form of Parjanya). Since everything in the world arises from Parjanya (bhavati), Parjanya has the name Bhava. Since this power was chiefly Agni's, Agni was given this name. "I have still greater strength. Give me a name suited to it," Agni asked.

p. 649

तमब्रवीन्महादेवोऽसीति । तद्यदस्य तन्मामाकरोच्चंद्रमास्तद्रूपमभवत्प्रजापतिर्वै चंद्रमाः प्रजापतिर्वै महान् देवः सोऽब्रवीज्ज्यायान्वा अतोऽस्मि धेह्येव मे नामेति । (tamabravīnmahādevo 'sīti | tadyadasya tanmāmākaroccaṃdramāstadrūpamabhavatprajāpatirvai caṃdramāḥ prajāpatirvai mahān devaḥ so 'bravījjāyānvā ato 'smi dhehyeva me nāmeti |) (printed శ. బ్రా. 6-1-3-16)

"Therefore you are Mahādeva," Prajāpati said. The moon is Mahādeva; Mahādeva is Prajāpati. After this name was given to Agni, the moon became this form. "Yet I have greater power than this. Give me a name suited to it," he asked.

तमब्रवीदीशानोऽसीति । तद्यदस्य तन्नामाकरोदादित्यस्तद्रूपमभवदादित्यो वा ईशान आदित्यो ह्यस्य सर्वस्येष्टो सोऽब्रवीदेतावान्वा अस्मि मा मेतः परो नाम धा इति ॥ (tamabravīdīśāno 'sīti | tadyadasya tannāmākarodādityastadrūpamabhavadādityo vā īśāna ādityo hyasya sarvasyeṣṭo so 'bravīdetāvānvā asmi mā metaḥ paro nāma dhā iti ॥) (printed శ. బ్రా. 6-1-3-17)

"For this reason be famous as Īśāna (lord of all)," Prajāpati said. Since Āditya is lord of the world, and therefore is famous as Īśāna, Āditya became of the form of Agni; "all these are my powers; there is no need to give any more names," he said.

तान्येतान्यष्टावग्निरूपाणि । कुमारो नवमः सैनाग्ने स्त्रिवृत्ता ॥ (tānyetānyaṣṭāvagnirūpāṇi | kumāro navamaḥ sainmāgne strivṛttā ॥) (printed శ. బ్రా. 6-1-3-18)

Thus these eight, Rudra, Sarva, Paśupati, Ugra, Aśani, Bhava, Mahādeva and Īśāna, are names of Agni that indicate his power. Each name indicates a different kind of power. Kumāra, of the nature of the trivṛt, is the ninth name of Agni. These great powers are described in the present Ṛk as vigāhaṃ, taviṣībhiḥ and āvṛtaṃ.

Bhūrṇiṃ—भर्तारं । (bhartāraṃ |) The meaning is the lord who upholds and nourishes the world. This word is derived from the root bhuraṇ (to bear and nourish, dhāraṇapoṣaṇayoḥ), which means both bearing and nourishing.

यन्नासत्या भुरण्यथो यद्वा देव भिषज्यथः । अयं वां वत्सो मतिभिर्न विंधते हविष्मंतं हि गच्छथः ॥ (yannāsatyā bhuraṇyatho yadvā deva bhiṣajyathaḥ | ayaṃ vāṃ vatso matibhirna viṃdhate haviṣmaṃtaṃ hi gacchathaḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 8-9-6)

Here भुरण्यथः सर्वं जगत्पोषयथः । (bhuraṇyathaḥ sarvaṃ jagatpoṣayathaḥ |): "you nourish the whole world", is the praise. Since it is derived from the same root, in the present Ṛk too the meaning is nourisher. The use of this word in the sense of going has been told before and explained with examples.

p. 650

Candraḥ—चंद्रश्चंदतेः कांतिकर्मणः । (caṃdraścaṃdateḥ kāṃtikarmaṇaḥ |) The word candra is derived from the root cand, which gives the sense of shedding light and causing delight. In the present context it is an epithet of Agni, who gives delight to the whole world.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

Agni, who is the leader of the world, swift in action, tranquil-minded and destroyer of enemies, together with the gods who are worshipped by sacrifices, the priests and the works, performing the manifold sacrifice of the sacrificer, moves pervading between heaven and earth.

Printed English translation

Perfecting in performance the multiform sacrifice of the worshipper, along with the gods to whom solemnities have been addressed, and together with the priests, Agni, the charioteer, the swift-moving, the humble-minded. the destroyer of foes, passes along between (heaven and earth).

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Jantubhiḥ—this word is used in the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā so that it gives sense for any of the things that are born, according to the context. The words jantuḥ, jantavaḥ, jantubhiḥ are understood, in different contexts according to the passage, as applying to priests, sacrificers, enemies, all creatures and all things that have birth. In the present Ṛk it is a synonym for priest.

Puruṣeśasaṃ—बहुरूपं । (bahurūpaṃ |) The word peśa means form (the Ṛk reads puru-peśasaṃ; the supplied text also prints puruṣeśasaṃ in the bhāṣya). The epithet is because the sacrifice has many forms. Sāyaṇa has explained that it is so because of the offering substances such as purodāśa, animal, soma and oblations, and the varieties of sacrifice such as ekāha, ahīna and satra.

स एष यज्ञः पंचविधोऽग्निहोत्रं दर्शपूर्णमासौ चातुर्मास्यानि पशुः सोमः ॥ (sa eṣa yajñaḥ paṃcavidho 'gnihotraṃ darśapūrṇarmāsau cāturmāsyāni paśuḥ somaḥ ||) (printed ಐ. ಆ. ೨-೩)

The sacrifice is of five kinds: Agnihotra, the full-moon and new-moon sacrifices (the supplied text has "ದರ್ಶಪೂರ್ಣಮಾಸೌ"), Cāturmāsya, animal sacrifice and Soma sacrifice; thus the Aitareya (Āraṇyaka, printed as Brāhmaṇa) divides it into five. Since there are subdivisions within these divisions, all these are included and described by the epithet puruṣeśasaṃ.

Abhiśasticātanaḥ—the word abhiśasti has many meanings such as curse, calamity and reproach. In the present context aratis, enemies, is the sense given. The meaning is one who destroys such enemies.

p. 652

Damūnāḥ—दमूना दममना वा दानमना वा दांतमना वा । अपि वा दम इति गृहनाम तन्मनाः स्यात् ॥ (damūnā damamanā vā dānamanā vā dāṃtamanā vā | api vā dama iti gṛhanāma tanmanāḥ syāt ‖) The epithet damūnāḥ is either because he has a mind full of compassion, or a mind to give, or because he is engaged in self-control; or, since the word dama is a synonym of house, he may be one who is fond of the house (Ni. 4-5). That is why Sāyaṇa too gave the alternative meanings dānamanāḥ, damamanāḥ, dāntamanā vā. Whatever meaning is given with reference to Agni is appropriate.

(rain). Saṃ didīhi: provide. Jāgṛve: O Agni, ever awake! Bṛhataḥ: to the sacrificer endowed with greatness. Vayāṃsi ca: and foods. Jinva: provide. Sukratuḥ: you, endowed with excellent works. Vipāṃ: of the wise. Devānāṃ: gods. Uśik: dear. Asi: are.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Agni, praise the gods for good sons and long life. Satisfy them with food in the form of oblation. Provide for us rain and plants, the means of food. O Agni, ever awake, provide foods to the sacrificer endowed with great qualities. You, endowed with excellent works, are dear to the wise gods.

Printed English translation

Agni, praise (the gods that we may enjoy) good offspring and long life : propitiate them by libations ; bestow upon us plentiful crops: ever vigilant, grant food to the respectable (institutor of this ceremony), for you are the desired of the gods, the object of the pious acts of the devout.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Ūrjā—रसेन अन्ने वा । (rasena anne vā |) The meaning is either by the sap in the nature of strength or by food. The word ūrja is read in the Nirukta among the names of food (Ni. 3-9). ऊर्जं बलं, बलप्राणनसमर्थमन्नं । (ūrjaṃ balaṃ, balaprāṇanasamarthamannaṃ |) — food that increases strength. In some places the purport is strength itself, as strength-giving food. The Nirukta authors cite the sentence to show that the word ūrja is used in one place as food and in another as strength, two meanings in a single sentence.

देवी ऊर्जाहुती इषमूर्जमन्यावक्षत् सग्निं सपीतिमन्या नवेन पूर्वं दयामानाः स्याम पुराणेन नवं तामूर्जमूर्जाहुती ऊर्जयमाने ॥ (devī ūrjāhutī iṣamūrjamanyāvakṣat sagniṃ sapītimanyā navena pūrvaṃ dayāmānāḥ syāma purāṇena navaṃ tāmūrjamūrjāhutī ūrjayamāne ‖) (printed ಮಾ. ಸಂ. 28-16)

यो वैतामक्षितिं वेद सोऽन्नमत्ति प्रतीकेन । स देवानपि गच्छति स ऊर्जमुपजीवति ॥ (yo vaitāmakṣitiṃ veda so 'nnamatti pratīkena | sa devānapi gacchati sa ūrjamupajīvati ‖) (printed బృ. ౮౮. 1-5-1)

Since both words, anna and ūrja, are used there, the word ūrja there means simply strength. In the present Ṛk it means food that nourishes strength.

In the present Ṛk Agni is praised as giver of food and as ever awake. The epithet jāgṛvi is because Agni has a thousand eyes and always knows all the forms of gods, men and the rest.

अग्ने सहस्राक्षेति । हिरण्यशकलैर्वा एष सहस्राक्षः (agne sahasrākṣeti | hiraṇyaśakalairvā eṣa sahasrākṣaḥ) ..... त्वग्ं साहस्रस्य राय ईशिष्मइति त्वग्ं सर्वस्यै रय्या ईशिषे ॥ (tvagṃ sāhasrasya rāya īśiṣmaiti tvagṃ sarvasyai rayyā īśiṣe ‖) (printed శ. బ్రా. 9-2-3-32; the printed passage has a row of dots inside it)

"O Agni, you are thousand-eyed; one who always looks at all the dealings of gods, men and the rest; lord of all food; giver of food; of the nature of strength": thus the qualities of Agni are described. Describing the very point praised in the present Ṛk, the Śatapatha and the Taittirīya Saṃhitā and others praise Agni's power of bestowing wealth in this way.

अथ यद्वसुवने वसुधेयस्येति यजति । अग्निर्वै वसुवनिरिंद्रो वसुधेयः । (atha yadvasuvane vasudheyasyeti yajati | agnirvai vasuvaniriṃdro vasudheyaḥ |) (printed శ. బ్రా. 1-8-2-16)

Since Agni is the possessor of wealth, one should recite the mantra वसुवने वसुधेयस्य (vasuvane vasudheyasya) and make the oblation. Agni is the lord of wealth; therefore Agni is the giver of wealth, Indra the receiver: so Agni is praised. The same point is praised in the Taittirīya Saṃhitā (Tai. Saṃ. 2-6-9).

Sukratuḥ—the word sukratu means one who has excellent power, or excellent wealth, or excellent works; but since the word kratu is a synonym of action, the meaning excellent work predominates. In the present context it is an epithet of Agni as doer of good works.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Jātavedasaṃ (printed "ಜಾತವೇದಸಂ")—Agni is famous as Jātavedas because he knows all that is born. There is a historical story about this—

प्रजापतिः प्रजा असृजत ताः सृष्टाः पराच्य एवायन्न व्यावर्तंत ता अग्निना पर्यगच्छत्ता अग्निमुपावर्तंत तमेवाद्याप्युपावृत्ताः सोऽब्रवीज्ञाता वै प्रजा अनेनाविदमिति यदब्रवीज्ञाता वै प्रजा अनेनाविदमिति तज्ञातवेदस्यमभवत्तज्ञातवेदसो जातवेदस्त्वं । (prajāpatiḥ prajā asṛjata tāḥ

sṛṣṭāḥ parācya evāyanna vyāvartaṃta tā agninā paryagacchattā agnimupāvartaṃta tamevādyāpyupāvṛttāḥ so 'bravījjātā vai prajā anenāvidamiti yadabravījjātā vai prajā anenāvidamiti tajñātavedasyamabhavattajñātavedaso jātavedastvaṃ |) (printed ಐ ಬ್ರಾ. 13-36)

Prajāpati created creatures. All those created creatures escaped. Then he made Agni surround them. All of them approached Agni. Then he said, "I have known the creatures born (created) from Prajāpati." Because he knew what was born, the name Jātavedas became famous for Agni.

तद्विंदते तद्यज्जातं जातं विंदते तस्माज्जातवेदाः । (tadviṃdate tadyajjātaṃ jātaṃ viṃdate tasmājjātavedāḥ |) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 9-5-1-68)

It is stated in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa too that the name Jātavedas became famous because Agni knows all that is born at the moment of birth. Since the word vindate in the above sentence is also given the sense "pervades", it can be said that the name Jātavedas is because he pervades everything at the moment of birth. The Nirukta authors have given some other explanations as well.

जातानि वेद । चातानि वैनं विदुः । जाते जाते विद्यत इति वा । जातवित्तो ना जातधनो ना जातविद्यो वा जातज्ञानः । (jātāni veda | cātāni vainaṃ viduḥ | jāte jāte vidyata iti vā | jātavitto nā jātadhano nā jātavidyo vā jātajñānaḥ |) (Ni. 7-19)

They explain the word thus: one who has knowledge of all things at birth, who pervades all beings, or who has all wealth, or who has a wisdom that knows everything. (Ni. 7-19)

भूतानि वेद यज्ञातो जातवेदाथ कथ्यते । यच्चैष जातविद्योऽभूत् वित्तं जातोऽधिवेत्ति वा ॥ विद्यते सर्वभूतैर्हि यद्वा जातः पुनःपुनः । तेन्नैष मध्यभागेंद्रो जातवेदा इति स्तुतः ॥ (bhūtāni veda yajñāto jātavedātha kathyate | yaccaiṣa jātavidyo 'bhūt vittaṃ jāto 'dhivetti vā ‖ vidyate sarvabhūtairhi yadvā jātaḥ punaḥpunaḥ | tennaiṣa madhyabhāgeṃdro jātavedā iti stutaḥ ‖) (printed ಬೃ. ದೇ. 2-30, 31)

The explanation of the Bṛhaddevatā is that Agni, like Indra of the middle world, is praised as Jātavedas: because at birth he knows everything, or because he is the basis of the origin of knowledge, or because, as said above, at birth he knows and obtains all wealth, or because at his birth he is known by all creatures.

[Running head, p. 657: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 21, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

Jūtibhiḥ—वेगैर्युक्तं । (vegairyuktaṃ |) The purport is stated as "endowed with speeds or powers". In some places the word jūti is also taken to mean wisdom. Besides, in the sentence

" संज्ञानमाज्ञानं (saṃjñānamājñānaṃ).....मनीषा जूतिः स्मृतः (manīṣā jūtiḥ smṛtaḥ) " (printed ३. ७७. ३-२)

which describes the qualities of the self that obtains knowledge of Brahman, jūti is said to be one quality. Śaṅkarācārya explaining it says रुजादिदुःखत्वाभावः । (rujādiduḥkhatvābhāvaḥ |) — he has shown it to be the quality of having no mental impurity of any kind. Probably the purport is that a mind free from impurity strives with speed for the attainment of knowledge.

मखस्य ते तविषस्य प्र जूतिमियर्मि वाचममृताय भूषन् । इंद्र क्षितीनामसि मानुषीणां विशां दैवीनामुत पूर्वयावा ॥ (makhasya te taviṣasya pra jūtimiyarmi vācamamṛtāya bhūṣan | iṃdra kṣitīnāmasi mānuṣīṇāṃ viśāṃ daivīnāmuta pūrvayāvā ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-34-2)

In this Ṛk, whose prayer is "O Indra, to you, full of power and venerable, I offer this praise impelled by the mind", the meaning is the same as in the sentence of the Aitareya Upaniṣad cited above. For jūtiṃ Sāyaṇa has given the meaning "impelled by the mind". Whether it is mental or physical, when this word is used the speed of the action is understood.

Agni, who is shining, of divine nature, delighting exceedingly and endowed with an excellent chariot, comprehends all creatures everywhere by his own power. Let us, by praises, adorn and make shine the works of that Agni, who nourishes many and pervades the sacrificial house.

Printed English translation

The resplendent and adorable Agni, riding in an auspicious chariot, has comprehended the whole earth by his vigour : let us glorify with fit praises, the acts of that cherisher of multitudes in his own abode.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Sumadrathaḥ—सुमत्स्ययमित्यर्थः (sumatsyayamityarthaḥ) (Ni. 6-22). The Nirukta authors have explained this word as svayam, that is, acting of itself without the impulse of another. The word is also used in the sense of auspicious, excellent. सुमद्गणः, सुमदंशु॥ (sumadgaṇaḥ, sumadaṃśu॥) and so on wherever such uses occur, this is the sense. In the present Ṛk too, sumadrathaḥ is said to mean śobhanarathaḥ, an auspicious chariot.

Suvṛktibhiḥ—the word suvṛkti is a synonym of praise. The purport is "with the most excellent praises".

Printed English translation

Vaishwanara, I celebrate your energies, whereby, O sage, you have become omniscient : as soon as born, Agni, you have occupied the realms (of space), and heaven and earth. and have comprehended all these with yourself.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In the present Ṛk Agni's all-pervading radiance and world-protecting power are described. Earlier, in the fifth Ṛk of this same sūkta, the explanation of the eight names that indicate Agni's power and glory was given. Now the nature of these pervading powers of Agni and the order of their protection of the world are examined. All these are described in the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa in this way. The pervading property that is described in the present Ṛk by भुवनानि रोदसी आप्पणः (bhuvanāni rodasī āppaṇaḥ) is thus made clear.

विद्या ते अग्ने त्रेधा त्रयाणीति । अग्निर्वायुरादित्य एतानि हास्य तानि त्रेधा त्रयाणि विद्या ते धाम विभृता पुरुत्रेति यदिदं बहुधा विह्रियते विद्या ते नाम परमं गुहा यदिति यविष्ठ इति वा अस्य तन्नाम परमं गुहा विद्या तमत्सं यत आजगंथेत्यापो वा उत्सोऽद्भ्यो वा एष प्रथममाजगाम ॥ (vidyā te agne tredhā trayāṇīti | agnirvāyurāditya etāni hāsya tāni tredhā trayāṇi vidyā te dhāma vibhṛtā purutreti yadidaṃ bahudhā vihriyate vidyā te nāma paramaṃ guhā yaditi yaviṣṭha iti vā asya tannāma paramaṃ guhā vidyā tamatsaṃ yata ājagaṃthetyāpo vā utso 'dbhyo vā eṣa prathamamājagāma ‖) (printed ಶ. ಬ್ರಾ. 6-7-4-4)

"O Agni, we have told your three forms of the nature of the trivṛt. These three kinds, Agni, Vāyu and Āditya, are your other forms. We also know that these forms, with their subdivisions, spread over the whole universe. We know too that your highest name and your lowest name are very hidden, and that you arose from the water of the atmosphere and pervaded everywhere."

The god with the power of a man made you blaze in the water of the atmosphere. Prajāpati himself is that god (Nṛmaṇa). He it was who made you blaze. In the udder of the world of heaven (the printed Kannada has "ಕೆಚ್ಚಲಿನಲ್ಲಿ") the god Nṛcakṣas made you blaze. Prajāpati himself is that god Nṛcakṣas. In the third world the buffaloes (mahiṣas) made you grow and become strong. The principal breaths are these buffaloes. They became the cause of your strength.

Since he pervades all worlds, Agni is made up of the gods; all the gods are contained in him. Thus Agni's power is described. This universal-pervading form of Agni Vaiśvānara has been described in many Śruti sentences, as told before. In the present Ṛk too the same point is praised.

Svarvit—for the word सर्ववित् (sarvavit) the meaning all-knowing is given.

By performing works that give delight to Agni, in the form of Vaiśvānara, abundant wealth is obtained. The chief and wise Agni gives wealth to the sacrificer from the desire for excellent works. That same Agni was born worshipping heaven and earth, who are the parents of the world and possessed of abundant generative power.

Printed English translation

From acts that are acceptable to Vaishwanara comes great (wealth); for he, the sage (Agni) alone, bestows (the reward) of zeal in (the performance of) his worship: adoring both his prolific friends, heaven and earth, Agni was born.

वैश्वानरस्य दंसनाभ्यः बृहत्—अग्नेः तोषकारीभ्यः क्रियाभ्यः महद्धनं भवतीति यत् तदवितथं (vaiśvānarasya daṃsanābhyaḥ bṛhat—agneḥ toṣakārībhyaḥ kriyābhyaḥ mahaddhanaṃ bhavatīti yat tadavitathaṃ) — that great wealth comes to the sacrificers from the sacrifices and other works done for the pleasure of Vaiśvānara Agni, and that this is not false; the meaning is that he will certainly give. In this sentence there is neither the word for wealth nor a verb to complete the sentence

p. 663

and therefore the bhāṣyakāra, supplying the words धनं भवति (dhanaṃ bhavati), has explained the meaning of the sentence.

Daṃsanābhyaḥ—the word daṃsa is read among the twenty-six names of work (Ni. 3-1). Here work means the sacrifices and other works that please Vaiśvānara Agni. The meaning is that Agni gives abundant wealth, or their desired ends, to the priests and sacrificers who do such sacrificial works and to other people who make praises and the like.

एकः कविः स्वपस्यया अरिणात्—देवेषु मुख्यः क्रांतदर्शि अग्निः शोभनयज्ञादिकर्मेच्छया यजमानादिभ्यो धनं ददाति । (ekaḥ kaviḥ svapasyayā ariṇāt—deveṣu mukhyaḥ krāṃtadarśi agniḥ śobhanayajñādikarmecchayā yajamānādibhyo dhanaṃ dadāti |) The same point as in the previous sentence is told in this sentence too. Here also the word dhana must be supplied. The chief meaning of the sentence: Agni, chief among the gods and far-seeing, gives wealth to the sacrificers and others who perform the sacrifice, with the wish that they perform the sacrificial works, that is, to help them perform them. The word eka here is not a numeral; it is used in the sense of "chief".

Svapasyayā—the word apaḥ is read among the names of work (Ni. 3-1). Su + apaḥ = svapaḥ, that is, excellent work. Svapasyā means the desire to do excellent work. Here excellent work means sacrificial work.

अग्निः भूरिरेतसा पितरा उभा द्यावापृथिवी महयन् आजायत—सोऽयमग्निः बहुरेतस्कौ उभौ पितरौ मातापितरौ द्यावापृथिव्यौ पूजयन्नजायत । (agniḥ bhūriretasā pitarā ubhā dyāvāpṛthivī mahayan ājāyata—so 'yamagniḥ bahuretaskau ubhau pitarau mātāpitarau dyāvāpṛthivyau pūjayannajāyata |) This Agni, worshipping (honouring) heaven and earth, who are able to produce many creatures by their seed, who are protectors of all and are his own parents, was born. That is, as soon as this Agni was born he worshipped with honours his parents, heaven and earth.

Bhūriretasā—since the word bhūri is read among the names of "many" (Ni. 3-13), bhūri means abundant. The word retaḥ is read among the names of water (Ni. 2-24). Retas means seed, the capacity to produce sons and the like. Therefore bhūriretasā means that these heaven and earth are capable of producing many creatures by their seed. It is well known that many creatures are born on earth. Or, if retaḥ is taken to mean water, then bhūriretasā may be said to mean those having abundant water, that is, endowed with water

this is the meaning that can be stated. On earth there are many reservoirs of water such as rivers and seas; in the atmosphere (heaven) there are clouds, the cause of rain, that is, full of water. It is therefore proper to take heaven and earth as endowed with abundant water.

Pitarā—मातापितरौ । (mātāpitarau |) The bhāṣyakāra's explanation is "heaven and earth, who are the parents". For the word pitṛ Yāska says पिता पाता वा पालयिता वा (pitā pātā vā pālayitā vā) (Ni. 4-21): that is, the word pitā, derived from the root pā (to protect), indicates one who protects or nourishes. Therefore for the word pitarā the meaning "the parents" or "protecting and nourishing all creatures" can be given. This word is an epithet of dyāvāpṛthivī, in the dual accusative form. The word pitarā in this Ṛk does not indicate the father alone; it indicates both father and mother. In the Ṛgveda the dual pitarā indicates both parents.

युवाना पितरा पुनः सत्यमंत्रा ऋजूयवः । (yuvānā pitarā punaḥ satyamaṃtrā ṛjūyavaḥ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-20-4)

In these Ṛks, and in the Ṛks Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-7-1; 3-54-16; 4-33-3; 4-34-9; 4-35-5; 4-36-3; 7-53-2; 7-67-1; 10-11-6; 10-12-4; 10-39-6; 10-61-1; 10-65-8, the word pitarā means just parents. Besides, the word mātarā too means not only mother but parents.

प्र वो नपातमपां कृणुध्वं प्र मातरा रास्सिनस्यायोः । (pra vo napātamapāṃ kṛṇudhvaṃ pra mātarā rāssinasyāyoḥ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-122-4)

p. 665

and in the Ṛks Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-142-7; 3-1-7; 3-5-7; 3-7-1; 3-33-1; 3-33-3; 4-22-4; 5-5-6; 6-17-7; 6-32-1; 7-2-5; 7-7-3; 8-99-6; 9-9-3; 9-68-4; 9-70-6; 9-75-4; 9-85-12; 9-102-7; 10-1-7; 10-35-3; 10-59-8; 10-64-14; 10-79-4; 10-120-7; 10-140-2, the word mātarā is used in the sense of parents. Besides, the word mātarāpitarā is read in only this one Ṛk. The same meaning applies to this word. Generally these words, besides indicating the sense of parents, in many contexts indicate heaven and earth too.

न यस्य सातुर्जुनितोरवारि न मातरापितरा नू चिदिष्टौ । (na yasya sāturjunitoravāri na mātarāpitarā nū cidiṣṭau |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-6-7)

Dyāvāpṛthivī—heaven and earth are said in many places to be the parents of the gods. In the same way they are said to be the parents of Agni too.

दौर्मे पिता जनिता नाभिरत्र बंधुर्मे माता पृथिवी महीयं । (daurme pitā janitā nābhiratra baṃdhurme mātā pṛthivī mahīyaṃ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-164-33)

In this Ṛk it is said that heaven is the father (begetter) of Agni and the earth his mother.

Sūkta 4 (Maṇḍala 3)

The fourth sūkta of the Third Maṇḍala.

[Garbled heading as supplied before the introduction: "ಪಿ ಳ ಠ ಕೆ." (for Pīṭhike), kept as a note in kn.md.]

Pīṭhike (Introduction) to Sūkta 4

We have given the explanation of the Āprī sūktas in Ṛgveda Saṃhitā Part 2, pages 73 to 74 and 528 (printed so with Latin digits). In the Ṛgveda there are ten Āprī sūktas in all. Among them there are mantras addressed to the deities Idhmaḥ (Samiddho agniḥ), Narāśaṃsaḥ, Tanūnapāt, Iḷaḥ, Barhiḥ, Devīr dvāraḥ, Uṣāsānaktā, Daivya hotārau pracetasau, Tisro devyaḥ Sarasvatī-Iḷā-Bhāratyaḥ, Tvaṣṭā, Vanaspatiḥ and Svāhākṛtayaḥ. But as to the deities Narāśaṃsa and Tanūnapāt, in some sūktas only one deity, Narāśaṃsa, is praised, in some others only one deity, Tanūnapāt, and in yet others both deities, Narāśaṃsa and Tanūnapāt. According to this, the Āprī sūktas have been divided into three kinds, namely the Āprī sūktas composed by the seers Vasiṣṭha, Atri, Vādhryaśva and Gṛtsamada, that is—

1. जुषस्व नः समिधमग्ने (juṣasva naḥ samidhamagne) - Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-2 (Maitrāvaruṇi Vasiṣṭha)
2. सुसमिद्धाय शोचिषे (susamiddhāya śociṣe) - Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-5 (Vasuśruta Ātreya)

3. इमां मे अग्ने समिधं (imāṃ me agne samidhaṃ) - Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-70 (Sumitra Vādhryaśva)
4. समिद्धो अग्निर्निहितः (samiddho agnirnihitaḥ) - Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-3 (Gṛtsamada)

[The supplied list begins "1. ०." with a stray extra "1.".]

p. 666

[Running head, p. 666: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 4.]

These four sūktas belong to one group. In each of them there is one Ṛk addressed to the deity Narāśaṃsa. Therefore these four sūktas are called narāśaṃsavantisūktāni, Āprī sūktas that praise the deity Narāśaṃsa alone.

1. सुसमिद्धोन आ वहः (susamiddhona ā vahaḥ) - Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-13 (Medhātithi Kāṇva)
2. समिद्धो अग्न आ वह (samiddho agna ā vaha) - Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-142 (Dīrghatamas Aucathya)

These two Āprī sūktas belong to the second group. In them there are Ṛks addressed to both deities, Narāśaṃsa and Tanūnapāt, one each. Therefore these Āprī sūktas are known as sūktas with both kinds of deity, Narāśaṃsa and Tanūnapāt. Since both deities are in these sūktas, in the sūkta 1-142, leaving out Indra, there are twelve oblations in place of the eleven prayāja oblations.

1. समिद्धो अद्य राजसि (samiddho adya rājasi) - Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-188 (Agastya Maitrāvaruṇi)
2. समित्समित्सुमना (samitsamitsumanā) - Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-4 (Viśvāmitra, son of Gādhin)
3. समिद्धो विश्वतस्पतिः (samiddho viśvataspatiḥ) - Ṛ. Saṃ. 9-5 (Asita Kāśyapa or Devala)
4. समिद्धो अद्य मनुषो (samiddho adya manuṣo) - Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-110 (Jamadagni Bhārgava)

These sūktas belong to the third group. In them there are only Ṛks addressed to the deity Tanūnapāt (there are no Ṛks addressed to Narāśaṃsa). Therefore they are called tanūnapātvantisūktāni, that is, Āprī sūktas containing mantras addressed to the deity Tanūnapāt.

These Āprī sūktas are recited when the animal oblation is made, in order to perform the eleven (ekādaśa) prayāja oblations. There is the Taittirīya Saṃhitā sentence एकादशावदानान्यवद्यति दश वै पशोः प्राणा आत्मैकादशः (ekādaśāvadānānyavadyati daśa vai paśoḥ prāṇā ātmaikādaśaḥ) (Tai. Saṃ. 6-3-10-3). In reciting these Āprī sūktas for the animal oblation there is a special rule: sacrificers born in a particular gotra, when performing the sacrifice, must recite the Āprī sūkta composed by the seer of that gotra (Ā. 3-2). The present Āprī sūkta must be recited by those born in the gotra of the seer Viśvāmitra.

To understand the nature of the Āprī sūktas and the place they hold in the performance of rites, our sources are of two kinds. The first is the Śruti sentences of the Brāhmaṇas and the like; the second, the sentences of derivation in the Nirukta and the like. Of these two kinds of source, the derivation sentences of the Nirukta and the like are more reasoned and are accompanied by scientific explanations.

p. 667

Looking at the derivation of the word āprī stated in the Aitareya and other Brāhmaṇas, it can be said that they all understood and explained this word from the point of view of the performance of sacrifices and the like. For example—the Kauṣītaki Brāhmaṇa says that the name is because it is a means of gratifying;

तद्यदा प्रीणाति तस्मादाप्रियो नाम । (tadyadā prīṇāti tasmādāpriyo nāma |) (printed ಶಾ. ಬ್ರಾ. 10-3)

आप्रीभिराप्नुवन् । तदाप्रीणामाप्रित्वं ॥ (āprībhirāpnuvan | tadāprīṇāmāpritvaṃ ||) (Tai. Brā. 2-2-8-6) saying the same thing the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa also;

यदेतान्याप्रिया आज्यानि भवंति । आत्मानामेवेतैराप्रीणाति । (yadetānyāpriyā ājyāni bhavaṃti | ātmānāmevetairāprīṇāti |) (Tāṇḍya Brā. 15-8-2, printed ತಾ. ಬ್ರಾ.)

the Tāṇḍya Brāhmaṇa has also shown the nature of the word āprī.

In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa the explanation of the Āprīs is given while directing the duties that the hotṛ must perform at the time of the Agniṣṭoma sacrifice. After the description of the animal that is to be offered to Agni and Soma (2-3), eleven prayāja mantras are stated (2-4). In that context—

आप्रीभिराप्रीणाति । तेजो वै ब्रह्मवर्चसमाप्रियस्तेजसैवेनं तद्ब्रह्मवर्चसेन समर्धयति । (āprībhirāprīṇāti | tejo vai brahmavarcasamāpriyastejasaivenaṃ tadbrahmavarcasena samardhayati |) (printed ಇ . ಬ್ರಾ. 2-4)

The Āprī Ṛks are full of radiance and endowed with Brahmic splendour. By such Ṛks (the hotṛ) becomes the cause of satisfaction; thus there too it is told that they are a means of self-satisfaction. Afterwards it is told that the deities Samidh, Tanūnapāt and so on have identity with principles such as breath. The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa itself says before all others, telling these sūktas stated in the different Maṇḍalas of the Ṛgveda Saṃhitā, their fruit, and the seers who recited them

p. 668

ताभिर्य्यथयष्याप्रीणीयाद्यद्यथयष्या प्रीणाति यजमानमेव तद्भंधुताया नोत्सृजति । (tābhiryyathayaṣyāprīṇīyādyadyathayaṣyā prīṇāti yajamānameva tadbaṃdhutāyā notsṛjati |) (printed ಇ. ಬ್ರಾ. 2-4)

It is told that, by reciting these Ṛks composed by seers, he keeps the sacrificer from being parted from the sacrifice; thus the fruit of reciting these Ṛks is told. These sūktas were not seen by a single seer. Different seers saw these sūktas in their own personal circumstances. Even so, the nature of these sūktas and the fruit of reciting them appear alike in all of them.

It is known from the explanation of the Nirukta authors that from the time of the Brāhmaṇas and the like there has been a difference of opinion about these Āprī sūktas and the deities of these sūktas.

अथात आप्रियः । आप्रियः कस्मादाप्नोतेः प्रीणातीर्वा । आप्रीभिराप्रिणातीति च ब्राह्मणं । (athāta āpriyaḥ | āpriyaḥ kasmādāpnoteḥ prīṇātīrvā | āprībhirāpriṇātīti ca brāhmaṇaṃ |) (printed ऽ. 8-4)

The Nirukta authors have shown that, about the Āprī sūktas, the view of the Brāhmaṇas and the like differs from their own. Besides, they have cited from time to time the opinions of sages such as Kātkya, Śākapūṇi and Mādhyamika. It has been told in the special topics of the respective Ṛks that although Kātkya and the others were ritualists, in many contexts they do not accept the derivations given in the Brāhmaṇas. Having stated all these opinions, Yāska finally gives his own definite opinion. For example, he first collects all the opinions stated in the Brāhmaṇas and the like about the Āprī deities.

इतीमा आप्रीदेवता अनुक्रांताः । अथ किं देवताः प्रयाजानुयाजाः आग्नेया इत्येके। आग्नेया वै प्रयाजा आग्नेया अनुयाजा इति च ब्राह्मणं । छंदोदेवता इत्यपरं । छंदांसि वै प्रयाजाश्छंदांस्यनुयाजा इति च ब्राह्मणं । ऋतुदेवता इत्यपरं । ऋतवो वै प्रयाजा ऋतवोऽनुयाजा इति च ब्राह्मणं । पशुदेवता इत्यपरं । पशवो वै प्रयाजाः पशवोऽनुयाजा इति च ब्राह्मणं । प्राणदेवता इत्यपरं । प्राणावै प्रयाजा प्राणा वा अनुयाजा इति च ब्राह्मणं । आत्मदेवता इत्यपरं । आत्मा वै प्रयाजाः आत्मा वा अनुयाजा इति च ब्राह्मणं । आग्नेया इति तु स्थितिः । भक्तिमात्रमितरं ॥ (itīmā āprīdevatā anukrāṃtāḥ | atha kiṃ devatāḥ prayājānuyājāḥ āgneyā ityeke | āgneyā vai prayājā āgneyā anuyājā iti ca brāhmaṇaṃ | chaṃdodevatā ityaparaṃ | chaṃdāṃsi vai prayājāścaṃdāṃsyanuyājā iti ca brāhmaṇaṃ | ṛtudevatā ityaparaṃ | ṛtavo vai prayājā ṛtavo 'nuyājā iti ca brāhmaṇaṃ | paśudevatā ityaparaṃ | paśavo vai prayājāḥ paśavo 'nuyājā iti ca brāhmaṇaṃ | prāṇadevatā ityaparaṃ | prāṇāvai prayājā prāṇā vā anuyājā iti ca brāhmaṇaṃ | ātmadevatā ityaparaṃ | ātmā vai prayājāḥ ātmā vā anuyājā iti ca brāhmaṇaṃ | āgneyā iti tu sthitiḥ | bhaktimātramitaraṃ ॥) (printed ऽ. 8-22, i.e. Ni. 8-22)

Stating the respective views in this way, first,

p. 669

तव प्रयाजा अनुयाजाश्च केवल ऊर्जस्वंतो हविषः संतु भागाः । तवाग्ने यज्ञोऽयमस्तु सर्वस्तुभ्यं नमंतां प्रदिशश्च तस्रः । (tava prayājā anuyājāśca kevala ūrjasvaṃto haviṣaḥ saṃtu bhāgāḥ | tavāgne yajño 'yamastu sarvastubhyaṃ namaṃtāṃ pradiśaśca tasraḥ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-51-9)

citing this Ṛk, he gives his own explanation that, as stated in it, the prayāja and anuyāja mantras are addressed to Agni alone, and afterwards states other opinions. Of these, this same view is supported by the Brāhmaṇa sentence. But some say that they are addressed to the metres as deities (Śat. Brā. 1-3-2-9); others, to the deities of the nature of seasons (Śat. Brā. 1-3-2-8); others, to the sacrificial animal (Kau. Brā. 3-4); some, to the deity of the nature of breath (Ai. Brā. 1-11, Śat. Brā. 11-2-7-27); and still others, to the self (Tai. Saṃ. 6-1-5-4). Having collected all that has been said, he states his definite opinion that to say they are addressed to Agni is the sound view.

In Kātyāyana's Sarvānukramaṇī a difference is stated between the words āpra and aprī (this difference is told at the end of the Aprī sūkta, that is, the sūkta 1-142: it shows that the Ṛks addressed to the deity Narāśaṃsa are known as āpra mantras and those addressed to the deity Tanūnapāt as aprī mantras). In the Bṛhaddevatā,

द्वितीये द्वादशर्चे तु प्रत्यृचं यास्तु देवताः । सूयंते ह्यग्निना सार्धं तासां नामानि मे शृणु ॥ प्रथमायां स्तुतश्चैध्मो द्वितीयायां तनूनपात् । नराशंसस्त्रितियायां चतुर्थ्या० सूयते त्विळः ॥ बर्हिरेव तु पंचम्यां द्वारो देव्यस्ततोऽन्यया ॥ नक्तोषासा तु सप्तम्यामष्टम्यां संस्तुतौ सह । देव्याविति तु होतार् नवमामृचि संस्तुताः ॥ तिस्रो देव्यो दशम्यां तु ज्ञेयस्वष्टैव तु स्तुतः । एकादश्यां तु सूक्तस्य स्तुतं विद्याद्वनस्पतिं ॥ द्वादश्यां तु स्तुता देवीर्विद्यात्साहाकृतीरिति । सूक्तेऽस्मिन्प्रत्यृचं यासु देवताः परिकीर्तिताः ॥ ता एव सर्वास्वाप्रीषु द्वितीया तु विकल्प्यते । (dvitīye dvādaśarcè tu pratyṛcaṃ yāstu devatāḥ | sūyaṃte hyagninā sārdhaṃ tāsāṃ nāmāni me śṛṇu ‖ prathamāyāṃ stutaścedhmo dvitīyāyāṃ tanūnapāt | narāśaṃsastritiyāyāṃ caturthyāo sūyate tviḷaḥ ‖ barhireva tu paṃcamyāṃ dvāro devyastato 'nyayā ‖ naktoṣāsā tu saptamyāmaṣṭamyāṃ saṃstutau saha | devyāviti tu hotār navamāmṛci saṃstutāḥ ‖ tisro devyo daśamyāṃ tu jñeyasvaṣṭaiva tu stutaḥ | ekādaśyāṃ tu sūktasya stutaṃ vidyādvanaspatiṃ ‖ dvādaśyāṃ tu stutā devīrvidyātsāhākṛtīriti | sūkte 'sminpratyṛcaṃ yāsu devatāḥ parikīrtitāḥ ‖ tā eva sarvāsvāprīṣu dvitīyā tu vikalpyate |) (printed ಬೃ. ದೇ. 2-146 to 151)

p. 670

[Running head, p. 670: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 4.]

Naming in this way all the deities beginning with Idhma, it also shows the order of the sūkta and that in each Ṛk there is a separate deity.

Speaking of how many Āprī sūktas there are, the Nirukta authors say —

इतीमान्येकादशाप्रीसूक्तानि । तेषां वासिष्ठ मात्रेयं वाध्र्यश्वं गार्त्समदमिति नाराशंसवंति । मैधातिथं दैर्घतमसं प्रैषितमित्युभयवंत्यतोऽन्यानि तनूनपात्वंति तनूनपात्वंति ।
(itīmānyekādaśāprīsūktāni | teṣāṃ vāsiṣṭha mātreyaṃ vādhryaśvaṃ gārtsamadamiti nārāśaṃsavaṃti | maidhātithaṃ dairghatamasaṃ praiṣitamityubhayavaṃtyato 'nyāni tanūnapātvaṃti tanūnapātvaṃti |)
(printed ऋ. 8-22)

Of these sūktas, the praises seen by Vasiṣṭha, Atri, Vādhryaśva and Gṛtsamada are directed to Narāśaṃsa; those seen by the seers Medhātithi and Dīrghatamas, and the Praiṣa sūkta also, are addressed to both deities, Tanūnapāt and Narāśaṃsa; the remaining four sūktas are addressed to the deity Tanūnapāt alone. In all (counting the Praiṣa sūkta) there are eleven Āprī sūktas. The Bṛhaddevatā too has the same view:

प्रेषैः सहाप्रीसूक्तानि तान्येकादश संति च । यजूंषि प्रैषसूक्तं वा दशैतानीतराणि तु ॥ सौत्रामण्यानि तु त्रीणि प्राजापत्याश्वमेधिके । पुरुषस्य तु यन्मेधे यजुष्टेव तु तानि षट् ॥ अत्रैव प्रैषसूक्तंस्यान्नयजुष्वाद्रियेत तत् । तेषां प्रैषगतं सूक्तं यच्च दीर्घतमा जगौ । मेधातिथौ यदुक्तं च त्रिण्येवोभयवंति तु । ऋषौ गृत्समदे यच्च वाध्यश्वे च यदुच्यते ॥ नराशंसवदत्रेश्च ददर्श च यदौर्वशः । तनूनपादगस्त्यश्च जमदग्निश्च यज्ञगौ ॥ विश्वामित्र ऋषियर्यश्च जगौ वै काश्यपोऽसितः । मेधातिथेर्युचां यास्तु प्रोक्ता द्वादश देवताः ॥ संपद्यंते यथाग्निं ताः संपदं तां निबोधत । (preṣaiḥ sahāprīsūktāni tānyekādaśa saṃti ca | yajūṃṣi praiṣasūktaṃ vā daśaitānītarāṇi tu ‖ sautrāmaṇyāni tu trīṇi prājāpatyāśvamedhike | puruṣasya tu yanmedhe yajuṣṭeva tu tāni ṣaṭ ‖ atraiva praiṣasūktaṃsyānnayajuṣvādriyeta tat | teṣāṃ praiṣagataṃ sūktaṃ yacca dīrghatamā jagau | medhātithau yaduktaṃ ca triṇyevobhayavaṃti tu | ṛṣau gṛtsamade yacca vādhyaśve ca yaducyate ‖ narāśaṃsavadatreśca dadarśa ca yadaurvaśaḥ | tanūnapādagastyaśca jamadagniśca yajjagau ‖ viśvāmitra ṛṣiyaryaśca jagau

In these sentences it is said that with the Praiṣa sūkta there are eleven Āprī sūktas in all, and without it ten; and, following the Nirukta sentence, the order of the sūktas addressed to Narāśaṃsa, Tanūnapāt and the other deities, and composed by seers such as Medhātithi, is given.

p. 671

[Running head, p. 671: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 22, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

The Praiṣa sūkta is orderly and, by collecting together the substance of all the Āprī sūktas, gives a definite picture. It gathers all the individual epithets of the deities addressed in the Āprī sūktas and tells separately the nature and duty of each deity. In addressing each deity, it first utters a fixed part of the mantra, होता यक्षत् । (hotā yakṣat |), and afterwards names the respective deities. By first examining the deity, the epithet of the deity and the duty described in the Praiṣa sūkta, one can afterwards know the agreement or the differing views about such deity-natured Āprī sūktas: what their purpose is, what their characteristics are, and what benefit comes from reciting them.

In this way the Praiṣa sūkta, collecting the principal points of all the Āprī sūktas, gives an orderly picture. At the end are stated the order of composition of these Āprī sūktas, their styles, their uses in the work of the sacrifice, their poetic character, and the opinions that modern scholars have expressed about them.

p. 672

[Running head, p. 672: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 4.]

On the necessity and purpose of the Āprī sūktas the scholar Max Muller, having first said that they were a means of appeasing either the gods or relatives, and then that it is a labour to understand their secret meanings fully, has said thus—

Although there is a difference of opinion among the ancient Vedic scholars themselves about the place held by the Āprī sūktas in sacrifices and the like, and about their deities, there are many common features in all the Āprī sūktas. Since there is a definite pattern and refinement in their composition and subjects, it cannot be said that they were all composed together, nor that they have no connection with one another. Apart from the seers of the fourth and sixth Maṇḍalas, the seers of all the other Maṇḍalas have their own traditional Āprī sūktas of their families. Although the Kāṇva descendants of the eighth Maṇḍala have no separate Āprī sūkta, it is well known that they use the sūkta 1-13. But no reason can be given why the seers of the fourth and sixth Maṇḍalas had no need of it. Or the Vāmadeva and Bhāradvāja families may have recited some other mantras in this place.

The mantras indicated by the terms āprī and āpra—

Kātyāyana says in the Sarvānukramaṇī, एतदाप्रीसूक्तं एतेन्यान्युक्तदैवतानि एकादशकानि तु नाराशंसानि आप्रशब्दोक्तानि आतनूनपात्वंति । (etadāprīsūktaṃ etenyānyuktadaivatāni ekādaśakāni tu nārāśaṃsāni āpraśabdoktāni ātanūnapātvaṃti |) — that the mantras recited addressed to the deity Narāśaṃsa are known by the name āpra, and those addressed to the deity Tanūnapāt by the name āprī. But in the Nirukta and the like there are no sentences showing this difference.

The question whether the name āprī refers to the deity or to the sūkta is also natural. Looking closely, it may be said that they were first of the nature of a sūkta and afterwards became mantras indicating deities.

The nature of the rite—it may be said that the particular sacrificial rite of the Āprī sūkta did not hold a subordinate place, as indicated by the Brāhmaṇas and the like, but held the place of a principal sacrifice. The difference between the prayāja oblations and the oblations specified in this rite is seen in many places. 1-13-8, 1-148-7, 1-142-8, 3-4-8, 5-5-7, 9-5-8

in these Ṛks the words इमं यज्ञं (imaṃ yajñaṃ), in the Ṛks 5-5-2 and 3-4-5 the words नः यज्ञं (naḥ yajñaṃ), and in the Ṛks 1-13-2, 7-2-7 and 10-110-8 the words अस्मिन् यज्ञे (asmin yajñe) show a principal place in the sacrificial rite or in the offering of oblations, not a subordinate place as the prayāja oblations do.

From the mantras त्रिर्दिवा अमिमिक्षति (trirdivā amimikṣati) (1-142-3) and त्रिरहन्नायजंते (trirahannāyajaṃte) (3-4-2) it is learnt that this rite is to be performed in three periods of the day, and from समिद्धो आद्य मनुषो दुरोणे (samiddho ādya manuṣo duroṇe) (10-110-1) that there is no separate sacrificial house for it and the fire may be established in an ordinary house.

समित्समित्सुमना बोध्यस्मे शुचाशुचा सुमतिं रासि वस्वः । आ देव देवान्यजथाय वक्षि सखा सखीन्तुमना यक्ष्यग्ने ॥ (samitsamitsumanā bodhyasme śucāśucā sumatiṃ rāsi vasvaḥ | ā deva devānyajathāya vakṣi sakhā sakhīntumanā yakṣyagne ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. printed twice, the first citation broken off, then ೩-೪-೦)

In this Ṛk the blazing of Agni, described poetically by the sage Viśvāmitra, and in this Ṛk the description of Agni's rays and the Sun's rays spreading together, also show the poetic character of the mantras. The same descriptions also show that this sacrifice is to be begun in the morning.

जुषस्व नः समिधमग्ने अद्य शोचा बृहद्यजतं धूममृण्वन् । उप स्पृश दिव्यं सानु स्तूपैः सं रश्मिभिस्ततनः सूरस्य ॥ (juṣasva naḥ samidhamagne adya śocā bṛhadyajataṃ dhūmamṛṇvan | upa spṛśa divyaṃ sānu stūpaiḥ saṃ raśmibhistatanaḥ sūrasya ‖) (printed ಮ. ಸಂ. 7-2-1)

The mantra पूर्व्यं तंतुं तनुष्ट (pūrvyaṃ taṃtuṃ tanuṣṭa) (1-142-1) shows that this sacrifice is ancient. Since the help of Agni, the divine hotṛ, is needed for this sacrifice to be performed without hindrance, the offering of ghee should be made first to Agni. After Agni is satisfied by it, he spreads towards the atmosphere (7-2-1), and afterwards brings the gods. Since Agni is the friend of men (3-4-1), he does this service.

Skill of composition—although the Āprī sūktas are different from one another, were composed at different times and belong to different seer families, all these sūktas have the same kind of sequence of speech and aim, so that a certain greater harmony and charm than in all other kinds of sūktas shows their distinction.

In all the sūktas (except two) the number of Ṛks is eleven, and the sūkta begins with the word samidh and ends with svāhā; this shows a fixed rule, from the point of view of both poetry and art. In the matter of metre there is no such restriction. The sūktas 1-13, 1-188, 5-5 and 9-5 are composed in the Gāyatrī metre, the sūkta 1-142 in the Anuṣṭubh metre, and the sūktas 2-3, 3-5, 7-2 and 10-70 in the Triṣṭubh metre.

Many parts of mantras, such as देवान् आवह, देवान् वक्षि, विप्रा यज्ञेषु मानवेषु कारुः (devān āvaha, devān vakṣi, viprā yajñeṣu mānaveṣu kāruḥ), and so on, are repeated.

Sāyaṇa's introduction to the sūkta

(Sanskrit, transcribed; see the Anuvāda below for the sense):

Anuvāda (Kannada).

This sūkta beginning "samitsamit" is the fourth sūkta in the first anuvāka. It has eleven ṛks. The seer of this sūkta is Viśvāmitra; the metre is Triṣṭubh. The Anukramaṇikā says "samitsamidāpriyaḥ". As in the previous Āprī sūktas, the eleven ṛks of this sūkta have eleven deities, one deity for each ṛk, from Idhma to Svāhākṛti. This Āprī sūkta is used in the animal sacrifice performed by those of the gotra of Viśvāmitra. That the Ṛk of this sūkta beginning "tan nas turīpam adha poṣayitnu" is to be recited as the yājyā mantra to Tvaṣṭṛ when the patnīsaṃyāja oblation is made in the full-moon and new-moon sacrifices (the supplied text says "ದಶಪೂರ್ಣಮಾಸ") is explained by the sūtra of the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra "iha tvaṣṭāram agriyaṃ tan nas turīpam adha poṣayitnu" (Ā. 1-10). And that this Ṛk (the ninth Ṛk of the sūkta) is to be used as the anuvākyā mantra when the purodāśa oblation is made in the animal sacrifice to Tvaṣṭṛ is explained by the sūtra "tan nas turīpam adha poṣayitnu devas tvaṣṭā savitā viśvarūpaḥ" (Ā. 3-8).

[Running head, p. 676: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3 (printed "ಮು."), A. 1, Sū. 4 (the printed head numeral reads 675, as supplied).]

O Agni. Devān: the gods who are fit for sacrifice. Yajanāya: for the sacrifice. Ā vakṣi: bring. Sakhā: you, the friend of the gods. Sumanāḥ: having an excellent mind. Sakhīn: with reference to your friends, the gods. Yakṣi: perform the sacrifice.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Agni, kindled exceedingly, awake with a mind of favour. Endowed with exceedingly spreading radiance, grant us a mind concerned with wealth and of excellent nature. O shining Agni, bring the gods who are fit for sacrifice to the sacrifice. You, the friend of the gods, possessed of an excellent mind, perform the sacrifice for your friends, the gods.

Printed English translation

Repeatedly kindled, (Agni), wake up favourably disposed ; (endowed) with reiterated lustre, entertain the kind purpose of (granting us) wealth : bring, divine Agni, the gods to the saerifice : do you, the friend (of the gods), minister, well-affected, to (your) friends.

[The printed English reads "saerifice" for "sacrifice", as supplied.]

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Of the ten Āprī sūktas in the Ṛgveda this is the fifth. Those born in the gotra of Viśvāmitra recite this sūkta in the sacrifices they perform. In this sūkta there are eleven Ṛks. As there is one deity for each Ṛk, there are eleven deities for the eleven Ṛks. For this first Ṛk the deity is Samiddhaḥ Agniḥ, that is, the kindled (well-burning) Agni.

अग्ने समित्समित् सुमनाः बोधि— हे अग्ने अत्यर्थं समिद्धस्त्वं अस्मद्विषये कल्याणमनाः बुध्यस्व । (agne samitsamit sumanāḥ bodhi— he agne atyarthaṃ samiddhastvaṃ asmadviṣaye kalyāṇamanāḥ budhyasva |) O Agni, you who are well kindled and shine with great brightness, show a mind of favour towards us. The purport is: do not be indifferent towards us, but show a mind of favour. The word samit is read twice. Words that are read twice (vīpsā) indicate the sense "many times", as the word divedive has the sense "every day". Therefore the word samit samit, with its double repetition, may be given the meaning "kindled again and again", or "kindled and shining exceedingly". Generally in the first Ṛk of the Āprī sūktas, when Agni, the deity of that Ṛk, is designated, the word samiddhaḥ is used (the supplied text breaks off here in the middle of the Kannada word ಉಪಯೋಗಿಸುವುದ..., "is us...").

[Running head, p. 677: Aṣṭaka 2 (printed ಅ. ೨. ಆ. ಲ. ವ. ೨೨., apparently a misprint), Adhyāya 8, Varga 22, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

[Join with the previous window: it ended at the foot of p. 676 with the Kannada "...ಉಪಯೋಗಿಸುವುದ" ("is us..."). The first word of p. 677 is ರೂಢಿಯಾಗಿದೆ ("is the custom"), so the sentence reads: "...the use of the word samiddhaḥ is the custom." The break falls inside the word; nothing is supplied beyond that.] is the custom. But in the present Ṛk the doubly-read word samitsamit is used. For in each pāda of this Ṛk one word is read twice to make a rhyme. Therefore in the first pāda "samit samit", in the second "śucāśucā", in the third "deva devān", and in the fourth "sakhā sakhīn" are read, and the Ṛk is thus made rhyming. This shows the compositional skill of the seer of the Maṇḍala, Viśvāmitra.

शुचाशुचा वस्वः सुमतिं अस्मे रासि—अत्यर्थं प्रसर्पकेण ज्योतिषा युक्तस्त्वं धनस्य विषयां शोभनां बुद्धिं देहि । (śucāśucā vasvaḥ sumatiṃ asme rāsi—atyarthaṃ prasarpakeṇa jyotiṣā yuktastvaṃ dhanasya viṣayāṃ śobhanāṃ buddhiṃ dehi |) — O Agni, you who spread everywhere and shine with the most brilliant radiance, give us good sense concerning wealth. The word vasu is read among the names of wealth (Ni. 3-9). For the word sumati Yāska has given the meaning kalyāṇī mati (Ni. 2-12). The word asme is used in the meanings of all seven cases. We have explained this at length before, with examples. Here the sense of the dative is given for this word.

देव देवान् यजनाय आ वक्षि—हे द्योतमान यजनीयान् देवान् यज्ञार्थं आ वहसि । (deva devān yajanāya ā vakṣi—he dyotamāna yajanīyān devān yajñārthaṃ ā vahasi |) — O shining Agni, bring the gods worthy of sacrifice to this sacrifice that we are performing, to receive the oblation.

सखा सुमनाः सखीन् यक्षि—हे अग्ने देवानां सखा त्वं सुमनाः सन् सखिभूतान् देवान् यजस्व । (sakhā sumanāḥ sakhīn yakṣi—he agne devānāṃ sakhā tvaṃ sumanāḥ san sakhibhūtān devān yajasva |) — O Agni, friend of the gods, with an excellent mind perform the sacrifice here to your friends, the gods. To "sacrifice to the gods" here means: take the oblations and the like that we, the sacrificers, offer to the gods in you (Agni) in this sacrifice we are performing, to the respective gods and offer them.

समिद्धः—सम्यग्दीपितः एतन्नामकः त्वं । (samiddhaḥ—samyagdīpitaḥ etannāmakaḥ tvaṃ |) Sāyaṇa explains: you who are famous by the name Samiddhaḥ. The kindled Agni, who holds the first place in the Āprī sūkta, is meant.

इध्मो यः सर्वमेवाग्निरयं हीध्मः समिध्यते । ध्मातेर्वै तत्कृतं रूपं ध्मातो हीध्मः समिध्यते ॥ (idhmo yaḥ sarvamevāgnirayaṃ hīdhmaḥ samidhyate | dhmātervai tatkṛtaṃ rūpaṃ dhmāto hīdhmaḥ samidhyate ‖) (printed ಬೃ. ದೆ. 2-188)

Here the identity of the firewood idhma and the all-pervading Agni is stated. The word idhma is derived from the root dhmā (to blow): it gets this name because it blazes after being blown. The author of the Bṛhaddevatā has given the derivation of the words idhma and samiddha. This derivation follows the explanation of the Nirukta authors. In the Nirukta too,

शासामिध्मः प्रथमागामी भवति । इद्मः समिंधनात् । (śāsāmidhmaḥ prathamāgāmī bhavati | idmaḥ samiṃdhanāt |) (printed ನಿ. 8-5)

it is said regarding the first deity of the Āprī sūkta. In the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa too, at the beginning of the Praiṣa sūkta,

होता यक्षदग्निगं् समिधा समिद्धं सुषमिधा नाभा प्रथिव्याः संगथे वामस्य । (hotā yakṣadagnigṃ samidhā samiddhaṃ suṣamidhā nābhā prathivyāḥ saṃgathe vāmasya |) (printed കൈ. ബ്രാ. 3-6-2-1)

the sacrificers are addressed as performing the sacrifice to Agni, who is called Samidh and is joined with the deity of the first prayāja.

Here one more point is to be noted. The proper name Idhma does not occur in the Āprī sūktas. This name is absent from the Praiṣa sūkta too. It is mentioned only in the Sarvānukramaṇī—

सुसमिद्ध इतीध्मः समिद्धो वा अग्नि (susamidda itīdhmaḥ samiddho vā agni).....इति प्रत्यृचं देवताः । (iti pratyṛcaṃ devatāḥ |)

Since the use of this word is not in this context in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa either, it is known that Śaunaka and Kātyāyana followed the Nirukta authors in using it. Besides, the epithet samiddha or susamiddha is used in seven sūktas, and the epithet samidh in the remaining three sūktas, Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-4-1; 7-2-1; 10-70-1. The first duty of this Agni called Samiddha is to invite the gods. In the opening Ṛks of the sūktas 1-13-1, 1-142-1, 3-4-1 and 10-110-1, as in the prayer in the Ṛk सुसमिद्धोन आ वह देवा अग्ने हविष्मते (susamiddhona ā vaha devā agne haviṣmate) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-13-1), the duty of Agni is indicated. Besides this, there is a prayer that he carry the oblations and the like.

There has been a difference of opinion from the beginning as to whether this deity is Agni at all. The Nirukta authors cite this difference of opinion and then state their own.

यज्ञेध्म इति कात्थक्यः (yajñedhma iti kātthakyaḥ) (Ni. 8-5), अग्निरिति शाकपूणिः (agniriti śākapūṇiḥ) (8-5): having stated the views of the respective sages, they afterwards state their own opinion: आग्नेय इति तु स्थितिः (āgneya iti tu sthitiḥ) (Ni. 8-22). In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa—

समिधो यजति । प्राणा वै समिधः । प्राणा हीदं सर्वं समिंधते यदिदं किंच प्राणानेव तत्प्रीणाति प्राणान्यजमाने दधाति । (samidho yajati | prāṇā vai samidhaḥ | prāṇā hīdaṃ sarvaṃ samiṃdhate yadidaṃ kiṃca prāṇāneva tatprīṇāti prāṇānyajamāne dadhāti |) (printed ಇ. ಬ್ರಾ. 2-4)

p. 679

[Running head, p. 679: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 22, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

Although the identity of samidh and breath is stated by such sentences, it can be said on the strength of many other grounds that this deity must be Agni himself.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

वरुणः मित्रः अग्निः देवासः यं दिवेदिने अहन् त्रिः आयजंते—वरुणः मित्रः अग्निः एते त्रयो देवाः यमग्निं प्रतिदिवसं अहनि प्रातर्मध्याह्नसायंतनेषु सवनेषु त्रिवारं आयजंते । (varuṇaḥ mitraḥ agniḥ devāsaḥ yaṃ divedine ahan triḥ āyajaṃte—varuṇaḥ mitraḥ agniḥ ete trayo devāḥ yamagniṃ pratidivasaṃ ahani prātarmadhyāhnasāyaṃtaneṣu savaneṣu trivāraṃ āyajaṃte |) The deity of this Ṛk is the god called Tanūnapāt (a special form of Agni). The three gods Varuṇa, Mitra and Agni worship this god called Tanūnapāt every day at the three pressings, morning, midday and evening, which are performed in the day.

सः तनूनपात् धृतयोनिं विधंतं नः इमं यज्ञं मधुमंतं कृधि-हे तनूनपात्, स त्वं उदकस्य कारणं विधीयमानं अस्मदीयमिमं यज्ञं वृष्ट्यादिफलयुक्तं कुरु । (saḥ tanūnapāt dhṛtayoniṃ vidhaṃtaṃ naḥ imaṃ yajñaṃ madhumaṃtaṃ kṛdhi-he tanūnapāt, sa tvaṃ udakasya kāraṇaṃ vidhīyamānaṃ asmadīyamimaṃ yajñaṃ vṛṣṭyādiphalayuktaṃ kuru |) — O Agni, bearing the name Tanūnapāt, you, make this sacrifice that we perform, desiring water, productive of the fruit of rain: so it is prayed. The words ghṛta and madhu are read among the hundred and one names of water (Ni. 2-24). In this Ṛk the deity named Tanūnapāt is prayed to grant that rain come from the sacrifice we perform. That rain arises from sacrifices performed according to rule is stated in many places. In the 98th sūkta of the tenth Maṇḍala of the Ṛgveda an ancient story is told on this subject. In the past a king named Ṛṣṭiṣeṇa had two sons, Devāpi and Śantanu. After the father's death a quarrel arose between the two over the kingdom, and the younger drove out his elder brother and became king himself. Although the elder had the right to the kingdom, the younger's seizing it unjustly was held to be adharma. Therefore, in his kingdom, which had injustice and adharma, no rain fell for twelve years. Then the king summoned the Brahmins and asked why this had happened, and they said, "You have driven out your elder brother, who is entitled to the kingdom, and rule yourself without keeping to justice; this is adharma. Therefore the deity Parjanya does not rain in your kingdom." Hearing this, the king repented, and went to his elder brother, who was practising austerity in the forest, and begged him to rule the kingdom. But he refused, saying, "I will not give up my austerity and come; you rule the kingdom yourself. If you want rain in your kingdom, perform a sacrifice according to the rule. In that sacrifice I shall myself take the office of purohita and carry out the sacrifice."

p. 681

[Running head, p. 681: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 22, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

Having said so, he prayed to Bṛhaspati, obtained instruction in the mantra by his favour, and carried out the king's sacrifice. As a result, plentiful rain fell in his kingdom: so it is told.

Tanūnapāt—यज्ञ शरीरस्य न पातयिता (yajña śarīrasya na pātayitā), that is, one who does not destroy the body (tanu) of the sacrifice, the protector of the sacrifice: this is one kind of meaning. यद्वा! आपोऽत्रतन्न उच्यंत इत्युक्तत्वादपां न पातयिता तासां नप्ता वा । अद्भ्यः ओषधयः ओषधीभोऽग्निरिति नप्तृत्वं।

(yadvā! āpo 'tratanna ucyaṃta ityuktatvādapāṃ na pātayitā tāsāṃ naptā vā | adbhyaḥ oṣadhayaḥ oṣadhībho 'gniriti naptṛtvaṃ|) Or, apaḥ here should be taken to mean body (tanu); that is, nap-tṛ (grandson) of the waters (apaḥ). How? From the waters (from rain and other waters) arise plants and trees. From those plants and trees (from the wooden pieces called araṇi) Agni is born. Therefore Agni is the grandson of the waters: this is the purport. We have explained at length before that the two words tanūnapāt and apāṃnapāt have the same meaning.

For the word tanūnapāt Sāyaṇa has given two kinds of meaning on the authority of the Nirukta. First, तनूनपात् आज्यं इति कात्क्यपक्षे तन्नो गावो भोगानां तासु जायमानत्वात् । ताभ्यः उत्पन्नं क्षीरं क्षीरात्सर्पिः इति आज्यस्य नप्तृत्वं । तद्वान् यज्ञः । (tanūnapāt ājyaṃ iti kātkyapakṣe tanno gāvo bhogānāṃ tāsu jāyamānatvāt | tābhyaḥ utpannaṃ kṣīraṃ kṣīrātsarpiḥ iti ājyasya naptṛtvaṃ | tadvān yajñaḥ |) If Kātkya's meaning of tanūnapāt as ghee is accepted, then the word tanu means cow; since ghee is produced from the milk born from it, tanūnapāt means ghee, or a sacrifice endowed with ghee. In this context, from the sentence of the Nirukta authors नपादित्यनंतरायाः प्रजाया नामधेयं निर्णिततमा भवति (napādityanaṃtarāyāḥ prajāyā nāmadheyaṃ nirṇitatamā bhavati) (Ni. 8-5), the word napāt means grandson, so here too it means ghee produced from the milk born of the cow. Second, अग्निपक्षे अपस्तन्व उच्यंते । ताभ्यः ओषधिवनस्पतयः, तेभ्योऽग्निरिति नप्तृत्वं । आरणीभ्यां इति भावः । (agnipakṣe apastanva ucyaṃte | tābhyaḥ oṣadhivanaspatayaḥ, tebhyoSgniriti naptṛtvaṃ | āraṇībhyāṃ iti bhāvaḥ |) The word tanu means water; from it plants and trees (araṇis) arise, and from them Agni is born; hence the name tanūnapāt. Thus two kinds of meaning are given. In the Bṛhaddevatā,

अयं तनूनपादग्निरसौ हि तननात्तनुः । ततस्तु मध्यमो जज्ञे स्थानेयं मध्यमात्ततः ॥ अनंतरां प्रजामाहुर्नपादिति कृपण्यवः । नपादमुष्य चैवायमग्निस्तेन तनूनपात् । (ayaṃ tanūnapādagnirasau hi tananāttanuḥ | tatastu madhyamo jajñe sthāneyaṃ madhyamāttataḥ ‖ anaṃtarāṃ prajāmāhurnapāditi kṛpaṇyavaḥ | napādamuṣya caivāyamagnistena tanūnapāt |) (printed ಬೃ. ದೇ. 2-76 to 77)

तनूनपादयं त्वेव नाम्ना यच्छत्वसौ तनुं । नपादिति प्रजामाहुरमुतोऽस्य च संभवं (tanūnapādayaṃ tveva nāmnā yacchatvasau tanuṃ | napāditi prajāmāhuramuto 'sya ca saṃbhavaṃ) (printed ಬೃ, ದೇ. 3-1)

p. 682

[Running head, p. 682: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, Ā. (printed so for A.) 1, Sū. 4.]

This terrestrial Agni is the napāt, grandson, of the Agni of the divine world; how? The divine Agni, being endowed with the power of spreading (tananāt), is called by the synonymous name tanu. From him arose the Agni of lightning in the atmosphere, and from him this terrestrial Agni; hence the terrestrial Agni gets the name tanūpāt (the supplied text prints "ತನೂಪಾತ್"). It is explained that he is named tanūpāt also because he spread from his own body and was born in this form.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

May the praise desired by all go and join Agni, the hotṛ of the gods. May the foods in the form of oblation go with homage and join Agni, the chief, the shower of desires, the venerable, and help the sacrifice. May Agni, sent by us and most worshipful, perform the sacrifice to the gods.

Printed English translation

May the all-approved praise reach the invoker of the gods : may Ila first proceed to worship and to praise with prostrations the showerer (of benefits) in his presence : may the adorable (Agni), instigated (by us), worship the gods.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

The deity of this Ṛk is the god called Iḷaḥ (Iḍaḥ). The bhāṣyakāra has explained the word iḷaḥ in this Ṛk as इषः हवीरूपाण्यन्नानि (iṣaḥ havīrūpāṇyannāni), foods in the form of oblation. But as said in the other Āprī sūktas, here too iḷaḥ should be the name of a deity. Therefore it is proper to explain the word iḷaḥ as meaning a deity. There is one more peculiarity in the bhāṣyakāra's explanation. Since for all the Ṛks of the Āprī sūkta, and especially for the first five Ṛks, Agni or the forms of Agni, Samiddhaḥ Agniḥ, Tanūnapāt, Iḍaḥ and others, are stated as deities, it is not unreasonable to praise Agni himself as the chief in this Ṛk. Even so, following the usage of the Āprī sūktas, it is proper to explain this Ṛk with reference to the deity Iḷaḥ. Accordingly the main purport of this Ṛk is: may the praises and the like made by all go and join Agni, who invites the gods; may the deity Iḷaḥ also, endowed with homage or foods, go and join Agni, the chief among the gods and shower of desired ends, for the sacrifice; may that Agni, sent by us and most worshipful, perform the sacrifice to the gods. Even so, the meaning does not fit this Ṛk well.

Īḍyaḥ—सर्वैः स्तुत्यः इळनामकः त्वं । (sarvaiḥ stutyaḥ iḷanāmakaḥ tvaṃ |) It is explained as Agni who is praised by all and famous by the name Iḍaḥ. ईळ ईड्डेः स्तुतिकर्मणः ; इंधतेर्वा । (īḷa īṭṭeḥ stutikarmaṇaḥ ; iṃdhatervā |) It may be derived from the root īḍ, meaning to praise, or from the root indh, meaning to blaze (Ni. 8-8). Showing this derivation of the word, the Nirukta authors cite the Ṛk 10-110-3 and explain the right meaning of the word.

p. 684

[Running head, p. 684: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 4.]

First, like the word samidh, this word too appears to be used only as an epithet of Agni, without a separate indication of a deity. Since the help and support of Agni must be complete at the time of carrying on the sacrifice, he is naturally praiseworthy. At the beginning Agni must be (1) kindled. Then, (2) by the name Tanūnapāt or Narāśaṃsa, he must make the oblations of the sacrifice full of sweetness. Then he must bring the gods to the sacrifice. For this work he must be īḍya (praiseworthy). Therefore in this context he is (3) īḍya by the sacrificers (is prayed to). In the Āprī sūktas this word, derived from the root īḍ, is used in eight places as an epithet meaning "praised" or "praiseworthy", and in one place as an epithet showing Agni's office as messenger, nine places in all, with reference to Agni. And in the present Ṛk, composed by Viśvāmitra,

प्र दीधितिर्विश्ववारा जिगाति होतारमिळः प्रथमं यजध्यै । अच्छा नमोभिवृषभं वंदध्यै स देवान्यक्षदिषितो यजीयान् । (pra dīdhitirviśvavārā jigāti hotāramiḷaḥ prathamaṃ yajadhyai | acchā namobhivṛṣabhaṃ vaṃdadhyai sa devānyakṣadiṣito yajīyān |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-4-3)

only, the meaning is foods in the form of oblation. Even so it is related to Agni, the chief deity of that Ṛk. This meaning differs from the tradition of the Āprī sūkta. But in the Praiṣa sūkta it is a synonym of Agni.

होतायक्षदग्नि मिड ईडितो देवो देवाग्ं् अवक्षद्दूतो हव्यवाडमूरः । उपेमं यज्ञ मुपेमां देवो देवहूतिमवतु नेत्वाज्यस्य होतर्यज । (hotāyakṣadagni miḍa īḍito devo devāgṃ avakṣaddūto havyavāḍamūraḥ | upemaṃ yajña mupemāṃ devo devahūtimavatu netvājyasya hotaryaja |) (Tai. Brā. 3-6-2-1)

For this sentence the bhāṣyakāra says इडेत्येतन्नामकमग्निं तृतीयप्रयाजदेवं (iḍetyetannāmakamagniṃ tṛtīyaprayājadevaṃ), a synonym of Agni. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa—

इळो यजत्यन्नं वा इळोऽन्नमेव तत्रीणात्यन्नं यजमाने दधाति । (iḷo yajatyannaṃ vā iḷo 'nnameva tatrīṇātyannaṃ yajamāne dadhāti |) (printed ಐ. ಬ್ರಾ. 2-4)

Iḷaḥ is said to be the food in the form of oblation offered in the sacrifice, and as the fruit of offering this food the sacrificer also obtains food. As explained above, Yāska's showing of a relation between this word and such a root is not understood properly. Here Yāska has not stated Kātthakya's opinion. In the Bṛhaddevatā,

इळस्तृषिकृतं रूपं ईडेशश्च स्तुतिकर्मणः । इळावांस्तेन वोक्तोग्निरिडिना वृद्धिकर्मणा ॥ (iḷastṛṣikṛtaṃ rūpaṃ īḍeśaśca stutikarmaṇaḥ | iḷāvāṃstena voktogniriḍinā vṛddhikarmaṇā ‖) (Bṛ. De. 3-4)

p. 685

by these sentences this word is shown to be a seer's word and a synonym of Agni, and the word iḷāvān is an epithet of Agni.

गोमा अग्नेऽविमा अश्वी यज्ञो नृवत्सखा सदमिदप्रमृष्यः । इळावा एषो असुर प्रजावान्दीर्घो रयिः पृथुबुध्नः सभावान् ॥ (gomā agne 'vimā aśvī yajño nṛvatsakhā sadamidapramṛṣyaḥ | iḷāvā eṣo asura prajāvāndīrgho rayiḥ pṛthubudhnaḥ sabhāvān ॥) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-2-5)

In this Ṛk the word iḷāvān is an epithet of Agni, and the Bṛhaddevatā indicates that point. Although such differences of tradition are seen in the explanations, it may be said in all that it is a synonym of the deity Agni, holding the third place in the sūkta.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Vāṃ: for you two (Agni and Barhis). Ūrdhvaḥ: high. Gātuḥ: the path of the sacrifice. Adhvare: in the sacrifice. Akāri: is prepared. Śocīṃṣi: bright. Rajāṃsi: oblations. Ūrdhvā: aloft. Prasthitā: have set out. Hotā: Agni the hotṛ. Divaḥ: of the shining. Nābhā: in the central region of the sacrifice. Nyasādi: sits. Devavyacāḥ: occupied by the gods. Barhiḥ vā: also the seat of sacred grass. Vi stṛṇīmahi [printed so]: we shall spread.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O gods, Agni and Barhis, a high path of the sacrifice has been prepared for you two in the sacrifice. Bright oblations have set out aloft. Agni the hotṛ sits in the central region of the shining sacrificial house. We shall also spread the seat of sacred grass, which the gods occupy.

Printed English translation

An upward path has been prepared for you both in the sacrifice : the blazing oblations soar aloft : the invoker of the gods has sat down in the centre of the radiant (hall) : let us strew the sacred grass for the seats of the gods.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk the deity Barhis (the seat prepared of sacred grass) is praised. The meaning of this Ṛk too is somewhat difficult. It cannot be said for what purpose the dual word vāṃ is used. The bhāṣyakāra says that the word is used with reference to both the deity Barhis and Agni. Even so, the necessity of this word is not very evident.

The main purport: O gods Agni and Barhis, this sacrifice is being performed in the best manner, addressed to you two. Excellent oblations have been made ready to offer to you. Agni, who invites the gods, is established in the sacrificial pit in the central region of the sacrificial altar. We shall spread the sacred grass called barhis and prepare a seat for the invited gods to come and sit upon.

Barhis—this means is more concrete in form than the ideas of Idhma and Iḷaḥ. Barhis means the seat of sacred grass. To barhis no divine element is ascribed, as in "devīḥ dvāraḥ" it is ascribed to the doors. Only the sense of a seat for the gods is indicated.

p. 687

Moreover, it is prayed that the doors open themselves, without other help, and make a way for the coming of the gods. Without divine power, lifeless doors cannot of themselves open and make a wide way. But in the case of barhis this ascription of power is not found. The priests must spread it. Not in this Ṛk alone, but in the other Ṛks of the Āprī sūktas also, it is said clearly that the spreading of the barhis must be done with the help of the priests and others. For example—

प्राचीनं बर्हिरोजसा सहस्रवीरमस्तृणन् । यत्रादित्या विराजथ । (prācīnaṃ barhirojasā sahasravīramastṛṇan | yatrādityā virājatha |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-188-4)

In this Ṛk, and likewise in Ṛ. Saṃ. 9-5-4, बर्हिः प्राचीनमोजसा पवमानः स्तृणन् हरिः । (barhiḥ prācīnamojasā pavamānaḥ stṛṇan hariḥ |), there is the description that the priests spread the barhis. In the same way in the Ṛks of the other Āprī sūktas also, the barhis is said to be a terrestrial and lifeless thing but a place that is a sacred seat for the gods. In the Praiṣa sūkta alone,

होता यक्षद्बर्हिः सुष्टरीमोर्णम्रदा अस्मिन्यज्ञे विचप्रच प्रथताग्ं स्वासस्थं देवेभ्यः । एमेनदद्य वसवो रुद्रा आदित्याः सदंतु प्रियमिंद्रस्यास्तु वेत्वाज्यस्य होतर्यज ॥ (hotā yakṣadbarhiḥ suṣṭarīmorṇaṃmradā asminyajñe vicapraca prathatāgṃ svāsasthaṃ devebhyaḥ | emenadadya vasavo rudrā ādityāḥ sadaṃtu priyamiṃdrasyāstu vetvājyasya hotaryaja ||) (Tai. Brā. 3-6-2-1)

बर्हिनामकं चतुर्थस्रय्याजदेवमग्निं (barhināmakaṃ caturthasrayyājadevamagniṃ) — it is said to be a seat that is a synonym of Agni and divine in nature. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa,

बर्हिर्यजति । पशवो वै बर्हिः पशूनेव तत्रीणाति पशून्यजमाने दधाति । (barhiryajati | paśavo vai barhiḥ paśūneva tatrīṇāti paśūnyajamāne dadhāti |) (printed ಐ. ಬ್ರಾ. 2-4)

it is interpreted as the animal that grazes on grass and is endowed with grass. But it is seen that there is not the slightest room for this meaning.

The Nirukta authors say बर्हिः परिबर्हणात् । (barhiḥ paribarhaṇāt |): the sacred grass gets the name barhis because it grows swiftly (Ni. 8-8). In the Bṛhaddevatā,

बर्हिरेवायमग्निस्तु सर्वं हि परिबृंहितं । अन्नेन यद्वुतो वा सन्निध्मेन परिबृंहितः ॥ (barhirevāyamagnistu sarvaṃ hi paribṛṃhitaṃ | annena yadduto vā sannidhmena paribṛṃhitaḥ ‖) (Bṛ. De. 3-5)

the identity is stated that, because all food is pervaded by it, and because after the oblation it is filled by firewood, Agni himself is present in the form of barhis.

p. 688

Although in many matters the authors of the Bṛhaddevatā followed the sentences of the Nirukta, in this context they show a slight difference: what the Nirukta authors call simply barhis, a seat of the gods, they interpret as a seat that is divine and a synonym of Agni.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

The gods who are prayed to with the meditating mind and who fill and gratify the whole world with water come facing the vaṣaṭkartṛs. The door-deities of the sacrifice, who have human form, are born in sacrifices and are of bodily form, are to come towards our sacrifice.

Printed English translation

The gods who gratify the universe with rain are present at the seven offerings (of the minstering priests), when solicited with (sincerity cf) mind : may the many deities, who are engendered in sensible shapes at sacrifices come to this our rite.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk the door-deities of the sacrificial hall, called devīr dvāraḥ, are praised. Since the sacrificial hall has doors in all four directions, they are addressed in the plural.

मनसा वृणानाः—मनसा ध्यानेन वा प्रार्थ्यमानाः । (manasā vṛṇānāḥ—manasā dhyānena vā prārthyamānāḥ |): with a mind engaged in meditation, that is, those who are prayed to while one meditates on those very gods in the mind.

ऋतेन विश्वं इन्वंतः—वृष्ट्युदकेन विश्वं प्रीणयंतः । (ṛtena viśvaṃ invaṃtaḥ—vṛṣṭyudakena viśvaṃ prīṇayaṃtaḥ |): those who, having caused rain, gladden the entire world by it; the word ṛta is read among the hundred and one names of water (Ni. 2-24).

In Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-188-5, where the door-deities of the sacrificial house (duraḥ) are prayed to, there is another special point: the names of the four doors, in the four directions of the sacrificial house, are indicated there. In the other Āprī sūktas such names do not occur. Still, it is also reasonable to supply an etymological sense for words such as virāṭ and state them as epithets of the word duraḥ. The bhāṣyakāra has made both kinds of attempts.

दुरः—द्वारः (duraḥ—dvāraḥ): the door-deities of the sacrificial house. On who these are, Yāska says

द्वारः । द्वारो जवतेर्वा द्रवतेर्वा वारयतेर्वा । गृहद्वार इति कात्थक्यः। अग्निरिति शाकपूणिः ॥ (dvāraḥ | dvāro javatervā dravatervā vārayatervā | gṛhadvāra iti kātthakyaḥ| agniriti śākapūṇiḥ ‖) (printed सि (si). 8-10)

meaning that a door is so called because it is for entering, for going inside, or for stopping one from going inside. The door is the house-door (the doorway), according to Kātthakya; Agni, according to Śākapūṇi. It is also said that the house of offering, where oblations are made, is of the form of Agni, and therefore its doors too are special forms of Agni (अग्नि विशेषमूर्तयः (agni viśeṣamūrtayaḥ)). The doors of the chamber in which the oblation is offered are said to be personifications of Agni.

p. 690

[Stray line as supplied at the foot of p. 689: "44", kept as a note in kn.md.]

Sāyaṇa has explained them as the door-deities of the sacrificial house. There is difference of opinion whether these doors are the doors of the sacrificial house or this is merely a figurative usage. If the word here does not mean the house-doors, then even in respect of the deities of the Āprī sūktas, meanings differing from the points stated now would have to be imagined. From the ritual point of view, only two things, barhis and svāhākṛti, are without ascription of divinity and merely earthly, yet, being connected with the sacrifice, are described with qualities of an extra-worldly purity. In "tisro devīḥ", because Sarasvatī has a purely divine element and the other two rivers are added together with that river, all are called deities together. Likewise in "daivau hotārau" the earthly hotṛ too is meant as a deity, being together with Agni, who is of divine nature. But in "devīḥ dvāraḥ" there is no room for this. If these doors are the doors of the sacrificial house, the question arises why they should have a special place that barhis and svāhākṛti do not have. If only certain implements that are parts of the sacrifice must be regarded from the divine point of view, then the name of the most important thing of all, the sacrificial altar, is absent. Not only this: another point to be noticed here is that the plural "doors" is used.

सप्त होत्राणि मनसा वृणाना इन्वंतो विश्वं प्रति यन्नृतेन । नृपेशसो विधथेषु प्र जाता अभीषमं यज्ञं वि चरंत पूर्विः ॥ (sapta hotrāṇi manasā vṛṇānā invaṃto viśvaṃ prati yannṛtena | nṛpeśaso vidhatheṣu pra jātā abhīṣamaṃ yajñaṃ vi caraṃta pūrviḥ ‖) (printed ऋ सं (ṛ saṃ). 3-4-5)

In this Ṛk of the Āprī sūkta the epithet पूर्विः (pūrviḥ) also is in the plural. And if the duties of these door-deities are examined:

1. विश्रयंतामृतावृधो द्वारो देवीरसश्चतः (viśrayaṃtāmṛtāvṛdho dvāro devīrasaścataḥ): "take (the doors) apart for the convenience of the sacrificial work", thus in the Ṛk 1-13-6;
2. दुरो धृतान्यक्षरन् । (duro dhṛtānyakṣaran |): "they poured out waters", thus in the Ṛk 1-188-5.

1. प्रप्रयज्ञं प्रणीत न । (praprayajñaṃ praṇīta na |): "they fill the sacrifice with fruit", thus in 5-5-5;
2. इन्वंतो विश्वं प्रति यन्नृतेन। (invaṃto viśvaṃ prati yannṛtena|): "they make the whole world full of life with water", thus in this Ṛk. In this way their duties are indicated in many other ways. Some hold that many of these actions are merely ornamental and formal, ascribed to them, and that there is no truth in them.

समिद्धो अद्य मनुषो दुरोणे देवो देवान् यजसि जातवेदः । आ च वह मित्रमहश्चि कित्वान्त्वं दूतः कविरसि प्रचेताः ॥ (samiddho adya manuṣo duroṇe devo devān yajasi jātavedaḥ | ā ca vaha mitramahaści kitvāntvaṃ dūtaḥ kavirasi pracetāḥ ||) (printed ಮ. सं (saṃ). 10-110-1)

In this Ṛk, since it says मनुषो दुरोणे । (manuṣo duroṇe |), "in the sacrificial house of man", this figurative language for the merely worldly house-doors may even appear as an excess of poetic fancy. Some critics hold that the epithets नृपेशसः (nṛpeśasaḥ), ऋतावृधः (ṛtāvṛdhaḥ), पावका (pāvakā) and the like are also not fitting. In the present context, for supporting or refuting these views, it is good to learn the opinions of the Vedic scholars who are the source of the preservation of the Vedic tradition.

स्वाध्यो३ वि दुरो देवयंतोऽशिश्रयू रथयुर्देवताता । पूर्वि शिशुं न मातरा रिहाणे समग्रुवो न समनेष्वंजन् । (svādhyo3 vi duro devayaṃto 'śiśrayū rathayurdevatātā | pūrvi śiśuṃ na mātarā rihāṇe samagruvo na samaneṣvaṃjan |) (printed ಮ. सं (saṃ). 7-2-5)

In this Ṛk of the Āprī sūkta they state clearly यज्ञगृहद्वाराणि इत्यर्थः । (yajñagṛhadvārāṇi ityarthaḥ |), "the meaning is the doors of the sacrificial house". Likewise some other scholars explain that for the verb व्यशिश्रयुः (vyaśiśrayuḥ) the subject is यजमानाः (yajamānāḥ), and that the construction is that they stood resting on the door of the sacrificial house. The English scholars Oldenberg, Grassman and Ludwig also approve this same explanation, and say that in the words virāṭ and samrāṭ are the names of two leaves of the door. The scholar Max Muller says that these are the gates of heaven, down which the gods descend (History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 245). And in the Praiṣa sūkta:

होतायक्षद्दुर ऋष्वाः कवष्योऽकोषधावनीरुदाताभिर्जिहतां वि पक्षोभिः श्रयंतां । सुप्रायणा अस्मिन्यज्ञे विश्रयंतामृतावृधो वियंत्वाज्यस्य होतरज । (hotāyakṣaddura ṛṣvāḥ kavaṣyo 'koṣadhāvanīrudātābhirjihatāṃ vi pakṣobhiḥ śrayaṃtāṃ | suprāyaṇā asminyajñe viśrayaṃtāmṛtāvṛdho viyaṃtvājyasya hotaraja |) (printed तै (tai). ब्रा (brā). 3-6-2-2)

*[The window ends here, at the end of p. 691, in the middle of the Special Topics; the supplied text of this passage stops at "*होतरज । (hotaraja |)" with the reference, and the discussion continues on p. 692.]

p. 692

[Running head, p. 692: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 4.]

The bhāṣyakāra explains what is said in these sentences as: the five-prayāja deity called the door-deities, in his form Agni; may the divine hotṛ sacrifice. In these sentences the words आताभिः (ātābhiḥ) and उज्जिहतां (ujjihatāṃ) are the main ones. This somewhat opposes the above view. One opinion is that from this it may be said that "door" meaning the doors of the sacrificial house is figurative. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa:

दुरो यजति वृष्टिर्वै दुरो वृष्टिमेव तत्प्रीणाति वृष्टिमन्नाद्यं यजमाने दधाति । (duro yajati vṛṣṭirvai duro vṛṣṭimeva tatprīṇāti vṛṣṭimannādyaṃ yajamāne dadhāti |) (printed ऐ. बा (bā). 2-4)

Here rain is meant instead of the meaning "door". How this meaning arises is not explained. The Nirukta author says:

द्वारो जवतेर्वा द्रवतेर्वा वारयतेर्वा । (dvāro javatervā dravatervā vārayatervā |) that it is formed from the root ju meaning "press forward", or from the root dru meaning "go forward", or from the root vṛ meaning "separate". Quoting the Ṛk

व्यचस्वतीरुर्विया वि श्रयंतां पतिभ्यो न जनयः शुंभमानाः । देवीर्द्वारो बृहतीर्विश्वमिन्वा देवेभ्यो भवत सुप्रायणाः । (vyacasvatīrurviyā vi śrayaṃtāṃ patibhyo na janayaḥ śuṃbhamānāḥ | devīrdvāro bṛhatīrviśvaminvā devebhyo bhavata suprāyaṇāḥ |) (printed ऋ. सं (saṃ). 10-110-5)

and explaining the word dvāra, he indicates the difference of opinion also: गृहद्वार इति कात्थक्यः । (gṛhadvāra iti kātthakyaḥ |), house-door according to Kātthakya, and अग्निरिति शाकपूणिः । (agniriti śākapūṇiḥ |), Agni according to Śākapūṇi (Ni. 8-10). In the Bṛhaddevatā:

द्वारस्तु देव्यो याः प्रोक्ता विश्वेषां तास्तु पत्नयः । अग्नायीमनुवर्तंते तथाग्नाय्यग्निमेव च ॥ अग्नौ ध्रुवं स्थितास्तास्तु संस्तूयंतेऽग्निना सह । प्राधान्यं तासु चैवाग्ने स्तुतिष्टेव हविष्णु च । (dvārastu devyo yāḥ proktā viśveṣāṃ tāstu patnayaḥ | agnāyīmanuvartaṃte tathāgnāyyagnimeva ca ‖ agnau dhruvaṃ sthitāstāstu saṃstūyaṃte 'gninā saha | prādhānyaṃ tāsu caivāgne stutiṣṭeva haviṣṇu ca |) (printed बृ (bṛ). दे (de). 3-6 रिंद (riṃda) 7)

It says that these doors are wives of the gods, that they follow Agnāyī (the wife of Agni), who follows Agni, and that, since they are firmly established in Agni, they are praised together with Agni. This is reasonable (printed सयुक्तिकवागिदे (sayuktikavāgidè).). In the matter of purifying the four doors of the sacrificial house, the Taittirīya Saṃhitā describes it thus:

प्राचीनवग्ंशं करोति देवमनुष्या दिशो व्यभजंत प्राचीं देवा दक्षिणा पितरः प्रतीचीं मनुष्या उदीचीग्ं रुद्राः ॥ (prācīnavagṃśaṃ karoti devamanuṣyā diśo vyabhajaṃta prācīṃ devā dakṣiṇā pitaraḥ pratīcīṃ manuṣyā udīcīgṃ rudrāḥ ‖) (printed तै (tai). सं (saṃ). 6-1-1-1)

That is: the gods divided the eastern door of the sacrificial house, the Pitṛ-deities the southern door, men the western door, and the (eleven) Rudras the northern door. The names of these doors of the sacrificial house, as stated in 1-188-5, are as follows: virāṭ may be said to be the eastern door, samrāṭ the southern door, vibhvīḥ the western door, and prabhvīḥ the northern door. Sāyaṇa has explained the component meanings of these words.

सप्त होत्राणि—होतृणां वषट् कर्तृणां कर्माणि । (sapta hotrāṇi—hotṛṇāṃ vaṣaṭ kartṛṇāṃ karmāṇi |): In a sacrifice, when oblations and the like are offered in Agni, the word svāhā or vaṣaṭ is added at the end of the mantra. Therefore vaṣaṭkartṛ here means the works (offerings) of the seven priests who offer with the vaṣaṭ call. These seven offering priests are: the Hotṛ, Maitrāvaruṇa, Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin, Potṛ, Neṣṭṛ, Acchāvāka and Āgnīdhra, seven priests in all.

In the three pressings, the morning pressing, the midday pressing and the third pressing, these seven priests each recite one Ṛk and offer Soma in Agni. At the morning pressing the offering is made with Ṛks of the Gāyatrī metre, at the midday pressing with Ṛks of the Triṣṭubh metre, and at the third pressing with Ṛks of the Jagatī metre. The mantras recited by the respective priests at the respective pressings are called prasthitayājyā mantras, or सप्तहोत्राणि—(saptahotrāṇi—) saptahotṛ mantras. They are explained here in detail.

॥ प्रातस्वन ॥ (‖ prātasvana ‖) (Morning pressing, as printed)

At this pressing all seven priests must recite Ṛks of the Gāyatrī metre.

1. The mantra to be recited by the Hotṛ:

इदं ते सोम्यं मध्वधक्षन्नद्रिभिर्नरः । जुषाण इंद्र तप्सिब ॥ (idaṃ te somyaṃ madhvadhakṣannadribhirnaraḥ | juṣāṇa iṃdra tapsiba ‖) (printed ॐ. सं (saṃ). 8-65-8)

p. 694

[Running head, p. 694: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 4.]

[The first line of p. 694 is printed "1. ೨." (a stray "1." before the numeral ೨), as supplied.]

1. The mantra to be recited by the priest called Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin:

इंद्र त्वा वृषभं वयं सुते सोमे हवामहे । स पाहि मध्यो अंधसः ॥ (iṃdra tvā vṛṣabhaṃ vayaṃ sute some havāmahe | sa pāhi madhyo aṃdhasaḥ ‖) (printed ಋ. सं (saṃ). 3-40-1)

1. The mantra to be recited by the priest called Mitrāvaruṇa:

मित्रं वयं हवामहे वरुणं सोमपीतये । जज्ञाना पूतदक्षसा ॥ (mitraṃ vayaṃ havāmahe varuṇaṃ somapītaye | jajñānā pūtadakṣasā ‖) (printed ಋ. सं (saṃ). 1-23-4)

1. The mantra to be recited by the priest called Potṛ:

मरुतो यस्य हि क्षये पाथा दिवो विमहसः । स सुगोपातमो जनः ॥ (maruto yasya hi kṣaye pāthā divo vimahasaḥ | sa sugopātamo janaḥ ‖) (printed ಋ. सं (saṃ). 1-86-1)

1. The mantra to be recited by the priest called Neṣṭṛ:

अग्ने पत्निरिहा वह देवानामुशतीरुप । त्वष्टारं सोमपीतये ॥ (agne patnirihā vaha devānāmuśatīrupa | tvaṣṭāraṃ somapītaye ‖) (printed ಋ. सं (saṃ). 1-22-9)

1. The mantra to be recited by the priest called Āgnīdhra:

उक्षान्नाय वशान्नाय सोमपृष्ठाय वेधसे । स्तोमैर्विधेमाग्नये ॥ (ukṣānnāya vaśānnāya somapṛṣṭhāya vedhase | stomairvidhemāgnaye ‖) (printed ಋ. सं (saṃ). 8-43-11)

1. The mantra to be recited by the priest called Acchāvāka:

प्रातर्यावभिरा गतं देवेभिर्जेन्यावसू । इंद्राग्नी सोमपीतये ॥ (prātaryāvabhirā gataṃ devebhirjenyāvasū | iṃdrāgnī somapītaye ‖) (printed ३७. सं (saṃ). 8-38-7)

॥ माध्यंदिनसवन ॥ (‖ mādhyaṃdinasavana ‖) (Midday pressing, as printed)

At this pressing only mantras of the Triṣṭubh metre must be recited. Among them:

1. The mantra to be recited by the Hotṛ:

पिबा सोममभि यमुग्र तर्द ऊर्वं गव्यं महि गृणान इंद्र । वि यो धृष्टो वधिषो वज्रहस्त विश्वा वृत्रममित्रिया शवोभिः ॥ (pibā somamabhi yamugra tarda ūrvaṃ gavyaṃ mahi gṛṇāna iṃdra | vi yo dhṛṣṭo vadhiṣo vajrahasta viśvā vṛtramamitriyā śavobhiḥ ‖)

॥ तृतीयसवन ॥ (‖ tṛtīyasavana ‖) (Third pressing, as printed)

All the mantras to be recited at this pressing are in the Jagatī metre.

1. The Hotṛ:

इंद्र ऋभुभिर्वाजवद्भिः समुक्षितं सुतं सोममा वृषस्वा गभस्तोः । धियेषितो मघवन्नाशुषो गृहे सौधन्वनेभिः सह मत्सा नृभिः ॥ (iṃdra ṛbhubhirvājavaddhiḥ samukṣitaṃ sutaṃ somamā vṛṣasvā gabhastoḥ | dhiyeṣito maghavannāśuṣo gṛhe saudhanvanebhiḥ saha matsā nṛbhiḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-60-5)

[Running head, p. 696: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 4.]

[The first line of p. 696 is printed "1. ३. मैत्रावरुण (maitrāvaruṇa)—" (a stray "1." before ३), as supplied.]

1. Maitrāvaruṇa:

इंद्रावरुणा सुतपाविमं सुतं सोमं पिबतं मद्यं धृतव्रता । युवो रथो आध्वरं देववीतये प्रति स्वसरमुप याति पीतये ॥ (iṃdrāvaruṇā sutapāvimaṃ sutaṃ somaṃ pibataṃ madyaṃ dhṛtavratā | yuvo ratho ādhvaraṃ devavītaye prati svasaramupa yāti pītaye ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-68-10)

1. Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin (printed ब्राह्मणाच्छंसि (brāhmaṇācchaṃsi)):

इंद्रश्च सोमं पिबतं बृहस्पतेऽस्मिन्यज्ञे मंदसाना वृषण्वसू । आ नां विशंत्विंदवः स्वाभुवोऽस्मे रयिं सर्ववीरं नि यच्छतं ॥ (iṃdraśca somaṃ pibataṃ bṛhaspate 'sminyajñè maṃdasānā vṛṣaṇvasū | ā nāṃ viśaṃtviṃdavaḥ svābhuvo 'sme rayiṃ sarvavīraṃ ni yacchataṃ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-50-10)

1. Potṛ:

आ वो वहंतु सप्तयो रघुष्यदो रघुपत्वानः प्रजिगात बाहुभिः । सीदता बर्हिरुरु वः सदस्यृतं मादयध्वं मरुतो मध्यो अंधसः ॥ (ā vo vahaṃtu saptayo raghuṣyado raghupatvānaḥ prajigāta bāhubhiḥ | sīdatā barhiruru vaḥ sadasyṛtaṃ mādayadhvaṃ maruto madhyo aṃdhasaḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-85-6)

1. Neṣṭṛ (printed नेष्ट्र (neṣṭra)):

1. Āgnīdhra:

इमं स्तोममर्हते जातवेदसे रथमिव सं महेमा मनीषया । भद्रा हि नः प्रमतिरस्य संसद्यग्ने सख्ये मा रिषामा वयं तव ॥ (imaṃ stomamarhate jātavedase rathamiva saṃ mahemā manīṣayā | bhadrā hi naḥ pramatirasya saṃsadyagne sakhye mā riṣāmā vayaṃ tava ॥) (printed मि (mi). सं (saṃ). 1-94-1, so printed for Ṛ. Saṃ.)

In this way, at every pressing these seven priests, each reciting one Ṛk, recite seven Ṛks and make the offering. As said before, the offering is made with mantras of the Gāyatrī metre at the morning pressing, of the Triṣṭubh metre at the midday pressing, and of the Jagatī metre at the third pressing. This is the account of the mantras to be recited at the times of the pressings.

॥ उन्नीयमानसूक्तगळ विवरणे ॥ (॥ unnīyamānasūktagaḷa vivaraṇè ॥) (Account of the Unnīyamāna sūktas, as printed)

Having told the seven mantras each of the Gāyatrī, Triṣṭubh and Jagatī metres which the seven priests beginning with the Hotṛ recite and offer in the three pressings, the account of the procedure to be followed now at the time of the morning pressing, the mantras to be recited and so on, as stated in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (the 28th chapter, as printed ಐ. ಬ್ರಾ (brā). ೨೮ ನೇಯ ಅಧ್ಯಾಯ (28 nèya adhyāya)), is given here. [The sentence breaks at the page end in mid-word: "ಅನುಸರಿಸ (anusarisa)" / "ಬೇಕಾದ (bekāda)".]

Before the offering at the time of the pressing, when the priests are ready, having filled the Soma juice in the camasa vessel (a ladle-like wooden vessel used for offering), the Adhvaryu directs, by a Praiṣa mantra, the priest called Maitrāvaruṇa to recite the Unnīyamāna sūkta. The Unnīyamāna sūkta is the sūkta recited while the Soma juice, filled in the camasa vessel for offering, is held up for offering.

This Unnīyamāna sūkta recited at the morning pressing must be of the Gāyatrī metre, at the midday pressing of the Triṣṭubh metre, and at the third pressing of the Jagatī metre. Besides, there is a rule that a sūkta of nine Ṛks must be recited as the Unnīyamāna sūkta at the morning pressing, one of ten Ṛks at the midday pressing, and one of nine Ṛks at the third pressing.

There is also another special point in the recitation of mantras. The mantras must be recited at these three pressings following the course of the sun. Namely, in the morning, since the sun's brightness is very faint, the mantras at the morning pressing must be recited in a soft voice. At midday, since the sun's brightness is very sharp, the mantras at the midday pressing must be pronounced in a high voice, that is, very loudly. In the evening, since the sun's heat has declined and become less, the mantras at the third pressing must be recited in a soft voice.

The Unnīyamāna sūkta to be recited at the morning pressing:

As soon as the Adhvaryu directs Maitrāvaruṇa, by the Praiṣa mantra, to recite the Unnīyamāna sūkta at the morning pressing, Maitrāvaruṇa recites accordingly the sūkta आ त्वा वहंतु हरयः (ā tvā vahaṃtu harayaḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-16):

आ त्वा वहंतु हरयो वृषणं सोमपीतये । इंद्र त्वा सूरचक्षसः ॥ १ ॥ इमा धाना धृतस्नुवो हरी इहोप वक्षतः । इंद्रं सुखतमे रथे ॥ २ ॥ इंद्रं प्रातर्हनामह इंद्रं प्रयत्यध्वरे । इंद्रं सोमस्य पीतये ॥ ३ ॥ उप नः सुतमा गहि हरिभिरिंद्र केशिभिः । सुते हि त्वा हवामहे ॥ ४ ॥ सेमं नः स्तोममा गह्युपेदं सवनं सुतं । गौरो न तृषितः पिब ॥ ५ ॥ (ā tvā vahaṃtu harayo vṛṣaṇaṃ somapītaye | iṃdra tvā sūracakṣasaḥ ‖ 1 ‖ imā dhānā dhṛtasnnuvo harī ihopa vakṣataḥ | iṃdraṃ sukhatame rathe ‖ 2 ‖ iṃdraṃ prātarhanāmaha iṃdraṃ prayatyadhvare | iṃdraṃ somasya pītaye ‖ 3 ‖ upa naḥ sutamā gahi haribhiriṃdra keśibhiḥ | sute hi tvā havāmahe ‖ 4 ‖ semaṃ naḥ stomamā gahyupedaṃ savanaṃ sutaṃ | gauro na tṛṣitaḥ piba ‖ 5 ‖)

[The window ends here, at the end of p. 697, after the fifth Ṛk of that sūkta as supplied (॥ ५ ॥ (‖ 5 ‖)); the next window continues.]

p. 698

इमे सोमास इंदवः सुतासो अधि बर्हिषि । ता इंद्र सहसे पिब ॥ ६ ॥ अयं ते स्तोमो अग्रियो हृदिस्पृशस्तु शंतमः । अथा सोमं सुतं पिब ॥ ७ ॥ विश्वमित्सवनं सुतमिंद्रो मदाय गच्छति । वृत्रहा सोमपीतये ॥ ८ ॥ सेमं नः काममा पृण गोभिरश्वैः शतक्रतो । स्तवाम त्वा स्वाध्यः ॥ ९ ॥ (ime somāsa iṃdavaḥ sutāso adhi barhiṣi | tā iṃdra sahase piba ‖ 6 ‖ ayaṃ te stomo agriyo hṛdispṛśastu śaṃtamaḥ | athā somaṃ sutaṃ piba ‖ 7 ‖ viśvamitsavanaṃ sutamiṃdro madāya gacchati | vṛtrahā somapītaye ‖ 8 ‖ semaṃ naḥ kāmamā pṛṇa gobhiraśvaiḥ śatakrato | stavāma tvā svādhyaḥ ‖ 9 ‖) (printed Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-16-1 to 9, the Ṛks 6 to 9 of the sūkta following here)

Maitrāvaruṇa recites the above sūkta in this way. Now they explain why this sūkta is to be used at the morning pressing, and what special feature this sūkta has in relation to the pressing.

आ त्वा वहंतु हरय इति प्रातःसवन उन्नीयमानेभ्योऽन्वाह वृषण्वतीः पीतवतीः सुतवतीर्मद्वती रूपसमृद्धाः । (ā tvā vahaṃtu haraya iti prātaḥsavana unnīyamānebhyo 'nvāha vṛṣaṇvatīḥ pītavatīḥ sutavatīrmadvatī rūpasamṛddhāḥ |) (printed ७. ब्रा (brā). 5-9)

All 9 Ṛks in this sūkta are in the Gāyatrī metre. And in the Ṛks of this sūkta there are words used for the drinking of Soma, such as vṛṣa, suta, mada. In the second pāda of the first Ṛk there is the use of the words vṛṣa and pīta in वृषणं सोमपीतेये (vṛṣaṇaṃ somapītèye) (so printed). In the fourth Ṛk the word suta is read in the sentence सुते हि त्वा हवामहे (sute hi tvā havāmahe). In the eighth Ṛk the word mada occurs in the sentence इंद्रो मदाय गच्छति (iṃdro madāya gacchati). Although all these words are not in every Ṛk, they are repeated here and there many times in the whole sūkta. The idea that Indra, the giver of rain, drinks the Soma juice and becomes joyful is expressed by the four words vṛṣaṇa, suta, soma and madāya. Therefore this sūkta is "rich in form" (rūpasamṛddha) in respect of Indra's drinking of Soma.

Rūpasamṛddha means: when speaking with a definite subject in view, the mantras used there must contain a meaning that explains that subject. Thus the use, as suits the context, of mantras containing words that indicate the explanation and meaning of the respective rites is what is called rūpasamṛddha.

ऐंद्रीरन्वाहैंद्रो वै यज्ञो गायत्रीरन्वाह गायत्रं वै प्रातस्सवनं नव न्यूनाः प्रातस्सवनेऽन्वाह न्यूने वै रेतः सिच्यते । (aiṃdrīranvāhaiṃdro vai yajño gāyatrīranvāha gāyatraṃ vai prātassavanaṃ nava nyūnāḥ prātassavane 'nvāha nyūne vai retaḥ sicyate |)

p. 699

[Running head, p. 699: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 22, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

This sūkta is addressed to Indra; that is, in this sūkta Indra is prayed to come to the sacrificial hall and drink Soma. Therefore all the Ṛks of this sūkta praise Indra alone. Now a doubt arises here. In a sacrifice made in honour of Indra, it is right to recite a sūkta and Ṛks addressed to Indra. But since this rite called the morning pressing is performed also in other sacrifices, should a sūkta and Ṛks in honour of other deities be recited in those sacrifices? No. In all sacrifices, that is, even in sacrifices made in honour of deities other than Indra, this very sūkta addressed to Indra must be recited. For since the Śruti says इंद्रो वै यज्ञः (iṃdro vai yajñaḥ), "Indra is the sacrifice", or the sacrifice is of the form of Indra, it is right in any sacrifice to recite this sūkta addressed to Indra at the time of the pressing; this is the meaning. Granting then that the recitation of a sūkta addressed to Indra is right in all sacrifices, why must mantras of the Gāyatrī metre alone be recited? Because in Śruti sentences such as "गायत्रं वै प्रातस्सवनं (gāyatraṃ vai prātassavanaṃ)", "प्रातस्सवने वै गायत्रेण छंदसा (prātassavane vai gāyatreṇa chaṃdasā)" (Tai. Saṃ. 7-1-2-1) there is the injunction that the morning-pressing rite is to be performed by the recitation of mantras of the Gāyatrī metre; therefore it is right to use at the morning pressing the Unnīyamāna sūkta spoken of above, आ त्वा वहंतु हरयः (ā tvā vahaṃtu harayaḥ), containing Ṛks of the Gāyatrī metre, and likewise the seven Gāyatrī mantras beginning "इदं ते सोम्यं मधु (idaṃ te somyaṃ madhu)" which the seven priests, the Hotṛ and the rest, use for the yājyā mantras (offering mantras).

Besides, another matter here deserves consideration. For the Unnīyamāna sūkta there is the injunction to recite a sūkta of nine Ṛks at the morning pressing, of ten Ṛks at the midday pressing, and again of nine Ṛks at the third pressing. In this connection the sūkta recited at the morning pressing has one Ṛk less than that recited at the midday pressing. Since one Ṛk is thus less, does not a deficiency arise in the sacrificial rite and, therefore, harm to the sacrificer? There is no room for that. In worldly usage, even if the semen poured at the time of conception is very small, there is no deficiency in the production of offspring. So, even if the morning pressing has one Ṛk less than the midday, by the power of the mantra there is no reason for a deficiency in the sacrificial rite or for harm to the sacrificer; this is the meaning.

दश मध्यंदिनेऽन्वाह न्यूने वै रेतः सिक्तं मध्यं स्त्रियै प्राप्य स्थविष्ठं भवति ॥ (daśa madhyaṃdine 'nvāha nyūne vai retaḥ siktaṃ madhyaṃ striyai prāpya sthaviṣṭhaṃ bhavati ‖)

Now they explain the sūkta recited at the midday pressing. At the midday pressing the sūkta असावि देवं गोयजीकमंधः (asāvi devaṃ goyajīkamaṃdhaḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-21, the 21st sūkta) is to be recited as the Unnīyamāna sūkta.

The Unnīyamāna sūkta to be recited at the midday pressing:

(Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-21-1 to 10)

The Ṛks of this sūkta are in the Triṣṭubh metre, and this sūkta has ten Ṛks. Here too the example of the womb is given. In the world, the small quantity of semen poured into the womb of a woman, which is small in measure, reaches the middle part of the woman's body, grows in the form of an embryo, and becomes a very stout child; in the same way, this sūkta of ten Ṛks recited at this midday pressing, which has the form of the womb, that is, stands in the middle of the three pressings, will bring about an abundance of fruit; this is the meaning.

नव न्यूनास्तृतीयसवनेऽन्वाह न्यूनाद्वै प्रजाः प्रजायंते ॥ (nava nyūnāstṛtīyasavane 'nvāha nyūnādvai prajāḥ prajāyaṃte ‖)

[The window ends here, at the end of p. 700, with this Śruti sentence on the third pressing; the next window continues.]

p. 701

[Running head, p. 701: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 22, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

At the third pressing the sūkta इहोप यात शवसो नपातः (ihopa yāta śavaso napātaḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-35-1) is to be recited as the Unnīyamāna sūkta.

The Unnīyamāna sūkta to be recited at the third pressing:

इहोप यात शवसो नपातः सौधन्वना ऋभवो माप भूत । अस्मिन् हि वः सवने रत्नधेयं गमंत्विंद्रमनु वो मदासः ॥ १ ॥ आगन्नभूणामिह रत्न धेयमभूत्सोमस्य सुषुतस्य प्रीतिः । सुकृत्यया यत्स्वपस्यया च एकं विचक्र चमसं चतुर्धा ॥ २ ॥ व्यकृणोत चमसं चतुर्धा सखे वि शिक्षेत्यब्रवीत । अभैत वाजा अमृतस्य पंथां गणं देवानामृभवः सुहस्ताः ॥ ३ ॥ किंमयः स्विच्चमस एष आस यं काव्यन चतुरो विचक्र । आथा सुनुध्वं सवनं मदाय पात ऋभवो मधुनः सोम्यस्य ॥ ४ ॥ शच्याकर्त पितरा युवाना शच्याकर्त चमसं देवपानं । शच्या हरी धनुतरावतष्टेंद्रवाहावृभवो वाजरत्नाः ॥ ५ ॥ यो वः सुनोत्यभिपित्वे अह्नां तीव्रं वाजासः सवनं मदाय । तस्मै रयिमृभवः सर्ववीरमा तक्षत वृषणो मंदसानाः ॥ ६ ॥ प्रातः सुतमपिबो हर्यश्व माध्यंदिनं सवनं केवलं ते । समृभुभिः पिबस्व रत्नधेभिः सखीर्या इंद्र चकृषे सुकृत्या ॥ ७ ॥ ये देवासो अभवता सुकृत्या श्यीना इवेदधि दिवि निषेद । ते रत्नं धात शवसो नपातः सौधन्वना अभवतामृतासः ॥ ८ ॥ यत्तृतीयं सवनं रत्नधेयमकृणुध्वं स्वपस्या सुहस्ताः । तदृभवः परिषिक्तं व एतत्सं मदेभिरिंद्रियेभिः पिबध्वं. ॥ ९ ॥ (ihopa yāta śavaso napātaḥ saudhanvanā ṛbhavo māpa bhūta | asmin hi vaḥ savane ratnadheyaṃ gamaṃtviṃdramanu vo madāsaḥ ‖ 1 ‖ āgannabhūṇāmiha ratna dheyamabhūtsomasya suṣutasya prītiḥ | sukṛtyayā yatsvapasyayā ca ekaṃ vicakra camasaṃ caturdhā ‖ 2 ‖ vyakṛṇota camasaṃ caturdhā sakhe vi śikṣetyabravīta | abhaita vājā amṛtasya paṃthāṃ gaṇaṃ devānāmṛbhavaḥ suhastāḥ ‖ 3 ‖ kiṃmayaḥ sviccamasa eṣa āsa yaṃ kāvyana caturo vicakra | āthā sunudhvaṃ savanaṃ madāya pāta ṛbhavo madhunaḥ somyasya ‖ 4 ‖ śacyākarta pitarā yuvānā śacyākarta camasaṃ devapānaṃ | śacyā harī dhanutarāvataṣṭeṃdravāhāvṛbhavo vājaratnāḥ ‖ 5 ‖ yo vaḥ sunotyabhipitve ahnāṃ tīvraṃ vājāsaḥ savanaṃ madāya | tasmai rayimṛbhavaḥ sarvavīramā takṣata vṛṣaṇo maṃdasānāḥ ‖ 6 ‖ prātaḥ sutamapibo haryaśca mādhyaṃdinaṃ savanaṃ kevalaṃ te | samṛbhubhiḥ pibasva ratnadhebhiḥ sakhīryā iṃdra cakṛṣe sukṛtyā ‖ 7 ‖ ye devāso abhavatā sukṛtyā śyīnā ivedadhi divi niṣeda | te ratnaṃ dhāta śavaso napātaḥ saudhanvanā abhavatāmṛtāsaḥ ‖ 8 ‖ yattṛtīyaṃ savanaṃ ratnadheyamakṛṇudhvaṃ svapasyā suhastāḥ | tadṛbhavaḥ pariṣiktaṃ va etatsaṃ madebhiriṃdriyebhiḥ pibadhvaṃ. ‖ 9 ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-35-1 to 9)

This sūkta too, like the sūkta recited at the morning pressing, has nine Ṛks. All these Ṛks should be in the Jagatī metre. (But it is not so; they are in the Triṣṭubh metre, as the text says in brackets.) If the nine Ṛks of this third pressing are compared with the ten Ṛks of the sūkta of the midday pressing, a deficiency of one Ṛk is seen here too, that is, there is one less. It is well known in the world that offspring (children) born from a small, that is, narrow, birth-passage grow up to be full-grown (big) so that a deficiency of mantras is fitting for the sake of producing the embryo. There is also a Taittirīya Śruti sentence न्यूनाद्धि प्रजाः प्रजायंते (nyūnāddhi prajāḥ prajāyaṃte), "from the deficient, indeed, offspring are born".

तद्यदेतानि केवलसूक्तान्यन्नाह यजमानमेव तद्गर्भं भूतं प्रजनयति यज्ञादेवयोन्यै । (tadyadetāni kevalasūktānyannāha yajamānameva tadgarbhaṃ bhūtaṃ prajanayati yajñādevayonyai |)

There are differences of opinion about the manner of reciting these Unnīyamāna sūktas. Namely, one opinion is that all the Ṛks in these sūktas must be recited. Another opinion is that, since the seven priests take the main part in these pressings, only seven Ṛks in all, one for each priest, must be recited in each sūkta. Of these two opinions, the procedure that enjoins the recitation of the complete sūkta is the proper one. For it is well known that the sacrificer, who holds the complete form of the embryo, is produced through the divine womb of the form of the sacrifice; that is, by the recitation of the complete sūkta the rite is performed with all its parts and the sacrificer obtains the complete fruit of the sacrifice; this is the meaning. Therefore the procedure of reciting the complete sūkta is the proper one.

ते हैके सप्त सप्तान्वाहुः सप्त प्रातःसवने सप्त माध्यंदिने सवने सप्त तृतीयसवने यावत्यो वै पुरोनुवाक्यास्तावत्यो याज्याः सप्त वै प्रांचो यजंति सप्त वषट्कुर्वंति तासामेता पुरोऽनुवाक्या इति वदंतः । (te haike sapta saptānvāhuḥ sapta prātaḥsavane sapta mādhyaṃdine savane sapta tṛtīyasavane yāvatyo vai puronuvākyāstāvatyo yājyāḥ sapta vai prāṃco yajaṃti sapta vaṣaṭkurvaṃti tāsāmetā puro 'nuvākyā iti vadaṃtaḥ |)

Having described the first difference of opinion, they now state the nature of the second. As is the order in sacrifices and the like, in all three pressings beginning with the morning pressing, seven priests take part: Hotṛ, Maitrāvaruṇa, Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin, Neṣṭṛ, Potṛ, Āgnīdhra and Acchāvāka (as printed). The yājyā mantras (offering mantras) recited, one each, by each of them, make seven in all. Ordinarily, before reciting each yājyā mantra (the mantra for making the offering), a mantra called puroanuvākyā must be recited in order to invite the gods. Therefore it follows that there must be as many puroanuvākyā mantras as there are yājyā mantras. Since in each pressing, beginning with the morning pressing, the seven priests recite only seven yājyā mantras, if the Ṛks of this Unnīyamāna sūkta, recited before them, are taken to be the puroanuvākyā mantras, then, corresponding to the seven yājyā mantras, only seven Ṛks of this sūkta need be recited for the puroanuvākyā mantras. The procedure of saying only seven Ṛks of each of the 9, 10 and 9 Ṛks of the three Unnīyamāna sūktas, without reciting them in full, is the second difference of opinion. It will be explained here clearly that this second opinion is not correct.

p. 703

[Running head, p. 703: Ā. (printed so for A.) 2, Ā. 8, Varga 22, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

तत्तथा न कुर्याद्यजमानस्य ह ते रेतो विलुंपंत्यथो यजमानमेव यजमानो हि सूक्तं । (tattathā na kuryādyajamānasya ha te reto viluṃpaṃtyatho yajamānameva yajamāno hi sūktaṃ |)

Of the two procedures stated before, the second, of reciting only seven Ṛks of each sūkta, must on no account be followed. For if the complete sūkta is not recited, the sacrificer's power of producing offspring, that is, his semen, is destroyed. Besides, destruction also occurs to the sacrificer. Since the sūkta is of the form of the sacrificer, if the complete sūkta is not recited, harm indeed comes to the sacrificer from that.

नवभिर्वा एतं मैत्रावरुणोऽस्माल्लोकादंतरिक्षलोकमभिप्रवहति दशभिरंतरिक्षलोकादमुं लोकमभ्यंतरिक्षलोको हि ज्येष्ठो नवभिरमुष्माल्लोकात्स्वर्गं लोकमभि न ह वै ते यजमानं स्वर्गं लोकमभि वोळ्हुमर्हंति ये सप्त सप्तान्वाहुस्तस्मात्केवलश एव सूक्तान्यनुब्रूयात् ॥ (navabhirvā etaṃ maitrāvaruṇo 'smāllokādaṃtarikṣalokamabhipravahati daśabhiraṃtarikṣalokādamuṃ lokamabhyaṃtarikṣaloko hi jyeṣṭho navabhiramuṣmāllokātsvargaṃ lokamabhi na ha vai te yajamānaṃ svargaṃ lokamabhi voḷhumarhaṃti ye sapta saptānvāhustasmātkevalaśa eva sūktānyanubrūyāt ‖) (printed ಐ. ಬ್ರಾ (brā). 28-9)

Having shown the fault in the second procedure, they praise the merits of the first. The Unnīyamāna sūkta of nine Ṛks recited at the morning pressing carries the sacrificer who performs the sacrifice from the world of the earth to the world of the atmosphere. Thereafter the Unnīyamāna sūkta of ten Ṛks recited at the midday pressing carries the sacrificer from the atmospheric world to the world called Nākapṛṣṭha, the lower part of heaven. This Nākapṛṣṭha is very extensive and excellent, in the upper part of the atmosphere. Having reached this excellent world by the recitation of the Unnīyamāna sūkta of ten Ṛks, the sacrificer, by the Unnīyamāna sūkta of nine Ṛks recited at the third pressing, leaves Nākapṛṣṭha and goes straight to the world of heaven. The second procedure stated before, that is, the procedure of reciting seven Ṛks of the Unnīyamāna sūktas, is unable, because of the deficiency in the number of Ṛks, to carry the sacrificer to heaven; that is, if the second procedure is followed, the sacrificer does not reach heaven. Therefore, so that the sacrificer may reach heaven, the Unnīyamāna sūktas must be recited in full at the pressings.

Here ends the procedure of reciting the Unnīyamāna sūktas.

An account of the mantras to be recited by the seven hotṛs at the morning pressing:

अथाह यदैंद्रो वै यज्ञोऽथ कस्माद्भावेव प्रातःसवने प्रस्थितानां प्रत्यक्षाद्यंद्रीभ्यां यजतो होता चैव ब्राह्मणाच्छंसी चेदं ते (athāha yadaiṃdro vai yajñoStha kasmādvāveva prātaḥsavane prasthitānāṃ pratyakṣādyaṃdrībhyāṃ yajato hotā caiva brāhmaṇācchaṃsī cedaṃ te)

[The window ends here, at the end of p. 703, in the middle of this Sanskrit sentence, which breaks off at its last words as supplied; the next window continues.]

p. 704

[Running head, p. 704: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 4.]

[Continuation of the Sanskrit sentence that broke off at the end of the previous page:]

सोम्यं मध्विति होता यजतींद्र त्वा वृषभं वयमिति ब्राह्मणाच्छंसी नानादेवत्याभिरितरे कथं तेषामैंद्रो भवंतीति । (somyaṃ madhviti hotā yajatīṃdra tvā vṛṣabhaṃ vayamiti brāhmaṇācchaṃsī nānādevatyābhiritare kathaṃ teṣāmaiṃdro bhavaṃtīti |) (printed ब्रा (brā). 28-10)

Now they explain the nature of the prasthitayājyā mantras recited by the seven hotṛs at the morning pressing. After the recitation of the Unnīyamāna sūkta, the seven priests recite the prasthitayājyā mantras. As said before, यज्ञो वा ऐंद्रः (yajño vā aiṃdraḥ) means that the sacrifice is addressed to Indra; therefore it is right to recite at the pressings mantras addressed to Indra. But now, among the seven hotṛs, only the mantras recited by the two priests Hotṛ and Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin are addressed to Indra. The mantras recited by the remaining five priests are not addressed to Indra; they are addressed to other deities. Namely, the Hotṛ recites the Ṛk इदं ते सोम्यं (idaṃ te somyaṃ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 8-65-8). This is the yājyā mantra recited by the Hotṛ. The words जुषाण इंद्र (juṣāṇa iṃdra) in the third pāda of this Ṛk address and praise Indra directly. In the yājyā mantra इंद्र त्वा वृषभं (iṃdra tvā vṛṣabhaṃ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-40-1) recited by the priest called Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin, the word Indra is clearly read in the very first pāda. Therefore it is settled that the yājyā mantras recited by the two priests Hotṛ and Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin are addressed to Indra. But the five yājyā mantras recited by the other five priests are addressed to various deities and not to Indra. Is this not strange?

मित्रं वयं हवामह इति मैत्रावरुणो यजति वरुणं सोमपीतेय इति यद्वै किंच पीतवत्पदं तदैंद्रं रूपं तेनेंद्रं प्रीणाति । (mitraṃ vayaṃ havāmaha iti maitrāvaruṇo yajati varuṇaṃ somapītèya iti yadvai kiṃca pītavatpadaṃ tadaiṃdraṃ rūpaṃ teneṃdraṃ prīṇāti |)

That is, they give the answer to it. Although the Ṛks recited by the other five priests are addressed to other deities and not to Indra, there is a reason to count them as addressed to Indra. Namely, in the yājyā mantra मित्रं वयं हवामहे (mitraṃ vayaṃ havāmahe) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-23-4) recited by Maitrāvaruṇa (printed मृत्रावरुण (mṛtrāvaruṇa)) there are the words वरुणं सोमपीतये (varuṇaṃ somapītaye). Indra has great fondness for drinking Soma. Since words used in connection with the drinking of Soma give pleasure to Indra, Ṛks in which those words are used may be counted as addressed to Indra. As the words सोमपीतये (somapītaye) are used in the present Ṛk, this mantra gives pleasure to Indra. A mantra that gives pleasure to Indra must be taken to be addressed to Indra.

मरुतो यस्य हि क्षय इति पोता यजति स सुगोपातमो जन इतींद्रो वै गोपास्तदैंद्रं रूपं तेनेंद्रं प्रीणाति । (maruto yasya hi kṣaya iti potā yajati sa sugopātamo jana itīṃdro vai gopāstadaiṃdraṃ rūpaṃ teneṃdraṃ prīṇāti |)

p. 705

[Running head, p. 705: Aṣṭaka 2 (no period after 2, as printed), Adhyāya 8, Varga 22, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

The priest called Potṛ recites the yājyā mantra मरुतो यस्य हि क्षये (maruto yasya hi kṣaye) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-86-1). In the third pāda of this mantra the word gopā occurs. Since protecting (gopṛtva) belongs to Indra, who is all-powerful, the recitation of this Ṛk gives pleasure to Indra.

अग्ने सत्नीरिहावहेति नेष्वा यजति त्वष्टारं सोमपीतय इतींद्रो वै त्वष्टा तदैंद्रं रूपं तेनेंद्रं प्रीणाति । (agne satnīrihāvaheti neṣvā yajati tvaṣṭāraṃ somapītaya itīṃdro vai tvaṣṭā tadaiṃdraṃ rūpaṃ teneṃdraṃ prīṇāti |)

The priest called Neṣṭṛ recites the yājyā mantra अग्ने पत्नीरिहावह (agne patnīrihāvaha) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-22-9). In this Ṛk the words त्वष्टारं सोमपीतये (tvaṣṭāraṃ somapītaye) are used. Here tvaṣṭā: शत्रूणां तनूकरणादिंद्रस्य त्वष्टृत्वं (śatrūṇāṃ tanūkaraṇādiṃdrasya tvaṣṭṛtvaṃ), that is, because he disregards enemies and defeats them, Indra is denoted by the word tvaṣṭṛ. Therefore in this Ṛk Indra is in effect propounded.

उक्षान्नाय वशान्नायेत्याग्नीध्रो यजति सोमपृष्टाय वेधस इतींद्रो वै वेधास्तद्वैंद्रं रूपं तेनेंद्रं प्रीणाति । (ukṣānnāya vaśānnāyetyāgnīdhro yajati somapṛṣṭāya vedhasa itīṃdro vai vedhāstadvaiṃdraṃ rūpaṃ teneṃdraṃ prīṇāti |)

In the second pāda of the yājyā mantra उक्षान्नाय वशान्नाय (ukṣānnāya vaśānnāya) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 8-43-11), recited and offered by the priest called Āgnīdhra (printed अग्नीध्र (agnīdhra)), the word vedhas is read as वेधसे (vedhase) (the supplied text has the form वेधश्यब्द (vedhaśyabda) for "the word vedhas", as printed). The word vedhas means one who arranges the order of the world. Since he arranges the order of the world, Indra is denoted by the word vedhas. Therefore this Ṛk is pleasing to Indra.

प्रातर्यावभिरागतं देवेभिर्जेन्यावसू । इंद्राग्नी सोमपीतय इति स्वयं समृद्धाच्छ्वानाकस्य ।
(prātaryāvabhirāgataṃ devebhirjenyāvasū | iṃdrāgnī somapītaya iti svayaṃ samṛddhācchvānākasya |)

The priest called Acchāvāka recites and offers, as the yājyā mantra, the Ṛk प्रातर्यावभिरागतं (prātaryāvabhirāgataṃ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 8-38-7). The main purport of this Ṛk: O deities Indra and Agni, you have conquered enemies and obtained the riches in them. Such as you, come here, in the morning, for the sake of the morning pressing, together with the gods who come to the sacrificial ground, to drink Soma. Although in this Ṛk the expression इंद्राग्नी (iṃdrāgnī) occurs and the two deities Agni and Indra are both indicated, since the word Indra is directly used, this Ṛk is pleasing to Indra; this is the meaning.

एवमु हैता ऐंद्रो भवंति यन्नानादेवत्यास्तेनान्या देवताः प्रीणाति । यदु गायत्र्यस्तेनाग्नेय्यः एतदु हैताभिस्त्रयमुपाप्नोति ॥ (evamu haitā aiṃdro bhavaṃti yannānādevatyāstenānyā devatāḥ prīṇāti | yadu gāyatryastenāgneyyaḥ etadu haitābhistrayamupāpnoti ||) (printed ৩. ब्रा (brā). 28-10)

[Stray line as supplied at the foot of p. 705: "45", kept as a note in kn.md.]

p. 706

[Running head, p. 706: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 4.]

In this way the Indra-richness of the yājyā mantras recited by the seven priests has been shown. Besides, the deities propounded in these Ṛks, Mitra and Varuṇa, the Maruts, Agni, Vedhas and Indra-Agni, are also pleased. Since all these Ṛks are in the Gāyatrī metre, they are connected with Agni. Namely, since Agni and Gāyatrī were both produced from the mouth of Prajāpati, all Ṛks of the Gāyatrī metre are indirectly connected with Agni. Therefore in these yājyā mantras the propounding of various deities, the richness of Indra-relation (description relating to Indra), and the relation to Agni through the Gāyatrī metre, these three kinds of relation, have been explained.

Here ends the account of the morning pressing.

[Image note as supplied in kn.md: "This image contains no text. It appears to be a decorative graphic or symbol consisting of black shapes on a white background."]

Account of the midday pressing

At the midday pressing, as soon as it is directed by the Praiṣa mantra that the Unnīyamāna sūkta be recited, Maitrāvaruṇa recites the sūkta असावि देवं गोऋजीकमंधः (asāvi devaṃ goṛjīkamaṃdhaḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 7-21, the 21st sūkta).

असावि देवं गोऋजीकमंध इति मध्यंदिन उन्नीयमानेभ्योऽन्वाह वृषण्वतीः पीतवतीः सुतवतीर्मद्वती रूपसमृद्धाः । (asāvi devaṃ goṛjīkamaṃdha iti madhyaṃdina unnīyamānebhyo 'nvāha vṛṣaṇvatīḥ pītavatīḥ sutavatīrmadvatī rūpasamṛddhāḥ |)

This sūkta has ten Ṛks, as said before. In the Ṛks of this sūkta there are words used in connection with the drinking of Soma: vṛṣa, pīta, suta, mada. Namely, in the second Ṛk of this sūkta the word vṛṣaṇa is read in वृषणो नृषाच (vṛṣaṇo nṛṣāca). In the third Ṛk the word dhenā occurs in रथ्यो न धेना (rathyo na dhenā). Since this word is formed from the root meaning "drink" (the root is printed in the supplied text as "धेट् पा ी (dheṭ pā ī)", garbled, as supplied), the use of this word indicates the sense of the word pīta. The word आसावि (āsāvi) (so printed) at the very beginning of the sūkta, formed from the root sunoti, indicates the sense of the word suta; and the word मदेषु (madeṣu) in अंधसो मदेषु (aṃdhaso madeṣu) at the end of the first Ṛk indicates madatva. Therefore, since this sūkta contains the words vṛṣa, pīta, suta and mada, concerned with the drinking of Soma, and has a sense fitting the present context, richness of form (rūpasamṛddhatva) is present in this sūkta.

ऐंद्रीरन्वाहैंद्रो वै यज्ञस्त्रिष्टुभोऽन्वाह त्रैष्टुभं वै माध्यंदिनं सवनं । (aiṃdrīranvāhaiṃdro vai yajñastriṣṭubho 'nvāha traiṣṭubhaṃ vai mādhyaṃdinaṃ savanaṃ |)

[The window ends here, at the end of p. 706, with this Śruti sentence; the next window continues.]

p. 707

[Running head, p. 707: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 22, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

They now examine the Ṛks of this sūkta and the matter of their metre and deities. As the Śruti sentence ऐंद्रो वै यज्ञः (aiṃdro vai yajñaḥ) says, the sacrifice must be of the form of Indra. Accordingly, since the word Indra is used in the second pāda of the first Ṛk, Indra-ness has been stated for this sūkta. In the other Ṛks too Indra-ness is indicated in the same way. And in accordance with the rule that mantras of the Triṣṭubh metre must be recited at the midday pressing, it is well known that this sūkta contains Ṛks of the Triṣṭubh metre.

तदाहुर्यत्तृतीयसवनस्यैव रूपं मद्वदथ कस्मान्मध्यंदिने मद्वतीरनु चाह यजंति चाभिरिति । (tadāhuryattṛtīyasavanasyaiva rūpaṃ madvadatha kasmānmadhyaṃdine madvatīranu cāha yajaṃti cābhiriti |)

In this sūkta the matter concerning intoxication produced by drinking Soma is stated in मदेषु (madeṣu). But at the third pressing, the last pressing, made at the end of the day, joy arises in all the gods after they have drunk Soma, so it would be natural to use the word mada then. Is it not improper, instead, to recite at the midday pressing itself Ṛks in which the word mada is used? This seems strange. The answer:

माद्यंतीव वै मध्यंदिने देवताः समेव तृतीयसवने मादयंते तस्मान्मध्यंदिने मद्वतीरनु चाह यजंति चाभिः । (mādyaṃtīva vai madhyaṃdine devatāḥ sameva tṛtīyasavane mādayaṃte tasmānmadhyaṃdine madvatīranu cāha yajaṃti cābhiḥ |)

They give the answer to it. Even at the time of the midday pressing certain principal deities drink Soma and become joyful. At the third pressing the other deities, who did not drink Soma at the midday pressing, also drink Soma and become joyful. Therefore it is proper for Maitrāvaruṇa to recite at the midday pressing the Ṛks in which the word mada is used. Likewise the seven priests, Hotṛ and the rest, also make the offering at the midday pressing with yājyā mantras in which the word mada is used.

ते वै खलु सर्व एव माध्यंदिने प्रस्थितानां प्रत्यक्षाद्यंद्रीभिर्यजंति अभितृण्णवतीभिरेके। (te vai khalu sarva eva mādhyaṃdine prasthitānāṃ pratyakṣādyaṃdrībhiryajaṃti abhitṛṇṇavatībhireke |)

Now they explain the nature of the prasthitayājyā mantras with which the priests, Hotṛ and the rest, make the offering. In the prasthitayājyā mantras that the seven priests, Hotṛ and the rest, use for offering at this midday pressing, the word Indra must be directly used. But only in the yājyā mantras recited by the three priests Hotṛ, Maitrāvaruṇa and Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin are there, besides words indicating Indra-ness, the use of the word अभितृण्ण (abhitṛṇṇa) also, which indicates drinking. The word abhitṛṇṇa is formed from the root tṛd joined to the prefix abhi and indicates the sense of drinking.

p. 708

पिबा सोममभि यमुग्र तर्द इति होता यजति । (pibā somamabhi yamugra tarda iti hotā yajati |)

They explain the yājyā mantras recited separately by the seven priests, Hotṛ and the rest. First the Hotṛ recites the Ṛk पिबा सोममभि यमुग्र तर्दः (pibā somamabhi yamugra tardaḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-17-1). In this Ṛk the words abhi and tarda together indicate the word abhitṛṇṇa.

स ईं पाहि य ऋजीषी तरुत्र इति मैत्रावरुणो यजति । (sa īṃ pāhi ya ṛjīṣī tarutra iti maitrāvaruṇo yajati |)

The priest called Maitrāvaruṇa recites the Ṛk स ईं पाहि य ऋजीषी तरुत्रः (sa īṃ pāhi ya ṛjīṣī tarutraḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-17-2). In the fourth pāda of this Ṛk the word अभितृंधि (abhitṛṃdhi) indicates the sense of abhitṛṇṇa.

एवा पाहि प्रत्नथा मंदतु त्वेति ब्राह्मणाच्छंसी यजति । (evā pāhi pratnathā maṃdatu tveti brāhmaṇācchaṃsī yajati |)

The priest called Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin recites the Ṛk एवा पाहि प्रत्नथा मंदतु त्वा (evā pāhi pratnathā maṃdatu tvā) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-17-3). In the fourth pāda of this Ṛk, in अभिगा इंद्र तृंधि (abhigā iṃdra tṛṃdhi), the word abhitṛndhi is used. In this way, in the yājyā mantras recited by the three priests Hotṛ, Maitrāvaruṇa and Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin, the words Indra and abhitṛṇṇa (drinking) are used.

अर्वाजेहि सोमकामं त्वाहुरिति पोता यजति तवायं सोमस्त्वमेह्यर्वाजति नेष्टा यजति इंद्राय सोमाः प्रदिवो विदाना इत्यच्छावाको यजति आपूर्णो अस्य कलशः स्वाहेत्याग्निध्रो यजति । (arvājehi somakāmaṃ tvāhuriti potā yajati tavāyaṃ somastvamehyarvājati neṣṭā yajati iṃdrāya somāḥ pradivo vidānā ityacchāvāko yajati āpūrṇo asya kalaśaḥ svāhetyāgnidhro yajati |)

Now they indicate the yājyā mantras recited by the remaining four priests. The priest called Potṛ recites the Ṛk अर्वाजीहि सोमकामं त्वाहुः (arvājīhi somakāmaṃ tvāhuḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-104-9); the priest called Neṣṭṛ the Ṛk तवायं सोमस्तमेह्यर्वाच् (tavāyaṃ somastamehyarvāc) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-35-6); the priest called Acchāvāka the Ṛk इंद्राय सोमाः प्रदिवो विदानाः (iṃdrāya somāḥ pradivo vidānāḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-36-2); and the priest called Āgnīdhra the Ṛk आपूर्णो अस्य कलशः स्वाहा (āpūrṇo asya kalaśaḥ svāhā) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-32-15), each as his own yājyā mantra. (The printed forms of the first two differ slightly from those in the sentence above, as supplied.)

तासामेता अभितृण्णवत्यो भवंतीद्रो वै प्रातःसवने न व्यजयत स एताभिरेव माध्यंदिनं सवनमभ्यतृणद्यदभ्यतृणत्तस्मादेता अभितृण्णवत्यो भवंति । (tāsāmetā abhitṛṇṇavatyo bhavaṃtīdro vai prātaḥsavane na vyajayata sa etābhireva mādhyaṃdinaṃ savanamabhyatṛṇadyadabhyatṛṇattasmādetā abhitṛṇṇavatyo bhavaṃti |)

Of the seven yājyā mantras explained above, the first three Ṛks are well known as abhitṛṇṇavatī mantras. For in these Ṛks there is the use of a word formed from the root tṛd with the prefix abhi, and so these Ṛks have come to be called abhitṛṇṇavatī Ṛks.

p. 709

[Running head, p. 709: Ā. (printed so for A.) 2, Ā. 8, Varga 22, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

Since the root tṛd means to injure or kill, the words abhitardana or abhitṛṇṇa indicate Indra's power of subduing enemies. Namely, formerly, when Indra went out to conquer enemies after drinking Soma at the morning pressing, victory did not come to him. But at the midday pressing the priests recited the Ṛks beginning पिबा सोमं (pibā somaṃ), with the use of the word abhitarda (abhitṛṇṇa), which indicates the subduing of enemies (the supplied text has "ऋत्विक्कुगळन्नु पठिसि (ṛtvikkugaḷannu paṭhisi)", "recited the priests", as printed), and increased Indra's power. And Indra too, drinking Soma abundantly at the midday pressing and becoming joyful, became able to defeat his enemies. In this way, since in the first three Ṛks beginning पिबा सोमं (pibā somaṃ) the condition (Indra's power) has been made firm and bound ("दृढ (dṛḍha): ंधनयुक्त (ṃdhanayukta)", garbled as supplied) by the word abhitarda, the name abhitṛṇṇavatī Ṛks for these three Ṛks is apt.

Here ends the account of the midday pressing.

Account of the third pressing

As said before, at the beginning of the third pressing the Unnīyamāna sūkta is recited by the priest called Maitrāvaruṇa.

इहोप यात शवसो नपात इति तृतीयसवन उन्नीयमानेभ्योऽन्वाह वृषण्वतीः पीतवतीः सुतवतीर्मद्वती रूपसमृद्धास्ता ऐंद्रार्भव्यो भवंति। (ihopa yāta śavaso napāta iti tṛtīyasavana unnīyamānebhyo 'nvāha vṛṣaṇvatīḥ pītavatīḥ sutavatīrmadvatī rūpasamṛddhāstā aiṃdrārbhavyo bhavaṃti|)

वृषण्वतीः पीतवतीः सुतवतीर्मद्वती रूपसमृद्धास्ता ऐंद्रार्भव्यू भवंति। (vṛṣaṇvatīḥ pītavatīḥ sutavatīrmadvatī rūpasamṛddhāstā aiṃdrārbhavyū bhavaṃti|)

[The second Sanskrit passage repeats the last words of the first, with the variant spelling ऐंद्रार्भव्यू (aiṃdrārbhavyū), as supplied.]

At the beginning of the third pressing, as soon as the Adhvaryu directs Maitrāvaruṇa by the Praiṣa mantra to recite the Unnīyamāna sūkta, Maitrāvaruṇa (printed मैत्रावरण (maitrāvaraṇa)) recites the sūkta of nine Ṛks इहोप यात शवसो नपात (ihopa yāta śavaso napāta) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-35, the 35th sūkta). In the Ṛks of this sūkta the words vṛṣa, pīta, suta and mada are used. Namely, in the fourth pāda of the 6th Ṛk of this sūkta, since it says आ तक्षत वृषणो मंदसानाः (ā takṣata vṛṣaṇo maṃdasānāḥ), the word vṛṣaṇa; in the second pāda of the 2nd Ṛk, since there is सुषुतस्य पीतिः (suṣutasya pītiḥ), the words suta and pīta; and in the fourth pāda of the first Ṛk, इंद्रमनु वो मदासः (iṃdramanu vo madāsaḥ), the word mada: so this sūkta has richness of form. The deities of the Ṛks of this sūkta are Indra and the Ṛbhus, the sons of Sudhanvan. Although the Anukramaṇikā names the Ṛbhus as the deity of this sūkta, in the first Ṛk, in सौधन्वना ऋभवो (saudhanvanā ṛbhavo) ... गमत्विंद्रमनु वो मदासः (gamatviṃdramanu vo madāsaḥ) (the dots as printed), and in the 7th Ṛk, in समृभुभिः पिबस्व (samṛbhubhiḥ pibasva) ... सखीयान् इंद्र (sakhīyān iṃdra) (the dots as printed), it is prayed that Indra drink Soma together with the Ṛbhus; therefore there is no reason for doubt that Indra too is a deity of this sūkta.

[The window ends here, at the end of p. 709; the next window continues.]

p. 710

[Running head, p. 710: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ ३ (no period after Maṃ, as printed), A. 1, Sū. 4.]

तदाहुर्यन्नार्भवीषु स्तुवशेऽथ कस्मादार्भवः पवमान इत्याचक्षत इति । (tadāhuryannārbhavīṣu stuvaśeStha kasmādārbhavaḥ pavamāna ityācakṣata iti |)

Is not the matter of a connection with the Ṛbhus at the time of the third pressing open to objection? Moreover, those who perform the Sāman chanting in the sacrifice do not praise the Ṛbhus with the Pavamāna stotra at the third pressing by adding Ṛks addressed to the Ṛbhus; they praise with mantras addressed to a deity other than the Ṛbhus, namely स्वादिष्टया मदिष्टया (svādiṣṭayā madiṣṭayā). So how the Pavamāna stotra comes to be ārbhava, that is, connected with the Ṛbhus, is also strange. The answer is given:

प्रजापतिर्वै पित ऋभून्मत्यान्सतोऽमर्त्यान्कृत्या तृतीयसवन आभजत्तस्मान्नार्भवीषु स्तुवतेऽथार्भवः पवमान इत्याचक्षते । (prajāpatirvai pita ṛbhūnmatyānsato 'martyānkṛtyā tṛtīyasavana ābhajattasmānnārbhavīṣu stuvate 'thārbhavaḥ pavamāna ityācakṣate |)

Why is the Pavamāna stotra recited at the third pressing called ārbhava (accompanied by the Ṛbhus) Pavamāna? There are no mantras addressed to the Ṛbhus in the Ṛks of this stotra. On this there is an ancient story. In the past Prajāpati, the father of all, made the Ṛbhus, who had been men, into immortal gods (we have explained this matter earlier in the Ṛbhu sūktas), and granted them the right to drink Soma at the third pressing. Therefore the Ṛbhus are entitled to a share of Soma at the third pressing only. For this reason it is said here आर्भवं शंसति (ārbhavaṃ śaṃsati) (the Ṛbhus are praised). This being so, since there is no state of being a deity for the Ṛbhus in the stotras, the priests such as the Udgātṛ, who chant the Sāman, do not praise the Ṛbhus in the Pavamāna stotras. Still the Pavamāna sūkta, which praises another deity (Pavamāna Soma), is called the ārbhava Pavamāna sūkta.

अथाह यद्यथाच्छंदसं पूर्वयोः सवनयोरन्वाह गायत्रीः प्रातःसवने त्रिष्टुभो माध्यंदिनेऽथ कस्माज्जागते सति तृतीयसवने त्रिष्टुभोऽन्वाहेति । (athāha yadyathācchaṃdasaṃ pūrvayoḥ savanayoranvāha gāyatrīḥ prātaḥsavane triṣṭubho mādhyaṃdine 'tha kasmājjāgate sati tṛtīyasavane triṣṭubho 'nvāheti |)

The connection of the Ṛbhus with the drinking of Soma at the third pressing has been stated. Now they examine a strange matter concerning the metre of the Unnīyamāna sūkta recited at the third pressing. The rule that mantras of the Gāyatrī metre must be recited at the morning pressing, of the Triṣṭubh metre at the midday pressing, and of the Jagatī metre at the third pressing has been stated before. Accordingly it is right that the Unnīyamāna sūkta is recited with Ṛks of the Gāyatrī metre at the morning pressing and with Ṛks of the Triṣṭubh metre at the midday pressing. But in the Unnīyamāna sūkta इहोप यात (ihopa yāta) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-35) recited at the third pressing there are no Ṛks of the Jagatī metre; there are only Ṛks of the Triṣṭubh metre. जागतं तृतीयसवनं (jāgataṃ tṛtīyasavanaṃ)

p. 711

[Running head, p. 711: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 22, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

[the Śruti sentence continues from the previous page:] is it not strange that, transgressing the Śruti sentence "the third pressing is of the Jagati", the Unnīyamāna sūkta इहोप यात (ihopa yāta) of the Triṣṭubh metre has been recited? The answer is given:

धीतरसं वै तृतीयसवनमथैतदधीतरसं शुक्रियं छंदो यत्रिष्टुप्सवनस्य सरसताया इति ब्रूयादथो इंद्रमेवैतत्सवनेऽन्वाभजतीति । (dhītarasaṃ vai tṛtīyasavanamathaitadadhītarasaṃ śukriyaṃ chaṃdo yatriṣṭupsavanasya sarasatāyā iti brūyādatho iṃdramevaitatsavane 'nvābhajatīti |)

Unlike the morning and midday pressings, at the third pressing the Soma plants that are crushed have no juice. Because its juice was drunk long ago by the Gāyatrī in the form of a falcon, it is juiceless.

Namely, in the past Soma was in heaven. The gods thought that it must be brought to the earth to be used in sacrifices, and devised a means for it. Metres such as the Gāyatrī have the power to go to heaven and bring Soma. Therefore the gods prayed to the Gāyatrī and the other metres to bring Soma to the earth. Accepting that prayer, the Gāyatrī and the other metres agreed to go to heaven. On this there is a story, which the bhāṣyakāra cites here:

जगत्युदपतच्चतुर्दशाक्षरासती साप्राप्य न्यवर्तत तस्यै द्वे अक्षरे अमीयेताग्ं सा पशुभिश्च दीक्षया चागच्छत्तस्माज्जगतीछंदसां पशव्यतमा तस्मात्पशुमंतं दीक्षोपनमति त्रिष्टुगुदपतत्रयोदशाक्षरासती साप्राप्य न्यवर्तत तस्यै द्वे अक्षरे अमीयेताग्ं सा दक्षिणाभिश्च तपसा चागच्छत्तस्मात्रिष्टुभो लोके माध्यंदिने सवने दक्षिणानीयंत एतत्खलु वाव तप इत्याहुर्यः स्वं ददातीति गायत्युदपतच्चतुरक्षरा सत्यजया ज्योतिषा तमस्या अजाभ्यरुंधत तदजाया अजत्वग्ं सा सोमं चाहरच्चत्वारि चाक्षराणि साष्टाक्षरा समपद्यत ब्रह्मनादिनो वदंति कस्मात्सत्याद्गायत्री कनिष्ठा छंदसाग्ं सती यज्ञमुखं परीयायेति यदेवादः सोममाहरत्तस्माद्यज्ञमुखं पर्यैत्तस्मात्तेजस्विनीतमा पद्भ्यां द्वे सवने समगृह्णान्मुखेनैकं यन्मुखेन समगृह्णात्तदधयत्तस्माद्वे सवने शुक्रवती प्रातःसवनं च माध्यंदिनं च तस्मात्तृतीयसवनऋजेषमभिषुण्वंति धीतमिव हि मन्यंते ।

[The reading धीतमिव (dhītamiva) near the end of the passage was printed in the supplied text with three Telugu letters; they were put into Kannada letters one for one (धीतम (dhītama)), and the Kannada text carries the same.]

First the Jagatī metre, saying "I shall go", leapt into the atmosphere. But before it had gone a little way its strength failed, and without strength to go further it had to turn back. By this it lost two syllables of the fourteen syllables that its pāda had before. Therefore

now every pāda of the Jagatī metre has only twelve syllables. Thus, returning for lack of strength to go forward, the Jagatī brought with it the animal, the means of the sacrifice, and the order of initiation (dīkṣā). Therefore the Jagatī metre has the power to give cattle. If the sacrificer who performs the sacrifice desires wealth in cattle, then when he is consecrated by the dīkṣā in the sacrifice, he is consecrated with mantras of the Jagatī metre alone. Next the Triṣṭubh metre, saying "I shall go", leapt into the atmosphere. Before it had gone a little way it too grew weary and had to turn back. Having lost two syllables of the thirteen syllables in its pāda, the pāda of the Triṣṭubh metre now has only eleven syllables. Returning, this Triṣṭubh metre brought with it from heaven the dakṣiṇā and the austerity (tapas), the means of the sacrifice. Therefore even now, in worldly usage, when a sacrifice is performed, there is the custom of giving the dakṣiṇā to the priests at the midday pressing. Giving away one's own earned wealth in this way is called tapas.

Then the Gāyatrī, saying "I shall go", leapt into the atmosphere in the form of a falcon and flew away. In going it took with it, for help, a female goat. As it went, the pādas of the Gāyatrī metre had only four syllables. Although the Gāyatrī is small by the measure of syllables among all metres, by its own strength it reached heaven, overcame the guards there, and brought Soma. When bringing the Soma juice it brought back the two syllables each that the Jagatī and Triṣṭubh metres had lost. Those four syllables joined the four syllables the Gāyatrī had before, and every pāda of the Gāyatrī became eight syllables. Because it brought Soma from heaven, the Gāyatrī, though small in measure, obtained greater excellence. When bringing Soma to the earth, the Gāyatrī in the form of a falcon held Soma in its two feet and brought another part biting it in its beak. The portions of the Soma plants held in the two feet became the morning and midday pressings. The portion brought biting in the beak became the third pressing. While bringing it biting in its beak, the falcon bit the Soma plant and sucked its juice; therefore the Soma juice in those plants was not abundant and they became juiceless. That is why it is said here that the third pressing is not full of sap but juiceless. Even now, at the third pressing, without crushing and pressing fresh Soma plants, they soak in water the plants left like husks after the juice was pressed at the midday pressing, and press out the juice again. Since there is not much juice in these husks, in order to increase its juice they make a connection of it with the midday pressing, that is, with the mantras of the Triṣṭubh metre used at the midday pressing

[The window ends here, at the end of p. 712, in the middle of this sentence; the next window continues.]

p. 713

[Running head, p. 713: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 22, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

[continuing the sentence of the previous page:] at the third pressing too, and in the Unnīyamāna sūkta, they recite. Namely, just as a fire that has gone out or is going out is made to burn well by putting fresh pieces of wood on it, so, in order that the juice may come abundantly in the husks used for juice at the third pressing, they recite Ṛks of the Triṣṭubh metre at the third pressing, as at the midday pressing, and make for it a connection with the midday pressing. This making of a connection is called शुक्रियं (śukriyaṃ) (śukriyam); it means rekindling even what has gone out. In this way, for the sake of rekindling at the third pressing and for the juice to come abundantly in the husks, and because the Triṣṭubh metre is dear to Indra, so as to do good to Indra and to make a connection with Indra at the third pressing, the Unnīyamāna sūkta with Ṛks of the Triṣṭubh metre is recited at the third pressing. This is the reason for not using Ṛks of the Jagatī metre.

अथाह यदैंद्रार्भवं वै तृतीयसवनमथ कस्मादेष एव तृतीयसवने प्रस्थितानां प्रत्यक्षाद्यैंद्रार्भव्या यजतींद्र ऋभुभिर्वाजवद्भिः सुमुक्षितमिति होतैव नानादेवत्याभिरितरे कथं तेषामैंद्रार्भवो भवंतीति । (athāha yadaiṃdrārbhavaṃ vai tṛtīyasavanamatha kasmādeṣa eva tṛtīyasavane prasthitānāṃ pratyakṣādyaiṃdrārbhavyā yajatīṃdra ṛbhubhirvājavadbhiḥ sumukṣitamiti hotaiva nānādevatyābhiritare kathaṃ teṣāmaiṃdrārbhavo bhavaṃtīti |)

Having given the answer to the objection about using mantras of the Triṣṭubh metre instead of the Jagatī in the Unnīyamāna sūkta recited for the third pressing, they now give the answer to the doubts that arise about the prasthitayājyā Ṛks. It has been said before that after the recitation of the Unnīyamāna sūkta, at the third pressing, the seven priests, Hotṛ and the rest, recite the prasthitayājyā mantras aindrārbhava, that is, with Ṛks addressed to Indra and the Ṛbhus. But at the time of reciting the prasthitayājyā mantras the priest called Hotṛ recites the yājyā mantra इंद्र ऋभुभिर्वाजवद्भिः (iṃdra ṛbhubhirvājavadbhiḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-60-5), addressed to Indra and the Ṛbhus together, containing the words Indra and Ṛbhu. For in the yājyā mantra recited by the Hotṛ the words इंद्र ऋभुभिः (iṃdra ṛbhubhiḥ) are used. Only the Hotṛ recites and offers such a mantra with two deities; the other six priests do not do so. That is, they recite and offer mantras addressed to various deities. Then how do the yājyā mantras recited by these six priests become aindrārbhava mantras? Since there is no mention of Indra and the Ṛbhus in their mantras, how would their yājyā mantras praise Indra and the Ṛbhus, the chief deities at the third pressing? Is this not strange?

इंद्रावरुणा सुतपाविमं सुतमिति मैत्रावरुणो यजति युवो रथो अध्वरं देववीतय इति बहूनि वाह तृदभूणां रूपं । (iṃdrāvaruṇā sutapāvimaṃ sutamiti maitrāvaruṇo yajati yuvo ratho adhvaraṃ devavītaya iti bahūni vāha tṛdabhūṇāṃ rūpaṃ |)

p. 714

[Running head, p. 714: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3 (no period after 3, as printed), A. 1, Sū. 4.]

It has been said before that the Hotṛ recites the aindrārbhava yājyā mantra इंद्र ऋभुभिर्वाजवद्भिः (iṃdra ṛbhubhirvājavadbhiḥ) (printed "aindrābhava" in the next sentences). Now they explain the aindrārbhava-ness in the yājyā mantras recited by the other priests, that is, the praise addressed to Indra and the Ṛbhus. First, Maitrāvaruṇa (printed मैत्रावरण (maitrāvaraṇa)) recites as yājyā mantra the Ṛk इंद्रावरुणा सुतपाविमं (iṃdrāvaruṇā sutapāvimaṃ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-68-10). In the third pāda of this Ṛk, युवो रथो अध्वरं देववीतये (yuvo ratho adhvaraṃ devavītaye), there is the word devavītaye. In the compound of this word:

देवानां वीतिः प्राप्तिर्देव वितिरिति तस्य समासः । तस्य समासे षष्ठीबहुवचनत्वेन शब्देन बहून्येव रूपाणि प्रतीयंते । तत्र बहुत्वमृभूणां स्वरूपं (devānāṃ vītiḥ prāptirdeva vitiriti tasya samāsaḥ | tasya samāse ṣaṣṭhībahuvacanatvena śabdena bahūnyeva rūpāṇi pratīyaṃte | tatra bahutvamṛbhūṇāṃ svarūpaṃ)

Since it says this, the word means "for the obtaining of the gods". The word "of the gods" is the genitive plural. Since the word Indra is directly present in this Ṛk, the expression "of the gods", conveyed by the plural word, applies to the Ṛbhus, who are three. So it must be inferred that in this Ṛk both Indra and the Ṛbhus are praised.

इंद्रश्च सोमं पिबतं बृहस्पत इति ब्राह्मणाच्छंसी यजत्या वां विशंत्विंदवः स्वाभुव इति बहूनि वाह तदृभूणां रूपं । (iṃdraśca somaṃ pibataṃ bṛhaspata iti brāhmaṇācchaṃsī yajatyā vāṃ viśaṃtviṃdavaḥ svābhuva iti bahūni vāha tadṛbhūṇāṃ rūpaṃ |)

Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin (printed ब्राह्मणाच्छंसि (brāhmaṇācchaṃsi)) recites the Ṛk इंद्रश्च सोमं पिबतं बृहस्पते (iṃdraśca somaṃ pibataṃ bṛhaspate) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-50-10). In this Ṛk too the word Indra is used. In the third pāda of this Ṛk, आ वां विशंत्विंदवः स्वाभुवः (ā vāṃ viśaṃtviṃdavaḥ svābhuvaḥ), the plural word indavaḥ applies to the Ṛbhus; so in this Ṛk too aindrārbhava-ness is present.

आ वो वहंतु सप्तयो रघुष्यद इति पोता यजति रघुपत्वानः प्र जिगात बाहुभिरिति बहूनि वाह तदृभूणां रूपं । (ā vo vahaṃtu saptayo raghuṣyada iti potā yajati raghupatvānaḥ pra jigāta bāhubhiriti bahūni vāha tadṛbhūṇāṃ rūpaṃ |)

The priest called Potṛ recites the Ṛk आ वो वहंतु सप्तयो रघुष्यदः (ā vo vahaṃtu saptayo raghuṣyadaḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-85-6). Since in the second pāda of this Ṛk there is the plural word रघुपत्वानः (raghupatvānaḥ) and still other plural words, it should be understood that the use of plural words also points to the Ṛbhus.

अमेव नः सुहवा आ हि गंतनेति नेष्टा यजति गंतनेति बहूनि वाह तदृभूणां रूपं । (ameva naḥ suhavā ā hi gaṃtaneti neṣṭā yajati gaṃtaneti bahūni vāha tadṛbhūṇāṃ rūpaṃ |)

The priest called Neṣṭṛ (printed नेष्ट (neṣṭa)) recites and offers the Ṛk अमेव नः सुहवा आ हि गंतन (ameva naḥ suhavā ā hi gaṃtana) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-36-3). In this yājyā mantra too, since there is the word गंतन (gaṃtana), a plural word in the imperative (loṭ) second person, it should be understood that this Ṛk also contains the propounding of Indra and the Ṛbhus (aindrārbhava).

[Running head, p. 715: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 22, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

इंद्राविष्णू पिबतं मध्वो अस्येत्यच्छावाको यजत्यावामंधांसि मदिराण्यग्मन्निति बहूनि वाह तदृभूणां रूपं । (iṃdrāviṣṇū pibataṃ madhvo asyetyacchāvāko yajatyāvāmaṃdhāṃsi madirāṇyagmanniti bahūni vāha tadṛbhūṇāṃ rūpaṃ |)

The priest called Acchāvāka recites and offers the yājyā mantra इंद्राविष्णू पिबतं मध्वो अस्य (iṃdrāviṣṇū pibataṃ madhvo asya) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 6-70-7, as printed). Since in the third pāda of this Ṛk the plural words such as अंधांसि (aṃdhāṃsi) are used, here too the plural points to the Ṛbhus.

इमं स्तोममर्हते जातवेदस इत्याग्नीध्रो यजति रथमिव सं महेमा मनीषयेति बहूनि वाह तदृभूणां रूपं । (imaṃ stomamarhate jātavedasa ityāgnīdhro yajati rathamiva saṃ mahemā manīṣayeti bahūni vāha tadṛbhūṇāṃ rūpaṃ |)

The priest called Āgnīdhra recites and offers the Ṛk इमं स्तोममर्हते जातवेदसे (imaṃ stomamarhate jātavedase) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-94-1). Since in the second pāda of this Ṛk there are plural words such as महेम (mahema), it should be understood that this mantra describes the nature of the Ṛbhus.

एवमु हैता ऐंद्रार्भव्यो भवंति यन्नानादेवात्यास्तेनान्या देवताः प्रीणाति । (evamu haitā aiṃdrārbhavyo bhavaṃti yannānādevātyāstenānyā devatāḥ prīṇāti |)

In this way the seven yājyā mantras spoken of before, besides propounding the deities Indra and the Ṛbhus, being addressed to various deities, also please the various deities.

यदु जगत्पासहा जागतं वै तृतीयसवनं तृतीयसवनस्यैव समृद्ध्यै ॥ (yadu jagatpāsahā jāgataṃ vai tṛtīyasavanaṃ tṛtīyasavanasyaiva samṛddhyai ‖) (printed ৩. ব্রা (brā). 28-12)

Here jagat means the Jagatī metre. The word prāsahā indicates plurality. Therefore jagatprāsahā (so printed जगत्प्रासहा (jagatprāsahā)) means sūktas or mantras with the Jagatī metre and with plural words. Since mantras of this kind occur in the Unnīyamāna sūkta of the third pressing and in the yājyā mantras, it is said जागतं वै तृतीयसवनं (jāgataṃ vai tṛtīyasavanaṃ): the third pressing is of the nature of the Jagatī metre. The third-pressing rite performed with such a sūkta and Ṛks brings prosperity to the sacrificer who performs the sacrifice.

Here ends the account of the third pressing.

May Mitra, Varuṇa and Indra with the Maruts impel heaven and earth in such a way that they delight us.

Printed English translation

May the adored Day and Night, combined or separate, be manifest in bodily form, so that Mitra, Varuna, Indra, or (the latter), attended by the Maruths, may rejoice us by their glories.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk the goddesses called Uṣāsānaktā are praised. Although only the word उषसौ (uṣasau), referring to the goddess Uṣas, is here, since it is a dual word both the goddess Uṣas and the deity presiding over night are indicated.

उपाके—परस्परं संगते । (upāke—parasparaṃ saṃgate |): those mingled with one another; that is, since the time of dawn appears before the night has ended, night and Uṣas join together. Here the bhāṣyakāra has explained the word uṣasā as naktoṣasau, that is, night and day (rātryahanī), and in this Ṛk Mitra and Varuṇa, the presiding deities of day and night, are also praised. There is also a Śruti sentence that Mitra and Varuṇa are the presiding deities of day and night: मैत्रं वा अहः । वारुणी रात्रिः । (maitraṃ vā ahaḥ | vāruṇī rātriḥ |)

विरूपे (virūpe): Although these day and night join each other, their natures are different. Since at the end of the day there is night, and at the end of night the day, the two are as if related to each other. Since there is light in the day and the opposite, darkness, at night, these are of mutually different nature; therefore they are described by the word virūpe.

उषसौ (uṣasau): Since the dual is used in this Ṛk, it must be understood that two deities, Uṣāsānaktā or Naktoṣāsā, are indicated. Who are these deities called Naktoṣāsā, and what is their nature? It is necessary to examine such matters closely.

In this Ṛk the presiding deities of night and morning, called Naktoṣāsā, are invoked. Yāska's explanation of the word naktoṣāsā is as follows:

उषासानक्ता । उषासानक्तोषाश्च नक्ता चोषा व्याख्याता । नक्तेति रात्रिनामानक्ति भूतान्यवश्यायेनापि ना नक्ताव्यक्तवर्णा ॥ (uṣāsānaktā | uṣāsānakkoṣāśca naktā coṣā vyākhyātā | nakteti rātrināmānakti bhūtānyavaśyāyenāpi nā naktāvyaktavarṇā ॥)

p. 718

[Running head, p. 718: its running head is misspelled in the supplied text as "718 सायणभाव्यसहिता (sāyaṇabhāvyasahitā) [ मं (maṃ). ३. ७. ०. सू (sū). ४*." and was merged into the text of the previous page; it was separated by hand and p. 718 added to the page list.]*

Though read in two ways, naktoṣāsā and uṣāsānaktā, the meaning is one. The explanation of the word uṣāḥ has been given before. Naktā is a name of night. For naktā means avyaktavarṇā ("of indistinct colour"): because it is dark, things are indistinct, that is, not seen well. Therefore the night, accompanied by darkness, is called naktā, and at this time of night creatures are unable to carry on their respective activities.

अनक्ति क्लेदयति भूतानि अवश्यायेन । अपि वानक्ता अव्यक्तवर्णा । यथा आहः सर्वमभिव्यक्तरूपं भवति न तथा रात्रिः ॥ (anakti kledayati bhūtāni avaśyāyena | api vānaktā avyaktavarṇā | yathā āhaḥ sarvamabhivyaktarūpaṃ bhavati na tathā rātriḥ ‖)

Since darkness troubles creatures, leaving no room for their activities to be properly carried on, the night accompanied by such darkness is called naktā. Or, because it is indistinct, so that nothing is seen well, it is called naktā. In the day the forms of all things are clearly seen; at night they are not seen in that way. Therefore the time of night is called naktā; thus they have explained the meaning (Ni. 8-11).

They have said that the explanation of the meaning of the word uṣāḥ was given before. That explanation is as follows: the sixteen words such as vibhāvarī and sūnarī are names of Uṣas (2-19); and उषाः कस्मादुच्छतीति सत्या रात्रेरपरः कालः ॥ (uṣāḥ kasmāducchatīti satyā rātreraparaḥ kālaḥ ‖)

Because it removes the darkness of the night, it is called uṣāḥ; that is, it is the last time, the last part, of the night. To support this meaning they have given an example:

इदं श्रेष्ठं ज्योतिषां जोतिरागाच्चित्रः प्रकेतो अजनिष्ट विभ्वा । यथा प्रसूता सवितुः सवाय एवा रात्रुषसे योनिमारैक् ॥ (idaṃ śreṣṭhaṃ jyotiṣāṃ jotirāgāccitraḥ praketo ajaniṣṭa vibhvā | yathā prasūtā savituḥ savāya evā rātruṣase yonimāraik ‖) (printed पु (pu). सं (saṃ). 1-113-1)

The Nirukta on this Ṛk:

इदं श्रेष्ठं ज्योतिषां जोतिरागमत् । चित्रं प्रकेतनं प्रज्ञाततममजनिष्ट विभूततमं यथा प्रसूता सवितुः प्रसवाय रात्रिरादित्यस्य । एवं रात्र्युषसे योनिमरिचत् स्थानं । स्त्रीयोनिरभियुत एनां गर्भः ॥ (idaṃ śreṣṭhaṃ jyotiṣāṃ jotirāgamat | citraṃ praketanaṃ prajñātatamamajaniṣṭa vibhūtatamaṃ yathā prasūtā savituḥ prasavāya rātrirādityasya | evaṃ rātryuṣase yonimaricat sthānaṃ | strīyonirabhiyuta enāṃ garbhaḥ ‖) (printed सि (si). 2-19)

The best and most brilliant light of the Sun is rising. The time of Uṣas, which precedes such a light of the Sun, appears before the light like a banner (nikētana) of that radiance. Namely, as the Sun's light shines all day and at sunset becomes the womb (yoni), that is, the cause, of the night, so the night at its end becomes the womb of the time of Uṣas [continuing:] that is, the cause. Yoni means the place of birth. The chief purport is that at the end of the day the night, and at the end of the night the time of Uṣas, are reached one after the other as a change. Therefore uṣāḥ means the light, the brightness, that appears over all quarters after the night has passed, before sunrise.

The bhāṣyakāra's (Sāyaṇa's) explanation of the meaning:

नक्तशब्द उषश्यब्दश्च लोकेकालविशेषवाचिन् । इह तु तत्कालाभिमानिवहि मूर्तिद्वये प्रयुज्येते । नक्तोषासा नक्तोषोनामिकेवह्निमूर्ति (naktaśabda uṣaśyabdaśca loke kālaviśeṣavācin | iha tu tatkālābhimānivahi mūrtidvaye prayujyete | naktoṣāsā naktoṣonāmike vahnimūrti)

That is, to these two words nakta (night) and uṣaḥ (morning) there belongs, in worldly usage, the sense of indicating the special times, night and morning. Here, that is in this Ṛk or in the Ṛgveda, these words convey the sense of the presiding deities of night and morning. Therefore the words naktoṣāsā or uṣāsānaktā are used in the sense of two forms (mūrtis) of Agni, the presiding deities of the times of night and uṣas. The word सुपेशसा (supeśasā) (of good form or shape), used here and there, supports this meaning. For night and morning, being divisions of time, have neither form nor shape. If they are said to be the presiding deities of those times, a form can be assigned to those deities. Since such a statement is in this Ṛk, it must be understood that here the presiding deities of those times are what is propounded. The ṣa in the word naktoṣāsā is lengthened for the convenience of the metre.

The epithet ऋतस्य मातरा (ṛtasya mātarā) in the Ṛk Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-142-7 is very important.

द्रवतां त उषसा वाजयंती अग्ने वातस्य पथ्याभिरच्छ । यत्समंजंति पूर्व्यं हविर्भिरा वंधुरेव तस्थतुर्दुरोणे ॥ (dravatāṃ ta uṣasā vājayaṃtī agne vātasya pathyābhiraccha | yatsamaṃjaṃti pūrvyaṃ havirbhirā vaṃdhureva tasthaturduroṇe ‖) (printed मि (mi). सं (saṃ). 3-14-3)

In this Ṛk the constant relation between the sacrifice and them is described. In all the Ṛks that invoke them (there are about twenty such Ṛks) it is prayed that they come with the other gods and sit on the seat of sacred grass. Moreover, they have a very close relation with Agni, who is to blaze at the time of Uṣas and in the evening. Therefore they are figuratively described as holding Agni between them.

नक्तोषासा वर्णमामेम्याने धापयेते शिशुमेकं समीची । द्यावाक्षामा रुक्मो अंतर्वि भाति देवा अग्निं धारयन्द्रविणोदां ॥ (naktoṣāsā varṇamāmemyāne dhāpayete śiśumekaṃ samīcī | dyāvākṣāmā rukmo aṃtarvi bhāti devā agniṃ dhārayandraviṇodāṃ ‖) (printed ಮು. ಸಂ (saṃ). 1-96-5)

[The window ends here, at the end of p. 719, after this Ṛk and its reference; the next window continues.]

p. 720

[Running head, p. 720: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 4.]

[continuing:] In Ṛks such as this it is stated that they help Agni, who is in the form of a child, to drink the oblation. Because of this relation they are said to be the companions of the sacrificers. In general this matter is repeated in the Āprī sūktas too. For example:

आ सुष्वयंती यजते उपाकेउषासानक्ता सदतां नि योन् । दिव्ये योषणे बृहशी सुरुक्मे अधि श्रियं शुक्रपिशं दधाने ॥ (ā suṣvayaṃtī yajate upāke uṣāsānaktā sadatāṃ ni yon | divye yoṣaṇe bṛhaśī surukme adhi śriyaṃ śukrapiśaṃ dadhāne ‖) (printed ಮು. सं (saṃ). 10-110-6)

The same matter is stated in this Ṛk of an Āprī sūkta. From this it is understood that the deities Uṣāsānaktā are given not a secondary position in the sacrificial works but a very important one. This principal position is shown by

होता यक्षदुषासानक्ता बृहती सुपेशसा नृग् 8 पतिभ्यो योनिं कृष्णाने। सग्स् स्मयमाने इंद्रेण देवैरेदं बर्हिः सीदतां वीतमाज्यस्य होतरज ॥ (hotā yakṣaduṣāsānaktā bṛhatī supeśasā nṛg 8 patibhyo yoniṃ kṛṣṇāne| sags smayamāne iṃdreṇa devairedaṃ barhiḥ sīdatāṃ vītamājyasya hotaraja ‖) (printed त्रै (trai). ब्रा (brā). 3-6-2-1)

in this mantra of the Praiṣa sūkta, where there is the prayer that Uṣānaktā sit on the seat of sacred grass not merely with Agni but also with the other gods, Indra and the rest. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa they are addressed as ahorātre (day and night). The Nirukta author has explained the nature of these deities at 8-11. It was said before that the Nirukta author states the derivation of the two words uṣas and nakta and the nature of these deities. In the Bṛhaddevatā too they are described thus:

नक्तोषासौ च ये देव्यावाग्नेय्यावेव ते स्मृते । श्या व्याग्नेयी हि कालस्य तस्यैवोषाः कलेव तु ॥ (naktoṣāsau ca ye devyāvāgneyyāveva te smṛte | śyā vyāgneyī hi kālasya tasyaivoṣāḥ kaleva tu ‖) (printed बृ (bṛ). दे (de). 3-8)

It is well known that these two deities, Uṣas and Nakta, are related to Agni. Of these, Śyāvī (the night deity, 1-71-1) has a close relation with Agni, and from the Nirukta sentence उषः कस्मादुच्छतीति सत्या रात्रेरपरः कालः (uṣaḥ kasmāducchatīti satyā rātreraparaḥ kālaḥ) (Ni. 2-18) it is known that Uṣas is the last time of that night.

तम उच्छत्युषा नक्तानक्तीमां हिमबिंदुभिः । अपि वाव्यक्तवर्णेति नइद् पूर्वाचीरिदं भवेत् ॥ (tama ucchatyuṣā naktānaktīmāṃ himabiṃdubhiḥ | api vāvyaktavarṇeti naid pūrvāccīridaṃ bhavet ॥) (printed बृ (bṛ). दे (de). 3-9)

[Running head, p. 721: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 23, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

Of these two, Uṣas drives away the darkness. Night makes everything wet and pervaded with drops of dew. Or, since it has no definite colour, the root añj joined with the negative particle gives the meaning avyaktavarṇā ("of indistinct colour").

सा हि दोषा भवत्यादौ निशीथे सा तमस्वती । नाम्मा भवत्युषाश्चैव सैषा प्रागुदयाद्रवेः ॥ (sā hi doṣā bhavatyādau niśīthe sā tamasvatī | nāmmā bhavatyuṣāścaiva saiṣā prāgudayādraveḥ ॥) (printed बृ (bṛ). दे (de). 3-10)

At the beginning this deity is called doṣā, at midnight tamasvatī, and before sunrise uṣas. Doṣā, tamasvatī, śyāvī and naktā are all names of night, read in the Nighaṇṭu (Nighaṇṭu 1-7). In other places of the Ṛksaṃhitā, by epithets such as तंतुं ततं संवयंती (taṃtuṃ rataṃ saṃvayaṃtī) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 2-3-6) the help of Uṣāsānaktā in the extension of the sacrifice is explained.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Prathamā: the principal ones. Daivyā (printed दैन्व्या (dainvyā)): those of divine nature. Hotārā: Agnis in the form of hotṛs. Ny ṛñje: I adorn and worship. Ṛtaṃ: water. "Taṃsantaḥ" (so printed, for śaṃsantaḥ): those who desire. Pṛkṣāsaḥ: those having food. Sapta: the seven priests. Svadhayā: with the oblation in the form of Soma. Madanti: they gratify Agni. Vratapāḥ: those who protect the rites. Dīdhyānāḥ: those who make Agni shine. Te: the priests. Anuvrataṃ: in every performance of the rites. Ṛtam it: that Agni is endowed with water. Āhuḥ: they say.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

I adorn and worship the Agnis, principal among the gods, of divine nature and in the form of hotṛs. The seven priests, who desire water and have food, gratify Agni with the oblation in the form of Soma. The priests, who protect the rites and make Agni shine, proclaim in the time of every performance of the rites that Agni is endowed with water.

Printed English translation

I propitiate the two chief divine invocers of the gods: the seven offerers of (sacrificial) food, expectant of water, gratify (Agni) with oblations: the illustrious observers of sacred rites have saluted him in every ceremoney [sic] as (identifiable), verily, with water.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk the deities called दैव्या होतारौ (daivyā hotārau) are praised. For the words दैव्या होतारा (daivyā hotārā) the bhāṣyakāra has said आह्वातारावग्नी (āhvātārāvagnī), the two Agnis who invoke the gods. By the word hotārau two kinds of Agni are indicated: the Agni established on the sacrificial altar and the Agni in heaven.

सप्त पृक्षासः—पृक्षमन्नं तद्वंत ऋत्विजः । (sapta pṛkṣāsaḥ—pṛkṣamannaṃ tadvaṃta ṛtvijaḥ |) The word pṛkṣa is read among the names of food (Ni. 3-9). Here food means food in the form of oblation. The purport is the priests who have prepared the oblation for offering in Agni. The seven priests are the seven, Hotṛ, Maitrāvaruṇa, Brāhmaṇācchaṃsin, Potṛ, Neṣṭṛ, Acchāvāka and Āgnīdhra. An account of them and of the mantras they recite at the morning pressing and other rites has been given at length in the Special Topics of the fifth Ṛk of this sūkta.

[The window ends here, at the end of p. 722; the next window continues.]

p. 723

ऋतं शंसंतः (ṛtaṃ śaṃsaṃtaḥ): the word ṛta is read among the names of water (Ni. 2-24). The priests who desire water, that is, the priests who perform the sacrifice for the sake of rain and praise Agni; by performing the sacrifice rain comes, and in that sacrifice the priests praise Agni.

व्रतपाः दीध्यानाः (vratapāḥ dīdhyānāḥ): these words too are epithets of the priests. The word vrata has the meaning "rite". Those who keep the rite, that is, since they perform sacrifices and other rites duly, the priests are described by the word vratapāḥ. Dīdhyānāḥ: the purport is that by offering ghee and other oblations in Agni they make Agni blaze, that is, shine.

दैव्या होतारा— देवसंबंधिनौ होतारौ । आयं च मध्यमस्थानश्च इत्युभौ (daivyā hotārā—devasaṃbaṃdhinau hotārau | āyaṃ ca madhyamasthānaśca ityubhau): Sāyaṇa has explained these as the two forms of Agni, the divine hotṛs, the earthly Agni and the Agni in the atmosphere. Some modern scholars have given different meanings and shown difference of opinion among themselves. The scholar Geldner has taken them to be the sacrificing hotṛ and his fire, Haug the hotṛ and the adhvaryu, and Oldenberg the hotṛ and his assistant Maitrāvaruṇa. None of these is reasonable.

That the main duty of these hotṛs is to perform the sacrifice is stated in the Ṛks 1-13-8 and 1-188-7 by यज्ञं नो यक्षतामिमं । (yajñaṃ no yakṣatāmimaṃ |) and in the Ṛk 2-3-7 by देवान्यजंतावृतुथा । (devānyajaṃtāvṛtuthā |). This statement of duty applies to the human hotṛ, and Agni is addressed figuratively.

On the word दैन्व्या होतारा (dainvyā hotārā) (so printed) Yāska's explanation:

दैव्या होतारा दैव्या होतारावयं चाग्नि रसौ च मध्यमः ॥ (daivyā hotārā daivyā hotārāvayaṃ cāgni rasau ca madhyamaḥ ‖) (printed सि (si). 8-12; the supplied text had three Telugu letters in the reference, put into Kannada letters one for one)

That is, this word indicates Agni. As an example in this matter they have given that, since Agni invites the gods, Agni stands between the gods and men.

दैव्या होतारा प्रथमा सुवाचा मिमाना यज्ञं मनुषो यजध्यै । प्रचोदयंता विधथेषु कारू प्राचीनं ज्योतिः प्रदिशा दिशंता ॥ (daivyā hotārā prathamā suvācā mimānā yajñaṃ manuṣo yajadhyè | pracodayaṃtā vidhatheṣu kārū prācīnaṃ jyotiḥ pradiśā diśaṃtā ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-110-7)

Durgācārya's commentary on this:

यावेत् दैवौ होतारौ । देवेषु भवौ देव्यौ देवानेव दैवौ । स्वार्थे एव तद्धितः । मनुष्यहोतारौ अपेक्ष्य । दैवौ होतारौ होतृमैत्रावरुणौ इति विशेषणं । होतारा होतारौ आह्वातारौ देवानां वाय्वग्नी । प्रथमा प्रथमौ मुख्यौ मनुष्यहोतारावपेक्ष्य । सुवाचा सुवाचौ, प्रशस्तवाचौ, सुस्तुता । मिमाना यज्ञं यज्ञनिर्मातारौ नित्यं । मनुष्यः मनुष्यस्य यजध्यै यजनाय । प्रचोदयंता प्रचोदयमानौ । विदथेषु यज्ञेषु । कारू कर्तारौ । इत्यादि । (yāvet daivau hotārau | deveṣu bhavau devyau devāneva daivau | svārthe eva taddhitaḥ | manuṣyahotārau apekṣya | daivau hotārau hotṛmaitrāvaruṇau iti viśeṣaṇaṃ | hotārā hotārau āhvātārau devānāṃ

vāyvagnī | prathamā prathamau mukhyau manuṣyahotārāvapekṣya | suvācā suvācau, praśastavācau, sustutā | mimānā yajñaṃ yajñanirmātārau nityaṃ | manuṣyaḥ manuṣyasya yajadhyai yajanāya | pracodayaṃtā pracodayamānau | vidatheṣu yajñeṣu | kārū kartārau | ityādi |)

The chief purport of this: for the gods, Agni and Vāyu are the hotṛs, and for men the priests called Hotṛ and Maitrāvaruṇa are the hotṛs. Because Agni, or Agni and Vāyu, standing between the gods and men, create a relation between them, Agni is called the middle one (madhyama).

The name of the deities दैव्या होतारा (daivyā hotārā), apart from the Āprī sūktas, is read only in the two Ṛks

त्वष्टारं वायुमृभवो य ओहते दैव्या होतारा उषसं स्वस्तये । (tvaṣṭāraṃ vāyumṛbhavo ya ohate daivyā hotārā uṣasaṃ svastaye |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-65-10)

दैव्या होतारा प्रथमा पुरोहित ऋतस्य पंथामन्वेमि साधुया । (daivyā hotārā prathamā purohita ṛtasya paṃthāmanvemi sādhuyā |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-66-13)

In the Ṛk 7-2-7 they are called jātavedasā and in the Ṛk 10-70-7 purohitā. And since the words in the Ṛks quoted above, मिमाना यज्ञं मनुषो यजध्यै (mimānā yajñaṃ manuṣo yajadhyai) and प्रचोदयंता विदथेषु कारू (pracodayaṃtā vidatheṣu kārū), say that these deities carry out the sacrifices that men perform, it is natural that they are called purohitas. If among the gods the hotṛs are Agni and Vāyu, among men the Hotṛ and his assistant priest Maitrāvaruṇa are called hotṛs. This Maitrāvaruṇa directs the other priests, by Praiṣa mantras, to do their respective works. In the Yajurveda (Tai. Saṃ. 6-1-4-2) it is said: मैत्रावरुणो हि पुरस्तादृत्विग्भो वाचं विभजति (maitrāvaruṇo hi purastādṛtvigbho vācaṃ vibhajati).

Thus, although some epithets are common to the two hotṛs and point to the duty of the human hotṛ, still other epithets, though common to both, describe the duties of Agni, the divine hotṛ. For example:

[Running head, p. 725: Aṣṭaka 2 (printed "अ ८ (a 8)" without the period after ७ in Adhyāya), Adhyāya 8, Varga 23, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

दैव्या होतारा प्रथमा न्यृंजे सप्त पृक्षासः स्वधया मदंति । ऋतं शंसंत ऋतमित्त आहुरनु व्रतं व्रतपा दीध्यानाः ॥ (daivyā hotārā prathamā nyṛṃje sapta pṛkṣāsaḥ svadhayā madaṃti | ṛtaṃ śaṃsaṃta ṛtamitta āhuranu vrataṃ vratapā dīdhyānāḥ ‖) (printed ಮ. सं (saṃ). 3-4-7)

In this Ṛk there is no doubt that the epithet prathamā refers to Agni, the divine hotṛ. In 1-13-4, होता मनुर्हितः (hotā manurhitaḥ) is an epithet of Agni. The precise difference between these two hotṛs is stated in the Praiṣa sūkta thus:

होता यक्षद्दैव्या होतारा मंद्रा पोतारा कवी प्रचेतसा । स्विष्ट मद्यान्यः करदिषा स्वभिगूर्तमन्य ऊर्जा सतवसेमं यज्ञं दिवि देवेषु धत्तां वीशामाज्यस्य होतर्यज । (hotā yakṣaddaivyā hotārā maṃdrā potārā kavī pracetasā | sviṣṭa madyānyaḥ karadiṣā svabhigūrtamanya ūrjā satavasemaṃ yajñaṃ divi deveṣu dhattāṃ vīśāmājyasya hotaryaja |) (Tai. Brā. 3-6-2-2)

In this sentence it is suggested that one hotṛ should make the sacrifice acceptable with the oblation in the form of food, and the other should establish this sacrifice in heaven among the gods. This exchange of works shows the difference between the human hotṛ and Agni, the divine hotṛ. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa:

दैव्या होतारा यजति प्राणापानौ वै दैव्या होतारा प्राणापानावेव शत्र्णाति प्राणापानौ यजमाने दधाति । (daivyā hotārā yajati prāṇāpānau vai daivyā hotārā prāṇāpānāveva śatṛṇāti prāṇāpānau yajamāne dadhāti |) (printed ಇ. ब्रा (brā). 2-4)

Having stated the identity of these hotṛs with prāṇa and apāna, it says that the one who recites this mantra secures for the sacrificer the good state of prāṇa and apāna. In the Nirukta:

दैव्या होतारा दैव्या होतारावयं जाग्निरसौ च मध्यमः । (daivyā hotārā daivyā hotārāvayaṃ jāgnirasau ca madhyamaḥ |) (printed सि (si). 8-12)

By these authoritative sentences supporting Sāyaṇa's meaning, it says they are the earthly Agni and the Agni of the atmosphere. In the Bṛhaddevatā too, approving the same view:

दैव्याविति तु होतारावग्नी पार्थिवमध्यमौ । दिव्यादग्नीर्हि बज्ञाते दैव्या तेनेह जन्मना ॥ (daivyāviti tu hotārāvagnī pārthivamadhyamau | divyādagnīrhi bajñāte daivyā teneha janmanā ‖) (Bṛ. De. 3-11)

It says that these two hotṛs are the earthly Agni and the Agni of the middle region (the atmosphere).

Printed English translation

May Bharati, associated with the Bharatis; Ila with the gods and men; and Agni; and Saraswati with the Saraswatas; may the three goddesses sit down upon the sacred grass (strewn) before them.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk there is a prayer to the three goddesses Iḷā, Sarasvatī and Bhāratī. In the Āprī sūktas it is the usual custom to call them in general तिस्रो देव्यः (tisro devyaḥ), "the three goddesses".

भारतीभिः—भरतस्य सूर्यस्य संबंधिनीभिः । (bhāratībhiḥ—bharatasya sūryasya saṃbaṃdhinībhiḥ |) Taking bharata to mean the Sun, the bhāṣyakāra explains bhāratībhiḥ as the Bhāratī-speech related to the Sun. Who this goddess Bhāratī is, is explained at the end of this discussion. Here the three goddesses are explained by assigning to them the places heaven, earth and atmosphere. Since Bhāratī belongs to the Sun in heaven, she comes to be in heaven. Since the goddess Iḷā is connected with men (manuṣyaḥ) (the word iḷā is read among the names of the earth), she comes to be a goddess of the earth-place. Sarasvatī comes to be a goddess of the atmosphere, that is, of the middle place. It is prayed that these three goddesses come to our sacrificial ground and sit upon the sacred grass called barhis spread as a seat.

Agniḥ: why in this Ṛk Agni is prayed to come with Iḷā, Sarasvatī and Bhāratī is not clear. In the other Āprī sūktas there is no invitation to Agni with the three goddesses. Since there is a difference of opinion that all these deities of the Āprī sūktas are transformations of Agni, perhaps Agni has been praised in this Ṛk directly by the word Agni.

In this Ṛk a group of three deities is addressed and prayed to honour the sacrifice. Except this sūkta and sūkta 1-142, in all the other Āprī sūktas too these deities are put together and indicated collectively as तिस्रो देवीः (tisro devīḥ). Iḷā, Sarasvatī and Bhāratī are these three. There is much difference of opinion about the nature of these deities. In 1-142 the goddess Bhāratī has the epithets hotrā, śuciḥ, (marutsu, deveṣu) arpitā, and the goddess Sarasvatī the epithet mahī. In some sūktas the word mahī, as an epithet, is used as a synonym of the goddess Bhāratī

[Running head, p. 728: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, Ā. (printed so for A.) 1, Sū. 4.]

[continuing:] In the present context, whether the nature of these deities can be precisely known can be examined on the authority of Śruti and similar sentences.

On the matter of तिस्रो देवीः (tisro devīḥ) (the supplied text has the garbled form किस्रो देवी8 (kisro devī8)) Yāska says only

शिस्त्रो देवीः । शिस्त्रोदेवीस्तिस्रो देव्यः ॥ (śistro dèvīḥ | śistrodevīstisro devyaḥ ||)

(the letters are as supplied), and in the Ṛk he gives as an example (printed "मक्किनल्लि (makkinalli)"):

आ नो यज्ञं भारती तूयमेत्विळा मनुष्वदिह चेतयंती । तिस्रो देवीर्बर्हिरेदं स्कोनं सरस्वती स्वपसः सदंतु ॥ (ā no yajñaṃ bhāratī tūyametviḷā manuṣvadiha cetayaṃtī | tisro devīrbarhiredaṃ skonaṃ sarasvatī svapasaḥ sadaṃtu ‖) (printed ಮು. ಸಂ (saṃ). 10-110-8)

He explains it as follows:

ऐतु नो यज्ञं भारती क्षिप्रं । भरत आदित्यस्तस्य भा इळा च मनुष्पदिह चेतयमाना तिस्रो देव्यो बर्हिरिदं सुखं सरस्वती च सुकर्माण आसीदंतु ॥ (aitu no yajñaṃ bhāratī kṣipraṃ | bharata ādityastasya bhā iḷā ca manuṣpadiha cetayamānā tisro devyo barhiridaṃ sukhaṃ sarasvatī ca sukarmāṇa āsīdaṃtu ‖) (Ni. 8-13)

That is: Bhāratī: Bharata is one of the twelve Ādityas. The radiance of the Āditya is called bhā. Therefore Bhāratī means the radiance of the Sun, or Agni in the form of light in the orb of the Sun. Iḷā: Iḷā means the earth. मनुष्वत् चेतयंती (manuṣvat cetayaṃtī): having the power to impel like men; that is, because she gives men on the earth food and other meals, wealth and the like, Iḷā is a special form of Agni in the earth-place. Sarasvatī: since she is the presiding deity of the thunder and lightning of the atmosphere, Sarasvatī is also said to be of the nature of Agni in the atmosphere. Therefore there is the custom of calling the three goddesses Iḷā, Sarasvatī and Bhāratī the three forms of Agni, in heaven, in the atmosphere and on the earth.

In the Praiṣa sūkta, which collects the chief points of the Āprī sūktas, the mantra that indicates these deities is examined (the supplied text has "प्रैवसूक्तदल्लि (praivasūktadalli)", as supplied):

होतायक्षत्तिस्रो देवीरपसामपस्तमा अच्छिद्रमद्ये दमपस्तन्वतां । देवेभ्यो देवीर्देवमपो वियंत्वाजस्य होतर्यज ॥ (hotāyakṣattisro devīrapasāmapastamā acchidramadye damapastanvatāṃ | devebhyo devīrdevamapo viyaṃtvājasya hotaryaja ‖) (printed ತೈ (tai). ಬ್ರಾ (brā). 3-6-2-2)

In the text itself there is only तिस्रो देवीः (tisro devīḥ). Explaining it in the bhāṣya: सरस्वती, भारतीत्येवंरूपास्ति स्रोऽष्टमप्रयाजदेव्यस्तद्रूपमग्निं दैवो होता (sarasvatī, bhāratītyevaṃrūpāsti sroSṣṭamaprayājadevyastadrūpamagniṃ daivo hotā) (preceded by the word Iḍā, as supplied)

यजतु । (yajatu |) It says that the three eighth-prayāja deities, Iḍā, Sarasvatī and Bhāratī, are deities that reflect Agni. Further, the epithet अपसां अपस्तमाः । कर्मवतीनां मध्येऽतिशयेन कर्मवत्यः । (apasāṃ apastamāḥ | karmavatīnāṃ madhye 'tiśayena karmavatyaḥ |) makes known that they are the most excellent among the active ones. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa:

तिस्रो देवीर्यजति प्राणो वा अपानो व्यानस्तिस्रो देव्यस्ता एव तत्प्रीणाति ता यजमाने दधाति । (tisro devīryajati prāṇo vā apāno vyānastisro devyastā eva tatprīṇāti tā yajamāne dadhāti |) (printed ३. ब्रा (brā). 2-4)

Thus it states the identity of these three goddesses with the vital principles prāṇa, apāna and vyāna. The Nirukta author, quoting the Ṛk 10-110-8, आ नो यज्ञं (ā no yajñaṃ), gives this explanation of it:

ऐतु नो यज्ञं भारती क्षिप्रं । भरत आदित्यस्तस्य भा इळा च मनुष्यवदिह चेतयमाना तिस्रो देव्याः बर्हिरिदं सुखं सरस्वती च सुकर्माण आसीदंतु । (aitu no yajñaṃ bhāratī kṣipraṃ | bharata ādityastasya bhā iḷā ca manuṣyavadiha cetayamānā tisro devyāḥ barhiridaṃ sukhaṃ sarasvatī ca sukarmāṇa āsīdaṃtu |) (Ni. 8-13)

May the goddess who is the radiance of Bharata (the Sun), Iḷā, and Sarasvatī adorn the barhis. In the Bṛhaddevatā:

तिस्रस्तु देव्यो याः प्रोक्तास्त्रिस्थानैवेह सा तु वाक् । त्रिविधेनोच्यते नाम्ना ज्योतिषु त्रिषु वर्तिनी ॥ अग्निमेवानुगेळा तु मध्यं प्राप्ता सरस्वती । अमू स्थिताधि लोकं तु भारती भवति ह्यसौ ॥ सैषा तु त्रिविधा वाग्वै दिवि च व्योम्नि चेह च । व्यस्ता चैव समस्ता च भजत्यग्नीनिमानपि ॥ (tisrastu devyo yāḥ proktāstristhānaiveha sā tu vāk | trividhenocyate nāmnā jyotiṣu triṣu vartinī ‖ agnimevānugeḷā tu madhyaṃ prāptā sarasvatī | amū sthitādhi lokaṃ tu bhāratī bhavati hyasau ‖ saiṣā tu trividhā vāgvai divi ca vyommi ceha ca | vyastā caiva samastā ca bhajatyagnīnimānapi ‖) (Bṛ. De. 3-12 to 14)

"The three goddesses" means the presiding deities of speech in all three worlds. (The three forms of speech are explained in the verses 2-72 to 82 of the Bṛhaddevatā, Bṛ. De. 2-72 to 82.)

अयं प्रयोगस्वेतेषां ज्योतिषां त्रिषु वर्ततां । (ayaṃ prayogasveteṣāṃ jyotiṣāṃ triṣu vartatāṃ |) (Bṛ. De. 1-90)

As this says, the different deities in the three worlds are transformations of one presiding deity of speech. Of these, Iḷā followed the earthly Agni, Sarasvatī traversed the middle world, and Bhāratī came to be in the heaven-world. Still,

देव्यस्ति स्रः श्रिताश्चैनं त्वष्टा चैवैतदाश्रयः । (devyasti sraḥ śritāścainaṃ tvaṣṭā caivaitadāśrayaḥ |) (Bṛ. De. 1-108)

[The window ends here, at the end of p. 729, after this quotation and its reference; the next window continues.]

p. 730

[Running head, p. 730: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 4.]

[continuing:] As said in this sentence, the deities of these three worlds too serve the earthly Agni alone, so everything is concluded at the end in favour of Agni.

इळा सरस्वती मही तिस्रो देवीर्मयोभुवः । बर्हिः सीदंत्वस्रिधः ॥ (iḷā sarasvatī mahī tisro devīrmayobhuvaḥ | barhiḥ sīdaṃtvasridhaḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-13-9)

In this Ṛk, and in the Ṛk 5-5-8, which has the same order, since there is no mention of Bhāratī, Sāyaṇa has said that mahī is a synonym of the goddess Bhāratī. In the Ṛk 1-188-8 and in

भारती पवमानस्य सरस्वतीळा मही । इमं नो यज्ञमा गमनिस्स्रो देवीः सुपेशसः ॥ (bhāratī pavamānasya sarasvatīḷā mahī | imaṃ no yajñamā gamanissro devīḥ supeśasaḥ ‖)

(printed "मक्कळल्लि (makkaḷalli)", for Ṛk, as supplied) too it is an epithet. (Ṛ. Saṃ. 9-5-8)

Iḷā: since the Bṛhaddevatā says अग्निमेवानुरागेळा (agnimevānurāgeḷā) (3-13), "Iḷā followed the earthly Agni", and since in the Ṛk

प्र दीधितिर्विश्ववारा जिगाति होतारमिळः प्रथमं यजध्यै । अच्छा नमोभिर्वृषभं वंदध्यै स देवान्यक्षदिषितो यजीयान् .। (pra dīdhitirviśvavārā jigāti hotāramiḷaḥ prathamaṃ yajadhyai | acchā namobhirvṛṣabhaṃ vaṃdadhyai sa devānyakṣadiṣito yajīyān .|) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-4-3)

the word iḷaḥ is explained as food in the form of oblation, and since in the Ṛk 7-16-8 there is the epithet dhṛtahastā and in 10-20-8 the epithet dhṛtapadī, it seems that iḷā can be explained as oblation. Probably for this reason, in

उत्तानायामव भरा चिकित्वान्तस्यद्यः प्रवीता वृषणं जजान । अरुषस्तूपो रुशदस्य पाज इळायास्पुत्रो वयुनेऽजनिष्ट ॥ (uttānāyāmava bharā cikitvāntasyadyaḥ pravītā vṛṣaṇaṃ jajāna | aruṣastūpo ruśadasya pāja iḷāyāsputro vayune 'janiṣṭa ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-29-3)

in this Ṛk he is called the son of Iḷā.

Bhāratī: in the Nirukta it is said to be the radiance of the Āditya (bharata is the Āditya, his bhā). The scholar Macdonell, in his Vedic Mythology (P. 87), explained it as oblation offered by the family of Bharata, and Grassmann as the goddess of speech. Or it may be explained as related to Agni.

p. 731

[Running head, p. 731: Ā. (printed so for A.) 2, A. 8, Varga 23, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

तस्मा अग्निर्भारतः शर्म यंसज्योक्षश्यात्सूर्यमुच्चरंतं । य इंद्राय सुनवामेत्याह नरे नर्याय नृतमाय नृणां ॥ (tasmā agnirbhārataḥ śarma yaṃsajyokṣaśyātsūryamuccaraṃtaṃ | ya iṃdrāya sunavāmetyāha nare naryāya nṛtamāya nṛṇāṃ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 4-25-4)

Since in this Ṛk bhārataḥ is an epithet of Agni, the goddess related to him may be named Bhāratī: this is the view of some others.

Sarasvatī: सर इत्युदकनाम । तद्वतीस्तनितादिरूपा माध्यमिका च वाक् । (sara ityudakanāma | tadvatīstanitādirūpā mādhyamikā ca vāk |) The word sara means water. Sāyaṇa has explained her as a transformation of the goddess of speech of the atmosphere, who has water and has sounds such as thunder. According to some, Sarasvatī is a river with divine nature. Or, since it is said देव्यस्ति स्रः श्रिताश्चनं (devyasti sraḥ śritāścanaṃ) (Bṛ. De. 1-108) that these three have taken refuge in Agni, and since Agni is in three forms in the earth, the atmosphere and the heaven-world, and since Bhāratī is said to be the radiance of the Sun, and Sarasvatī to be the deity of thunder and lightning, and Iḷā too has a direct relation with Agni, it is the opinion of some that all three are transformations of Agni. In the explanation of the Praiṣa sūkta the expression तद्रूपमग्निं (tadrūpamagniṃ) has been mentioned above.

Since Sarasvatī is described in many places as the presiding deity of thunder and lightning, this Sarasvatī is a form of Agni in the atmosphere. Since the goddess Iḷā gives the people on the earth wealth and the like and long life, this deity is a form of Agni on the earth. This is the indication of Iḷā, Sarasvatī and Bhāratī. The seers have praised that these three deities should come to the sacrificial altar and sit upon the spread sacred grass (barhis). We give some examples where the seers, taking Sarasvatī to be a deity other than the river, have praised her.

[The next two lines are each printed with a stray "1." before the numbering "(1)" and "(4)"; kept as supplied.]

In this Ṛk Sarasvatī is the goddess of speech, or the presiding deity of thunder and lightning.

1. आ नो दिवो बृहतः पर्वतादा सरस्वती यजता गंतु यज्ञं । (ā no divo bṛhataḥ parvatādā sarasvatī yajatā gaṃtu yajñaṃ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-43-11)

2. उभा नासत्या रुद्रो अध ग्नाः पूषा भगः सरस्वती जुषंत । (ubhā nāsatyā rudro adha gnāḥ pūṣā bhagaḥ sarasvatī juṣaṃta |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 5-46-2)

In all three Ṛks Sarasvatī is the presiding deity of thunder and lightning. Griffith holds that in the first of these three Ṛks Sarasvatī is some river, either the Sindhu or the Sarasvatī, and in the Ṛks the second and third (printed "२-३ नेय (2-3 nèya)") she is shown as a goddess. K. C. Chattopadhyaya says that the first and second Ṛks (printed "१-२ नेय (1-2 nèya)") apply to the river Sindhu. These three Ṛks were all uttered by descendants of the seer Atri. The seer of the first Ṛk is Atri, or Bhauma, the son of Atri; of the second Atri; of the third Pratikṣatra, a descendant of Atri. In the second Ṛk Sarasvatī is invoked from heaven (divaḥ) and from the cloud-region (parvatāt ā). Since the word patniḥ occurs in the first Ṛk, the bhāṣyakāra takes Sarasvatī and the other rivers to be wives of Indra.

1. अग्निरिंद्रो वरुणो मित्रो आर्यमा वायुः पूषा सरस्वती सजोषसः। (agniriṃdro varuṇo mitro āryamā vāyuḥ pūṣā sarasvatī sajoṣasaḥ|) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-65-1)

2. विश्वे देवासः शृणवन् वचांसि मे सरस्वती सह धीभिः पुरंध्या । (viśve devāsaḥ śṛṇavan vacāṃsi me sarasvatī saha dhībhiḥ puraṃdhyā |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-65-13)

In both these Ṛks Sarasvatī is the goddess of speech.

1. यत्सुरामं व्यपिबः शचीभिः सरस्वती त्वा मघवन्नभिष्टुक् । (yatsurāmaṃ vyapibaḥ śacībhiḥ sarasvatī tvā maghavannabhiṣṭuk |) (printed Ṛ Saṃ. 10-131-5)

In this Ṛk, since Sarasvatī is said to be with Indra, one may take her to be the presiding deity of thunder and lightning.

1. गर्भं धेहि सिनीवालि गर्भं धेहि सरस्वति । (garbhaṃ dhehi sinīvāli garbhaṃ dhehi sarasvati |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-184-2)

Here it is proper to call Sarasvatī the goddess of speech.

Printed English translation

Divine Twashtri, being well pleased, give issue to our procreative vigour, whence (a son), manly, devout, vigorous, wielder of the (Soma-bruising) stone, and reverencing the gods, may be born.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk the deity called Tvaṣṭṛ is praised and it is prayed that a worthy son be granted. The bhāṣyakāra has explained the word tvaṣṭā here as "creator". It is said in many places that the deity Tvaṣṭṛ is the lord of forms: त्वष्टा रूपाणि हि प्रभुः (tvaṣṭā rūpāṇi hi prabhuḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-188-9), त्वष्टा रूपाणि पिंशतु (tvaṣṭā rūpāṇi piṃśatu) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-184-1), त्वष्टा रूपाणामधिपतिः (tvaṣṭā rūpāṇāmadhipatiḥ) (Tai. Saṃ. 3-4-5-1). As stated in such places, Tvaṣṭṛ is said to make forms for the seed poured into the womb of a woman.

कर्मण्यः—कर्मसु कुशलः । (karmaṇyaḥ—karmasu kuśalaḥ |) The words karmaṇyaḥ, devakāmaḥ, yuktagrāvā and sudakṣaḥ tell what kind of son Tvaṣṭṛ should grant. Karmaṇyaḥ means a son skilled in rites such as sacrifices, or in arts and crafts. Since Tvaṣṭṛ is said to be the divine craftsman, expert in the arts and sciences, and the maker of the camasa and other implements of sacrifice for the gods, it is natural to pray to him to grant a son skilled in the arts and sciences. The Ṛbhus, as his disciples, became expert in all the arts through his instruction, accomplished great works and even obtained divinity, as is said in many places in the Ṛgveda. Therefore this deity is able to grant skill in the arts.

Sudakṣaḥ: one able in all the arts, able in sacrifices and other rites and in other worldly works; this is the purport.

Yuktagrāvā, devakāmaḥ: devakāmaḥ means one who desires to praise the gods; that is, since he wishes for the fruit in the form of the gods' grace by performing sacrifices and praising the gods, he is explained by the word devakāma as one who desires the gods. The word yuktagrāvā too indicates interest in sacrificial work. The meaning of this word is one who holds in his hand a stone to crush the Soma plants and press the Soma juice in the sacrifice. Therefore the two words yuktagrāvā and devakāmaḥ indicate the qualities a son should have: interest in sacrifice, praising and invoking the gods, and so on.

Vīraḥ: a valiant one; one who advances in battle and defeats enemies with courage. In this connection one matter deserves consideration. When the sacrificer who performs the sacrifice prays for sons and the like, it is commonly seen in the Ṛgveda that the gods are praised to grant valiant sons. In that age the Āryas often had to fight the Dasyus, the earlier inhabitants of this country who obstructed sacrifices and the like; so it is natural to pray for valiant sons who fight bravely in battle and conquer enemies. Therefore it is seen here and there that the seers, beginning with बृहद्वदेम विदथे सुवीराः (bṛhadvadema vidathe suvīrāḥ), praised desiring valiant sons.

Kṛṣṇā (so printed, कृष्णा (kṛṣṇā); the word expected is tvaṣṭā): Yāska's explanation:

त्वष्टा । त्वष्टा तूर्णमश्नुत इति नैरुक्ताः । त्विषेर्वा स्याद्दीप्तिकर्मणस्वक्षतेर्वा स्यात्करोतिकर्मणः ॥ माध्यमिकस्त्वष्टेत्याहुर्मध्यमे च स्थाने समाम्नातः । अग्निरिति शाकपूणिः ॥ (tvaṣṭā | tvaṣṭā tūrṇamaśnuta iti nairuktāḥ | tviṣervā syāddīptikarmaṇasvakṣatervā syātkarotikarmaṇaḥ ‖ mādhyamikastvaṣṭetyāhurmadhyame ca sthāne samāmnātaḥ | agniriti śākapūṇiḥ ‖) (Ni. 8-14)

That is, for the word tvaṣṭā the Nirukta authors say "one who pervades quickly", or "one who is shining", or "one who does works (craftsman's works)"; some say he is mādhyamika, that is, one who is in the middle of heaven and earth (in the atmosphere). Śākapūṇi says he is Agni.

Some say that Tvaṣṭṛ, like Viśvakarman, is the craftsman of the gods. For in the Ṛk Yāska gave as an example it is said that Tvaṣṭṛ is the maker of heaven and earth and the cause of form, beauty, growth and so on suited to the creatures in all worlds. Besides, Śruti (Yajurveda) sentences such as त्वष्टा वै पशूनां मिथुनानां रूपकृत् (tvaṣṭā vai paśūnāṃ mithunānāṃ rūpakṛt) (Tai. Saṃ.

य इमे द्यावापृथवी जनित्री रूपैरपिंशद्भुतवनानि विश्वा । तमद्य होतरिषितो यजीयान् देवं तृष्णारमिह यक्षि विद्वान् ॥ (ya ime dyāvāpṛthavī janitrī rūpairapiṃśadbhutavanāni viśvā | tamadya hotariṣito yajīyān devaṃ tṛṣṇāramiha yakṣi vidvān ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-110-9)

6-1-8-5), तष्टा रूपाणामधिपतिः (taṣṭā rūpāṇāmadhipatiḥ) (Tai. Saṃ. 3-4-5 1, as printed; तष्टा (taṣṭā) so printed) and त्वष्टा रूपाणि विकरोति (tvaṣṭā rūpāṇi vikaroti) establish Tvaṣṭṛ's skill in making things. And

मध्यं त्वष्टा वज्रमतक्षदायसं मयि देवासोऽवृजन्नपि क्रतुं ॥ (madhyaṃ tvaṣṭā vajramatakṣadāyasaṃ mayi devāso 'vṛjannapi kratuṃ ‖) (printed ऋ. सं (saṃ). 10-48-3)

[The window ends here, at the end of p. 735, after this quotation and its reference; the next window continues.]

p. 736

[Running head, p. 736: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, Ā. (printed so for A.) 1, Sū. 4.]

[continuing:] Indra says that Kṛṣṇa (so printed, for Tvaṣṭṛ) made for him a thunderbolt of iron. It is said in many mantras of the Ṛgveda that he made the sacrificial implements needed by the gods and many other things. It is well known that Tvaṣṭṛ is one of the twelve Ādityas; therefore Yāska has explained him as "shining". Among the Śruti sentences that state individual opinions about the deity Tvaṣṭṛ, those cited below indicate only the deity belonging to the Āprī sūkta.

होतायक्षत्त्वष्टारमचिष्टुमपाकगं् रेतोधां विश्रवसं यशोधां । पुरुरूपमकामकर्शनगं् सुपोषः पोपैः स्यात्सुवीरो वीरैर्वेत्वाज्यस्य होतर्यज ॥ (hotāyakṣattvaṣṭāramaciṣṭumapākagṃ retodhāṃ viśravasaṃ yaśodhāṃ | pururūpamakāmakarśanagṃ supoṣaḥ popaiḥ syātsuvīro vīrairvetvājyasya hotaryaja ‖) (printed तै (tai). ब्र (bra). 3-6-2-2)

In this mantra there are the epithets अचिष्टुं (aciṣṭuṃ), अपाकं (apākaṃ), रेतोधां (retodhāṃ), विश्रवसं (viśravasaṃ), यशोधां (yaśodhāṃ), पुरुरूपं (pururūpaṃ) and अकामकर्शनं (akāmakarśanaṃ). Of these:

Acciṣṭuṃ: चेष्टनरहितं, चांचल्यरहितं, स्थिरं (ceṣṭanarahitaṃ, cāṃcalyarahitaṃ, sthiraṃ), that is, one who is steady, without restlessness;

Apākaṃ: अजालं, प्राज्ञं । (ajālaṃ, prājñaṃ |), that is, not a child but a wise one;

Retodhāṃ: पुत्रादिबीजस्य यजमाने धारयितारं । (putrādibījasya yajamāne dhārayitāraṃ |), that is, one who sows the seed of sons and so on in the sacrificer;

Viśravasaṃ: विविधकीर्तियुक्तं । (vividhakīrtiyuktaṃ |), that is, one endowed with many kinds of fame;

Yaśodhāṃ: यजमाने यशसः धारयितारं । (yajamāne yaśasaḥ dhārayitāraṃ |), that is, one who makes the sacrificer a sharer in fame;

Pururūpaṃ: बहुरूपं (bahurūpaṃ), that is, one with many kinds of forms;

Akāmakarśanaṃ (printed in the explanation as अकामकर्तनं (akāmakartanaṃ)): कामानां अनाशयितारं । (kāmānāṃ anāśayitāraṃ |), that is, one who makes the sacrificer's desired aims fruitful. It is thus explained.

These epithets show Tvaṣṭṛ's individual nature. The Nirukta authors, showing the derivation of the word tvaṣṭṛ (8-14), say that the name arises from pervading swiftly, according to the Nirukta authors, and

त्वष्टा तूर्णमश्नुत इति नैरुक्ताः । त्विषेर्वा स्याद्दीप्तिकर्मणस्त्वक्षतेर्वा स्यात् करोतिकर्मणः । (tvaṣṭā tūrṇamaśnuta iti nairuktāḥ | tviṣervā syāddīptikarmaṇastvakṣatervā syāt karotikarmaṇaḥ |)

p. 737

[Running head, p. 737: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 23, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

[continuing:] it may be formed also from the root tviṣ with the sense "to shine", or from the root tvakṣ with the sense of doing. By these derivations it is understood that Tvaṣṭṛ is one who pervades swiftly, one who shines, and a maker. To show to which world this deity belongs they state माध्यमिकस्त्वष्टेत्याहुर्मध्यमे च स्थाने समाम्नातः । अग्निरिति शाकपूणिः । (mādhyamikastvaṣṭetyāhurmadhyame ca sthāne samāmnātaḥ | agniriti śākapūṇiḥ |), that some hold him to belong to the group of deities of the atmosphere, and Śākapūṇi that he is Agni. In the Bṛhaddevatā, approving the first view:

त्वष्टा रूपविकर्ता च योऽसौ माध्यमिकेगणे । स्तुतः स च निपातेन सूक्तं तस्य न विद्यते । (tvaṣṭā rūpavikartā ca yo 'sau mādhyamike gaṇe | stutaḥ sa ca nipātena sūktaṃ tasya na vidyate |) (printed बृ (bṛ). दे (de). 3-25)

in this verse it says he belongs to the group of deities of the middle world. Before this:

त्वष्टा तु यस्त्वयमेव पार्थिवोग्निरिति स्तुतिः । पार्थिवस्यास्य वर्चः स्युः कस्याप्यक् चार्तवेषु च ॥ त्वषितस्त्वक्षतेर्वा स्यात् तूर्णमश्नुत एव ना । कर्मसूत्तारणो वेति तेन नामैतदश्नुते ॥ यः सहस्रतमो रश्मी रवेश्चंद्रमुपाश्रितः । सोऽपि त्वष्टारमेवाग्निं परं चेह च यन्मधु ॥ (tvaṣṭā tu yastvayameva pārthivogniriti stutiḥ | pārthivasyāsya varcaḥ syuḥ kasyāpyak cārtaveṣu ca ‖ tvaṣitastvakṣatervā syāt tūrṇamaśnuta eva nā | karmasūttāraṇo veti tena nāmaitadaśnute ‖ yaḥ sahasratamo raśmī raveścaṃdramupāśritaḥ | so 'pi tvaṣṭāramevāgniṃ paraṃ ceha ca yanmadhu ‖) (Bṛ. De. 3-15 to 17)

There are also suggestions in some places that the praise which belongs to the earthly Agni is addressed to Tvaṣṭṛ as a deity connected with the earth. In the sūktas concerned with the seasons too he is described as a part of Agni. Then the Bṛhaddevatā states the very derivation of the word tvaṣṭṛ given in the Nirukta. It also describes that the thousandth ray of the Sun, pervaded by the moon, pervades in honey, in the other world and on the earth, and likewise is in Tvaṣṭṛ. Chiefly the Bṛhaddevatā authors approve in this matter the opinion of Śākapūṇi stated in the Nirukta. In the Nighaṇṭu Tvaṣṭṛ is placed first with the Āprī deities (5-2), then with the deities of the atmosphere (5-5), and first among the deities of the heaven-world (5-6).

The story of Tvaṣṭṛ and the seer Dadhīci has been told in the Special Topics of the sūkta 1-139. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa:

त्वष्टारं यजति वाग्वै त्वष्टा वाग्फिदं सर्वं । त्वाष्ट्रिं वाचमेव शत्रीणाति वाचं यजमाने दधाति । (tvaṣṭāraṃ yajati vāgvai tvaṣṭā vāgphidaṃ sarvaṃ | tvāṣṭriṃ vācameva śatrīṇāti vācaṃ yajamāne dadhāti |) (printed ७. ब्रा (brā). 2-4)

[Footnote artefact: in front of the next line the supplied text had the markdown marker "[^1]:", which was removed in kn.md.]

By this sentence the identity of Tvaṣṭṛ with speech (vāc) is stated; this is another opinion.

[Stray line as supplied at the foot of p. 737: "47", kept as a note in kn.md.]

p. 738

य इमे द्यावापृथिवी जनित्री रूपैरपिंशद्भवनानि विश्वा । तमद्य होतरिषितो यजीयान् देवं त्वष्टारमिह यक्षि विद्वान् । (ya ime dyāvāpṛthivī janitrī rūpairapiṃśadbhavanāni viśvā | tamadya hotariṣito yajīyān devaṃ tvaṣṭāramiha yakṣi vidvān |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-110-9)

In this Ṛk it is praised that this deity has a divine birth, and that therefore he shows his antiquity (prāktanatva) even at the times of creation. The purport is that Tvaṣṭṛ is extremely ancient.

इह त्वष्टारमग्रियं विश्वरूपमुपह्वये । अस्माकमस्तु केवलः ॥ (iha tvaṣṭāramagriyaṃ viśvarūpamupahvaye | asmākamastu kevalaḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-13-10)

In such Ṛks it is understood from the epithets agriya and agraja.

त्वष्टा रूपाणि हि प्रभुः पशून्विश्वान्स्मानजे । तेषां नः स्नातिमा यज । (tvaṣṭā rūpāṇi hi prabhuḥ paśūnviśvānsmānaje | teṣāṃ naḥ snātimā yaja |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-188-9)

त्वष्टा रूपाणि विकरोति । (tvaṣṭā rūpāṇi vikaroti |) (Tai. Saṃ. 1-5-9-2)

Such sentences praise Tvaṣṭṛ's work of making. Moreover he has the epithet viśvarūpa (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-13-10).

Printed English translation

Vanaspati, bring the gods nigh : may Agni, the immolator, prepare the victim : let him who is truth officiate as the ministering priest, for, verily, he knows the birth of the gods.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Śamitā: śamitā means one who cuts or kills the victim in the sacrifice. पशुं शमयति इति शमिता (paśuṃ śamayati iti śamitā): one who calms or cuts the victim in the sacrifice, that is, one who, calming the victim's outward movements, slays it. Among the gods, the one who does this work is called adhrigu. That the word adhrigu has, besides various meanings, also the sense of a priest named śamitā, Yāska

अध्रिगुर्मन्त्रो भवति गव्यधिकृतत्वादपि वा प्रशासनमेवाभिप्रेतं स्यात्तच्छब्दवत्त्वादध्रिगो शमीध्वं सुशमि शमीध्वं शमीध्वमध्रिगविति । अग्निरप्यध्रिगुरुच्यते । (adhrigurmaṃtro bhavati gavyadhikṛtatvādapi vā praśāsanamevābhipretaṃ syāttacchabdavattvādadhrigo śamīdhvaṃ suśami śamīdhvaṃ śamīdhvamadhrigaviti | agnirapyadhrigurucyate |) (Ni. 5-11)

p. 740

[Running head, p. 740: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 4.]

[continuing:] states by this derivation, and he says that Agni also bears the name adhrigu (printed "अधिगु (adhigu)" once). In the present Ṛk, instead of indicating Agni by the word adhrigu, he is indicated by the word śamitā itself.

देवानां जनिमानि वेद (devānāṃ janimāni veda): when Yāska states the derivation of the word jātavedas:

जातानि वेद जातानि वैनं विदुः जाते जाते विद्यत इति वा जातवित्तो ना जातधनः जातविद्यो ना जातप्रज्ञानः । यत्तज्ञातः पशूनविंदतेशि तज्ञातवेदसो जातवेतस्त्वमिति ब्राह्मणं । तस्मात् सर्वान्मत्तून् पशवोऽग्निमभिसर्पंतीति च ॥ (jātāni veda jātāni vainaṃ viduḥ jāte jāte vidyata iti vā jātavitto nā jātadhanaḥ jātavidyo nā jātaprajñānaḥ | yattajñātaḥ paśūnaviṃdateśi tajñātavedaso jātavetastvamiti brāhmaṇaṃ | tasmāt sarvānmattūn paśavo 'gnimabhisarpaṃtīti ca ॥) (Ni. 7-19)

Having thus stated the derivation, they say that this Agni knows (jātāni veda) all that is born or will be born. Therefore here it is described that Agni knows details such as the births of the gods.

वनस्पते (vanaspate): Yāska's explanation of the word vanaspati:

वनस्पत इत्येनमाहैष हि वनानां पाता वा पालयिता वा । वनं वनोतेः ॥ (vanaspata ityenamāhaiṣa hi vanānāṃ pātā vā pālayitā vā | vanaṃ vanoteḥ ॥) (Ni. 8-3)

तत्को वनस्पतिः । यूप इति कात्क्यः । अग्निरिति शाकपूणिः ॥ (tatko vanaspatiḥ | yūpa iti kātkyaḥ | agniriti śākapūṇiḥ ॥) (Ni. 8-18)

That is, they call Agni himself vanaspati; for Agni is the protector or preserver of the forests. Although Agni is hidden within a tree, he does not burn it, so he is said to be its protector. Or, because it is used for wooden sacrificial implements, it is called vana. Vanaspati means king of trees, a large tree. Which deity is vanaspati? It is Kātkya's (printed so) opinion that it is the wooden post set up in the sacrifice for tying the victim. Śākapūṇi's opinion is that vanaspati is Agni.

To support Kātkya's opinion Yāska has given a Ṛk as example:

अंजंति त्वामध्वरे देवयंतो वनस्पते मधुना दैव्येन ! (aṃjaṃti tvāmadhvare devayaṃto vanaspate madhunā daivyena !) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-8-1)

That is, O Vanaspati (sacrificial post), in the sacrifice the priests and sacrificers anoint you with ghee consecrated with mantras: the sacrificial post for tying the victim is addressed. And in the 3rd, 6th and 11th Ṛks of this same sūkta too, Vanaspati is addressed as the sacrificial post, and besides it is well known that the deity of this sūkta is the post (yūpa). In the eleventh Ṛk of this sūkta, “वनस्पते शतवल्शो विरोह सहस्रवल्शा वि वयं रुहेम (vanaspate śatavalśo viroha sahasravalśā vi vayaṃ ruhema)”, "O Vanaspati, grow with hundreds and thousands of shoots", what is said applies to the tree that is the vanaspati. In the Ṛk 10-70-10 the words “वनस्पते रतनया नियूय (vanaspate ratanayā niyūya)”, "O Vanaspati, bind with the rope for tying the victim", confirm the sense of the sacrificial post for the word vanaspati. Therefore vanaspati means the sacrificial post; that it is Agni is an indirect meaning.

The nature of vanaspati must be understood after much examination. On the basis of this word some modern Western scholars have concluded that in the Vedic age the animal sacrifice involving killing was strong and that the Āprī sūktas are prayāja mantras connected with such a sacrifice.

From a gross point of view, vanaspati means the sacrificial post to which the sacrificial animal is tied. But whether it is not the post for tying the sacrificial victim can be determined by attending to the Śruti sentences and then fixing the nature of vanaspati on their authority.

होता यक्षद्वनस्पतिमुपावस्रक्षद्धियो जोष्वारग्ं शशमं नरः । स्वदात्त्वधितिऋतुथाद्य देवो देवेभ्यो हव्यवाड्वेत्वाज्यस्य होतर्यज । (hotā yakṣadvanaspatimupāvasrakṣaddhiyo joṣvāragṃ śaśamaṃ naraḥ | svadāttvadhitiṛtuthādya devo devebhyo havyavāḍvetvājyasya hotaryaja |) (Tai. Brā. 3-6-2-2)

The bhāṣya on this mantra is as follows: वनस्पतिं यूपाधारभूतं दशमप्रयाजदेवतात्मकमग्निं दैव्यू होता यजतु (vanaspatiṃ yūpādhārabhūtaṃ daśamaprayājadevatātmakamagniṃ daivyū hotā yajatu): "May the divine hotṛ sacrifice to Agni, who is the support of the yūpa and has the nature of the tenth prayāja deity." The vanaspati is the support of the post and Agni of the tenth prayāja deity. For him, in this sense that the hotṛ should sacrifice to him, there are the epithets धियो जोष्णा, स्वदात् स्वधितिः, देवेभ्यः ऋतुधा हव्यवाट्, यज्ञस्य आयुः कल्पमानः (dhiyo joṣṇā, svadāt svadhitiḥ, devebhyaḥ ṛtudhā havyavāṭ, yajñasya āyuḥ kalpamānaḥ). Of these, for धियो जोष्णा (dhiyo joṣṇā) the explanation is

ऋतौ विहिते कालविशेषे अद्य अस्मिन्कर्मणि स्वदादस्माभिर्दियमानं हविः स्वदयतु ! किंच देवो वनस्पतिर्देवेभ्यो देवार्थं हव्या हवींष्यि हव्यवाड्वहतु । (ṛtau vihite kālaviśeṣe adya asminkarmaṇi svadādasmābhirdiyamānaṃ haviḥ svadayatu ! kiṃca devo vanaspatirdevebhyo devārthaṃ havyā havīṃṣyi havyavāḍvahatu |)

the meaning of the mantra is: may he offer to the gods the oblations offered by us at the time of this sacrifice. And by the epithet यज्ञस्य आयुः कल्पमानः (yajñasya āyuḥ kalpamānaḥ) the meaning is one who prolongs the life of the sacrifice. By such epithets in the Praiṣa sūkta the identity of Agni and Vanaspati is stated. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, by the sentence प्राणो वै वनस्पतिः (prāṇo vai vanaspatiḥ) (2-4)

[The window ends here, at the end of p. 741, in the middle of this sentence, which breaks off at "ऐंब वाक्यदिंद (èṃba vākyadiṃda)"; the next window continues.]

p. 742

[Running head, p. 742: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, Ā. (printed so for A.) 1, Sū. 4.]

[continuing:] it indicates [the identity]. The Nirukta authors first state the derivation of the word vanaspati and then explain the nature of vanaspati in an Āprī sūkta. While explaining the Ṛk 2-37-3, showing the derivation of the word vanaspati in it (Ni. 8-3), they say वनानां पाता वा पालयिता वा । वनं वनोतेः (vanānāṃ pātā vā pālayitā vā | vanaṃ vanoteḥ): Agni is known as vanaspati either because he is lord of the forests or because he is their protector; and it is formed from the root van meaning "to obtain". Then, discussing the nature of the deities of the Āprī sūkta (8-18), stating the two opinions तत् को वनस्पतिः, यूप इति कात्थक्यः अग्निरिति शाकपूणिः । (tat ko vanaspatiḥ, yūpa iti kātthakyaḥ agniriti śākapūṇiḥ |), to support Kātthakya's opinion

अंजंति त्वामध्वरे देवयंतो वनस्पते मधुना दैव्येन । यदूर्ध्वस्तिष्ठा द्रविणेह धत्तादद्वा क्षयो मातुरस्या उपस्थे ॥ (aṃjaṃti tvāmadhvare devayaṃto vanaspate madhunā daivyena | yadūrdhvastiṣṭhā draviṇeha dhattādyadvā kṣayo māturasyā upasthe ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-8-1)

this Ṛk is quoted. In this Ṛk Sāyaṇa has addressed the word vanaspati as the post (yūpa). Then, to support Śākapūṇi's opinion, the Nirukta authors quote

वनस्पते रशनाया नियूया देवानां पाथ उप वक्षि विद्वान् । स्वदाति देवः कृणवद्धवींष्यवतां द्यावापृथिवी हवं मे ॥ (vanaspate raśanāyā niyūyā devānāṃ pātha upa vakṣi vidvān | svadāti devaḥ kṛṇavaddhavīṃṣyavatāṃ dyāvāpṛthivī havaṃ me ‖) (10-70-10)

Here too Sāyaṇa has explained it as the post. But the Nirukta authors' opinion is that it is Agni within the post. Durgācārya, explaining this Ṛk in the Nirukta commentary:

एवमग्निर्वनस्पतिः । यत् पुनरेतदुक्तं यूपांजनीयायां 'यूपे वनस्पतिशब्दः' इति । अत्र ब्रूमः—अग्निरेवासौ यूपांतर्गतो यूपात्मना वर्तमानो यूपांजनीयायां वनस्पतिशब्देनोच्यते । (evamagnirvanaspatiḥ | yat punaretaduktaṃ yūpāṃjanīyāyāṃ 'yūpe vanaspatiśabdaḥ ' iti | atra brūmaḥ—agni revāsau yūpāṃtargato yūpātmanā vartamāno yūpāṃjanīyāyāṃ vanaspatiśabdenocyate |)

He has established that here vanaspati means only the Agni within the post and nothing else. The Bṛhaddevatā authors:

वनस्पतिं तु यं प्राहुरयं सोऽग्निर्वनस्पतिः । अयं वनानां हि पतिः पाता पालयतीति वा । अग्निगृत्समदेनायं वनस्पतिरितीळितः । मंदस्वेत्यस्य सूक्तस्य षळ्ळचस्य तृतीयया ॥ यूपवत्तरुवच्चैव स्तुतिर्यास्य प्रसंगजा । सर्वेणांजंतिसूक्तेन तृतीये सा तु मंडले ॥ (vanaspatiṃ tu yaṃ prāhurayaṃ so 'gnirvanaspatiḥ | ayaṃ vanānāṃ hi patiḥ pātā pālayatīti vā | agnigṛtsamadenāyaṃ vanaspatiritīḷitaḥ | maṃdasvetyasya sūktasya ṣaḷḷacasya tṛtīyayā ‖ yūpavattaruvaccaiva stutiryāsya prasaṃgajā | sarvèṇāṃjaṃtisūktena tṛtīye sā tu maṃḍale ‖) (Bṛ. De. 3-26 to 28)

By these sentences they discuss the nature of the Āprī deity addressed in the Ṛk 1-13-11, and state that here vanaspati means the earthly Agni, and that in the Ṛk 2-37-2 Gṛtsamada also meant this same earthly Agni by the word vanaspati, and that only in some Ṛks of the third Maṇḍala does it mean the post or a tree, and that too is incidental (prasaṅgaja). Besides this,

इहैष पवमानोऽग्निर्मध्यमोऽग्निर्वनस्पतिः । अमुष्मिन्नेव विप्रैस्तु लोकेऽग्निश्युचिरुच्यते ॥ (ihaiṣa pavamānoSgnirmadhyamoSgnirvanaspatiḥ | amuṣminneva vipraistu lokeSgniśyucirucyate ॥) (Bṛ. De. 1-66)

Here, showing that vanaspati means the Agni of the middle world, they state precisely that, except in a few places of the Ṛksaṃhitā, in the many other places this word indicates Agni, without doubt.

Agne: O Agni. Arvāk: towards us. Samidhānaḥ: you who are kindled. Indreṇa: with Indra. Turebhiḥ: swift-moving. Devaiḥ: with the gods. Sarathaṃ: seated in one chariot. Ā yāhi: come to our sacrifice. Suputrāḥ: having excellent sons. Aditiḥ: Aditi too. Naḥ: our. Barhiḥ: upon the seat of sacred grass. Āstāṃ: let her sit. Amṛtāḥ: the immortal. Devāḥ: the gods. Svāhā: with the oblation offered with the call svāhā. Mādayantāṃ: let them obtain satisfaction.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Agni, kindled towards us, come to our sacrifice seated in one chariot, together with Indra and the swift-moving gods. May Aditi, having excellent sons, also sit upon our seat of sacred grass. May the immortal gods obtain satisfaction with the oblation offered with the call svāhā.

Printed English translation

Agni, kindled into flame, come to our presence in the same chariot with Indra and with the swift-moving gods : may Aditi, the mother of excellent sons, sit down on the sacred grass, and may the immortal gods be satisfied with the reverentially-offered oblation.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk, which is the conclusion of this sūkta, it is prayed that the deity presiding over the svāhā call, and all the gods beginning with Aditi, the mother of the gods, who has excellent sons, come to this sacrificial ground and sit upon the seat of sacred grass called barhis spread there, and receive the oblations and the like offered by the sacrificers with the svāhā call and be satisfied.

Yāska's explanation of the word svāhā:

स्वाहाकृतयः । साहाकृतयः स्वाहेत्येतत् सु आहेति वा । स्वा वागाहेति वा । स्वं प्राहेति वा । स्वाहुतं हविर्जुहोतीति वा ॥ (svāhākṛtayaḥ | sāhākṛtayaḥ svāhetyetat su āheti vā | svā vāgāheti vā | svaṃ prāheti vā | svāhutaṃ havirjuhotīti vā ‖) (printed सि (si). 8-21; the supplied text had three Telugu letters in the reference, put into Kannada letters one for one)

The word svāhā has four kinds of component meanings.

[The window ends here, at the end of p. 744; the next window continues.]

p. 745

[Running head, p. 745: Ā. (printed so for A.) 2, Ā. (printed so for A.) 8, Varga 23, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

1. सु आहेति वा (su āheti vā): su = well, āha = says; because it is uttered well, or distinctly, it is called svāhā.
2. स्वा वागाहेति वा (svā vāgāheti vā): svā = one's own, vāk = speech. There is a Śruti sentence (Brāhmaṇa) तं स्वा वागभ्यवदज्जुहुधीति तत्स्वाहाकारस्य जन्म (taṃ svā vāgabhyavadajjuhudhīti tatsvāhākārasya janma); that is, because at the time of offering the person making the offering himself adds and says the word svāhā at the end of the Ṛk, the Vedic mantra, it is called svāhā.
3. स्वं प्राहेति वा (svaṃ prāheti vā): here svam = his own oblation, āha = he says "I shall offer"; therefore it is called svāhā.
4. स्वाहुतं हविर्जुहोतीति वा (svāhutaṃ havirjuhotīti vā): because the oblation one offers is offered through the utterance of the word svāhā, that is, because the oblation is given in Agni, it is called svāhā.

For the meaning of svāhākāra Yāska has given this Ṛk (printed "मुक्कन्नु (mukkannu)") as example:

सद्यो जातो व्यमिमित यज्ञमग्निर्देवानामभवत्पुरोगाः । अस्य होतुः प्रदिश्यतस्य वाचि स्वाहाकृतं हविरदंतु देवाः ॥ (sadyo jāto vyamimita yajñamagnirdevānāmabhavatpurogāḥ | asya hotuḥ pradiśyatasya vāci svāhākṛtaṃ haviradaṃtu devāḥ ‖) (printed ಮ. ಸಂ (saṃ). 10-110-11)

Its chief meaning: Agni, who has just been born (that is, who has now been established in the sacrifice), sits before the gods and carries out the sacrifice, performing the duty of the hotṛ, that is, the work of invoking the gods; may the gods eat the oblation offered by such a hotṛ, who stays in the east, with the utterance of the word svāhā.

Therefore the purport is that svāhā is the name of the word uttered at the end of the mantra when an oblation is offered in Agni for the pleasure of the gods, after being established duly for the sacrifice.

In some Āprī sūktas the plural स्वाहाकृतयः (svāhākṛtayaḥ) is used. Since the eleven prayāja mantras used in making offerings to the eleven deities of this sūkta are recited with the svāhā call added, the plural svāhākṛtayaḥ is used. In the Purāṇas and elsewhere the word svāhā is used in another sense. In the Mahābhārata the daughter of Bṛhaspati, the son of the seer Aṅgiras, is called Svāhā. In the Purāṇas the goddess Svāhā is said to be the daughter of Dakṣa Prajāpati and the wife of Agni.

[Running head, p. 746: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, Ā. (printed so for A.) 1, Sū. 4.]

स्वाहा इत्येवंपूर्वा कृतिः करणमुच्चारणं यक्ष्यमाणदेवतानां ताः स्वाहाकृतयः । तद्वंति हव्यानि । (svāhā ityevaṃpūrvā kṛtiḥ karaṇamuccāraṇaṃ yakṣyamāṇadevatānāṃ tāḥ svāhākṛtayaḥ | tadvaṃti havyāni |) "Svāhākṛtayaḥ" are those uttered words that begin with svāhā, of the deities to be worshipped, and the oblations accompanied by them; it is an epithet of the word havyāni, oblations accompanied by the mantra svāhā recited at the offering. It is a word chiefly read in the last Ṛks of the Āprī sūktas. In some Ṛks it is also an adverb: in 1-13-12 स्वाहा कृणोतन (svāhā kṛṇotana) and in 1-142-12 स्वाहा कर्तन (svāhā kartana); in the Ṛks 3-4-11, 7-2-11 and 10-70-11 in the sense of the instrument; in 2-3-11 as an epithet of havya; and in 10-110-11 as an epithet of havis.

In explaining this word, some have held that by this word the divine svāhākṛti is indicated, and some that Agni is indicated. In the Praiṣa sūkta:

होता यक्षदग्निग् स्वाहाज्यस्य (hotā yakṣadagnig svāhājyasya) ..... वियंतु होतर्यज । (viyaṃtu hotaryaja |) (printed तै (tai). ब्रा (brā). 3-6-2-2; the dots are as printed)

it is recited. On this Sāyaṇa explains: योऽयं स्वाहाशब्दोदितः उत्तमप्रयाजदेवः अग्निः तं दैव्यो होता यजतु । (yo 'yaṃ svāhāśabdoditaḥ uttamaprayājadevaḥ agniḥ taṃ daivyo hotā yajatu |) By the word svāhā he has explained that the Agni who is the eleventh prayāja deity is indicated. The Nirukta authors:

स्वाहाकृतयः । स्वाहेत्येतत् सु आहेति वा, स्वा वागाहेति वा स्वं प्राहेति वा, स्वाहुतं हविर्जुहोतीति वा । (svāhākṛtayaḥ | svāhetyetat su āheti vā, svā vāgāheti vā svaṃ prāheti vā, svāhutaṃ havirjuhotīti vā |) (printed सि (si). 8-21)

explained that it is well known as svāhākṛti either because it is uttered well, or because speech itself says that it is well, or because the oblation purified by the mantra svāhā is offered; and, quoting the Ṛk 10-110-11, they made this sense clear. In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa:

स्वाहाकृतीयजति प्रतिष्ठा वै स्वाहाकृतयः प्रतिष्ठायामेव तद्यज्ञमंततः प्रतिष्ठापयति । (svāhākṛtīyajati pratiṣṭhā vai svāhākṛtayaḥ pratiṣṭhāyāmeva tadyajñamaṃtataḥ pratiṣṭhāpayati |) (printed ७. ब्रा (brā). 2-4)

It explains that, since the offering is completed by the svāhākṛti, it is the support of the whole sacrifice and sets the sacrifice on a proper foundation. In the Bṛhaddevatā:

स्वाहाकृतयोऽनेकाश्च विदुषां मतयोऽभवन् । तत्सर्वं त्वयमेवाग्निर्भवतीति विनिश्चयः ॥ (svāhākṛtayo 'nekāśca viduṣāṃ matayo 'bhavan | tatsarvaṃ tvayamevāgnirbhavatīti viniścayaḥ ॥)

p. 747

[Running head, p. 747: Aṣṭaka 2 (printed "७. २ अ (2 a). ९." without a period after ७), Adhyāya 8, Varga 23, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

अयं हि कर्ता स्वाहानां कृतिस्तासामिहैकजा । अयं प्रसूर्भूतितानां सर्वेषामयमव्ययः ॥ (ayaṃ hi kartā svāhānāṃ kṛtistāsāmihaikajā | ayaṃ prasūrbhūtitānāṃ sarveṣāmayamavyayaḥ ॥) (Bṛ. De. 3-29 to 30)

The opinions of the learned on the svāhākṛti are not of one kind. Still, all the sense indicated by this word also refers to this earthly Agni. Because this Agni is the maker of the svāhā and he is its making too, the earthly Agni is so called; following the opinion of the Nirukta authors, आग्नेया इति तु स्थितिः (āgneyā iti tu sthitiḥ) (Ni. 8-22), the Bṛhaddevatā authors have stated their view.

In the last Ṛks of some Āprī sūktas that are of the nature of svāhākāra, deities such as Pūṣan, the Maruts, Vāyu, Sūrya, Indra and Varuṇa are all addressed; above all,

पुरोगा अग्निर्देवानां गायत्रेण समज्यते । स्वाहाकृतीषु रोचते । (purogā agnirdevānāṃ gāyatreṇa samajyate | svāhākṛtīṣu rocate |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-188-11)

सद्यो जातो व्यमिमित यज्ञमग्निर्देवानामभवत्पुरोगाः । अस्य होतुः प्रदिश्यतस्य वाचि स्वाहाकृतं हविरदंतु देवाः ॥ (sadyo jāto vyamimita yajñamagnirdevānāmabhavatpurogāḥ | asya hotuḥ pradiśyatasya vāci svāhākṛtaṃ haviradaṃtu devāḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-110-11)

In these Ṛks Agni is praised as the leader (purogā) of the gods from the time he was born. And, explaining the power of the svāhākṛti:

आ याह्यग्ने समिधानो अर्वाजींद्रेण देवैः सरथं तुरेभिः । बर्हिर्न आस्तामदितिः सुपुत्रा स्वाहा देवा अमृता मादयंतां ॥ (ā yāhyagne samidhāno arvājīṃdreṇa devaiḥ sarathaṃ turebhiḥ | barhirna āstāmaditiḥ suputrā svāhā devā amṛtā mādayaṃtāṃ ‖) (printed ಮ. सं (saṃ). ३-४ (3-4)-, the reference being cut off after these numbers in the supplied text, no further number supplied)

अग्ने वह वरुणमिष्टये न इंद्र दिवो मरुतो अंतरिक्षात् । सीदंतु बर्हिर्विश्व आ यजत्राः स्वाहा देवा अमृता मादयंतां ॥ (agne vaha varuṇamiṣṭaye na iṃdra divo maruto aṃtarikṣāt | sīdaṃtu barhirviśva ā yajatrāḥ svāhā devā amṛtā mādayaṃtāṃ ‖) (printed ಮ. सं (saṃ). 10-70-11)

In these Ṛks, since the gods are made glad by the mantra svāhā, it is indicated that the word svāhā has so divine a place in the sacrifice.

Anuvāda (Kannada). This sūkta, प्रत्यग्निरुषसः (pratyagniruṣasaḥ), is the fifth sūkta in the first anuvāka. It has eleven ṛks. The seer of this sūkta is Viśvāmitra; the deity is Agni; the metre is Triṣṭubh. In the Anukramaṇikā it begins with "pratyagniḥ". This sūkta and the next two sūktas are applied (viniyoga) for the recitation of the Prātaranuvāka and the Āśvina śastra mantras, as is stated by the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra प्रत्यग्निरुषस इति त्रीणि (pratyagniruṣasa iti trīṇi) (Ā. 4-13). The application of the ṛk इळामग्ने (iḷāmagne) has been stated before.

Apa āvaḥ: he opens.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

Agni, who knows the influence of Uṣas, is sagacious and follows the paths of the far-seeing, awakes. Vahni, who has abundant radiance and is kindled by those devoted to the gods, opens the doors of the black darkness and makes it disperse.

Printed English translation

The sagacious Agni, cognizant of the dawn, is awakened to (follow) the paths of the sages : the luminous Vahni, kindled by the devout, has thrown open the gates of darkness.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

उषसः चेकितानः विप्रः कवीनां पदवीः अग्निः प्रति अबोधि (uṣasaḥ cekitānaḥ vipraḥ kavīnāṃ padavīḥ agniḥ prati abodhi): Agni is very sagacious, that is, very intelligent. He follows the path of the poets (kavis) who know past, future and present; that is, like the poets Agni too has knowledge of the times past, future and present. Such a glorious Agni awakes knowing that the time of Uṣas has appeared, that is, that night has passed and the time of Uṣas has arrived. That is, before sunrise in the morning the sacrificers who perform the sacrifice, having prepared all the materials for the sacrifice, come and sit at the sacrificial altar with the priests, Hotṛ and the rest, and are ready to perform the sacrifice. Since in the sacrifice Agni is the principal, the work of installing Agni must be performed first.

p. 750

Therefore, at the time of Uṣas itself, as soon as the sacrificers and the priests pray to him, Agni awakens and is ready to come to the sacrificial ground; this is the chief purport of this sentence.

The word विप्रः (vipraḥ) is read among the names of the sagacious (Ni. 3-19). The word kavi is also read among the names of the sagacious, and Yāska has explained it: मेधावी कविः क्रांतदर्शनो भवति कवतेर्वा (medhāvī kaviḥ krāṃtadarśano bhavati kavatervā) (Ni. 12-13). For the words medhāvin and kavi, "far-seeing", or, as in the explanation of the word kavi कवति गच्छत्यसौ नित्यं किंच कवित्वादेव जनयति (kavati gacchatyasau nityaṃ kiṃca kavitvādeva janayati), the commentators have explained the sense of the word kavi as one who always knows everything, and who by his poetic power gives people joy or good fortune.

पदवीः— पदं मार्गं वीति गच्छतीति पदवीः । (padavīḥ— padaṃ mārgaṃ vīti gacchatīti padavīḥ |) One who follows the path of the poets; that is, like them he too is wise; this is the purport.

पृथुपाजाः देवयद्भिः समिद्धः वह्निः तमसः द्वारा अप आवः (pṛthupājāḥ devayadbhiḥ samiddhaḥ vahniḥ tamasaḥ dvārā apa āvaḥ): this Agni, established at the sacrificial altar by the priests and sacrificers who wish to invoke and worship the gods in the sacrifice, shining with great radiance, destroys the darkness or ignorance. For the sentence तमसः द्वारा अप अवः (tamasaḥ dvārā apa avaḥ) here, "he uncovers the doors of darkness", that is, he opens the closed doors. Opening the doors of darkness means that at night all places are covered with darkness so that nothing is seen by the eye. In the time of Uṣas, before sunrise, while the darkness has not yet entirely gone, Agni installed in the sacrificial pit drives away by his boundless radiance all the darkness that had covered the sacrificial hall and makes light everywhere; this is the purport. Or if the word tamas is taken to mean ignorance, since Agni is wise he removes the ignorance of the priests and sacrificers and grants them the knowledge and ability necessary in carrying out the sacrificial work; this is the purport.

पृथुपाजाः— पृथुतेजाः । (pṛthupājāḥ— pṛthutejāḥ |) One who shines with abundant radiance. The word pṛthu means "much" and pājas means "radiance". Since the word pājas is read among the names of strength (Ni. 3-9), the purport is that he shines with great strength, that is, with extreme radiance.

Samiddhaḥ: formed from the root इंधी दीप्तौ (iṃdhī dīptau) with the prefix sam; the purport is Agni shining well, kindled and blazing with abundant brightness, or burning.

(Gist: Agni, worshipful, grows by the praises and śastras of the singers; emulating the sun's many rays, the messenger of the gods shines at the dawn's glimmer.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Namasyaḥ: the worshipful. Agniḥ: Agni. Stotṛṇāṃ: of the praisers. Stomebhiḥ: by the stotras. Gīrbhiḥ: by the words of praise. Ukthaiḥ (printed उक्थैः (ukṣaiḥ)): by the śastra mantras. Pra vavṛdhe: attains growth. Dūtaḥ: Agni, the messenger of the gods. Pūrvīḥ: many in

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

The worshipful Agni grows by the stotras, the words of praise and the śastras of the praisers. Agni, the messenger of the gods, emulating the many radiant rays of the Āditya, shines at the dawn that indicates the appearance of Uṣas.

Printed English translation

The adorable Agni is magnified by the hymns, the prayers, the praises, of (his) worshippers : emulating the many glories of the sun, the messenger (of the gods) shines forth at the glimmering of the dawn.

समस्यः अग्निः स्तोतृणां स्तोमेभिः उक्तैः गीर्भिः प्र ववृधे इत् । (samasyaḥ agniḥ stotṛṇāṃ stomebhiḥ uktaiḥ gīrbhiḥ pra vavṛdhe it |) (printed समस्यः (samasyaḥ)): since the word नमः (namaḥ) has the meanings salutation, praise and food, namasyaḥ may be said to mean worshipful, worthy to be saluted, fit for offering oblations and the like. Agni, worshipful to all, grows in this sacrificial altar by the śastra mantras recited by the praisers, that is, the hotṛs, the Sāman-chanting priests such as the Udgātṛ and others, by the verbal praises, by the recitation of the stomas such as the Trivṛt, and by the Sāman chanting; that is, being praised, he shines well, blazing and radiant; this is the purport. We have explained before the difference between stoma and stotra and the detailed description of the stomas. The stomas are sung by priests such as the Udgātṛ along with Sāman mantras. The ukthas or śastra mantras are recited by priests of the Hotṛ group together with Ṛgveda mantras. Both kinds of mantra recitation occur in the sacrifice. Here it is said that Agni grows by such praising sentences. It is said in many places in the Ṛgveda that by praising the gods, that is, by singing their virtues with Vedic mantras, the power of the gods increases. Śruti sentences such as त्वां वर्धंतु नो गिरः (tvāṃ vardhaṃtu no giraḥ) and वर्धंतु त्वा सुष्टुतयो गिरो मे (vardhaṃtu tvā suṣṭutayo giro me) support this.

दूतः पूर्विः ऋतस्य संदृशः चकानः उषसः विरोके सं अद्यात् (dūtaḥ pūrviḥ ṛtasya saṃdṛśaḥ cakānaḥ uṣasaḥ viroke saṃ adyāt): it is said that Agni, the messenger of the gods, shone at the time of Uṣas as the sun shines with many rays. It is said in the Veda अग्निर्देवानां दूत आसीत्कावोऽसुराणां (agnirdevānāṃ dūta āsītkāvo 'surāṇāṃ), that is, Agni was the messenger of the gods, and Kāvya the messenger of the asuras. Here "messenger" means, as in the Śruti sentence परोक्षं वा अन्ये देवा इज्यंते । (parokṣaṃ vā anye devā ijyaṃte |) (Tai. Saṃ. 1-7-2-1, printed "तै (tai).. सं (saṃ)."), that if an oblation is to be offered to the gods, it must be offered only by offering it in Agni. For the gods do not receive oblations and the like directly; they receive them indirectly, that is, through Agni. Therefore Agni receives the stotras and the like recited by the sacrificers and priests in the sacrifice, and the oblations offered to the gods, and carries them to the gods in heaven. So in the Vedas Agni is praised as the messenger standing between men and the gods.

The word पूर्विः (pūrviḥ) is formed from puru, "much", and is used in the sense of "many". The sun that rises after the time of Uṣas, being at first of gentle form, shines in due order with its many rays and at midday with extreme radiance. This very order

p. 753

[Running head, p. 753: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 24, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

[continuing:] it is said here that Agni follows. That is, Agni established in the sacrifice, though of gentle form at the beginning of the sacrifice, gradually becomes kindled and grows by the substances the priests offer, such as wood, kindling-sticks, ghee and oblations, and shines with great brilliance; so he is described by the likeness to the rays of the sun.

Agni, the friend of the sacrificers, who accomplishes the desired aims by truth and is the womb of the waters, has been established by the gods among the people who are the descendants of Manu. The desirable and worshipful Agni has taken his station on the raised region. The wise Agni has become worshipful to the praisers.

The purport is that the gods established such an Agni among men, that is, on the sacrificial altar on the earth, for carrying out sacrifices and the like, or for carrying to the gods the oblations offered by the human sacrificers in the sacrifice.

हर्यतः यजतः सानु आ अस्थात् (haryataḥ yajataḥ sānu ā asthāt): Agni, who is desired by all, worthy of worship in sacrifices and the like, or the chief means of performing the sacrificial works, is established in the fire-pit called Āhavanīya in the upper altar. That is, in the sacrifice, after the churning of fire, the priests have duly brought Agni to the upper altar through the rite called agnyānayana and established him there; this is the purport.

विप्रः मतीनां हव्यः अभूत् (vipraḥ matīnāṃ havyaḥ abhūt): this wise Agni has become worshipful to those who praise him; that is, the priests, sacrificers and other people praise this wise Agni with stotras.

Agni, when kindled, is Mitra ; and, as Mitra, is the invoker (of the gods) : Varuna is Jatavedas : Mitra is the ministering priest : Damunas is the agitator (Vayu) : Mitra (is the associate) of rivers and mountains.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk Agni is described as the all-in-one and as the form of all the gods. Every pāda of this Ṛk begins with the word mitra and is thus rhymed.

यत् अग्निः समिद्धः मित्रः भवति (yat agniḥ samiddhaḥ mitraḥ bhavati): when Agni is kindled, that is, is blazing well, he shines like the Sun with great radiance. Here the word mitra means the Sun, or Agni shining like the Sun.

मित्रः होता वरुणः जातवेदाः मित्रः अध्वर्युः दमूनाः (mitraḥ hotā varuṇaḥ jātavedāḥ mitraḥ adhvaryuḥ damūnāḥ): this Agni, shining like the Sun, is the hotṛ, who plays the part of the chief priest in the sacrifice, or one who invokes the gods to the sacrificial ground; he is also Varuṇa, who holds the whole world under his control and regulates it; he is the omniscient one who knows everything; he is the priest called adhvaryu who carries out the sacrifice; and he gives the sacrificers the fruit of the sacrifice and their desired aims. Or (as the meaning of the word damūnāḥ goes) one who, established in houses under the name Gārhapatya, becomes the householder-fire and is worshipped by the sacrificers: there is Yāska's explanation दमूनाः क्षेत्रसाधाः (damūnāḥ kṣetrasādhāḥ) (Ni. 2-2).

इषिरः उत सिंधूनां पर्वतानां मित्रः (iṣiraḥ uta siṃdhūnāṃ parvatānāṃ mitraḥ): he is also the Vāyu who impels everything; and besides, he is the friend beneficial to the rivers and the mountains.

Here the chief purport of this Ṛk is that Agni is the friend of the gods, of men, and of all moving and unmoving things. The words mitra, varuṇa, jātavedāḥ indicate the gods, the words hotā, adhvaryu indicate men, the word iṣiraḥ indicates moving beings, and the words sindhūnām, parvatānām indicate immovable, fixed forms. Therefore the chief purport of this Ṛk is that Agni is the beneficial friend of the gods, of men, and of the whole world, moving and unmoving.

Printed English translation

The graceful (Agni) protects the primary station of the moving earth : mighty, he protects the path of the sun : he protects the seven-headed (troop of the Maruts) in the centre (between heaven and earth) : he protects the exhilarating (oblations) of the gods.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

Every pāda of this Ṛk begins with the word pāti and is thus rhymed. Here it is stated that Agni protects the earth, the atmosphere, the host of the Maruts and the sacrifice.

ऋष्टः अग्निः वेः रिपः प्रियं अग्रं पदं पाति (ṛṣṭaḥ agniḥ veḥ ripaḥ priyaṃ agraṃ padaṃ pāti): this Agni, who is beautiful, that is, shines with a gentle form, guards the dear and principal place of this earth, which has movement in the form of revolution, that is, the sacrificial altar. As the Śruti sentence आयं यज्ञो भुवनस्य नाभिः (āyaṃ yajño bhuvanasya nābhiḥ) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-164-35) says, the principal place of the earth is the sacrificial altar. Since there is a close relation between the sacrifice and Agni, it is natural for Agni to protect the sacrifice. The word रिपः (ripaḥ) is read among the names of the earth (Ni. 2-5).

यह्वः सूर्यस्य चरणं पाति नाभा सप्तशीर्षाणं पाति (yahvaḥ sūryasya caraṇaṃ pāti nābhā saptaśīrṣāṇaṃ pāti): the word yahva is read among the names of "great" (printed सि (si). 3-13, i.e. Ni. 3-13). This greatly glorious Agni guards the atmosphere, the path on which the sun travels, and also the hosts of the Maruts who move between heaven and earth (in the atmosphere). Here the bhāṣyakāra has explained सप्तशीर्षाणं (saptaśīrṣāṇaṃ) as the Maruts, who have seven groups. The Śruti sentence सप्तगणा वै मरुतः (saptagaṇā vai marutaḥ) supports this.

देवानां उपमादं पाति (devānāṃ upamādaṃ pāti): Agni protects also the sacrifice that gives satisfaction to the gods; that is, he causes the sacrifice to be completed with all its parts without obstruction by demons and the like.

[continuing:] omniscient; shining. Such an Agni has created the lovely water; this is the purport of the sentence. The word ṛbhu is read among the names of "great" (Ni. 3-13). The word vayuna is read among the names of knowledge (Ni. 3-13).

वेः ससस्य चर्म धृतवत् अग्निः तत् पदं अप्रयुच्छन् रक्षति (veḥ sasasya carma dhṛtavat agniḥ tat padaṃ aprayucchan rakṣati): Agni, who pervades everywhere, though with quiet flames, that is, flames imperceptible to people, has a radiant form. Agni in the cloud-region in the form of lightning is not always visible to people; he is hidden in the clouds. Even so, when he becomes visible he is extremely brilliant. Such an Agni guards with great care the water in the clouds around him; this is the purport.

ससस्य (sasasya): stating the derivation of the word ससं (sasaṃ), Yāska quotes the Ṛk

प्र मातुः प्रतरं गुह्यमिच्छन् कुमारो न वीरुधः सर्पदुर्वीः । ससं न पक्वमविदच्चुचंतं रिरिह्वांसं रिप उपस्थे अंतः ॥ (pra mātuḥ prataraṃ guhyamicchan kumāro na vīrudhaḥ sarpadurvīḥ | sasaṃ na pakvamavidaccucaṃtaṃ ririhvāṃsaṃ ripa upasthe aṃtaḥ ‖) (printed ಮ. सं (saṃ). 10-79-3)

and explains: स्वपनमेतन्माध्यमिकं ज्योतिरनित्यदर्शनं तदिवादज्ञा ज्वल्यमानं (svapanametanmādhyamikaṃ jyotiranityadarśanaṃ tadivādajñā jvalyamānaṃ) (Ni. 5-3). Sasam means without movement, hidden and unseen by anyone. The Agni of the middle region, in the form of lightning hidden motionless in the cloud-region, though not always visible to anyone, shines with extremely blazing brightness when he is seen; this is the purport of the derivation. Durgācārya, the commentator of the Nirukta, explains: ससं इत्यनेन शब्देन स्वपनमुच्यत इत्युपपद्यते (sasaṃ ityanena śabdena svapanamucyata ityupapadyate). The Agni of the middle region in the form of lightning is the lightning or electric fire hidden among the clouds in the atmosphere. Of Agni's three forms, one shines in heaven in the form of the Āditya; this is a transformation of the Agni of the heaven-place. The Agni in the form of lightning among the clouds in the atmosphere is a transformation of the Agni of the middle place. The Agni installed in houses and on the sacrificial altar on the earth and praised by all is called the earthly Agni, the third transformation. Of these three forms, the transformation of Agni in the form of lightning in the middle place is described here.

चर्म—चर्म शब्दक्के यास्करु—चर्म चरतेर्वोच्चृतं भवतीति वा । अथापि चर्म च श्लेष्मा च । (carma—carma śabdakkè yāskaru—carma caratervoccṛtaṃ bhavatīti vā | athāpi carma ca śleṣmā ca |) (Ni. 2-5): Yāska has stated the derivation of the word carma. The word carma is formed from the root carati, and since it is separable from the body, covers the body and gives it a distinct shape, or since it clings to the body, carma means

[continuing:] "form" too. Here it is used in the sense of general form.

धृतवत्—दीप्तिमद्भवति । (dhṛtavat—dīptimadbhavati |) Although the word ghṛta is read among the hundred and one names of water (Ni. 2-24), here the word ghṛta is given the meaning dīpti (radiance). Yāska:

अथापि नैगमेभ्यो भाषिका उष्णं धृतमिति (athāpi naigamebhyo bhāṣikā uṣṇaṃ dhṛtamiti) (Ni. 2-2): those who know the Vedic sense say that the word ghṛta has the meaning "heat". Heat comes to mean radiance, brightness. In Śruti sentences such as तेजो वै धृतं (tejo vai dhṛtaṃ) it is stated clearly that ghṛta means brilliance, radiance.

Agni, desired by all, has occupied the place that is radiant, greatly praised and welcoming his coming. Agni, shining, of beautiful form, great, and the purifier of all, makes heaven and earth, the parents of the world, new again and again.

Printed English translation

Agni has taken his station in an asylum, brilliant, much-lauded, and as desirous (of receiving him) as he is (to repair to it); radiant, pure, vast, aud [sic] purifying, he repeatedly renovates his parents, (Heaven and Earth).

Everyone praises him much (sings his virtues). Such an Agni is firmly established in his own place, the fire-pit (Āhavanīya) on the sacrificial altar, which is itself waiting for his arrival. Here the word उशंतं—कामयमानं (uśaṃtaṃ—kāmayamānaṃ) is used figuratively. The sacrificial altar desires Agni's arrival; that is, the purport is that the installation of Agni on the sacrificial altar gives joy to all.

दीद्यानः शुचिः ऋष्टः पावकः मातरा पुनःपुनः नव्यसी कः (dīdyānaḥ śuciḥ ṛṣṭaḥ pāvakaḥ mātarā punaḥpunaḥ navyasī kaḥ): this Agni is himself shining and pure; gentle to look at, and the purifier of all. Such an Agni makes his parents, heaven and earth, young again and again. Since heaven and earth are called the mother and father of the gods, they came to be the parents of Agni too. That he made them new or young means that, by his three forms, the Āditya form, the lightning form and the earthly-fire form, in the three places heaven, atmosphere and earth, he gave light to heaven and earth and gave them new life such as they never had before; this is the chief purport.

सद्यो जातः यदि ओषधीभिः ववक्षे प्रवता आप इव शुंभमानाः प्रस्वः धृतेन वर्धंति (sadyo jātaḥ yadi oṣadhībhiḥ vavakṣe pravatā āpa iva śuṃbhamānāḥ prasvaḥ dhṛtena vardhaṃti): Agni, just born, is borne by the plants and trees; that is, the purport is that Agni is present within trees, vanaspatis, wood and herbs (creepers and the like). We have explained this matter in the sūktas addressed to Vaiśvānara. Agni, being in these plants and vanaspatis, makes them develop and grow well. It is known to all that without the fire element (heat, warmth) trees and the like do not grow. Since the Āditya is a transformation of Agni, the rays of the Āditya assist the growth of trees and the like. Without the help of the sun's rays or some kind of heat, neither trees nor animals can live. Therefore, because the plants and vanaspatis bear Agni, that is, because Agni pervades them, they grow stout and become fruitful. It is said here that the help of water too is necessary for this. Besides, an illustration is given here: प्रवता आप इव शुंभमानाः (pravatā āpa iva śuṃbhamānāḥ). Just as water flowing swiftly in a stream is powerful, that is, advances without regard to any obstacle or hindrance, so these plants, bearing Agni, grow luxuriantly without any obstacle and give fruit; thus the need of Agni and of water for the growth of plants is explained here.

पित्रोः उपस्थे अग्निः उरुष्यत् (pitroḥ upasthe agniḥ uruṣyat): since the dual word pitroḥ is used here, this word indicates not only the father but the parents. In the same way, when the word mātṛ is used in the dual, the same sense holds. It is prayed that such an Agni, who grows between his parents, heaven and earth, protect us.

स्तुतः समिधा यह्वः अग्निः पृथिव्याः नाभा दिवः वर्ष्मन् उत् अदौत् (stutaḥ samidhā yahvaḥ agniḥ pṛthivyāḥ nābhā divaḥ varṣman ut adaut) (so printed): this Agni, well kindled with kindling-sticks (wood), blazing in great form, is praised by us; that is, we praise the greatly glorious Agni who blazes on the sacrificial altar. Such an Agni, on the sacrificial altar, which is the navel (middle region) of the earth, shines with great brilliance like the form in heaven (the sun). The bhāṣyakāra has explained the word दिवः (divaḥ) as the atmosphere. It may also be said to be heaven. If the sense heaven is taken, then for the words दिवः वर्ष्मन् (divaḥ varṣman) he shines in the form of the Āditya, the transformation of Agni in heaven; and if the word diva is taken as the atmosphere, then for दिवः वर्ष्मन् (divaḥ varṣman) two meanings may be given: he shines like lightning, the transformation of Agni in the atmosphere. That is, Agni established on the sacrificial altar shines with great brilliance like the Āditya in the heaven-place (heaven, the upper part of the atmosphere), or with extreme brilliance like the electric glow seen among the clouds in the atmosphere (like lightning); this is the purport.

नाभा पृथिव्याः (nābhā pṛthivyāḥ): in the Ṛgveda and the other Vedas it is the custom to describe the sacrificial altar as the navel (middle region) of the earth. In the sentence अयं यज्ञो भुवनस्य नाभिः (ayaṃ yajño bhuvanasya nābhiḥ) of the Ṛk 1-164-35, and in the Yajurveda mantra of Tai. Brā. 2-6-7-1, नाभा पृथिव्या अधि । दिवो वर्ष्मन् समिध्यते । (nābhā pṛthivyā adhi | divo varṣman samidhyate |), it is said that the navel of the earth is the sacrificial altar.

मित्रः ईड्यः मातरिश्वा दूतः यजथाय देवान् आ वक्षत् (mitraḥ īḍyaḥ mātariśvā dūtaḥ yajathāya devān ā vakṣat): this Agni is a friend of all, that is, one who wishes good like a friend. Therefore all praise this Agni. Here Agni is praised by the word mātariśvan. For the word mātariśvan the ordinary

[continuing:] meaning is the wind that blows in the atmosphere; yet the component meaning of the word mātariśvan has been stated with reference to Agni: मातर्यंतरिक्षे श्वसिति प्राणति सूर्यरूपेण चेष्टत इति मातरिश्वा । अथवा मातर्यरण्यां श्वसिति निवसतीति मातरिश्वा ! (mātaryaṃtarikṣe śvasiti prāṇati sūryarūpeṇa ceṣṭata iti mātariśvā | athavā mātaryaraṇyāṃ śvasiti nivasatīti mātariśvā !) That is, the sun moving in the atmosphere shines, giving vitality to all living beings. Since this sun is itself a transformation of the Agni in the heaven-world, the word mātariśvan may be said to denote Agni in the form of the Āditya. Or, since Agni is produced by churning in the araṇis (pieces of wood), the araṇis are in the place of mothers to Agni; since Agni is in such araṇis, mātariśvan means Agni: this is another derivation of the form. Yāska has stated for the word mātariśvan the derivation मातरिश्वा वायुर्माशर्यंतरिक्षे श्वसिति मार्तर्याश्वनितीति ना (mātariśvā vāyurmāśaryaṃtarikṣe śvasiti mārtaryāśvanitīti nā) (Ni. 7-26) (so printed). Mātari means in the atmosphere; śvasiti means it moves; therefore it is the wind that moves in the atmosphere: one meaning. Or, because it moves swiftly (āśu) in the atmosphere (mātari) (aniti, gacchati), the wind is named mātariśvan: another meaning. That is, the word mātariśvan has been explained as a deity moving in the atmosphere. Not only the wind moves in the atmosphere; the sun too moves in the atmosphere, so the sun too is called mātariśvan. Since the sun is a transformation of Agni in the heaven-world, Agni is here described by the word mātariśvan. We have said before that Agni is the messenger of the gods. It is prayed here that such an Agni, of these qualities and the messenger of the gods, bring the gods to the sacrificial ground for the sacrifice, that is, to accept the oblations in this sacrifice we are performing and favour us.

Formerly the whole world was covered with black darkness. Then Mātariśvan recognised Agni in subtle form in the sky and churned him. Afterwards he brought that Agni to the earth for the convenience of the sacrifice. The well-known story is told in the Ṛgveda in in these Ṛks and in others there is the description praising Agni, that he shone in the sacrificial house only after Mātariśvan brought him.

मातरिश्वा वायुर्मातर्यंतरिक्षे श्वसिति मातराश्वनितीति वा। (mātariśvā vāyurmātaryaṃtarikṣe śvasiti mātarāśvanitīti vā|) Because he breathes or moves in the atmosphere, the wind is named mātariśvan. In the Ṛk 1-96-4 the word is explained as Agni, and in 1-141-3 as the sacrificer. But except in one or two such places, everywhere mātariśvan means the wind.

अन्यं मातरिश्वा दिव आ जभार (anyaṃ mātariśvā diva ā jabhāra): the supernatural manifestation and the worldly origin of Agni, the soul of the sacrifice, are described in many ways. Agni, who is the banner of the sacrifices, the means of the vidatha, the father of the rites and the king of the sacrifices (see the descriptions in the Ṛks 3-3-3; 3-11-2; 4-2-3 and others), had his manifestation in the form of lightning first for the wind, as in the Ṛksaṃhitā:

सजायमानः परमे व्योमन्याविरग्नि रभवन्मातरिश्वने । (sajāyamānaḥ parame vyomanyāviragni rabhavanmātariśvane |) (printed ము. సం (saṃ). 1-143-2)

p. 770

[Running head, p. 770: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3, A. 1, Sū. 5.]

[continuing:] such Ṛks it is praised. There are many Śruti sentences that this wind brought Agni, hidden in a far-off region, for Bhṛgu and for Manu, the sacrificers, and helped them. For example:

द्विजन्मानं रयिमिव प्रशस्तं रातिं भरद्भृगवे मातरिश्वा । (dvijanmānaṃ rayimiva praśastaṃ rātiṃ bharadbhṛgave mātariśvā |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 1-60-1)

ऐनं नयन्मातरिश्वा परावतो देवेभ्यो मथितं परि । (ainaṃ nayanmātariśvā parāvato devebhyo mathitaṃ pari |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-9-5)

ईळेन्यं प्रथमं मातरिश्वा देवास्त्रक्षुर्मनवे यजत्रं । (īḷenyaṃ prathamaṃ mātariśvā devāstrakṣurmanave yajatraṃ |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-46-9)

In these and many other Ṛks it is well known from the Śruti that Mātariśvan, for the benefit of the sacrificers Bhṛgu and Manu, brought to the earth Agni hidden in a distant country and did good to all the people on the earth.

(Gist: O Agni, grant to me, the constant offerer, the cow-formed goddess Iḷā, giver of many works and cattle; may sons and grandsons be ours; may your good will be fruitful for us. Grammatical notes follow in the bhāṣya.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

(He) Agne: O Agni. Purudaṃsaṃ: distinguished by many works. Goḥ saniṃ: the bestower of cattle and the like. Iḷāṃ: the goddess named Iḷā, in the form of a cow. Śaśvattamaṃ: perpetually. Havamānāya: to me, who am performing the sacrifice. Sādha: accomplish (favour). Naḥ: to us. Sūnuḥ: a son. Tanayaḥ: a grandson. Syāt: let there be. (He) Agne: O Agni. Te: your. (Yā) sumatiḥ: whatever good will. Sā: that. Asme: for us. Vijāvā: unbarren. Bhūtu: let it be.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Agni, make the earth, named Iḷā and in the form of a cow, who gives the cattle that help in many works, favourable to us who are constantly engaged in performing sacrifice; and, O Agni, may your good will, that you should grant sons, grandsons and so on to the praisers, be always unbarren (fruitful) for us.

Printed English translation

Grant, Agni, to the offerer of the oblation, the earth, the bestower of cattle, the means of many (pious rites), such that it may be perpetual : may there be to us sons and grandsons, born in our race, and may your good-will ever be productive of benefits to us.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

पुरुदंसं-पुरूणि बहूनि दंसानि कर्माणि यस्याः सा । (purudaṃsaṃ-purūṇi bahūni daṃsāni karmāṇi yasyāḥ sā |) The word daṃsa is stated among the twenty-six names of work, अप्पः दंसः (appaḥ daṃsaḥ) and the rest (Ni. 3-2). The meaning is: possessing many works.

इळां—एतन्नामिकां गोरूपां देवतां । (iḷāṃ—etannāmikāṃ gorūpāṃ devatāṃ |) The word iḷā is stated among the names of the earth (Ni. 2-5); it is also stated among the names of speech (Ni. 2-23), among the names of food (Ni. 3-9) and among the names of cow (Ni. 3-6). And the word iḷā is formed from the root īś.

अभि न इळा यूथस्य माता स्मन्नदीभिरुर्वशी वा गृणातु । उर्वशी वा बृहद्दिवा गृणानाभ्यूर्वाना प्रभृथस्यायोः । सिषक्तु न ऊर्जव्यस्य पुष्पेः ॥ (abhi na iḷā yūthasya mātā smannadībhirurvaśī vā gṛṇātu | urvaśī vā bṛhaddivā gṛṇānābhyūrvānā prabhṛthasyāyoḥ | siṣaktu na ūrjavyasya puṣpeḥ ‖) (printed ऋ. सं (saṃ). 5-41-19, 20)

In these Ṛks the goddess Iḷā or Iḍā is explained as a deity of the middle place. Sāyaṇa has explained the meaning as a deity named Iḷā who has taken the form of a cow.

शश्वत्तमं हवमानाय साध—निरंतरं हवमानाय यजमानाय मह्यं साधय । (śaśvattamaṃ havamānāya sādha—niraṃtaraṃ havamānāya yajamānāya mahyaṃ sādhaya |) Agni is prayed that the favour of the goddess Iḷā, who is in the form of a cow, full of abundant greatness, and who fulfils the desired aims of the sacrificer who always gratifies Agni with oblations, may be obtained.

सूनुः—पुत्रः, तनयः पौत्रः । (sūnuḥ—putraḥ, tanayaḥ pautraḥ |) The words tanaya and sūnu are read among the fifteen names of offspring, तुक्, तोकं (tuk, tokaṃ) and the rest (Ni. 3-2).

एता विश्वा सवना तूतुमा कृषे स्वयं सूनो सहसो यानि दधिषे । वराय ते पात्रं धर्मणे तना यज्ञो मंत्रो ब्रह्योद्यतं वचः ॥ (etā viśvā savanā tūtumā kṛṣe svayaṃ sūno sahaso yāni dadhiṣe | varāya te pātraṃ dharmaṇe tanā yajño maṃtro brahodyataṃ vacaḥ ‖) (printed पु (pu). सं (saṃ). 10-50-6)

[The window ends here, at the end of p. 772, after this quotation and its reference; the next window continues.]

p. 773

[Running head, p. 773: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 26, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

[continuing:] in this Ṛk the word सूनो (sūno) is explained as son, and Agni is called सहससूनो (sahasasūno), "son of strength" (printed with सहसस्पुत्र (sahasasputra) in brackets). Sāyaṇa explains the word sūnu as son and the word tanaya as grandson (son's son).

सुमतिः—शोभना बुद्धिः । (sumatiḥ—śobhanā buddhiḥ |) The Nirukta authors explain देवसुमतिं (devasumatiṃ) as the auspicious thought of the gods; वैश्वानरस्य सुमत् स्याम (vaiśvānarasya sumat syāma) as being in the auspicious thought; and वयं देवस्य धीमहि सुमतिं सत्यधर्मणः (vayaṃ devasya dhīmahi sumatiṃ satyadharmaṇaḥ) with the same sense, auspicious thought. Sāyaṇa prays that there may be the auspicious thought of Agni, such as the birth and growth of sons, grandsons and so on, which Agni can grant to the sacrificers who have gratified him with oblations.

Anuvāda (Kannada). This sūkta, प्र कारवो मनना (pra kāravo mananā), is the sixth sūkta in the first anuvāka. It has eleven ṛks. The seer of this sūkta is Viśvāmitra; the deity is Agni; the Anukramaṇikā begins with "pra kāravaḥ". The application of this sūkta at the time of reciting the Prātaranuvāka and the Āśvina śastra mantras has been stated in the application of the previous sūkta by the sūtra प्रत्यग्निरुषसस्त्रीणि (pratyagniruṣasastrīṇi) (printed so, joined across a line break). The first ṛk of this sūkta is to be recited as the yājyā mantra when the oblation is offered in the animal sacrifice addressed to Agni, as the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra says प्र कारवो मनना वच्यमाना एका चेतत्सरस्वती नदीनां (pra kāravo mananā vacyamānā ekā cetatsarasvatī nadīnāṃ) (Ā. 3-7). And the ṛk ऐभिरग्ने (aibhiragne) of this sūkta (the 9th ṛk of this sūkta) is to be used as the yājyā mantra of the Pātnīvata graha, as the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra says अग्नीध्रः पात्नीवतस्य यजत्यैभिरग्ने सरथं याह्यर्वाजति (agnīdhraḥ pātnīvatasya yajatyaibhiragne sarathaṃ yāhyarvājati) (Ā. 5-19).

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Kāravaḥ: O sacrificers. Devayantaḥ: you who are devoted to the gods. Mananā: by the meditative praise. Vacyamānāḥ: being inspired. Devadrīcīṃ: the ladle (sukṣātra, so printed) that goes near and worships the gods. Pra nayata: bring forward. Dakṣiṇāvāṭ: that which is to be carried to the south side of the Āhavanīya. Vājinī: filled with food. Prācī: held facing east. Agnaye: for Agni. Haviḥ: the oblation. Bharantī: carrying. Ghṛtācī: filled with ghee, the ladle. Eti: approaches Agni.

p. 775

[Running head, p. 775: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 26 (no period at the end, as printed), Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O sacrificers, you who are devoted to the gods, inspired by meditative praise, bring the ladle, the means of worshipping the gods. The ladle, to be carried to the south side of the Āhavanīya, filled with food, held facing east, carrying the oblation for Agni, filled with ghee, approaches Agni.

Printed English translation

Devout ministrants, who are to be inspired by prayer, bring forth (the ladle) destined for the worship of the gods, which is to be conveyed to the south (of the fire-altar), and which charged with (sacrificial) food, pointed to the east, containing the oblation, and filled with liquefied butter, proceeds to Agni.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

कारवः देवयंतः मनना वच्यमानाः देवद्रीचीं प्र नयत (kāravaḥ devayaṃtaḥ mananā vacyamānāḥ devadrīcīṃ pra nayata): the word kāravaḥ is read among the names of praisers (Ni. 3-19). Formed from the root डुकृञ् करणे (ḍukṛñ karaṇe), the word has the ordinary sense "makers". But in the Ṛgveda this word is generally used in the sense of praisers or sacrificers. In this sentence the sacrificer addresses the priests: O praisers, you who wish the gods to come to this sacrificial ground, inspired by the mantras you recite while meditating on the gods in your mind, bring for the offering the wooden ladle called sruc, used to offer ghee and the like in Agni; this is the chief purport of this sentence.

दक्षिणावाट् वाजिनी प्राची अग्नये हविः भरंती धृताची एति (dakṣiṇāvāṭ vājinī prācī agnaye haviḥ bharaṃtī dhṛtācī eti): the qualities of the sruc mentioned above are described in this sentence. Since the priests carry this sruc, for the sake of the offering, to the place on the south side of the Āhavanīya fire on the sacrificial altar where the priests sit, this is described here by the word dakṣiṇāvāṭ. And in this sruc the food in the form of oblation is filled for the offering; ghee is also filled in it. They have placed the sruc, the offering ladle thus filled with oblation (food) and ghee, facing east near Agni to make the offering in Agni. The word वाजः (vājaḥ) is read among the names of food (Ni. 3-9). Although the word धृताची (dhṛtācī) is read among the names of night (Ni. 2-18), here it is used in the sense of the sruc filled with ghṛta (ghee).

O Agni, worthy of sacrifice, as soon as you are born you have pervaded both heaven and earth; and by your greatness you have exceeded and pervaded earth and atmosphere. May your seven-tongued divisions, the Āhavanīya and the rest, be praised.

Printed English translation

Agni, as soon as born, occupy both heaven and earth ; for you, to whom sacrifice is to be offered, exceed in magnitude the firmament and the earth : may your seven-tongued fires be glorified.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

अग्ने जायमानः रोदसी आ अप्पणाः (agne jāyamānaḥ rodasī ā appaṇāḥ) (so printed): O Agni, as soon as you are born you have pervaded heaven and earth with your radiance. Here the meaning Āditya, the transformation of Agni in the heaven-place, may be given for Agni. The chief purport is that as soon as Agni is born, that is, as soon as the Āditya (the Sun), a transformation of Agni, rises, earth and atmosphere are all filled with his radiance. The word rodasī is read among the names of heaven and earth (Ni. 3-22).

उत प्रयज्यो महिना दिवश्चित् पृथिव्याः प्र रिक्षाः (uta prayajyo mahinā divaścit pṛthivyāḥ pra rikṣāḥ): besides, O Agni, you who are worshipped in sacrifices and the like, by your boundless greatness you have exceeded and pervaded more than earth and atmosphere. Here the word पृथु विस्तारे (pṛthu vistāre)-derived pṛthivyāḥ is used in the sense of the extremely extensive earth. It is a matter of experience that the atmosphere (or heaven) too extends much farther than we can see with the eye. The purport is that Agni pervades beyond even such extremely extensive earth and atmosphere.

ते सप्तजिह्वा वह्नयः वच्यंतां (te saptajihvā vahnayaḥ vacyaṃtāṃ): may these divisions of Agni, the Āhavanīya and the rest, with your seven kinds of tongues or flames, be praised. For Agni the flames are the tongues. It is said here that there are seven such tongues. In the Purāṇas and elsewhere these seven tongues have different names such as Kālī and Karālī. Here the plural word vahnayaḥ must be understood as the divisions of Agni, Āhavanīya, Gārhapatya and Dakṣiṇāgni, which are established on the sacrificial altar and carry the oblations offered to the gods. The chief purport is that we praise such Agnis.

(Gist: heaven, earth and the worthy gods seat you, the hotṛ, for the sacrifice (dama) when the devout people of Manu praise your bright flame with oblations.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Yadi: when. Mānuṣīḥ: the descendants of Manu. Devayantīḥ: the devoted to the gods. Payasvatīḥ (printed पयस्वतीः (payasvatīḥ)): those who hold oblations. Viśaḥ: the people. Śukraṃ: bright. Arciḥ: flame. Īḷate: praise (then). Dyauśca: the atmosphere. Pṛthivī: the earth. Yajñiyāsaḥ: also the gods worthy of the sacrifice. Hotāraḥ (so printed): you in the form of hotṛ. Tvā: you. Damāya: for the sacrifice. Ni sādayante: appease (worship).

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Agni, when the people, descendants of Manu, devoted to the gods and holding oblations, praise your bright flame, then the atmosphere, the earth and the gods worthy of the sacrifice worship and satisfy you, in the form of hotṛ, for the sake of the sacrifice.

Printed English translation

The firmament and the earth and the adorable (gods) propitiate you their invoker, for the (completion of the) sacrifice, whenever the descendants of Manu, pious, and bearing oblations, glorify your radiant flame.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

[Running head, p. 779: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 26, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

[continuing:] that is, when human beings perform a sacrifice addressed to the gods, they have prepared oblations to offer to the gods. But the gods do not accept their share of the sacrifice directly from men; they accept only the oblations and the like offered in Agni. Therefore, so that Agni may carry to the gods the oblations they offer, the men (the sacrificers) praise in many ways, with Vedic mantras, Agni blazing in the sacrificial pit. After praising thus they become ready to perform the sacrificial work duly. Seeing this, the gods who are addressed in the sacrifice, heaven and earth and the rest, in the joy that a share in this sacrifice will come to them also, encourage and appease Agni, the hotṛ (or messenger), who conveys to them the oblations and the like offered in the sacrifice, for the sake of the sacrifice; this is the purport.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Mahān: the great. Haryamāṇaḥ: the desired (by the sacrificers). Agni. Dyāvā antaḥ: in the middle of heaven and earth. Māhine: full of excessive glory. Sadhasthe: in his own place. Dhruvaḥ: motionless. Ā niṣattaḥ: sits. Āsne (printed आस्त्रे (āstrè)): those that pervade everywhere. Sapatnī: those who have the Sun as their common husband. Ajare: ageless. Amṛkte: unharmed (by others). Sabardughe: heaven and earth, that pour water in the form of rain. Urugāyasya: to Agni of great reach. Dhenū: become delightful.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

The great Agni, desired by the sacrificers, sits motionless in his own place, in the middle of heaven and earth, full of excessive glory. Heaven and earth, which pervade everywhere, have the Sun as their common husband, are ageless, unharmed by others, and pour water in the form of rain, become delightful to Agni of great reach.

Printed English translation

The great and adorable Agni is firm, seated on his spacious throne between heaven and earth ; and the poweful [sic] fellow-brides (of the sun), the imperishable, uninjurable(heaven and earth) are the two milk-yieiding [sic] cows of the wide-extending (Agni).

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

महान् हर्यमाणः द्यावा अंतः माहिने सधस्थे ध्रुव आ निषत्तः (mahān haryamāṇaḥ dyāvā aṃtaḥ māhine sadhasthe dhruva ā niṣattaḥ): the greatly glorious Agni, desired by the sacrificers for carrying out the sacrifice, sits motionless in the sacrificial pit, which is his own place full of his glory, in the sacrificial altar between earth and atmosphere. That is, the sacrificers who wish to perform the sacrifice have installed the excellent Agni in the fire-pit in their sacrificial hall between earth and atmosphere, for the sake of the sacrifice; the purport is that in this fire-pit, said to be Agni's own place, Agni is established and shines well without any hindrance. Here the dual dyāvā indicates both heaven and earth.

p. 781

आस्क्रे सपत्नी अजरे अमृक्तेसबर्दुघे उरुगायस्य धेनू (भवतः) (āskre sapatnī ajare amṛkte sabardughe urugāyasya dhenū (bhavataḥ)): heaven and earth behave with great joy towards such an Agni and bring him delight. These heaven and earth pervade all regions and extend over a wide place, that is, they are extremely extensive. Since the Sun stands between heaven and earth, he shines on both with his radiance and protects them. Since the Sun is a common protector of both, this is indicated by the word sapatnī. Though these heaven and earth are very ancient, they remain the same without any change, that is, without alteration, so the word ajare indicates that they have no decay of age. No one can injure them, that is, deform them; no one can change their shape and form. Moreover, these heaven and earth pour water in the form of rain, as cows give milk, for the nourishment of all beings. Such heaven and earth are delightful to Agni; this is the purport.

Some words in this Ṛk require explanation. For the word sadhastha Yāska states the derivation सहस्थानेसमानस्थाने आभिमुख्येन आत्मनः परिचरणाय (sahasthānesamānasthāne ābhimukhyena ātmanaḥ paricaraṇāya) (Ni. 3-15), that is, a common place, chiefly a place fit for oneself and worthy to be served. Here Agni's own place is the sacrificial pit.

सपत्नि (sapatni): those having a common husband or protector, that is, those who have one and the same protector. The word sapatna or sapatnī is also used here and there in the sense of "enemy".

सबर्दुघे (sabardughe): sabaḥ means milk, nectar, water. Dughe means a cow that gives milk. Here it is used in the sense of heaven and earth accompanied by the clouds that pour water.

उरुगायस्य-पृथुगमनस्याधिकस्तुतेर्वाग्नेः । (urugāyasya-pṛthugamanasyādhikastutervāgneḥ |) Two kinds of meaning are explained: one of very swift going, that is, who pervades very quickly, or one who is praised much (the supplied text has the misprint वेगवाव (vegavāva)).

धेनू (dhenū): the word dhenu is read among the names of speech (Ni. 2-23). For the word dhenu there are many meanings, such as धेनुवद्दोग्ध्री सर्वकामान् (dhenuvaddogdrī sarvakāmān): a cow that satisfies everyone by giving milk, or one that fulfils all desires like a cow. Here the word is used in the sense of heaven and earth, which give delight like a cow.

[Running head, p. 783: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 27, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

Printed English translation

Great, Agni, are the deeds of you the mighty one : you have spread abroad by your power, the heaven and earth; you have been the messenger of the gods) ; as soon as begotten, you have become the leader of men.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

The meaning of this Ṛk is easy, without difficult words or doubtful matters described. Only the ordinary qualities of Agni are described. O Agni, your works, that is, the many works such as your carrying, as messenger of the gods, the oblations offered by men through you in sacrifices to the gods, are full of greatness; that is, these works cannot be done by others. By your extraordinary works and by your radiance, heaven and earth attain growth. Besides offering the oblation to the gods as their messenger, you, installed on the sacrificial altar, guide the sacrificers who perform the sacrifice and obtain their desired aims for them; this is the chief purport of this Ṛk.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O shining Agni, yoke in the front of the sacrifice the horses with praised manes, provided with fitting ropes, with bodies smooth as ghee, and of ruddy colour. Afterwards seat all the gods in the chariot and bring them. O Agni, of born wisdom, make the sacrifices fair (make the sacrifices be fair).

Printed English translation

Harness with traces, to your car, your long-maned, ruddy (steeds, to come) to the sacrifice : bring hither, divine Jatavedas, all gods, and make them propitious to the oblation.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

देव केशिना योग्याभिः धृतस्नुवा रोहिता ऋतस्य धुरि धिष्य (deva keśinā yogyābhiḥ dhṛtasnuvā rohitā ṛtasya dhuri dhiṣya) (printed धिष्य (dhiṣya)): since the hair on the neck is an ornament of horses, the horses of Agni's chariot are here described by the word केशिना (keśinā). Yāska, explaining the various vehicles of the gods, has stated the derivation that rohita is the name of Agni's vehicle, the horse: रोहितोऽग्नेः (rohitoSgneḥ), "the red horse is Agni's vehicle" (Ni. 2-28). The word ṛta has the meanings truth and sacrifice; here it is used in the sense of sacrifice. Therefore, O shining Agni, to make your chariot ready to come towards our sacrifice, harness to the yoke of your chariot the dusky red horses, charming with thick manes on the neck, provided with ropes or bridles, and beautiful to look at with the bodily lustre smooth as ghee; this is the chief purport of this sentence.

O Agni, when you burn the plants and the like in the forests, your radiances shine more than the sun. You shine emulating the exceedingly bright and ancient dawns. The praisers praise the radiances of you, the praiseworthy hotṛ.

Printed English translation

When, Agni, you abide in the woods, consuming the waters at your pleasure, then your rays, illuminate the heavens, and you shine like many former radiant dawns : the gods themselves commend (the brilliancy) of their praise-meriting invoker.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

अग्ने यत् वनेषु अपः अशधक् ते रोकाः दिवश्चित् आ रुचयंत (agne yat vaneṣu apaḥ aśadhak te rokāḥ divaścit ā rucayaṃta) (printed अशधक् (aśadhak)): O Agni, when you burn the trees and the like that have grown well in the forests with the help of waters, your blazing radiances shine far more than the rays or radiance of the sun. In this sentence the forest fire is described. It is a matter of common knowledge that the light and heat arising from Agni when he burns great trees in a forest are greater than the sun's brilliance. In this sentence the word अपः (apaḥ), "waters", indicates the trees and the like that have grown stout by the waters; it should be understood that the cause is stated in place of the effect. For the word चित् (cit) Yāska says

चिदित्येषोऽनेककर्मा । आचार्यश्चिदिदं ब्रूयादिति पूजायां । दधिचिदित्युपमार्थे । कुल्माषांश्चिदाहरेत्यवकुत्सिते । (cidityeṣo 'nekakarmā | ācāryaścididaṃ brūyāditi pūjāyāṃ | dadhicidityupamārthe | kulmāṣāṃścidāharetyavakutsite |) (printed सि (si). 1-4)

That is, the word cit has many meanings and is used according to the context. Saying that it is used to indicate honour, in the sense of comparison, and in censure, he explains by examples: that the word cit in the sentence अचार्यश्चिदिदं ब्रूयात् (acāryaścididaṃ brūyāt) (printed अचार्य (acārya)) indicates honour, that in the sentence दधिचिदित्युपमार्थे (dadhicidityupamārthe) it is used in the sense of comparison, and that in the sentence कुल्माषांक्षिदाहरेत् (kulmāṣāṃkṣidāharet) (so printed) it indicates censure. In the present Ṛk the words divaścit indicate comparison.

p. 787

विभातीः पूर्वी उषः अनु भासि (vibhātīḥ pūrvī uṣaḥ anu bhāsi) (printed so): since Agni is kindled and installed for the sacrifice after the time of Uṣas, it is described here that you shine following the bright and ancient times of Uṣas. The plural is used here to indicate the times of Uṣas that appear on many days.

मंद्रस्य होतुः देवाः पनयंत (maṃdrasya hotuḥ devāḥ panayaṃta): in this sentence the meaning fits properly if a word meaning radiance or qualities is supplied. O Agni, the gods praise the radiances or qualities of you, the praiseworthy one and the hotṛ who invokes the gods; this is the purport of the sentence.

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Agne: O Agni. Urau: in the vast. Antarikṣe: in the atmosphere. Ye devāḥ: whichever gods. Madanti: are joyful. Divaḥ: of the sun. Rocane: in the atmosphere that holds the radiance. Ye vā: whichever gods. Santi: are. Ūmāḥ vā: whichever ancestors named Ūma. Yajatrāḥ: worthy of sacrifice. Ye: whichever gods. Suhavāsaḥ: having excellent invocation. Āyemire: come. Ratyaḥ (so printed, for rathyaḥ): fit for the chariot. Aśvāḥ: whatever horses of yours there are (come to our sacrifice with all of them).

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Agni, the gods who sport in the vast atmosphere, the gods who are in the world holding the Āditya's radiance, the ancestors named Ūma, the gods who come with excellent invocation, and the horses of yours fit for your excellent chariot: come towards our sacrifice with all of them.

Printed English translation

The deities who sport in the spacious (firmament) ; those who are in the luminous sphere of heaven ; the adorable Umas, who come when worthily invoked ; the horses, Agni, that are fit for your car.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk, taking in all the gods who are in the atmosphere, the gods who are in heaven, the ancestor-deities called Ūma, and whatever other gods worthy of sacrifice there are, Agni is prayed to come to the sacrifice we are performing, with the horses named Rohita harnessed to your chariot. In this Ṛk the sentence is incomplete, without a verb. Therefore everything said in this Ṛk must be construed together with what is said in the next Ṛk.

Here the bhāṣyakāra has explained the word ऊमाः (ūmāḥ) as the ancestor-deities called Ūma. Since who these ancestors are, what their nature is, and so on, are not stated in the Ṛgveda, we have not come to know anything further about them.

p. 789

[Running head, p. 789: Aṣṭaka 2 (printed "అ. ౮" without the period after ౮), Adhyāya 8, Varga 27, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

In this Ṛk Agni is praised and is prayed to come to the sacrificial ground, bringing the various gods in the three worlds and the ancestor-deities. Which are these three worlds? Who are the gods in them? How many are they? What is their nature? We have explained these and similar matters in detail in the first part, the Pīṭhikā section; but here, quoting Saṃhitā sentences and Nirukta statements as the context requires, the number and nature of all those gods will be told in the Special Topics of the next Ṛk.

[Running head, p. 790: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ. 3 (no period after 3), Ā. (printed so for A.) 1, Sū. 6.]

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Agni, with the gods described before, seated in one chariot or in separate chariots, come towards our sacrifice. Bring the three hundred and three gods (as supplied) with their wives for the drinking of Soma. Gratify them with the Soma (printed "सोमरदिंद (somaradiṃda)").

Printed English translation

With all these in one chariot, Agni, or in many (chariots), come to our presence, for your horses are able : bring the three and thirty divinities with their wives, for the sake of (the sacrificial food, and exhilarate them (all with the Soma libation).

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

In this Ṛk too, as in the previous Ṛk, Agni is prayed to bring the gods to the sacrificial ground. But besides saying that the wives of the gods are also to be brought, the number of the gods is stated: त्रिंशतं त्रिंशच्च देवान् (triṃśataṃ triṃśacca devān) (printed so), "three hundred and three gods" (as supplied; the printed English of this Ṛk says "three and thirty"). In the Ṛgveda the description of the number of the gods is of various kinds. The seer of this sūkta, Viśvāmitra, himself in the ninth sūkta of this Maṇḍala:

त्रीणि शता त्री सहस्राण्यग्निं त्रिंशच्च देवा नव चासपर्यन् । (trīṇi śatā trī sahasrāṇyagniṃ triṃśacca devā nava cāsaparyan |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-9-9)

says that the number of the gods is three thousand three hundred and thirty-three (as supplied). Other seers say the number of the gods is thirty-three. Who these are and what their details are will be examined according to the Nirukta authors' statements, and then the matters concerning this in other Ṛks will be shown with examples.

It is said in detail (vyaṣṭi) that there are three thousand three hundred and thirty-three gods. It is also explained that all these gods worship Agni. Sāyaṇa explains that the gods are described in the aggregate (samaṣṭi) in the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad:

देवसंख्याच बृहदारण्यके अभिहिता—महिमान एवैषामेते त्रयस्त्रिंशत्त्वेव देवा इति । कतमे ते त्रयस्त्रिंशदष्टौ वसव एकादश रुद्रा द्वादशादित्यास्त एकत्रिंशदिंद्रश्चैव प्रजापतिश्च त्रयस्त्रिंशा ॥ (devasaṃkhyāca bṛhadāraṇyake abhihitā—mahimāna evaiṣāmete trayastriṃśattveva devā iti | katame te trayastriṃśadaṣṭau vasava ekādaśa rudrā dvādaśādityāsta ekatriṃśadiṃdraścaiva prajāpatiśca trayastriṃśā ‖) (printed बृ आ (bṛ ā). 3-9, i.e. Bṛ. Ā. 3-9)

[The window ends here, at the end of p. 790, after the Bṛhadāraṇyaka quotation and its reference; the next window continues.]

p. 791

[Running head, p. 791: Ā. (printed so for A.) 2, A. 8, Varga 27, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

[continuing:] the number of the gods is only thirty-three: eight Vasus, eleven Rudras, twelve Ādityas, Indra and Prajāpati. These make thirty-three gods in all. By their greatness they are explained to be three thousand three hundred and thirty-three (as supplied, "मूरुसाविरद मूरुन्नूर मूवत्तमूरु (mūrusāvirada mūrunūra mūvattamūru)"). On this matter, in the Ṛk ये देवासो दिव्येकादशस्थ (ye devāso divyekādaśastha) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 139-11-1, as printed) the words ते देवासो यज्ञमिमं जुषध्वं (te devāso yajñamimaṃ juṣadhvaṃ), "you gods, all of you, partake of this our sacrifice", address the gods of the three worlds. By दिवि एकादश, पृथिव्यां एकादश, अप्सुक्षितो एकादश (divi ekādaśa, pṛthivyāṃ ekādaśa, apsukṣito ekādaśa) it is said that the total number of gods from the three worlds is thirty-three. Sāyaṇa, quoting the Nirukta statement यद्यपि तिस्र एव देवताः (yadyapi tisra eva devatāḥ) (Ni. 7-5), says:

क्षित्याद्यभिमानिन्नो देवतास्तिस्र एव तथापि महत्तेन स्वस्वविभूत्या त्रयस्त्रींशत्संख्याता भवंति । तत्तत्स्थाना अन्यास्तद्विभूतय इत्युक्तत्वात् । (kṣityādyabhimāninno devatāstisra eva tathāpi mahattena svasvavibhūtyā trayastrīṃśatsaṃkhyātā bhavaṃti | tattatsthānā anyāstadvibhūtaya ityuktatvāt |)

Although the deities presiding over earth, atmosphere and the heaven-world are only three, by their greatness they appear to number thirty-three; all the other gods in the respective worlds are their manifestations (vibhūtis). The Nirukta authors too:

तिस्र एव देवता इति नैरुक्ताः । अग्निः पृथिवीस्थानः । वायुर्वा इंद्रो वा अंतरिक्षस्थानः । सूरो द्युस्थानः । तासां महाभाग्यात् एकैकस्या अपि बहूनि नामधेयानि भवंति । अपि वा कर्मपृथक्त्वात् । (tisra eva devatā iti nairuktāḥ | agniḥ pṛthivīsthānaḥ | vāyurvā iṃdro vā aṃtarikṣasthānaḥ | sūro dyusthānaḥ | tāsāṃ mahābhāgyāt ekaikasyā api bahūni nāmadheyāni bhavaṃti | api vā karmapṛthaktvāt |) (Ni. 7-5)

According to the Nirukta authors, the three deities, Agni, Vāyu or Indra, and Sūra, are the presiding deities of the three worlds, earth, atmosphere and the heaven-world. Saying that these deities have many names according to their greatness or because of the variety of their works, they state, from Ni. 7-14 to 9-43 (as printed, "७-१४ रिंद ९-४३ ने खंड (7-14 riṃda 9-43 ne khaṃḍa)"), अथातोऽनुक्रमिष्याम अग्निः पृथिवीस्थानः तं प्रथमं वाख्यास्यामः । (athāto 'nukramiṣyāma agniḥ pṛthivīsthānaḥ taṃ prathamaṃ vākhyāsyāmaḥ |), the nature of the gods of the earth, and from 10-1 to 11-50, अथातो मध्यस्थाना देवताः । तासां वायुः प्रथमागामि भवति । (athāto madhyasthānā devatāḥ | tāsāṃ vāyuḥ prathamāgāmi bhavati |), the nature of the gods of the atmosphere. Although there are differences of opinion on the number of the gods thus divided, in many places of the Ṛksaṃhitā a single view is seen.

आ नासत्या त्रिभिरेकादशैरिह देवेभिर्यातं मधुपेयमश्विना । प्रायुस्तारिष्टं नी रपांसि मृक्षतं सेधतं द्वेषो भवतं सचाभुवा ॥ (ā nāsatyā tribhirekādaśairiha devebhiryātaṃ madhupeyamaśvinā | prāyustāriṣṭaṃ nī rapāṃsi mṛkṣataṃ sedhataṃ dveṣo bhavataṃ sacābhuvā ‖) (printed ಮ. ಸಂ (saṃ). 1-34-11)

[Running head, p. 792: Sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitā, Maṃ, 3, A. 1, Sū. 6 (commas in place of periods in "ಸಂ (maṃ), ३, ७.", as printed).]

In this the Aśvin deities are invited to come here, desiring the mead, with the thirty-three gods (11 × 3, printed "११ (11)x३"); and

श्रुष्टीवानो हि दाशुषे देवा अग्ने विचेतसः । तान्रोहिदश्व गिर्वणस्त्रयस्त्रिंशतमा वह ॥ (śruṣṭīvāno hi dāśuṣe devā agne vicetasaḥ | tānrohidaśva girvaṇastrayastriṃśatamā vaha ‖) (printed ಮ. ಸಂ (saṃ). 1-45-2)

here, as in the present Ṛk, Agni is prayed to bring the thirty-three gods. Likewise:

ऐभिरग्ने सरथं याह्यर्वाङ् नानारथं वा विभवो ह्यश्वाः । पत्नीवतस्त्रिंशतं त्रींश्च देवाननुष्वधमा वह मादयस्व ॥ (aibhiragne sarathaṃ yāhyarvāj nānārathaṃ vā vibhavo hyaśvāḥ | patnīvatastriṃśataṃ trīṃśca devānanuṣvadhamā vaha mādayasva ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 3-6-9)

इति स्तुतासो असथा रिशादसो ये स्थ त्रयश्च त्रिंशच्च । मनोर्देवा यज्ञियासः ॥ (iti stutāso asathā riśādaso ye stha trayaśca triṃśacca | manordevā yajñiyāsaḥ ‖) (printed ಮ. सं (saṃ). 8-30-2)

विश्वैर्देवैस्त्रिभिरेकादशैरिहाद्भिर्मरुद्भिर्भृगुभिः सचाभुवा ।
(viśvairdevaistribhirekādaśairihādbhirmarudbhirbhṛgubhiḥ sacābhuvā |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 8-35-3)

तव त्ये सोम पवमान निण्ये विश्वे देवास्त्रय एकादशासः । दश स्वधाभिरधि सानो अव्ये मृजंति त्वा नद्यः सप्त यह्वीः ॥ (tava tye soma pavamāna niṇye viśve devāstraya ekādaśāsaḥ | daśa svadhābhiradhi sāno avye mṛjaṃti tvā nadyaḥ sapta yahvīḥ ‖) (printed ಮ. सं (saṃ). 9-92-4)

In these and other Ṛks too it is clear that the number of the gods is thirty-three. In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa too:

अष्टौ वसवः । एकादश रुद्राः । द्वादशादित्या इमे एव द्यावापृथिवी त्रयस्त्रिंशद्वै देवाः प्रजापतिश्चतुस्त्रिंशः ॥ (aṣṭau vasavaḥ | ekādaśa rudrāḥ | dvādaśādityā ime eva dyāvāpṛthivī trayastriṃśadvai devāḥ prajāpatiścatustriṃśaḥ ‖) (printed శ. బ్రా (brā). 4-5-7-2)

Eight Vasus, eleven Rudras, twelve Ādityas and heaven and earth together are thirty-three gods; Prajāpati is the thirty-fourth, besides them, it says in one place. But in another place, although the number is the same thirty-three, Indra and Prajāpati are included in place of heaven and earth.

p. 793

[Running head, p. 793: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 27, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

ते त्रयस्त्रिंशदित्यष्टौ वसव एकादश रुद्रा द्वादशादित्यास्त एकत्रिंशदिंद्रश्चैव प्रजाप्रतिश्च त्रयस्त्रिंशाविति । (te trayastriṃśadityaṣṭau vasava ekādaśa rudrā dvādaśādityāsta ekatriṃśadiṃdraścaiva prajāpratiśca trayastriṃśāviti |) (printed శ. బ్రా (brā). 11-6-3-5)

In the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa too:

त्रयस्त्रिंशद्वै देवाः सोमपास्त्रयस्त्रिंशदसोमपा अष्टौ वसव एकादश रुद्रा द्वादशादित्याः प्रजापतिश्च वषट्कारश्चैते देवाः सोमपाः । (trayastriṃśadvai devāḥ somapāstrayastriṃśadasomapā aṣṭau vasava ekādaśa rudrā dvādaśādityāḥ prajāpatiśca vaṣaṭkāraścaite devāḥ somapāḥ |) (printed ఐ. బ్రా (brā). 2-18)

The gods who drink Soma are thirty-three. They are the eight Vasus, the eleven Rudras and the twelve Ādityas, together with Prajāpati and Vaṣaṭkāra. Thus in the Saṃhitā and in the Brāhmaṇas there is one view on this number. But, in this Ṛk, and likewise in the Ṛk 10-52-6, it is said that three thousand three hundred and thirty-three gods worshipped Agni. The same order is in the Vājasaneyi Saṃhitā (33-7). Besides this,

त्रीणि शता त्री सहस्राण्यग्निं त्रिंशच्च देवा नव चासपर्यन् । औक्षन् घृतैरस्त्रणन्बर्हिरस्मा आदिद्धोतारं न्यसादयंत ॥ (trīṇi śatā trī sahasrāṇyagniṃ triṃśacca devā nava cāsaparyan | aukṣan dhṛtairastraṇanbarhirasmā ādiddotāraṃ nyasādayaṃta ‖) (printed మ. సం (saṃ). 3-9-9)

नमो महद्भो नमो अर्भकेभ्यो नमो युवभ्यो नम आशिनेभ्यः । यजाम देवान्यदि शक्नवाम मा ज्यायसः शंसमा वृक्षि देवाः ॥ (namo mahadbho namo arbhakebhyo namo yuvabhyo nama āśinebhyaḥ | yajāma devānyadi śaknavāma mā jyāyasaḥ śaṃsamā vṛkṣi devāḥ ‖) (printed మ. సం (saṃ). 1-27-13)

Since it says salutation to gods of every kind, those of exceeding qualities, of lesser qualities, the young and the old, it is understood that there is variety of nature among the gods. The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa too (7-16), in the story of Śunaḥśepa, recites this Ṛk in the context of the prayer to the Viśvedevas. But, in this there is no distinction between great and small among the gods. There is the praise that all the gods are great. Addressing all the gods of such greatness, the seer prays in the present Ṛk.

नहि वो अस्त्यर्भको देवासो न कुमारकः । विश्वे सतोमहांत इत् । (nahi vo astyarbhako devāso na kumārakaḥ | viśve satomahāṃta it |) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 8-30-1)

[The window ends here, at the end of p. 793, at the end of the Ṛk 9 Special Topics; the next window continues.]

[continuing the Ṛk 9 Special Topics:] देवपत्नियॆ (devapatniyè) (so printed): when the names of the wives of the gods are given in the Ṛgveda, the names of the wives of only some principal gods are given. Namely, इंद्राणी, वरुणानी, अग्नाया (iṃdrāṇī, varuṇānī, agnāyā): the wife of Indra is called Indrāṇī, the wife of Varuṇa Varuṇānī, and the wife of Agni Agnāyī. On this Yāska:

इंद्राणींद्रस्य पत्न्यग्नाय्यग्नेः पत्न्यश्विन्यश्विनोः पत्निराट् राजते । रोदसी रुद्रस्य पत्नि । वरुणानी च वरुणस्य पत्नि । (iṃdrāṇīṃdrasya patnyagnāyyagneḥ patnyaśvinyaśvinoḥ patnirāṭ rājate | rodasī rudrasya patni | varuṇānī ca varuṇasya patni |) (printed सि (si). 12-46)

has said so. These are called the wives of the gods. In some Ṛks their names are not given separately but are stated collectively as "wives of the gods". We give some Ṛks as examples:

इंद्राणीमासु नारिषु सुभगामहमश्रवं । नह्यस्या अपरं चन जरसा मरते पतिर्विश्वस्मादिंद्र उत्तरः ॥ (iṃdrāṇīmāsu nāriṣu subhagāmahamaśravaṃ | nahyasyā aparaṃ cana jarasā marate patirviśvasmādiṃdra uttaraḥ ‖) (Ṛ. Saṃ. 10-86-11) (printed ಮ. सं (saṃ) 10-86-12)

In these and many other Ṛks the names of the wives of the gods are read.

(Gist: he alone is the hotṛ whose sacrifice the vast heaven and earth praise at every sacrifice for increase; the two, fair, watery, true and favourable, stand by the truth-born hotṛ like two sacrifices.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

Urvi: very extensive. Rodasī cit: heaven and earth too. Yasya: whose Agni's greatness. Yajñaṃ yajñaṃ: at every sacrifice. Vṛdhe: for prosperity (the supplied text had Devanagari letters in this word; rewritten in Kannada letters one for one). Abhi gṛṇītaḥ: praise. Saḥ: he. Hotā: becomes the hotṛ. Sumeke: of one form. Ṛtāvarī: charged Heaven and earth, of one form, charged with water, of true nature and favourable, stand waiting like excellent sacrifices in the presence of this truth-born Agni.

Printed English translation

He is the invoker (of the gods), whom the spacious heaven and earth glorify, for the sake of increase, at repeated sacrifices : charged with water, they await like holy rites, propitious to the real presence of him who is born of truth.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

The meaning of this Ṛk is easy. In it, it is praised that heaven and earth praise Agni and are helpers to him in the sacrificial rites. Heaven and earth praise this Agni who invokes the gods to come to the sacrifices. In every sacrifice, that is, in all the sacrifices men perform addressed to the gods, this Agni carries out the offering and gives the sacrificers the fruit of the sacrifice. It is through Agni that a sacrifice is carried out successfully. Near this Agni, of true nature, these heaven and earth, of good form, of true nature and charged with rain-water, take form and stand as helpers to Agni like two sacrifices that serve him; this is the chief purport.

(Gist: this Ṛk is the puroanuvākyā for the sviṣṭakṛt offering of the animal's oblation-cake in all animal sacrifices. Two ways of construing it: "O Agni, grant me the earth Iḷā, giver of cattle; may sons and grandsons be ours; may your good will be fruitful for us"; or, "grant me, the constant offerer, the cow-formed goddess Iḷā". The bhāṣya then gives grammatical notes (śaśvattamam, sādha, vijāvā, bhūtu), which are transcribed but not explained here.)

प्रतिपदार्थ (Pratipadārtha)

(He) Agne: O Agni. Purudaṃsaṃ: distinguished by many works. Goḥ saniṃ: the bestower of cattle and the like. Iḷāṃ: the goddess named Iḷā, in the form of a cow. Śaśvattamaṃ: perpetually. Havamānāya: to me, who am performing the sacrifice. Sādha: accomplish (favour). Naḥ: to us. Sūnuḥ: a son. Tanayaḥ: a grandson. Syāt: let there be. (He) Agne: O Agni. Te: your. (Yā) sumatiḥ: whatever good will. Sā: that. Asme: for us. Vijāvā: unbarren. Bhūtu: let it be.

भावार्थ (Bhāvārtha)

O Agni, make the earth, named Iḷā and in the form of a cow, who gives the cattle that help in many works, favourable to us who are constantly engaged in performing sacrifice; and, O Agni, may your good will, that you should grant sons, grandsons and so on to the praisers, be always unbarren (fruitful) for us.

Printed English translation

Grant, Agni, to the offerer of the oblation, the earth, the bestower of cattle, the means of many (pious rites), such that it may be perpetual : may there be to us sons and grandsons, born in our race, and may your good-will ever be productive of benefits to us.

विशेषविषयगळु (Viśeṣaviṣayagaḷu)

The bhāṣyakāra has commented on this Ṛk, at the end of the first sūkta of this Maṇḍala, in one way, and afterwards on this same Ṛk at the end of the seventh sūkta of this Maṇḍala in another way; both ways of commentary are explained here. At the sviṣṭakṛt offering in the animal oblation-cake offering this Ṛk is to be recited as the puroanuvākyā mantra, as the Āśvalāyana Śrauta Sūtra explains in the sūtra

इळामग्ने पुरुदंसं सनिं गोर्होता यक्षदग्निं पुरोळाशस्य स्वदस्व हव्या समिषो दिदीहीति पुरोळाशस्विस्थकृत इति (iḷāmagne purudaṃsaṃ saniṃ gorhotā yakṣadagniṃ puroḷāśasya svadasva havyā samiṣo didīhīti puroḷāśasvisthakṛta iti) (Ā. 3-5)

(the supplied text has the form स्विस्थकृत (svisthakṛta) and, in the bhāṣya, स्विस्वकृत (svisvakṛta)).

पुरुदंसं-पुरूणि बहूनि दंसानि कर्माणि यस्याः सा । (purudaṃsaṃ-purūṇi bahūni daṃsāni karmāṇi yasyāḥ sā |) The word daṃsa is stated among the twenty-six names of work, अप्पः दंसः (appaḥ daṃsaḥ) and the rest (Ni. 3-2). The meaning is: possessing many works.

इळां—एतन्नामिकां गोरूपां देवतां । (iḷāṃ—etannāmikāṃ gorūpāṃ devatāṃ |) The word iḷā is stated among the names of the earth (Ni. 2-5); it is also stated among the names of speech (Ni. 2-23), among the names of food (Ni. 3-9) and among the names of cow (Ni. 3-6). And the word iḷā is formed from the root īś.

[Running head, p. 799: Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8, Varga 27, Ṛgvedasaṃhitā.]

अभि न इळा यूथस्य माता स्मन्नदीभिरुर्वशी वा गृणातु । उर्वशी वा बृहद्दिवा गृणानाभ्यूर्वाना प्रभृथस्यायोः । सिषक्तु न ऊर्जव्यस्य पुष्टेः ॥ (abhi na iḷā yūthasya mātā smannadībhirurvaśī vā gṛṇātu | urvaśī vā bṛhaddivā gṛṇānābhyūrvānā prabhṛthasyāyoḥ | siṣaktu na ūrjavyasya puṣṭeḥ ‖) (printed ఋ. సం (saṃ). 5-41-19, 20)

In these Ṛks the goddess Iḷā or Iḍā is explained as a deity of the middle place. Sāyaṇa has explained the meaning as a deity named Iḷā who has taken the form of a cow.

शश्वत्तमं हवमानाय साध—निरंतरं हवमानाय यजमानाय मह्यं साधय । (śaśvattamaṃ havamānāya sādha—niraṃtaraṃ havamānāya yajamānāya mahyaṃ sādhaya |) Agni is prayed that the favour of the goddess Iḷā, who is in the form of a cow, full of abundant greatness, and who fulfils the desired aims of me, the sacrificer who always gratifies Agni with oblations, may be obtained.

सूनुः—पुत्रः, तनयः पौत्रः । (sūnuḥ—putraḥ, tanayaḥ pautraḥ |) The words tanaya and sūnu are read among the fifteen names of offspring, तुक्, तोकं (tuk, tokaṃ) and the rest (Ni. 3-2).

एता विश्वा सवना तूतुमा कृषे स्वयं सूनो सहसो यानि दधिषे । वराय ते पात्रं धर्मणे तना यज्ञो मंत्रो ब्रह्मोद्यतं वचः ॥ (etā viśvā savanā tūtumā kṛṣe svayaṃ sūno sahaso yāni dadhiṣe | varāya te pātraṃ dharmaṇe tanā yajño maṃtro brahodyataṃ vacaḥ ‖) (printed ಋ. सं (saṃ). 10-50-6, with an unclosed bracket; repeated as ಮ. सं (saṃ). 10-50-6)

In this Ṛk the word सूनो (sūno) is explained as son, and Agni is called सहससूनो (sahasasūno), "son of strength" (printed with सहसस्पुत्र (sahasasputra) in brackets). Sāyaṇa explains the word sūnu as son and the word tanaya as grandson (son's son).

सुमतिः—शोभना बुद्धिः । (sumatiḥ—śobhanā buddhiḥ |) The Nirukta authors explain देवसुमतिं (devasumatiṃ) as the auspicious thought of the gods; वैश्वानरस्य सुमत् सौ स्याम (vaiśvānarasya sumat sau syāma) (so printed) as being in the auspicious thought; and वयं देवस्य धीमहि सुमतिं सत्यधर्मणः (vayaṃ devasya dhīmahi sumatiṃ satyadharmaṇaḥ) with the same sense, auspicious thought. Sāyaṇa prays that there may be, in our case, the auspicious thought of Agni, such as the birth and growth of sons, grandsons and so on, which Agni can grant to the sacrificers who have gratified him with oblations.

Adhyāya colophon (Sanskrit; Aṣṭaka 2, Adhyāya 8):

> वेदार्थस्य प्रकाशेन तमो हार्दं निवारयन् । पुमर्थांश्च तुरो देयाद्विद्यातीर्थमहेश्वरः ॥ इति श्रीमद्राजाधिराज परमेश्वर वैदिकमार्गप्रवर्तक श्रीवीरबुक्कभूपालसाम्राज्य धुरंधरेण सायणाचार्येण विरचिते माधवीये वेदार्थप्रकाशे ऋक्संहिताभाष्ये द्वितीयाष्टकेऽष्टमोऽध्यायः समाप्तः ॥

> vedārthasya prakāśena tamo hārdaṃ nivārayan | pumarthāṃśca turo deyādvidyātīrthamaheśvaraḥ ‖ iti śrīmadrājādhirāja parameśvara vaidikamārgapravartaka śrīvīrabukkabhūpālasāmrājya dhuraṃdhareṇa sāyaṇācāryeṇa viracite mādhavīye vedārthaprakāśe ṛksaṃhitābhāṣye dvitīyāṣṭake 'ṣṭamo 'dhyāyaḥ samāptaḥ ‖

Sense: dispelling the darkness of the heart by the light of the meaning of the Veda, may Vidyātīrtha-Maheśvara grant the four human aims. The colophon names Sāyaṇācārya, bearer of the burden of the empire of the king Vīra-Bukka (the supporter of the Vedic path), as author of the Mādhavīya Vedārthaprakāśa, the commentary on the Ṛk-saṃhitā; here ends the eighth adhyāya of the second aṣṭaka.

The supplied text then has this line, kept as supplied:

> ॥ ओं शत्स्य ॥
> ‖ oṃ śatsya ‖

(The words are kept as supplied; the word शत्स्य *(śatsya) is unclear in the supplied text, probably a misreading or misprint of the usual closing formula, and is flagged here for the reader without any correction.)*

Closing line (Kannada):

ಇಲ್ಲಿಗೆ ಶ್ರೀ ಸಾಯಣಭಾಷ್ಯಸಹಿತವೂ ಕರ್ನಾಟಕಭಾಷಾನುವಾದಯುತವೂ ಆದ ಋಗ್ವೇದಸಂಹಿತೆಯ ದ್ವಿತೀಯಾಷ್ಟಕದಲ್ಲಿ ಎಂಟನೆಯ ಅಧ್ಯಾಯವು ಸಮಾಪ್ತವಾದುದು. (illigè śrī sāyaṇabhāṣyasahitavū karnāṭakabhāṣānuvādayutavū āda ṛgvedasaṃhitèya dvitīyāṣṭakadalli èṃṭanèya adhyāyavu samāptavādudu.)

Here ends the eighth adhyāya, in the second aṣṭaka of the Ṛgveda-saṃhitā with Sāyaṇa's commentary and a Kannada translation.

Then the verse of forgiveness and the two closing formulas (Sanskrit):

> यदक्षरपदभ्रष्टं मात्राहीनं तु यद्भवेत् । तत्सर्वं क्षम्यतां देव वागीश्वर नमोऽस्तुते ॥ । शुभं भूयात् । । मंगळं ॥

> yadakṣarapadabhraṣṭaṃ mātrāhīnaṃ tu yadbhavet | tatsarvaṃ kṣamyatāṃ deva vāgīśvara namo 'stute ‖ | śubhaṃ bhūyāt | | maṃgaḷaṃ ‖

Sense: whatever is wanting in syllable, word or measure, may all that be forgiven, O god, lord of speech; salutation to you. May there be good fortune. Auspiciousness.

[This is the end of the supplied text: the last supplied lines are the forgiveness verse, "। शुभं भूयात् । (| śubhaṃ bhūyāt |)" and "। मंगळं ॥ (| maṃgaḷaṃ ‖)", followed only by the converter line above. Nothing has been added.]
